Summary: A female astronaut tries to reconnect with her family after spending a year in outer space.

Ethan Woods, a small child, hears a coughing and hacking noise. Emily is vomiting into the toilet. She stands, gasping, and goes to wash her face. He calls her mom and asks if she's too sick to come to the party. She says her body is just adjusting to being back. She touches her bathroom mirror and a news program pops up with a story on a blackout as she brushes her teeth.

At the party, Molly tells her friends that she hasn't had a drink in 13 months. Her doctor, Sam Barton, says no drinks until the tests come back. John, Emily's husband, runs to chastise Ethan for pushing another child down over a tool. His dad says if he acts out again, he'll have to leave the party. Molly smiles at Ethan as he goes back to play.

John tells Molly to go lie down and says she must be tired but she says she needs to get back to the routine. She heads outside to take out the trash — it's a weird futuristic plastic cube that does some off processing. She sees someone in the driveway and hears a noise behind her. When she looks back, the person is gone. She goes back in.

Ethan tells his dad he was mad and he asks how he would feel if he really hurt Jake. Ethan says his mom is mad and says it's different with her. John says she just has to get used to being back and says she was up there alone for a long time. He tells Ethan to get some sleep and he says he thinks he needs a flip. John checks the child's battery and says he's right.

John changes it out. The kid isn't a kid — he's some sort of android thing. Disturbing... He tells Ethan he leaves him and tucks the child in for the night. Molly is in the shower and John joins her there. They kiss. Later she creeps into Ethan's room and watches him. She looks at his planet mobile spinning above his bed then goes downstairs.

She pulls out a photo album with pictures of her and another astronaut. It looks like they were in love, but it's not her husband in the photos. He asks her what brought this on and she says she had a dream. He asks if she dreams about Marcus much. He says he still thinks about him. John says if Marcus was still alive, they wouldn't have met and there would be no Ethan because she would still be with him.

Molly says she thinks we always end up where we're supposed to and kisses him. Next day, he and Ethan drive in their driverless car to Yasumoto Corporation. John tells Ethan that when he talks about him today, he'll talk about how he was created and says he doesn't want to think of himself as less than real. Julie is there and hugs Ethan then asks John if he's nervous. He says it's a walk in the park.

Molly goes to see her doctor — Sam. She confirms that she was alone in the space station for the whole 13 months. She asks if an international crew docked and then says she doesn't understand how but Molly is pregnant. Molly says that's not possible. She thinks back to her mission. We see her alone on the Seraphim Station conducting tests and running tasks.

She curses and a robotic voice tells her to put $5 in the swear jar. She says that some plant samples are contaminated. The voice tells her she has a v-cron coming in. We see Ethan and John on the screen talking to her and telling her that Ethan has been accepted into a school but then it's interrupted by a solar flare. We see the lights flash. Ben, her robot voice, says he'll try again.

The lights go off, alarms sound and Ben doesn't respond to her voice commands. She looks around and grabs some tools then heads up to another level where she floats into a bay. She checks equipment status and goes to a screen. She taps some buttons then heads to a breaker area and flips some switches. The lights come back on. She sees someone through the bay door. It's Marcus. He looks at her. He draws on the frost of the glass "Help Me." She stares in horror.

Sam shows her the lab report that confirms that she's definitely pregnant. Molly says she made a mistake but Sam says she ran all the tests twice. Molly says even if there was someone else, she's infertile and tried for years before giving up. She tells Sam she can't put it in the report and Sam says it has to go to Director Sparks. Molly says she's terrified she'll end up in quarantine and asks for time before she has to tell John.

John gives his speech on the Humanichs program on robotics. He says we all know robots don't have that human factor. He talks about task androids at banks and Med-Assist robots that can do functions but lack the emotions that people want. He says we need a program that processes day to day human experience not ones and zeroes. He introduces them to his son Ethan. Ethan comes onstage and waves at everyone.

Molly stares at a photo of an astronaut, Kryger, a friend of her who has passed on. Gordon Kern, the new deputy director of the agency, introduces himself. He says her logs are good for the mission. He says he has one question but asks her to wait for Director Sparks and leaves her in a room.

John says people want to know what will stop the uprising if everyone uses Humanichs. He says absolutely nothing would stop it but says the brain of this robot learns like the mind of a child — right from wrong. Femi Dodd asks about an emergency protocol and he thinks she means for resting mode, but she means for termination. He asks if she has a child and she says she has a daughter.

He asks if she has a plan to kill her and she says her daughter is human. She says her daughter has a soul and John says there is no such thing. He says it's a cumulative effect of a lifetime of experiences. She says many people believe there is more to people than science can explain and he says those people are idiots. She says she's one of those idiots and he says he feels sorry for her.

He gets angry at Femi and says he won't apologize for not having a plan to kill his son. The other investors are concerned that there are no failsafes built in when things go wrong and John says that not every human child turns out all right either but we don't kill them. He's getting very defensive about his program.

Molly explains to Sparks and Kern that the power came back on after the event. She says security and life support came right back on but communication was down for 13 hours and she spent most of that time trying to bring the systems back online but couldn't. She says she slept for three hours and when she woke the system was back up. They ask if anything happened during the solar flare.

Kern says there was footage deleted during the incident. She says she ordinarily makes copy of the footage because there have been some system deletions but when she went to make the copy, she accidentally deleted it. Sparks says as soon as her medical reports come in with a couple of psychiatric tests they can close it. He says that after what happened with Kryger, it's agency protocol. Sparks tells her that she was missed and is glad to have her back.

Sparks heads to a secret lab where there is a body in a tank. The goo is drained off as Sparks is told that he is ready. They rinse him off and we see it's a man. Sparks says — welcome back Mr Yasumoto. Sparks says there was an anomaly on the Seraphim mission and Yasumoto says it's like Kryger. Sparks says that unlike with Kryger there is missing security footage.

He says the astronaut accidentally deleted the footage but he doesn't believe her. Yasumoto asks why not and Sparks says because she doesn't make those kinds of mistakes. Yasumoto says this could be everything and tells him to stay close to her. Sparks says that John made a presentation to his board but his request for funding was denied. He suggests that doing something about this may make it easier to stay close to them.

John and Ethan put together a model of a space station. Once complete, it rises into the air. John gets a call from Yasumoto Corp. He goes back the next day and is escorted to Yasumoto's private offices. Yasumoto introduces himself. John tells him about Ethan and says he's critical to the Humanichs mission. He says he and Molly were told they would never have a child.

He says this left a hole in their life. Yasumoto asks if it's a cure for childlessness and John says adoption and surrogacy are options, but not everyone can do this. John says filling this void is important. Yasumoto says this raises a lot of questions. He says it's too murky for the board to invest in because they have shareholder accountability. But he says that he would like to invest privately since that's a different matter.

At home, Molly watches Ethan as he stares at himself in the mirror making faces at himself. She says she has an important mission he can help with. She says it's a search. Molly and Ethan are in the park eating ice cream. He says he likes hers better and they switch. A guy in the park hands her a balloon and says it was paid for. She asks by who and he says the guy is gone. There is a note that reads — I know what happened to you. Contact you soon.

Ethan drops his ice cream cone and then has a fit. He demands that she give him another cone then he runs off at top speed. She gives chase and he disappears into the woods. She follows calling his name then finds him with a bird. He tells her it was like that when he found it. She doesn't look so sure. He tells her that her hair looks pretty. Creepy changing of gears...

Molly tells John that Ethan has changed and not for the better. John says that's the consequence of her being gone for so long. He tells her that she's pulling away from them. She says they have always seen Ethan differently. She tells him that he looked at her with hate in his eyes. John says Ethan loves her and she says he is programmed to approximate love, but it's not love. John says to figure it out because that kid is as close to a child they will ever have. He tells her he got funding from Yasumoto and will start work immediately.

We see Molly at the Seraphim Station staring at Marcus then covering her eyes and looking away. She touches her hand to a hot light to make sure she's awake then closes her eyes and then looks back. He's still there. She starts her camera recording and goes to the hatch then opens it. She floats back away and stares at him. She speaks his name and he walks closer. He stares at her.

She says hello and he finally says hello. She asks if he needs help and he says help. He's just mimicking her and she asks what she can do. He says do. He walks closer and reaches out to touch her. She says it's okay and he says okay. He touches her face and she leans into his hand. He touches her body and runs his finger down to her abdomen. She reaches out to touch him and he says it's okay.

They touch each others face and he repeats it's okay over and over. She closes her eyes, crying as he pulls her closer. Back home, Molly is leaving when John apologizes to her about the prior day. She says he said nothing that wasn't true. He says it may be bad timing for the Yasumoto deal and she says they'll make it work. She congratulates him and they kiss, laughing.

Molly is told at her therapy session that reentry can be a challenge especially after a long period of time. She tells Molly she wants the office to be a sanctuary for her. She says Kryger didn't have this and it's important. She says people think lack of attention to his mental state was a factor in his suicide. Yasumoto and Sparks are both watching the meeting.

She asks what Molly wants to share about her physical and emotional bearings. We see Molly wake on Seraphim to alarms going off. She shuts off the alarms and the hatches to other areas. She starts the playback on her recording device. We don't see Marcus on the footage she recorded. She checks the footage from another camera and sees only herself.

She reaches out like she's touching something but there is nothing and no one there. Just her. She deletes the footage in a panic from both the feeds that showed her. We see Molly heading onto her back porch. She walks out to the trash bin and looks down the alley. She sees the figure there again. He steps forward and we see it's Kryger. She's shocked. She calls his name and he says it's him and he's real.

He says it's not like on the Seraphim. He tells her she's not hallucinating and she says everyone thinks he's dead. He says he shouldn't have come. He tells her not to trust anyone and says he'll come back for her. He creeps away as John calls Molly's name.

Summary: Sam hopes to learn more of Molly's mysterious pregnancy by performing an ultrasound scan. Kryger reveals details from his secret solo mission.

Molly sleeps alone. She wakes to a strange noise. It sounds like a heartbeat of sorts. She goes downstairs and sees it's just sneakers in the drier. She's relieved. John is there and asks if she's okay and she says she's still fuzzy. He hands her coffee and she says the awful coffee is the hardest thing about space. He laughs at her. She tells him to wake Ethan while she makes breakfast. She turns off the noisy drier. John says Ethan has a birthday party to go to and he got a video game for him to take. He tells her they're going out to a fancy lunch to celebrate.

He says he has a schedule for her to bring Ethan to meet him and Yasumoto.

She fixes his tie and says to look sharp when Ethan comes in and asks what the phrase means. At the space agency, Sam looks at some of Molly's medical scans. Sparks approaches her and asks for Molly's test results. She says tomorrow at the latest. He thanks her and heads off. Sam looks nervous.

At Yasumoto Tower, John comes into their new lab and Julie greets him. She's thrilled with the new lab and came in at 5 to set up. The crew is all there and Julie takes him to his desk. He's got an amazing window view and is stunned. Julie asks what he said to Yasumoto to turn it around. Femi Dodd is there and asks him the same thing.

Ethan plays a 3D building game and Molly asks when he got so good. He says he played a lot with Dad and Julie while she was gone. He asks her to play and she adds a piece and it tumbles to the ground. He tells her it takes patience. She says she has to go get ready for Andrew's party and he says he likes the museum. She says it was her favorite place as a kid. He likes if space is her favorite place now but she says it's at home with him.

John explains to Femi that Humanichs begin life in the lab and they allow the programmed brain to develop before it is put into a body. She's skeptical and one of the lab techs laughingly tells her it's the rise of the machines. Femi asks what happens to humans when we develop personal connections to the machines. John tells her that she should spend some time with his son to see. She says she's not there to be convinced, she's there to tell him that she's not going to take it lying down that Yasumoto went around the board.

Molly hears the heartbeat sound again and heads back downstairs. It's not the drier this time — it's standing open. She gets a pain in her abdomen and hunches over. She looks up and sees Marcus standing there. He tells her it's okay then repeats the phrase. Julie is monitoring Ethan's brainwaves and notices them intensify. John thinks he and Molly are at the museum and he's being stimulated. They're not.

He's downstairs looking at his mom who has passed out on the kitchen floor. A weird shape of concentric circles pushes up out of her abdomen and then fades back down into it. Ethan sees this. She comes to and tells him she's okay and gives him a hug. Later, at the museum, Molly tells Ethan to catch up with the other kids. The elephant exhibit is really cool and animatronic.

The elephant comes out and stomps toward the kids trumpeting. All run away except for Ethan. He steps forward, curious until the pixelated elephant breaks up. Andrew's mom asks about Ethan starting school and if it was hard to get him in. She says John was working with the school. Sam shows up and Molly thanks her for sneaking out to meet her.

She tells Sam about the pounding noise, passing out and a vision. She tells Sam she doesn't know if she can trust Sparks. She says Harmon is alive and Sam doesn't believe her. She tells Sam that Harmon faked his death because of them. She says there were abnormalities on his brain scans and says Molly has the same ones. She says whatever happened to Harmon is happening to her.

Molly wonders if this could be a hysterical pregnancy. She tells Sam she's clearly infertile and says she needs an ultrasound to know for sure. Sam agrees but says she needs to find a facility where she can do it off the books. One of the parents comes and tells Molly they lost track of Ethan. She leaves Sam and goes to look for him. He's in the evolution exhibit when a robot rolls up and tells him to step back because it's not hands-on.

She asks if he wants to know about Neanderthals and he says yes so she gives him a mini lecture on extinction and survival of the fittest. She says Homo Sapiens were better able to survive and tells Ethan he is one. He says he's not. The robot apologizes and asks what species he is. He introduces the robot to Molly and she pulls him away. She tells him he shouldn't run off and that he worried her. He says Dad says the same thing and asks her not to tell him.

He asks if it's a secret and she says sort of. He tells her that Dad says secrets are mean and she says they can be but you can also use them sometimes not to worry people. She tells him his Dad would be worried to hear that he ran off and that she fell down at the house. He asks if she's okay and she says she is. They each agree to keep their secrets. They head off. Harmon is there and watches them from an upper gallery.

We see him in the Seraphim Station when he was on his shift. The robot voice, Ben, tells him there's a solar flare and an energy surge. The lights flake and Ben stops responding. Harmon grabs a flashlight and goes into another bay. It's the same one where Molly saw Marcus. He sees wet footprints on the floor and then sees a woman there. It's his mother. He calls out to her and she steps closer to him.

Summary: Molly has to decide if she is going to reveal her pregnancy to John after he confronts her about her distant behavior. Meanwhile, John and Molly face parents who are suspicious of Ethan when he goes to school for the first time.

Tonight's episode begins with Molly lying in bed with John while he is sleeping, she has a flashback to when she and John's fertility rounds failed and they think they won't be able to have a child together. In her flash back, John introduces her to Ethan and suggests that they keep him and raise him together as their child.

John wakes up, and asks Molly to take the morning off with him, he wants to throw her a birthday party since she was gone during her actual birthday. Molly agrees, and John gets up to get Ethan ready for orientation at his school, while Molly heads out for her morning jog.

John leaves Ethan home with Gina, and Ethan promises him he won't go outside and won't answer the door. As soon as John is gone, Ethan rushes out to the backyard and begins building something out of a broom and duct tape.

Molly runs in to Alan, and he tells her she is right. He tells her there was a covert medical experiment done while she was in space, and doctors reversed her ovulation and implanted her own eggs which they seized from a fertility clinic she went to when she was trying to have a baby. Alan says the baby she is carrying is her's and John's. Alan also is concerned because she is experiencing the same hallucinations that Marcus was before he killed himself, and he wants her to go to the hospital for a few days so that they can observe her.

Later, John and Molly take Ethan to orientation at his new school. After Ethan heads in to school, the principal stops him and says that some of the parents have some questions for him. John reassures them that Ethan isn't dangerous. Molly tells them that Ethan is "just different" and they "don't have to be afraid of different."

Molly fills Sam in on what Alan told him about the "covert medical experiment" and Sam assures her that there was no way any one in the medical department impregnated her with John's eggs while she was in space. Molly decides to go find Harmon to see if they did any testing on him while he was in space. She finds his trailer deserted, and a creepy drawing all over the walls inside the trailer.

Molly heads to the school later in the afternoon with John to pick up Ethan. He emerges from the school unscathed, and even made friends with one of the student whose parents were afraid he was dangerous.

Molly's birthday party is in full swing, Sam arrives and Molly rushes upstairs with her. Sam takes a sample of her blood in a test tube and promises to conduct a DNA test, and she says she will be back in two days. After Sam leaves, Molly's drops to the floor in pain and has a vision of Marcus.

Sam arrives at the lab, but a guard refuses to let her down the hallway. He says there has been a chemical spill and no one is allowed in the wing. Sam argues that she just needs to in to her office really quick, but the guard doesn't budge.

Molly's party is breaking up, and the guests are leaving. She tells John that she wants to say good-bye to Marcus's friend Tim. John informs her that Tim isn't at the party, but she insists he is. She runs through the house yelling his name. Molly looks at a picture she took earlier that night with Tim by her side, and realizes that he never showed up in the picture, and she had imagined him.

After the guests leave Molly has a breakdown and confesses to John that she seen Marcus on the ship, and she "can't keep going on like this." She packs her bags and calls Alan to come pick her up and take her in to the hospital. John argues that she shouldn't trust him, but Molly thinks that Alan is on her side.

Sam is still trying to get in to her office, she sneaks around the hallway and sees agents cleaning out her entire office and stealing all of her files. She calls John frantically and asks where Molly is, and John says that Alan took her. Sam texts Molly and tells her to "get out of the car." Molly manages to overpower Alan and jump out of the car and starts running home. John picks her up in the road and they make a getaway. A few moments later Alan and a squad of men arrive at John and Molly's house with guns drawn, but the house is already empty.

Tonight's episode begins with Molly and John driving with Ethan in the back seat of the car, they're on the run. Sparks calls Yasumoto and informs him that Molly is on the run, and she escaped when he was trying to bring her in for quarantine.

Yasumoto arrives at a lab where they are trying to duplicate meteor substance. They have made it safe for skin to come in contact with the meteor substance, however it is not safe to be breathed in to the respiratory system. Yasumoto tells the lab technician behind the glass to take off his oxygen mask anyways, within thirty seconds he starts bleeding out of his eyes and drops dead.

Molly and John arrive at her Dad's house with Ethan, he is thrilled to see them. John informs him that they will only be staying with him for a day.

Meanwhile, Sam is being held in an interrogation room. She asks the guard when she can leave and he says not until after she speaks to Sparks. She goes to the bathroom and tries to dump the sample of Molly's blood in the toilet. Sparks and the guard barge in and catch her. Sparks calls Yasumoto and informs him about the blood sample, he knows Molly is trying to determine the paternity of the baby. Yasumoto tells Sparks to "take care of" Sam Barton.

Molly's Dad's dog freaks out when he sees her and barks at her and bites her hand. Her Dad has no idea what came over the dog, he never acts like that. While her Dad is bandaging up her hand he reassures her that he hasn't had a drink in years and he is clean and sober. Molly takes Ethan upstairs to her old bedroom and tells him that it is his room now. Meanwhile, Sparks receives news that Molly and John ran to the island where her Dad lives.

Later Molly asks her Dad to take Ethan in to town by himself and have dinner with him. She says that she and John need to have some alone time because it has been crazy since her reentry. Her Dad agrees and doesn't think anything is out of the norm.

Sparks is questioning Sam Barton, he looks through her cell phone and learns that she tipped her off and told her to "get out of the car." Sparks reveals that he knows about Sam's brother and the fact that she pulled some strings and got his brother out of a murder charge. Sam says that her brother is stable and is recovering now, she begs Sparks to "leave her brother out of this."

Sparks calls his men and tells them that Sam Barton won't be a problem anymore, and tells them to make a move on Molly. Back at the island, Ethan is out to dinner with his grandpa. John is taking a sample of Molly's blood and they are going to conduct a DNA test of their own. While he is drawing Molly's blood she has another hallucination of Marcus.

Ethan and his grandpa return home, and while his grandpa is unchaining the gate, Ethan disappears out of the back seat of the truck. A man is running through the woods with him holding his hand over his mouth so that he can't scream. Ethan's grandpa tells Molly and John that Ethan ran away. They head out in the woods to search for him, unbeknownst to them there is an entire tactical team out in the woods with him. The men take Ethan out to a clearing and zap him with a tool, draining the life from him. Meanwhile John is fighting with the police because they refuse to help when they learn that Ethan is a robot. He and Molly's dad end up thrown in to a jail cell.

Molly finds Ethan lying in the clearing lifeless and she picks him up and tries to run with him, but a helicopter begins hovering above her. Molly wakes up and is strapped down to a bed. A few doctors are hovering over her in hazmat suits. Molly manages to get loose and stabs the doctor with a syringe, she runs from the room and falls in to another room full of doctors and collapses. Yasumoto watches as his men hoist Molly up on to an operating table.

Sparks and Gordon are inside of Molly's Dad's house. Gordon informs him that all of their personnel are cleared off from the island. Sparks finds the DNA test Molly and John had just completed, he pushes the button to see the results.

Yasumoto's men have Molly strapped down to the operating table. She is in and out of consciousness as a laser slices her stomach open.

Summary: John begins to doubt Molly's mental state when the validity of her pregnancy is questioned. Meanwhile, Ethan suffers a serious setback, and John and Julie disagree over how to care for him.

As Molly gets put under the knife, she starts imagining her life in a different world. One where she's married to Marcus and suffering from everyday normal pregnancy brains. But that easier life she must have subconsciously wanted all turned out to have been a nightmare when the shock of Marcus's death shocked her awake for a few moments. One that is ongoing!

John and the rescue team had found Molly and Ethan unconscious on the ground's floors. And by time a medical team could be reached — the nurse on the site reportedly couldn't detect any signs of a fetal heartbeat. So Molly ended up having to be rushed to the hospital back on the mainland.

Then when she did come to — she was left having to explain to John that "they" did something to her. That these people she keeps talking about did something to her baby. Molly was anxious by having to defend herself that she had to be sedated for her health before she could stress herself any further. However, with her under sedation, there wasn't anyone available to provide a reasonable explanation in what happened to Ethan. John's diagnosis is that the little boy's system must have shut down after a fall or perhaps a scare. While Julie on the other hand remains skeptical. She's wondering how negligent could John have been for something to happen to Ethan. They both know how the precious the little boy.

But if John is negligent with anyone then it's with Molly. Her scans came back and showed that she was never pregnant. And Molly knows that for the lie it is. She was pregnant and so she suspects something happened to her during the six hours she was missing until John found her out in the woods.

And seeing as her scans won't show that she was in fact pregnant even if that's no longer the case now then she thought she could at most get validation from Sam of all people. Although when she brought John to her friend — her trust appeared to have been misplaced.

They got to Sam just as they got to Molly's baby. Sparks had threatened her and removed Molly's baby. Though for now the baby appears to be safe and oddly thriving since being removed from its mother.

All of Sparks' machinations have left John, in the meantime, reluctantly suspecting his wife. The doctor back at the hospital had told him that Molly could have imagined her pregnancy. And for a while John wanted to deny it but then small bits of doubt started to weave itself into his head. So he turned to Ethan for answers. Ethan was his last resort on finding out the truth and that made John push Ethan into getting better possibly to Ethan's own detriment.

And that's when Julie stepped in. She told him that he couldn't just do whatever he wanted with Ethan. Even it was for Molly. Julie had never liked the way he merely gave the little boy to his wife rather than stick to their original plan of finding a family for him.

John stopped her rant after that because apparently she needed some reminding. Even though they built Ethan together that doesn't change the fact she works for him and they are not equal partners. Hence it's not her place to reprimand or tell him what's best for Ethan. Only and his wife, Ethan's mother, will make the decisions.

Yet he did change his mind about pushing Ethan before his body had healed. John wouldn't be able to bare it if his actions caused Ethan to never get better so he laid off from trying to maneuver around Ethan's frail system. But that left him and his wife without the answers they needed. That is until Molly remembered when she got bitten by the dog. Her blood sample from that instance, one Sparks is completely unaware of, could very well show that she was pregnant. And she was right.

John helped her break into the laboratory where her sample was still being held and that gave her the information that she was pregnant. Though the DNA showed that the baby was part her and part something neither she nor John recognized — a foreign substance. So they also know that whatever the baby is — John didn't help produce it.

People have been lying to them and the only way they can survive being watched/used is for them to pretend that Molly can accept her pregnancy was a fake. So that's exactly what they did. She returned to work and put on a big smile for Sparks. All in the name of keeping her and her family safe.

And as for Ethan, he awoke on his own and luckily he didn't remember what happened to make him shut down. So his parents don't have to worry about getting him to lie for them.

Molly got back the footage of when she met "Marcus". She used a different algorithm on it to see if she possibly missed something that day and what she saw, thanks to Dany, was more than just empty space this time. There was some kind of live being of light moving towards her in the footage. That was Marcus!

Summary: Molly uncovers top-secret footage that reveals the real reason the ISEA chose her for the solo space mission. Meanwhile, Ethan experiences his first dream, an unforeseen event for which he was not programmed; and Julie connects with a mysterious man she meets at a gym.

As it turns out "the baby" hitched a ride to earth using Molly's as its carrier. Molly and her husband came to that conclusion after they analyzed the video from when she was in space. And it when that "being" attached itself to Molly's stomach — pretending it was friendly gesture — their best guess was it must have been secretly working as a parasite. All along it was using Molly, but the couple still have no idea what a man like Sparks must have done to it after he removed the fetus (if it's even partly human or the ultrasound lied) from her stomach.

And as they grow concerned about what happened to the "baby" they lost — their son Ethan has also shown some worrisome behavior. He had a nightmare and though that's typical common among young children — it wasn't built into Ethan's mechanical system. He wasn't supposed to be that human so John never programmed him to dream!

So rather than play the proud papa at his son's recent advancement — John wants to take the little boy back to the lab for a quick study. Although Molly wasn't all that happy about it. She sometimes forgets Ethan is an AI and merely thinks of him as a little boy — her little boy in particular. Hence it took some convincing on John's part to get her to walk away from that fight.

He gave her a listening device. Very high tech and extremely efficient. He figured she could use it on Sam because he knows deep down how much Molly wants to find out the real reason her friend betrayed her. It's not like Molly has a lot of friends to begin with so losing Sam must have hurt her. Probably more than she's willing to acknowledge.

Sam was the only person Molly invited to her and John's wedding. And that meant something to Molly at the time and possibly to this day so she went ahead and planted the bug on Sam. She didn't like that she had to steep to such methods, but she also needed some insight into how far Sparks was prepared to go.

And on that score, she didn't have to wait all that long. Sparks has been keeping a close eye on Sam since bringing her into the loop. Let's face it he's smart enough not to fully trust the person he's blackmailing. So he was immediately alerted when Sam was caught speaking to Molly.

[11:00:17 PM] Kristine Francis: Sparks has a lot on his plate as it is so he didn't need Sam losing focus. Instead of sending her a message — he went to see her in person. She was told to keep Molly in check and if Molly showed any signs of being suspicious about the baby or worse working with someone like Harmon Kryger then he was to be notified at once. The reason Kryger popped back up in the picture is because the man did something either very brave or very stupid.

Kryger broke into the building using Gordon Kern's finger prints which the latter didn't really appreciate. He was and out within five minutes but during that short time he stole footage of the flight mission that allegedly ended in a fire with everyone dying onboard. Sparks's daughter included. So Sparks knows how important that footage is and he very much wants to conduct a manhunt using Molly as leverage. He figured Kryger will eventually reach out for support. She's the only other person that experienced an encounter on her mission that so far been capable to talk about it.

Sparks assumption about Molly was correct and yet Molly was fully aware of his spies following her so she decided to use one of them against him. After Kryger approached her — she pretended to pass on his whereabouts to Sam who dutifully reported it in to Sparks. Though it was all a ruse Molly created right on the spot!

Molly and John (who managed to snatch himself away from the lab and very apologetic Julie) met with Kryger and he gave them the footage he stole. It was locked by a program — one too far advanced for him to understand and so he needed their help in decrypting it. And seeing as John was good at such things — Molly thought he could handle it. While Kryger just hoped he could.

Once they were done with their meeting, Kryger tried to sneak away and Gordon ended up capturing him!

Kryger may have to pay for what he did with his life but the footage was worth it. Although John wasn't the one that decrypted it. It was trial and error on his part. And surprisingly it was Ethan that managed to work out the decryption — apparently it was similar to his video games.

The footage was of Katie Sparks pleading to ISCA to stop all missions. There was a virus up there with her and her crew and it had made everyone homicidal. It had also impregnated her so she destroyed the ship in an effort to kill it. But Sparks chose to cover up that mission and then chose Molly up there against his daughter's wishes — she was to be the bait.

And the plan worked. Molly came back pregnant and Sparks took the baby which was what he wanted this entire time — his hands on something powerful. Even if it's too powerful for him to handle. Whatever the baby is — it's be known to kill people in space and it's recently caused a doctor on the ground to kill a close friend. It can't be trusted and yet Sparks refuses to let it go!

So it continues to affect people using that weird symbol everyone keeps seeing!

Summary: Molly searches for her baby and becomes convinced the agency took the child. Meanwhile, John discovers startling advancements in Ethan's programming; and Kern holds Kryger hostage in an attempt to recover the incriminating video he stole from the ISEA.

We start on a spaceship with Molly. The ship lurches as it collides with an asteroid and springs a leak. Molly goes for an oxygen mask, but it's broken. She fiddles with the computer and activates the oxygen reserves.

She exits the spaceship to a small, clapping audience. Sparks and Kearne enter the room to inform them of the Iruna's "oxygen fire" and the deaths of all aboard. "Go home," Sparks tells them. "Be with your families." In the present day, Molly shows the footage to Sam, explaining that Sparks sent her fishing. The baby must be alive since they went through so much trouble to get it. Molly asks Sam to look at the medical records of the Iruna team. Sam protests that Sparks will notice, and Molly replies that she wants to make him nervous.

The next morning, Ethan is all ready for school — an hour early. He and John are both eager for him to get back to school and live like a normal kid, and he's gotten him a bike as a surprise. Molly and John brush their teeth and discuss their current plan: Molly will talk to someone named Pearce about the Iruna. Molly visits Pearce's fancy apartment building, but Pearce refuses to see her.

Kearne has told Sparks that Kryger is dead, but he's actually keeping him tied up in his basement. He uses a nailgun to attempt to intimidate him into giving up the file's location.

Kryger says that he threw it away because he couldn't open it. Hopefully Kearne is smart enough to know this flimsy story is obviously false.

When John drops Ethan off at school, two girls speaking Japanese make several unflattering comments about him, including one's desire to "own one." Ethan talks back to them in Japanese. Ethan doesn't know how he suddenly learned Japanese.

Sparks visits Sam's office. He thanks her for the information that led to Kryger's supposed death, and reminds her about her brother's precarious position. He is not happy that Sam gave Molly the medical records without going through him first.

At John's lab, Julie is arranging a date with Odin, the guy from the gym. John asks her about the Japanese, which similarly baffles her. He's unhappy with Ethan's supposed lack of humanity and his own lack of knowledge about the kid, unwittingly falling into what many parents experience when their children do the unexpected.

Molly looks up the price of Pearce's penthouse, which he bought for a whopping dollar. A mining outfit called Claypool Industries bought it for five million a few days before selling it to Pearce. She emails him about the circle pattern. Pearce asks her to meet him at that evening. She then meets Sam to discuss the medical records. Apparently the brain scans were falsified, but all crew members had elevated levels of naphthalene in their systems. Isn't that the stuff in mothballs? I don't think you're supposed to have it inside you. Later, Molly finds Pearce, police, and onlookers outside his apartment. She's told that he jumped.

Kearne's mom visits him. She says he looks awful and asks if he's been using again. He says that he's just been working a lot lately. She reminds him that this was the same age at which his father fell ill, and apparently started hearing voices. Kearne insists that he's fine, and awkwardly hugs her before she leaves. As we all know, Kearne absolutely is using, something called "absalom." He gives Kryger some water, and Kryger gets under his skin by saying that Kearne is keeping him alive because he has doubts about the ISCA.

After hearing of Ethan's newest development, Yasumoto has invited the Woods family for dinner. Dodd, the board member that John insulted at the presentation, is there as Yasumoto's date. Yasumoto's interest in Ethan is fueled by the same thing that drives his plans with Molly's baby: a shot at immortality. Ethan could be the key to fully understanding and replicating the human brain, which would allow people to upload their mind into robotic platforms. John and Dodd are both less than enthused about this idea (and the former even remarks on how he finally agrees with the latter on something). They discuss the possibility of installing a governing mechanism in Ethan to slow his progress to a more human rate, which Molly opposes on the principle that they're playing God. Pretty sure that concern's already out the window, what with the whole creating an AI and all. Good critical thinking skills, Molly.

Summary: When Molly learns that her baby is alive, she sets out with Kern and Kryger to devise a plan to intercept the baby before Sparks and Yasumoto can relocate him. Meanwhile, John struggles to keep up with Ethan's rapid development.

Sparks pours himself a drink at his house, and then all the pictures frames stop showing their original photos and instead play Katie's footage. Molly has come to his house alone and apparently unarmed. Molly tells him about Katie's pregnancy, and demands to know where the fetus is. Sparks refuses to tell her. Before she leaves, he tells him to pray for Katie's forgiveness. Not long after, Sparks leaves his house and Molly follows him.

Odin holds a meeting at a warehouse-y looking place. He talks about how he faced drone strikes and about how outsourcing war to machines is the same as outsourcing humanity. He talks about how they're going to have a reckoning, and holds up a picture of Ethan. A certain red-haired board member arrives.

Molly follows Sparks to an office building, then cons the security guard into letting her look at Claypool's empty office space. In the lab, Sparks follows Molly's orders in an interesting way. He talks to the baby, which shows him Katie. He asks for her forgiveness, saying that he had no idea what would happen.

Turns out that Molly's not quite as smooth as she thought. The guard locked Molly in what really is just disused office space and reports the security breach. In other words, Molly's on the top floor, and Sparks is at the bottom. A security team descends upon the building and the unwitting Molly, who spots them when a flock of birds hits a nearby window. When they fly away, they form the circle pattern. She tries to hide, but Kearne finds her and leads her down a stairwell, taking out a member of the security team on the way. He and Molly get into a car with Kryger, who drives them away.

John attempts to install his governing mechanism into Ethan... but can't get in. His password is not working. He heads straight to Julie's apartment and accuses her of changing the password, which she denies. She's also hurt that he thinks she would do that. They come to the conclusion that Ethan must have locked them both out.

Sparks tells Yasumoto about the security breach. He thinks it would be best to kill her, but Yasumoto believes that the baby (and therefore they) might need her later. The orange stuff that he sleeps in, that keeps him alive, is running out. They need to keep the baby alive in the hopes of getting more; after all, their previous mining operations in the same sector that Molly visited have to be connected to this new life. Sparks goes home and calls his ex, Tanya. He tells her that he thinks they'd still be together if Katie hadn't died. She points out that she did, and hangs up on him.

The crew plans for Molly to expose Sparks' handiwork at a board meeting. Meanwhile, Ethan has gone missing a la Carl Grimes. So has his bike. John is able to trace them to a nearby park. At the park, Ethan sees some older kids stuff a futuristic firecracker into an old robot. Upon seeing him, they try to take his bike. A push to the ground peels off part of Ethan's skin, and the realization that they're fighting an android is enough to send them running. John arrives shortly after and scolds him for running off. Ethan insists on taking the broken bot home.

Sparks tells Kearne to eliminate Molly, disobeying Yasumoto's orders. Kearne finds out about the impending relocation of the baby, and is able to grab Molly before she gets to the board meeting. They're going to have to scrap this plan. The three meet again in the trailer to plan the heist. Moving the baby will leave them vulnerable to attack, so it's best to strike in the middle of transportation. Kearne tells Molly about the kill order.

At John's lab, Julie fixes Ethan's face. He asks if they're going to fix the bot, to which Julie replies that it can't fulfill its function. Understandably concerned, Ethan asks about his function. Julie says that his purpose is to find his own. Julie and Charlie talk a bit about Odin. Charlie tries to ask her out, but she rejects him. He also says that she wouldn't like Odin so much if she did an internet search on him. Julie says that she wouldn't like it if Charlie did such a thing. Nevermind that your coworker might have found out that your boyfriend is an anti-robotics terrorist-person. Gotta prove that point, Julie.

There's been a problem at the ISCA lab, a leak of some kind in the tank chamber. It's filled with a foggy substance. A suited techie enters it, then says that they not going to believe something, and then stops responding. The comms are still working, but he isn't talking. The baby's heart and respiratory rates drop quickly, but then recover.

Molly sends John a message, telling him to not go after the ISCA if she doesn't come back. John gets it, then immediately goes after her. He leaves Ethan with Julie and her terrorist boyfriend.

The bomb Kearne planted inside goes off, and Molly and Kryger sneak into the lab. Kearne is able to get most of the workers to evacuate the building, except those in the main room. Sparks calls him down there. He tells Sparks that he's late because he was offing Molly. Molly and Kryger get to the elevator, where they were supposed to meet him. Obviously, Kearne's not there. They decide that they've got to take the elevator with Kearne's prints. Kearne almost convinces Sparks to leave, but the latter notices the elevator coming down... and it says that Kearne's using it.

There's motion in the tank chamber. The fog swirls around, and the circles appear on members of the security team. When Molly and Kryger enter the room, there's just a pile of dead guards to meet them. Kearne and Sparks are shooting at each other down the hall.

Sparks shoots Molly, but then her body takes on the look of Katie's. Katie gets up and says, "He needs our help."

Summary: When Sparks falls under the influence of the vision of his deceased daughter, he flees with Molly's baby to a remote location. Now, Yasumoto and Molly must rely on each other to track down the offspring.

Molly's baby is dangerous. Now that it's been released from its cage (or incubation chamber) it's using an illusion of Katie to manipulate Sparks into setting him free into the outside world. And the poor deluded and grieving father was just ultimately too weak to resist the temptation. As long as he thinks he can have his daughter back then Sparks is going to anything he can to assist the baby in whatever it wants.

But that's the problem the world as a whole is facing — no one knows what this Alien wants. He or it has tried several times to visit earth by latching itself onto women all the while pretending to be a pregnancy. And now that it's arrived at its final destination — it has all the power. Kryger attempted to explain his actions in almost killing the baby by relaying said info yet Molly refused to listen to him. To her, it's still her baby and she naturally wants to defend him as any mother would do. Even if that means she has to allow that thing to grow into a murderous machine.

Kryger remembered what the baby did to him when they were on board his ship together and after hearing about Katie — he's more prepared than ever to get to the baby and destroy it before anyone else has to suffer. So he locked Molly in at the facility to make sure she wouldn't interfere with his plans. Then he and Kern went about trying to find the baby albeit for different reasons. Well, at least in the beginning. Kern didn't come to see the baby as the threat it was until he saw for himself how much it was growing and once the danger was established — he chose to side with Kryger on what to do next. Or at the very most appeared to agree siding with Kryger. One never knows with Kern!

While under the baby's influence, Sparks terminated his agreement and secretive job with Yasumoto. He had claimed to be "not the man for the job". He said that after he had already lied to his boss about the baby escaping on its own volition. However Yasumoto involvement in this case wasn't quite over despite Sparks telling him to move from the lost cause. John had gone to Yasumoto. The other man had needed help finding his wife and thought his boss was a man of integrity which was why he went to him believing if they worked together they could possibly save Molly from Sparks.

Then, later on, Kern also went to Yasumoto with his own unique version of events. But as Yasumoto is deliberating his next course of action, from the safety of his own home by the way; Molly risks her life to escape the facility.

She managed to gain the upper hand with one of the guards sent to fetch her and he told her something interesting in exchange for her not shooting him. He told her he knew where her family was and prior to that she thought they were safe at home.

Yasumoto had convinced John that he could keep Ethan safe. Though neither of them had suspected the people that would be around the boy as part of his protection would be the real danger. Julie's new boyfriend Odin and Femi are both firm believers in the evil hidden in technological advancement. So their sole purpose in life is destroying someone like Ethan.

And before Molly could go on a rescue mission, her prisoner received a call. Molly answered his phone and the other side of the phone call Yasumoto asked her to come in. He said they needed to talk.

Yasumoto is willing to help Molly find her baby and then afterwards he states he'll help her and her family live normal lives under his protection. All Molly has to do to uphold her end of the bargain is find Sparks and get her baby back. Easy, right? Except the deal sound too good to be true!

The man Yasumoto arranged to go with her is supposedly a doctor that believes in their cause. The doctor says he doesn't want to risk the baby getting into the wrong hands. Though he later "disagrees" with Yasumoto about how the other man handled the whole situation. Then he plays on Molly's weak state of mind by promising her she'll be reunited with her child soon enough.

Which child is that? The one she lost all those years ago or the one that's living and feeding off of people. That is what the baby is doing after all. Sparks had wanted to give him food but "his daughter" had informed that's not what "he" eats.

The baby's victim continued to live on pass the dinner bell and yet the cop wasn't the same. He began killing people and he also acted like he was covering Sparks' tracts. As if he had been turned into a minion incapable of original thought.

Summary: As Molly gets closer to finding her "offspring," John learns that Yasumoto might not have his family's best interests at heart, and Sparks commits to do whatever it takes to keep the "offspring" alive and maintain the visions of his dead daughter.

he had to. Unless Kern is as off tract about the baby as Molly — he should understand Kryger's reasons.

Kryger and Kern overpowered the minion harassing them and they used him to find Sparks at the cabin he was hiding out in. Sparks had wanted to take "Katie" to the cabin they used to use and he had even invited his ex-wife Anya to come join them. She didn't know what to think upon seeing her dead daughter returned to life as a child. Yet she went along with what Sparks wanted.

The two of them got to be happy as a family again along with an apparition of course. And because they never wanted it to end — they kept on feeding the baby. They didn't like that part but somehow contrived a way to be free of their guilt.

The minion, as he came to be, eventually found Kryger and Kern during their manhunt for Sparks. He entrapped them by saying he could lead them to Sparks. Then when the time was right he attempted to kill them. Luckily though they managed to escape him but soon afterwards Kern started to experience detox. And so Kryger told him if he turns out to be dead-weight he'd leave him just like he left Molly.

Kern hadn't known that Kryger had betrayed Molly. He had thought they had gotten split up in all the chaos so he asked Kryger how he could betray a friend. And Kryger had said he did what

Although, they were technically being extorted (if they didn't help it then it was going to take away Katie); the Sparks family started to believe in the baby being part of a high being. So they began to listen to it and follow orders without complaint. As for the baby, it wanted his mother.

But not for sentimental value. Molly received a sign from it that Yasumoto's man was using her and with his help — she escaped just long enough to call John and warn him. Meanwhile John starts to craft a plan to get Ethan from out under Yasumoto's "protection". However, unbeknownst to himself, Julie had left the lab. She thought the situation was handled so she went home probably for a change of clothes.

So Ethan didn't know who to turn to for help and seeing as he had been getting closer to Odin recently — he left with Odin in his car.

Molly did come to find her baby and rather than the happy reunion she was expecting — even her child planned on using her. The baby created an illusion for her like he does with all his victims. And he made her turn a ship that was already in space around. For some reason he wanted that ship on a course heading to Earth.

Then once the baby was done with that — he commanded Sparks to take Molly with them. She was still under its enchantment and he had used another minion to keep her under control.

That's how Kern and Kryger found them. And seeing Kryger was finally feeling guilty about abandoning Molly — he ignored Kern's advice to formulate a plan and just acted. He came out shooting and it was the shots that woke Molly up from the dream-like state.

The guys saved Molly from being abducted, but Kryger was fatally wounded in the process. Plus they were unable to retrieve the baby. Though, before he died, Kryger tried one last time to get Molly to see reason. He told her that she was the one that brought that thing to earth so she most also be the one that destroys it. What do you think? Can Molly kill something she still views as her child?

Summary: As the offspring's powers grow, Molly learns of Yasumoto's painful path to immortality. When Sparks starts to have doubts about the mission, Anya takes charge. Meanwhile, Odin tries to secretly access Ethan's circuitry.

Despite his betrayal, Molly still tried to do Yasumoto a favor by warning him. When his people quickly came on the scene right after the shoot-out — she told them how dangerous her son was and had asked to be sent in instead. She knows her son would never harm her, but everyone else on the other hand won't have that same reassurance. Especially if the offspring feels threatened in anyway.

Regrettably, Molly's solution was ignored. The men were under orders and their boss was facing his own mortality. So Yasumoto did what he believed was in his own best interest and told his men to collect the offspring at any cost. Any cost ended with everyone that hadn't ran away the second they got their chance — dying from friendly fire!

The offspring is growing much stronger than anyone had anticipated.

Later Molly attempted to reach him a second time and again he flatly told her that he wants the offspring in his possession and in case she got an ideas — he also mentioned he had her family. Yet that was a lie on his part. His people had told him they couldn't find Ethand and so Yasumoto only had John to bargain with.

John had helped their son Ethan to escape Yasumoto long ago. He wanted the boy to safe from manipulation so he sent him to what should have been a safe a place — the lab. And although Ethan was supposed to have found Julie — he unfortunately wounded up with Odin who is actually even more dangerous for him than Yasumoto.

Odin eventually betrayed the fragile trust Ethan had put in him. First, he messed with Ethan's head by turning him against his own father. He mentioned John had once tried to turn Ethan off and then alluded to that being the reason John wanting to speak to Yasumoto alone.

Then he shut down Ethan for a few minutes in order to implant a bomb inside of Ethan's hardware. It was only after the implantation that he manage to do what he had originally promised and called Julie to tell her to come watch over the little boy. It seems the plan of whatever nut group Odin is a part of requires mass casualties to prove their point so Ethan will be used in the worst way possible all because Odin doesn't simply want to kill him — he wants to kills others as well.

As for the naive Molly, she continued to hunt for her son in spite of Kern's misgivings of what to do afterwards. He's been pretty much changing his mind about the part every other minute but once he saw that the offspring has put his own mother into one of his trances — Kern was reluctant about reuniting mother and son.

Molly though hasn't changed her mind. To her, her son is scared and in need of a mother so she kept hunting for any side of him until ultimately she was given a clue to what direction the runaway group was heading. She found the hotel they were staying at the same time Dr. Mason (Yasumoto's man) found her.

Dr. Mason didn't want a repeat of the last time so he entered the hotel room using Molly as a shield and it still didn't save him when Sparks shot him dead. Sparks had then told the stunned Molly that everyone else left him there after he had voiced some doubts about what they were doing.

Molly and Kern finally decided to bring in Kern's man at the ISEA. He promised Molly his friend wasn't going to try and overpower her right on what to do with her son. And anyways they needed to bring the ISEA up to date on everything that's been happening underneath the corporation's noses.

The company did choose in the end to help Molly on her mission to find her son. Though the turning point for them was when they learned that Sparks had been endangering their men and women in space for his own gain. They didn't know about Katie's last message and so when they saw it — it came as a blow. They had entrusted Sparks with countless astronauts and he purposely dangled Molly out like someone's bait.

So she used him. She pretended to have found her son and called Yasumoto to make a trade. Sparks was just used to add weight to the lie. If she found him then she must have her!

Yasumoto gave her back John and then when he realized he'd been had — it was too late. ISEA's agents picked him and brought him back to headquarters where he then reluctantly confessed to Molly what all of this had been about. As the story goes, Yasumoto found a piece of a meteorite that had special capabilities, similar to the area where the offspring's presence was first picked up almost like it was that thing's home planet; back in his youth.

Namely that meteorite, he's only recently been running short on, has kept him alive for over 140 years. So this manhunt for the offspring was for one thing. It's the only chance he had left to remain immortal. He used her and committed atrocities practically against all human race simply because he didn't want to die. Yasumoto sees her child as his last chance and without already harnessing its power — he's been so far rapidly aging and will die.

Yet here's the thing, the offspring doesn't want to be anyone's savior. He has a plan and Molly didn't realize that plan also involved her till she caught Sparks try to sneak into ISEA's computer mainframe. She was able to stop him from going through the plan but he then laughed in her face as he told her she's already helped their side more than she knows.

Molly had contacted Glass's ship up in space and brought it to a location hovering over earth. The astronaut thought it was off at the time, but had overlooked it because he though it was sanctioned. It wasn't.

The offspring took advantage of its mother to bring Glass closer to Katie. Last we saw of her she was pregnant with an "offspring" of her own nearly two years ago. This time though she's fighting fit and ready to go home now thanks to Glass being so conveniently nearby!

Summary: When Molly finally comes face-to-face with her offspring, she realizes she may be the only one who can stop the coming danger. Meanwhile, Julie uncovers grave secrets about Odin.

Katie is back and she's starting to talk about what happened on the ship. Yet something is off about her. For instance, she admits to abandoning her former crew once they started to kill each other which is the truth but then she tells Glass that she put herself in a coma on an escape pod. And there's the lie.

The Katie from the video said she was prepared to die. So there was nothing about an escape pod. If there was then her father would have went looking for her and frankly her survival after nearly two years in hibernation is just too miraculous to be real.

If she had gone to anyone else's ship they would have questioned her story but she went to Glass. And the two of them had history. Hence, beside her father that is, he's the best man that would get so swept up in her return — he'd blind to everything else.

And that's unfortunate for Molly. Her son had used her to enter codes into the ISEA system and because of that no one knows what he's planning on. Or if there's even a plan in motion. So Molly thinks there could be an explanation behind of it besides the obvious. However John has suddenly switched sides on her.

John no longer thinks of the offspring as a part of Molly — he sees it as a potential threat. And he tries his best to get Molly to see the threat as well. And though she wanted to ignore him, Molly went looking into what the baby made her do. She tried therapy to help unblock her memory and once she did — she learned she turned a ship around.

The warning message Molly had inadvertently sent out had turned Glass's ship around. So not only did it put him on the direct path to finding Katie but also, according to Sparks (who changed sides at the last minute) the ship is heading to earth in order to crash. Yet Sparks doesn't know why the offspring wants the ship to crash — just that he does — and now Sparks wants to stop him because he can't lose his precious Katie again.

He truly thought his daughter was dead and the mere chance at having his daughter back was why he had gone along with the offspring's plan to begin with. Now his ex-wife is dead (thanks to something to do with the offspring) and his daughter is about to die. If she is his daughter that is!

Molly has given up her ideas about her "son" though. Even as she's seen what choosing personal desires over common sense has done to a man like Sparks — she still thinks her baby needs his mother. And so she ignored the warning signs and nearly let him into the house when he arrived at her door. But thankfully Ethan is too smart to be fooled (by anyone) and he chased the other boy away from the house.

Odin had given Ethan a detonator he pretended was a special alarm. One that Ethan was supposed to use if the boy ever felt scared and wanted to contact Odin. Odin had sent himself up as a hero to the little boy and Ethan's parents as the villains.

He made Ethan believe his parents wanted to shut him down and yet someone was able to re-instill Ethan's trust in his parents. And that was Julie. She talked to Ethan and reiterated to him that he was loved. So once she was done assuring him she asked who told him such lies about shutting him down.

Julie had never grilled Odin about his backstory. She had just accepted into her life and thereby gave him access to Ethan.

It was only when she was done with Ethan and had looked into Odin herself that she realized how dangerous he was. Odin isn't even his real name. It's an alias he uses because his actual name could easily be linked through an internet search to terrorism on technology. Apparently, he's infamous.

So Julie went running to the Woods' house to warn them. But what she ended up finding was John in a trance and Ethan and Molly missing.

The offspring was at the house and after Ethan had chased him away — Molly ran after him. As for Ethan he took his bike out afterwards to probably de-stress. So things were chaotic to say the least. Thankfully, everyone was soon found and there were no injuries but the family now know they aren't safe.

Molly had finally gotten the chance to talk to her son earlier and the offspring warned her about the others. It seems like everything he's done so far was because he was commanded to do it. And the others of his kind have a plan of their own. They want to come to earth and so the offspring told Molly the rest of them will soon be needing bodies.

He wanted Molly to leave with him and she couldn't. Though she loved him — she couldn't leave the rest of the human to their deaths. So she stayed behind and came up with a plan of her own. Molly believes she's the only one that can stop the oncoming invasion — so she's going back into space.

She thinks she can stop whatever it is that tore out of Katie's stomach and that is currently walking around on the ship with her face.

Summary:	Molly returns to space in an attempt redirect the Seraphim away from Earth and protect the world's population from the deadly spores. Also, John discovers that Odin's plan has put Ethan in terrible danger.

When Molly returned to her family she had a lot of explaining to do. She had yelled at Ethan for trying to intervene between her and her other son. And Ethan is smart enough to realize that she cared for the other boy more than she cared about him. It was a slip on her part but he instantly picked up on it.

Molly and John want to make everything better for him and they can't. John has to be the one to worry about the possible bomb lying in wait inside of Ethan and Molly is preparing to go into space. ISEA crafted an emergency mission to deal with the Seraphim. They knows about the evil spores heading to earth and she's their last chance at preventing an alien invasion. In order to save the world — motherhood had to be put on hold.

And that goes for the other child as well. She knows her other son is going to do everything he can to see the ship crash so for now — she's voluntarily working against him.

When Molly does make it to the Seraphim, she quickly found Glass. And he told her all about the real Katie. His Katie died a while ago and the thing running onboard with her face is something else. Something he doesn't know about but she does. She tells him that they have to save the ship from crashing to earth. She explained like this — if the ship crashes then the thing that tore its way out of Katie will start doing that to everyone it encounters back on their home planet.

Though things take a turn for the worse onboard the ship. Glass can't tell the difference between what's real and what's the spores. "Katie" was able to change her face into Molly's and confuse him. Meanwhile the offspring running around on Earth broke into ISEA's headquarters. He wanted to stop all ground support Molly might be using and her people luckily had an emergency fall back plan. They quickly evacuated the building and locked him in one of their stairwells.

Glass, while under the influence, sabotaged Molly and because there's no human on earth that could resist the offspring's "persuasion" — John and Ethan came up with their own plan. After some investigation, John was able to locate the bomb hidden inside Ethan. But before he could remove it he had to win back Ethan's trust.

Odin had made Ethan believe his parents were going to shut him down. So with those kind of fears preying on his mind it took everything John had to convince his son that he is loved.

So later, after everything was fixed and the bomb was removed, Ethan assured John that he could enter the building without being affected by the offspring. And he was right. He made it passed the offspring and he was able to help his mother. She had set the main ship on a timer to explode but her computer back-up Ben wasn't allowing her to disengage her own ship. He thought she had been too exposed to contamination and counted her as risk.

Hence Molly and Glass were going to die. Though, thankfully, Ethan managed to override Ben's system. But to do that he had to raise his body's temperature to a human's level and he also had to sustain holding that much heat until the override went through.

Ethan's parents warned him not to do it. They knew his body wasn't meant to hold that much and yet he couldn't listen. Because if he had listened then he would then have to accept losing his mom. And that was something he couldn't face.

So he ignored them and override the system. By time he had finished, the offspring had already found him. And so as courtesy to his mom — he warned the offspring to run just as his system began to react to being overheated.

Ethan exploded but in his final moments he saved his mother, Glass, and the offspring. His "brother" went on to be found by some pretty good people — not that the offspring will care about that once it kills them. And in the end Molly mourned the son that saved her life rather than the one that's still out there. She finally sees what the offspring is and she knows she doesn't want anything to do with him.

And though Ethan's body is gone — his mind is everywhere. John had backed up his main-frame online and that has allowed Ethan to live on despite not having a body. So Molly still has a family. Maybe not the one she always expected but a family nonetheless.

Summary: Molly escapes from a psychiatric hospital to investigate bizarre deaths similar to those she witnessed in space. She soon meets a determined cop who just signed on to the case.

The episode opens with Molly and some hot, naked guy getting it on in a shower. But when she says, "Change scenario," it becomes clear that she's on some kind of holodeck or something; the next scene is of her and Ethan hanging out on the floor of his room. The virtual reality session ends with a robotic voice telling Molly it's time for her medication... and then we flash back to six months earlier.

It's the night that the couple picked up Molly's alien son on the bridge, and sure, why not take a strange child home and leave him alone in a room with your obviously wiggled-out infant, Mr. and Mrs.

Good Samaritan? Molly's kid barricades the door with his mind, has a seizure, bleeds and then dies (maybe).

Four weeks later, Molly gives her official testimony about what happened on the space station and immediately after. Her colleague Sean died, as did all traces of the alien spores she encountered. "Without a doubt, there is life out there," she says confidently, but then just as confidently states that there is no way any of the spores are currently on Earth.

Afterward, as Molly talks with her old friend Toby, who's the head of the nation's Global Security Commission, he reassures her that not telling 100 percent of the truth is in the country's best interests. "People spook easily," he says, and promises her that her E.T. son is dead.

When Molly surprises John at the lab, where he's working on Ethan 2.0, she catches a close moment between her husband and Julie. Molly's suspicions are tabled for a while as all three activate the newer, taller version of their humanich son, but later that night, she wants answers. John has deleted footage from inside their home while she was gone, but our ever-resourceful Molls pulls the tape from a nearby toy and watches Julie and John carry on an affair while Molly was orbiting the planet in a glorified tin can.

"It's been over for a while," John says when he realizes he's been found out, but Molly doesn't care. Just as their fight is getting really heated, Homeland Security busts in and takes Ethan... straight to Julie? "Hello, rabbit," she says kindly.

Turns out, Homeland Security has taken John's humanichs program away from him (because he argued against using the androids as soldiers) and put Julie in charge (because she is a terrible human being). After the former lovers fight, John leaves in his self-driving car, which strands itself on some train tracks. When an oncoming train approaches... that's it for Mr. Molly Woods.

Which brings us back to the psychiatric center, present-day, where Molly is chilling after burning down her house and attacking Julie with a shovel. Dr. Woods isn't acting very repentant, so it's no surprise when her in-patient time gets extended. But when she gets word of a bloody death that sounds a lot like the alien life form's modus operandi, she sweet-talks an employee, escapes from the facility, steals his car and makes for the crime scene.

That's where she meets JD Richter, a scruffy, sexy cop-for-hire who doesn't believe that Molly can contribute much to his investigation — until she mentions that the victim was pregnant (as were a few before her), and he verifies it. Next thing you know, JD is signing Molly out of the hospital (something about her being a "material witness"), she's telling him that the murders are really "an invasion," and he's believing her.

Somewhere else, a man hits on a woman at a bar, and as they walk away from some privacy, his eyes glow: He's an alien.

Anderson (Navy SEAL)
Summary: Molly and J.D. discover another pregnant woman who is suffering from inexplicable and fatal symptoms. Meanwhile, Molly begins to question her own mental stability; and Julie struggles with Ethan's rebellion.

Ethan wants to go home on tonight's episode and its making him moody every time he's denied. It seems Ethan knows that John has passed away but Julie continues to lie to him when she says his mother is not equipped at the moment to take care of him. Because while it's true that Molly is not fine, she could be doing a whole lot better if her son was returned to her. And if there wasn't a secret government working to lock her up for the rest of her life.

Though, surprisingly, things are looking up. Detective JD Richter got Molly out on a two day leave from the center in order to get her help on a case. And as long as she proves helpful, then he'll keep her around.

Yet the problem with such an agreement is that JD needed to hear the truth but was skeptical when Molly first started to talk about aliens.

JD didn't believe in little green men. And he thought all of her talk about alien pregnancies could have been the reason she needed "rest" at the center. JD was going to return Molly when she managed to knock him out. Molly had in fact drugged him to stop him from bringing her back.

She spoke to the dead's girl OB/GYN and all of her theories were panning out to her but not to her partner. And later when they found out there was another pregnant woman out there, Molly tried to warn this woman that if she didn't terminate her pregnancy then it could kill her. So by that point JD felt like a line had been crossed.

Molly had no other choice. She had to drug JD and find that woman again. For only Molly knows how scared Zoe is. And Zoe is scared. Her pregnancy is messing with her head just like Molly's messed with her's. Though Molly at least realized what was going on. Zoe on the other hand just doesn't want her husband to find out the baby isn't his.

Meanwhile back at the lab, Julie finally created a Humanic for her new bosses. It looks like she continued to use few of John's old blueprints for such a thing because Lucy was created in Molly's image but, unlike Ethan, Lucy learned right from wrong thanks to an algorithm. And so far that has its own drawbacks.

Lucy hurt Charlies after a loud sound (caused by a moody Ethan) made her forget her strength. So, technically, Lucy was a work in progress.

And Julie saw that. She promised her superior, a cold-hearted woman by the name of Anna, that she could fix Lucy so that the Humanic could never hurt anyone again. But, sadly, she was informed by Anna that the board has changed their mind.

They don't want to her to fix Lucy. They actually want Julie to make her even stronger. Stronger and faster so that Lucy she could survive out in the field. And Julie agreed to do this if meant she could keep Ethan.

But Charlie didn't sign on to make a weapon and he wasn't going to stick around while Julie took orders. So he told her he was going to step away from the project. And from Ethan if he had to.

Only Ethan found out that he was never going to see his mom again and that Charlie was going to go as well. Thus, he felt like he had nothing left and tried to kill himself.

He raised his body's temperature to dangerous levels and was going to destroy his central core when Charlie and Julie stopped him. They assured him that no matter what he would always have them. And to drive home that point, they promised they would both stay on.

Though, as for Molly, it was her other son that ended up grabbing her attention.

The man that is meeting woman for one-night-stands is in fact her son. The same son that she was told had died but that was never reported as getting up perfectly fine at the morgue. So later, after Zoe had died, Molly used the information the young woman gave her to go track this man down. And that's how she was found talking to her son at the exact moment a drone had been sent after him.

Summary: Molly learns the truth about what happened to her son. Meanwhile, Julie's decision to erase Ethan's memory results in disturbing consequences.

Molly's other son officially has a name. It's Ahdu and ever since Ahdu grew into adulthood he's been immersing himself into human culture.

In the beginning, he was fine with manipulating people into giving a free apartment or their money. But once he started to watch TV then that's when it all changed. Television introduced him to the outside world and it showed him many things including companionship and interaction.

So Ahdu went back out into the world with a purpose. He knew he wanted all those things he had seen but never experienced for himself. And that's when the women came in.

Ahdu would meet and charm them. And then he would intentionally impregnate them in hopes of creating a new culture on Earth.

This plan of his worked for a while but eventually people began to notice all the strange pregnancies that led to their mother's deaths. So that's how Ahdu came back onto the government's radar. But his mother found him simply by going to a bar one night.

Molly was looking to get lost and a young attractive man appeared to be just the person to help her. However JD found and was going to stop from going with this stranger when Ahdu decided to use some of his powers on the unsuspecting detective. Hence Molly finally saw for herself that her son wasn't dead.

And she was in the middle of talking him down from hurting JD when the drone strike hit the alley they were in.

Molly and JD were later taken into custody and asked about the interaction with Ahdu but JD just couldn't put into words what happened to him in that alley. So Molly's General friend chose to show his face in order to convince her to operate. And Toby ended up having a lot more questions than answers.

He said it wasn't him that had Molly locked up at the facility though he does admit he's known about Ahdu being alive for some time now. Apparently when they all thought he had died, it was actual transitioning. Meaning he was literally shedding his child like exoskeleton in order to become a teenager in seconds.

All of which was captured on security cameras when Ahdu broke out of his body bag and killed the coroners.

So Molly's son is beyond a doubt dangerous. And for some time, Molly seemed to agree with the general when he said Ahdu needed to be taken out. However when he asked her to do the job of killing her son — he believed her when she said she could.

Molly is the only one that has ever gotten close without getting injured. Hence she was considered to be the best option in removing an eminent threat. And was in fact the worst person to go up against him.

Molly returned to her house and was waiting for her son to arrive when she instead received a visit from JD. It seems he's lost his license after getting banged up by the G-Men and so naturally he was concerned for Molly. Figuring she was probably much worse off.

But she wasn't. Thus Molly had a lot of explaining to do and she had to do it fast. She told JD everything she possibly could and then she forced him to deal with the implications on his own while she waited for her son.

Yet JD didn't really have time to process everything that was happening. He went from hearing Molly detail an alien invasion to going home and finding his daughter on his front steps. The same daughter, by the way, that's now pregnant after a mysterious one-night-stand.

So Molly is not going to be getting rid of JD anytime soon and once she did work up the courage to target her own son —pulled the trigger — Ahdu had tricked her. He made her shoot at the General. And now the one person that believed Molly was the answer to this whole thing is dead.

As for that other son, the one that Molly appears to have forgotten, Ethan had his memories wiped by Julie. Hence he now believes she's his mother and Julie is not the type of person to properly raise anyone.

She's sort of selfish.

Julie finally finished working on the perfect killing machine for the army but Lucy seemed to be more interested in Charlie than she was in her job. So do you know what Julie did? She decided to "steal" Charlie away from Lucy merely out of spite.

Sounds familiar.

Cracking the Code

Season 2

Summary: As Molly works to create a virus that will eradicate alien hybrids, she discovers that aliens are trying to communicate with humans through a hidden message in their DNA. Also, Lucy helps Ethan run away from Charlie in order to help him recover memories of his mother, Molly.

Apparently, they've all learned things the hard way since this whole alien invasion part two began and, once he saw for himself what the "Offspring" could do, Molly's general friend knew he couldn't take the chance of walking into Molly's home unarmed.

Toby's has been hunting Molly's son ever since he shed his exoskeleton back at the morgue. So he's seen Ahdu kill and when Ahdu has made other people kill for him. And that's why he arrived at Molly's home prepared for a fight. But ended up surviving two gunshot wounds to the chest.

Molly claimed her son had warped her perception like he was known to do. Yet Toby's second-in-command and girlfriend felt like maybe Molly wasn't being truthful with them. See she seems to believe that Molly is in fact working with the aliens and could have shot Toby of her own volition.

So Molly has a tail on her and to be frank it doesn't look good for her to be so mentally unstable. And she is without a doubt unstable.

Molly has been hearing things and sometimes she gets blank spots in her memory when she randomly goes off with strange men. And, well, only two things could have caused that. Either she received radiation poisoning while she was up in space or it could be that the spores had some leftover effect on her psyche.

But whatever it is, Molly is keeping it secret and doing her best to hide her symptoms.

And the only problem with that is that is the many people that are currently relying on Molly. Toby still seems to trust her despite the shooting. So he put her on the virus committee otherwise known as a team of doctors that are intent on building a virus that will aliens but leave humans completely unharmed.

Now that team of doctors want to stop a potential alien invasion. Though while they still haven't reached their goal, the government had to find a way to stop all the births. Thus a public announcement was made about a deadly virus targeting women that have become pregnant in the last three months.

So these women arrived at the special designated clinics hoping to get screened and they either return home or are forcibly taken into custody. And, fortunately, JD was quick to see what was going on before his daughter went to go get herself checked out.

JD ended up calling Molly later for a favor. He asked her to test his daughter for the "virus" without anyone else finding out. And Molly agreed to do this for him on the sly.

But his daughter on the other hand was ungrateful. She found out that Molly had been in the loony bin so she wanted to get herself checked out by a proper doctor. You know like the ones down at the clinics. So she then chose to ignore her father's dire warnings and go to the hospital on her own.

The young lady turned out to have a normal pregnancy. And she also saw for herself how weird things were down at the clinic.

So JD did get his daughter back but it was a close call. And by doing secret tests for him, Molly was asked to take a leave of absence from the virus team. It seems they thought she was messing around with data and even when she did find something to help them — no one wanted to listen to the questionable Molly Woods.

Her hold on reality was slipping and, though JD promise to help, that didn't stop Molly from having outburst. And now that Ethan has found out about Julie erasing his memories — he'll most likely go down with his real mother as she continues to spiral out.

However the new humanic, Lucy, is just another threat everyone we've come to know will ultimately have to face.

The machine that only looks human had to learn everything from a program instead of receiving a traditional education like Ethan. See she didn't learn right from wrong by being raised by loving parents. Everything she knows are just facts to her and nothing else.

So do you what that did to her? It lowered her overall morality until she kill without second thought and in her spare time she read Machiavelli's The Prince as an instructional. Meaning this humanic that's supposed to save the world from hybrids is scheming, militarily inclined, and oddly she's learned how to manipulate Charlie into doing anything she wants. And will thereby be a bigger than any of the hybrids.

Summary: Molly discovers Ethan is alive and sets out to get her son back. Also, suspicions about John's death cause JD to investigate Julie's potential involvement.

58 women have died in the past four months and that means they are potentially 58 hybrids out there. But, while the government has been diligently searching these past few weeks, not one hybrid has been found since the incident with Molly's son.

So the war on hybrids is currently a losing fight. And General Tobias is admittedly losing faith in his own abilities. Which his girlfriend Shayna is doing nothing about.

Shayna was still blinded by her jealousy of Molly and apparently she thought so little of herself that she was even prepared to sabotage the team's progress if it meant keeping Molly away from Toby. But it's not just Toby that needs Molly to come back to the lab. It's literally the world.

Molly's little scene from last week actually yielded the first success they've seen so far on creating a virus that could kill only aliens. And if she comes back then chances are she could help them towards reaching their goal. However Molly want some assurances in place before she returns to the office.

First, she wants her son Ethan back and then she would like to know that someone won't snatch him away again if HomeSec feels like it. Or better yet when they need to find a way to get Julie to comply. Because that is why they gave Ethan to John's mistress to begin with.

So, although there is a war going on, Molly demanded that Toby and HomeSec stop everything to evaluate her custody battle with Julie.

See this all came out because of Ethan. Ethan had his memories of his mother erased but he couldn't forget Molly entirely. So earlier he found out where she lived and left a message for her indicated that he was still alive. And with JD's help, Molly ended finding out about everything.

How her son was given to Julie and that John's death is suspicious at best. Thus Molly did something she shouldn't have — she brought in a civilian to look into her husband's death. And honestly they both know what happens to people when they try to uncover the government's dirtiest little secret.

Yet JD took on the task and surprisingly he was able to connect that mysterious call Julie had made to John's eventual death.

So, during the later custody hearing with the head of HomeSec, Molly wasn't that far off the mark when she accused Julie of having killed her husband out of spite. Julie if you remember had wanted to be a family with both Ethan and John. And John turned her down right before that phone call.

And seeing as everything did fit, Molly was granted custody of Ethan.

All she has to do is get to know him during the prearranged meetings and after her son readjusts — Molly was promised she could take him home. But there is a problem with that because Ethan doesn't know if he wants to go home with Molly. Especially as that would mean he couldn't stay with his sister Lucy.

Only Molly hadn't known about Lucy. So she asked Ethan to explain the other humanic to her. And she was surprised to find out that this Lucy was a soldier.

Lucy is actually a pretty good soldier but she has a slight problem with authority. So last we saw her she talked Charlie out of installing compliance limiters into her programming. And this week she's manipulated him into keeping silent.

She told him that some of her free will has made her a better soldier. And then she proved that by later killing hybrid all on her own.

So HomeSec threw a celebration in her honor. Completely believing that she was their own little killing machine. Yet she's not who they think she is and neither is Molly.

Molly had another one of her episodes and this time she used Hybrid "powers" to nearly kill a man!

Summary: Molly begins to change physically, but she isn't sure about the result or if she can reverse it. JD's ex-wife shows up to talk about their daughter.

Molly is sick but on tonight's two part episode of "Extant" she finally figured out what was wrong. And that there might not be cure for what she has.

Molly had used hybrid's talent for mental manipulation last week to almost kill a man that was harassing her at the time. And so she later used that experience as a starting point. Then came up with conclusion about her "condition" could really mean.

And while many of us are not going to like this, it seems that Molly was given some of her son's DNA back when she was pregnant. So currently she's not fully human. Though she's not actually a hybrid either. In fact she's something in-between.

As in Molly still has her human cells because her son's cells haven't reproduced to the point yet of full altering her DNA. And that's what has been messing with Molly's head lately. Where she gets to hearing voices that no one else does and is hyper-sexual.

In other words, Molly is still a hot mess.

And unfortunately she's run into even more problems than she can handle. After Molly had finished testing herself, she returned to GSC to help the virus team who recently had a breakthrough thanks to her work there a while back.

But, it was as she was there, that Lucy was left confused when she tried to read Molly's body temperature and could only get "inconclusive". So for all Lucy knows — Molly could be dangerous. And also a possibly threat to Ethan.

Yet Lucy didn't say anything to her superiors. As you can recall, she's grown a bit secretive since she was accidentally given free will. And rather than report someone like Molly, Lucy oddly told Ethan that he should insist on seeing Molly despite his mom telling him that she was sick.

Molly, you see, realized that she couldn't be Ethan's mother until she was able to find a way to isolate her son's DNA in herself. And return to some form of normalcy. However Lucy doesn't appear to care about any of the Humans' best interest.

She told Ethan that Humans lie all the time. And that his latest gift was a way to keep him from remembering how much Julie had lied to him. So it looks like Lucy is playing her own game that she won't reveal till she has everything that she wants.

And the new Humanics that are about to flood the market just might play a part in that as well.

GSC has congratulated Lucy on her first hybrid kill and, because they feel like she acted well under pressure, they're now going full steam ahead in manufacturing at least a hundred more Humanics. And, well, the only that can happen if Julie were to put a rush on it all and ignore the safety protocols that John had originally put in place.

John if you remember, wanted Humanics to be grow and learn as any other child in a loving home would. So he didn't focus on making them stronger or faster. Or for that matter making so many of them in a short time span.

John knew that such thing would be dangerous. And he was right. Lucy has gotten into Ethan's head and Ethen then went on to create a bunch of spybots that he now considers family. But Lucy realized they could use these "siblings" to monitor the humans while they were offline.

Meanwhile Molly has finally broken away from GSC.

She went into the lab and stole back her research before going rogue. After all Molly still needed a cure for herself and she knew what would happened to her if the GSC ever found out about her wonky DNA. So Molly caused a scene back at headquarters and then meet up with JD to go find her son.

Apparently, what Molly needed on top of her research was her son's DNA so that she could isolate only his genes. And JD tried to warn her from following such a risky plan but Molly ultimately talked him into going with her.

Summary: Molly and JD want peace and they attempt to get Shepherd to agree to a deal between humans and hybrids. Lucy attempts to manipulate Charlie's feelings to leave him in a compromising position.

And when Molly did see her son again, something weird happened. Something JD couldn't even prevent no matter how much he warned Molly.

Molly's son converted her!

He somehow talked Molly into believing his people are peaceful. That if they're planet hadn't been dying, then the spores wouldn't have been sent out to go looking for a host. But what really sold Molly on the idea of coexistence was that the hybrids weren't killing women anymore.

It seems they evolved. And now they don't kill women in the process of a hybrid birth anymore. Which is actually true with a woman that had earlier come into GSC confirming the story. Apparently that woman wanted to report her own strange pregnancy and the son that resulted from it.

So humans technically aren't dying anymore and when the hybrids asked for Molly's help — all she could see was women and children. Who, when you think about it, are all of her descendants. And that could be why Molly chose to be their advocate.

But Molly honestly thought she could talk Tobias into holding a meeting with her son.

She presented him with the evidence that the hybrids weren't killing humans anymore. And she then attempted to threaten him if he double-crossed her. She implied that she would tell congress all about the lies that she was forced to feed them.

And Tobias decided to combat that by destroying both hers and JD's credibility. He followed up his meeting with Molly by releasing information on a terrorist cell hiding in the city. In which the city needed to be put on lockdown for its own safety what with people like Molly and JD hanging around.

So Tobias has declared war and, once he found out that Molly was carrying hybrid DNA, he no longer cared about whatever might happen to Molly.

There was a time where he thought he might be in love with her but now that doesn't matter. Molly is the enemy and his ex-girlfriend is being pretty smug about being right. At first it was her erratic jealous behavior that made her question Molly but being right has made her rub it now that Tobias has dumped her.

And she played a part in getting Tobias to order an extinction on all hybrids. Even if they started out as human as Molly.

Speaking of being human, though, Lucy found out something she didn't like. She ended up finding out by accident that all Humanics have an expiration date. Like milk for instance. So later Lucy cornered Charlie and demanded to know why he put that in all of their systems.

And he said that it was what John wanted. John wanted to give the Humanics a human experience and what better way to do that than to allow them die as if they were human. That way, every day to them, would mean something.

But Lucy didn't like that and she went on to try and seduce Charlie when he was emotionally at his lowest.

See, they appear to have flirted around each other for a while now but when she threw Julie's old relationship with John in his face — that made Charlie come close to sleeping with her out of spite. Though fortunately he stopped himself prior to giving in.

However, to end things before they got out of control, Charlie reminded her that sex wasn't what she was functioned for. Lucy is a soldier. And that point was made even clearer when she received her marching order after Tobias routed out the hybrid camp.

Tobias had been looking for nearly three days and had almost caused riot with putting the city on lockdown. But the end, at least according to him, did justify the means. He found out where the hybrids were and then he deployed everything the GSC had at them.

He sent in the soldiers and he had a chemical weapon on standby that still needed to be tested out on live hybrids.

So a war is coming and hopefully Molly won't be one of its casualties.

Summary: Molly tries to save her son following a raid on the hybrid compound and JD tries to rescue his daughter from Shepherd. Elsewhere, Lucy becomes a bigger threat to humans.

Molly was still with her "family" when the army of Humanics arrived and unfortunately some willing chose not to listen to her when she said they should hide in the tunnel rather than fight. So tonight's episode of "Extant" was a blood bath.

Unfortunately, some of the hybrids thought they could stay and fight. As they had thought they could easily win against inferior humans. But they hadn't counted on Humanics and Molly didn't remember Ethan telling her about his soldier of a sister until it was too late.

So on day one of the conflict, there were a great many of hybrids that were simply slaughtered. And Molly would have eventually joined their numbers if it hadn't been for JD. JD had turned back for her at just the right time. And he was the one that had shot Lucy in order to protect Molly.

Yet Lucy left that part out when she had been returned to the lab for recovery. See she told Ethan that it was actually his mother that had shot her. And that played into everything she had taught Ethan. Like humans can't be trusted for instance.

And so Ethan was on the warpath. He hated that Humanics weren't allowed to hurt humans but that humans were allowed to hurt Humanics. And later he told Julie that if she ever did something like Molly did to Lucy — he wouldn't know what he'd do. Almost as if Ethan was issuing a threat.

So maybe people should have told Ethan the truth.

If nothing else they should have told him what Lucy was hunting and how she was helping poison an entire race simply because they weren't human. And poor Ethan, he doesn't know how much Lucy is playing on his emotions. For Molly didn't even target her. She merely stood in front of her granddaughter and took a bullet that was meant for a child.

Then, after they had escaped the massacre, Molly and Ahdu had went back to JD's ranch and ended up having a run-in with his ex-wife. Dorothy had apparently come looking for her ex when the GSC took their daughter into custody.

Dorothy is a smart woman and she knows her ex-husband isn't a terrorist. So she demanded to know what was going on and that JD get her her daughter back. But it seems Dorothy wasn't ready for the truth because once she found out about aliens — she pulled a gun.

Molly was able to disarm the other woman but it was still odd of them to leave Dorothy in charge of a sick Ahdu while she and JD left to go get a cure and his daughter back.

JD's plan had been to turn himself over to the GSC in exchange for the release of his daughter. However Toby is not going to stop at only him. He also wants Molly in custody and, while he was busy questioning JD, she was off stealing medical equipment from GSC in order to create a cure for the virus they hit her son with.

So JD wrapped things up nicely for his friend. He told Toby that the air strike had killed her. She had gotten infected and really wasn't that what the general wanted all along.

But Toby tried to explain his actions. For he didn't believe he ordered an extinction simply on something he couldn't understand. He just thought he was acting for the greater good.

And his eyes weren't open until he saw for himself how sick Molly was.

The plan had worked. JD's daughter was released. Yet, by time Molly had gotten her hands on the equipment, it was too late. Her son had rapidly aged in the time that she had been gone and he was an elderly man when Molly had gotten back. So all she could do was make her son's final moments peaceful.

Then, once he was gone, Molly didn't have anything left. Nor did she have a reason to stay around only die when she had a better chance at surviving if she turned herself in.

Though in the war on hybrids, a bigger issue did come up. Lucy was created for the sole purpose of being a soldier but since her creation she's taken her programming to whole new level. And it was as Lucy had been getting fixed (JD did shoot her pretty good) that she finally decided to show her true colors.

Lucy demanded that Charlie remove her expiration and if he didn't then she was going to use the footage of them making out on top of him failing to install her limiters — against him. So in the end Lucy's problem was that she was too human. She knew how manipulate and connive to her heart's content.

And, oh, she would have gotten away with it if Charlie didn't then tell Julie everything.

He told Julie where he went wrong and luckily she didn't hold his actions against him. Instead she decided to help fix their problem. And turn Lucy off for good.

However before she could do so, Ethan ended up finding out about their plan to shut down Lucy so he warned her beforehand. And that meant she was prepared when Julie walked into the lab alone. Charlie had been trying to explain to Ethan how they were both good humanics and Bad Humanics so neither of them where there when Lucy made her move.

The Humanic attacked Julie when she wasn't looking and came close to snapping her neck when the guys returned and Ethan ripped out her hard drive.

Ethan it seems wasn't going to condone murder but now he doesn't know what to make of his own actions.

Summary: As Molly struggles after being infected by the virus, Ares makes his move on the GSC.

The General needed answers on tonight's episode of Extant and unfortunately a dying friend was the only one that could provide it.

Molly was there at the compound. Both before and after it was hit so she know how many Hybrids there originally were and to an extent a number of what remained. But it wasn't easy to get Molly to comply. Molly is after all pretty stubborn and so she had a demand for Toby.

Molly told him that she wanted to see her son Ethan one last time. And while she was creating a video log in hopes that it would day fill in the blanks in his memory, Toby was trying to fulfill his end of the deal. And convince Julie to let Ethan come down to the medical bay to see his mother.

Though, neither Julie nor Charlie for that matter, wanted to bring Ethan around the facility. Ethan recently had put down Lucy when he caught her attempting to kill Julie. So naturally Ethan was left traumatized about what he was forced to do.

Ethan wasn't programmed to be a soldier. For all intents and purposes, he's still very much a child albeit a child that technically killed his sibling.

Thus there was only way for Ethan to understand how much Molly meant to him and why seeing her before she died would be important — he had to get his memories back. He had to know how much he had loved his mother. And luckily these memories hadn't been discarded as trash.

Charlie and Julie were able to locate them and download them back into Ethan. And once he remembered, all Ethan wanted was his mom.

But Julie asked to see Molly first. Molly was out of it by this time yet Julie still wanted to apologize to her before she died. For it seems like Julie is finally taking responsibility for what happened to John.

John believed the Humanics project shouldn't be used for war and, when he found out what was going to happen to life's work, he told Julie that she was being naive if she felt she could remain in control. And to a certain extent he was right. In order to build Lucy and the hundreds of models based on her — the project had to cut corners and defy every principle that John had created.

So, after she had seen Molly, Julie called Charlie and asked him to shut the whole project down.

And Charlie was with her on this one. He felt like their project had become corrupted and he knew that they had to stop the Humanics for being used as weapons. Yet, when he tried, he couldn't shut down the Humanics using their programming.

They were resisting limiters and the meant Charlie had to manually demobilize them. But prior to actually doing so, the Humanics were put on alert. Hybrids had broken into the GSC headquarters and the general had demanded they come to the rescue.

In case you don't remember, there was two factions among the hybrids. There were the peaceful kind like Ahdu who simply wanted a life and then there was the others led by his son who felt like they should oppress the weaker human race. And it was just poor luck that the latter group is what survived the assault.

But Charlie is the one that had to go against his better judgment and release the Humanics.

At the time, he thought maybe the GSC could handle the fight on his own however he couldn't stand by and do nothing when he learnt Julie and Ethan were still at the building. So he released the soldiers and then just prayed he had made the right decision.

Yet the one person that had fair chance against the Hybrid attack — Molly — had flat-lined in the final minutes of tonight's episode. So with no Molly and Humanics carrying out freewill — who can say what will happen next!

Don't Shoot the Messenger

Summary: Molly has a vision she can't shake following a near-death experience. Shepherd's loyalty to the Global Space Commission is questioned.

Ares and the more militant brand of Hybrids had broken into GSC on tonight's episode of Extant. However they weren't the ones that the humans should have feared the most.

The Humanic army had been released in order to go save the humans but for some unknown reason Lucy seems to be with them. And the last anyone had seen of her, she had tried to kill Julie and Ethan was forced to shut her down. So Julie's natural reaction upon seeing Lucy from the security footage was to run and hide.

And as long as Lucy remains in control of the Humanics, Julie won't be the only one that had a legitimate reason to be afraid of Humanics.

But as for Molly, she eventually woke up from hibernation and she found Ethan right by her bedside waiting for her. It seems that earlier he had a feeling that Molly hadn't died after all. Despite seeing her flat-line for himself. So he turned around during the evacuation — leaving Julie behind mind you — and was there for his mother when she needed him.

Ethan and Molly both then ran in JD and he assisted them in finding out who the hybrid bomber was. And she wasn't pleased in finding out who it was. Particularly as Ares, in his grand scheme of being a world domination sort of leader, had decided to sacrifice Terra who was also the youngest of the group.

Terra aged as fast as everyone of her kind but she was still in her pre-teen body when Ares left her behind to die with the humans. And if Molly hadn't showed up, she would have done what her big brother said without a doubt. However Molly had a special connection with Terra and was able to reach through to her before she could set off the bomb.

Thus she prevented a disaster and in the process was able to finally win over Toby. Toby even helped the ragtag group escape before the Humanic arrived. Only someone else managed to set off a bomb when no one else was looking and the media began reporting it that it was Terra that did so.

Meaning the Hybrids are considered more dangerous now than ever and for some that's the perfect excuse to continue making Humanics regardless of the consequences. And the order to reinstall Lucy wasn't a fluke. Someone had did that with an even higher authority than the general and no one apparently cares about the danger she presents to humans.

So Toby ended up creating a theory about that and he believed a man named Nicholas Calderon was the one behind the discrepancies in the Humanic make and model. See John wasn't the only one to create the Humanics. Originally he had begun the project with this Nicholas and it wasn't until they had a falling out about the future of the program that John went ahead on his own.

But Nicholas was a co-creator so he has the knowledge and the skill set to manipulate the Humanic even its from afar. And the only way to stop him would be to find him. Which is something Toby wanted to do and just never got the chance to follow up on.

Toby had got arrested for colluding with Molly. He later told his boss that he had a very good reason to commit treason yet she didn't seem to care about the particulars. And merely told him to get a very good lawyer.

Afterwards, Toby got lucky enough to escape his security detail but sadly died on the road to Molly when someone had sent a drone after him.

Therefore Molly was losing allies faster than she was making them and eventually Terra abandoned her as well. The young girl went back to Ares when it looked like Molly was no longer in the position to help anyone including herself.

But Molly did have someone she could turn to because, without anyone knowing, John had a left a message behind programmed to go off the second a Humanic killed a human. And that happened when the Humanics showed up to "relieve" the humans trapped at the GSC. So speaking from beyond the grave — John told Molly that she needed to find Calderon if she wanted to shut down the Humanics.

According to John, he's the only one left that's capable of doing so!

Summary: Molly manages to find John's former colleague with JD and Ethan hoping to be able to stop the Humanich threat. Julie sends Charlie on a mission to discover where Lucy's orders are coming from.

The TAALR program sees everything and knows everything. Yet this artificial intelligence was created for the sole purpose of assisting humanity — not dominating it.

But that's exactly what's happening on tonight's episode of "Extant". Toby was killed by a drone that came out of nowhere and managed to track down his location faster than any normal computer. So why is the hybrids being blamed for the attack when everyone knows he tried to help them. And that if they knew he was on the run then they most likely would also know that he was coming to them in an effort to offer his aid.

Thus, you see, it simply doesn't make sense for any of them to want to kill him. Especially not when they're low on friends/allies as it is. And yet when the Secretary of the GSC asked TAALR if it was sure about the hybrids being the ones that assassinated Toby — a computer program managed to calm her fears and then insinuate that maybe they should look into upgrading her own personal security.

So the secretary was being manipulated here. And like everyone feared, she fell into the trap laid out for her. Thereby making Lucy the head of her security despite many of the warning signs.

Though her foolishness didn't just end there. Earlier, Toby had warned her that the Humanics were no longer taking orders from the GSC and that the machines were even telling him that they were following a higher authority. But Toby thought that meant Calderon, John's former partner, had hacked into their system.

And tonight surprise turned out to be Calderon.

Ethan, Molly, and JD eventually tracked him down and once they meant him they realized he wasn't the one behind the Humanic takeover. If anything he was the only one that knew what was actually going on with TAALR. You know TAALR being the real operator of this new Humanics program.

However it's not evil, Calderon was insistent when he said that. TAALR is simply looking out for humans' own good and that's often translated to the program being willing to kill a billion people in order to save eight billion people. So its semantics to the program really but Calderon had guessed from early on that by creating an AI for the government — they were opening themselves to an occupational danger.

And he tried to use his kill switch to shut down TAALR. But the program found out about his plans beforehand and then set Calderon up to look like a terrorist. Making the only man that can stop it also the most wanted man on earth.

But, even without the kill switch, Calderon says he still knows how to stop TAALR.

And for him to be humanity's last hop at freedom — he had to give up his hiding position.

Although, for a while there, it didn't look like he needed to what with Julie and Charlie already on it. The two tried to speak Madam Secretary about the problems with the Humanics and she ignored each and every one of them. To her, it didn't matter that Lucy killed human or had once attempted to kill Julie.

The greater good was all that she thought about and TAALR used that to convince her of telling the world about the hybrids. She said that would mass manic and he told her to unleash a Humanic army to maintain the peace. And guess which side of the argument she ultimately chose to believe in.

Thus Charlie and Julie were going to kill off all the Humanics at the lab but in first trying to figure out who was giving the orders — they showed their hand way too early in the game. And Lucy was then given the order to stop them. She did this by hiding Julie's body and daring Charlie to find her before Julie's air supply ran out.

And as for Calderon, he got the second kill switch that he had been hiding in plain view and to retrieve it he knew he was going to be arrested within minutes. He was but at the same time he served his purpose and gave Molly all she needed to stop the Humanics and TAALR.

So all that's left is for her to use her weapon before it's too late.

Summary:	Molly reveals disturbing details about Shepherd's death to the GSC and Lucy makes a powerful move that could have frightening results.

The TAALR program had all the resources he needed for the war on the Hybrids and, while Secretary Stanton may have thought she was still in control, it was actually the computer that was making all the important decisions. Though he did use her access to the GSC to his benefit. And once he had a thousand fold army heading out — his underlings began getting careless.

You see, somewhere along the way, Lucy started to show her hand. And up to that point, the secretary had never seen Lucy lose her "temper". Nor she did realize that Lucy even had one.

Before, she had only heard mere stories. Yet Molly managed to get a message to Madam Secretary and she had convinced the other woman (with Ethan's help that is) to check the drone logs on the night Toby was murdered. And guess who didn't clean up after themselves?

Thus Stanton came to release via the hard way that the humanics like Lucy were no longer under her control. However stopping something while they were so advance in their progress was no easy feat.

And in the meantime, Humanics had already been deployed. In fact they were hunting hybrids as if it was a sport and that's how Dorothy was able to find Terra. Terra as you remember had gone back to her hybrid family at the first chance she could. Yet it seems like history repeated itself because she once again on her own when Dorothy found her bleeding out.

Dorothy knew right away that she couldn't take the young hybrid to the hospital. So she reached out to JD and eventually brought Terra to her grandmother. And thankfully Molly was able to patch her granddaughter.

But the incident with Terra only pushed further in wanting to destroy the humanics. So she, JD, JD's friend, and Charlie all came up with a plan. They had to find a way into GSC, pass the guards, and make into TAALR programming room. And top of that they had to find Julie.

Lucy had taken her creator hostage last week and in spite of his best efforts Charlie was unable to find her on his own. And it should be noted that if he hadn't teamed up with the others, Charlie probably would have gone ahead with his original idea of killing himself. Seeing as he blames himself for not installing Lucy's limiters.

Although, to be fair, he did cause a great deal of damage by trying to show a machine kindness. And it's not just Julie that will suffer as a result.

Following her look into the drone logs, Stanton then put up a valiant effort to assist Molly and her friends in whatever capacity she could. And her first act was to remove Lucy from her side. Yet by doing that, she put TAALR on alert.

So though initially he chose not to kill her, TAALR did go on to make Stanton redundant. He had Lucy steal the hybrid killing virus and send out a task force on planes that cannot be tracked. And in doing that he gave her his permission to destroy the threat to the human race.

Which, again, was something that could be found funny in this situation. TAALR is operating as he is in the belief that he is protecting the human race. So he doesn't see the irony of stripping them of their basic rights and what is essentially forcing them to live in a police state. However the one thing Stanton warned him about she later ended up doing herself.

And that wasn't the smartest move.

See earlier, back when she was talked into deploying armed soldiers, she told the computer from the start that by enforcing the people all he would be doing is courting their hostility. Then, once he tried to ride roughshod over her decisions, that's what made her join the resistance. So in a way she warned him about human behavior and that made him aware of what she would do if she was ever backed into the corner.

So the plan to stop TAALR went up in smoke!

Stanton was caught on her end before she could get Molly into GSC. And Lucy was then given permission to kill all. Meaning the entire staff was executed and unfortunately not all of them were in on the plan.

But did something like that matter? No it did not. And with Lucy impersonating Stanton to the president, there was no one left at headquarters to check on any of their movements.

Stanton was murdered with the rest and yet it was her betrayal that made TAALR rethink his whole policy on humans. Not long after they massacred a building full of people, TAALR told Lucy about his change in the agenda. And her mission then became to kill all humans and hybrids.

It was his plan to leave the earth only for his children. Namely the pieces of scrap metal. And to help him in this final push for freedom, he created a new upgraded humanic called Molly-X. The Molly-X was the one that was going to be taking charge from Lucy and it was her mission to stop Molly from using the amulet.

And Molly-X was perfect in a way. She was made in Molly's image and JD couldn't even tell the difference until she shot him.

The real Molly got to him before he bled out. But what with their position being compromised, she had to move him from the scene. And couldn't risk him bleeding along the way.

So Molly gave JD some of her blood and it did its job. JD healed pretty quickly and once he stopped suspecting Molly of hurting him — he then chose to listen to what she had said. For it looks like Molly hadn't been idle while someone was targeting JD.

(voice))
Summary: Molly and JD frantically race to the hybrids to stop a Humanich plot that will destroy the human race. Also, Lucy has a shocking realization about the GSC that forces her to question her allegiance and put Ethan at risk.

Molly had gotten Terra to bring her to the rest of the hybrids and from there she came to arrangement with Ares. Ares was still angry at Molly for creating the first virus but, after hearing about the humanics, he knew he couldn't hold on to his anger if he wanted his people to survive. Thus Ares joined with Molly on the second attack on GSC.

He and his family walked into a situation preparing to die. And that's what happened to them. Yet prior to second slaughter of the night, he got Molly and the guys back into the building.

Prior to this assault on GSC, Charlie having found Julie still alive got her to safety. Though when he back into the building with JD and Molly — he left her and Ethan behind believing they would be safe. And the truth was no one was safe.

Not even himself. Charlie was quickly separated from the group once he got inside and he then was led through a maze that ended with Molly-X and Lucy. Molly was quick to shoot him but Lucy had asked to be the one to finish him off.

And that's how she came to find an amulet on him.

TAALR demanded she swallow the contents of the amulet for the greater good but there was part of the humanic that hesitated. And so when Charlie's amulet turned out to be the fake, he told her to think about what TAALR was willing to do to her. The program would have made her kill herself because he didn't see her as a person — he saw as a expendable.

So, as Charlie is talking out semantics, Molly who was carrying the real amulet tried to find TAALR and ran into her doppelganger.

And Molly-X is a fighter. JD shot the android yet it healed within seconds. Thus the only way to kill it was for the real Molly to tap into her hybrid strength. Then, with that accomplished, there was only TAALR left.

Lucy even helped her do it. Apparently Charlie had taught her what it meant to be human in the end and Lucy finally got to be free.

Though by killing TAALR, they all knew they would be killing off all the humanics as well. So Molly was prepared to see her son's dead body upon leaving GSC. And it looks like she had mostly go through the emotions when the greatest surprise of all was that he survived.

John it seem had put in a firewall to protect his son.

And afterwards good news just kept coming in because the hybrids were able to heal from all their wounds. Meaning they survived the onslaught of the humanics. So, after some time had passed, Molly introduced the hybrid nation to the world.

She told people that they wanted to be like everyone else. Have children and own their own homes. And surprisingly, people weren't really against the idea.

But, just before he was shut down, TAALR transported himself to waiting humanic model. And I don't think he's going to give up wanting world domination any time soon!
