Summary: In his prime, Berlin gathers a team in Paris to execute an incredibly challenging heist, aiming to steal jewels valued at 44 million euros from 34 cities in a single night.

The episode starts with Berlin saying goodbye to his third wife. They are getting divorced, and Berlin is saddened about the end of his marriage. In his narration, he says only two things can turn a bad day into a great one: love or a big heist.

A car pulls up next to him, and he gets in. In the car, he introduces four other people as his crew. We have Keila, an expert in electronic engineering; however, she is pathologically shy. Secondly, we have Roi, a common thief with a knack for picking doors and Berlin's protege.

Thirdly, we have Damián, a professor by day and a criminal mastermind by night. Then finally there is Bruce, the jack of all trades.

The gang interrupts a dinner party at a fancy house by pretending to be police officers. Berlin takes the host aside and shows him a fake search warrant. Berlin says the man is being charged with illegal trafficking of antiquities. The man leads Berlin to his vault and picks a particular chalice. After selecting the chalice, Berlin reveals he is not a police officer but will confiscate the item.

A guest tries to play a hero, and Berlin puts him in his place. Berlin advises him to stop the ruckus, trying to prove himself to his mistress. He tells the man that dying over love is not worth it. After seeing the gun, the man changes his tune and apologises, pleading for his life. It is evident that Berlin is taking his divorce hard.

Next, the gang travels to Paris and book rooms in a hotel. Berlin introduces a new team member, Cameron. We learn that Cameron has been through a lot and just got out of a mental hospital. As soon as Roi sets his eyes on Cameron, we can tell he fancies her. Even Berlin notices and warns the young man to maintain a platonic relationship with Cameron. He also tasks Roi with watching over the beautiful lady.

The team gets to work and starts discussing their next heist. The reason they stole the fourth-century chalice worth about 40,000 euros. They intend to use the chalice to trick a priest into allowing them into his church, where they will dig a hole and steal 63 jewels worth 44 million euros.

The jewels are set to be transported to the biggest, most prestigious auction house in Paris, opposite the church, and that is how they will break in. The church's crypt is only 5 meters from the auction house, and they must follow the old tunnels hidden below.

The next day, they visit the priest and pretend to be an excavation team from the Polytechnic University of Salamanca. Keila has planted 650 references about the team online, and the priest thinks they are legitimate. He hopes the team will find evidence that his church might be the oldest in Paris.

The team says they have evidence to believe that there is treasure below the church, and the priest is eager to invite them to the crypt and let them dig. They work on sneaking into a man's house and installing surveillance cameras.

The man, François, is the only one who knows when the jewels will arrive. The plan is to find out the date of the last shipment to make their move. In the meantime, their hotel is right opposite François's house and using secret surveillance, they hope to learn more details about the shipment.

After breaking into the house and installing the hidden surveillance camera, the teams wait at the hotel. Roi tries to get close to Cameron but fails as she sees him as Berlin's lapdog. Meanwhile, Bruce and Keila bury the chalice in the church to make it look like they uncovered an antique under the church.

Based on their conversation, Bruce is a player, and Keila doesn't appreciate his easy-going nature when it comes to sex.

Concurrently, Berlin shares his frustration and disappointment over his divorce with Damián. Damián is married and believes Berlin has yet to find the right person. The two stay up to watch François, and this is when Berlin starts getting infatuated with the man's wife. He follows her to a bar and listens to her singing.

Later, he confides in Damián that he met someone, and the latter warns him not to complicate matters by starting an affair with their target's wife.

The following morning, they trick the priest into believing they found the chalice under the crypt, and he gives them his blessings to dig further. Berlin recruits Roi's help to rope in Camille, his new infatuation. However, she plays coy, making Berlin second guess himself.

On the other hand, the priest asks for the chalice to take back to Spain and show the university dean about his team's great work. Damián is flustered by this request and tries to dissuade the priest. However, the ex-convict, supported by the priest, takes his side. Damián is forced to give up the chalice and calls Berlin to alert him of the situation. In return, Berlin orders Roi to do everything he can to get it back.

Berlin can't be bothered to go after the priest himself since he is preparing to go out with Camille after overhearing that her husband forgot their date. Camille decides to go to the Opera by herself after being disappointed by her husband, and Berlin sees this as an opportunity to be seized. He dons his tuxedo and acts like he coincidentally met her while walking out of his hotel.

Summary: Roi and Cameron must stop Father Toureaux as he threatens to bungle the plan. Meanwhile, love is in the air on Paris's streets — and in the Catacombs.

The episode starts with Berlin inviting himself to join Camille as she goes to the opera. He makes it sound like it is a coincidence that he is staying in the hotel opposite her apartment. He asks for some time to explain himself.

Camille is in a hurry, so she agrees to allow him into her cab. While she changes, Berlin goes on and on about how he is newly divorced and looking for peace of mind.

Camille finds all these intriguing but a bit misogynistic. Nonetheless, she is happy to have Berlin's company. However, it turns out she is not heading to the opera per-se but to a rock club called the Opera to see her friends perform.

Even though Berlin is overdressed in a tux, he finds a way to fit in and has a mighty time flirting up a storm with Camille. No one has ever accused this man of having no rizz, you know! Berlin writes his number on her arm by the night's end and sends her home.

On the other hand, Cameron brings the bike over to the hotel to lend it to Roi. She insists on knowing what Roi is planning and coming along. Roi has been tasked with getting the chalice back, and his grand plan is to steal it from the priest. A casual briefcase pulls, and he is sure it will be easy-peasy.

The two manage to grab the briefcase from the priest and give him the scare of his life. However, they didn't plan for the two ex convicts escorting the priest to intervene. What follows is a wild chase that interrupts a wedding and a funeral, finally ending in a parking lot.

As they try to escape, the two steal and wreck two cars while setting off 26 alarms. Ultimately, the goons win and take back the chalice.

Meanwhile, Keila shows Bruce her simulation. She is creating it to help her deal with her shyness, and Bruce is friendly but a bit over-sexual in his praise. This makes her uncomfortable, and she asks him to leave. However, we can tell she is uncomfortable because she likes him and doesn't want to admit it.

The following day, Damián confronts Roi and Cameron for the mess they created. Thankfully, the stunt scared the priest, and he returns the chalice to Damián. He has changed his mind about travelling to Spain and is taking a one-week recovery leave. The one-week leave gives the gang seven days to drill the hole and pull out their heist.

Another urgent matter is that Berlin has been MIA since last night, and Damián sends Roi to wake him up. Roi finds the man awake and in great spirits after receiving a call from Camille. Camille feels a special connection with Berlin and tells him about her marriage but says she wants to explore. Berlin lies he is leaving the next day.

After the call, Berlin was hoping Camille would call him back in a few hours and chase after him. He is surprised when she shows up at his hotel room, asking to be let in. However, with all the surveillance apparitions in his room, Berlin refuses and turns her down, saying he is not looking for an ordinary, trivial affair.

Camille is disappointed because she doesn't think of herself as ordinary but understands where Berlin is coming from. He then changes his mind and goes after her in the elevator. With one kiss, they start an affair.

Elsewhere, the rest of the team works on drilling the hole while Berlin has the time of his life, having an affair with Camille. He is not the only one who is having a crush. Keila admits to Cameron that she has got it bad for Bruce. We can't blame her, though. Bruce is fine, and you know what they say about opposites attracting.

Cameron warns her to be cautious not to fall in love since love is like a disease with different phases. Maybe she went to the mental hospital after losing her beloved? To distract Keila, Cameron starts a dancing party, and they end up inviting Bruce and Roi.

The following day, the team meets up to discuss their process and strategy after getting to the wall that will lead them to the vault. The plan is to break through the wall and get inside the auction house.

No one expects them to get into the vault through the backdoor. They move their equipment and get to work cutting through the concrete wall that secures the antechamber that leads to the vault. They cut the iron joints that connect to the blocks but decide only to move them once they need to.

The antechamber has CCTV cameras linked directly to the security guard's monitors. There are two guards the gang needs to be cautious of, and they need to get them away from their desks for three minutes. During this time, Keila will hack the CCTV footage.

To distract the guards, Bruce pretends to be a food delivery guy who messes up the delivery and shows up 90 minutes late. This is to get the guards riled up and entice them into a fight.

While Bruce buys time for the gang by pretending to pass out after being hit by the guards, the team don their hazmat suits and gloves. This is to make sure they don't leave DNA evidence behind.

With the guards distracted, the rest of the team breaks into the empty vault. Remember, this is only a practice run to ensure everything runs smoothly on D-day. This is also to give Keila a chance to get control of the auction house system. It also allows them to come in and out of the vault as often as they please.

Summary: Everything seems to be rolling along — for a short while. While Berlin schemes to get his way with both the heist and Camille, Damián gets some bad news.

The episode starts with Berlin and the gang discussing the second act of their heist, and he welcomes Keila to explain her role in this. Unfortunately, Bruce gets excited and starts looking around the hotel room, causing a distraction.

To teach him a lesson, Berlin makes him drink the whole bottle of champagne he was excited to find. He reminds the group that they can't afford to be distracted and will get 16 years of imprisonment if anyone messes up.

Our attention returns to Keila, who explains that once she takes control of the auction house system, she will record footage of the empty vault and antechamber. She will use this footage whenever the gang wants to enter the vault.

Berlin is confident that the plan will work flawlessly even with an amateur team. He and Damián believe the kids are malleable and ready to be taught. They also need one brain in the team, which happens to be Damián.

The two oldies are excited to work with the young and teach them. They find the young people invigorating. As per the plan, the team manages to get into the vault and is ecstatic that they made it. Even though it is currently empty, they share their excitement and congratulate each other.

Later, Berlin goes on a date with Camille at a high-end restaurant. However, François coincidentally shows up, forcing Berlin to act like a rude Spanish art dealer. François is displeased with Berlin's tone towards his wife and warns him to take it down a notch. He is unaware that Berlin currently has his wife's panties in his pocket. No pun intended!

After the encounter, Berlin and Camille laugh about the incident. Camille admits he feels awful for cheating on François, but the affair is too exciting for her. She says Berlin is giving her the life she always wanted. Berlin invites her to a weekend getaway and asks Camille to lie to her husband that she is going on a sudden work trip.

Without a care in the world, Berlin and Camille head out of town for their rendezvous while the gang goes out with Damián. Damián has been to Paris with his wife long ago and shares his experience with his students. While Cameron asks for an advance in her share, Bruce tries to help Keila feel more relaxed.

As they talk, Damián's wife calls and asks for a separation. This is a big blow to the poor man as she is still madly in love with his wife and wonders what went wrong. The gang tries to cheer him up, and Cameron opts to keep him company instead of going dancing. She helps Damián to come to terms with the end of his relationship. She fears Damián's wife is having an affair, and after thinking about it, Damián realises Cameron might be right.

On the other hand, Bruce worries why Roi has not returned the bike he borrowed. Bruce rented the bike and needs to return it before the police are involved. Roi advises him to forget about the bike he rented with his fake passport.

Keila adds that the rental company took Bruce's picture, and they can use facial recognition to track him down. Roi responds they are in trouble because the priest's ex-cons took the bike.

After spending most of their time in bed, Berlin and Camille finally decide to get a break. As they talk about the place they should visit in Paris, François calls to confront Camille about the affair. He found the emails on her open laptop.

Berlin goes for a walk to give the couple time to talk. Berlin feels happy that the secret is finally out and he can get Camille to herself.

At the same time, Cameron overhears François moving up the plan since the jewels have arrived. François plans to take the jewels to be appraised the next day before a press conference and the auction. This changes everything, and the gang must also move up their plans. She informs Damián, who insists they must steal the jewels that night. Damián has Roi call Berlin and informs him of the changes.

Berlin is in a great mood and hopes Camille will get divorced soon. He promises to be there for the heist and returns to Camille. She says she is not going to leave her husband. In fact, François is willing to be a father and wants to start the family Camille has always longed for.

This is a shock to Berlin, and he says he will need time to think about it since he is confused about his place in her life. He asks they spend the night in different rooms and promises to have breakfast together.

He drives back to town and calls Roi to rant about being Camille's booty call. He admits that he likes Camille and can't forget about her.

Berlin is more pissed that François promised to start a family with Camille. He decides to take matters further and orders Roi to get acetone and bleach to make chloroform. Berlin plans to use it on François to teach him a lesson.

Summary: The robbery is on and tensions are high as the crew starts to doubt Berlín's leadership. Keila and Bruce must make sure to cover their tracks.

The episode starts with Berlín arriving at the church just in time for the heist. Meanwhile, François is just wrapping up placing the jewels in the vault. As expected, Damián is a bit antsy since he knows Berlín is late because of his affair with Camille.

Nonetheless, the hustle must go on, and they have 15 hours before the vault is opened again to steal the jewels and clean up after themselves. With everything in place, the gang enters the vault and starts packing the goods. However,

Damián is taking his divorce frustrations out on Berlín.

Berlín asks him to stop acting like a jealous girlfriend. Berlín wants to finish the work, head to François's apartment, and remove the cameras they hid. Damián didn't have the time to do it as their heist was moved up by two days.

With Keila on the computers, the gang suits up and enters the vault while François finishes signing some papers. The tension between Damián and Berlín heightens and almost turns physical.

Damián believes the affair is worthless and accuses Berlín of ruining François's marriage. He says Berlín is lying to Camille and is selfish. Words are exchanged, and a scuffle ensues as Damián pushes Berlín against the wall, creating a sound that François hears. Everyone in the vault freezes.

The guard ignores the sound, saying it is probably metal expanding. The guard explains they can't open the vault for another fifteen minutes, but François insists on opening the antechamber to see if everything is okay. Keila quickly informs Bruce and Cameron to shut down their operations.

The two immediately take action, locking up everything, and the guard finds nothing suspicious. He reports to François that all is well and asks if he would like to override the vault lock.

However, a call distracts François, and he says it won't be necessary. He leaves the building, confident that his jewels are safe.

The gang quickly picks up where they left off, but Damián informs Berlin that they will never work together again. With the jewels secured, Roi and Berlin return to the hotel while the rest dismantle the set-up. They have 4 hours to leave everything as they found it.

Roi puts all the jewels in Damián's room at the hotel before heading out with Berlin to François's apartment. The plan is to set it up and make François look suspicious.

At the condo, Berlin drugs François with chloroform before removing the cameras and any trace they might have left behind. Roi confronts Berlin about drugging François as it was not part of the plan. Berlin quickly puts him in his place and tells him never to question or judge him again.

After taking out the cameras, Berlin takes François's car to one of their houses in Chantilly and sets him up by leaving some damning evidence behind. On his way back, he sees the guards trying to reach François.

In the meantime, the rest of the team clean and remove any trace of their presence by making it look like they never entered the vault. They cover up the hole and return everything the way it was. Lastly, they work on their plan to cause a power outage to buy time to remove the security cam relays.

They take out one of the high-voltage power lines under the auction house for this part of the plan. They create a slight diversion ahead of the power outage by pretending to be from the headquarters and asking for help. The guards leave their post to check on the issue, and the gang finish up on their heist.

The power outage disables the surveillance system at the auction house and the system that opens the vault doors. This forces the guards to call for the technicians. The gang is counting on the technicians from Geneva arriving and the vault being opened within six to seven hours. By then, they will be done removing their traces.

The team leaves after sealing every entrance they used in the successful heist. They return to their hotels in separate groups.

Berlin orders the team to remain in their rooms and thoroughly clean them so as to not leave any evidence behind. He informs them they will check out separately between 9 and 10 in the morning to avoid any suspicion. Damián is tasked with cleaning all the jewels.

Unfortunately, Bruce has a loose end and recruits Keila's help to handle it. They pretend they need privacy to sleep together, but Bruce asks Keila to help him delete his passport entry in the bike rental place. He is anxious that if the police look into the bike, they will find his picture, and he will get nabbed. They sneak into the car rental shop and delete Bruce's passport.

However, the plan goes awry when they sneak in and some guards are present. Keila pretends she is replacing the sick accountant while Bruce hides under her desk. She is about to make it out, but the computer refuses to delete the passport, and the guard offers to help. Only when he bends over to show her the 'trick' he finds himself staring right into Bruce's eyes.

Back at the hotel, Cameron calls her ex but decides not to leave a message. She is interrupted by Roi, who is pissed after Bruce kicked him out of their room to 'sleep with Keila' and Damián lashed out at him.

Roi insists on sleeping in Cameron's room, and they bond over his tattoo. Cameron is fascinated by the octopus tattoo on Roi's back. She teases Roi, and he decides he is done following Berlin's orders.

| Summary: | Cameron's resurfaced trauma bursts in at an illegal street race. The plan enters a new phase as the gang flees the police, who are hot on their heels. |

The episode picks up with the guard finding Bruce under Keila's desk. The guard immediately pulls his gun, alerting the other guards, and Keila throws her hands in the air. Meanwhile, Bruce hides one of the weights lying around under his jacket.

He is ordered to come out, and Keila tries de-escalating the situation. She says that Bruce is her boyfriend, and their plan to be naughty in the office is ruined. Of course, the guards don't believe this and ask for IDs. Instead, Bruce uses the weight light to hit the gun off his hands. Keila jumps to action and picks the gun first.

She suddenly turns into a hard-core criminal, ordering the guards to get on their knees, and they steal money from the safe. She makes it look like a planned robbery and confuses the investigation once it starts. Bruce is impressed with her as they drive away and comments on her panties. This annoys Keila, and she calls him out for not grasping the weight of the situation.

Elsewhere, Roi and Cameron go out, and Cameron reveals she took one of the jewels to wear for the night. She promises to return it the following day. The two steal a car and head to an illegal racing event. Roi gambles the car and loses it after Cameron has a panic attack. She got a call from her ex, which sent her off the cliff. She forces Roi to stop the car and forfeit the race. They lose the car, and Roi stays behind to help Cameron calm down.

It is at this point that she tells him about her ex, who is a musician. Their relationship started off well until she got obsessed with him. It got too much and started affecting her mental health. Their idyllic relationship finally ended, but Cameron had a hard time forgetting him. The song he wrote for her kept reminding her of him, and she kept seeing his posters everywhere.

She lost it and accidentally burned down her place while trying to get rid of their memorabilia. She was diagnosed with a psychotic break, acute paranoia and emotional dissociation disorder. That is why she ended up in the mental hospital.

To make her feel better, Roi steals one of the planes in the hangar they were hiding at and tries to fly it. Thankfully, he stops because he is not a licensed pilot! However, his trick worked; the adrenaline rush made Cameron feel better. However, that is short-lived when they realise they left the jewel necklace in the car.

Meanwhile, Berlin returns to the hotel he got with Camille and acts like he spent the whole night there. Camille visits his room first thing in the morning. He asks her to choose between him and François. She says it is difficult as she is in love with both men, and he asks her to call him once she has decided.

On the other hand, we meet Marie Lavelle, the detective in charge of the heist investigation. As expected, she arrests François as he is the main suspect, and there is no evidence of a break-in. Damián calls Berlin, shares the good news, and asks him to ensure the police are gone before contacting the transporter.

This is all part of their evacuation plan. Bruce and Keila are the first to leave, disguised as backpackers. They are supposed to head to Spain on a bus carrying three tins with the jewels. Berlin argues no one would be looking for high-end jewels in a bus! Secondly, Roi and Cameron leave and pick an RV. They are later joined by Damián, who will play the role of their dad. The final person to leave is supposed to be Berlin after he disposes of all the materials they used for the heist. They will all meet a few days later.

However, matters with Camille change Berlin's plans to leave the country. Camille returns home to find the police searching her house. Lavelle is confident that François is guilty and asks her for the safe combination. However, Camille doesn't know the combination, forcing the police to blow up the safe. No one tells Camille much about what is going on!

Later, Lavelle shows François all the evidence pointing to him as the perpetrator. There is footage of a man (believed to be François) leaving his apartment and driving to Chantilly. The police believe he tried to get rid of the evidence. Lavelle thinks he did a sloppy job and even left behind a small diamond from one of the jewels. François insists he is innocent and should be treated as the victim.

The episode ends with Camille calling Berlin as he packs up his stuff. He immediately rushes to her house. She tells him about François's situation, and he does a good job acting like he has no idea about any of this. He tries to subtly make Camille turn against her husband by mentioning some suspicious behaviour. Camille shows him the blown safe and how she feels like she has been living with a stranger.

Summary: Camille's suspicions heighten. Damián, Cameron and Roi have a troubling encounter, shaking the entire gang's alibis. A loose end emerges in Paris.

The episode picks up with Berlin comforting Camille at her house. Camille nearly doubts her husband until Berlin brings up François's desire to be a dad. She starts thinking there is no possible way her husband was planning a heist while thinking about being a future dad. She starts to think about the possibility that François might be innocent.

Berlin tries to steer her back to the land of doubts, but she insists he is innocent. She reveals that she had decided to leave François but can no longer do that.

She must stay and help him prove his innocence.

Meanwhile, Lavelle pressures François to admit guilt and give up his accomplices before it is too late. The man insists he is innocent but is willing to help with the investigation. Lavelle doesn't buy his story and asks the judge to deny him bail and freeze his accounts. She also asks for his assets and properties to be seized. She is determined to get back the jewels and feels François is being unreasonable in refusing to admit his guilt.

The police set up a nationwide search operation, and Cameron, Roi and Damián are the first to come across them. Roi immediately panics and tries to get out of the RV, but Damián asks him to get his head in the game or enjoy prison. In the end, they perfectly play the role of a grieving family. The police ask some questions, like why the family is travelling, and they explain they are on a farewell trip.

The police argue that the family is not allowed to transport or dispose of ashes. The gang is counting on the police to have mercy on a grieving family and let them go. However, the police insist on searching the RV, and Cameron takes off running carrying the urn with their alleged dead mom.

After an intense chase that ends with Cameron nearly getting shot, she stops, and the police open the urn to find only ashes. The police feel horrified by their actions and allow the family to continue their trip.

Damián then calls Bruce and Keila and orders them to alight the bus at the next stop and head to the woods. Given the heavy police presence, they will have a better chance of escaping by avoiding the roads. Keila and Bruce follow his instructions to the letter, but she is still angry with Bruce and refuses to talk to him. In the meantime, Damián, Roi and Cameron hide in a local camp. They start by creating an escape route in case they are caught.

Meanwhile, Berlin reflects on his relationship with Camille and decides to stay indefinitely. Roi calls him to update him and learns he is still in Paris. He comes clean about the missing jewel but never mentions Cameron's role in the incident. Roi says he did it because he was angry at Berlin. Berlin is understanding and commends him for coming forward. He apologises to Roi, and they talk about his relationship with Camille.

Berlin is frustrated that Camille only sees the good in François. He says that by framing François, they put him on a pedestal in her eyes. To change this, Berlin offers her money to hire the best lawyer in Paris and free her husband. Of course, Camille is moved beyond words over how kind and considerate Berlin is. She says he is a one-of-a-kind lover, and Berlin basks in all her praises, talking about never kicking a man when he is down. She invites him to visit François in jail.

At the same time, the police find the car and arrest the guy who won it in a race. The man gives the police a perfect description of Roi and his tattoos. He tells Lavelle that the man and the lady are Spanish. To this effect, Lavelle calls Europol to ask for help.

Roi and Cameron get closer while camping. Meanwhile, their new 'dad', Damián, meets a new woman who is moved by his widow story. She offers him a homemade drink, and he gets wasted by himself. He can't stop thinking about his wife and calls her. Unfortunately, the new lady overhears the conversation and realises his wife is not dead, as he said. Damián asks for a second chance and loses his cool when his wife refuses to take him back. He accuses her of cheating, and she hangs up on him.

On the other hand, Bruce and Keila experience heavy rainfall that forces them to share one tent. However, Keila becomes more attracted to Bruce as he lies shirtless beside her. After the rain subsides, she heads out to pee and is bitten by an asp viper. Bruce hurriedly gives her first aid and tries to get her help. He carries her on his back and tries to get to the hospital as she is having an allergic reaction to the snake venom.

The episode ends with the return of the formidable Alicia Sierra, Deputy Inspector Europol Spain. She is working on the case with Lavelle.

Summary: As Bruce helps Keila with a life-or-death situation, Sierra and Murillo join the French police to look into the theft. Berlin suffers an ultimate defeat.

The episode starts with Bruce running down the forest, trying to find help for Keila. Keila is suffering from a fever of two kinds. One from the snake bite and another from having Bruce so close to her. She can't help but hallucinate about how she has fallen in love with him. She wishes she had told him her feelings and how she wanted him to take her virginity. Bruce runs towards the road and stops a police car to help them.

Elsewhere, Lavelle and Sierra head back to the auction house to see how the heist was pulled. Sierra is impressed by the Spaniard thieves and shows Lavelle the hole in her logic that François is the mastermind. Lavelle believes the thieves are trying to mislead them by leading them to one of the jewels. The one Roi and Cameron lost.

Sierra believes it was a mistake on the thieves' end, and François is innocent. She argues the Spaniards can't resist a good party, plus it makes no sense to use the third most valuable jewel of the heist as a distraction.

In the meantime, Camille and Berlin visit François. Berlin tells François he is helping him because Camille believes he is innocent. The poor man agrees to take Berlin's help as long as it is a loan. The three of them promise to get through this together. Oh, the irony of this scene! The two then return to François and Camille's house and make love.

Damián also gets busy with the new woman he met at camp. She knows he lied about his dead wife but assumes he is just going through a rough divorce. Meanwhile, Roi and Cameron head to the lake and talk about some of the things they have done in the past. They nearly kiss, puzzling the police watching them since they believe these two are siblings.

Back to Lavelle and Sierra, they realise their only tangible lead is the tattoo on Roi's hand. However, they know nothing about him. Sierra calls the Criminal Investigation Unit in Spain to see if they can get a lead on Roi's identity. To our surprise, Raquel Murilo picks up the phone and is glad to join the girls in Paris for a criminal gang-hunting spree. We gotta admit, these two have great chemistry!

Whilst Berlin and Camille babysit their neighbour, Susi's son, things continue to get dire with the other gang members. Camille tells Susi all about her affair, and the latter is surprised. However, Camille says there is nothing weird about Berlin helping François. Susi questions how all these happened so quickly, but Camille has no idea. Susi leaves for her audition. Camille and Berlin meet the lawyer who says François's case is hopeless.

The lawyer advises Camille to tell François to plead guilty. Obviously, this distresses Camille, who goes to cry after the lawyer brings up her affair as a possible trigger for the heist. Berlin stays behind to threaten the lawyer. He later goes to comfort Camille, who dumps him out of guilt. However, Berlin thinks there is hope and takes out Susi's kid to give her time to calm down.

On the other end, the police get Keila to the hospital. Unfortunately, her gun's magazine falls when the doctors move her to a stretcher. As expected, this forces Bruce to act quickly and take the two police officers as hostages. He makes them sit and rap in the car while they await news on Keila's status.

Concurrently, Damián notices the police are onto them when they drop by the RV looking for them. While his new woman sleeps, he cleans her house to make sure there is no trace of him left behind. After the police leave, Damián waits for Roi and Cameron to inform them about the police. Roi tells him about the lost necklace and that Berlin is still in Paris. Damián calls Berlin and scolds him for not leaving.

Berlin insists he can't forget Camille and laments about Camille's unhappiness in their relationship. Damián asks him to return to the hotel and wait until he arrives. After the call, Damian asks Roi and Cameron to clean the RV and activate plan Suricate. He then gets on a bike and drives to Paris.

At Paris, Murillo is given a warm welcome by Lavelle and Sierra. They catch her up on the investigation and bond over their shared hate of bureaucracy. Murillo insists they release the sketch of the gang to the public, but Lavelle says that request has been denied. However, she settles for releasing the sketches to the police nationwide and promises to involve the press later. The police, watching the RV get the sketch, realise they are onto the gang after seeing the tattoo on Roi's hand.

After her audition, Susi returns to pick up her son and get updated on François. She, being inquisitive, asks Camille why all these started after Berlin appeared in her life. She points out that the lover is the guilty party in most cases. She is shocked to find out that her son is on a walk with Berlin. Thankfully, Berlin returns the kid safely, and while hugging Camille goodbye, she steals his room key.

Berlin returns to the hotel and finds Damián waiting for him. They talk about finding the perfect love and bond over their failed relationships. They decide to crush a wedding to forget their pain and sing to their heartbroken hearts' content.

Back at the camp, Cameron tries to let Roi down easily, but he insists he loves her. He really wanted to kiss her at the lake, but she pulled back. He confesses his love and says that he can see she is scared. He argues he wouldn't have hurt her like her ex. As they talk, a team of police officers, led by Lavelle and Sierra, station themselves outside. One officer's radio goes off unexpectedly, alerting the two that the police have arrived, but they have a plan.

While Berlin and Damián sing at the party, Bruce holds two police hostages, and Camille sneaks into Berlin's hotel room. She is shocked beyond belief to learn he is the heist's mastermind after finding all the evidence lying around.

The episode ends with the police cornering Roi and Cameron in one part of the country while Bruce drives inside the hospital to pick up Keila after her treatment.

Summary: Backed into a corner, the gang maneuvers a final escape plan. Only time will tell if Berlin is ready for the ultimate bombshell.

The episode picks up where we left off, with the police cornering Roi and Cameron at the RV. The police take fire from the RV, forcing them to fall back. However, a look inside the RV reveals that Roi and Cameron are long gone. They set up mannequins and control gunfire from the tunnels below which they are using to escape.

Lavelle opens a line of communication with the two, but they refuse to surrender. They buy more time by pointing out that the police need them alive and ask for one team that is particularly close to move back further. After a few minutes, Roi gives Lavelle a tip about one of the jewels to distract her as they find their way out of the tunnels.

Sierra realises there is something odd about the speaker and gun in the RV and dares to walk up to it. She finds the tunnel and realises the gang has fooled them. Concurrently, Murillo finds evidence that François's house was under surveillance. The police decide François is no longer a suspect and look into a new lead. Murillo believes the people surveilling François must have been close, and the hotel is the ideal location. They agree to meet at the hotel while the other officers chase Roi and Cameron down the tunnel.

At the same time, Bruce drives the police car into the hospital and picks Keila up. He gives her the guns and asks her to watch the hostages while he drives.

At the hotel, Camille picks up Berlin's gun and leaves the room. She spots him singing merrily at the wedding and leaves after Damián sees her. She heads back home and tells Susi the horrible truth. She decides to call the police and asks to speak to Lavelle. She is put on hold since Lavelle is currently out in the field.

Roi and Cameron make it out of the tunnel and hide in one of the trucks around their exit point. Roi has a great idea to tarp sandwich on the truck's roof. The police search the truck but are unable to see them as they are trapped between two tarps on the bus's roof. They manage to travel like this until the truck crosses the border and enters Spain.

During the ride, Roi opens up about his mom's passing during childbirth. He talks about the strife his mom's death put in his relationship with his dad. He narrates how he was abused and got into a life of crime before meeting Berlin, who taught him to calm his anger and be a better thief. This brings him closer to Cameron, who starts to understand him more.

By the end of their journey, they are supposed to split. However, they first give in to their feelings and share a passionate kiss. Cameron makes Roi promise it won't happen again, but we doubt that!

Keila and Bruce drive to the lake and sedate their hostages before stealing another boat and dumping the police car in the lake. Keila gets a call from Berlin, who was tipped about trouble heading their way after Damián said he saw Camille. Berlin asks Keila to get into the hotel's system and delete the CCTV footage relating to them. He also asks her to take down the cameras outside their hotel room before the police get there.

Damián and Berlin race against time as Lavelle, Murillo, and Sierra arrive at the hotel and ask questions about their group. One of the staff reveals that two of the gang members are in their room and leads the way.

The police get to the room to find Berlin, and Damián cleaned up their trace and burned their surveillance equipment using acid in the bathtub. Keila also takes down all the cameras on Berlin's room floor, and this helps them get away through the tunnel washers. They quickly dress up as staff and take one of the hotel's vans. By the time the police secure the hotel, Damián and Berlin are long gone.

They later dump the car and pay delivery riders to take their motorbikes. However, due to heavy police presence on the roads, they switch to mountain bikes, and it takes four days to cross the border and happily reunite with the gang.

Meanwhile, Keila and Bruce steal a yacht and recruit the help of a group of old homeless people to sail through the border unsuspected. Bruce confesses his feelings during the ride, and they passionately make out. It is safe to say Keila got her wish!

Ultimately, the gang meet as planned in an isolated estate in Spain, waiting for the heat to die.

After finding out the truth, Camille decides to call the police, but Susi talks her out of it. She hangs up the call and convinces Camille to blackmail Berlin. After finding out that François has been hiding a secret family, Camille decides she has had enough of being taken advantage of and lied to. She takes Susi's advice and starts tracking Berlin down.

For months, they try to find Berlin, and Camille uses the information he told her during pillow talk to find him. Berlin knows Camille didn't sell him out to the police and has been trying to forget her. However, Camille and Berlin cannot restrain themselves, and she throws away the recorder, leaving Susi in the dark, waiting outside.

The following day, Camille with Susi to threaten Berlin, and he gives in even though he cleaned out their evidence. Sometimes, you really can't outdo the doer. Berlin tries to argue his love for Camille is genuine and rare. Even after giving up his share and promising to send them more money, he leaves a love note on one of the notes.

After a few months, the three unite to update each other on the case, but it looks bleak. Sierra is sure the gang will pull another job and wants to be ready when that happens.

After happily letting Susi and Camille blackmail him and take his share, Berlin contacts Damián and sets up a meeting. He tells him he lost his shares and says they need another heist. Damián couldn't agree more as he was already starting to feel bored.
