Summary: Texas Ranger Molly Parker gets involved in the case of a murdered Assistant District Attorney. The case leads to kidnapping and a drug cartel but Molly will go to any length to solve the case.

A mysterious woman in a red dress blesses herself outside a church where a wedding is in full swing. She walks down the aisle. BANG! BANG! BANG! She shoots the bride dead in front of the horrified guests. The lady in red speeds off amidst a hail of gunfire unleashed by some of those attending the wedding. Molly Parker, one of the first women to join the elite group of law enforcement agents known as the Texas Rangers, ditches her beauty parlor appointment to join in the police pursuit. She runs the getaway car off the road and draws her rifle. When the car door opens, a short, bearded man steps out. The lady in red is gone.

The murdered bride was an assistant district attorney. The groom claims he doesn't recognize the shooter even though she works at one his gyms. The suspect, Martina Alvarez, called the guy nine times just before the wedding. Molly works with the San Antonio police department to capture the suspect at a local motel. She doesn't quite buy the arrogant Lieutenant Guillermo Salazar's theory that this shooting was a crime of passion. After all, Martina Alvarez's nails were chipped. Molly tells her boss, Lieutenant Luis Zea, that you don't shoot the wife of your soul mate without looking like the one he should have picked.

Molly has been staying with the family of her brother, Billy Parker, a former Special Forces soldier. Her sister-in-law, Becca, is more like a best friend. Her ex, Senator Jake Colton, lets her know he's moved out of their loft even though he vows to never divorce her. As for the case, Molly digs deeper into the wedding shooting. She asks DEA agent Dan Winston why the ADA was meeting with him. The guy is busy on a bust, so Molly moves on to question Martina. Her instincts tell her that there's more to her story.

Molly gets a flirty text from DEA Dan which leads to a bedroom interlude. While basking in the afterglow, she seeks information on the Alvarez case. Dan isn't willing spill any details, but Molly believes Martina is working for the cartel. It's not a theory anyone else shares. This makes Molly a bit of a lone ranger. She learns that Martina Alvarez has a daughter just before the suspect is shanked in the shower. It's not a fatal blow. Molly suspects Martina's mother and daughter have been kidnapped by the cartel. She tells Martina how her ex-husband beat her. She felt ashamed and trapped. She promises to find Martina's family.

Molly lets Dan know that Martina is willing to testify against the cartel. The DEA and DA's office were working together on a case that involved transportation in $40 million in contraband annually. Molly wants Dan's help to get Martina's family away from the cartel and out of Mexico. They need to do this alone. There's an excellent chance they won't get out of it alive. They track down Martina's family, but the cartel returns before they can make a clean getaway. A perilous gunfight ensues. As Ben speeds off, Molly shoots a container that explodes assuring their escape. A short time later, Martina is reunited with her family.

With the case closed, Molly marches into her ex's office. She orders him to sign the divorce papers or she'll tell the world what a monster he truly is. At the office, Lieutenant Zea lets Molly know that if he ever finds out she crossed the border to free Martina Alvarez's family, he'll fire her. He'll do this in spite of their relationship, which is revealed to others only on a need-to-know basis. A short time later, Molly is surprised to see Dan show up at the bar where she plays trumpet with the band. This is one Texas Ranger wears more than just one cowboy hat.

Summary: The murder of a man at a benefit gala starts Molly down the trail after an assassin who kills cheating and abusive husbands. Molly also has a court date to finalize her divorce from Jake.

Molly has to cut her steamy shower with DEA man Dan Winston short so the two of them can attend a black tie gala. Her husband, Jake, is also there smugly refusing her request to finally sign their divorce papers. Screams are heard when a man, Clete Reed, is stabbed to death smack dab in the middle of the party. Luis points to a fleeing waiter. Molly and Dan give chase, but the killer gets away. The victim's wife, Nan, wonders if her husband suffered. Molly doesn't buy her claim that her hubby was a saint.

Molly is ordered to follow a lead that involves getting help from Jake. He learns that Clete Reed swindled his ex-partner, a man named Denby. The guy says the victim was extremely controlling and abusive of his wife. Molly explores this theory. She doesn't believe Nan when she says she loved her husband. Molly learns that one of the artifacts in her home is a fake even though the family's designer, Jennifer Jennings, assures her that it was real when it was first purchased. The original was sold at during an auction for an amount of money that would more than cover the cost of hiring a professional assassin.

While doing surveillance of Nan, Molly witnesses a money drop at a park. The man who picked up the loot is shot dead as Molly gives chase. Nan finally fesses up to her role in all this. The man at the park approached her about ending her suffering. He offered to kill Clete for $30,000. Nan took him up on it when she couldn't take it anymore. The person who hired the bagman frequented a certain coffee shop. It's a woman named Maggie Tanner. Her first husband is deceased. He was 32 years her senior. His body was never found. As for his widow, she lives in his luxurious home with artifacts that were acquired by Jennifer Jennings.

Molly learns that Jennifer Jennings' husband was murdered in a mugging outside the hotel where he had rented a room. She suspects this woman is the mastermind behind the deaths of some of the men who hired her after learning about their evil ways from their wives. Jennifer is a cool customer though. She's not about to break easily. She's going to be careful now that she's on the radar of the Texas Rangers.

The hits keep coming for Molly when the judge, who is also Jake's pal, puts her divorce on hold. There's a big blow up outside the courthouse. Molly then gets an apology text from Jake saying he's signed the papers. He hasn't. He never sent the text. Jennifer Jennings did. She knocks him out and ties him up. She admits that she kills men who don't want them around anymore. She knows Molly is on the way and on her trail. That's why she's looking to set her up for Jake's murder. But Molly arrives in the nick of time to take her down. They say don't mess with Texas. A better saying is... Don't mess with a Texas Ranger.

Summary: When a veteran tries being Robin Hood to get that adrenaline rush she experienced at war, Molly must use an unusual method to catch the hard to find suspect. Dan gets a subpoena to testify for Jake at the divorce hearing and Becca thinks Billy might be engaged in an affair.

A woman whose identity is hidden by the motorcycle helmet she wears pulls off a daring bank robbery in the middle of the day. She sets the ground ablaze as the police arrive. There's no way they can break through the flames as the robber speeds away on her bike. Special Agent Linda Clark of the FBI is called in on the case. Molly is given the go-ahead to join in on the investigation. She quickly finds a shell casing that the robber left behind. It matches ones found at another robbery. Some of the stolen bills showed up in a DEA case. Good thing Molly has a close source inside that particular orga-

DEA man Dan lets Molly know that a street dealer paid an undercover agent with bills from the robbery. The criminal's name is Cue Ball. He got the stolen cash from a customer known as the Terminator (because he has a robotic arm). Special Agent Clark is ticked when Molly begins interrogating the guy without her. The Terminator claims he found the money. Molly is inclined to believe him especially after another wounded veteran finds $12,000 by his bed, too. A little girl witnessed this latest drop. She thought it was the tooth fairy. But the mystery lady simply said she was an armadillo who likes to fight.

Molly learns that the bank robber they seek is Andrea Corbett, a distinguished dillo—as in armadillo regarding a local high school nickname. She's also a war hero. Molly visits Andrea's father, who says his daughter has been on edge ever since she got home. She talked about doing something about how poorly vets are being treated. Then she was calm. Molly believes she's robbing banks and giving to vets because this war hero doesn't know how to be heroic in civilian life. This becomes evident when she shoots a bank guard in the leg during another robbery.

Andrea checks up on the guard in the hospital. Molly arrives shortly after she leaves the room. She gives chase. Andrea opens fire. The FBI joins in on the pursuit. Andrea takes a doctor hostage. There's a standoff on the roof of the hospital. Agent Clark wants snipers to take out the subject. Molly knows Andrea is not shooting to kill. She's able to convince the sniper to disobey orders and stand down. She tries to convince Andrea that people care. She knows that part of this robbery spree is because of the adrenaline rush it brings with her. Molly also knows Andrea is looking for a way to end her pain. She finally convinces her to accept her offer to help.

Molly confronts Billy about the excuses he's been making to leave the house at night. Becca suspects her hubby is having an affair. Molly also thinks so after catching Billy out with another woman. She's embarrassed when the mystery lady turns out to be a party planner that's been hired with Becca's full knowledge. In other news, Molly's divorce problems take a toll on her relationship with Dan. It inspires her to schedule the court-ordered counseling session to speed along her divorce. Dan lets her know via text that he's in this with her for the long haul. This is shortly before Molly learns he's been shot

Summary: Molly looks for a woman killing other women who remind her of her own cruel and vicious mother. While Becca plans for Hailee's Quinceanera, Molly introduces her family to Dan.

Molly rushes to the hospital after hearing Dan was shot. Turns out he was just winged by a bullet, but did suffer a concussion. Molly was truly worried and is concerned at how she felt. She takes him home to recuperate under the watchful eye of her extended family. Billy is glad to have another man around the house. He's impressed at the manicure his youngest daughter gave his houseguest while he was sleeping. Dan wants to skedaddle as soon as possible until Molly tosses him down on the bed to make him feel a little more at home.

A woman's dead body is found in a field. The victim, Lindsay Davis, had been placed there after having been killed somewhere else. She was suffocated and her head was shaved bald to look like a man. A state trooper named McCoy chases down a speeding SUV. He surprised to see Molly is the driver. She brings McCoy a chili dog before asking him about a body he found on an old case. The victim in that case was Jessi Padilla. Her hair was shaved bald just like the victim in Molly's case.

Another woman, Jenny Sue, was attacked in a similar way after being kidnapped in a bar parking lot. However, this victim is found alive. Molly hypnotizes her to get info on just what happened to her. She was abducted and heard the sounds of a hospital crutch as she was being driven away. There was a cinnamon smell in the car. This makes Jenny Sue smile. Her good feeling is short-lived once she starts recalling the horror she went through. When a third victim is found, Molly knows they are looking for a serial killer.

When Molly's car breaks down, she gets a ride from Carmen, a woman she interviewed at the bar where Jenny Sue was visiting before she was attacked. They take a detour to this lady's house. Molly suspicions about Carmen are alleviated when she meets her grandmother. These two are back on the road soon enough. Molly notices crutches in the back of the van just before Carmine drops her off to meet Becca, who is arguing with her daughter at the time.

Becca stops by the station to let Molly know her victim was talking to a man with a white beard the night she was attacked. She brings a cinnamon cake with her. This has Molly later telling Luis that she believes this lady is their serial killer. She talks to the man who was charged with killing her mother. The guy was also molesting Carmen when she was 13. He's a lowlife, but he's not the one who killed Carmen's mother. Molly believes it was her daughter who did that.

Molly heads over to Carmen's house. Her grandmother lets her in, as her granddaughter isn't home. No, Carmen is in the parking lot of a grocery store. It happens to be the same place where Becca is shopping. She's knocked unconscious. Carmen calls Molly to let her know that she's holding her sister-in-law captive. The race is on to find Becca. Carmen wants to take out the anger she has for her own mother on yet another victim.

Molly finds Becca tied up in Carmen's old house. She's blindsided by the swing of a crutch. Molly tries to talk down a disturbed Carmen as she points her gun at them. She has Becca play the role of her deceased mother. It's enough of a diversion for Molly to subdue Carmen. Case closed.

Summary: While Molly investigates the murder of a famous basketball player, Becca has some life changing news to tell Billy. A tip leads Dan to an arrest of an improbable suspect.

Basketball star Troy Flynn, aka T-Roy, is killed in his home in what looks to be a robbery gone bad. A nosy neighbor says she saw three black men loading bags into a white van. Molly calms down Troy's distraught wife, Amber, who says her husband was out at a charity event with a couple teammates, who also had their homes robbed. The authorities track down a couple kids in the white van filled with T-Roy's goods. They aren't the killers though. The boys were just out for a joyride.

Molly chats with T-Roy's teammates who were also his best friends. Three pals weren't really at a charity event. They were at a strip club. Molly interviews a pair of the dancers that entertained the players. They say T-Roy's wife chased him down there complaining about not having enough money for her shopping binges. While interviewing Amber, Molly finds a clue in a plant by the pool. It's a piece of a mask that was worn in a robbery elsewhere. Molly suspects the basketball wives may be the killer burglars.

Molly hopes to link residue found from a cut on a screen door to a knife the wives used in their charity work. She believes Amber lured him there the night of the robbery. The other two wives aren't rattled in the least when they are told they may be accessories to murder. Molly learns that Troy was having an affair with his wife's best friends, Mischa and Kiki, thanks to some sex tapes found at his secret love nest. But it's the innocent video featuring a woman named Zora Smith that piques Molly's interest. Troy fell for this nice girl hard.

It appears as though Zora isn't the innocent lady she seems to be. She pays a visit to the basketball wives to give them the scoop on their current situation. She plans to finger them for murder unless she gets $5 million. This leads to a heated discussion between the wives once she leaves. It's all caught on tape in the surveillance van outside. As it turns out, Zora was acting undercover for Molly. Thanks to her, the basketball wives are arrested for T-Roy's murder. Case closed.

Becca has big news. She's pregnant and plans to tell Billy over dinner during a date night. In other news, Dan is trying to figure out who is bringing drugs across the border in a big way. His informant lets him know that cocaine is being smuggled inside cattle. He gets a credible lead on the trucker who is the transporter on this side of the border. A roadblock is set up. Dan is shocked when he sees the smuggler step out of the truck. It's Billy. Dan has no choice but to order one of the other agents to read him his rights.

Summary: An arrest of Molly's provides her with a tip about an unsolved murder case previously worked by a chauvinistic, retired Texas Ranger. Billy has to make a decision that could put his family at risk.

Augie Travis strapped a pipe bomb to his wife after he found out she was leaving him for another man. Molly steps up to the distraught man. She tricks him into letting his guard down long enough immobilized the guy. Augie wants to cut a deal. He claims to know the identity of a killer in a decade-old murder. Augie's old cellmate, Mims Shackelford, said he buried a dead girl who was strangled down by the reservoir. The victim was 18-year-old Tara Sills. The case belonged to Colt Ritter, an old school Texas Ranger who quit soon after women were allowed to join the force.

Molly meets with an ornery Ranger Colt about the new suspect in his old case. The two of them form a reluctant partnership. They meet with the woman who met the victim on a bus ride from Florida to Texas. Her name is Sue Ellen Tucker. She came to the Lone Star State because she qualified for the Daughters of Alamo college scholarship 10 years ago. She says Tara was running away from a troubled past. They ended up sharing a hotel room. Sue Ellen is the one who identified the body. She also said she saw a man, not Mims Shackelford though, with Tara at one point. Ranger Colt doesn't recall that tidbit from the case.

Molly and Colt track down Mims, who is flustered during questioning right up until the moment his attorney, Denver Jenkins, shuts down the interrogation. Sue Ellen can't identify the guy in a lineup. Mims is a free man. In illegal search of his place indicates that he's being paid off. Molly and Colt find the guy shot dead outside a motel. The bullet came from a gun used in an armed robbery. Mims Shackelford was the male suspect in the crime. He and his accomplice used a blue Nova. Colt believes the mirror in the sun visor may have prints of the other robber. It does. The prints belonged to Tara Sills.

Molly deduces that Tara Sills is actually still alive. She's living under the identity of the scholarship-worthy girl she met on a bus ride to Texas. Her name was Sue Ellen. She was one of the Daughters of the Alamo scholarship recipients. Tara has been living a new life with a family, but killing Mims shows that she's still a murderer at heart. Molly and Colt place her under arrest. Their unlikely pairing helped bring a killer to justice.

Molly testifies in open court that her politically-powerful husband used to beat her. It's impossible to prove, but Dan helps her attorney bluff that some of Jake's past beating victims are going to testify against him. Jake is now willing to sign the divorce papers immediately.

Billy learns from Dan that the U.S. Attorney is not letting him off the hook regarding his drug trafficking charge. The leader of the cartel, El Diablo, thinks that Billy took out one of his traitorous middle men. He wants to meet him. Dan says that all charges will be dropped if Billy helps take this guy down. A meeting is set, but it's actually a set up to let Billy know that El Diablo has kidnapped his daughter.
