Summary: Young American flyers arrive in war and discover that the bureaucracy is more deadly than the enemy.

At the Santa Ana Army Air Base, we're introduced to the core group: YoYo, Clevinger, Dunbar, Kid Sampson, McWatt, Nately, Major Major, Aarfy, and Orr. Scheisskopf berated the group on their marching techniques. Clevinger offered a suggestion of allowing them to practice in smaller groups, which got him and Yossarian into trouble. YoYo and Clevinger had to walk in a circle in the sun while carrying heavy buckets.

YoYo confessed to Scheisskopf's wife Marion, whom he'd been sleeping with, that he chose to be a bombardier because it required more training and he figured he could wait it out. Even before shipping out, Yossarian tried avoiding his duties and pretended his appendix hurt to get out of marching in a parade. Doc Daneeka told him he should've complained about his liver and didn't excuse him. The parade was going well up until Clevinger fainted. YoYo and Clevinger were back to lugging buckets in a circle.

Two months later, YoYo and the rest of his class were stationed in Italy on Pianosa. They needed to fly 25 missions before going home. YoYo had 9 left after a successful mission. Back at YoYo and Orr's tent, they're introduced to Henry Mudd, their new bunkmate. Milo Minderbinder arrived with a case full of Hershey's chocolate bars. He let each of them take a few before going off to sell them.

Mudd headed for the administration tent to check in. YoYo gave him directions but mistakenly led him to the briefing tent. Being meek and quiet, Mudd goes along with orders to join a mission. At dinner, Orr told YoYo that Mudd's plane went down. He died even before he could unpack his bag.

YoYo again tried to fake being sick and claimed it was his liver. Doc Daneeka remembered Yossarian. Again, he didn't excuse him. Doc advised YoYo to just keep going since he was only 9 missions away from the quota. During the next mission, Dunbar's plane was hit, launching him onto YoYo's bomber. Dunbar briefly looked at Yossarian through the windshield and fell to his death.

The mission traumatized YoYo, and what's worse, Col. Cathcart announced that they're moving the quota up to 30 missions. Yossarian asked Daneeka to be grounded because he was crazy. Daneeka explained to him the Catch-22 rule. He could ground soldiers for being crazy, but they needed to ask to be grounded. But if they asked to be grounded then it proved that they are sane, so they needed to fly.

Major de Coverly was disgusted with the food served in the mess hall, and Minderbinder saw an opportunity. He brought de Coverly a plate of lamb chops for which he'd been able to negotiate. In exchange for the lamb chops, his contact wanted olives. Minderbinder successfully convinced de Coverly to appoint him mess hall officer, so he could keep the lamb chops coming.

Summary: Yossarian pursues desperate measures to get home; Milo sees war as a growth industry.

Col. Cathcart and Lt. Col. Korn drove up to the guys' basketball game to take Major Major to an officers' meeting. Major explained that he was a sergeant. His first, middle, and last names were all "Major" because his father played a joke on his mother with the birth certificate. Korn pointed out to Cathcart that Major was scheduled for all the officers' meetings, which Major shouldn't be attending as a sergeant. Cathcart promoted Major to major.

Major now had an office and an assistant, Sgt. Towser. Towser went over Major's appointments with him. Major told him to cancel all the appointments. If anyone came to see him, they would have to wait. Towser could only let them in to see him when Major was no longer there.

Now that Minderbinder was mess hall officer, his ambition grew. He arrived at the runway with a truck full of tomatoes for Col. Cathcart. Minderbinder tried convincing Cathcart to let him use a plane to move food all over Europe. He wanted Cathcart to invest in his "enterprise" and buy food from him. As an investor, Minderbinder reasoned, Cathcart would essentially be buying food for nothing. Cathcart reminded Minderbinder that the point of war was to win, not to increase profits.

YoYo tried again to get out of flying missions. Now that Major was a major, YoYo wanted him to find a loophole for him. He'd had 2 missions left, until the quota increased again to 35, and now he had 7 missions left. YoYo talked the nurse into letting him stay in the hospital for a bit. Unfortunately, a talkative Texan irritated him enough to start a fight. The nurse kicked him out, and he was back to flying missions.

De Coverley secured a building in town. While the guys stayed there, they visited Marcello's brothel. Nately was in love with a prostitute there and was out of money. Marcello gave him two hours free. He spoke to YoYo about how, though his allegiances changed easily depending on who is in power, he is still loyal. Marcello told YoYo that he did what he needed to survive. On his way out of the brothel, YoYo met a young girl, Ines, selling small items on the street. He bought a magnifying glass and told her to go home to her parents.

Cathcart raised the quota yet again to 40. YoYo argued with Clevinger. He wanted to do everything he could to win the war and survive. YoYo felt that Clevinger acted out of principle without any real regard to his life. Clevinger agreed; he would hold to his principles until his dying day.

From his plane, Clevinger saw YoYo and remarked that he was helping after all. He sang Yankee Doodle to him, but after going through a cloud, the singing cut off and the plane was nowhere to be seen. Clevinger was officially missing in action after 36 hours.
