Summary: In 1946, the New York police officer Max McLaughlin traveled to the divided city of Berlin to help set up a civilian police force based on the American model.

The New York policeman Max McLaughlin traveled to the divided city of Berlin in 1946 to help set up a civilian police force based on the American model.

Max reports to Tom Franklin, the US Vice Consul in Berlin, whose fragile and seductive British wife Claire is immediately drawn to Max.

Her appearance at social events, her hatred of Germans and her unrestrained flirtations make her a colorful personality. Max is enchanted, but at the same time senses the danger she poses.

On the German side, he works with Chief Inspector Elsie, whose husband is interned in a Russian prisoner-of-war camp. Their task force consists mainly of women and orphans, whose chair legs serve as batons and who have moved into their territory in a disused bank. At the same time he is looking for his missing brother Moritz, with whom he is ominously connected through a traumatic experience in his childhood.

But the Russians also cause problems: Max and Elsie barely succeed in preventing Russian soldiers from shooting at defenseless German civilians who report to the unscrupulous Russian officer Izosimov.

In another part of the city, Karin, who was raped by GIs, asks the Berlin doctor and criminal king Gladow, known as 'the angel maker', for an illegal abortion. And for assistance in getting revenge on their tormentors. What Karin does not yet suspect: Gladow is asking a terrible price from her.

But Max is not only concerned with the double murder of the GIs, but also with an anonymous tip that leads him to the corpses of an ex-Nazi and his family in an abandoned building. The horrific act seems like a murderous staging of the first prank from the German children's book 'Max und Moritz', with which the two American brothers associate happy memories of their German mother.

Summary: While searching for the murderers of two American GIs, Max and Elsie come across an eyewitness — but she is murdered soon after.

While searching for the murderers of two American GIs, Max McLaughlin and Elsie come across an eyewitness — but she is murdered soon after.

The Russian officer Izosimov did not hide for long that an American policeman from New York is in the US sector of Berlin. He wants to know what the cop is really up to. Izosimov does not shy away from torture in order to snatch the information from the youngest member of the police force, the Jewish orphan Gad, which Elsie Garten can use for his purposes and thus against the Americans.

After her revenge on the GIs arranged by the 'Engelmacher', the former gynecologist Dr. Gladow, Karin is now in hand and calls for his counterfavor: to work in his dangerous underground organization. After he forces her to murder a random eyewitness, Karin gradually changes from a passive victim to an active perpetrator.

Meanwhile, Max finds out that his brother Moritz is hiding behind the murder of a family, who is taking cruel revenge on Nazis in hiding. When Moritz reveals himself, he demands the oath of loyalty that he once wrested from his little brother: Against every law, Max should go on a campaign of revenge with him.

Summary: Max gets pressure from his superior Franklin to solve the GIs murder as soon as possible. He himself is driven by the search for his brother Moritz.

Max McLaughlin gets pressure from his superior Tom Franklin to solve the GIs murder as soon as possible. He himself is driven by the search for his brother Moritz.

He fears that it will strike again. And Moritz actually goes to the bike shop owner Berta Spiel in her shop and kidnaps her. Berta was an overseer in the Dachau camp, and Moritz wants to get information about her superiors through her.

In the meantime, Max and Elsie interrogate Karin together — without realizing how close they are to the GIs murderer. However, immediately after being questioned, Karin went underground in Berlin.

Max meets Moritz's former commander, General Wright. He tells him about the traumatic experiences during the liberation of the Dachau concentration camp, which had changed Moritz forever. And again Max receives a personal message from his brother Moritz. This leads him to a warehouse, where he finds the tied Berta Spiel dead, who has succumbed to her severe burns. The procedure is fatally reminiscent of the second prank from "Max and Moritz".

After her escape from Max McLaughlin, waitress Karin seeks protection at the 'Engelmacher' Dr. Gladow and offers him her services.

She offers him her active participation in his organization. As a first assignment, she received the task of channeling information into the eastern sector together with Marianne.

At the same time, the police are observing the Hotel 'Alt Bayern', in which "the angel maker" runs a brothel, because they hope to find Karin there.

Elsie meets with the Russian officer Izosimov, who gives her the opportunity to see her husband Leopold again, on condition that she provides him with information about Max. Elsie agrees and begins to observe her colleague.

But then Max is kidnapped by the Nakam, a secret Jewish organization that is waging a campaign of revenge against Nazis who have gone underground and wants to win Max over for this.

The two brothers' game of cat and mouse is becoming increasingly popular. Max McLaughlin may not find Moritz himself, but at least he can find shelter. He's holed up in a boathouse.

There he maltreats his next victim, Oberlander, a high-ranking Nazi officer. In the meantime, the Jewish auxiliary police officer Gad has found out that Karin is actually staying in the Hotel 'Alt Bayern'.

When Max and Elsie want to arrest them, Karin fires an anti-aircraft gun at the police force. She manages to flee in the resulting tumult and to warn Engelmacher about the police in good time. In order to protect himself, Karin persuades to kill the injured Marianne. She is too weak to flee. Karin does what the diabolical charismatic demands of her — and thereby betrays not only her only friend, but ultimately also herself.

Claire visits Max in his hotel room and makes it clear to him that she wants more from him. Max still resists her charm and focuses completely on his brother. When they meet, the two brothers engage in a merciless fistfight. They hit each other until Max remains unconscious on the floor and Moritz flees.

Summary: "Engelmacher" Dr. Gladow and his women's army plan an attack on the police station that nobody should survive.

Engelmacher Dr. Gladow and his women's army plan an attack on the police station that nobody should survive.

Karin and Dr. Gladow believe that the police have too much information about the illegal machinations of the former gynecologist in their hands and want to put an end to the persecution by the law enforcement officers once and for all.

Moritz in the boathouse, the high-ranking Nazi officer Oberlander lies dead next to him. As if reflexively, Max disposed of the corpse. But he has to admit that his brother can no longer be saved and that he can no longer protect him.

Elsie asks Izosimov to release her husband Leopold. In return, she offers him to continue to cooperate with him. That same night, Leopold, together with other prisoners, tried to escape from Russian captivity.

At a party at Franklin's house, Max finally gives in to Claire advances. Neither he nor Claire suspect that they are being watched by Tom Franklin. And then Moritz shows up at the party — in an American uniform. None of those present took special notice of him. Moritz's goal is still to get his brother on his side. Max gives him one last chance.

Summary: Moritz finds evidence that Max's boss Franklin is helping old Nazis by getting them forged papers for artworks.

Max McLaughlin finds evidence that Max's boss, Tom Franklin, is helping old Nazis by getting them forged papers.

In return, Franklin demands stolen art objects. In his fanatical love of art, he is even ready to kill for this immoral barter. Max is now supported by Claire in his investigation.

She gives him access to the basement of her villa, and indeed there are many important works of art there. Claire is devastated when she realizes that her husband is cooperating with the Nazis who wiped out her family. She decides to leave Franklin and wants to return to London.

Karin and the Engelmacher train with Trude how to deposit the bomb in the police station. Trude turns out to be too nervous, whereupon the angel maker kills her in cold blood. Then he urges Karin to plant the bomb herself.

Meanwhile, Max and Moritz argue what should happen to Franklin. Moritz wants to shoot him, while Max advocates bringing Franklin to justice. The following day Moritz disguises himself as a chauffeur and kidnaps Franklin and Claire from their car.

There is a showdown between the two brothers Max McLaughlin and Moritz.

The perfidious plan of the angel maker works: The bomb goes off, the police officers flee, and the Engelmacher's followers shoot the officers who are fleeing.

But an assassin who is badly injured on the ground reveals the whereabouts of the angel maker to Elsie. Max and Elsie finally track him down and take him to the police station for interrogation. The angel maker calls for a conversation with the high-ranking American agent Bob Travis.

Will he be able to evade legal access?

Moritz is still holding Claire and Tom Franklin in a farm outside Berlin, where the brothers grew up with their mother. Max follows him and there is a gripping showdown between the two.
