Summary: Callen returns back to the NCIS Office of Special Projects to solve a kidnapping case.

The police chase after a blue Tahoe through the highway. They corner the vehicle, draw their weapons and order the passengers to get out. The driver pulls out an Uzi and starts to shoot at the officers. The police open fire and take out the gunmen. After the battle, they open the back seat and find the body of a Navy officer.

Later, G Callen wakes up and has a flashback of when he was shot. Sam Hanna meets with Callen and asks him if he is ready to come back to work. Hanna takes his stuff and brings him to the new OSP office, which is an abandoned water plant administration building. They enter the building and see that it is packed with agents. Hetty, the operational manager, is surprised that G is back so soon. She tells him that he needs to update his biometric profile. Kensi welcomes Callen back. While walking to the briefing room, Callen meets Dominic, the teams newest member.

The team receives a briefing from Vance. He tells Callen that the case regarding the people who shot him is still pending. Vance says that their next case involves investigating the death of a Navy intelligence officer named Frank McGuire. He says McGuire was kidnapped by Mexican cartel members then killed during in a gun battle when the police cornered them. He says that the the US and Mexican government is going to launch a raid on the Mexican drug cartels in less than twelve hours. The team watches the video of the shootout and see one of the kidnapers make sure that McGuire was killed by shooting into the SUV.

Hanna drives Callen to McGuire's apartment. Hanna says he will pose as a real estate agent while Callen poses as a potential buyer. They break into McGuire's apartment and hear a caller access his answering machine and erase all of the messages. They call Eric, the technician, at headquarters and ask him to get into McGuire's phone logs.

Back at the apartment, they find a picture of McGuire celebrating Fleet Week with a young girl. They find a birthday card from McGuire's niece, Emma. They take his laptop then leave. Callen sees a group of gardeners, tells them he is interested in moving in and asks them if the area is safe. Callen says that he heard a Navy officer that lived in the apartment was recently killed. The gardener says that McGuire had friends pick him up in a Blue Tahoe every day that week. Hanna sees a town car waiting outside and chases after it. The town car driver quickly throws his car in reverse, spins around and speeds away.

Callen and Hanna return to headquarters. They figure that the people who picked up McGuire put a bag over his head in order to prevent him from seeing where they were going. Dominic says that the only family that McGuire had was a sister who has a daughter named Emma. Kinski volunteers Nate, the psychologist, and herself to tell her the bad news about her brother. They see that McGuire has been receiving a lot of calls lately from Bobby J, a friend of his who owns a private security company. Callen and Hanna visit Bobby J and he admits that he was in the town car in front of McGuire's apartment. Bobby J says that he knows nothing about McGuire's kidnapping. Hanna sees Bobby loading boxes of weapons and asks him if he is planning a hunting party. Bobby J says that they are done talking.

Kinski and Nate visit McGuire's sister, Helen. She says that she has noticed nothing strange going on with McGuire in the past few weeks. The phone rings and Helen goes out to the balcony to answer it. Nate tells Kinski that it seems like Helen is lying to them.

Back at headquarters, Hetty calls Callen to her office. She gives him a set of keys to an Impala, a smart phone and a new wardrobe for his undercover work. Hetty asks Callen what G, his first name, stands for and he says that he doesn't know because he is an orphan. Eric tells Hanna that he is hacking into McGuire's computer. Kinski returns and tells the team that Helen appears that she is more in stress than in grief. She figures that Emma is in trouble. They look at Emma's personal webpage and see that she hasn't posted any messages in a week. They figure someone kidnapped her.

Eric loads up files from McGuire's laptop. They discover that McGuire was sending the Mexican drug cartel satellite photos of the border. They call Vance and tell him the operation to take out the drug cartels has been compromised. Vance tells the team to find out which cartel is holding Emma. They figure that McGuire told Bobby J about his situation and he was preparing to rescue her. They see that Bobby J's cellphone has been activated and Callen and Hanna head to its location. Kinski meets with Helen and tells her that she knows her daughter was kidnapped.

Callen and Hanna drive into a primitive road and run into two gunmen in an SUV. They start to shoot at each other and Hanna and Callen are able to kill the men. They reach a house and find Bobby J, wounded inside. They search for Emma, but she is not there. An ambulance arrives to take Bobby J to the hospital. Bobby tells Callen to find Emma. Callen says that the SUV had a GPS system. They find that one of its destinations was a mansion owned by Manny Cortez, the leader of a drug cartel. Nate says that Cortez is known to cut off people's toes.

Helen gets a call from Luiz, her ex-husband. Kinski picks up the phone and tells him that she works for NCIS and will do everything possible to find Emma.

Callen and Hanna drive up to the gate of Cortez's mansion. Callen calls Nate and asks him if he thinks Emma is still alive. Nate says that it is unlikely, but if she is, she doesn't have much time left. Hetty tells the team to give Cortez what he wants. Callen and Hanna get on the gate intercom and tell the guard they have satellite information. Callen and Hanna are brought inside the house and frisked. Callen tells a man that he is a lawyer. He says that he has friends who can get him realtime satellite data. Callen takes a photo of the man on his smartphone and sends it back to headquarters. Nate says that the man is not Cortez. Emma runs out and calls the man her daddy. Kinski calls headquarters and tells them that Luiz is aware of what NCIS is doing. Luiz pulls out a gun and tells Callen that he knows he is part of the NCIS. Luiz says that he has been working for Cortez over the last seven years. Callen pretends that he just received a call from McGuire, hands Luiz the phone and uses the distraction to take his gun away. Callen and Hanna fight and overpower the men. Callen gets Helen on the phone and gives it to Emma. Helen tells her daughter that she can come home now.

At headquarters, Hetty gives Callen a stack of paperwork that has piled up while he was recovering from his gun shot wounds. Hanna offers Callen a place to stay, but he says that it would be too noisy. Later that night, Hetty gets done with her work and finds Callen asleep on the couch. She tucks him in then goes home.

Production Code: 102
Summary: As the team is working the murder of a drug dealer, the case ends up being personal for one of the team members.

A drug deal takes place at a mansion by the sea. Several masked men storm the building and take the cash being used during the transaction. The drug dealers spot them and start to shoot. The men jump into the water then swim away as the drug dealers rain down bullets.

At the headquarters, Hanna helps Dominic hone his fighting skills. The team assembles for a briefing. They watch a surveillance camera taken at the Malibu home that was raided. By studying the hand signals, Hanna figures that the gunmen were a group of Navy SEALs. Hanna recognizes one of the men as Curt Holgate. They load up his file and see that he is out of service. Eric finds that there was another member of Holgate's team, Eric Ramirez, who was shot and killed recently while he was at a grocery store.

Hanna and Callen visit Holgate at the Federal Building. Callen records Hanna and Holgate as they chat. Hanna offers his condolences for the loss of his Ramirez. Holgate says he has to go, then takes off. They return to headquarters and watch the video. Nate says that Holgate was trying to appear relaxed. Eric says that one of Holgate's teammates, Timothy Jackson, has been missing since the day of the mansion raid.

Callen and Hanna go to Timothy's trailer near the beach. Callen finds a key in a panel and gets them inside. They see a picture of Holgate, Jackson, Ramirez and another man. Callen wonders if the men hid the drug money underwater. Callen figures that Holgate and his team learned about the drug dealers then decided to use their training to steal from them. Hanna says that SEALs don't act on greed.

Dominic and Kensi plant a tracking device/bug on Holgate's car. Dominic says that the team has been treating him harshly since he is the new guy. Kensi says that Hanna just wants to protect him when he gets on the field. The fourth member of Holgate's team arrives and meets with Holgate. They spot Kensi at the scene. Kensi pretends that she is following her cheating boyfriend and starts to key a car. Holgate tells his teammate to meet him later.

Callen and Hanna learn that the fourth man is named Morris Raspen. They visit the wife of Ramirez. She says that Raspen was at Ramirez's funeral but she doesn't really know him. Eric calls Hanna and says that by looking at Timothy's credit card history, he discovered he was at a restaurant the day of the shooting.

Nate visits Heather, the coroner. She shows Nate the body of Ramirez. She says that Ramirez was shot twice in the heart like it was done by a professional. Heather says that she just learned that one of the people who was killed during the mansion shoot out was an undercover cop.

Callen and Hanna go to the restaurant and see Timothy's motorcycle parked outside. They ask a waitress if they recognize any of Holgate's men. She says that three of them were there and they got into an argument that they took outside.

Eric calls Callen and tells him that the police discovered a body that washed up that matches the description of Timothy. They go to the beach and find Timothy with a gunshot wound to his side.

The team watches surveillance tapes taken from the restaurant. They see that Holgate and Raspen returned to the restaurant after the argument they had outside. Nate figures that Jackson was shot when he tried to escape the mansion. After Hanna leaves, Nate tells Callen that being a Navy SEAL is a big part of Hanna's identity. He says that if the SEALS are corrupt, it will hurt him.

Hetty visits Hanna as he punches at a heavy bag. Hetty tells Hanna that he is more than a NCIS agent and a SEAL.

Kensi and Dominic stake out in front of Holden's car. Kensi pulls out a bag and goes to the back to pee. Before she starts, they see Holden get into his car. Kensi returns to her seat before they start to follow. Holden stops and pulls over. Eric uses traffic cameras and learns that Holden is not in his car.

Meanwhile, Callen and Hanna go to Raspen's apartment. Raspen runs after they call for him. In the parking lot, Hanna and Raspen get into a fight. They end up pointing a gun at each other. Callen points his gun at Raspen and orders him to drop his gun.

They bring Raspen back to the headquarters and ask him if he robbed the drug dealers. Callen tells Raspen that one of the drug dealers he killed was a undercover cop. Hanna heads to the room, but Nate stops him and tells him to let Callen finish. Hanna says that they are wasting time. He says he is going to step out, then return later. He informs Nate that if Callen hasn't gained anything, he will forcefully get what Raspen knows himself.

While listening to music, Hetty hears who she thinks is Hanna punching at the heavy bag. Instead she finds Dominic punching away. She tells Dominic to get over the fact that he lost a suspect. She tells him stories about how Callen and Hanna messed up during missions. Just before she leaves, she gives him pointers on how to box.

Hanna breaks into the drug dealer's mansion. He hears a noise and pulls out his gun. A drug dealer that was at the mansion appears and identifies himself as LAPD. The man says that he lost his partner during the raid. He says that he was there to try to look for a lead on the people who killed him. Hanna returns to the headquarters and tells the team about the man he just met, an LAPD officer name Grozman. Raspen says that Grozman is probably dirty since he shot the other undercover policeman in the back.

Callen asks Raspen who's idea was it to go into the mansion. He says that Jackson learned that one of the men that shot Ramirez was at the mansion. Raspen says that Holgate tried to stop him, but Jackson went anyway. Nate tells Hanna that he thinks Raspen is telling the truth. Raspen says that they followed Jackson when he swam towards the mansion in a improvised and unarmed raid. Raspen asks for a lawyer.

Hanna enters the room and tells Raspen that the SEAL code is to never leave a man behind. Hanna orders him to tell him where Holgate is before Grozman finds him. Raspen says that Holgate is in a motel.

In the morning, Hanna surprises Holgate while he is in bed. He brings him down to Grozman and another man and hands him over. Grozman puts Holgate in his car. Hanna gets in his car and drives off. The NCIS team watches the officer in a camera hidden on Holgate. Grozman asks Holgate where the money is. He says that his partner has the money at the golf course.

Callen poses as Raspen at the golf course. Grozman has his partner cover him above with a scoped rifle. Grozman brings Holgate to meet with Callen. He orders Callen to throw his weapons in the pond. Callen tells Grozman that the money is in a bag. Kensi and Dominic surprise the sniper and tell him to drop his weapon. He turns and the NCIS shoot and kill him. Grozman hears the commotion, then shoots and hits Holgate in his abdomen. Hanna emerges from the pond and shoots Grozman. Eric says that ambulances are on the way.

Later at the headquarters, Hanna cleans his gun. He tells Callen that Holgate will fully recover. Callen asks if Hanna is mad at Holgate and his team. Hanna says he understands what they did since a brother is created when people are in combat together. Callen says that they were in combat together and asks if they have a brotherhood. Hanna sees that Callen is getting a little sappy, says goodnight, then leaves.

Summary: During a Marine Corps training exercise a predator and hellfire missile is hijacked, resulting in the death a Marine. The team must locate this UAV before it can be used against America.

The Marines and Air Force conduct a live fire military exercise. An Air Force operator manipulates a drone that flies over a team of Marines. He presses a button to launch a missile at a building, but it doesn't respond. He loses control of the drone and it launches a missile at his partner Mike.

The next day, Kensi tells the agents that she canceled her second date that she was supposed to have with a man. Hetty says that most men don't know how to deal with strong women. She passes out sexual harassment guidelines for a mandatory seminar next week. She tells Kensi that George Hamilton told her that he loves women who plays hard to get.

They assemble at the briefing room. Eric shows the team footage taken by a Predator drone. He says that the drone launched a Hellfire missile that killed a Marine named Michael Hazlett. The operator, Holden Briggs, states that he didn't misfire. Callen and Hanna wait to have a meeting set up by Hetty. A man enters their car and tells them that they only have sixty seconds to talk. He tells them that they had four drones that were recently hacked. He asks them to tell Hetty that they are even now for what happened in Nepal, then leaves the car.

Eric finds that the drone was hacked into and the video was uploaded onto a website. They replay the full video and see the drone safely land where it is later picked up by an unshaven man getting out of a semitruck. Eric starts a database search linked to surveillance cameras to find out who the driver is. The team figures that the man on the video wants to sell the military technology. Eric hacks into the website containing the drone video and crashes it. Hetty screams and asks Eric if he was responsible for crashing the website that held the cat and trampoline video that she was watching.

Nate tells Callen and Hanna that Holden is narcissistic. Hanna sits down with Holden. He says that Mike was his friend. He says that there was no system failure and blames a hacker for taking control of the drone. He says that the system is experimental. Holden says that he should be flying in Afghanistan. He says that drones can be hacked and fighter pilots can't. After their interview, Nate tells Hanna and Callen that Holden is not their guy. Eric calls the team and tells them that he found a classroom of computer programmers that are expecting to meet with a reformed hacker who nobody knows the face of. Callen figures that one of them can pose as the hacker. Eric tells them that his database search found that the face of the man in the video matches Youseff Khalid. Callen and Hanna go to Khalid's house and break inside. Nobody is there, but they find maps and a book full of radical Islamic teachings. Youseff arrives and shoots at the agents. After his clip is empty, he tries to run, but is caught by Hanna and beaten. He reaches in his bag and starts a timer for a bomb. Hanna shoots Youseff and runs with Callen. Seconds later, the bomb explodes.

The team returns to headquarters and report that Youseff was shot then blown up. Hetty asks them what happened. Callen asks her what happened in Nepal, but she ignores him then leaves. Kensi dresses up to pose as Razor Mantis, the hacker that will speak to the computer programmers. Hetty and Nate prep her on the assignment.

Dominic tells Callen and Hanna that they found a weapon cache at Youseff's house. He says that he worked for a company owned by a man named Arthur Jensen.

Kensi appears in front of the class and introduces herself as Razor Mantis. Dominic plants himself in the class to provide Kensi help with technical questions. Eric examines the webchat and internet queries made by the class and sees that they are buying her cover story. A student raises his hand and asks a trick question which she answers with Dominic's help. The student asks another question which Eric instructs her to ignore. Eric uses the equipment at headquarters to hack into the programmer's computers. They locate a suspicious student named Joel Hardy who sneaks out. Kensi receives a phone call from Eric and uses the opportunity to step outside and meet Joel. Kensi plays hard to get, which entices Joel to ask her out.

Callen and Hanna meet with Arthur Jensen. They tell him that Youseff was killed. Arthur says that Youseff was just a business associate. Arthur says that he hired him to write code. After he worked for him, he realized that he had extremist religious views, but couldn't fire him. Arthur says that he has to go, then gets in the car and leaves.

Kensi and Joel Hardy have drinks at a bar. Kensi flirts with him and has him admit that he hacked into the military network. Joel leaves to go to the bathroom. Dominic follows him, washes his hands and sees a pool of blood on the floor of one of the stalls. He opens it up and sees Joel Hardy dead.

The team returns to headquarters and plays surveillance video from the bar. They see a man leave the restroom just after the student walked inside. Callen tells Kensi that she is off the hook for date number 2. They run the killer through facial recognition software. Outside, Nate finds Dominic alone and tells him that he did what he could and that the death of the student was not his fault.

Callen tells Hetty that no one has claimed Youseff's body yet. The next morning, Hanna wakes up Nate and Dominic and shows them the equipment he found at Joel Hardy's apartment. Dominic says that it is sophisticated enough to hack into a drone. Callen asks the team to look over the case. Nate says that Youseff was a perfect fall guy. He describes Joel as a whiz kid who could hack into the Air Force, but was immature. They figure that even though Holden had an axe to grind against the drone program, it doesn't seem like he would kill. Eric tells the team that he hacked Joel's computer and learned that he sent codes to Jensen's company.

The team learns that Joel's killer is a man named Hamzi Khan, an Afghan man. They discover that his wife was killed by a drone attack. They see that his wife was Arthur Jensen's sister. They figure that Jensen and Hamzi wanted revenge against the Americans using drones. The team discovers the location of the semi-truck used to pick up the drone. Callen and Hanna pull over the driver. He says that he was hired to drive the truck to the port by Jensen. Eric calls Callen and informs him that the drone's transponder has been activated and is now circling the city.

The team considers crashing the drone servers, but learn that Jensen is using his own server. Callen asks Eric to find Jensen. Nate meets with Holden and tells him that the drone is airborne. He says that they think that the person who hijacked his drone is going to use it. Holden says that it is a consequence of using drones. Dominic brings Holden the equipment they took from Joel's house and asks him to use it to take control of the drone. Holden says that he lost a friend the last time he controlled a drone. Dominic tells Holden that he is being given a second chance to save people. Eric is able to hack into the drone's targeting system and sees that he is aiming at a high school. Callen and Hanna triangulate Jensen's signal and see that he is controlling the drone from a yacht. Callen distracts Hamzi as Hanna chokes him out. They board the ship and find Jensen on the controls of the drone. He launches a missile just before Callen shoots him in the shoulder. Holden is able to take control of the missile and send it into the water. Holden thanks the team for letting him redeem himself.

Later, Callen discovers that Hetty told Hanna about her time in Nepal. Nate asks Dominic if he wants to talk to him, but Dominic says that he is good.

Summary: The search for the main culprit that killed an Iraqi businessman goes on with Special Agent Sam Hanna and Special Agent "G" Callen leading the investigation.

Two men wait for their target to arrive at the airport. The target realizes that the men are after him and runs up the escalator. He crosses through traffic and into a parking garage. He pushes a woman as she is about to get in her car and steals it. He runs into a line of cars at the exit gate. He turns around and speeds to the roof. He looks behind him and sees a man with a gun. He reverses and hits the man as he shoots. The target exits the car then escapes.

At headquarters, Eric is happy that he now has 1000 facebook friends. Hanna tells him that the enemy can use his account to gain intelligence. Eric asks him if he is on any social networking site and Hanna says that he is undercover. Eric says that it is not normal. Nate says that social networking sites are a way to fulfill the needs of the socially challenged.

Hetty asks Callen about a bloodied white shirt. She tells Callen that his new color scheme is black. Kensi walks in wearing a black dress. Hetty announces that Kensi is on assignment. Kensi says that she gained valuable intelligence. The team realize that Hetty is trying to cover up for Kensi's late return from her date.

Vance gives the team a video briefing. He tells them about a man named Walter Flynn who works for a contractor named Sedential Security. He says that he Flynn killed an Iraqi man that he was supposed to protect. Sedential found out that Flynn was arriving in LA and tried to take custody of him. Vance says that their attempt failed and resulted in the death of one employee. Vance says that the DOD wants them to intervene since a private contracting company is acting recklessly. He tells them to meet with Sedential's CEO Peter Caldwell. Vance congratulates Eric on reaching 1000 friends.

Callen and Hanna meet with Caldwell. They says that Flynn became trigger happy. Caldwell says that Flynn is good at killing people quickly, but he is more dangerous since he is mentally unstable.

At the base, Nate says that the Marine corp gave Flynn the structure that he needed. Hanna sees a mix of commendations and demerits. They watch the video of Flynn's escape. Hanna wonders where Flynn went. They play the surveillance tape and see Flynn get picked up by a driver with a jeep.

Nate tells Callen and Hanna that he thinks Flynn had a psychotic break. He thinks that Flynn is in LA for a reason. Eric looks at the tape and sees that the license plate is not visible. They see a bunch of anti-government bumper stickers. They also see that the driver has a tattoo. They figure that the driver is a woman. Eric says that Flynn's foster brother, Chad Ellis, owns a gun shop in the valley.

Callen and Hanna walk toward a tattoo parlor. They meet an artist and show her a photo of the driver. She says that the driver's name is Cherry and that she paid in cash.

Kensi and Dominic go to the gun shop and see that the door is unlocked even though the sign says it is closed. They go to the back room and find Chad dead and hanging on a hook.

Eric says that he cross checked the name Cherry with people who own a Jeep. He says that he found a woman named Cherise Dawson. He says that he found a ton of information about her. He says that she went to the same high school as Flynn and that they are facebook friends. Eric reports that he caught up with her for a while, then stopped. Nate says that it is normal. Eric says that Flynn wanted to meet with her. Callen thinks that Flynn is using Cherise. Kensi says that Chad was tortured and wonder why.

Callen and Hanna head towards Cherise's house. Hanna knocks, but there is no answer. They wonder if Cherise ended up like Chad. They break in with guns drawn. They don't find anyone there. Hanna sees that the fridge is filled mostly with soy products except for a steak sandwich. They suspect that Flynn was there.

Kensi finds Cherise at work and asks if she remembers her. Kensi says that she got an facebook invite from Flynn and asks if she knows him. Cherise says that she kind of knows him. Cherise says that she is late for work and runs off. Kensi calls Hanna and they figure that Cherise and Flynn were in contact. They decide to wait and watch.

While Callen and Hanna hang out, Hanna constructs origami swans out of lollipop wrappers. Callen looks at the swan and teases him about the construction. Kensi calls Hanna and tells him that Cherise is about to come home. Kensi sees a Black SUV pull up. Kensi photographs the license plate and reads off the number to Eric. He tells Kensi that the car belongs to Sedential. He asks Kensi why they are there since the NCIS team was supposed to handle the investigation. Kensi grabs a battering ram out of her trunk, slams it into the SUV and asks the Sedential employees if they need a tow truck.

Kensi tells Hanna and Callen that there is no sign of Flynn. They wonder if they should go to Cherise's work, which is a video game company. Dominic says that Cherise likes the bad boy type. Callen returns to the base and is dressed by Hetty. He also gets a fabricated resume from Eric and information about the manager of Cherise's company.

Later, Callen sits down for an interview, but is quickly told that he is not needed. Callen asks the manager to look at his resume. The manager sees that Callen has evidence that he filed a fraudulent tax return. The manger decides to hire him. The manager sits Callen down at his new desk which is next to Cherise's. He sits down to playtest a role playing fantasy game.

Callen calls Eric and asks for help. Eric guides him on how to play. He notices that Callen's online character is dying just as his boss is about to notice his poor performance. Callen asks for plan B. Eric shuts down the power to the building. The manager tells everyone that they have the rest of the day off. Hanna sabotages Cherise's car. Callen hears that she is in trouble and says that he can fix it. He lifts up her hood and says that he can fix it tomorrow. He offers her a ride home and she accepts. Cherise asks how she can repay him. He asks if he can use her bathroom and get a beer. Cherise says that her boyfriend is coming home soon, so there should be no problem.

Callen flirts with Cherise in the house. Hanna sees Flynn pull up in his motorcycle. Cherise greets him and says that Callen is her coworker. Callen and Flynn talk about the military. Flynn says that Iraq was tough, but not as tough as what happened afterwards. Hanna sees two Sedential employees about to enter the house. Callen warns Cherise and Flynn. The Sedential employees and Flynn fire at each other. Hanna enters and orders the employees to put down their weapons. Flynn escapes on his motorcycle.

Hanna asks the employees what happened. The employees say that they were angry since Flynn killed one of their men. Callen asks Cherise if she is okay. She figure that Callen is not a game tester. Cherise says that she downloaded an encrypted SIM card for him. She says that she couldn't do it since the card was encrypted. She thinks that Flynn lied to her. Flynn calls Cherise and asks her to put Callen on. He says that he didn't do what Sedential said he did. He says that he has some unfinished business to take care of.

Eric examines the SIM card. Callen figures that Flynn wants to take out Caldwell, the CEO of Sedential. Eric is able to download a video from the card.

Later, Hanna and Callen arrive at an event that Caldwell is going to appear at. Kensi spots Flynn and directs the team to his location. Callen and Hanna confront Flynn just as he pulls out his gun. Kensi asks Dominic and Eric to play the video on the street. They see a video of Caldwell shoot and kill the Iraqi business man that was blamed on Flynn.

The team figures that Caldwell wanted to frame Flynn for the Iraqi's murder. Callen tells Flynn that he will be protected until he testifies. Flynn says that they do what they do so others can live normal lives. Callen pulls over and stops the car. Flynn gets out and leaves. Later, Cherise receives a bouquet of flowers from Flynn.

Summary: The team is investigating the death of a contractor, fearing the classified information he had in his possession is lost. They find a lead that has ties to Director Vance.

A couple on a jet ski video tape themselves towing their friend on a wake board. Another jet skier loses control and crashes on the shore. A group of people examine him and find he was shot.

At headquarters, Hanna suggests that Callen live on a boat. Nate notices that Dom is filming him. Dom says he took an undercover training course. He asks the team what happened to the guy he replaced, but they don't tell him.

Hanna figures that Nate's office is still being worked on. Hetty calls the team to the ops room. She plays them a tape of the shooting. She explains that the victim, Daniel Su, worked in the DARPA project. She explains that the police suspect the North Koreans killed him since Su defected from the country. They wonder why he was killed so late after he defected. They figure the DARPA contract raised his bounty. Callen learns Su rented a jet ski at the same place every week and wonders if the killer waited for him.

Downstairs, Hetty finds Nate reading a comic book. Nate says he is reading a graphic novel. He says the novel is deep, but she says she thinks he can get more from a normal book. She asks him if he knows if the other agents didn't pass muster and advises he doesn't know.

Callen and Hanna go to Daniel's house and knock. Callen discovers the door is unlocked. They enter and find blood stains on the walls and the house ransacked. Hanna notices a bloody lamp on the floor. They look closer and find the body of a woman.

Back at headquarters, they learn the dead woman was named Sally Morris, who provided Su money for his company. Dom wonders if Su died because of business reasons. Hanna looks at Su's wound and figures he was shot from above.

After the team arrives at the beach, Hanna suggest to Callen that he live in a mobile home. Callen says he likes the boat idea better. Hanna figures the killer used a silencer. He figures the sniper shot from a boat. Hanna says the killer had skills. Callen sees a camera and wonders if it captured him.

At headquarters, they watch the video and see a person with a net on his back. Eric uses another camera in the parking lot and finds the sniper was a woman. Vance walks in and says the woman is Lee Wuan Kai. He informs the team that they are in trouble. He explains that Kai flew into the country using a fake passport. He says she changes her appearance. He says Kai is an assassin in exile. Vance tells Callen and Hanna that they should meet with a DARPA expert named Frank Davis. He says Kai will kill anyone who knows about the DARPA technology.

Vance meets with Hetty. He asks her if she is getting settled into the new office. She shows him a picture of herself taken when she was on set with Lawrence Olivia. Hetty asks if the assassin is Kai. Vance says he first met Kai in 1984. He says she left a body count every time. Hetty asks him if she is his nemesis.

Dom looks at the forensic data from Su's place. They see that Kai killed Sally with a lamp after she discovered her at the house. Kensi tells Vance the crime scene analysis will be complete by tomorrow, but he says it is too long. He calls Abby and asks her to look at some blood splatter. She asks him to say hi to Eric for him. He hands the phone to Eric. She asks him if Vance is in a bad mood. He sends her photos of the crime scene. Eric says he is trying to get a clearer picture of Kai's car.

Hanna and Callen meet with Frank at the safe house. He says Su was very secretive. He says there were parts of the work he kept to himself. They ask him if Sally knew anything. Frank believed Sally was just a financier. Hanna says Kai doesn't know that the technology died with Su.

During their car ride home, Callen says he doesn't trust Frank. Hanna says he thinks it is because he is a buerocrat like the ones he dealt with as a kid. Callen tells Vance that Frank stated that Su took his secrets to the grave. Callen says he doesn't believe Frank because he is a beurocrat. They see Daniel's brother Jimmy walk out of his apartment with his wife Aimee. Hanna notices a rifle on a rooftop and tells them to get down. Several shots rain down, but the team is safely hidden behind a van. Meanwhile in the building, Kai breaks down her gun and escapes.

Callen and Hanna bring Jimmy to the safe house. Hanna reports that Kai took all the evidence including her shell casings. Jimmy says his brother left nothing for him. Aimee asks what will happen now. Callen says they will try to neutralize the threat, but if they can't they might have to join the witness protection program. Jimmy refuses to run. Eric discovers Kai's car in a traffic video. He learns that she is registered at a hotel. After Callen and Hanna leave, Kensi notices that Jimmy and Aimee are quietly arguing. She asks Nate to position himself so she can read their lips. She sees him beg her not to tell. Kensi figures that Jimmy knows all of Daniel's business.

Vance, Callen and Hanna arrive at the hotel. Callen figures that the case is personal to Vance. Vance uses a key card and enters Kai's room. He notices pictures of Daniel on her desk. The phone rings and Vance picks it up to speak to Kai. She tells him she is flattered that he is looking for her himself. Vance gets on his cellphone and calls Callen as he talks to Kai. Callen instructs Eric to trace the call. He informs them the call is coming from the hotel. He directs them to her cell phone location. They enter a gym and find she is gone. Callen picks up the phone and talks to Vance. He tells Callen that Kai said she didn't kill Sally Morris.

Back at headquarters, the team wonders if they should believe Kai. Dom says Daniel Su's security system can tell how many people were in the house. He says Sally let her killer inside the house since he knew him. Eric finds that Jimmy and Frank called each other often. Callen learns that Jimmy knew more than he admitted. Vance figures they need to have Jimmy admit to his involvement. They figure that since he didn't meet Dominic, they can use him to go undercover.

Later, Hetty dresses Dominic up as a police officer. She tells him the word to call for backup is shadows. She informs him the uniform is new. Jimmy leaves the safehouse and meets with Dominic on the street. Dominic tells him he was the first officer to discover Sally. He says that before she died she whispered a name to him. At the headquarters, Eric learns that someone is trying to trace Jimmy's cell phone. Vance calls to abort the mission. He tells Dom to bring Jimmy to safety. Kai shoots at Jimmy but misses. Callen chases after Kai and hears her driving her car down the parking lot. He shoots at her driver side as it passes through an opening. He jumps down a flight of stairs and shoots at the vehicle. Callen opens fire as the car leaves the garage. The car slams into a truck. Hanna opens the door and finds it empty, but bloody. Vance learns that Jimmy denied killing Sally.

Abby calls Vance and informs him she is done with her analysis. She says there are no prints at the scene. She finds a smearing mark on the lamp. Kensi is called. She tells Aimee the killer wore two rings on her left hand. Aimee realizes she is caught. She says Jimmy was the smart one of the family and Frank suspected he hired the wrong brother. Aimee told Sally the truth after Daniel was found dead. She admits she killed Sally after she threatened to deport Jimmy.

Later, Vance arrives at the scene. Callen and Hanna report that Kai escaped. Vance sees that Kai lost a lot of blood and figures if she doesn't get to a hospital that night, she will die. Nate tells the team that Vance will never believe Kai is dead until he kills her himself. Dominic realizes he lost Hetty's button camera. Hanna realizes he is going to get in trouble and helps him look for it.

Summary: After the NCIS team discovers the body of a marine who had been living a double life, they look for a motive to his murder.

During a party on top of a building, a waitress flirts with a Marine named Brandon who gives her a big tip. Brandon makes a trade with a man then steps away to take a phone call. Later, Brandon falls off the building and dies.

Callen and Hanna argue over what makes a better operator, natural skills or practice. Hetty arrives and tells them they are late for their briefing about Brandon.

In the ops room, Eric says Brandon left Iraq three months ago. Nate says Brandon had possible PTSD. Dominic says since Brandon had a mental history, the LAPD are ruling his death as a suicide. Hetty says since Brandon's family is connected to politicians, they were called to investigate. Eric says Brandon had an apartment in Culver City.

Callen and Hanna go to the apartment building. Hanna says they work well as a team together because they compliment each other. Hanna says he is a natural and Callen says he is super-natural. They enter the apartment and see it is empty. Callen finds several photos of women on the refrigerator. They figure that Brandon wasn't depressed. Hanna finds 160 receipts for Guitar Hero paid in cash. They see that he bought the game at multiple mom and pop stores. They return to the office and ask Dominic if he ever played Guitar Hero. He explains he prefers the real thing and idolizes Gabor Szabo and Gjango Reinhart. Eric plays a recreation of the Brandon's fall which indicates he fell backwards. Eric says Brandon also had a broken jaw. He figures Brandon was knocked out and pushed off the building.

Callen and Kensi go to the rooftop club. They notice a surveillance camera and call Eric to hack into it. They meet with the events coordinator and ask her if she knows Brandon. She says everyone knew Brandon. She explains Brandon was a host of parties for the last several weeks. She calls over Amy who was Brandon's waitress. She says Brandon meet with a man named Alex. Amy says Brandon seemed like a nice and smart guy. Eric tells Callen that Alex was stationed with Brandon in Iraq. Eric and Dominique are caught by Hetty looking at girls using the surveillance camera from the elevator.

Hanna meets with Brandon's CO named Pallet. He tells him that Brandon and Alex were not very bright. He says Alex is now in the sickbay. He says Alex and Brandon were good friends, but they got in a fight last week. Callen tells Hanna that he can't find Alex anywhere on the base.

Kensi figures that Brandon was looking to buy and resell his copies of Guitar Hero on ebay. They find his listings and see he was selling the games for half the price he bought them for. Dom asks Eric if he can find a pattern of the shops Brandon bought the game from. Eric discovers that the banks the shops used are listed on the Counterfeit Currency Alert. They figure the games were bought using fake bills then sold for real cash. Callen and Hanna wonder where Brandon got the fake money. Eric calls Callen and tells him Alex's car just drove off Pier 60.

Callen and Hanna arrive at the scene just as Alex's car is pulled out of the bay. Callen asks Hanna if he wants to jump in the bay since he was a SEAL, but he says the police divers can handle it. The Secret Service learns about the counterfeit money. Agent Natalia Giordano meets with the team who gives them a counterfeit one hundred dollar bill. She says the bills were made by a plate. Natalie says hundreds are harder to counterfeit since they have to pass the pen test. She tests the bill and see it doesn't pass. Hanna figures that is why Brandon went to mom and pop shops. Natalie says she is stationed in Las Vegas and will have to stay in town until they find the source of the fake bills. She asks Callen if he knows any good restaurants and he suggests she order room service.

Later, Hanna tells Callen it was obvious that Natalie wanted to have dinner with him. Callen explains he doesn't date law enforcement. Eric shows the team surveillance cameras which shows the car was empty when it drove off the pier. Among the crowd, they see Alex walk away. Kensi reports they got a signal from Alex's phone. They see he was traveling north. Eric sees that Alex checked his voice mail using a pay phone. They see that he was heading towards the building where Brandon jumped. They go to the rooftop and find Brandon. He tries to jump off the building, but Hanna pulls him off the railing. He checks his pocket and finds a serial number stamp.

The team brings Alex to their interrogation room. They figure that Alex was so scared that he wanted to jump off the roof. Alex says that he didn't kill Brandon since he was his best friend. Alex says he tried to warn Brandon to stop partying or he will get caught. Callen says when he was a kid, his foster brother who tried to protect him was beaten to death by their foster death. He says he still feels bad about his death. Alex says Rick Pargo killed Brandon. Natalie tells the team that Rick has a record of counterfeiting. Nate says that Alex is terrified and wonders why he went back to the place where his friend died. He figures Nate went back to honor Brandon. Callen and Hanna meet with Alex. He admits he found money plates in Iraq. He says when he came back home, Rick found them, produced some money, but the paper wasn't good enough. Hanna figures that they were supposed to destroy the bills, but instead they laundered them online. Natalie arrives and tells the team that what Alex had is a serial number generator. She explains that Saddam had money forgers in Iraq.

Hetty prepares Kensi as she dresses up as Alex's girlfriend. She gives Kensi a watch with a microphone and transmitter. Nate informs Kensi that Rick acts like he is above the law. He suggests she try one bold move to impress him. Kensi goes to a printing press and asks for Rick Pargo. One of the workers says he never heard of him. They search Kensi while running a printing press. Rick asks if she has the number generator. She shows him a picture on her phone with the picture of the number generator. Kensi says she has a source for high quality paper. She asks him if he killed Brandon, but he says he is only a businessman. He informs her that Brandon became impatient after a source didn't come through. Kensi gives him an address and instructs him to meet her later. Rick tells her he will not hesitate in killing her if the deal goes bad.

Callen preps as he gets into character as a paper dealer named Gordon Taymis. After Hetty briefs Callen, she suggests he take Natalie out to dinner after the case. Rick meets Callen at the bar where Kensi is bartending. Callen tells Rick he doesn't feel right meeting in a bar. Callen tells Rick he is a compliance officer for his family's paper company. Rick asks him for a three foot stack, which Callen figures is $20 million dollars.

After their meeting, Callen says he doesn't think Rick is being totally honest with him. Eric tells Callen that Rick is searching through his fake website to make sure he is legit. Rick calls Callen and tells him he wants to make a deal.

Callen tells Natalie he needs paper to give to Rick. He explains he needs two thousand sheets by tomorrow. The next day, Callen and Kensi drive a van to Rick's warehouse. They search them then see he has the paper in the back. Rick orders Callen to go into the warehouse to print some money. Outside, Hanna tells Natalie that he is waiting for Rick's partner who they suspect is Brandon's killer to show up. They discover that Brandon's CO Pallet is Rick's partner. After Pallet inspects the money he instructs his men to kill Callen and Kensi after they leave. Callen and Kensi overpower the men. Hanna enters and starts a fire. They handcuff Rick. They figure that Pallet is going to swap his counterfeit money with money that is being shipped overseas. Dominique arrives at the Pallet's base as they load up the money. After the plane leaves, Pallet sees that the money that Dominique delivered is fake. The team arrives and arrests Pallet.

Callen and Hanna figure that Brandon messed up his plans to switch money and threw him off the roof. Hetty tells the team to return the money they took. Callen meets with Natalie and tells her he has a rule that he can't date cops. Natalie says then she will have to wait until she retires. She figures that Callen was in love with a cop who was killed.

Summary: Callen finds out why he was targeted over six months ago, while investigating the death of a Russian.

A couple on a boat celebrate over champagne. In a nearby apartment, a woman video tapes the man. Another man enters the hotel with a silenced weapon and shoots the person watching in the head. He calls the man on the boat and tells him the job is done. He deletes several files on the man's computer including photos of Callen.

Callen watches Hanna make tea using a metal filter. Hanna says he promised Hetty he would try drinking it. Callen smells the tea box and says it smells moldy. Hetty arrives and asks for the tea. She sees Callen using a paper tea bag and asks if he can taste the paper. Hetty says chrysanthemum tea is not perfect without wolfberries. Hanna takes a sip and says it tastes delicious. Hetty tells Callen the phone call he is going to receive will be from Vance. After Callen takes the call, Hanna admits what he drank was the worst tea he ever had. Hetty tries the tea and realizes it tastes moldy.

Vance tells Callen they found a USB flash drive on a victim that contained surveillance photos of several people, including him. Vance says someone has been watching him and he would like to know why. Vance informs him the LAPD is willing to have them cooperate during the investigation.

The team receives the USB drive. They review the photos and the picture of the victim. Callen realizes the girl was the Russian who lived near his last apartment. He says the girl was the last person he saw before he was shot. They team learns the oldest photo was taken eight days ago and the most recent was shot yesterday. They wonder who the girl was working with. Kensi informs the team that the body was found at the marina.

Nate asks Hetty to access a personnel file on Callen. Hetty goes to her secret computer and looks up Callen's file. Nate says they have a lead on Callen's shooter just before he looks through the records.

Kensi, Callen and Hanna arrive at the marina. After seeing Callen and Hanna bicker, Kensi compares them to a married couple. They enter the victim's room and examine the scene. They figure there was a camera that pointed out to the yachts. They wonder if the Russian was a professional and broke in, but Callen figures she had a key. Kensi meets with the landlord and asks him if she can move in short term. After the landlord offers to lease the apartment to Kensi with cash, she looks at her watch. She announces her time to Callen and Hanna who placed a bet on how fast she can get an offer. Hanna says he is not going to pay up. Kensi admits she works for NCIS and asks about the Russian girl he rented to. The team obtains a surveillance video from the apartment. They see a man leave the apartment carrying a camera tripod. They see him cover his face since he knew the camera was there. Dominic reports the Russian uploaded files to a remote server. After they load a file labeled Cossack, Callen sees pictures of two former comrades. Eric discovers that Callen's teammates were killed the same day he was shot.

Eric says all the people who were shot were victims of drivebys. Callen says he worked with his team on a Russian operation set up by the CIA. Callen says that his Russian contact was a former KGB agent named Arkady Kolchek. They discover Arkady is now residing in California. Nate tells the team most of Callen's file has been redacted. While Nate and Kensi go through Arkady's file on Hetty's computer, they wonder if Hetty was the clearinghouse for all of the government's intelligence. They see that Arkady became wealthy after he left the KGB. While Hanna and Callen go towards Arkady's mansion, Eric says his mansion is highly secure. The team is able to hack into Arkady's GPS car system and see he is on the move. They follow him to a farmer's market where he is accompanied by bodyguards. Hanna grabs a bagged bottle on the ground and pretends one of the bodyguards is the person his wife cheated with. As they get in an argument, Arkady is brought to his car where he finds Callen waiting for him. Arkady tells his bodyguard Callen is his friend. Arkady says he sent a Russian girl to warn him about the attacks. Arkady says he knew her when he was younger. Callen remembers the woman was named Alina.

Arkady brings Callen and Hanna to his mansion. Arkady says he remembers when Callen told him he was taught to speak Russian by Alina. Arkady says he heard rumors that someone was going to hurt them, so he hired Alina to contact him. Callen remembers he scared Alina away. Arkady says the people who shot Callen tried to kill him several times. Arkady suspects the killer is connected to the case they worked on which involved a Russian drug syndicate. He states that the syndicate is going to open up a gas pipeline to legitimize their business. He says the deal is being brokered by an American businessman named John Cole. Arkady says he hired Alina to spy on Cole before she died. Arkady gives Callen his files on Cole.

Back at base, they examine the files that Arkady gave them. They see Cole was with a man named Max Tyrus who they suspect was the person who killed Alina. Eric says Cole doesn't have much on his record. Callen suggests they find Max Tyrus. Eric finds he has a cellphone. They see Tyrus just booked a private charter plane to Moscow. Callen gets on the phone, pretends he is Max and learns the flight is a one way trip that will take off in four hours. Callen figures since Cole is an oil refinery owner, he fears EPA inspectors the most. Hetty prepares Callen to go undercover. Callen says he is going to get Cole to attack him. Nate suggests he doesn't give Cole time to think before he reacts.

Hanna enters Cole's refinery posing as a delivery man. Callen and Kensi enter the compound posing as EPA agents. They ask a woman where her boss is. They meet with Tyrus who says this is the third EPA inspection this year. Tyrus threatens to call his boss. Cole arrives and recognizes Callen. Callen tells Kensi that Cole is actually one of his partners who worked with him in Moscow.

Cole says he expected he would be dead by now. Cole admits he faked a death certificate and is going to try to kill Arkady later. Cole says he has to show himself in public and might be recognized by the people who worked with him. Tyrus pulls out a gun and shoots at Hanna after he sees him around a corner. Tyrus and Cole run from the scene. Callen chases after Cole and disarms him before he runs off. Kensi is able to shoot Tyrus dead. Callen is able to corner Cole, take him down and arrest him.

At headquarters, Hetty and Nate talk about Callen. Hetty says she knows Callen changed families every few weeks. Nate says Callen stayed with Alina's family for the longest time, which was three months. They learn that Alina kept the house after her parents died. Hetty sees that Callen is now brewing his tea using a metal filter. Callen admits he was now tasting the paper from the bags. Hetty gives him a picture delivered by Arkady of him and Alina when he was younger. Later, Callen goes to the house and finds a key hidden in a pot. He enters the home and remembers the time he spent at the house with Alina and her family. He sits down on a bed, opens a closet door and finds a carving of his name he made in 1987.

Summary:	The team investigates the murder of a Marine, while Hetty is away at Senate hearings. This investigation leads them to a militia group and stolen missiles.

A man cautiously walks around the beach. He enters an aquarium while looking over his shoulder. He tries to hide, but a man wraps a piano wire around his neck and kills him.

Hanna shows Callen an operation report which impresses him. Callen asks him if his mom helped him. Mike Renko appears and informs the team he is looking into a weapons case involving an antiimmigration militia group called Enhancing Law Enforcement. He says he staying with a 'friend' instead of staying with Callen. Eric announces that Hetty wants to see them all. They go to the briefing room and hear Hetty on the speaker phone. Eric explains Hetty is in Washington D.C. While Eric plays a tape showing the man getting choked, Hetty explains the man is a Marine Reservist named Edward MacKaye who worked at an armory in Camp Pendleton. Renko informs the team that MacKaye was his informant in his weapon case. He explains there are six Dragon anti-tank missiles that disappeared. He says the primary suspect is named Scott Riley. He says they approached MacKaye who worked with Riley. Renko says they know ELE was moving weapons across the border. Renko reports that Riley has contacted the ELE's leaders Malcolm Tallridge and John Bordinay. Eric plays a tape which shows Bordinay chase immigrants across the desert until they died of thirst.

Hetty meets with Vance at D.C. He explains they will be discussing funding for their teams.

Kensi, Callen and Hanna walk towards the aquarium. The team suspects a missile was put into a sail bag. At the office, they figure Riley moved a sailbag in and out of the base in order to smuggle out the missiles. While Kensi examines Riley's bag on his car, Riley appears and puts a piano chord around Kensi's neck. Kensi is able to fight back and gets help from Renko. Kensi says she didn't need any assistance.

The team brings Riley back to the safe house. Riley says he thought she was stealing his sail. Kensi asks him the Dragon missiles. Nate is worried about Kensi being alone with Riley, but Renko says Kensi is meaner than him. Nate figures Riley's methodical method of moving the Dragon missiles off the base is inconsistent with impulsive murder of Mackaye. Kensi tells the team that Riley is stonewalling her. She says the chord that Riley had is different than the one that killed Mackaye. They figure Riley is afraid of someone.

Kensi drives Riley to the base and hands him over to the MPs. Callen poses as another prisoner while Hanna poses as a guard. Callen demands Hanna to let him take a shower while they are driven to the prison. After Callen tells a joke, Nate explains to Eric that Callen is trying to form a bond.

Hetty calls Eric and asks how everything is going. Eric informs her that Callen is undercover. Dom sees that Riley looked up hundreds of addresses on his laptop. Hetty says she is upset about the operation. Hetty says she is worried Callen is going to get killed and orders them to shut it down, but Eric says it is too late. Dom finds that Riley looked up immigration processing centers. They wonder if they were targets. Callen makes fun of Hanna's role as a MP. A truck runs the van off the road. After the doors open, two men shoot Hanna. After a man frees Callen, Hanna regains consciousness and shoots the men. After Callen exits the vehicle, Riley begs to be freed. He explains he has a friend who is connected. After Callen agrees to free him, they drive off. Kensi and Renko arrive and inform them their act is over. Kensi reports the GPS on the truck is active.

Riley directs Callen to a gated area. A man with a rifle shoots Callen's mirror. Riley calls out to the sniper, Jay, to hold his fire. After Riley takes Callen's gun, he tells Jay not to point his gun at him. Jay jumps in the back seat as Riley takes over driving.

At the base, Eric explains to Nate that Hetty worked with a man who was killed while infiltrating a militia group. He informs him Hetty personally recruited Sullivan into NCIS. They see that the characteristics of Sullivan is similar to Callen's.

Back in D.C., Vance tells Hetty that Callen is not Sullivan. He assures her he will take care of the operation while she is meeting with the Senators.

Kensi finds Callen's earpiece on the road. Hanna figures Callen was afraid to be searched. Riley drives Callen into a compound full of heavily armed men. Renko, Kensi and Hanna watch from a distance and spot Tallridge, Bordinay and the Dragon missiles. Riley meets with the leaders and informs them that Callen helped him escape. Bordinay shoots Riley for getting the organization in trouble. Before he is able to shoot Callen, Hanna snipes him. Callen takes a hostage and goes around a corner. He asks for the keys for a truck so he can escape. Tallridge orders his army to shoot Jay in order to get to Callen. At the base, the team requests back up. Hanna arrives in his truck and announces he is from the ATF. He says the government knows about the weapons and wants to make a deal. Tallridge tells Hanna to get his friend so they can talk. Hanna announces they have thirty minutes to negotiate. Tallridge breaks Jay's nose. As Callen tries to help Jay, Tallridge knocks him down.

Hanna and Callen are brought to a holding room. Callen asks why they are not dead. Hanna figures the ELE wants to find out if they are surrounded.

In D.C., Vance pulls Hetty out of her meeting and informs her the militia have Callen and Hanna.

Back in the woods, Renko shows Kensi where Callen is. Kensi uses morse code through the laser scope to send a message. Callen is able to use a hidden bobby pin to work on his cuffs. Hanna sees that the choppers are twenty minutes out. Callen is able to uncuff himself and Hanna. Hanna sends back a message that says Maskelyne. The team gets call from Hetty. She explains Maskelyne was a strategist who convinced the Nazi's that a handful of men was an entire division. Eric is able to jam the ELE's radio signals. He says his plan is to make them stumble on their frequency and make them believe an attack is being organized. Hetty asks the Secretary of Defense for a favor. The militia picks up the fake messages as Kensi and Renko open fire. The militia panics and fire into the woods. Callen and Hanna are able to knock out the guard watching them. They meet with Jay and convince him to work for them. Jay tells Tallridge that there are twenty agents nearby. Two fighter jets fly by the woods. Tallridge panics, jumps in a truck and drives off. Callen and Hanna use the distraction to escape the building. They chase after Tallridge and get in front of his vehicle. The open fire and cause Tallridge to crash.

Later, the government forces surround the woods and capture the militia members. Callen tells Jay he spoke to the U.S. Attorney and secured his freedom. Jay says he wants to talk to his mom. Jay says he is happy he is not going to jail. Before Callen hand over his phone, he thanks

Jay for saving him.

Hetty tells Vance she figured he knew she would go to the Secretary and spend her political capital to help her team. Hetty says she never lost an agent before Sullivan. Vance tells her she saved two today. Callen tells Hanna that it was stupid to try to rescue him. Callen tells Hanna he did a nice job.

Summary: When a serial killer strikes in Los Angeles, it grabs the attention of Abby Sciuto. She travels from Washington DC to give the team a hand, since she has been following this killer for some time.

Over the phone, a man updates his mom about his divorce case. He hears a noise in the other room. After he shuts the window, he looks at the photo of his wife and daughter. A man sneaks up behind the man and slices his throat.

At the office, the team notices that the office has been set up with desks. Kensi wonders if they have been assigned seats. They figure that Hetty set up the office.

Hetty arrives and says since they are in an office, they have everything they need in the desks. She briefs the team about the death of Frank McEllon, an engineer who worked on submarine technology. Hetty suspects that the murder involves espionage.

The team looks around McEllon's home and sees it looks nicer than what he can afford. Kensi figures the killer left no trace of what happened. Hanna finds a nanny camera hidden in a teddy bear. Callen says she found a video of a man at the house four days ago. Hanna reports that McEllon made his money through technology patents and later joined the military.

At the office, Hanna says he likes the new setup. As they walk to the briefing room, Hanna says that there is no forensic evidence. Vance informs the team that he is going to send their best forensic investigator to their office. He explains he had to send this person since he was ganged up on. They hear Abby who is impressed at their equipment.

Abby tells the team that she calls the killer the Phantom. Hetty tells Abby that she is the first agent she met who has a sense of style. Abby reports that the Phantom committed 14 murders in two years. Abby shows them her private blog which has a list of murders. She explains cases without forensic evidence is rare. Kensi doubts that the method of killing is the same person, but Abby says the Phantom tries to use random methods on purpose.

Callen asks Hetty why he had Vance send Abby to them. He says he is a little fuzzy in the command chain. Hetty explains since they this is forensic heavy case, she procured the best scientist for them. He tells her to work as if it was business as usual.

The team watches the murder from the hidden camera and see the killer was wearing a full body suit. Abby asks to look at the scene. She says she is looking for evidence that removes dirt. Abby explains to the team that some suits have a electrostatic charge that picks up dust. She says she can use the bootie print to find who manufactured it.

Callen and Hanna meet with Jenkins a lawyer who worked with McEllon. They learn that Magda, McEllon's wife, moved near the beach. They see her meet with the man who was in the video. After they are made, the man runs and tosses a woman riding a roller blade into them. The man hijacks a motorcycle, speeds towards them, but is knocked off his ride.

Although the man says his name is Cyrus Hill, Callen says he knows he is Ted Brock, who has a record of scamming rich women. Kensi informs Magda that her husband is dead while Dominic records her. She says she was at home with her baby. Kensi informs her that her new boyfriend Cyrus is actually named Ted. She admits she told Ted about McEllon's patent money. Back at the safe house, Callen accuses Ted of killing McEllon. He admits that he wanted to steal bearer's bonds from McEllon, but stopped when he saw security cams. He says he was with a friend in Brentwood.

The team wonders if McEllon death was committed by the Phantom. Abby tells Eric that the bootie was from a haz-mat suit, but she can't contact the company until the next day. Eric asks Abby if she would like to go out to a Steampunk club since he read she likes it in her blog. At the bar, Abby tells Eric she would love to feel an earthquake. Abby goes to the back to check out several hotrods parked in the alley. The team wonders why the Phantom killed someone in L.A. since he usually attacks in smaller towns. They figure the Phantom wanted to bait Abby after the killer read her blog. Meanwhile back at the club, Abby is injected with a sedative and loaded into a van.

Hetty informs Vance about Abby's kidnapping. Vance tells her that Gibbs and the team are on their way. Nate tells him that it is good that Abby was kidnapped instead of outright killed, but she still poses a threat to the killer. Hanna and Callen arrive at the bar, shut off the music and ask the crowd about Abby. Hanna notices one of the bartenders ask nervous. She admits someone contacted her to leave a message if she saw Abby, but she can't identify him.

Kensi says she found a man on Abby's website who is posing as a criminologist. Eric and Nate find that haz-mat suits were delivered to McEllon's law firm. They wonder if the killer is a lawyer.

Abby wakes up and sees she is in a dark bedroom. Abby figures that the man is a blog poster. He tells her they should be a team. Abby calls the man a creep and that her friends will save her. The man says he has the place set up to burn if someone comes in. The man says he learns from her and will not use haz-mat suits any longer. After Abby asks the man to scratch her nose, she bites him in the finger.

Callen and Kensi pose as a divorcing couple as they fight in McEllon's law firm. Hanna poses as security and gets into the human resources office to take a roster of the employees. Eric captures the video as Hanna scans the roster. Eric reports that a partner of the firm, Mike Smith, logs on Abby's website. Eric is able to access Mike's web feed which shows Abby alive in a chair. He figures that Abby is a building next to the law firm. Callen and Hanna break in the building and find the body of Mike Smith. They figure they are in the wrong place.

Kensi plays a video from Mike's office which shows the receptionist named Tom Smith use his computer. Eric reports that Mike is his uncle. The team watches as Tom toasts Abby. Tom admits he killed four people and several animals before she took interest in him. Abby tells Tom he is awful since everything he killed had a life. As he taps the bed, Tom asks Abby if she would like to pretend to buy herself another night of life, but she spits at him. Tom pulls out an axe. Eric sees that Abby is signing that she hears construction noise. After looking up construction sites, Eric directs Callen and Hanna to the location. After Eric sees that Abby is signing the word, 'doors'. Hanna sees that the door is booby trapped. Abby tells Tom that she left evidence on his finger.

Hanna and Callen see Abby from the ceiling window. As Tom raises his axe to kill Abby, Callen crashes through the window with a fire hose around him and shoots Tom. At the office, the team reports that the police are finding evidence of Tom near several crime scenes. Abby informs Gibbs that she is fine since the Los Angeles team saved her. Callen tells Hetty that the team is getting their work done faster since the new set up was put in place.

Summary: The team must put their holiday decorations on hold to investigate a Marine's death by his cell phone blowing up. They begin to realize that they need to locate his former unit to protect them from further explosions.

While going to the ATM, a man gets a call that triggers his phone to explode and kill him.

At headquarters, Callen and Hanna wheel in a palm tree and explain to Hetty that it is a Christmas tree. They notice that Nate is wearing a designer suit and wonder if he is going to a job interview.

Eric shows the team a video of the victim, Asher Ross. He explains Ross was an explosive expert for the military. Dominic tells the team Ross was sent home after he was injured by a bomb in Fallujah.

The team goes to the street to investigate. Eric calls and reports the man who called Ross's phone used a prepaid phone while he was close to the scene. Eric works on reactivating the phone in an attempt to recover it for evidence.

Kensi and Callen meet with Ross's dad at his house. Callen explains there might be evidence that will lead them to his son's killer. Mr. Ross says he wasn't close to his son since he worked a lot. Mr. Ross says a man named King who worked with his son in Iraq owed Ross money.

Eric is able to reactivate the phone and is asked to call it. Hanna sees that the phone is located in a dumpster covered with maggots. Eric reports to Callen that Ross was stationed with a man named Hastings King who was also hurt during an explosion in Iraq. Hanna meets with King at an auto garage. Hanna notices that King is working on disarming a bomb under a car.

Hanna and King examine the bomb to see how they can disarm it. They coordinate and disarm the bomb together. King says he was lucky when he discovered the bomb. Hanna notices that King is missing a leg. King admits Ross gave him money for him to start his business, but he wouldn't kill him.

Back at headquarters, the team discovers the bomb has HMX, which is a military grade explosive. Nate tells Callen that King might be suffering from PTSD which might cause him to become violent. Nate gets nervous after he sees Hanna working on the bomb at his desk. Hanna pretends the bomb is still active as Callen scares him and causes coffee to spill on himself. Eric says he found another member of the Ross's team named Olin who he suspects might be the bomber.

Nate tells Hetty he is going to interview the team for psych evaluations in a few weeks. Hetty sees his tie has been stained. Hetty tells Nate he looks nice with his suit. Nate explains he wants to be more professional since the team takes on dangerous roles. Hetty says if he is patient, people who need to talk will seek him out.

Olin explains someone has been following him. He wonders who wants his team dead. At headquarters, the team watches video of Olin being exploded. They see that his car had words of warning from the Qu'ran on the back window written in Arabic.

Olin tells Callen and Nate he blames himself for Ross's death. Callen shares a story when he was stationed in Fallujah. He explains the best way to get rid of his problems is to talk about it. Olin says he found God after he was discharged. After Callen says they found writings on the back of his car, he says a man named Tariq was a Muslim in his squad. He says Tariq was burned up by an IED.

Kensi and Callen meet with Tariq's wife, Kimberly Johnson. She says Tariq would not allow her to see him after he got back from his injury. Kimberly explains Tariq was very tolerant of her and her daughter's Christian beliefs and even help with the Christmas tree.

The team goes to a mailbox company and ask an employee if they can have information about a box seen used by Tariq. They discover the box was rented out by Ashner Ross. They go to Ross's house and discover a automotive uniform with Tariq's name on it.

Callen suggests Kensi visit King while posing undercover. Kensi arrives at the garage with her motorcycle and asks if Tariq is there. King says Tariq never worked there. While King examines the bike, Kensi finds a gun stashed among the tools. Kensi says her father was killed in Fallujah. Kensi insists to know where Tariq is. He comes out and says he doesn't recognize Kensi. Hanna and Callen enter the garage and arrest Tariq and Jackson.

At base, Olin tells Nate a story about giving two old ladies in Iraq some candy. He says Tariq told another woman with a baby who were approaching them to get away. He says Tariq and Ross opened fire and killed all the women including the baby. Olin asks Nate if he reads the Bible and he says he skims it. Olin explains the Bible helped him out during some tough times and would like to give him one as a gift.

Kensi looks over a photo of her dad. Hetty walks in and says her dad would be proud. Hetty commends her for catching their mad bomber. Kensi says she deals with the danger better than the deception. She explains she told a combination of lies and the truth. Hetty advises she embrace her job. Dominic reports there were two different types of explosives used in the case.

Nate asks Tariq why he wanted to kill Ross. Tariq explains Ross pulled him out of a burning car and saved his life. He says Ross was a hero. Nate asks about the mother and baby he killed. Tariq explains the woman was carrying a bomb and was shot by Olin. Tariq says Olin could easily quote the Qu'ran and the Bible. Kensi reports that the bomb in Olin's car was designed to blow out and not kill the driver. Callen figures that Olin is the bomber.

Callen and Hanna raid Olin's house. They see that Olin has a list of Marines. Hanna sees that Olin made a makeshift bomb using unstable ingredients. Eric reports that Olin has booked a flight. At base, after reading the bible, Nate realizes Olin wants to kill his team mates and himself as a form of penance for what he did in Iraq.

Kensi arrives at King's garage and warns him that Olin will try to hurt him. They see Olin arrive with a bomb strapped to his chest. As Hanna and Callen arrive, Hanna explains the explosives are unstable and could be triggered by a gunshot. Hanna orders Kensi to shoot Olin's elbow of his arm holding the trigger. After she shoots, Callen grabs Olin and chokes him out.

At the base, Hetty tells the team they should have tea since they did a good job. She explains the tea is actually a scotch. Hetty remotely activates the lights in the office. Meanwhile, Nate drives Tariq to Elizabeth where he receives a hug after he rings the doorbell.

Summary:	When a Petty Officer is murdered, a connection to Sam's life is discovered. Hetty takes a closer look at the team and how they are handling the pressures of the job.

A group of sailors watch as a stripper dances to the song 'Man up' by Blue Van. A Navy officer notices a man grab a Ukrainian stripper's arm. The club owner asks the man to take his problem outside. The sailor tries to talk to the stripper outside of a club, but is hit by a car that crashes through a wall which kills both of them.

The next day, Hetty informs Callen that she found an accounting anomaly.

Callen says he spent the cash at a restaurant while undercover, but Hetty insists he spent too much.

Eric tells the team about Petty Officer Renny and an unidentified driver who were killed at the strip club. Eric says Renny was part of the Navy's Crypto Language Technician team.

Kensi and Hanna examine the scene and figure the driver intentionally drove the car through the wall. Callen visits the stripper, Katya, in the hospital. Katya tries to lie that she is applying for a student visa, but Callen doesn't believe her. Katya tells him about the man who grabbed her at the strip club.

Eric calls Callen and tells him that they found prints on the car that belongs to a drug smuggler named Chi Chi Vargas. Callen shows the picture of Chi Chi and asks if he was the man who grabbed her, but she doesn't recognize him. Callen, Kensi and Hanna break into Chi Chi's apartment and find his body stuffed in the refrigerator.

In the medical examiner's room, Rose tells Callen and Hanna that Chi Chi has been dead for two weeks and died from suffocation followed by blunt force trauma. She informs them that the driver from the strip club had no alcohol in his system. She shows them wounds on his back she figures was machete wounds from Rwanda.

Eric learns that the driver was named Deng Oyat who was originally from Sudan. Callen explains Deng was one of the Lost Boys who was brought over to the States after a Civil War. The team learns that Katya signed herself out of the hospital.

Hetty tells Nate that he has accumulated a large amount of vacation time. She questions his intentions which makes him nervous. She orders him to take some time off.

After Hanna visits a Lost Boy named Moe at a basketball court, he starts to run, but he catches up to him.

Kensi and Callen visit Katya at her house and notice she is quick to leave. While a SUV drives by, one of the passengers unleashes a clip of bullets from a submachine gun at them, then speeds away. Callen manages to fire off two rounds, but misses.

After Katya is taken to the safe house, Nate asks her how she is doing. Katya says she has never seen the people who attacked them. Callen warns Katya that if she doesn't help them she might end up dead.

Hanna and Moe reminisce about their time out on the sea. Moe recognizes Deng from a picture on Hanna's phone and asks if he is in trouble. After Hanna says Deng is dead, Moe says Deng doesn't even have a driver's license. He says that Deng often talked to a man named Safar.

Eric tells the team that Safar is a radical who is connected to Al-Qaeda. The team wonders if Safar is planning a big attack.

Hanna tells Callen that he saved Moe after his father was killed in Sudan. Nate tells Callen that Katya wants to go back home to pick up some things. Callen goes to her house and packs up. He looks through a photo album showing Katya as a child. He notices that there are two smoke detectors close to each other. After investigating, he sees that the smoke detector is a camera connected to a computer. Callen brings the computer and camera to Katya. She gets upset, punches him, tries to run, but Callen restrains her and demands the truth.

Katya tells Callen that the equipment was set up by her boss Dallas who wanted video to blackmail her clients. Callen shows him a picture of Safar and she recognizes him as a buyer. The team figures that Dallas set up men who had access to classified information, blackmailed them and sold the data to Safar. They decide to use Katya to infiltrate Dallas's organization.

Callen goes to the the strip club just before Katya arrives. Callen reports that Dallas looks like he wasn't expecting to see her. Katya flirts with Callen and tells Dallas she wants to take him to the VIP room. Katya undresses while Dallas records them. Callen asks Hanna to jam the recording to give him enough time to access the kitchen. Callen sneaks in Dallas's office and uses a flash drive to copy his computer files. After Dallas figures that Katya is faking having sex with Callen, a group of thugs attack him in the kitchen. Hanna and Kensi burst in, beat up the men and detain Dallas.

At the safehouse, Dallas asks to speak to his lawyer. The team reviews Dallas's files and finds videos showing several Senators, CEOs and military officers with strippers. Hetty comes in and orders the team to hand over all of their evidence and let Dallas go.

The team tries to convince Hetty to let them continue investigating, but she informs them that her orders are coming from someone who can have all of their jobs including Vance's. Eric shows the team a video of Safar with a stripper. Hanna figures that Dallas is a extortionist. They wonder if Safar was being blackmailed by Dallas. After Hetty comes in, Hanna explains that the tape could destroy his reputation in the radical world.

Hanna visits a group of kids at the basketball court and gives them a flashdrive to give to Safar. Later, Safar meets with Callen thinking he wants to extort money in exchange for the video. Safar pulls out a gun, threatens to shoot Callen, but Kensi and Hanna take him down. Safar tells Hanna he knows he is the person who killed Moe's father. Hanna visits Moe and is told that he thinks he killed his father. Hanna admits he killed him since he was working with the janjaweed.

At the office, Kensi tells Callen that Hetty has been cracking down on the time she needs to turn in her reports. Callen says he will talk to her. Eric informs Hanna that Moe flew to Paris then to Chad. Hanna figures that Moe wants to get back into Sudan. Hanna admits that he killed Moe's dad and Moe now knows. Hanna says he wants to go for a run. Callen reminds him the last time he did that he had to pick him up at Joshua Tree. Hetty tells Callen she is writing an eulogy for an old friend using his typewriter. Hetty tells Callen that he would have liked her friend. Hetty says the man worked for the British Intelligence service and died alone in his office doing paper work. She suggests they take the time to smell the roses. Callen asks to take her out to a Rembrandt exhibit on Saturday. Callen asks Hanna if he can join him for his run.

Summary:	Callen takes on a mission by himself when a parolee is murdered. The team keeps track of him from a distance as Callen resurrects one of his old identities.

A cabbie picks up a man with a black cap who hails him on the side of the street. The passenger pulls out a gun and tells him he doesn't want his money. The cabbie speeds up, breaks and has the man drop his gun. After the cabbie runs, the passenger recovers his gun, shoot the man in the leg, then finishes him off execution style before cleaning and dropping the weapon.

At the office, the team wonders what they should do for their team outing. Dominic suggests Disneyland, but Kensi says she hates the idea. Nate suggests bowling, but no one else likes the idea. Hetty tells Callen that one of his old aliases Jason Tedrow has received an email from someone who died a few hours ago.

Eric reports that the cabbie who died, Joey Gale, is a former Navy officer. They see that Joey was the inside man for a five million dollar electronic heist that was never recovered. They see that Montrell Perez was the crew leader. They look at the file of the crew that includes a man named Jon Donnelly. Callen explains he worked deep cover to infiltrate the group and bust them. Eric says Perez was the most unlucky of the crew since he got ten years in prison. The team watch video and see Joey gunned down. Hanna wonders if Perez ordered a hit from prison.

Callen retrieves his ID and belongings of his Jason persona. He looks over a photo of himself hugging a woman. Hetty tells Callen she knows he enjoyed being Jason Tedrow the best. Hanna tells Hetty he thinks Callen wants to investigate by himself.

Callen goes to a woman's house and rings her doorbell. The woman, Kristin, recognizes Callen as Jason. Kristin introduces Callen to Michael her son. Callen explains he was in prison, but Kristin says he didn't even say goodbye. Callen says he is looking for her brother Jon. After a man named Tommy arrives, Callen is introduced as an old friend of Jon. Kristin tells Callen that he can find Jon looking for odd jobs at the construction yard. She tells him never to come back.

Callen finds Hanna waiting for him on the street. After Hanna tells him he knows he got involved with Jon's sister Kristin, he says she fell in love with him. After Hanna asks who Michael's father is, he says he doesn't know.

While Kensi signs in to meet with Perez in prison, a JAG officer introduces himself as Neil Corby, Perez's attorney. Kensi says she needs something from Perez. Corby says he is petitioning for lesser time for his client. After Perez meets with Corby and Kensi, he is told he needs to answer a few questions. After Kensi informs Perez about Joey's death, he says he didn't do it. Perez says Joey and Jon turned on him and sent him to prison.

Eric tells Kensi she received a bouquet of flowers from Corby. Kensi says she hates flowers, but admires them after Eric leaves.

Hanna drives Callen to the construction yard. Callen says hello to Jon, but he runs away. After Callen catches up with him, Jon tells Callen he heard about Joey and doesn't want to get killed next. They both figure that neither one of them killed Joey. Jon tells Callen that he broke Kristin's heart. A masked man pulls up and kills Jon by shooting him several times in the chest.

After they review the surveillance tapes, they see that the killer never shot at Jason. Kensi reports that Perez was angry at Jon and Joey since they both testified against him in court. Dom tells Callen that Kristin's current boyfriend Tommy has a criminal record. He adds that Tommy had a DUI when he was a minor, but the records were sealed. Hanna tells him to find out more.

Callen says he thinks Tommy might be the killer, but Hanna thinks his emotions are clouding his judgment. Nate tells Hanna he wants to play ping pong for their outing. They play as they talk about the case. Hanna says Callen likes to work solo. Nate tells Hanna that Callen trusts him more than anyone. After Nate serves a ball, Hanna slams it in his face.

Kensi visits Corby in his office. She tells him she hates flowers, but she likes the gesture. She informs him about the other shooting and the team's suspicions that Perez hired the hit man. Kensi says she would like to talk to Perez again to see what he knows. Before she leaves, Kensi thanks him for sending her the flowers.

Callen meets with Tommy and tells him he knows Kristin doesn't know he has a criminal record. Tommy says Kristin would leave him if she found out. After Callen asks him how he met Kristin, he says he met her at a bar. Callen asks Tommy to convince him he is not responsible for Jon's death. Tommy says he isn't the one who walked out on Kristin. Hanna tells Callen that at least didn't shoot him. Callen says seems like Tommy has some demons, but he seems like he cares for Kristin and her boy. Callen says it seems like walking out on Kristin four years ago seemed like the best thing to do, but he has some regret.

Eric reports that Perez got a visit by Andres Rodrigo, a gang member who was charged with several homicides. Hetty convinces Kensi to dress up so she can distract Perez long enough to plant a bug on him. At the prison, Kensi tells Perez that Jon was killed during a drive by. Kensi asks about the money he stole. Perez says he stole five million and put most of it in a bank. He says he received a call from someone who ordered him to keep quiet in exchange for some cash. He says his partner got the same call before they died. Kensi plants a bug on Perez's shoulder before leaving.

As Perez is taken away, he coughs and collapses. Kensi returns to Perez, tries to get him to tell her who called him, but he dies before he can talk. Dom reports Perez was killed by sodium cyanide which could have taken hours to kill him. Eric reports that Tommy's lawyer, who was Corby, got him out by pointing out a mistake in the case.

Eric reports that Corby was a public defender before he joined JAG. Kensi wonders if Perez lied to her or if Corby knows more than he is admitting.

Callen and Hanna visits Tommy at the restaurant who tries to run, but they grab him. Tommy admits that he owed Corby since he bailed him out after he got a DUI. He says Corby wanted him to get close to Kristin so he can find out more about the missing money. Tommy says both Kristin and Jon didn't know anything. Tommy says he stayed with Kristin after she told him she was pregnant. Callen assures him that Kristin will be protected since he also cares about her. Callen and Hanna figure that after Corby got a hold of the money by using inside information as the lawyer, Joey found out about Corby's plan and was killed.

Kensi meets with Corby at a train station. She apologizes for Perez and says her case ran into a dead end. Corby says an MP named Jason Tedrow is also involved. Corby says he tried to visit Tedrow, but he was always told he was not available. Corby says he thinks Jason is actually a undercover agent named Callen. Corby pulls out a gun, says he knows she is wired and asks Callen to come out. Tommy arrives and tells Corby he is there to make sure he doesn't hurt Kristin. He pulls out a gun which causes the crowd to panic. Corby takes Kensi hostage and shoots Tommy in the abdomen. Kensi breaks free and gives the team an open shot. As he dies, Corby asks who Callen is. Tommy tells Callen he wanted to protect Kristin.

Dominic commends Callen for his good work. Hetty says Jason Tedrow has been officially ridden out to the sunset. Hetty suggests he tell Kristin the truth after he figures out who he is. Callen visits Kristin and Michael at their home. Kristin says Tommy will recover and come back home the next day. Kristin tells Callen that Michael is not his son. She regrets not telling him the truth, but she explains she was angry and wanted him to suffer. As Callen tries to tell her his real name, she stops him and says goodbye.

After Callen returns to the office, Hetty and the team tells him that they are going out karaoke for their team outing.

Summary: The team searches for Dominic after he is kidnapped outside his apartment. Hanna regrets he didn't toughen up their newest teammate.

A man is kidnapped by masked men and loaded in a van.

The next morning, Callen and Hanna argue who performed better at the karaoke bar. Callen defends his solo performance of a Willie Nelson duet. The team sees that Nate is hungover. They notice that Dominic is late for the seminar. They applaud Hetty for her performance of Bon Jovi's Dead or Alive last night. Kensi says she just tried to call Dom, but got his voice mail. After Hetty starts the seminar, they get a message that Dom is in trouble.

They see that Dom has sounded an alarm using his cell phone. Using GPS, Eric locates Dom's car. The team arrives at the alley next to Dom's apartment and finds his car with bullet holes through the windshield. Inside the car, they find blood sprays. Callen calls Eric and asks him to check surveillance video. Hanna figures the attack was not a robbery. They discover the bullet shots came from inside the car. Eric says there are no traffic cams. Kensi sees that the onboard camera hard drive has a bullet hole in it.

Kensi brings the harddrive to Ty the tech. Ty says a bullet through the hard drive platter is like getting hit in the heart. After Ty learns the harddrive is from Dom's computer, he says he was a good geek.

Hetty asks the agents why Dom was captured. She tells them to check with the other agency to see if there were any recent abductions. Kensi and Nate go to Dom's apartment. They realize they never really got to know Dom. They wonder who is going to call his parents to tell them that Dom is missing. Since the bed is still made, they figure that Dom didn't get home last night. Kensi discovers that Dom has hooked up his computer to the security cameras in the parking lot.

At the office, Hanna and Callen go through Dom's internet history and find nothing unusual. Hanna says no one gets snatched for nothing. Eric shows the team video from Dom's DVR. Hanna realizes that a new camera was installed recently above Dom's parking spot. They watch a man discretely put up a wireless camera two days ago.

Callen realizes that Hetty is upset. Hanna tells Callen that he is surprised how quickly the kidnappers moved after setting up their surveillance. Callen wonders if Dom was kidnapped to get to them. Hanna says he is angry they didn't watch out for their newest agent. Eric reports that Dom's phone was reactivated. They see video of a room and a hand cover Dom's cell phone. They track the GPS signal to a house up north.

The team arrives at the address which is a new and empty home. After they rush upstairs, they find a dead Latino man next to a pile of medical supplies.

After examining the man's IV, Kensi was proficient in medicine. Callen sends Eric the photo of the man and the serial number of the IV bag. Kensi wonders if the blood from the car didn't belong to Dom.

Back at the office, Ty is able to recover the audio from the hard drive. They hear a group of men yell in Spanish just before gun shots ring out. Kensi becomes emotional and excuses herself. Hetty finds her outside crying. Kensi regrets not giving Dom a ride to hang out. Hetty says guilt is a strong motivator, but it clouds their judgments. Kensi realizes that Hetty is still beating herself up over losing an agent named Sullivan. Hetty tells Kensi it is time for them to find Dom.

Eric finds a match of the dead man to a Colombian criminal named Federico Gomez. Kensi translates the record and finds a connection to two brothers named Jose and Rafael Taro. They see that they have a sister who is a nurse named Claudia. They head to the hospital and find her in the parking lot.

The team brings Claudia to the hideout and ask him where Dom is, but she says she wants a lawyer. She says her brothers wanted to take a package to a buyer. Hanna and Callen tell her the package is actually a NCIS agent. After Callen asks her what happened, he says Dom helps people just like her. Claudia says Dom was shot, but it was minor. She says they took Dom after they left the house. She says her brothers contacted her on her cell. Kensi empties her bag and gives Eric the phone number. Eric finds the last tower that the cell phone transmitted to. The team figures the area is too much ground to cover.

Hanna tells Callen that he regrets not toughening up Dom to watch his back. Hanna says they will probably need to shoot their way in if they locate the Taros. Callen suggests they call the brothers. Hanna figures they can swap Claudia for Dom. Callen tells Claudia about their plan and Hanna convinces her to call. Callen makes the call and tells Rafael that they have Claudia. He says he wants to make a trade. Rafael asks to speak to Claudia. She tells her brothers she is safe. Callen takes the phone back and asks him to meet him, but Rafael tells him to meet him at an abandoned hospital. Callen and Hanna thank Claudia for her help.

Eric loads up the blueprints of the hospital and briefs the team. He says the hospital has a lot of hiding spaces and low light. Hetty suggests they access real time satellite data with infrared capabilities. After they arrive at the hospital, Eric finds one heat signature in the boiler room. Callen brings Claudia, who is under a hood, inside the hospital and asks Rafael where his friend is. Eric finds another heat signature nearby. Hanna runs inside the building to meet up with the other man. With Eric's guidance, they realize that the man is right above Callen. Callen uncovers the hood and reveals Kensi. Hanna arrives and opens fire. After a gun fight, both brothers are taken out. Rafael tells Callen he wants to make a deal for his sister. He asks not to put anything on Claudia's record. Rafael tells Callen that Dom was left in a van in San Bernadino. He explains he never saw the people who he dropped Dom off with. Rafael slumps over and dies.

The team arrives at the location and finds a blue van. They open it up and see that no one is inside. Back at the office, the team fills out their reports. Hetty tells Callen they have to deal with things their own way. Hetty says goodnight, then leaves. Meanwhile, Hanna takes out his frustration on a punching bag. Eric goes online and plays video games. Nate tries to find any connections with the brothers. Kensi goes to Dom's house and washes his dirty dishes. Callen lists Dominic's status as missing.

Summary: The team are lead to a place used to create a deadly toxin which has vanished from the scene.

A reporter named Gage accompanies a group of ATF agents during a raid on a suspected drug lab. They breach the door to look for suspects and discover a room full of dead men wearing military uniforms.

Hanna arrives at work and learns that the rest of the team is waiting for him before they start the briefing. Hetty asks Hanna that they need his recommendation for someone to join the team since Dominic was kidnapped. Eric shows the team video footage that the reporter shot the night before. He says the uniforms that the dead men wore were real, but the people who were wearing them were criminals. Eric tells them that Vance wants them to figure out how the criminals got a hold of the uniforms.

Callen and Hanna go to the lab to investigate. Since there are no traces of drugs, they wonder what they were creating. Hanna notices several dead animals around the building. Kensi calls Callen and tells him they check out a suspicious address that belongs to a person named Balmore. Callen wonders if the lab was producing a bioweapon.

Callen and Hanna go to the home and hear glass break in the backyard. They meet with an elderly woman named Balmore who dropped a glass pitcher. Balmore recognizes the victims as the people who drove her to the research facility. She says in the lab, she was able to isolate a strain of botulism.

Balmore is brought to the safe house and questioned by Nate. Callen reports that the victims died from botulism. Hanna is worried they were exposed when they were at the lab. Balmore tells Nate she was tasked to work in the lab in order to find an antidote, but Hanna thinks she was tricked into making a bioweapon. Nate tells the team he thinks Balmore is suffering for Alzheimer's.

Kensi describes botulism as the deadliest bacteria known to man. The team figures that the lab created enough poison to kill millions of people. Eric says they have a lead since Ian Albers, one of the dead men, was a bouncer for a club owned by Dallas.

Hanna and Callen are worried that Dallas is going to shut down their operation by calling in favors from the politicians he blackmailed. Hetty examines Callen to test if he has botulin poisoning. Kensi reports that Dallas has been going to appointments at a spa called Ahimsa Retreat.

Callen and Hanna go to the spa and enter Dallas's room as he is getting a massage. Hanna demands if he knows about the sale of botulin. Dallas says he heard that a man called The Dutchmen is looking to sell biotoxins.

At the office, Eric briefs the team about The Dutchmen, an arms dealer who has several aliases including Jacobus Troyger. Hetty asks Callen to speak to her. Hetty tells him about Hanna's reluctance to recommend a new team member. Hetty asks him to nudge Hanna to have him move forward after Dominic's disappearance.

Kensi and Eric report that they got a hit on a suspect that just arrived in the country named Simon Amputuan, who is known to have connections to a Filipino terrorist cell. After Simon is brought into the safe house, he denies that he is involved with terrorists. Nate tells Simon that Jacobus has been arrested and will probably point him out. Callen and Hanna enter the room and threaten to take him to an Israeli interrogation center. Simon admits he heard about rumors about a weapons auction.

Hanna figures he can go into the auction posing as Simon's replacement. Hanna says he has been vaccinated for botulism. Nate is concerned, but the team convinces him that it is the only way to find the dealer. Hanna admits he hasn't gotten any booster shots lately.

Hanna gets dressed with a remote camera hidden in his lapel. Kensi tells him that the camera can be turned on and off to avoid detection when he scanned. Since his gun will be confiscated, Hetty gives him a briefcase she explains is bulletproof. She shows him a ceramic blade hidden in the handle. Hetty gives him a pen that has a concealed experimental botulism antidote.

Hanna waits to be picked up while Callen and Kensi watch. Kensi wonders if Simon lied about the auction. After a man asks Hanna for directions, Hanna tells him that Simon was grabbed at the airport. Hanna says he has three million in his briefcase for the auction. The man makes a phone call, then leads Hanna to a car after a hood is placed over his head.

Hanna is driven to the auction site which is a remote warehouse. After he is uncovered, Hanna is introduced to Jacobus. Hanna is scanned, but the camera is momentarily turned off. After Eric reestablishes connection, they notice that it is being scrambled making it difficult to see. Outside, Callen instructs the tactical team to get into position.

Inside, Jacobus shows the room full of buyers the botulism vial that Balmore produced. He has his men distribute the vaccine just in case they are exposed. Jacobus states he would like to demonstrate the effectiveness of his weapon. He loads up a video of a mall that will be used as a test. Jacobus says his associate will infect the shoppers within the hour. Callen instructs Eric to send hazmat teams to two suspected malls. Callen asks Hanna to stall. Hanna tells Jacobus they still need to get out of the country and asks to conduct the test later. Jacobus's men become suspicious since Hanna seems nervous. As he is searched, Hanna reminds two buyers that they are sworn enemies. After the two buyers attack each other, Hanna uses his briefcase and knife to defend himself. Hanna apprehends Jacobus outside of the warehouse.

Hetty loads up surveillance cameras to see if Balmore can identify anyone. She recognizes a man with a backpack at the mall. Hetty informs Callen where the man is. Nate figures that the man is moments away from deploying the toxin. Kensi smashes a tray of food on the man and tries to take his backpack, but he runs up the escalator. Kensi shoots him, but he manages to toss a vial into the food court. Callen jumps and catches the vial, but it cracks and cuts his hand. Hanna arrives, tackles Callen, dunks the vial in a fountain, and injects Callen with the antidote. He tells him to stay there until hazmat cleans them up.

After the case, Callen tells Kensi that the FBI is going to steal the credit for the bust. Kensi figures Callen likes his job since he doesn't have to deal with the press. Hetty informs Callen that they will have to pay for the koi that died in the mall fountain.

Nate recommends to Hetty that Balmore shouldn't be charged for manufacturing weapons. Nate figures that she needs to be placed into a nursing home. Callen visits Hetty and tells her he would like to visit Balmore when she is in the nursing home. Hetty tells Callen she is afraid she might reveal her secrets when she gets older. She asks Callen to smother her to death when the time comes. Meanwhile, Hanna helps Balmore with her gardening.

Summary: Agent Kensi Blye is shot at a local bank and the shooters are now holding every person as a hostage.

Kensi arrives at a bank and tells an employee named Curtis she would like to rent a safe deposit box. Three masked men arrive to rob the bank. Kensi fights back, disarms one of the men, and removes his mask. The man, Johnny, recovers his gun and fires three shots into Kensi's abdomen.

The show jumps back twenty four hours earlier. At the office, Callen and Hanna find a box full of unusual items including a cobra statue. Kensi says the box belongs to her and explains she wants to keep it safe after she heard about a break in at her building. Kensi asks Callen where he keeps his stuff, but Hanna explains he doesn't have any. Hetty comes in and talks about her past. Eric informs the others they have a case.

In the operations room, Eric informs the team about a cash shipment in Baghdad that was hijacked by a Jihadist Raiders Front. Nate says the JRF has cells in the U.S. Eric says the JRF had a simcard that belonged to a soldier named Chad Jeffcoat who had access to the shipment information.

While Hanna and Callen drive to meet Chad, Hanna tells him about all the things he has locked up in a safe at his house. Callen figures he is hiding something. Hanna admits he has a glove that he got during a Michael Jackson concert. They knock on Chad's door, but he doesn't answer. They ask a mailman if he saw Chad, but he says he didn't. Hanna finds a bloody set of keys and a spent 9mm shell. They find another shell that leads to the car. They figure the shooter used a silencer. Callen opens the trunk of the car and find it empty. Inside the trashcan, they find Chad's dead body.

The police arrive to investigate. Kensi wonders where Chad would hide his most prized possessions. Hanna and Callen find a false panel next to the dishwasher full of cash. They wonder what Chad did to get himself killed.

After Hanna counts the money, Kensi says it was part of the cash shipment that was hijacked. Kensi hears Nate playing a harmonica. Nate explains he is a blues man with soul. Kensi tells him the harmonica was a gift from her dad. Nate tells her she doesn't talk about him much. Kensi describes how she was raised on a base in the middle of nowhere. She says she snuck out after her dad went out for drinks, came back, and learned that he was killed. She says the case was never solved. Nate assures her that her father would be proud of her.

Hanna and Callen use a key found on Chad's ring to open a hangar at an airfield. They discover it is full of cash that was stolen in Baghdad. Callen discovers schematics for another bank called Certified National. They hide after three men enter. After Hanna announces himself, the men respond with gunfire. Callen and Hanna fire back and take them out.

At the office, Eric comes down and watches as Callen and Hanna clean their guns. Eric starts to dig in Kensi's box, but they inform him that Kensi will get upset. Eric says one of the men that they shot, a robber named Michael Joseph Benelli, is out of surgery. He confirms the money was part of the Baghdad hijack. He shows them video showing a man that Callen recognizes as the mailman enter the hangar. Eric says the man is a master criminal named Damien Salerno.

At the hospital, Kensi asks Benelli what Salerno is going to do after he discovers all the money gone. She suggests he work with them.

Eric tells Hanna and Callen that the JRF money seized by the government is being held at the Certified National Bank. They figure the JRF wants the money back. Eric explains the terminal at the bank can be used to electronically send money.

Back at the hospital, Kensi asks Benelli who their inside man at the bank is. She tells him she knows the bank robbery was only meant to be a front for the man inside. Kensi calls base and tells them that Benelli is not going to talk. Eric reports that Mike Renko wants to help them. Kensi allows Benelli to escape. She tells Nate that she implanted Benelli with a GPS while he was under.

Mike tells Callen and Hanna that he knows a police officer named Bernhart who can help him. He says although he is not totally clean, he is the only person who can get them in contact with Salerno. Bernhart arrives and says Salerno is getting old and has a point man named Johnny Manning.

Kensi follows Benelli as he arrives at the hangar. Back at the office, Nate finds Hetty carrying a large shotgun. She tries to hand it to Nate, but he doesn't want to take it. Nate reveals that Kensi shared her story about her dad. Nate wonders what Kensi will do after he finds the men who were out with her dad.

Callen and Hanna arrive to meet up with Kensi. Benelli gets a call from Salerno who asks for his money. He accuses him of stealing his money, but Benelli denies it. Benelli tells Salerno that they could have pulled the bank job and walked away. Salerno, who is in a van, shoots and kills Benelli with a scoped rifle.

The team gathers all the information that Salerno had. Hanna figures the inside man is the key piece to the plan. Nate reports that an employee named Curtis has been in contact with JRF. Nate adds that Curtis is single. They hint that Kensi should go undercover. Kensi says she is upset that she is always used to use her powers of seduction. Hetty states they need Curtis to uncover all of the JRF members he was working with. Callen suggests Kensi get a safe deposit box.

Hanna drops off Kensi in front of the bank. She goes in, talks to Curtis, gets robbed and shot. Kensi instructs the team to enter the bank. Hanna sees that the front door is locked and runs to the back. Curtis says he never got a call. Another masked man tells Curtis that Salerno wants his money now. Curtis punches and tells the bank manager they are going to his office now. Eric says he is having trouble accessing the security system. Curtis orders the manager to transfer the money to an account in Istanbul. After the transfer, Curtis leads the men towards the back door. Hanna barges in, shoots several of the robbers, is shot in the shoulder, and runs out of bullets before a robber raises his shotgun at him. Curtis escapes out the back door.

After Curtis leaves, all the men get up, take off their masks and reveal it is Mike, Bernhart and Callen. Mike tells Kensi she did a great job. Since Curtis is tagged with a GPS locator, they wait to see where he is heading.

Callen and Hanna follow Curtis while he waits at a park. Eric works on locating where the money was sent to. All of the bank employees are released after they were questioned. They see the bank manager arrive and tell Curtis that he can't believe a woman was shot. The manager says the money is not in the Turkish bank. Hanna and Callen arrive with guns drawn and arrest them.

At the office, Hetty reports to Kensi that Salerno was caught trying to cross the border. Kensi says she doesn't know where to keep her stuff. Hetty suggests she put her stuff in her hangar, but Kensi says she wants to keep them close. Hetty tells her to put her belongings in the archive room in the building. Kensi goes through her stuff and pulls out her father's medal and a note from her dad.

Summary:	The death of a lieutenant commander appears to be suicide but the NCIS team uncovers evidence corresponding to murder.

Three women take turns drinking from a bottle while they hang out the sunroof of a limo. The driver stops after a Navy officer with a noose around his neck drops in front of the vehicle.

At the office, Hanna tells Callen that he is upset that he didn't pick him up on time. Callen admits he overslept. They enter the briefing room where Eric informs them that the victim, Calvin Lee, was a scientist who was working on top secret submarine designs. Eric states that the executive officer wants to know if the data has been compromised. Hetty plays the video that the women took just before Calvin died. Hanna figures that Calvin was killed.

Callen and Hanna go to the overpass where Calvin died. They look at the knot and figure it was made by a sailor.

Kensi and Nate team up and go to Calvin's apartment and see he was living large. They see a picture of a woman they figure was Calvin's girlfriend. They hide after they hear someone enter. A sailor digs in a cabinet and retrieves an item. Kensi announces herself, but the man runs. Kensi is able to tackle the man on the street. Nate helps Kensi cuff the man, but he punches him in the face. Kensi finds that the man was carrying two ounces of meth.

At the office, Nate takes credit for taking down the sailor. Callen volunteers to question the sailor. Kensi sees that Nate is itching to hit the streets again. In the interrogation room, the sailor insists he didn't kill Calvin. Callen convinces him to work with them to prove he doesn't have anything to do with Calvin's death. The sailor says Calvin stole his position from him. He admits he gradually spiked Calvin's drinks with meth so he could take his place. Hanna figures he went to the apartment to cover his tracks.

Nate learns that Calvin had a blood stain on his shoe and traces of meth in his system, but he didn't take his drug test yet which means no one else knew about it. Eric plays the team traffic video which shows Calvin throw something off the bridge just before he hung himself. The team wonders what Calvin threw. Callen instructs Kensi to take Nate to meet with Calvin's parents while they go back to the crime scene. Nate asks Kensi if he should get a gun, but she reminds him he is needed as a psychologist.

At their store, Calvin's parents tell Kensi and Nate that their son was perfect. They explain they left China since they were pregnant with their second child. They say that their first child, died a while ago. After Kensi shows them the picture of the girl from Calvin's apartment, they say she is Xui Li, his girlfriend. They say that she is on her way back to Hong Kong.

Callen and Hanna search for the item that Calvin threw away. Hanna says he is upset they are wasting their time five weeks after Dominic was kidnapped. Eric reports that Calvin's parents have owned the antique store in Chinatown for years. He says there is no death certificate for Calvin's sister. He shows them the daughter's identification in which she took on the name Jane Lipsger.

Callen finds an assortment of items near the scene including a large shoe and a toilet seat. Hanna finds a set of keys he figures what was thrown. After learning about Jane, Callen and Hanna meet with her at her second hand furniture store. They ask her when the last time she spoke to Calvin since he died that morning. Jane gets upset and asks how he died. Callen informs her that he took his own life.

Jane says Calvin left a drunk message on her machine last night. She says she was close to him until the day he died. Jane explains her family left China because of the one child policy. She explains she thinks her parents loved Calvin more than her. Jane explains that Calvin's engagement with Xui Li was fake since he was in love with a man named Jaxon.

Hanna wonders if Calvin's mom knew her son was gay. They go to Jaxon's apartment and discover his body in the kitchen with his throat slashed. After the investigators arrive, Callen wonders if Calvin slit Jaxon's throat then killed himself. Hanna wonders why Jaxon was killed.

At the office, Nate says Calvin had no signs of depression. They watch video of Calvin as he entered Jaxon's apartment. Nate wonders if Calvin wanted out of his relationship. They wonder where the knife that killed Jaxon is. They go through the video and see a delivery man enter the apartment. They figure the man was Jaxon's killer. At the apartment, Callen finds that the delivery man dumped the food that was picked up at a restaurant called Jolly Chan's.

At the office, Eric reports that the restaurant doesn't deliver to Jaxon's area. Eric says they found finger prints on the bag that belongs to a man named Bobby Tang, who has a record of being with an Asian gang called Hiragana.

Nate asks Hetty if she has ever heard of a psychologist who became an agent. Hetty stares at him blankly then says there was a man named Kerwood Ames who was killed soon after he went out in the field. He explains Kerwood tried to apply logic in the street, which got him killed.

Callen and Hanna arrive at Tang's business and see that the door is open. Inside his building, they find a huge stock of pirated DVDs. They see Bobby argue with Xue Li just before she shoots him with a silenced pistol. Several men enter the warehouse and fight with Callen and Hanna. The team manages to knock them out, but they lose Xue Li.

Callen and Hanna bring one of the suspects to the interrogation room. Hetty arrives and throws them bags of ice. Callen says that forensics matched Bobby's knife to the one that killed Jaxon. Hetty insists they have ways to make the suspect talk even though there is a language barrier.

Callen wonders how Xue Li knew how to handle her Glock. Kensi asks Nate to go out in the field, but he says he is busy. Callen asks Hanna what he thinks Dom would add to the case. Hanna figures that he would bring up some obscure historic reference. Callen wonders if Calvin's key does more than what they think.

Kensi meets with Calvin's mom at the store and tells her she knows that Xue Li didn't return to Hong Kong. The mother insists she wait until her husband arrives before she talks.

Eric tells the team that Calvin's key was a high tech cloner that stole the secrets of nearby computers. Eric says the cloner was written in Chinese code. Callen figures that Calvin was a Chinese spy. Hanna wonders why Calvin threw away the cloner. Callen wonders if Calvin didn't want to be a traitor. He figures that the Chinese government killed Jaxon to get to Calvin. They figure that Calvin killed himself instead of working as a spy. They figure that Xue Li was an assassin sent to clean up.

Kensi asks Calvin's parents how they knew Xue Li. They tell her they met her through a website. Eric calls Kensi and warns her that Xue Li might kill Calvin's parents. Calvin's father kicks his customer out of the store, pulls out a gun, but Kensi pushes him down. He shoots at Kensi while she escapes. He calls Xue and informs her about the situation. Xue Li follows and fires at Kensi in the alley. Kensi brings Calvin's mom into a restaurant to hide. Eric guides Kensi where to go while he uses camera to look for the shooters. Callen and Hanna pick up Jane and drive to back up Kensi. Callen grabs Calvin and his gun. Xue Li fires at Hanna, but he evades the bullets. Callen flanks and orders Xue Li to drop her gun.

At the station, Calvin's mom tells Nate that her family was allowed to leave China in exchange for spying for China. She says Calvin knew about the plan and was encouraged to become a sailor. Nate tells the team that Calvin was born to be a sleeper agent, but fell in love with America. Jane meets with her mom and gives her a hug. Nate explains that emotional witnesses are more likely to talk. Hetty tells Nate to stick with what he does best. Kensi tells Nate he makes an alright partner. Nate suggests he go out in the field more, but the team tells him no.

Summary: The team investigates the death of a sailor involved in illegal street racing. The situation becomes more concerning when they realize that he had classified Navy equipment with him.

Two cars pull up side by side at a line just after a man take in all of the bets. After a car explodes and flips over, the crowd disperses.

At the office, Hanna complains to Callen about the route he took to work. The team sees that riding is moving around in his Segway. Eric informs the team that Yeoman James Rush died during an illegal street race. They watch the video that shows his car explode. Kensi says that Rush worked as an admin support and has an encrypted personnel file. They see that the other driver kept on driving after the explosion.

Callen and Kensi investigate the scene where the race took place. A insurance adjuster named Allison Pritchett meets them while they investigate. Kensi tells Callen that she doesn't trust Allison since she was acting weird.

Hetty tells Callen that he got a ticket and was captured on a traffic cam. She informs him he has to go to traffic school since this his his third citation in the last few months. She tells Callen that Kensi and Hanna will cover for him while he is in class.

Eric shows Hanna and Kensi a variety of video taken at the scene. They see that Rush used a wet nitrous system that mixed nitrous with the fuel. Kensi figures that the faulty system caused the engine to explode. She says the blown engine wouldn't cause that kind of explosion. Eric shows them that Rush's car had two explosions. Since Kensi figured that Rush was a master mechanic, his car was sabotaged and murdered.

Callen arrives at traffic school and sees that it is attended by mostly elderly people. An eccentric instructor tells the class he wants to bring cool to school. An attractive blonde woman sits next to Callen which cheers him up.

Kensi explains to Hanna that Rush was a legend in the racing world. They go to the garage his family owns, meet with Rush's siblings, Keith and Angela, and ask them about their brother. Angela tells Kensi that James was able to build anything from scratch. She says the business barely manages to stay afloat. Keith explains to Hanna that the garage has been in the family for years. He says he has been taking care of the business after their father went to jail. Keith says he is fighting to keep the garage alive even though his brother was killed. Keith says the person who raced James was a mysterious man named Tokkan.

At the office, Hetty texts Hanna with a joke which surprises Kensi. Eric tells the team that Tokkan has never been arrested or photographed. He says Omar, who was at the garage and recently fired, has a criminal record.

At the school, the instructor tells the class that it is easier to remember the rules of the road if they set it to hip hop music.

Nate finds Kensi as she investigates Rush's car. She says she used to help her dad work on cars. She realizes that Nate has no clue how cars work. She finds a strange part and wonders if Keith knows what it does.

Kensi and Hanna return to the garage and see someone snooping around with a flash light. They apprehend the man and learn he is Garrison Timmons, Rush's commanding officer.

In the interrogation room, Hanna asks Timmons about a piece of equipment that he brought to the garage. Hanna takes the part that Kensi found and asks him about it. Timmons asks for the other pair. He says Rush was working on a new battery technology that was powerful, unstable, but worth millions. He says it wasn't unusual for Rush to test new equipment. He says he came there to search for the battery using the equipment that can be used to locate it. Timmons says the technology would revolutionize their attack vehicles on the field.

Callen returns from class and wonders who sabotaged Rush's car. Hetty asks Callen a traffic question that he answers incorrectly.

At the garage, Angela says she doesn't recognize the battery that was found on James's car. Hanna uses the detector to look for the battery, but finds nothing. Angela says she is worried that Keith is looking for Tokkan.

Back in class, the instructor asks Callen for his attention. Callen asks the instructor if street racers can be insured and he tells him that racing will void any insurance. Callen texts the team and asks them to check on Rush's policy. At the office, Nate confirms that Rush didn't have an insurance policy. Eric locates Tokkan's car driving in the street.

Eric directs Hanna and Kensi to Tokkan's car, but is spotted. They chase the driver through an industrial area. Kensi manages to trap the driver and order him out. They discover that Tokkan is actually the person who introduced herself as Allison Pritchett.

In the interrogation room, Hanna looks over Tokkan's real record which is Alisha Takara, who is a spoiled rich girl. Hanna accuses Tokkan of sabotaging James car. She says she was in love with him. She says she was happy when he joined the Navy. Alisha admits that Tokkan was Rush's idea. She says she didn't want to face what happened after Rush's car exploded. She says she suspects that another racer named Stringer who drove a pearl black Chevelle wanted revenge.

Eric reports that Nick Stringer has a long criminal record. They see his vehicle in the video taken at the race. They discover that Stringer talked to Keith before the race. Hanna and Kensi find Keith strung up and doused with gasoline at the garage. They fight and beat up two men who tied up Keith. After they free Keith, he says the men worked for Stringer. He says he bet Stringer that James would beat Tokkan. He says he owes Stringer 70 thousand. Keith says that Omar, who probably stole the other battery, runs with a crew called Los Locos Lowriders.

Callen gets a call in class during a demonstration. Kensi meets with Omar at the Los Locos hangout. Hanna puts a gun to Omar and cuffs him. Kensi finds a large sum of cash on Omar and wonder where it came from. Hanna uses the battery detector and pretends he has radiation sickness. Hanna tells Omar they will take him to the hospital if he tells them where the battery is and who sabotaged James's car. Omar admits he sold the battery to Stringer. Hanna gives Omar two pills he says will make him better. Omar realizes that he just gave him breath mints.

At the class, Callen finishes his final test. The blonde woman asks Callen if he would like to grab a drink with her. Callen gets a call, tells the woman he has to take a raincheck, but she says she has a photo shoot in the Bahamas.

At the office, the team figures that Stringer wants to use the battery to race Tokkan. Kensi discovers that Tokkan was challenged. Hetty tells Hanna that she modified his Challenger to give it a boost of speed.

Later, Kensi drives up in Tokkan's car and orders Stringer to give up. Stringer gets in his car and drives off. Hanna chases him down through the streets of L.A. Hanna activates Hetty's modification and catches up. Stringer hits a barrier and flips over. Hanna and Callen arrest Stringer. Kensi finds the second battery installed in Stringer's car.

At the office, Stringer admits to stealing the battery, but not to killing Rush. Kensi figures that Angela was the one who sabotaged the car. She finds her as she is packing up the garage. She tells Angela that she knows that she wanted James to stop racing, but didn't expect him to die. Angela admits she just wanted the racing to end. She confesses she disconnected his NOS injector, but didn't expect the new battery system to be installed.

After the case, Nate reports that the Navy is not pressing charges. Kensi asks Hanna and Callen to take her for a drive. Hetty figures they want to take the car out for a spin and says she removed the modification. Hetty tells Callen that he failed traffic school. Callen says he was working on a case. Hetty sees Eric's Segway and takes it out for a ride.

Summary: The team investigates the death of Marine for a possible link between the military and the local gangs.

A Navy officer visits a barber shop and asks the patrons a series of questions, then leaves. After he checks off his list, two cars pull up with their lights off just before the passengers riddle the officer with bullets from their automatic weapons.

At the office, Hanna sees a large Chinese spear in the lobby. Hetty explains that the wushu weapon is hers. Eric blows a whistle and announces the start of the briefing. Hetty tells the team she will speak to Eric about the whistle later. Eric tells the team about Wendell Dobbs who was killed by AK-47 fire. He loads up the video footage that shows the shooting. Hanna notices that one of the shooters dropped a magazine.

Nate tells the team that gang violence has become a problem with the military, but he can't find any gang ties to Dobbs. He figures that Dobbs was targeted since he was in uniform when he was killed.

Hanna and Callen meet with Dobbs's family at his home. Wendell's father tells the team that he was proud of his son. Dobbs answers the door and lets in a gang member who asks for Lil' Mac D. After he realizes that Dobbs is not alone, he returns to his car that is full of other gang members. Dobbs tells the team that he thinks Lil' Mac D is his younger son James. He says after Wendell went to war, James got in the wrong crowd. He says after he was diagnosed with diabetes, Wendell came back to help them. The team gets on the floor after they hear a car screeching. The house is shot up with bullets from a drive-by car.

Callen sends a photo that he took of the gang members to Eric. Hanna says he found a paystub on the fridge from a company called Suntiago that he thinks James works at. Callen says the bullets on the ground are the same that killed Dobbs. Mr. Wendall says the company that James works for deals with heavy equipment like backhoes.

Eric learns that one of the men that Callen photographed is Rashad 'Slide' Hollander who is a former soldier discharged for gang activity. They see that James has a record of petty theft. Eric reports that Slide has links to a gang called the 82nd Second Street Black Posse.

Callen and Hanna arrive at Suntiago and see that there are several humvees on hand. Hanna pretends that he is James's cousin and meets with his boss. The boss says James has not been in since Friday. Hanna tells the boss that Wendall was killed during a drive-by shooting. The boss says he gave James the job as a favor to Wendall since he hooked him up with government contracts to repair the humvees. He says that James was the night watchman that he never saw.

Hanna wonders if Wendall is supplying Los Angeles with humvees and weapons. Callen wonders if James is hiding out at Wendall's house. They arrive at the apartment and hear a television on. Hanna uses a lockpick to open the door. James approaches Callen with a gun. He pretends that he is Wendall's friend just before Hanna sneaks up behind him and announces himself as a federal agent. Callen takes James's gun and ejects the bullet out of the chamber.

At the safe house, Callen and Hanna ask James why he was hiding out at his brother's house. James insists he was just chilling. James insists that Wendall was clean and didn't move weapons to the U.S. Callen asks him why he didn't enlist. He says he tried, but was rejected after they found that he has a heart murmur. The team asks him why he is protecting the gang. James explains in his neighborhood, you either are in the gang or a gang victim. Hanna offers James something to eat. Outside the room, Hanna tells Callen that he thinks James is safest there.

Hetty sneaks up on Hanna while he researches the case. Hetty figures that Hanna wants to save James just like Moe and Dom. Hanna says the number one deaths for black men in America is homicide. Hetty tells him he can't save them all, but Hanna says he wants to save James.

Kensi reports that the humvees come and go through military transport in which they bypass customs. She says it would not be hard to fill the vehicles with weapons. Eric says James's boss, Ronnie Miller, used to be a Serbian before he changed his name. Hetty suggests they use a FISA warrant to search Ronnie's business since the weapons could be connected to terrorist activities.

After the police search Suntiago, they are unable to find any weapons. Ronnie insists he runs a legitimate business. Callen gets a call and learns there was a gang shoot out downtown.

The team learns that there were seventeen victims as a result of the gunfight. At the scene, they find AK-47 magazines and rounds. Callen recognizes one of the dead victims as the one who knocked on Dobbs's door. They figure that the gang war is heating up.

Callen shows James the photos of the victims and tells him he and his father might be the next victim. James admits he was in the car when his brother was shot. He explains Slide told him he wanted to show him something and forced him to watch as they gunned his brother down. James explains that since Wendell didn't want him in the gang and out of Suntiago, Slide got angry. He explains he just works the gate and didn't know what was going on. Callen figures that Slide was moving stuff without Ronnie or Wendell's knowledge. Hanna tells James that if he fights with them, they will take Slide and his men down.

Later, Nate says Slide will probably be more jumpy since the shoot out. Callen and Hanna suggest they send in James, but Nate worries that Slide will kill him right away. Callen explains that since Slide lost a lot of men during the shoot out, he probably wants James's help. Hetty tells the team she will deny that she was involved in the mission, but wishes them luck.

The team pulls up to a house where Slide is hiding out. Slide and his men come out and are introduced to Hanna as his cousin. Hanna tells Slide that the man he was with was his parole officer. Hanna says he is looking for some work. Slide tells James that they killed a lot of Mexicans and Colombians in their gang fight. The men start to attack Hanna as part of their initiation, but Hanna fights back. Hanna manages to take out all the men, but Slide pulls out a rifle and orders him to stop. Slide welcomes Hanna to his gang.

Callen notices that the camera feed is out. Slide tells James to leave to go to work. Slide takes Hanna to a shed where he is stashing a AK-47s. Hanna tells the men that he thinks the guns are rip offs since the clips are not fitting right. Slide tells his partner Tiny that if his uncle sold him knock offs, he is going to kill him. Tiny tells Hanna that his uncle got the guns from South America. James uncovers a humvee and orders Hanna to drive. Callen calls Eric and orders him to tell the police to leave the vehicle alone.

Hanna drives to Suntiago where they are let inside the gates by James. The gang searches for a Humvee with an X on the side. Callen and Kensi follow with their automatic rifles. Slide tries to start the humvee, but it doesn't work. Slide orders Hanna to start the car. Hanna figures that the battery is dead and orders the men to grab jumper cables. Ronnie arrives in his car and tells Slider that he is on his property. Slide gives James his gun and orders him to kill Ronnie. James points his gun at Slide and tells him he killed his brother. Callen and Kensi order the gang members to drop their guns, but they fire back. Hanna shoots Slide as he speeds towards him in the humvee. Hanna tells James that he did a good job.

During the day, Callen searches the Humvee and sees that it is hiding heroin. The team figures that Slide had men plant drugs in the Humvees before they were shipped to the U.S.

Summary:	Sam is assigned to go undercover as a fighter in a Mixed Martial Arts (MMA) gym while the team is investigating the murder of a Marine.

Sam Hanna goes undercover as an MMA fighter. He was forced into this role after his team found the body of a Marine stationed at Camp Pendleton outside of a nightclub with major blood loss.

The team finds out that the Marine was a fighter at a club called the Blood & Guts Warriors. As they learn that he was 'blood packing' to help him in his MMA fights, the team believes he was given a blood thinner to kill him. This leads a female team member to investigate the B&G Warriors' club. She meets the owner, Victor Janklow, and three of the Marine fighters who train there. There is also a man who seems out of place, as he isn't a Marine, training with the men.

The man, Jason Wyler, is found to be an alias after a background check shows he isn't a real person. When a spot opens in the club, Hanna is sent in as DeMarco Williams to fight for the spot and to find out what the club is really being used for. He ends up fighting Wyler.

After Hanna beats Wyler, the two scuffle outside of the MMA club. Both are taken into custody where it is learned that Wyler is really an LAPD undercover officer, Marty Deeks, who is supposed to find out about a suspected drug ring in the club.

After the team narrows the suspects down to find the culprit, Janklow, Hanna gets stuck with Janklow in the club. Janklow also realizes that something isn't right and starts questioning Hanna. Just when it seems that Janklow will kill Hanna to avoid having him get too close, Deeks shows up and helps Hanna take down the three men.

Later, Deeks is offered a liason position at NCIS. He accepts. This should lead to some exciting future episodes as Hanna and Deeks have shown they work well together!

Summary:	NCIS investigates the murder of a Navy officer entangled in the world of Hollywood glitz and glamour as the team is joined at Hetty's request by LAPD liaison Marty Deeks.

A navy Lieutenant dies when he rolls off a cliff along Mulholland Blvd. Turns out, he was shot before he crashed the car and the car belonged to Aubrey Darva, the socialite daughter of a wealthy real estate investor.

LAPD Officer Deeks is on loan to NCIS:LA as a temp in Dom's continued absence, however, he proves to be of little help as a liaison officer to LAPD, as his fellow cops don't really like him.

Their first stop is to Aubrey Darva's house; Aubrey's father has just flown in from NYC and discovers she's gone missing. When Sam and Callen finally find Aubrey, they learn that the Lieutenant was with her the night before but disappeared in the middle of the night.

Kensi stays with Aubrey for her protection and figures out that the Lieutenant was killed in Aubrey's house. Turns out, he was killed when he discovered a known terrorist was staying at the Darvas' house.

Kensi finds herself in the same position but manages, with the help of Mr. Darva, to save herself and the Darva family.

Summary: The team finally gets a lead in the ongoing investigation of Dom's kidnapping through a video link.

The team receives a tip that Dom is alive. They have 24 hours to release a captured terrorist leader or he dies.

Unfortunately, whatever U.S. government agency has the terrorist isn't talking. So they're at square one.

Hunting down clues, they see that Sam's old buddy Mo is involved with the group holding Dom for ransom.

They conclude that he's in the Sudan

... or Chad, or Somalia. Sam wants to get in the air and figure it out later.

Callen is not so sure.

Hunting down leads to try and figure out where he's held, they find a prominent financier who they think might be tied to the terrorists.

In a performing arts center, they attempt to smoke them out ... and we learn Dom is right there in that same building.

Right there in L.A. Hiding in plain sight almost.

With Mo's help, he's able to free himself, and escape to the roof, where Sam, Callen and Kensi are in a major firefight.

Sadly, Dom is shot and dies before a medical helicopter arrives and they can all escape together.

The rest of the terrorists are taken out by Sam, Callen and Kensi.

Summary:	During an Army transfer of prisoner, the terrorist escapes and NCIS is requested to assist in the search for the missing man.

An attack of a private plane immediately after it lands, turns out to be a terrorist takedown of the secret army transfer of terrorist, Ala A Din Keshwar. NCIS: LA gets called in because Keshwar is the man Dom's captors wanted released.

NCIS didn't know the Army had him in custody, much less that they were transferring him. Tempers run high in a jurisdictional war with Army Major Rick Medina, as they try to find Keshwar before he escapes the country. They track down the van Keshwar left the airport in, and Medina has his men charge it, against Callen's orders not to.

As Callen predicted, the van was a trap with a suicide bomber driver, who blew up the van and the men who got close to it. Using NCIS: LA's tracking resources, Sam pushes to find Moe, the Sudanese "lost boy" he sponsored to get in the country; Moe has knowledge of the organization that freed Keshwar.

Sam finds Moe, restores Moe's trust and learns Moe got back into the country on a Turkish ship. Callen suspects that Keshwar will use the same route to disappear and they race to the port.

Improvising a quick undercover ruse, Callen and Kensi get close to the ship, however, Medina shows up at the last minute, nearly blowing their operation. Turns out Medina sold out for money and was trying to help Keshwar escape.

Summary: After Callen's cover is blown and compromises the unit, the NCIS team races to find out who is behind the security breach.

The episode opens with Callen being tailed, which he picks up on instantly. A chase ensues, with Callen turning the tables on his stalker.

The man is killed in a car crash trying to escape, but before he does, Callen learns he's been made. He cuts off communication with NCIS.

A man contacts him, though, by the name of Eugene Kilson. He was hired to dig into Callen's past for reasons unknown, and is using that to blackmail G.

Callen has to drop off a flash drive to some Bulgarian thugs or he'll never learn the truth about himself. He complies, but the drop goes awry and gunfire ensues.

Meanwhile, Kilson hacks into the NCIS mainframe, forcing Eric to take the office down.

The flash drive contained a travel itinerary on a business executive coming to down to close a merger that would have sent stock tumbling. The gangsters wanted to put a stop to that.

NCIS intervenes and most of them die, save for the lead thug, who also evaded capture by Callen in their previous encounter.

Callen agrees to meet Kilson, who he identifies as the man who ran over the man tailing him at the very beginning. He chases him down and kills him after Kilson draws on him first, perhaps burying his secrets too.

Or not. The team finds a key to an office with files Kilson kept, presumably including information on Callen and a whole lot else.

Summary: Callen races against a ruthless adversary to locate a woman who knows the whereabouts of a forgotten fortune earmarked to fund a new war in the Middle East — and also holds the tantalizing key to his unknown past.

Callen and the OSP team enter a warehouse full of information on various agents. Information that explodes almost immediately when Kensi tries to hack the computer.

Callen fears his past is lost forever - a huge folder bearing his name went up in flames - but he's got bigger fish to fry. Namely an Iranian terrorist looking to rise to power.

The linchpin, interestingly, is a woman masquerading as Callen's sister. She's not actually his sister, but knew her in an orphanage years ago, and took her identity when she died.

We learn that Callen's sister may be dead, but someone has been watching him the whole time ... his mother or his father is still out there.

Callen)
Guest Stars: Jon Sklaroff (Radovan Lazik), Sonny Surowiec (Bodyguard), Moe Irvin (Tommy Bishop), Meta Golding (LAPD Detective Jess Traynor), Michael Harney (LAPD Detective Frank Scarli)
Production Code: 201
Summary: While undercover an NCIS agent goes missing and the team is assigned to locate him. LAPD is investigating the matter in regards to money laundering, human trafficking and drug dealing. The NCIS and LAPD must work together to find those responsible for the missing agent.

NCIS:LA gets called in to find their liaison, LAPD Detective Marty Deeks, has gone missing after a target of his undercover investigation is murdered. The team is debriefed by the case officer in charge of Deeks' undercover operation, Det. Traynor. She tells them that Deeks' infiltrated a local street gang whose leader, Emilio had ties to Lazik, a Serbian national who runs an international human trafficking ring. Deeks' suspected that the two were working to create a human trafficking ring across the U.S-Mexican border until Emilio was killed in car bomb. When Det. Traynor is also killed in a car bomb the team knows they must act fast to find out if Deeks is still alive. The new lead LAPD officer in the investigation, Scarli, is less than cooperative with Callen and the team and puts up road blocks for them any way he can. Deeks finally makes contact with Hetty and tells her that he wants to follow through with meeting Lazik. He wants to try and catch him in the act of smuggling young girls from Mexico in order to finally bring him to justice. Hetty tells Callen to keep a close watch on Deeks, so when Deeks' meeting with Lazik turns dangerous, Callen and the team move in and help bring Lazik down in a fire fight. It turns out that Lazik killed Emilio because he found out Emilio was working with Det. Traynor to bring him down. Lazik's source was a dirty LAPD cop on his pay roll, Scarli. Deeks arranges a meeting with Scarli who has no idea NCIS knows Deeks is alive. Scarli admits everything and is about to kill Deeks when Callen and Sam surprise Scarli, taking him into custody.

Hetty is sending Nate on a mysterious mission that is so secret, even Nate is not given any details. Callen is still struggling with putting the pieces together of his past and identifying the man who was watching him at the cemetery (Episode #124). Hetty stuns Callen when she buys a new house for him, he is resistant at first until he sees the address - it's Alina's house.

Summary:	The death of an NCIS agent is assigned to the team and they soon discover the assassination is the work of a hit squad.

NCIS Special Agent Williams is murdered by a professional hit squad in Cyprus, and when the hit man arrives at LAX, NCIS: LA is called in to track his every move and figure out who is the next target.

The hit squad was hired by an infamous Chechen terrorist group whose leader, Vakar, had been presumed dead seven years ago. Williams had been investigating Vakar's death before he was murdered.

Callen and Sam's plans to follow the hitman change when they are spotted and give chase. They bring the hitman into custody and find out that the hit squad is about to rendezvous.

Callen decides to pose as the "B" squad hitman and infiltrate the group.

Callen learns that a suburban housewife, Emma Mastin, is the next target.

Sam overhears that the squad members speaking in Farsi and learns that Vakar is actually alive. Kensi and Deeks go to the Mastin home to find out why a Chechen terrorist group would want Emma dead.

Kensi gains her trust and realizes that Emma's son speaks Chechen. Emma volunteers to set a trap for the hit squad in order to send Vakar a message; that it won't be easy to kill her.

Hetty learns that Emma was Vakar's wife and after his staged death, she became a highly trained "Black Widow" who was supposed to become a suicide bomber but escaped.

Her son's father is really Vakar and he knows he needs to eliminate Emma to get his son back. The team takes down the hit squad and Emma personally kills the hitman.

Summary: The NCIS team jumps into action when video surveillance footage shows an ambush on a humvee transporting Marines in the desert. Meanwhile, Nate returns from his mystery assignment.

A military hummer arrives in the desert. Walker is the driver, and he hit every rock over the last six miles. Hastings sees something, and it turns out to be a runner. They announce U.S. Marines, but he keeps going. Two of them go back in the Hummer, and the rest go on foot to catch him. The Hummer hits a landmine and goes up in flames. Somebody yells 'AM-BUSH!' The team is under fire. Outside the Hummer, we see a sign. 'State of California Seismic Monitoring Equipment'.

Kensi pulls up to Deeks. He's going method, undercover as a homeless man, and truly reeks. He asks for a lift and she refuses. He yells 'Thanks, partner!' as she pulls away.

Callen and Hanna are training together. Callen comments that if Hetty has her way, they're going to be reusing bullets. Hanna says we're saving the planet but Callen counters 'Don't come crying to me when she replaces our toilet paper with used Post-its.'

The guys see Getz is on the firing range, and they go in to talk to him. Callen asks Nate where he's been, and says Hetty wouldn't tell them anything. He says they can discuss it over a beer, but right now he has to go touch base with her. Hanna says 'that was weird', and Callen responds 'even for Nate!' They look at the target, and realize that somebody has been giving Nate shooting lessons.

Deeks says there's something wrong with the hot water heater. Hetty tells him it's on a timer, and he obviously exceeded it. Kensi says there should be an exception made in his case. Callen and Hanna arrive, and the gang's all there. They watch the footage of the Hummer accident site. One of the marines escaped, but three are still missing. Callen notes that this doesn't look like Afghanistan and Hetty corroborates his impression. She states that it was filmed just after sunrise outside of San Diego on the California/Mexican border. The marines were assisting ICE and customs and border control in securing the area. The fear is that the marines either stumbled across, or were specifically targeted by one of the Mexican cartels that use the area to smuggle people, guns, drugs. Nobody has yet to claim responsibility for the ambush. They haven't even come up with a motive. Kensi says she can think of a few. Payback, leverage, prisoner exchange.

The one marine who did escape was Corporal Allen Reed. Because the team has ongoing cases and intimate knowledge of the cartels, Director Vance has asked them to get involved. Callen tells Deeks that he and Kensi are to check out the crime scene while he and Sam question the marine who escaped. They're also going to question their cartel connections and see if anybody knows who is behind this. Deeks says he's more of a city mouse and he thinks it would be more logical to send the former Navy SEAL out there with Kensi. Callen tells him it will be a good experience for him. He says sure it would, but he has a very fair complexion and he's worried about burning, whereas Sam here is African-American, and Africa is hot. Hanna says 'I'm from Brooklyn'. Kensi grabs Deeks by the arm and drags him off, saying they'll call if they find anything. He's muttering 'Norwegian-American' as they head out the door.

Hanna says he's going to kill Deeks, Callen feels he'll grow on him. Sam says 'so does ring-worm'.

Kensi introduces herself to Major Orly as NCIS and Deeks as LAPD Liaison Officer, Detective Marty Deeks. They are informed that the marine who escaped doesn't remember much. Marty is sceptical, but the Major asks him if he remembers his first firefight.

They find Montoya's body, one of the missing marines. He has a sign on him written in Spanish, which translates to 'Now to you we bring the war'.

The marines are doing a 100' swath with border patrol in both directions. Orly's guess is that they're going to try to smuggle them into Mexico if they haven't already done so. Kensi says she found SUV tracks heading in the other direction, and she's pretty sure they are heading away from Mexico. The major abruptly excuses himself. Kensi asks if she just got blown off, and Deeks says yes, like Ronald McDonald at a PETA convention. He asks her how certain she is about the tracks, and she says she'd bet his life on it. She asks him if he wants to go for a ride and he takes that for sexual innuendo.

Hanna is talking to Eric on his cell. Tells him to check aerial surveillance for the area, going back at least a month. Whoever did this has been planning it for some time. Callen suggests they check with the other agencies, see if anybody's picked up any related chatter. Hetty says they've already done so. Also, Corporal Reed has been given a clean bill of health and is ready to be questioned. He's waiting at the boat shed with Nate. Hanna asks why Nate seems so distant, and Hetty says it's probably just jet lag. Callen asks a leading question, trying to determine where Nate has been, but Hetty just calls it 'his assignment' and they get nothing as far as new information goes. Hanna asks where he was exactly, and Hetty says he was in the People's Republic of None of Your Damn Business. She's also the one who gave him some shooting pointers.

Blye and Deeks take the bikes out to look for clues. They stop when she loses the SUV's trail. Kensi finds the tracks again, and they are headed west. She says her dad taught her everything she knows, and asks Marty about his relationship with his dad. He said his dad hates him, he told him so, and then he fired a shotgun at him. That's why he hates Thanksgiving. That was six years ago though so maybe his dad is dead by now.

Marty goes to pee by a bush and is startled by a rattlesnake, so he shoots it. He tells Kensi that snakes freak him out ever since his friend's boa constrictor tried to kill him.

Corporal Reed is being questioned. He remembers telling the runner to stop, but he doesn't and next thing he knows, they're taking fire from all directions. He thinks the blast was enough to knock him unconscious because he believes he blacked out. When he came to, the humvee was destroyed and everybody was gone. He is told that Montoya was found that morning, and that Hastings and Walker are still missing. Reed believes he got the runner with a head shot, and they tell him that Montoya was killed with a head shot. He asks if they thought he did this, and Callen turns the question back on him. He says yes, because he was in charge, and so he is responsible for everything that followed. He's more worried about Hastings, because she's pregnant. He was the only one who knew. Nate asks if Reed is the father and he says no. Montoya was.

Getz, Hanna and Callen are discussing the questioning. They don't know if the cartel theory makes more sense or if there is a love triangle, and Reed killed his fellow marines. Nate thinks he's genuinely traumatized. Callen calls Kensi to see if she found out anything, and she says no. He tells her they are going to go find their favorite snitch, J.J., and find out what he knows. They agree to let each other know if they find out anything.

JJ runs from Callen, and Hanna clotheslines him. They ask him about the Mexican cartel, and he says he knows nothing. They threaten him so he spits out the name Emilio Ortego. Callen says he got blown up last week, and J.J. says yes, and when that happened everybody started scrambling to fill his spot. He says the guy who's going to get it is Memo Torres. Callen tells him if he sees him selling anything other than star maps, he won't even call LAPD, he'll run J.J. over with his car himself.

Hetty asks Nate about Reed. He says he's afraid. She asks if it's for his fellow marines, and he says no, for himself. There are worse things than death, for a marine. The conversation shifts imperceptibly, and they end up talking about Nate. He says yes. He wants to go back. He hasn't discussed it with the others and he would appreciate it if she didn't either. She agrees.

Hetty finds Hanna looking for a former alias. She says no, that alias is compromised. NLV means No Longer Viable. Hanna says his cover was never blown, and he spent seven months working Memo Torres. He says this alias is the only way to contact Memo Torres today. She says Tyrell Ellis has a price on his head. She doesn't like it, but Callen backs Hanna.

Hanna and Callen arrive. Hanna goes in to make contact with Torres, and Callen calls Eric, asking him to identify the principles in the photos he just took. Memo tells Terrel he should have stayed away, and one of his thugs goes and locks the door. Terrel tells Memo he almost had a safe corridor set up until Torres screwed it up by kidnapping a bunch of marines. Torres says he doesn't know what he's talking about.

Hetty calls Callen and tells him Director Vance would appreciate an update. Hetty says that the fact that she hasn't heard anything on the police scanner indicates Sam is still alive. Callen says Sam knows he has to play it cool. This statement is followed by a body flying out the window of Torres' place. Sam has Torres in a headlock, and cuffs him.

Kensi and Deeks follow the trail until it could have gone one of two ways, and they don't know which.

Naval Criminal Investigative Service. That's what they tell Torres. He responds that he's not in the navy. They tell him that because what he did was against marines on active duty, according to the Patriot Act, that's domestic terrorism.

Nate pulls them out of the meeting to tell them that the only thing found in Memo's shop was a couple of unregistered handguns and some cash. No contraband, no drugs, nothing. Hanna says except for the fact that he did try to kill him. Nate is going over the surveillance photos Callen took at Memo's place. The one guy that's not a player is Donald Wexling, he's a multi-million dollar textile manufacturer. He's a high-profile business and community man. He won't want an obvious connection to a drug dealer. They should lean on him. Callen asks Nate for more info on Wexling.

Kensi and Deeks find what looks to be a cartel site, and they call it in to Eric.

Hanna and Callen approach Wexling. Hanna tells him they are federal agents who would like to ask him a few questions. He tells them that he has to pay Memo extortion monies to keep his people and businesses safe. He tells them he has to do this because they aren't doing their job in 'the war against drugs'. If they have any other questions, they should ask them through his attorney.

Kensi and Deeks eyeball the two missing marines in the camp they found. They are both injured. There are three shooters. Kensi and Deeks are heading out, and Callen is asking Eric to get him a lift out of there now. The cartel guys see the bikes, and give chase on ATVs. One of them fires at Deeks. His big spins out and he hits the dirt.

Kensi knocks out the marines guard, and tries to hide the marines. She also attempts to contact Deeks but he's laying on the ground. When one of the cartel kicks him to try to make sure he's dead, Deeks flips over and shoots him. The rest of the cartel is looking for the hostages. Deeks shows up and opens fire. They arm the marines, and Kensi calls Eric to tell him they are pinned down. The cartel has a grenade launcher, and the team in the copter is still ten minutes away. Kensi sees a vehicle nearby they can take. Deeks says he'll draw their fire, and she and the marines can make a run for it. While Deeks holds their fire, she attempts to hot wire the SUV. As she is doing so, the helicopter arrives. The guys in the copter take out all the cartel guys and NCIS clears the area.

They don't look like Cartel members. They're working for Donald Wexling. He refuses to answer any questions without his attorney being present. Hanna says because they have proof he paid to have U.S. Marines kidnapped and killed, he's going to need a whole team of attorneys.

Nate's packing up and heading out. He tells Hetty she's taught him a lot. She tells him he's an important part of this team and he always will be. They say good-bye.

Summary: A Marine with a top-level security clearance is found dead and missing a hand in Beverly Hills. His death appears to be connected to a recent tour in Iraq.

Mall security guards see a probable pickpocket incident. They start jumping through all the cams, trying to track the perp. When they see an altercation in the parking garage, they notify the closest guard to check it out. While he's doing so, he hears horrified reactions from a couple, and goes to investigate. There is a body on the ground, throat slashed and missing his right hand above the wrist.

G, Kensi and Sam are trying to decide what they should get Hetty for her birthday. Martie shows up and tries to help them brainstorm. She always says she doesn't want any gifts or a party, so they always do the opposite (just in case she didn't mean it). When Martie suggests clothes, Kensi sends the noncommittal "drop it" smile to indicate that Hetty is listening.

The team gets summoned upstairs by Nell Jones to find out about the latest case. The body on the floor is Corporal Porter from Camp Pendleton. Hanna notes that the expensive mall where he was found is way above his pay grade. Eric is trying to fill the team in, but Nell keeps interrupting at all the best moments. The severed hand is missing, but everything worth anything was left behind - watch, keys, and wallet (which was full of cash and credit cards). Nell mentions that BHPD is working up forensics.

Hettie states that Porter was working in Pendleton's G-2 office. Nell proceeds to interrupt HER to state that everyone in that office has a top secret security clearance. Even clerks. The team is holding their breath, but Hettie finally smiles and says she was just getting to that. Commander Vance wants them in charge to make sure that NCIS was not compromised. BHPD has agreed to let them take lead.

Hanna asks about security footage. They see what the guards saw, and wonder why Porter's hand was taken. Nell suggests that they might need his prints for access to sensitive material. Hettie thinks that's a strong possibility. Porter just got back from a tour of duty in Iraq a few weeks ago. They came up with a couple of people to talk to, one being his best friend and the other is possibly bad blood.

G tells Deeks and Kensi to work with BHPD forensics. Nell tells Hettie she hears she's a tea drinker, and gives a quote about tea. Hettie looks like she's about to say something, but she turns and leaves.

Hanna and G go talk to PFC James Winston. Turns out Porter owed him a couple grand. Which is enough for bad blood, but not enough to kill a man over. Winston says he was slow paying him back, but he'd lent him money before and he always came through. Porter was supposed to have a business deal coming through, was going to pay off big. Winston said he was in the barracks at the time of the murder.

BHPD came through on the forensics. Porter bled out. His carotid artery and jugular vein were severed by a very sharp blade between 7-12" in length.

Peterson tells G and Hanna that Porter has a girlfriend, Diane Farley. They were thinking about getting married, but she thought he was cheating on her.

Eric tells Nell he really doesn't want her finishing his sentences. She has a Type A personality, borderline ADD and control issues with men she admires. It's something she's aware of. All Eric really heard was that she admires him. She says stop, and he thinks she means talking, but she meant stop the tape. They see Porter had a case cuffed to his wrist and come to the conclusion that whoever cut off Porter's hand wanted what was inside that case.

The handcuffs could have been snapped with a bolt cutter. Nobody needed to take his hand off to get to it. So the $64,000 question is what was inside the briefcase. Nothing sensitive has come up missing from Porter's G-2 unit. Hanna runs through the possibilities of what could be inside.

Deeks and Kensi arrive to question Diana Farley. She doesn't know anything except that he was different when he got back from Iraq. He was talking nonstop about high-ticket items. He wanted to replace her tiny band and diamond with something bigger and flashier.

Eric and Nell are discussing Porter's last day on earth. When he filled up his tank, he bought an herbal drink that calms. That led them to conclude he was trying to calm down, he was nervous about something. He took $60 out of the ATM. He made two trips to Los Angeles in less than 48 hours. The downtown garage is inside the California Jewelry Mart.

Hanna and G go there to find out if he was buying jewelry to sell, or selling it. The guy behind the counter claimed he didn't recognize Porter's picture, until G hauled out his badge. G asked him if somebody was looking to sell something they shouldn't be selling, who would they go to? The salesman said Jacob Rosen, third floor.

Jacob's office is closed at 10:15 a.m. The security panel isn't lit, so G and Hanna let themselves in, guns drawn. They find a bloody hand on the floor, but it's Rosen's - and he's dead. Hanna figures that the second hand was cut off to send a message. LAPD lets them have the case. Hanna thinks they're being nice, but actually Rosen didn't have a computer. It's going to eat a lot of man hours to get through his records.

Hettie wonders aloud how she put up a group that was so unappreciative of the hand-written ledger. It has so much meaning to the writer, and by extension to the reader as well. G thinks they're coming up empty, but Kensi finds information showing he did work with four Rodeo Drive jewelers on a regular basis.

Eric and Nell checked the four out, and none seemed to have any relevance, except one. That gentleman is a devout Muslim. Aziz Anshiri was a prominent jeweler during Saddam Hussein's regime, serving the President's family himself. During Porter's tour in Iraq, his squad leader was accused of stealing valuables from a house they raided in Baghdad. And not just any valuables: ancient jewelry looted from the National Museum in '03. Over half the valuables are still missing to this day. Jacob Rosen's phone records indicate that he called Anshiri just a few days ago. G's guess is that Porter stole something in Iraq that had already been stolen from the museum, and took it home.

Hettie hands over her prize possession; a Rolex rumored to be the most collected ever. Deeks jokes about if it has any Bond-like capabilities, and she retorts "you scratch it, you buy it." She provides Kensi with a bracelet that went missing during the looting of the National Museum. Both Kensi and Deeks stop themselves from asking how she got it.

When they arrive at the jewelry store, they pretend to be looking for an engagement ring. When Anshiri catches sight of Kensi's bracelet, he becomes very serious and asks where she got it. She says 'a friend'. He tells her he can't help them, and they must leave. Kensi calls G and tells him Anshiri is definitely sketchy.

Anshiri seems nervous, and G and Hanna follow him into a primo restaurant. They were going to lie their way in, but Anshiri comes out with three other men. G gets a pic and the men panic. He managed to send it to Eric who took all of two seconds to get a hit. The guys name is Salim Al-Jamal, and he's a major player in terrorist funding for Al-Quaida.

While G and Hanna are questioning Anshiri, Martie and Kensi are going through his house. They are surprised by Mrs. Anshiri, who apparently did not know they were present, despite the fact that they were there with a warrant.

Anshiri is adamant that he has never met Corporal Porter. Hanna makes the point that according to the Koran, lying is an abomination. Anshiri continues to deny ever dealing with Porter. Finally he rattles off what all America has done to Iraq, and given her actions, asks why they are calling HIM a terrorist.

At the bottom of a small tool chest, Kensi finds a blood-stained knife wrapped in a paper bag. She calls Hanna. Because it was wrapped in a paper bag, he knows that Anshiri is being set up. If he had done it, it would have been wrapped in a ceremonial cloth. A necklace was found in with the knife, which belonged to an ancient Queen of Mesopotamia, now known as Iraq. G concludes that whoever killed Porter and set up Anshiri either knew Porter or Rosen; or both.

While checking the traffic cams, Nell and Eric find an SUV that was just two blocks from Anshiri's. That same vehicle entered the parking garage just an hour before Porter was murdered. Eric adjusts the angle and is able to get the license plate. The car belongs to Winston, the one Porter owed money to. When they question him, he's adamant. He wasn't there. They ask who could have a key, like a washer or repair guy. He said he washes it himself. The only person who had access to his keys was Peterson, Porter's best friend.

Peterson didn't show up for work that morning, left them a man short. One of the motor pool guys says that Peterson's girlfriend's name is Ellen in San Ysidro, and that's all he knows. G calls Eric and asks him to track her down. He and Nell run a reverse look-up on his call log and come up with her name and address. G and Sam go out to question her, Peterson leaps in his hummer and speeds away. They realize he's making a run for the border. If he makes it, he's safe. They're in hot pursuit, literally on his bumper.

When they stop him, Sam orders him hands out window. He puts out his left hand, but the right hand comes up with a gun. They shoot first and take him out.

Peterson was the missing link. Porter told his best friend about what he'd stolen in Iraq. Peterson hooked him up with his old boss, who hooked him up with Anshiri. Best friend kills Porter and Rosen, sets up Anshiri, and uses Winston's car when he's in LA so he can't be id'd.

Hettie comes out with a small blue box, and gives it to Kensi. Says BHPD found it in Porter's personal effects, and she should know what to do with it. The gang finally let Hettie's birthday pass without incident, but Nell wasn't on the same page. She dropped balloons from the ceiling and gave Hettie a perfect scarf. She says it's from all of them, but Hettie doesn't buy it. She invites everybody in her office for the single malt.

Kensi hangs behind, and calls Diane Farley about her engagement ring.

Production Code: 205
Summary: The NCIS team must race the clock to save a Naval Commander's daughter who's been buried alive. The case is linked to a man already in prison for three similar murders.

A male voice is heard asking a 14 year-old girl, Amanda, to tell him a bit about herself. He asks if she has a boyfriend, and she says no. He acts like he doesn't believe her, because he thinks he is. Her dad, Navy Commander Jason Rehme, arrives home, and notes that Daniel is videotaping his daughter in the hot tub, and he orders Daniel to leave, now. When Daniel does so, the dad then sends Amanda to bed.

Amanda is awakened by a noise outside her window. She dresses and goes outside, thinking it's Daniel, but he doesn't answer when she calls out. When she sees a beer bottle on the table, she says "Daddy?" but still no response. Somebody in black approaches from behind and places a plastic bag over her head and face.

When she comes to, she is in a box, with duct tape over her mouth, which she promptly removes. She checks her cell, and it has no signal. She begins calling for help, rapidly becoming hysterical.

Callen and Hanna arrive at work, discussing Hanna's fear of clowns. Kensi has a fear of back hair on men. Emminently shudder-worthy. She has an alias at a dating site. Deeks finds it and proceeds to mock her unmercifully. They all head upstairs when Eric gives them the whistle signal to join Hetty.

Eric starts the meeting with a picture of Commander Jason Rehme. He is responsible for designing the cryptograph logons used by the Department of Naval Personnel with the highest security clearance. He literally holds the keys to the Navy's classified kingdom in his head. Hetty tells the group that Commander Jason Rehme is missing. He had an 0600 meeting that he never showed up for. He hasn't answered any calls, texts, or emails. Nell says that he'd be a prime target for both domestic and international terrorists. Hanna notes that we have therefore been compromised for about 1.5 hours. G asks for his last whereabouts, and the team moves out.

G, Sam, Kensi and Marty arrive at the Rehme home. The front door is locked, and they all pull their weapons. Deeks and Blye head around back while G jimmy's the door. Inside they find nothing unusual, but Kensi comes in to let them know she found blood. They're checking into where it leads, when Kensi says she found the commander. He's a wreck, and holding one of his daughter's flip-flops. He thinks he upset her last night, and went looking for her. She goes running on the trails in the morning. He explains to the team about how things had unfolded the night before, and how he handled it. Kensi asks for the boy's name, and the Commander tells them: Daniel Proeffler.

Hanna asked if Amanda's mom died, and Jason says four years ago, asking how Sam knew that. Sam says divorcees don't leave pictures of their ex all over the house. Jason says he just wanted to tell her he was sorry, and Sam says he'll be able to do that as soon as they find her.

The Commander gets a message. Says it's from Amanda, but that's not her email address. There's a web link, and Jason accesses it. He sees Amanda, unconscious within a box. The lid is then hammered into place. Sam flashes back to having been buried alive, himself.

FBI Senior Special Agent Lisa Rand wants to make sure the father isn't in the house when they play a video. Three other girls were buried in just such a manner two years ago, and they got the guy. Lucas Maragos. He's doing life, but everything about the case is the same. Same blue surgical gloves, duct tape across the mouth - everything. But since he's serving three consecutive life sentences, Rand says we have a copycat. Sam wants to know if the video was ever released to the public, and Rand says they were used as evidence during the trial. G wonders if Maragos had a partner, and Rand responds there was no evidence of such. She's going to go over the records and see if any names pop up.

Sam flashes on his attempts to escape. He wasn't buried alone, there was a fellow soldier in there with him named Lucas. Rand informs NCIS that the FBI will take it from here. As they are leaving, Rehme approaches them. He doesn't trust the FBI, he's Navy born and bred. He asks if there is any way that NCIS can stay on the case. G tells him it's outside their jurisdiction. Rehme says he lost his wife, he couldn't bear to lose his child as well. When G starts to reiterate that they can't, Sam cuts him off and tells Rehme they will see what they can do.

Sam asks Hetty if he can stay on the case. She tells him the same thing G said, but he disagrees. Rehme is the gatekeeper for all of the Navy's classified information, and NCIS is Navy. He believes that while the FBI is chasing the killer, Commander Rehme could be blackmailed. Hetty says it's an interesting thought. Sam says he's taking a leave of absence, and starts to walk away. Hetty asks him not to turn his back on her, she would never do that to him. She then says "find her."

Eric says the park where Amanda may be buried is huge, finding her would be comparable to the old needle/haystack scenario. And because her body temperature is dropping, infrared isn't a solution, either. The team decides to go over Amanda's video again, in comparison to the videos of the other three girls. They are struck by how exactly alike the four are.

Nell shows them a black Chevy Malibu leaving the park at 4:30 a.m. The vehicle has no plates, but is sporting unrepaired damage to the driver's side rear quarter panel. Because it's a relatively new vehicle, G figures they would have made an insurance claim. Eric turns up two matches in the LA area. The match turns up as a leased vehicle to Galea shipping, a Greek company that operates out of the Port of LA. The President of the company is Andre Maragos, brother of Lucas. Deeks gets sent out to the penitentiary where Lucas is incarcerated, to see if he can get any answers.

Eric states that FBI files indicate that all the boxes were buried at the same depth, and that their dimensions were exactly the same. By calculating remaining oxygen, Eric believes that Amanda has about nine hours to live. Sam sets an alarm on his cell, and asks that there be a countdown timer on the big screen and all the screens in the office, along with a picture of Amanda. He wants everybody to keep her foremost in their minds.

G, Sam and Kensi get out of the car, and G calls Eric to ask if they got anything off the security camera. He said no go, it's closed circuit and the alarm company indicates no recorders. G introduces himself to security, and Sam quietly tells Kensi to look around, see if she can find the Malibu. G and Sam follow the guard in to speak with Andre Maragos. He asks what this is about, and they ask about the Malibu. He denies knowing of any such vehicle. They tell him it's leased to his company, and he says they lease 50 cars. Sam's phone rings, and it's Kensi announcing she found the Malibu.

When they arrive at the garage, Maragos asks Kensi how she got in there, as the garage was locked. Mr. and Mrs. Maragos tell the agents that Jennifer, their personal assistant, drives this car. They are asked where Jennifer is now, and the answer is backpacking in Alaska.

G finds a picture of Andre and Lucas and asks him if they went to camp together. They did, but Andre states that Lucas is mentally ill. Sam asks specifically which camp, and it's the one in the National Forest that butts up against the Rehme home.

Lucas meets with Deeks. He tells Deeks he didn't kill those girls. Now that another one has gone missing, he may gain his freedom. Marty asks if Andre is his partner, did they work as a team. Lucas says no. He thinks Andre did it. The DNA says Lucas did it, but he says nobody checked Andre's DNA. Lucas offers to help NCIS if they help get him out of there.

Andre is offering any help he can to G. When asked where he was last night, he was home with his wife. Sam calls Kensi and tells her that Andre claims he was home with the wife last night. She says she'll see what she can do, and goes to question the wife. She says he was home last night, and he didn't do it. Kensi says she doesn't think he did, either. But she bets he wasn't home last night, and that his wife would like to know where he was. Kensi asks again, and the wife doesn't answer; but that's Kensi's answer, and she relays it to Sam.

Sam goes in and gives the information to Kensi. When Andre hears that his wife gave him up, he claims he was at work, and now he wants a lawyer. Conversation over.

Eric confirms that Andre was at work all night, but Sam doesn't buy it. His cell phone being there doesn't mean he was there. Sam wants witnesses or video confirmation. G says Andre's attorney has gone before the judge to get him out. Sam fears that Andre is a flight risk. If he gets out and runs to a country with no reciprocity, they may never see him again.

G goes to talk to Hetty about why they're on the case. He says he accepts Sam's privacy, but he needs to know what's going on. She gives him a document which he silently reads. Hetty advises G to stay close to Sam.

Eric and Sam discover that Andre's car and phone stayed at work, but he didn't. He took a company car - but not the Malibu.

Deeks calls and tells Sam he needs to be at the site where they are digging up the animal skeletons Lucas says Andre tortured and killed. Sam asks if there are any other sites, and Lucas refers him back to Andre. Sam uncuffs Lucas and takes him for a walk. Sam tells him he either shows him where there's another site, or he'll tell everyone how Lucas went for his gun and he was forced to defend himself. Lucas sees the error of his ways and says there are a few more sites. They hear the shovel hit a box, and they start digging faster. The box is opened, but it's the missing victim of the girls he went to prison for killing.

Lucas and Andre come face-to-face. Andre says Lucas is destroying his life, and Lucas retorts that he could say the same. Rand shows up and tells the brothers that if Amanda is found dead, it's going to constitute special circumstances, which translates to the death penalty. Lucas tells Andre he knows his dark side; he know what he's capable of. This time he can't pin it on Lucas, because Lucas was in prison.

Rand informs Andre that she got a court order to get a DNA sample from Andre and compare it to the DNA found on the bodies of the first girls. Andre insists that Lucas must have a partner, he hand-delivered his last victim to NCIS. They ask him where he was last night, since they know he left work.

Rehme shows up, asking which one did it. Sam tells him they don't know, could be neither of them. He asks how long his daughter has to live, and Sam says they estimate she has about six hours of oxygen left. Deeks tells Sam that Andre's lawyer just showed up with an order for release. He states that a woman has testified that she is Mr. Maragos' mistress. In light of her testimony that Andre was with her last night, the judge has ordered him released.

Sam says he's leaving to find Amanda. G follows him. He asks Sam what happened in Bosnia. Sam says that if G spoke to Hetty, then he knows. Sam fills him in on how things unfolded there. Sam recounts getting a tube out so he can get air. When he lights the last match, he sees that the man in there with him had died. The conversation is interrupted by Eric announcing a flight plan out of Burbank; Andre Maragos is trying to leave the country.

Sam tells Eric to tell them to stop, but Eric tells him air traffic control has already attempted to stop him numerous times. Sam shoots out the front tires of the plane before it can take off, and the pilot is ordered to shut it down. They keep their guns drawn. Andre had his entire family on the plane with him. In questioning, he claims repeatedly that he was free to leave the country.

Sam asks him why he offered his pilot $1,000,000 to keep going, and get him to Venezuela. Once again he blamed his brother. Sam puts his hand around the nape of Andre's neck and whispers in his ear that he's not buying it.

Sam is called out of the room because they have something. The DNA is a rock-solid match for Lucas, and not Andre. They also have proof that he was with his mistress last night, as the couple made a video. There was a date and time stamp on the news that clearly proves the video was created that night. This brings them back to ground zero, because Andre was all they had.

Sam notices that in the video, the kidnapper removed the blue glove. He wants to make it look like a piece of evidence was left behind. He asks Eric to digitally make it happen. They'll then show the picture to Andre and Lucas, and see if a partner comes out of the woodwork. Nell says that whoever did it is going to return to the scene of the crime. And since they'll have the park staked out, they hope to find Amanda. Eric and Nell go to work creating the video. They show the video to Andre and Lucas. The boys walk in at Andre's, and his wife sends them back out again.

Kensi put GPS on the Malibu, and it's headed for the western part of the park. Eric wants recent photos from the camp in the park, and Nell goes looking. G and Sam arrive at the black Malibu. Eric tells them that he stopped moving 100 yards west of them, and they follow him in. There were two of them, Sam and G give chase. Nell finds that Amanda went to the camp. When they take down the runners, they are Andre's sons. Sam and G dig up the box while Sam flashes on being rescued. Sam gives Amanda mouth-to-mouth, and she starts breathing.

Rand tells G good job. Sam gives Amanda the dog tags of his dead buddy, for good luck. She runs into her father's arms. Sam walks away, smiling.

The boys said they wanted to "know what killing felt like."

G tells Sam that he sat in poison oak out there. Sam says he didn't, but Hetty says he did. She offers to give him a good thick slathering of calamine lotion, promising not to look while he removes his pants. When Hetty turns around, she's alone in the office.

Summary: After a downtown Navy Recruitment Center is held hostage, Callen mediates with his ex-partner, Tracy Keller, to uncover information about a hijacked shipment of Spike missiles.

The show opened with Marty laughingly playing the three card trick in the NCIS LA headquarters with a few of his male team members. He quickly moved the three cards about the table, all the while egging his companions on, taking bets as to whom might pick the winning card. Surprisingly, one of them won, leaving Marty with egg on his face, so to speak. He had been so very sure that none of them would win, even though he seemed to be giving them broad hints as to where the winning card might lie, though, in reality, he was giving them some misleading information. All the while, one of the other team members was filming the card action from the upper floor of the building.

The team received a call from LAPD that a female had invaded the Naval recruitment building across town, taking many male and female hostages, forcing them to stand on chairs in front of the windows of the structure to protect herself whilst she negotiated with LAPD for release, then she demanded to talk with her ex partner, (and ex-husband) Callen who rushed to the scene. Callen conversed with the woman via phone and found out it was Tracy Keller, his ex-partner and ex-wife who had disappeared five years ago without an explanation. Tracy demanded that Callen enter the building and talk with her because she said her life was in danger and she could not come outside. Fearfully, Callen entered the building and talked with her, asking her if she understood just how dangerous a move she had made and why she had made it. Tracy stated that "they were after her" and explained the predicament to him: she claimed that she and another partner had come into possession of some sim cards that operated some stolen Spikes missiles. She told Callen that the sim cards were safely ensconced in a certain warehouse across town and that a certain arms dealer and his men wanted the cards and missiles.

Callen seemed taken aback by all this and demanded proof upon which Tracy told him the address of the warehouse. Meanwhile, some of the NCIS LA team members were busily jamming the electronics in the Naval Recruitment building to be able to listen in on Tracy's conversation with Callen for his own safety.

Tracy tried to arouse Callen's past affection for her as his ex-wife, but she didn't seem to get anywhere with him. Callen told her that he would go with her to the warehouse as soon as it was safe for the two of them to leave the building. Outside the recruitment center, the LAPD and FBI were fretting, guns and other protective equipment at the ready in case Tracy were to make a fatal move. They noticed that the hostages were trickling from the front of the building one by one, but were still on guard. An LAPD sniper had been stationed on the roof of a building across the street and was shot in the back of the neck. A surveillance camera caught his killer, the corrupt FBI agent John White, one of three corrupt agents in on the illicit sim cards and stolen missiles deal.

Sam instructed Tracy to call Agent John White to meet her at the beach where they would talk about and seal the deal. What Tracy did not know was that White intended to kill her, but she did strongly suspect him. The team was waiting nearby in various disguises to protect her. When White approached her, he drew his gun and she did, also, warning him not to shoot. He surrendered his gun and was going for the backup gun hidden in his sock when Sam winged him. Tracy fired two rounds which killed him. Sam and the others came running. Tracy explained to Sam that she knew White had intended to kill her and had no regrets shooting him. Sam had to agree and the body was removed.

Meanwhile, Callen and Tracy traveled to the warehouse she had told him about in the guise of arms sellers. Tracy had called the number of the arms buyer/dealer to meet them at the isolated warehouse to peruse the weapons. Once there, Tracy offered the arms dealer a sim card to test a missile. He aimed it at a metal shipping container which Sam was hiding behind and fired, totally destroying the container. Sam indicated via radio to the other team members that he was alright and to watch Tracy carefully, protect her and Callen. The arms dealer demanded another sim card to shoot another missile which Tracy handed over once more, but this time, the sim card did not seem to work which made the arms dealer very suspicious. He drew his gun and fired, missing Tracy and Callen, and the NCIS team moved in with gunfire all around. One of the arms dealer's men was killed and the arms dealer drove his car into a truck, smashing the front end of his car, making it inoperable. The team closed in on him, handcuffing him. The sim cards and stolen missiles were recovered.

Tracy begged Callen, for old time's sake, to let her go, to not arrest her. He did, with misgivings. Later, near the end of the show, Callen stepped aboard a sumptuous yacht that Tracy had purchased for herself. The scene was in the Cayman Islands on a beautiful day on the water. Tracy tried once again to seduce Callen into coming back to her, to try to restore their old relationship, stating that she missed him, still loved him very much, but Callen realized that too much time had gone by, too many things had happened. for that to come about again. He asked Tracy why she had disappeared on him five years ago and she merely said that she was just keeping him safe, that at that time she had become mixed up in something very dangerous and that he, as an FBI agent, would have been killed. Callen asked Tracy what her real name was and as she was saying Rosetti, Sam stepped out onto deck, joining them. Tracy turned to Callen as Callen told her, "You really didn't think that I would show up without my partner, did you?" He said it with an ironic, somewhat sad smile and bade Tracy a reluctant goodbye as he and Sam left her boat.

Summary: After a state department employee and a plastic surgeon are murdered by a group of terrorists, the NCIS team must frantically search for the only witness who can identify the killers.

The show opened with a pretty young blond surgeon's wife, Jillian, running up the steps of the LA Federal building, handing a large manila envelope to a tall African American man who was then promptly assaulted by a man in LAPD motorcycle police garb. The two men struggled violently after the man in uniform shot his pistol at Jillian, but missed. The two men fell down the steps and the assailant drew his gun once more, firing directly at the victim, killing him, then escaping. The attacker's name was Michael Bonds, one of a small group of Mogadishu terrorists lying low in Los Angeles.

Agent Dekes and his partner were shown the Federal building's surveillance tapes, displaying, closeup, the attack on the front steps of the building, but it did not make any sense that someone would want to attack the petite woman. Dekes surmised that what the assailant was after was lying in the manila envelope that the man had stolen from Jillian, but what might it be? It was determined that Jillian was a nurse working at a posh plastic surgeon's office, her husband the owner and surgeon she worked for. Jillian was pregnant, trying to protect herself and her unborn child, but she didn't want it to be public knowledge since this man was after her and whatever the envelope had contained.

FBI Agents Sam and Dekes traced down the clinic owned by Jillian and her cosmetic surgeon husband, found the front door wide open, drew their guns and quickly looked the place over, finding her husband shot to death on an office floor. The agents called for backup to have the body removed and set off to find Jillian. Records found at the office confirmed Sam's suspicions that a terrorist cell organization was involved, this time from Mogadishu. The records showed that at least four men from Mogadishu had had facial surgeries performed by the now deceased surgeon, Sam suspecting that he had been forced to do by the terrorists. Back at the lab, the electronics experts traced one suspect by his IP address to a posh apartment building in downtown Los Angeles. The agents hurried to the building, quietly climbing the stairs to the third floor but not knowing the precise number of the apartment. Cleverly, Agent Dekes pulled the fire alarm handle at one of the floor's hallway, thus flushing out the suspect and as the man ran to the rooftop, the agents shouted at him to stop, but he refused to. He climbed up on the parapet, teetering dangerously back and forth, finally jumping but managing to catch the edge of the parapet. He demanded loudly that the agent let him go, to let him die, but the agent refused. The man pulled a pistol from the back of his pants and fired wildly, forcing the agent to let him drop to his death below. He was dead when the agents got to the scene.

Agent Dekes and a female partner found that Jillian might have taken off to an exclusive health and beauty spa in the distant hills, so they traveled there to find her, if possible. Agent Dekes decided to pose as his partner's agent, to keep suspicion from entangling them further in the case. Once at the spa, he poured on the schmaltz, angering his partner who did not dare put a bad face on the act. A staff member was giving the two a thorough tour of the place when Dekes spotted a frightened and obviously nervous Jillian standing near the private wing before entering. Dekes asked what that portion of the clinic was, was reassured that it was only for very private clients. He waved his partner and the staff member on, pretending that he had a very important call to make. As the two women left, Dekes rushed into the private wing, but had no idea what he was in for. He had invaded a large locker room for women in various stages of undress, who screamed and protested loudly. One woman pepper-sprayed him directly in the eyes, resulting in a very sore set of peepers for Dekes. He promptly and blindly blundered from the room, falling on the grass outside.

His partner rushed back, rescuing him and leading him back to their vehicle, driving them both back to the Federal building. Jillian herself had absconded to a friend's house, location at present unknown to the agents, but tracing her cell phone call records, it pointed to a house of a friend. Agent Dekes and his partner drove to this friend's house and questioned him. His partner coyly distracted the man's attention whilst she pocketed a bottle of pre natal vitamins from the counter. Outside, she showed it to Dekes, saying that only a pregnant woman would need to take those, thus determining that Jillian was pregnant. The two partners circled the house outside, finding Jillian attempting to run from the house unnoticed, but they caught her, taking her back to the Federal building and questioning her. Agent Sam asked her some probing queries, getting her to tell him that her husband had been mixed up with the terrorists, forced to perform the facial surgeries and his life threatened. Her husband, Adam, had handed her the manila envelope containing vindicating information about the thugs, telling her to meet him on the steps of the Building, but never made it. He had been killed by the thugs and she knew it.

Meanwhile, back at the lab, the electronics experts were diligently trying to break what they thought was a terrorist code, using every tool within their means, finally working together to track down a large storage unit at the Marina. Once there, they used the code they'd figured out to find all the ingredients needed for making serum nerve gas to kill thousands of people. Using further logic, they traced down a large black tie event to be held aboard the ship Queen Mary, which the governor was to attend that night.

All the agents who could be spared and Jillian herself were at the event, Jillian closing watching for the two remaining terrorists. After some time, she spotted one posing as a waiter, the other just observing and attending. Both men were chased down and shot, killed because they resorted to using guns to fire at the agents.

Once all returned to the lab, the boss insisted that the three male agents change out of "her" tuxedos even though they had been talking about going out and spending some time in male bonding. She had to reiterate that they were to change "now" and they shuffled off halfheartedly to return them. She arched her eyebrows and shook her head, exclaiming that they really needed to learn some manners, but smiling after their retreating backs.

Summary: When a former Army Sergeant responsible for hunting down high-value targets is found dead, the NCIS team searches for terrorist leaders suspected of his murder. Meanwhile, Deeks bonds with a person of interest in the case, making him more determined than ever to track down the killers.

A newly retired Army Major from a elite Delta Force unit that tracked high value targets in the War on Terror is found tortured and murdered. NCIS:LA discovers the victim, Richard Booth, was planning on returning to the Middle East as a bounty hunter to collect millions of dollars in reward money. His son Brandon, who hated his absentee father, is a suspect until two Afghan thugs enter a restaurant and try to kill him while Callen and Sam are questioning him; they shoot the thugs but Brandon disappears.

Meanwhile, Hetty, Deeks, and Kensi question an intelligence informant for the U.S government with diplomatic immunity, Jafar Khan, who has made millions helping Booth's unit catch high value targets; he also happens to be Booth's brother-in-law. Jafar tells the team Booth was his partner and he planned to return to Afghanistan after receiving Intel which would yield them ten million dollars. Jafar claimed his loyalty to Booth but the evidence pointed toward Jafar hiring the Afghan thugs to torture Booth and kill him for the high value targets Intel.

NCIS is working against the clock knowing they could lose Booth's killer and the high value target within a matter of hours. The team's suspicions are validated when Eric discovers a spectron seal embedded in a picture Booth mailed to his son Brandon. It contained the location of the target and the time the Intel was valid. Callen and Sam, with the help of Booth's Delta Force unit, go undercover in Afghanistan and catch Jafar using the Intel he received while torturing Booth but Callen informs Jafar he no longer has immunity in Afghanistan and takes him into custody.

Summary: When a murdered antiques dealer's book of top-secret information goes missing, Hetty sends the NCIS team on a mission to find it.

An antiques dealer named Sebastian Renner was preparing for a trip out of the country when his chauffeur came to tell him the limousine was ready. Renner said that he could bring the car round and walked toward the front door of the posh mansion set high in the Hollywood hills of Los Angeles, complete with a breath taking view of the city. The chauffeur helped Renner into the long vehicle and began the long drive down the winding private driveway. In the limo's back seat, Renner was going through some papers in his briefcase, speaking to the chauffeur when he heard a gunshot and saw bright red blood appear in a spatter on the windshield. He called the chauffeur's name frantically, and receiving no reply, panicked and lunged for the car's steering wheel, bringing it to a sudden emergency stop. More shots were fired through the car's windows as Renner scrambled out of the back seat and hit the ground running, still clutching his expensive leather briefcase containing those important papers. Another shot brought Renner down to his knees as he ran back up the hill toward his mansion, causing him to hit the pavement. He was dead before his head hit the ground as the two gunmen got to him, looking through the briefcase and not finding what they were after, ran toward the mansion. Once there, they rifled through the big house, trashing it quite thoroughly, then leaving in a rush.

Hetty Cole, NCIS boss, filled the agents in on what had happened up on the hill, telling them that Renner seemed to have used the antiques business as a front for his real business of being an arms seller, and she wasn't sure what those foreign operatives had been after, but she had a hunch that she was keeping to herself. She sent agents Sam and Callen to search Renner's mansion, to try to figure out what the operatives might have been looking for. Meanwhile, Hetty disappeared on a mission of her own, not telling anyone at NCIS headquarters what she was about. At the Renner mansion, Sam and Callen found the house trashed and while they were in the front room talking, they heard a commotion upstairs. Suddenly, two large German Shepherd dogs appeared on the landing overhead and chased the agents to the front gate, which the men climbed over. Callen pointed out to a frustrated Sam that Sam's car was still in the mansion's driveway; how were they to get back to headquarters?

Hetty walked into a well kept comfortable large nursing home to see her husband, Bertram Cole, who had suffered a stroke caused by blood loss from two bullet holes, two bullets fired by Hetty at him in 1981. She had been a Cold War American operative then and had managed to capture and nearly kill Cole, but had not been able to get the information she needed, wanted, from Cole at that time. Being a warm hearted woman, she had put Cole into the nursing home under an assumed name and pretended to be his wife. She had been coming to the facility for years now, reading to him every week, looking after his needs in hopes of perhaps being able to gain the needed information from the man, but having no success so far. He was doing as well as could be hoped by now, but Hetty suspected that he had Alzheimer's now. Back in the day, she had been trying to locate Cole's little black book of foreign operatives and the information it contained, but had never found it nor managed to convince Cole to give her its' location, but she was persistent. Hetty suspected that this was what the operatives had killed Renner for. When she questioned Cole about the matter on this occasion, he said that she would never find it, that he could not recall where it was and for her to just give it up. She left Cole in the care of a nurse when he became very angry with her and returned to headquarters.

A man's name was found on Renner's cell phone which connected him with The Pacific Design Center, and it was suspected that this man had been Renner's gay lover. When Sam and Callen went into the Center, they walked toward an office and overheard a man trying to revive the same man they went to interrogate. This man was unconscious, having been given something that was meant to kill him, but it was unsuccessful. Sam and Callen exchanged gunfire with two men and one man was killed, the other taken into custody and to the hospital where he survived surgery. The two men proved to be the same foreign operatives who had assassinated Renner. The surviving gunman told agents that he was after the information book that Renner was purported to have in his possession, but they hadn't found it, either.

Hetty sent agents Deek and Bligh back to the Renner mansion to see what they might find. A tiny Victorian book of the Gospel of Mark was found and investigated at the lab. It was discovered that Renner had put microdots into this small volume which bore Cold War information that proved too out of date to be of use to the FBI, so where was the vaunted information?

Hetty asked agents Sam and Callen to go talk to Cole at the nursing home. Maybe they might be able to get something out of him that Hetty could not. Cole was legally blind and could see nothing, but sometimes his wits were still sharp and when the agents asked him where the book was, he told them that he was not about to reveal its location to them, to Hetty or anyone. It would do them no good to ask. He told them that he had kept that book while he had been a Cold War spy in Germany and had given it to Renner in exchange for being smuggled into the US. Hetty had told the agents back at headquarters that she did not think Cole actually knew where the book was.

Coming up with a last gasp idea, Hetty met up with a German male spy from her Cold War days in a large open air theater in the hills above the city. She asked him When she asked him if he knew the book's location, he said he didn't know and where was Cole? Hetty told him that Cole had died long ago on that day in 1981, but the spy said he knew better and that they two were remnants of a world long past and wasn't it sad? Hetty smiled wryly and said that she did know where old man Cole was, but that he would be of no use now to anyone. Some days Cole did not even know his own name. Nevertheless, the spy pulled out his gun and told Hetty that he would exchange her for Cole, so why not just give him to him? Hetty said, go ahead, shoot away, and sat back down to await her fate. He aimed the gun and was going to fire when several agents appeared on the steps surrounding the amphitheater with guns. The spy was shot in the hand by Sam as the agents closed in on him and he gave up. He was taken into custody.

Hetty went to visit Bertram Cole that night, opening the door to his dark, quiet room and found him dead in bed, his bedclothes and pajamas covered in blood. Gasping in shock, she backed quietly out of the room and went back down the darkened corridor. This episode will be continued next week.

Summary: Now in a race with other foreign agencies, Hetty and the team continue their search for the antiques dealer's missing book containing worldwide secrets.

Last week, Hetty Cole walked into her husband, Bertram Cole's, room at a posh Los Angeles nursing home only to find him shot dead and covered in his own blood, lying across his bed. A nurse, whom Hetty told Callen and Sam had been kind to Bertram, was also dead in his room, lying shot on the floor. Hetty remarked that the rules had changed since her inception into the Cold War and she didn't understand how two helpless and innocent people could have been murdered like they had been. The little black book that Bertram had hidden was said to contain important spy information dating from thirty years back, at least, and it could not be found. Where could it be, Hetty mused?

Hetty sent Agent Jones to search dead millionaire and supposed antiques dealer Renner's posh mansion high atop the Hollywood Hills for that little black book when she managed to locate an old paperback book from the 1970s that bore microdots of long past information, not useful to any one now. Hetty thanked Jones for her diligence and told her to begin making a copy of the book. It was going to be used to confound and confuse the foreign operatives after the book. Jones began work at once on the desired product.

Cold War German spy Matthias called Hetty on her cell phone and asked for a meeting. She met with him, his arm in a sling from a bullet fired into it by Sam the previous week. Nothing much was decided, just that Matthias really wanted that little black book, if indeed it did exist. Matthias said that he was cooperating with the CIA in exchange for his freedom if he could hand over the little black book. What he did not tell her at the time was that he was also dealing with Russian operatives in exchange for a very large sum of money, that he was double crossing both the CIA and the Russians and that he was not at all worried about the consequences of his future actions when they both found out.

At the nursing home, Callen and Bligh found the surveillance cameras had been ripped out and the security tapes stolen, but a camera had been hidden in something in the hallway and that tape proved to show two young thought-to-be Russian male operatives. Agent Deeks said that he knew the two young men and that they were possibly Russian military intelligence, and they had obviously been after the much hoped for little black book. Hetty told him to find out whatever he could about the two men. Meanwhile, agent Jones had found a hidden safe deposit box key at Renner's mansion and brought it back to CBI headquarters where she turned it over to Hetty, who told her to track down the bank to which it might belong. It proved to belong to the Certified National Bank in downtown Los Angeles.

A sting operation was set up across the street from the Certified National Bank downtown and agents Sam and Callen, using binoculars, discovered that Matthias was parked across the street from them. Matthias mentioned that in exchange for the little black book that was hoped by all to be lying safely in that safe deposit box, he would allow the team to leave unharmed. A quick discussion among Callen and Sam with Bligh standing outside the car they were sitting in whipped up an impromptu plan. Bligh asked for some gum from Callen before she left the car. Sticking it into her mouth, chewing it, she went into the bank and stuck the gum under a counter and pressing the safe deposit key into it, she milled around a bit in the lobby and left. Sam and Callen had entered just behind her and after Sam retrieved the key, he told a clerk that he had power of attorney for Renner and wanted to retrieve anything left in the box. He gave the name Maruice Tony Greyson, which cleared him to look into the box. The clerk opened the box and handed it to him, and when she turned to go, she saw Matthias standing at the door of the room. She asked him if she could help him, but he had seen that the box was empty when Sam opened it, and turning on his heel, Matthias left the bank empty handed, a grim expression on his face.

Deeks and Bligh followed a car containing several young Russian operatives who stopped and got out, aiming their guns at the agents who followed suit. They were standing there threatening each other when Deeks suggested that the Russians take him hostage. They took Bligh instead and placed her in a stadium bathroom laced with lasers hooked up to trigger a bomb if they were broken. Deeks went back to the CBI headquarters, mentally kicking himself all the way, but when he told Hetty about the abduction, she told him that it was not his fault and that he had done the very best he could at the time.

A visual computer link was sent to CBI headquarters by the Russians to show the agents where Bligh was being held captive. Immediately, Hetty told Sam and Callen and Deeks to head out there, which they did. Sam and Callen searched the stadium for the Russians whilst Deeks found Bligh in the women's bathroom of the facility. Bligh immediately told Deeks to shut off the light, showing him the lasers. Deeks mentioned that this was why Bligh had not moved at all when the agents viewed the link back at headquarters. She was covered in sweat from the strain of holding still. Deeks came up with a brilliant idea: using a laser on his own gun that would and could be used to disrupt the lasers crossing the bathroom. He used it to temporarily erase one so that Bligh could come closer to the door, but another one was set up too high. He said she would have to cross this one on her own, which she did by bending and contorting her limber body. Finally she was nearly free of the red light beams when the last one caught her foot, but Deeks grabbed her and together they flung themselves from the room just as the bomb went off. They didn't sustain any injuries, happily. Meanwhile, agents Sam and Callen had found and shot the Russians who died at the scene. The Russians had done their best to kill the agents. Callen had handed over the fake black book that Jones had prepared to one Russian and he had walked off, but now was lying dead at the agents' feet.

Matthias called Hetty's phone for one more meeting, this time in a parking garage near downtown. The two met and he told her that he had double crossed both the CIA and the Russians in exchange for his freedom and lots of money. He said that he knew there was no little black book, never had been. Hetty agreed with him. The two parted after Hetty cautioned him that he would be hunted for the rest of his days. He did not seem to mind.

Later that day, a musing Hetty returned to the nursing home where Bertram had been murdered and a scene from the past crossed her mind in which Bertram was telling her that it was all history now. She remembered that he had given her a book entitled "The Red Badge of Courage". She smiled wryly and went back to CBI headquarters where she retrieved the old book from her desk and took it to her bank, depositing it in her safe deposit box. She knew that the vaunted spy information was somewhere in that book, but what did it matter now? The Cold War was long over and Bertram Cole was dead. The information would lie dormant and unused now because if it were ever found, that many more deaths would be the result of it getting out. No one but Hetty knew where it was now. Let it lie. Matthias was sitting outside the bank where Hetty stood when Agents Sam, Callen and Bligh walked up to his car and threatened him with divulging his mistress and his many secret bank accounts to his wife back in Germany if Matthias ever bothered Hetty again, and perhaps more. Matthias was shocked, surprised, taken aback and agreed to leave Hetty alone, though it was plain to the agents that he did not like the impromptu agreement. He drove off and the agents looked satisfied.

Summary: The sole survivor of a deadly shootout is a former Navy Intelligence officer who is suffering from post traumatic stress disorder. As the team investigates, Kensi is able to connect on a personal level with the survivor which may help solve the case.

It's the holiday season in Los Angeles. Carolers are singing Christmas songs in a quiet neighborhood when gunshots are fired. A bloody figure shows up at the door and they find two men inside that have been shot to death. After discovering that the bloody man is actually a former Navy Intelligence agent, Hetty's team at NCIS:LA is called in to work on the case. Brent Talbot, the Navy Intelligence agent suffers from PTSD. NCIS:LA is tasked with figuring out who killed the men in Brent's home and finding out if there is a link between the murders and Brent's work in Afghanistan.

Brent's psychiatrist tells the team that PTSD is hampering Brent's life and Kensi empathises. She tells Brent that her ex-fiancé had also suffered from PTSD in the hopes that this would help Brent remember what happened during the night of the murders. She also brings him back to his home, the scene of the murder, to try and trigger a memory however Brent panics. He begins to go back and then admits to killing both of the men in an act of self defense. He did this after a drug dealer had shot the other man, Brent's nurse.

Kensi begins to get closer to Brent through this experience. However she is nearly killed when the Iranian Secret Police attempts to shoot Kensi in order to get to Brent. Sam and Callen are hard at work trying to learn more about Brent's past. They find an old fiancée that tells them that Brent is a pathological liar as well as a sociopath. Sam and Callen tell Kensi about this conversation and Brent catches on and attacks her. Brent attacks Kensi but she is saved by Deeks. Despite Deeks' gunshots, Brent gets away. The team chases him and they discover that Brent had faked his PTSD because he needed an alibi when he sold the intelligence he had working with the Navy over to the Iranian Secret Police. Brent's nurse had figured out his plan and used his friend, the drug dealer, to try and coerce Brent into giving them a cut of his profits. Kensi catches Brent and shoots him.

Back at the office, Hetty surprises her team with Christmas presents. They are shocked to see that Hetty had actually re-gifted them all with gifts they had given her in Christmases past.

Guest Stars:	Meena Serendib (Shari), Izzy Diaz (Edgar), Lois Mathilda Atkins (Larissa Bay), Ned Vaughn (Navy Commander Rearden), Aaron Abrams (Hector Lee), Kathleen Rose Perkins (Coroner Rose Schwartz)
Summary:	The NCIS team uncovers an experimental Navy tracking system when a body containing a top-secret residue is stolen from an autopsy room. Meanwhile, Callen challenges Hetty on the rock wall.

A coroner performing an autopsy finds a microscopic USN tag inside a body. When she steps out to call someone, an intern gets shot down by a pair of men stealing the body. One of them is hiding under a sheet on a gurney and sits up with a silenced gun to shoot. The woman grabs her cellphone and flees when she sees the intern in the doorway dead. She hides under a body bag with a corpse to evade the chaser. The shooter and his partner leave.

Meanwhile Hetty(Linda Hunt) slaps down Callen(Chris O'Donnell) verbally for grading all the colleagues at NCIS the same in their performance evaluations: great, perfect, fabulous. She challenges him to a feat of athleticism to get him to redo the reports and she bluffs and wins. He must evaluate the team for strengths and weaknesses. Did she really beat a Sherpa to Everest with a broken arm? Deeks rejects fitness and drinks too much coffee.

The residue on the body is at the center of the mystery. The tag may be involved in surreptitious Naval activity. The coroner, a young female, was calling Nate at the time of the shooting. This sounds classified to the NCIS staff, who review the closed circuit surveillance. LAPD hands over the case and the NCIS crew ponder why a half autopsied body was stolen. The coroner van taken is found on the street. Deeks and Kensi find a bomb inside, showing planning and advanced skills on the part of the thieves.

Yusef Afzal, the dead guy, is researched by the NCIS team. Born in America, no Interpol, no record. The bomb destroys traces of the body snatcher's identities. They analyze why a dead body is stolen. Proof of death, Satanaic ritual, the list goes on. They find no answer. Police call the event a home invasion that killed the dead man. He is a hospital employee, by the way.

Deeks and Kensi arrive at the dead man's home where neighbours reported a disturbance. The homicide is a 'cold case' with no suspects. They enter the dwelling to find a woman there. She challenges them on their identity and they do the same. She claims to be Yusef's girlfriend removing keepsakes, which she offers to them freely. The girlfriend is emotionally upset about any inference Yusef was a zealot or terrorist.

Deeks and partner conduct an interview. She says she met him at the hospital, where she works. They were friends for years. Yusuf's parents fled Beirut but he holds no religious ties or affiliations. His girlfriend becomes emotional when they suggest he might be a sleeper. She says she was working the night Yusef died. She says he rocked the babies in the ICU after his shift with her. Deeks and partner are frustrated nobody seems guilty.

The NCIS crew track the tiny numbers on the microscopic residue tag. The substance is a crystalline classified number identifier. This tracking system is a Special Ops experiment called "Overwatch". Navy officer Rearden briefs Callen and Hanna further. Counter insurgency was the goal, says a Naval contact they visit. Planet-wide satellite tracing is the objective. The naval contact says the half life gets adjusted for the length of tracking required. Rearden says the big problem with the technology is the man hours required to analyze the data dump. Afghan terrorists are the focus.

Hanna (LL Cool J) points out that the human intel needed to set up the residue tagged targets is the key. They ask after why Afzal is being tracked but Rearden looks him up and denies having any tracking program for him. Rearden says there are no tracking targets Stateside but Nate demands he look up Los Angeles on his satellite tracking program. The screen fills with targets. Rearden claims it is a glitch but Nate and partner know better. 112 targets show up.

Rearden says the data is encrypted and some has hijacked the Overwatch software. The Pentagon goes on high alert. The NCIS can't crack the hacking but says a mosque in Westchester is filling up with targets. The team finds a rogue private security agent masking an IP address using the Overwatch software he helped build for the government. The NCIS team made a deal to get the cracked code.

After a few twists and turns, they break into a hospital lab where nuclear residue materials are being held. Some have been stolen. Callen and Hanna realize the stolen residue tag was a plan to frame the "terrorist" and access the lab. Nuclear medicine has been stolen, enough to make a dirty bomb. Hetty speaks to the CIA and FBI regarding the materials theft. LAPD is notified that 4 canisters are gone. The radio tracking of a local hospital shows the team the material is in Venice.

Callen, Hanna, Deeks and Kensi go on-site to a Venice farmers market, where detection devices register the material faintly. They narrow in on their target while local cameras follow the crowd's movement. Kenzi and Deeks chase a perp, then Kensi gets run knocked off the hood of a rushing car. She gets up and turns around the car is gone. Callen and Hanna footrace the man with the bag. Deeks tackles one of the men on a footbridge over a Venice canal. He gets knocked into the water and almost shot but for Kensi.

Hanna and Callen, chasing the suspect with the bag, overtake him on the Venice board-walk, where he pulls a woman into a hostage situation with a gun. They capture the perp with the canisters. The squad determine through cellphone tracking the region of the central planners, the Blue Ridge mountains. The coroner makes a urn for the dead intern killed during the theft. Hetty tells Callen the missing canister "will turn up".

Summary: When a blog site obtains classified documents, the NCIS team must find the person behind the theft before they break the decryption code.

A man boarded a tour bus in Hollywood, and looking about, pulled out a gun and demanded, in a loud voice, saying, "Which of you is Matt Driscoll?" When no one volunteered that information, he continued, saying that he would kill all of them. Sam happened to be on that bus and the gunman raised his weapon and aimed it straight at the agent.

Earlier that day, a phone call came for Hetty while she and agent Callen were climbing the FBI headquarters' built in rock wall. Shimmying down the rope, Hetty took the call. It was from "Archangel", a special agent from the Pentagon. Archangel mentioned something about classified documents concerning war in Afghanistan. Archangel, known to Hetty only, was giving Hetty some grief when she piped up and said that she knew all about his girlfriend, Heather Teasdale, him being married, that Hetty might just let that slip to his boss. He quit verbally harassing Hetty and when she asked for further details, he told her that a man named Ray Crossen from Santa Monica had a website about such classified documents and a blog about electronicis, but it seemed he had not been seen or heard from in several days and the agents were asked to check it out. Sam and Callen traveled to Santa Monica, gaining access to Crossen's apartment and finding him dead in his bathtub. Checking Crossen's laptop, there seemed to be a missing file and no encryption key to open it. The file was finally retrieved by Sam and he asked Eric, the resident expert in electronics to try to open the file. Eric set to work on the file immediately. He was able to filter and find some of Crossen's loyal followers on his website. Sam sent false messages from Crossen via his website to meet with whomever had sent Crossen the file in order to get the key to open the file. A meeting time and place, a street side cafe in downtown Los Angeles, was set with this person and agents would be posted around the place to observe and possibly apprehend the person.

Agents Deeks and Kenzie sat nearby in a car, chatting and keeping their eyes open. A woman who called herself Jenny approached Sam as he sat at a table at the cafe and asked him if he was Crossen to which he replied he was. Jenny looked nervously about and saw a tall man who identified himself as FBI, coming close to the table where she sat. Sam told him that he had better be FBI or he would kick him in the FBI balls to which the man just smiled slowly and showed his card. Sam, feeling boxed in and not sure who might be lurking nearby, hustled Jenny away from the cafe and retired to a nearby rooftop where he questioned her further. She told Sam that she was sure that Crossen had been compiling data about the American soldiers who died fighting in Afghanistan, a sort of online tribute for them but was not sure what the rest of the file might contain. Crossen had felt that not enough was being done to help and honor the fallen heroes and their families. A top level security key was needed to access the file and she did not have it. Jenny had been helping Crossen gather the information he needed and wanted for his website.

Jenny called Matt Driscoll, the CPO in Soda Lake. She told him that some agents from the FBI wanted to meet with him and ask him questions about Crossen. He agreed to the meeting. Deeks and Kenzie showed up at Matt's house but were fired upon by four men. Firing back, they managed to kill two of the men. They determined that the men were mercenaries, paid soldiers of fortune. Two of the men escaped by vehicle and left the scene. Sam had Jenny call Driscoll again but she only got his voice mail. She left a message for him and then Sam arrested her, took her back to headquarters. Sam called for back up and had the two deceased soldiers removed, then went after Driscoll.

Where would Driscoll go? Sam decided to go to Jenny's house and sure enough, he was there. Driscoll said that he had not killed Crossen and gave Sam the encryption key to the file. Suddenly, seven mercenaries showed up at Jenny's house and Sam and Driscoll escaped amidst flying bullets and yelling men. Sam suddenly had an idea when Driscoll wondered aloud how the mercenaries knew where he was. The GPS system in Driscoll's phone and Naval watch, which the men had bugged, were what the soldiers were using to track him down and when Sam demanded both, Driscoll handed them over reluctantly only to see Sam stamp them both to bits. The soldiers turned up yet again and Sam told the leader that he was Driscoll whereupon the man fired directly into Sam's chest but Sam was not killed because of the Kevlar vest he was wearing. The vest had saved Sam's life but he was badly shaken. He was bruised and needed help to stand up, his chest ached and stung from the harsh and swift impact of the bullets. He was very glad to be alive.

The soldiers and Sam and Driscoll were on the tour bus and firing began again, Matt being killed in the cross fire. Wounded but not dead, Sam called on his cell phone to Eric for help and backup. The FBI closed in on the tour bus in squeals of tires, blocking the bus with their vehicles and brought the soldiers down, taking the men to headquarters in handcuffs. Jenny gave Eric the decryption key and when the file was opened, it turned out to be a tribute to the fallen American soldiers. Jenny told Sam and Callen that Crossen and Driscoll had had regrets for having served in Afghanistan in the US Army and wanted to make right some matters they had seen and done during their service there, hence the file.

Summary:	In order for NCIS to track down the terrorist group responsible for numerous bombings worldwide, Sam must go undercover inside a federal prison.

In the Ochoco Federal Prison, a Muslim group surrounded a young black man named Mo who was working in the prison kitchen and began to beat him in, an initiation ritual meant to welcome him into the gang. Falling to the floor under their blows, the young man curled into the fetal position, used his arms and legs to block the blows as best he could, taking punches in the face as well. Suddenly, the leader, Abdul Mombasa, motioned for the beaters to cease and told the young man that he was welcome to his new family and that he would be well taken care of financially as well, not wanting for anything ever again. They held the man up from the floor and gave him hugs and reassurances.

Mo was seen by the guards and taken to the prison's infirmary where he made a call to Sam, listed as next of kin, telling Sam that he had had no choice to not join the gang. Sam was at NCIS headquarters when the call came and after he hung up, he turned to his colleagues and said that it was an emergency and he had to go visit his friend. He was enlisted by Hetty to pose as a prison inmate and infirmary worker in order to find out what Abdul was planning since it was known to the NCIS that he was part of a very dangerous terrorist organization. Hetty ordered Eric to create prison identification documents made for Sam going back at least ten years and to create a fearsome reputation for him as well.

At a local cemetery, agent Callen walked to his sister's grave and kneeling down, placed flowers upon it. He saw an old toy lead soldier on the grave and picked it up, examining it closely. Who might have placed it there? He had set up a hidden camera on a nearby tree to catch any visitors to his sister's grave and two were found on the tape: one was a man wearing a hoodie that Callen had chased in a dream. Callen wanted to meet the man. As for the toy soldier, Callen remembered that he had been given one as a child by an older man. He showed Hetty the toy and she said that she had played with such as a child herself.

Sam told Hetty that Mo shouldn't be in the prison alone to which she replied that he was not. She said that Nate was inside posing as a prison psychologist and alert to Mo's concerns. Hetty gave resident electronics expert Eric a code to access and manipulate the prison cameras. Hetty told Sam that Abdul's brother was Sadat Habassah, head of a very dangerous international terrorist group headquartered in Yemen, and had access to bank accounts containing twenty million dollars. One of the terrorist cells was located in West Hollywood.

Kenzie and Deeks, posing as brother Edward and sister Jennifer, were sent to investigate a dance studio that posed as a front for the West Hollywood terrorist cell. Kenzie and Deeks talked to the dance instructor on the pretext of signing up for dance lessons when Kenzie asked to use the bathroom. Told that it was upstairs, she climbed to the second floor and found the office, taking pictures of documents there and logging into a computer, allowing Eric and his assistant to access the terrorist records. Eric found that there was a warehouse located in North Hollywood that might contain vans the group used. Hetty sent Kenzie and Deeks to check it out.

In the prison, prisoner Sam was taken to his cell and ran into the Muslim gang where he pretended to be Muslim, getting to know Abdul and his henchmen. Sam was sent to work in the prison infirmary where he secretly talked to Mo who was still in the infirmary, telling him that he was there to help and protect him. Nate talked to Sam and afterward, called Hetty, telling her that Sam was too close to the gang, that he was in for big trouble. Hetty said not to worry.

At the North Hollywood warehouse complex, Kenzie and Deeks found their way into the warehouse, finding a silver van like the one they were looking for. Two men were there and began to fire on the pair who killed them. Opening the van's doors, the agents found a large amount of ammonium nitrate, part of a blasting cap and wires used for a bomb. They called Hetty and told her what they had found. It was decided that the bomb had not been intended for terrorism but for blowing a hole in the prison wall. Hetty decided that Abdul was planning a prison break and returning to Yemen, his brother and the terrorist group and that Sam would have to go with him in order to discover what the group was planning. Sam was informed of this. Nate told Abdul that he was being transferred and to come with him. The two went down the hall where Abdul pulled Nate aside and stabbed him, leaving him in a puddle of blood on the floor. Abdul ran to the infirmary.

Chatter from Yemen was talking about a big prison break in Los Angeles which supported what Hetty was thinking. Sam got into a scuffle with two white prisoners and the Muslim gang helped him. When Abdul tried to recruit him for the prison break, Sam declined but later in the prison yard, decided to join them, telling Abdul that he could get him out today since Sam had purportedly been planning a prison break to escape himself.. Sam was in the infirmary working when Mo staggered in, blood pouring from his abdomen purportedly from a stab wound, but it was fake. Sam told a guard to call for an ambulance, Mo had to get to a hospital now! The guard did so and Sam and another man joined them in taking Mo to the dock where the ambulance would meet them. Abdul was hiding behind a door there and when the ambulance pulled up, he helped to knock out the two attendants and hide them. He changed clothes and got into the ambulance with Sam, Mo and one other prisoner. Later, when the men were lodged in a nearby motel, Sam wearing a wire, Abdul walked up to Sam and told him he had been told that an NCIS agent was amongst them, but he didn't think it was Sam. Abdul said he was going home and left the motel. Sam walked into the motel room, finding finding prisoner Saeed dead of a stab wound and surrounded by blood. Was Mo still alive? Sam rushed into the bathroom, calling the young man's name, only to find Mo suspended by his arms, also dead. Sam held the boy in his arms and cried, then called Hetty and told her the news. She sympathized with Sam and told him to follow through with his mission, that that was the way it had to be. He would have to go all the way to Yemen and infiltrate the terrorist group to bring them down, that he could not protect everyone.

Back at NCIS headquarters, a tired Hetty placed a call to agent Callen, only getting his voice-mail. She said, in the message, that she had not heard from him in forty eight hours and that it was time to check in.

Summary: Callen discovers a counterfeit computer chips operation in the course of nabbing an intruder breaking into his house. An ex-KGB operative helps the team find the operation's latest shipment.

Callen discovers a man lurking in his house in the dead of night. They fight. Callen ties the man up in the car trunk, which Hanna finds out after dressing up as a California Highway patrolman and pulling him over. Callen shows Hanna the toy soldier. Hanna returns to base to let Deeks and Kenzi know the situation. Beaks goes nuts over the uniform, saying he always wanted to be a CHP. Callen hides the break-in guy in the boat shed while NCIS can't find any trace of him in the computer. Callen realizes Arkady is the one who is behind it.

Callen visits Arkady while having breakfast with the prisoner. The man apologises to Arkady for blowing it and Arkady compliments Callen on having captured him. Arkady says "You got my message?" and Callen says "You couldn't have left a note?" Arkady says he needed to find out if Callen was really living there. Callen plants the toy soldier on the table. Arkady says "toy soldier". Arkady denies knowing what the soldier means and hands Callen a newspaper, asking him if he knows the man pictured.

An Indian philanthropist, Singh, is featured as a charity mogul, but Arkady insists he has black market operations abroad and inside the United States. Callen isn't thrown off so easily. Then Arkady insists the Indian will be smuggling in millions of dollars in counterfeit computer chips. Callen starts to leave but then Arkady gives him a picture taken while at his sister's grave. Callen wants answers but will only trade the identity of the photographer (Callen's runner) if the Indian is arrested.

Ramish Nayan Singh is a slumdog billionaire. Mumbai born and wealthy, he has call centers and IT tech industries and worldwide charities all over war torn countries. His charities benefit refugees. His nightclub purchases and playboy lifestyle are protected by paranoid superstition and hyper security. Callen bolts to Hetty for petty cash for luxury cub duds. Hetty demands to know how NCIS is involved. Callen implies faulty computers in airplanes or defense vehicles would threaten national security. At a club where Nayan is partying, they set up Kenzi to meet Nayan. She walks past and he jumps to the bait. Callen and Beaks set up a tableau to intercept Nayan when he comes running. Nayan cuts off Callen and Beaks after she reads Callen's palm. He likes kittens, long walks in the rain and Barry Manilow, et. al. She says her name is Esme. Singh gets them a VIP table. The NCIS techs scan Singh's history while Kenzi dreams up a palm reading that will secure getting closer to Singh. Beaks gets spotted by a bank robber he put in prison. When Hanna steps over to help, two hulking colleagues of the felon's walk up. Beaks gives Kenzi the signal, and she tells the club owner (Singh) trouble is about to start. The guy jumps Beaks and Hanna gets into it with the brothers as Singh sees Kenzi walk away. As he calls for security he sees she wrote down her number. Beaks gets thrown out of the club at Kenzi's feet. Hetty accuses Callen of going it alone and leaving the team out in the cold. But Callen works with Nell to get clues from the picture Arkady gave Callen. Partial prints of a connected guy names Sanka (meaning shadow) give a possible address. The trap works and the billionaire pursues Kenzi. They meet at Gladstones with Hanna and Beaks. Kenzi gets nervous when Singh starts checking into her fake psychic background. The NCIS team is backstopping it. Singh gives hints to Kenzi he has a dark side. Meanwhile Callen picks the lock to the last known address. He finds the man dead tortured and bloody. At lunch, Kenzi meets Singh's gypsy friend. It's the man from the trunk of Callen's car, who supposedly worked for Arkady. Hanna conferences Callen and the NCIS lab in on the conversation. Callen orders Kenzi to bring Singh and she turns and walks away. Men follow Kenzi to the parking lot and attack her. Hanna defends and Deaks check their cellphones. Nell says Callen's corpse tattoo is the Hindu Chakra represents the Vardos, Romany Gypsies. The shadow is Nico's man and she is a threat to his plan playing Arkady and Singh against each other.

Kenzi questions why Nico had his men attacked and if the "Romany" stooge Nico working for both Arkady and Singh can fence the computer chips. The NCIS team sense a power play. The perps will meet at the Los Angeles forum at a set time. As Callen decides to break up Nico's paramilitary team, Arkady's goons, and Singh's shipping men, a bloodbath is about to go down. Nell gets caught by Hetty, who tracks them to the secret hideout. Callen has been operating off the reservation. Hetty demands full disclosure.

Callen asks for all the agents trusts to go forward. Kenzi convinces Singh Nico has turned. He phones and changes the shipment delivery to a backup location, and grabs Kenzi for the ride. Hanna and Beaks them them, but Beaks get nervous Hanna is being too obvious. Sam is cautious because Mo died. As Singh shows Kenzi stacks of cash, Hanna realize Arkady may have known the shipment was cash and Callen is walking into a trap.

Callen walks into the huge sports stadium, which is empty. He calls out for Arkady. Callen tells Arkady there will be no shipment to intercept, Nico was playing them. Callen asks why the Shadow was taking pictures of him. Arkady implies that Singh had his reasons to know Cullen's activities, but they are interrupted by gunfire. Nico's men have arrived. Arkady and Callen debate which tactic to use. Sam steamrolls into the forum with green lights from Hetty. Callen snipes the remaining assassins as Arkady bolts for the tunnel.

Kenzi buttons him back up but Callen lets him go. They can use him now he owes Callen a favor. Hanna and Callen bond and Beaks and Kenzi grumble. Hetty finds Callen at home and advises Callen about looking for answers. She says the past is the past. She gives Calen a plant, which needs nothing, not even roots. (Just like him).

Summary: Callen and Sam go undercover as CHP officers in order to expose an illegal military hardware operation involving the cops and military personnel.

Deaks can't handle Kenzi anymore. Separate checks at Starbucks, galactic realignment, and her obsession with time. Deaks and Kenzi talk astronomy as she mocks him. When Hetty walks in they tell her the chemistry ain't workin'. Meanwhile Hanna and Callen play ChiPs and collects a Yakusa bribe. Hanna gets fierce and quotes Scarface. The California State Taxi service is his escort. They collect the money and tag him for a future arrest. But the other end of their sting is gasping for last breaths, a motorcycle mechanic named Paul is on the ground. Shot multiple times in the chest. He dies saying he turned down one last job, they are going too far. Stop him, he asks, before dying. Callen doesn't get a chance to find out who. Hanna says he misses driving in the car exchanging banter, and Callen says they are just two men with guns drifting from case to case.

Camp Pendleton is the source of the urban legend of the California Gold taxi service. Marines and cops are up to something. Sam and Callen have been undercover as corrupt cops to get in on the action. Some kind of weird escort service and secret missions are happening. Paul's ex police partner Greer is probably giving the orders. The ex partner will be grabbed as they search her house. Hanna and Callen exchange banter even though the boots are killing him. The woman's partner says she never clocked in. The motorcycle cop had to pull a double shift.

Deaks and Kenzi get to her house and find forced entry. Shootout at the Ok corral, says Deaks. The bloodstains show someone escaped the gunfight and the house wounded. Paul Bean and Jennifer Greer crossed paths but where? The NCIS group analyze the spendig patterns. Bare Elegance is a bikini bar Paul was at the night before he died. Greer's mother is on Alzheimer's and her credit cards and checking overdraft to the maximum. Motivation for a partnership in crime. Nobody has seen Greer since Bean's death.

The bartender at Bare Elegance encounters Deaks and Kenzi. The man knows Paul as the man in the wheelchair. He saw him arguing with a man the night before. Overgrown frat boy said to Paul that this was his last chance to do the job or he'd get killed. Bartender says they threw him out. The security cameras are just deterrents, they don't work.

Hanna canvasses the Greer woman's old house in Van Nuys before her mother went in the home. They find her hiding in the foreclosed house, spitting gunfire and Hanna arrests her. She knows them as cops from the station house. She says the boots always looked funny on Hanna. Under questioning Jennifer Greer says Bean wasn't anything to her. Just a man and a woman with guns drifting from case to case. The NCIS team now have to look for the overgrown frat boy with a gold watch and a bully vibe.

Greer says there was a job with military hardware Paul turned down. Hanna figures out that Greer and Paul were seeing each other. Greer says after the accident Paul changed and started the taxi service. She said she joined because she couldn't sell the house. So Callen tells Greer to set the word out officers Exley and Powell will do the job.

Hanna (Exley) and Callen (Powell) go to the bar and pretend to be idle. Beaks and Kenzi get eyes on the frat boy type. They talk but nobody knows anything. The frat boy approaches them and says that "Word on the street is you two don't scare easy." They have to go on the road to Las Vegas. Pull over a Black Range Rover for a ticket and arrest. Phil Cromby is an ex cop and business rival. The gig pays $50,000 each.

Greer runs the entourage and nobody checks a hit. Greer says she regrets the crimes but the economy made them lose their houses with early retirement. Steve Brenner, aka Justin Marcetti, did 9 years for Ponzi scheme. $20 million disappeared. His friends are ex French GIGN military. He wants a guy named Cromby taken in but they find that he did a dime in Folsom for a narcotics charge, and then works in a Santa Monica restaurant. They get a report Cromby showed up for work right when the van gets pulled over with a huge truck. Justin Marcetti's gang jumps out and hijacks the truck, shooting Hanna and blowing everything up.

Hanna says the candy fruit found in the abandoned Rover looks like jihadist snacks. Hetty says that the Department of Energy experience shows that one of the nuclear weapons got stolen. The Pentagon code is "empty quiver". The yield has five times the nuclear power of Hiroshima. They must recover the warhead. The Pan Islamic brotherhood releases a video to the White House with an abused looking woman who says she is a nuclear physicist and they are forcing her to arm it. "Judgement Day has arrived. In three hours, 6:30 am, the American people will know fear."

Hanna says Marcetti's French men action profile can't jive with wasabi jihadists. They profile the man some more and find his hideout. The team finds a map with a clearly marked radius of detonation around downtown Los Angeles. The NCIS squad looks for a false positive way for the thieves to hide the radioactive weapon from scanners. Hetty says the blame game has already started and people want to know why two NCIS staff couldn't break the attack down.

But Callen won't tell Hetty about the map because she'd have to tell the Pentagon. He also says people with Marcetti's skill don't leave their mission maps lying around. Their emergency evacuation is the goal to get something in Los Angeles downtown. They find a Justin Marcetti real estate purchase of a paint factory with uranium in it enough buzz to keep the radioactive detection of the bomb down. Hetty insists she must be told everything and trusted, but then the start time of the threat makes them think.

Greer says the woman in the video was asking Paul to do a job and gave him stock tips about putting his money in gold and silver. They analyze how a stock analyst and a nuclear scientist could be involved. Then they find her background is linked to Marcetti's. Hetty, Sam and Callen realize a run on the stock market is imminent. With knowledge of the nuclear fear from the online video, they can make trillions while wrecking the businesses everywhere. Hetty says use of lethal force is authorized. They attack the factory, Kenzi sharpshoots and Callen, Deaks and Hanna go in on the ground.

The NCIS crew snipe their way through the factory, shooting the French mercenaries one by one. The truck gets away but Kenzi shoots it to death. Deaks falls for the woman's act and Marcetti pulls a gun on him. Deaks tricks him saying the safety is off and grabs the gun. The NCIS tech stops the video by turning off the Internet. They get the nukes and find out an intelligence officer at Camp Pendleton was feeding the group the nuclear ordnance travel intel. Greer gets arrested and taken away but Callen says the CHP will handle the case and know that she helped them find Paul's killer.

Callen)
Guest Stars: Nina Fehren (Nurse Deborah Austley), Pascal Petardi (Vakar), Sarayu Rao (Dr. Susan DePaul), Vasili Bogazianos (Store Owner (Frank)), Justin Huen (Santo Perez), Brad Beyers (LAPD Detective Jeff Versey), Sabrina Perez (Katrina Hobbs)
Production Code: 217
Summary: After Deeks is shot during a visit to a convenience store, the NCIS team investigates whether robbery was the real motive or if someone was aiming to harm Deeks.

Deeks is running on the beach and things are looking good, then hits his usual morning coffee stop at a Culver Blvd. convenience store. The owner at the register does not respond to his jokes and the man at the register has a gun. Deeks fakes a question then takes the man down. Then the store owner says look out and a second man comes from the rear of the liquor store. Two shots. When Hanna and Callen get to the store, Det. Jeff Versey of LAPD hands them the case and walks off. Kenzi asks Hetty if she can go to the hospital.

NCIS tracks the footage from security cameras. Hanna is angry at Deeks for doing the same thing every day. Callen says Deeks was trained as an LAPD cop not an agent. Kenzi asks for his next of kin, and Hetty and Callen don't know either. Hanna and Kenzi are guilty of humble brags. Hanna and Callen arrive at the medical center, where Eric calls and says the killers are right there too driving up in the green Mustang.

They shoot out and the shooter goes running and the driver gets shot. Carlos Guzman and Santo Perez are the gunmen. Hanna says they are guns for hire. Hetty gives Nell a red file and says for her to research the parolee discreetly. The phones used for these gangbanger guys are burned phones bought for disposable use. Hanna says he wants to go everywhere there has been a James Bond movie. Callen points out outer space from Moonraker. Hanna also tells Callen they didn't cry when he was shot. Callen says "Where is the love/".

The liquor store shooting was with a 22, a girl's gun. The guns from the hospital parking lot are bigger. The drivers must have gunned up. Callen and Hanna get Santo when Eric finds him in a bowling alley. Eric does it by searching his picture in social media. Hanna says next stop Chino. But Versey picked a fistfight with Deeks after Deeks informed on him with Internal Affairs years ago. Callen and Hanna stop by LAPD. Versey says he was just coming to see them at NCIS.

Versey says he got a wake up call to get sober. But even after that, last year Deeks comes banging on his door checking in his sobriety. Versey considers Deeks his sponsor. He says Deeks is a good cop. He gives Hanna and Callen a big file of names to look at, and he says because Deaks was a good cop there are so many names to look at. Eric runs a check on the burnphones and find one active. They get Eric to run backstopping on a fake attorney profile.

Deaks says he thinks Kenzi got shot somewhere embarrassing. Deaks watches Kenzi eat his jello. Kenzi says she never has been shot. NCIS faxed over the list of past busts from Deaks' LAPD experience. Callen sees Nell talking to Hetty but Hetty won't spill. Kenzi privately confronts how connected to Deaks she really is.

Kenzi says Edwardo Cruz but Deaks realizes his mistakes of using the same routine every day. Meanwhile Callen sets up a trap pretending to be Deaks' attorney. He calls the burn phone and they setup a meet at a downtown warehouse. Hanna and a team of snipers stand ready in the loft. They wait but nobody comes.

Deaks says Gordon John Brendell is the man he shot when he was 11 years old. This is the man Hetty is having Nell research. Nell and Kenzi are shocked. But at the same time Callen and Hanna are waiting, Deaks figures out it's a trap. But after Kenzi leaves, he realizes the rest of the team is too good to get caught in a routine and they are the target. He's the weak link. That's why the second shot didn't kill him in the liquor store. But that means Kenzi, his partner, is the target, and the downtown meet is a lure to get Callen and Hanna out of bounds.

Kenzi gets into the hospital elevator just as Hanna and Callen jump in the car downtown and speed toward Santa Monica. When Kenzi goes outside to get signal, Hanna blurts out about the trap just as a van pulls up. Two men get the drop on Kenzi but she kicks back hard and downs them. Then the driver comes around leveling a gun at her. She hasn't had time to draw her weapon.

Shots flatten him in the chest, and Kenzi turns to see a staggering bloodstained Deaks, shooting from the hospital doorway. Hanna and Callen drive up seconds later, making it from downtown Los Angeles to Santa Monica in about 45 seconds. NCIS identifies the driver as a Chechen terrorist was targeting Kenzi to find some wife and child relocations to kill them. He dies saying "got you all".

At NCIS HQ, the team gets ready to shower Deaks in procedure training. They identify the killer as a threat from the past pursuing underground escapees. Nell asks Kenzi if she will tell them about the attack. but Kenzi says 3 days after she relocated them they vanished. Nell returns the file, and Hetty sits by Deaks in the hospital and eats his jello. Deaks' father was paroled in 1992 and died in 1998. Deaks shot him because he was abusive. Deaks asks who to put as next of kin. She says "Lang, Henrietta."

Recurring Role: Peter Cambor (Operational Psychologist Nate Getz)
Guest Stars: Sam Younis (Amir's Father), Said Faraj (Hotel Manager), Jim Hanna (Motel Owner), Hakeem Kae-Kazim (Abdul Habaza)
Production Code: 218
Summary: When the team is assigned to rescue the son of a Prince and capturing the leader of a terrorist group, Nate rejoins his team in Yemen to give them a hand.

Opening shot is of a young boy running through the streets of an Arab country, and the man who gets out of the car gives a gun to Sam Hanna and demands he shoot the boy. It's Addaba, the man who killed Mo after the NCIS LA team broke him out of prison. Hetty had said the day would come when Sam would get the closure he needed.

Sam is caught trying to spy on Deaks after his shooting for not following protocol and varying his routine. Kenzi calls Deaks on her phone and it rings in Hanna's bag. But Hanna is really still responsible for Mo's death. Hetty says the contact has been made, the man is in Sunaa in Addaba and he wants the Muslim version of Sam Hanna to report for his future with the religious left. Hanna emails back he's ready. Abdul is the key to Sadat, his Al Quaida brethren.

A Saudi prince's 7 year old boy has been kidnapped in the Middle East. This is the message Addaba wants sent. Hetty thinks Addaba's brother is the keymaster. When they get their marching orders to Yemen from NCIS, Hetty contacts Director Vance (of NCIS) and says the contact they need in the Middle East is needed. Hanna goes to the meet but the man in the motel room is dead.

A plane ticket in Hamal's name is ready. Callen gears up for an op in the Middle East, while Kenzi and Deaks are told to find if Hanna's cover has been blown. Sam is known as Hakeem to the Middle Eastern terrorist group. Hetty cautions Sam to flee if he whiffs his cover has been blown. Hetty tells Callen that Ray Haines is a textile buyer shopping abroad. Hetty tells Callen that Hanna needs to be an operative not a lone ranger. And she makes her regular request for a souvenir.

Addaba meets Sam and conducts him to the boy they've kidnapped. Callen sees an old friend there, Hetty's asset in Yemen. This is the mission she sent Nate on episodes earlier. He says since Abdul thinks he is dead he has to hide all the time. Nate was the prison guard shot dead in the Los Angeles fake prison escape where Addaba was with Sam in jail. Meanwhile Hakeem is tested and assesses Abdul's test. Abdul moves Sam before Callen can track him. Callen steals a car on a Yemen street and chases after them. He finds them at Abdul's camp and notifies Hetty. Sam is told by Abdul that his brother is with him wherever he is.

But Kenzi and Deaks find the motel night manager where the dead man stayed in Los Angeles. The man produced the fake papers for "Hakeem" (Sam Hanna). They see him leaving the motel with a bandage and he flees, the parking lot turns into a gunfight. His passport says he is Sadat, the brother supposedly running things in Yemen. Kenzi and Deaks realize if this is the brother of the terrorist in Yemen, and that Sam's new "brother" is doing the ransom, then Abdul is the key man in the organization. At the same time, Nell decodes his email and finds that Nate's identity has been blown.

Abdul coyly puts the boy hostage in Sam's charge. Callen is told to back down because the target is still Abdul Addaba, but he refuses to leave Yemen with the boy still kidnapped. Hetty realizes that with Nate's cover blown, then Sam is known to Abdul as an NCIS officer. She telephones to NCIS Director Leon Vance for authority to act. Abdul makes Sam for a cop, asking which agency he works for. Abdul says he knows the agency. Hetty states that an NCIS operative is much more valuable a hostage. Callen rushes in before Abdul puts Sam against a wall, before can make the coup de grace on the Saudi boy. In the shootout Callen tosses Hanna a weapon. Then they set up the black box.

Callen tells Eric that he needs authority from Hetty (emphasis) now. Hanna uses the laser kit to paint the target on the fleeing Abdul in a jeep. Callen relays the authority to target the missile onto Abdul and his jeep explodes. A airstrike drone from above fired the missile. Callen, Nate and Hanna see a smiling sheikh in a Mercedes limo come to collect his son and nod thanks to the NCIS crew. But Callen knows Hanna hesitated to fire, because he wanted some accountability for Addaba, not just payback for Mo. For Hanna, the cost of the smiling boy reunited with his father was Mo's life.

Originally aired: Tuesday March 22, 2011

Show Stars: Chris O'Donnell (Special Agent G. Callen), Renée Felice Smith (NCIS Intelligence Analyst Nell Jones), Barrett Foa (Tech Operator Eric Beal), Eric Christian Olsen (LAPD Detective Marty Deeks), Daniela Ruah (Special Agent Kenzi Blye), LL Cool J (Special Agent Sam Hanna), Linda Hunt (Henrietta 'Hetty' Lange)
Guest Stars: Alejandro Patino (Day Laborer), Valerie Rose Curiel (Rosa Munoz), Marta Maria McGonagle (Maria Rivero), Marcos De Silvas (Martinez), Taylor Sheridan (Navy Captain Jennings), Eduardo Yáñez (Antonio Medina), Myndy Crist (Emily Chambers), Joshua Biton (Navy Lieutenant Commander Daniel Chambers)
Summary: NCIS must determine if a Venezuelan politician is in imminent danger of being assassinated. It all hinges on a Navy Intelligence Commander who has gone missing.

Two men meet on a Malibu Pier, and exchange envelopes. They warily look around but are being photographed covertly. One of them doesn't make it back to the truck alive. The other man is identified by the photos emailed to the NCIS Los Angeles email address. He's an intelligence officer with the Navy. The state department can't get a handle on it. The details passed are of Valenzuela President Medina's visit to the United States.

Hetty flags Deaks for defense preparation classes. She makes Kenzi his close personal defense officer. The team give Deaks a hard time because they think his LAPD liaison duty makes him a slacker beside them. Their advanced knowledge of tactics and terms leaves Deaks out in the cold on missions. Deaks prefers disguises.

But the man who passed an envelope to the man on the pier in Santa Monica is dead of garrote neck slicing. How did he know the victim? They identify the body as belonging to a daily "back of the truck" day laborer. The truck was driven by a woman. She used the laborer to pretend to be the Naval officer's source. The missing Navy man is a straight arrow, no chance of going rogue.

The Naval honcho meets them at the boat shed. He shows them the naval assessments of the man named Medina, a rising Venezuela politician. Callen realizes the intel about Medina was being ignored. One of the tipoffs was a exploratory software that analyzes lifelong oral speeches and statements to flag irrelevancies and variables in motivation and character. Medina's broad soapbox addresses flunk this test. Nell shows off her knowledge of the software used but the navy official pulls rank on her. Callen realizes the boss didn't believe the intel that Medina was a dangerous threat to the United State foreign policy. Nell shows Callen and Sam speeches by Medina using powerful rhetoric. Iranian nuclear arms and changes in Southern hemispheres of power can change if Medina is elected. His words point to an ambitious agenda that does not favor the United States policy.

Sam and Callen question the dead man's niece, whose family are all from Valenzuela. They find the hotel setup with the Medina itinerary and a gun waiting. The woman paid for the hotel in cash for a month ahead of time. The NCIS officers realize that if the missing Naval officer is being used then only his daughter could be the reason, and they fake a kidnapping to keep her at the shed. They track his calls making sure they are all right to a place in the valley where the kidnappers have him stashed. They crash the house and find him drugged and under guard.

The whole thing was a setup. Callen and Sam realize the target is Medina to grow anti-American sentiment abroad. Even if Medina is shot, the saboteurs of his visit accomplish something against the West. The man behind it all was in the Venezuelan army with Medina. The dark haired woman was his mistress. They were going to put the Navy man in the hotel suite and frame him for the Medina murder. He fell for Helen and never saw the trap coming.

They track Medina's route through Los Angeles and bring the Navy man with them. Kenzi cruises in a black dress, while Sam is a waiter. Callen wears a maroon jacket, playing facilities host, and Deaks pretends to be a guest. When Medina enters, his cortege follows. The NCIS team watch to see which of these are startled to see the Navy man there. Medina starts his speech.

One man flees when he sees the Navy man there instead of drugged at the safe house, and Sam plows into him. Callen shadows another man, who looks over his shoulder and then starts running. Helen, the woman, comes and goes in a red dress. Kenzi chases her and tackles her into a fountain, where Helen pulls a gun, except Deaks has come from nowhere and disarms her. All the plotters are arrested. Hetty tells Medina's people there was a problem with smuggling things through customs.

It's time for Hetty's test of Deaks' field skills, with Kenzi weighing in. They go to the indoor firing range, where Deaks accurately shoots threat targets that pop up. He then shoots Hetty's target when it pops up, a jaw-dropping moment. Hetty realizes Deaks' field skills are very solid and his supposed inability is part of his disguise. She calls him a smartass.

Season 2

Callen)
Guest Stars: Victor Webster (Stanley King), Amy Sloan (Patricia Dunn), Kyle Davis (Bobby Asher), Gene Gabriel (Michael Connor), Nichelle Hines (Forensic Specialist), Haran Jackson (Marine Guard)
Production Code: 220
Summary: When a Marine base's secure facility is breached, the team must determine what it was that was targeted for theft. In order to accomplish their mission, Kensi must go undercover.

Three masked men break into a high tech building. This burglary of a military depot goes wrong when one thief knocks over the crate. The NCIS LA episode "the Job" is written by "Frank Military". The one burglar is shot, and when the other man gets outside to a waiting car the driver says where is Asher. The white Mercedes moves off. The office is flattered when Kenzi arrives with shopping bags. Deaks says she broke up with the guy and stopped doing crunches and eating tofu scrambles, she he knows she broke up. Kenzi gets Hanna a knife and Callen supplies but Deaks gets SPF 70 sunblock and chapstick and a seafoam green slanket. Kenzi says everybody knows Deaks is delicate. Eric's new airhorn calls them to work. Hetty says the inventory list for the Camp Pendleton navy depot was accessed. Video shows night vision goggles and a portable ID card reader, they came prepared. Callen says this was more than just stealing weapons. But the guy shot in the leg, Bobby, can't stop talking. The Marines couldn't wait to turn him over. Deaks scoffs as once again Callen and Hanna exchange code words. "Kumani" is today's word.

The NCIS crew bring in Hanna in a suit, (LL Cool J) calling him "Kumani" the Nigerian ambassador. Callen is dressed like a fed and starts to sign Bobby over to Kumani's authority, nervously hinting at capital punishment in Nigerian justice. Kumani is very stern with Bobby. Clutching his dominant hand protectively, Bobby leaps to name names.

The name of the ringleader is Stan King, born into a wealthy family, went to Berkeley, and majored in art history. The FBI wants Stan too. Numerous fine art robberies can be laid at his door. His is the Thomas Crown type of felon.

Flawless in execution, King is wealthy and has a beautiful Malibu house. Deaks says King has his own Hobbit shire. Kenzi breaks into it and he stops her robbing his safe. Deaks is nervous as she talks her way out of it. King is charmed by Kenzi's knowledge of his antique rug. Bobby pretends he knows Lisa when they visit him at the NCIS mansion setup. But King shoots Bobby right in front of Kenzi, as Callen and Hanna hear the shot out front.

A shocked Kenzi is caught off guard, and Deaks stays with her while Callen and Han track King to a coffee shop. King breaks out a laptop and has a meeting with a redhead. Eric and Nell alert Hetty that King is checking through Kenzi's fake identity at a rapid rate. Her legend only goes back 8 years. Hetty orders Callen and Hanna to stop it because he is overtaking their ability to make up her false backstopping. Deaks and a calmed down Kenzi arrive at the coffee shop. Callen and Hanna pretend to fight and dump a coffee on King's computer.

Deaks calls Hetty about Kenzi, and Hetty says to keep an eye on her. When the girl leaves King Hetty orders Deaks on her. Deaks fakes a knee injury then brings her in. The redhead Miss Dunn works at an auction house. She says she changed provenances, falsified insurance claims, and changing manifests. King romanced her for her authority at the auction house. She says he needed help smuggling something out of the country. The empty bill of lading was passed over but King didn't need it. Kenzi interviews Patricia Dunn about her involvement with King. She says King said this was going to be his last job and he'd celebrate and take her to the Caribbean. Dunn is then taken by LAPD.

The NCIS LA staff then survey King's modus operandi, he seems to kill his partners in crime after the jobs. Kenzi is now the one he wants as a partner for the one last job. He told Kenzi to take care of Asher's body.

Kenzi gets a call to meet King at his mansion, which Deaks calls his own "Shire". He asks her if she wants a drink and she says she saw him kill his last partner. Deaks look significantly at Hetty. Callen and Hanna are surveilling the Malibu house when they see two cars go up the private hill. Eric looks up the license plates the cars belong to former crime job associates of King's. But inside the house Miss Dunn is brought in, where Kenzi is. The NCIS LA office watches using Kenzi's personal video recorder.

The redhead is delivered by two ex-associates known for working with King. Patricia Dunn was handed over to LAPD but somehow got free. Callen and Hanna speculate about whether Kenzi is cool but Deaks says the mission is blown. King tells the people by the pool with Kenzi to go inside he'll explain everything. He dials a code on his phone and grabs Kenzi and pushes her into the water. The NCIS crew see the screens go black and Callen says "abort mission".

Callen and Hanna jump up on the Malibu Hills and Deaks watches in horror as the bomb blows the place sky high. They find bodies in the house but not Kenzi's or King's. Nell says there are fire roads tracing back down the hill out of view. Kenzi is missing with a killer without backup. The Chinese dignitary had a connection to stole defense technology and China is growing a Stealth program.

Deaks recognize Miss Dunn's body by her bracelets. Eric works on the motherboard which is deep fried. But he finds an email from a Chinese official who was deported. The forensic review of the Chinese dignitary's property is scheduled soon, this is what must go out of the country. The image of a jade Chinese vase is there. The dragon statue may have something inside it, Hetty says.

At the military depot, at night Kenzi and King get the jade statue. King puts it in his backpack. Inside the depot, Callen and Hanna appear and pull guns on King and Kenzi. Callen says "Better now Kenz' and King says "oh man" realizing he's been tricked. King hits Kenzi in the jaw, and Kenzi says "Will one of you shoot this guy". Deaks comes from behind and decks King, saying "that's for hitting my partner".

The government found the hidden intel and are arresting the Arlington stealth leak. Mr. Tan's belongings will be returned with doctored technology, and Hetty tells them all to go home. Callen pops for dinner, and Hanna starts talking truffles and bone-in steaks. Callen says the ground rules are no fancy fungi, no eggs from anything other than chicken, and no scotch older than they are. Hanna says he can still order a seafood tower. Deaks ask Kenzi if she is all right, she says yes and leaves. Later Deaks shows up at Kenzi's place with burgers and beers for him and a smoothie for her, and Kenzi grabs the beer. They sit on the sofa to watch "America's Top Model". Deaks asks Kenzi to open his beer for him. They clink beer bottles to celebrate "the job".

Rocket Man

Show Stars: Renée Felice Smith (NCIS Intelligence Analyst Nell Jones), Barrett Foa (Tech Operator Eric Beale), Eric Christian Olsen (LAPD Detective Marty Deeks), Daniela Ruah (Special Agent Kensi Blye), Linda Hunt (Henrietta 'Hetty' Lange), LL Cool J (Special Agent Sam Hanna), Chris O'Donnell (Special Agent G. Callen)
Guest Stars: David Haley (DOD Police Officer), Austin Priester (Technician), Tom Ohmer (Curtis Roby), Terrence Stone (Ollie Drewitt), Danny Jacobs (Colin Benson), Gideon Emery (Jeff Kinto), Wynn Everett (Ariel Drewitt), Harry Van Gorkum (Harlan Holt), Jeremy Denzlinger (DOD Guard)
Summary: Eric's going undercover for the first time to make sure that classified technology remains secure after a rocket engine expert ends up dead in a test chamber.

A man inside a lab in a white chemical suit gets into a closed space with high tech device. The door closes and the device activates. The man starts to call someone but melts as the device shakes back and forth. The man dies on the floor horribly burnt. The NCIS is notified because the rocket contains a satellite with classified technology. Hanna works as a UPS man undercover and hates it. Deaks has the "Poker Dogs" painting in his place. Beale says "Houston we have a problem".

The dead man video is shown and Ollie Drewitt is dead. His company flies satellites into orbit for a fee. His daughter Ariel is chief of Operations. The company is co-owned by Holt. But the contract with US government precedes handing over technology to a third party. The full team deploys to the Lancaster rocket company. Holt the surviving partner is actively working with Turkish clients to launch the rocket. He doesn't care much his partner is dead.

Drewitt's daughter swears Holt is behind the death and was trying to sell the company. The staff arrive and question the people involved in the rocket takeoffs. They put Kenzi with the daughter for female bonding because they both lost their fathers young. They find a disgruntled employee Jeff Kinto making metal sculptures nearby.

One man angrily stares them down and leaves. Later they find him at a bar, but his story checks out. Another man was fired but might have a grudge. He says Drewitt found a cheaper way to buy the parts but then when they didn't work he got blamed. Holt's past has criminal sanctions against illegal arms technology dealing to foreign nations. Nell checks out the new clients whose rocket will go into orbit. One of them has a shaky back story. Nell is worried that a high tech agent will be hard to find on such short notice.

The NCIS group must now stop a rocket launch mere hours away. The threat is that United States classified technology could end up working for the wrong nation. Beale gets tapped to go into the field as a FAA inspector. He convinces the daughter and the lab tech who he is with Nell's help. But Beale gets trapped in the machine the same way Drewitt did. He starts to writhe in agony.

But Hetty calls Callen and they rescue Eric. Hanna opens the security camera, and finds a mini camera inside the lab security camera. They find Holt dead murdered at his house. If the murderer saw the person enter the lab by camera, they had to have been alerted by the phone calls. Then they realize the remote control murderer could have hacked the daughter's cellphone and checked the camera. Jeff Kinto is the hacker. They find he has a booth at the Saugus swap meet the next day.

Deaks is crestfallen to see that The "Poker Dogs" painting is only ten dollars. Kenzi wants to know how much he paid for it. Callen and Hanna track the man and Kenzi and Deaks track the dealers. The men run when they spot Kenzi and Deaks and then gunfire erupts. Deaks fire one of the buyers and Kenzi corners the other one. Then Beale celebrates his field job assignments by landing a remote rotary helicopter in the boat house.

Summary: When Deeks' best friend and major informant needs protection from death threats, Deeks must go undercover as one of his old aliases.

Deeks closes a case by sending an arms dealer from Los Angeles to jail but the informant is in danger. As the sentence is handed down the man promises death to Ray. Outside the courthouse the men say goodbye. The NCIS LA squad fakes a drive by shooting. This is on the news and they smuggle him to the airport. This character is going into witness protection. Ray was a criminal Deeks recognized from childhood turned informant.

Ray picks up on the vibe between Deeks and Kenzi. He says Kenzi looks just like Deeks's high school girlfriend. He calls her Wikipedia. Deeks denies the "thing". Deeks says that Ray and he have been sharing a dark side of life. Kenzi picks up on the fact that Deeks has conflicted feelings about his street undercover alter ego. "Max" is not a pleasant person.

The NCIS boathouse is rocked with the news that Ray is missing. But the man disappears after the drop him in the airport. Deeks tells Kenzi Ray was there for him when he was a kid, and gave him the gun he shot his father with before he would have killed them. The other NCIS staff think Deeks might be too close to the case to work it right.

The video shows Ray rented a car and drive to downtown Los Angeles. Deeks is shocked because he is wanted by many criminal factions for being a known informant. His life is in danger on the street. They isolate the photos of the attackers near the abandoned car and identify the gang. But Deeks says they never informed against that gang or had any cases against them.

Deak goes undercover as "Max" again to find out about Ray. Deeks tells Hetty he just plays his father's own character. Meanwhile Hanna and Callen pretend to to be gambling businessmen enjoying a secret clandestino, a lunch club with women and gambling. Callen gets them inside but shows the waitress a picture and says he was referred by Ray and they get attacked. Calen learns someone worse than the Southside gang ordered the hit.

Deaks goes into the club. Kenzi shadows him and is shocked to hear the things that come out of his mouth. Max is a thug and creep, vicious and nasty. But then when Ray comes around the front of the bar, Kenzi tells Deaks, and a couple of cars drive up shooting at him. Max walks outside to see Ray has vanished but the gangbangers were another hired team. Deaks says to pull in Ray's old girlfriend.

The girl is in the boathouse and Deaks poses as a prisoner to talk to him. The entire NCIS team watches and Deaks and this girl kiss passionately. Kenzi in particular does not enjoy this. Melissa says she turned in Ray because some man called and asked her to for money. She knew he was leaving so called and made $100,00. Deaks leaves the interrogation room and the NCIS squad are unhappy with how emotionally he is connected to the case.

The jailed man Sanders says he can shop Ray to any number of other information agencies and terrorist groups. He says they will have to move onto another case but he only has one.

The bar contact says Ray had a girl down in the Grand Central Market downtown. Deaks/Max shows up, and she looks unhappy. Just then Ray walks up, and Kenzi and Max chase him. Deaks gets him and Ray says his girlfriend is pregnant and he came back for her. Ray says witness protection only takes immediate family, and that he knew Deaks would get involved if this was a problem. Deaks plans a trap.

Kenzi asks Deaks if Melissa doesn't deserve to know the truth. Deaks reveals who he is to a crestfallen Melissa. Ray told her long ago that Max was the informant. She brought him chicken soup when he was sick and they always had a thing for each other. Deaks reveals who he really is and she says he's still the best thing in it. Deaks tells Melissa to call the gang bangers again. Ray comes out on the sidewalk to see a bunch of shooters aiming at him. In a fierce gun battle the men shout about Plan B for Ray. Deaks put Ray into a dark Suburban with his girlfriend, and they drive off. But a garbage trucks wrecks the car, and it goes up in a fireball of flame. The gang members say it was worth it.

But off to the side, Ray and his girlfriend are still in the decoy car. Deaks says goodbye and Ray says he need a call about the thing with Wikipedia. At the boathouse, a tired Deaks com into see Hetty. Melissa has passed on a message, "no regrets".

Guest Stars: Bruno Verdoni (Shepherd), Collins Pennie (Mark), Charlene Amoia (Michelle Ardell), Jake Richardson (Drew Stetson), Dean Chekvala (Ryan Long), Kristen Hager (Star), Blake Gibbons (Fallon), Claire Forlani (Lauren Hunter), Neil Barton (Bouncer)
Production Code: 223
Summary: New information comes to light about a stolen radiation therapy canister when a person pretending to be a Navy SEAL is set on fire. The missing Brachytherapy canister contains radioactive seeds that can be used to make bombs.

A phony Navy Seal wannabe starts flaming in a Malibu restaurant. Nell and Eric show the restaurant video of the burning man. He burned because it was a chemical burn. The radio pharmaceuticals stolen from the NCIS hospital case has residue found on the burnt man. The fourth canister was missing and they may have found it. The video reveals he burns up and water doesn't help. Forensics show phosphorus burns and radioactivity.

Investigations by Nell and Eric show the dead man frequented a Santa Monica bar called The Prince O'Wales. Hanna and Callen check it out but the bartender thinks the dead man was a Navy SEAL. Deeks finds the car with a Hide-a-Key and finds bomb making explosives in the trunk. The dead man is identified as Dundas, a man posing as a ex-Navy Seal who really is living on proceeds from a construction accident.

Hetty has been arguing with Director Vance on the phone when Callen comes looking for him. Hetty asks to speak to Deeks alone. Hetty talks to him about the future and hands him a folder with his resignation for the police force. Deeks gets offered a permanent NCIS job but isn't ready to take it. His identity as a LAPD officer is in question but Hetty says she has signed and dated it so whenever he feels ready to commit he can.

Hanna has a solo sailboat trip coming up. Hetty avoids Callen but talks to Hanna about being Callen's anchor. The bartender at the Prince O'Wales fakes them out about the security tapes but Hanna tracks radioactivity where Dundas sat at the bar the last night. The bartender at the boatshed interrogation says only Star the waitress knew Dundas the dead poseur.

Hetty gives Kenzi a silver hair ornament that doubles as a stiletto weapon. Hetty says Kenzi is both feminine and deadly, but perhaps too much of both. Kenzi is puzzled when Hetty drops a hint that the time may come when she will want to hang up her agent shoes. Kenzi protests the guys she meets usually give up on her but Hetty tells her she may have to open her eyes and see the one right under her nose.

Kenzi and Deaks interview the waitress star, who is pretty and ask if Deaks if with Kenzi. Deaks hints they are friends with privileges but Kenzi says no. When Star says she doesn't have a boyfriend, Deaks say that's a crime and tries to give Star his number but Kenzi grabs the paper and says to Star she's doing it for her own security. Star says Dundas was a loner but came into some money recently on a big assignment. The NCIS team fear a dirty bomb in the making.

Nell data mines the Prince O'Wales receipts and find a connection between Dundas and a anarchist busted a few times doing war rally protests. Callen and Hanna trail the man to his motorhome. They think it is abandoned, but then the man drives away and wrecks it a thousand yards from where they are standing. At the boatshed, Callen pushes the anarchist's paranoia and fear of their spook devices, then surgically asks who the instigator of the Dundas' assignment, the new bomb project is.

They set the met. The proxy comes to the bar. Hanna answers all of the speakerphone questions but then the proxy leaves and runs off. Deaks and Hanna catch him. Eric couldn't trace the phone fast enough. The blogger Shepherd evades their tracking. But the proxy, Drew Stetson, is the courier who earns a life in prison with the bomb. Shepherd puts a call to arms on his blog about government. The NCIS focus on target for the bomb.

Callen finally gets face time with Hetty. Hetty says being in charge sucks because everybody is always looking to you. The true test of a commander is when he is as scared as anybody else, you find the strength to act. Callen takes this to heart.

Hanna posits the target is a Pershing Square rally in downtown Los Angeles. Deaks brings his bomb sniffer dog, a mangy mutt that Hanna disrespects. After canvassing the area, Hanna checks a guitar case and Kenzi sees a lone backpack. Deaks and the dog sniff up on a maintenance worker, whom Deaks instantly knows is Shepherd. The man runs off as Deaks confirms the device planted in the trash. Kenzi trips him and catches him.

People run everywhere as the NCIS sound the alarm and police run the crowds away. Callen and Hanna are about to reach in the trash can when Hanna sees the bomb squad and holds Hanna back. He says that the bomb squad should retrieve the bomb and disarm it and Hanna agrees they shouldn't suit up for nothing on such a hot day.

They all realize that Hetty has been giving them hints she won't be around and they rush back to the boatshed. A new officer says that she is now in charge and that Hetty is gone. Callen ignores the new boss and demands Nell get the Director Vance on the phone. The new general tells them that Vance will be giving them a briefing via televideo shortly and could she see Callen in her office when they are through?

Meanwhile Hetty is seen coming up the subway steps of an East German or Western European town where German or Czechoslovakian speaking men try to run up behind her. Hetty sense them and calmly flicks her wrist, and a gun pops into her hand. The men see this and flee, and Hetty continues with her umbrella on the way.

Summary: Callen and the rest of the NCIS team refuse to accept Hetty's sudden resignation without an explanation. They start their own investigation to find out why she's disappeared, hoping they can track her down.

In Murmansk, Hetty stalks a criminal lair and walks in. She says she has a message for Kmescu. There is a hush. They check her for weapons and then she shoots the low level goons dead. In the morning the serious players come home and she requests again to be taken to Kmezcuc. She says her message must come only to the head of the family. In Los Angeles, Callen Hanna Deeks and Kendi continue to resist the command of Hetty's replacement. Callen in particular does not sense a military authority in her. She says on the phone to someone she does have authority but is not convincing. Callen sees her in the shooting range and she can barely hit the paper figure. He assesses her as not much of a field operative.

Kendi wonders if ambitious pushed Hetty out. Agent Hunter has been on a classified assignment to Murmansk and Warsaw off the grid for two to three years. Callen approached Hunter in her office where they exchange commonplace chat in Italian, Russian, Polish, Czechoslovakian, French, Danish, Czerbian, and then Hunter starts speaking a dialect he doesn't know.

Callen and Hanna leave to go case one of Hetty's three houses. Hunter can't get Callen or Hanna to stay for a meeting. Callen says he shadowed Hetty home a dozen times and she never sleeps in the same place. They find four men in suits patrolling the grounds. Callen pretends he is a neighbor and they say they are police, and when Callen asks for identification they start shooting.

The resulting gunfight gets all the men dead. Hetty's vintage Jaguar gets shot up in the mess. Deeks and Kendi show up and shake their heads at the shot up Jag. They explore the house and get a creepy feeling. They find Hetty's computer with her files set to start a virus if they are opened. They take the laptop back to the lab, where an angry Director Vance has arrived and tells them all to go into the Ops room. Vance says he did not want Hetty to retire. Vance says Hetty was tired and Callen says he doesn't believe that. Vance asks Eric and Nell if they did any personal research for her. Callen asks Nell to look for Hetty's files and Vance suggests the folder name. Agent Hunter asks for the file of the encoded file.

The code name "Operation Kmescu" is mentioned and both Vance and Hunter walk out of the room. The four men are identified as a team of professional ex-militia working as freelancers. Callen and Hanna bring in the nerd who acted as talent broker. Bernie Fisher booked the four operatives in Hetty's home. Vance finds the team researching what alias Hetty used to go undercover. Vance says she is in Europe where the Kmescu is. Vance enables Nell with top secret clearance and Vance puts his password into the computer to loosen up Hetty's files.

But Agent Hunter won't tell Callen who Kmescu is.

The coordinator for the mercenaries is a nerd and he sweats out a confession.

He was hired to get a computer file, the one Hetty put a password virus on. Grigor Kmescu is in Los Angeles, according to the pro team broker. Callen, Kenzi and the rest are shocked. This is what Hetty was looking for and she is in Europe! Vance orders Kmescu brought in and tells Callen that he, Vance, will personally do the questioning.

Callen arranges a meet with Kmescu and a kid tells him to go on the roof. He pretends to hand over the file. He says they can handle the woman but Kmescu says they already have her. Hanna trails Callen to the new meet. Deaks and Kenzi find the sniper, but there is a second shooter on Grigor, and they disable him just after Kmescu discovers the file is fake.

But Callen and Hanna react by shooting Kmescu dead. In Ops, Eric acknowledges that Vance and Hunter have watched via satellite and know already. Nell tracks Hetty to Prague where she used her own credit cards and didn't cover her trail. She travels as Gloria Edwards.

Callen arrives in time to overhear and asks Vance how long he has known Hetty was in Prague. Callen demands to be in on the team in Prague and Vance emphatically denies his going. Callen orders a ticket on the next flight. He speaks Czech and Romanian, why can't he go? Vance says it's all about him. The Kmescu family wants Callen dead. Vance says Callen will absolutely not be part of the team in Prague.

Dbrashen Varoselic was trying to warn Callen. There is a Romany family feud. Vance finally says that Hunter is a linguist and her skills helped identify that Operation Kmescu is about Callen himself, his family. Callen says he doesn't have a family this must be a mistake. Vance says yes it must be a mistake and Hetty will sort it out. Callen realizes Hetty is risking her life to save him.

Callen gives up his gun and badge and walks out. Hanna does the same, hesitating as he gives up his weapon and his career as an ex-SEAL. Kenzi likewise folds her badge and gun and leaves. Deaks (who is still a LAPD officer) says he would if he could. Vance nods and says they have no idea where to start looking, but Nell confesses she uploaded all the data onto their cellphones. Vance tells Agent Hunter to find them before they all get killed.

In Prague, Hanna keeps fiddling with his black market gun. Deaks and Kenzi are annoyed. They rush the gang house and find the girl tied up in the closet. Callen speaks Romanian to her and finds out she has been taken to the Kmescu crime family in Romania.

Hetty is brought to the crime family's villa by the shore. Hetty says she has a message to deliver to the head of the family. The woman, about fifty, steps forward and says her real name is Hetty or Edwards but even those aren't real. Hetty hands the woman a computer gadget, which she gives to one of the men to put on the computer.

Meanwhile Nell detects that Hetty ordered some documents and erased all trace of them. Vance comes up while she is reviewing the file. There is something about a distinguishing mark in Hetty's file. Nell sees something else and Vance prevents her from saying it out loud.

In Romania, Callen and the group disembark on the beach. They assess the villa while Callen wanders onto the beach in a daze.

He recognizes the signs and the ice cream truck and the people playing soccer from a scene in his memory. Callen for the first time ever remembers something from his youth and past that is real.

Callen is stunned to realize this is the beach from his childhood memory dream. He drops to his knees on the sand.

He remembers the man giving him the toy soldier when he was a small child. The rest of the NCIS Los Angeles crew run to see what is wrong. Callen realizes his heritage is that of a Romany crime warlord.

At the Kmescu compound, Hetty presents Callen's death certificate to the woman who leads them, swearing he died a few weeks ago.

She calls the woman by her Christian name, Alexei.

The head of the family (who has brown eyes and brown hair like Hetty) asks why she should believe her. In Romanian, Hetty replies that she is family. Hetty then takes off her coat and shows the family tattoo. Hetty smiles in triumph.

Summary: As the team continues their search for Hetty in Romania, Callen finds answers to the secrets of his past.

Callen tells his partner that he remembers the beach because he was born there. Callen remembers his mother getting shot next to him. Hanna is shocked to realize that Callen has remembered the beach memory in operation Cmescu. But Callen describes the territory like he has been there before. Callen leads the Prague team to a deserted warehouse to regroup.

Meanwhile at NCIS HQ in Los Angeles, Vance directs the computer wizards to find out what is going on, although they use off-the radar code so it is not an official order. They find another file that Hetty had on the Cmescus, although they thought she dumped the main file. The Hetty rules do not apply, and Eric enjoys coffee and Oreos in Ops.

The team shootout in Prague reports on the ops wire. Nell and Eric find no data on the hard drive and cannot find Hetty's trail. Vance says they only have one agent in Prague, agent Hunter. Nell asks for news from agent Hunter who is supposedly hunting Hetty officially.

The NCIS crew, on the beach in Romania, act to count heads and map out the perimeter by watching the beach house and the guards outside. Hanna wants more answers from Callen. But Callen says he has 30 minutes to arm up for the raid on the Cmescu house. Callen says the memories of the toy soldier were from the beach they were just on. Callen says this is where he is from. Callen remembers the murder of his mother.

Hetty Lange has submitted to the Cmescu household and is speaking with its matriarch. Hetty spins a story that she was born in a concentration camp and raised by Romany foster parents. The woman does not believe her. Hetty asks her how the feud started. She says then she will reveal why she came.

Callen and the team see a mysterious woman arrive to the Cmsecu compound. She is well known to the guards and a friendly face to them. Deaks is stunned to look through binoculars and see...Agent Hunter. Kenzi is shocked too.

At the same time Eric and Nell decode the NCIS file and decrypt the photos. One of the photos is blurred. They scramble the Cmsecu family portrait to find Agent Hunter. Agent Hunter is the niece of the Cmsecu crime family matriarch Alexa. Vance walks in to see what they are doing.

Hanna says she must be undercover. Callen learns that Hunter is part of the Cmsecu family group. Hanna says having her in the house changes the plan. Callen says the plan is to kill them all.

The Cmsecu matriarch tots up Hetty's kill tally. She tells about how Callen's mother was born. Then the escape to America ended their chances. The father swore on his father's grave to end the father's bloodline. Hetty says that Callen won't go easily and the woman says no, he won't, it is in his blood. The woman was killed leaving two children behind, a girl and a boy.

Hetty reveals that after the Cmsecus sought revenge she was not able to shield Callen's mother from the Cmsecu vengeance. Meanwhile the NCIS crew spread out.

Hetty must make amends to save Callen. The Cmsecu matriarch show Hetty pictures of the NCIS team hitting the airport and says she is lying. The Cmsecu matriarch says she knows Callen better than he knows himself. Alexa meets briefly with Elena/Hunter, who does not speak up for Hetty or recognise her.

Deaks and his partner pretend to be on the honeymoon taking pictures. Kenzi has problems with their back story. Deaks tells Callen that Hunter went in and the guards are closing in. Deaks watches the house while Kenzi doubles back to the warehouse. Kenzi listens as Deaks says he is being approached. Hanna scans the guards and says they need a diversion.

Director Vance asks Nell and Eric to hone in on Agent Hunter's satellite tracker. They run a trace on the address. The Cmsecu cellphones are traced. They find cellphones nearby grouped in one place. The Romanian camp s where Hunter is and Nell wants to know how she went to the beach house and why hasn't she called.

Deaks spots the gaurds coming for him and runs he runs to the warehouse where the NCIS crew is hiding. He runs up the stairs and where the group is, shouting he has three prisoners. The men rush the interior where Callen speaks in Romanian and they shoot to kill. Kenzi and Hanna insist Deaks got made but Deaks pulls the airport photos out of the dead man's pocket. They know who to look for.

Hetty speaks candidly with the head of the Cmsecu family. Alexa says it was a mistake to let Callen grow into man. Hetty asks what Callen's first name is. Alexa says that the OSS man sent to kill her grandfather for being a collaborator in the war was taken vengeance upon. Callen is the grandson of that man.

Vance activates the cellphone data trap. Eric snoops on the phones looking for the agent Hunter cellphone. They check for callbacks. The company that owns the beach house has four phones. Nell says the phones are in the light industrial and are burn phones, supposedly bought in Prague. Vance asks Eric to text message the four NCIS officers to call him.

Hanna debates what to do with the prisoner Dracul Cmsecu. Callen may want to kill him. Dracul demands to know about Elena. Dracul says this is his cousin. Callen is stunned and then all the team's phones ring. Callen rings Eric who puts him n speaker to Director Vance. Callen denies he is an agent. Eric and Nell tell Vance that Agent Hunter is Elena Vadim.

Nell and Eric triangulate the cellphones of the Cmsecu family as Callen and Hanna interrogate Dracul Cmsecu about who Hunter is. Dracul says it is his cousin Elena and they played together as children.

Eric and Nell open the photo file to show Vance who this is. The photos go back much further than the three months Vance says that Hunter has been gathering intel. Vance and Callen debate whether or not Hunter turned on them. Vance doesn't want to believe it. Vance says the Cmsecu deal in human trafficking.

Then Agent Hunter calls Callen at the warehouse from the family compound. Hunter/Elena wants to know where Callen is. Callen asks her what she is doing. Callen take a breath and trusts her with their location.

Hetty keeps Alexa talking while Elena/Hunter runs the guard out. Lots of shooting happens. The NCIS team rush the house. Lauren Hunter has a gun. Callen runs for Hetty.

Gunfire erupts outside, as Hetty and Alexa stare at each other. Hetty is shot by the matriarch under the table, before Callen is able to get there. Callen rushes Alexa, who says she knows everything about who he is. But as he turns, Elena/Hunter appears in the doorway with a gun.

Behind him Alexa pulls a gun on Callen but Elena shoots her dead. Then Hunter gets a laptop out of the closet to show Callen why she appeared as the family cousin. She says the real Elena is married in Argentina and wants nothing do with the family. Hunter says that there is a reason.

But then Hanna notices that Hetty isn't breathing or speaking, and she shoots a bloody hand across the table. Callen realizes Hetty is shot and dying.

Summary: After a cyber attack on the DOD, NCIS and the NSA team up to locate the person responsible. Callen continues to look for information regarding his past.

A wealthy man and his wife leave a downtown fundraiser while he complains he would have had more fun losing the money in Las Vegas. A van pulls up and kidnaps the man. Hunter orders a recon. Dennis Calder dropped out of MIT and lives in Beverly Hills. He has been developing intelligence systems for the private sector. College buddies want to sue him. But they realize the woman at the party was not his wife. The driver was shot.

Nell open a secret instruction nobody else sees, left in case she is dead. Callen returns to the boat shed without Hetty, depressed. Nell says Hetty is at home recuperating. Nell is designated to a mail-room employee when Acting Operations manager Hunter puts a NSA operative in the intelligence room with Eric. Nell reminds Deaks about his forms and timecards. They feel like Nell is in on a Hetty type observation. Hunter orders them to develop a situation report.

Hunter ignores Callen's requests for information. Agent Callen wants a data analysis on the Cmescu laptop. Three months since the attack Callen wants to know why the Cmescu people wanted to kill him. Hunter says it is Vance's decision. On the way to research the kidnapping Callen and Hanna discuss the new vibe around the NCIS organization in Los Angeles. Callen and Hanna detail to the wife of the kidnapped man how to proceed.

Hetty sends a message and so does Hunter just as they are discussing them. Callen does not like the vibe and does not trust Operations manager Hunter. The kidnapped man was an expert in security systems. The son of the man is a computer expert and the man was getting sued by people he had been in business with. The wife does not recognise the woman in the images of the kidnapping. Naval Criminal Investigative Service is on the job.

A high level hack was attributed to the missing man. The wife says he has a discreet companion. Callen and Hanna track the woman to her job but the computer is missing. The driver of the car was dead. Calder's driver had cocaine in his system. Nicholas Del Amico was a deputy who was responsible for missing evidence. Callen and Hanna find the kidnapped man's computer is missing from his office.

Another cyber attack happens on the NSA system that is very serious. Eric tries to stop it. Agent Hunter brings in an NSA specialist, Patricia, to replace Nell in the ops room. Callen says bringing Miss Michaels into NCIS is wrong and that is what the boat shed is for. Hunter says Deaks is an outsider, 'just a cop', and calls the NCIS operations a game. Nell interrupts their fight to state the driver was killed by a munitions weapon of a high caliber.

Callen and Hanna go to the road to chase the case. They get a text from Hetty about the shoes worn by the missing woman from the kidnapping. These are very unique. They go to the boutique and identify the owner of the remaining shoe at the kidnapping scene as a customer.

Callen and Hanna find the woman who wore the shoes, Elizabeth, who tries to run away and gets away from them when they come to her house. They talk to her about the kidnapping. She says she knew he was a married man and just ran away from the whole situation. Calder was a gambler but gave it up. She says he was not with organized crime or gambling.

Another very serious attack happens on the NCIS servers. Deaks gives a tennis lesson and has fun with Calder's son while Eric fights the computer attack. Miss Michaels also tries to battle the cyber attack. The IP address is found by Eric from the person trying to break into the Calder's home security system.

They track the computer operation to a computer at Santa Monica Community College Library. Over 270 computers are in use. Callen and Hanna go there and chase the man. The Chinese man in the library notices the webcam on and shuts his computer and leaves, and runs and outside and gets hit with a car. Callen grabs the man's computer thrown on the ground.

The man driver gets out and says the man jumped in the road. But Nell points out later the security cam shows he deliberately ran into the Chinese man to kill him once his security was compromised. Miss Michael scoffs at Nell's contribution.

Hanna thinks the family might be in danger too. The team organize identity covers for the squad to be in the house for additional security. Deaks is tennis coach and Kenzi is a tutor. They find the Chinese man seemed like a normal student.

But Kenzi realizes the son was capable of cyber attack. She searches for his computer and has Eric check it. They realize Eric is responsible for the hacking that his father was kidnapped for, including the government sites of Brazil, China, and France. Dennis Calder's wife is appalled at what her son has been up to. The son realizes his deeds online were what got his father kidnapped.

Callen demands of Calder's son how and what he hacked after he hacked the foreign government sites. Callen think that the Chinese might have kidnapped Calder thinking him responsible for the hacking attacks.

Nell tracks the driver of the Chinese student's drive by killing to the Garden of Peace and Wellness. It sounds like a good cover. Eric and Miss Michaels use a satellite signal of thermal signatures in the building. Kenzi and Deaks infiltrate the building. Kenzi starts a fire alarm to empty the building. Nell climbs up a telephone pole and cuts power to the building and the lights turn off. Callen and Hanna come in armed and shooting starts.

The man Calder is found inside the building chained to a laptop. The Tibetan separatist group is blamed by the Chinese government. Agent Hunter has kind words to say about the team's work.

Callen visits Hetty at home. he wants answers and he knew things she never told him. She says if she didn't tell him something it was for his own good. He says he deserves the truth. She says the truth is not so simple. Hetty says she doesn't want to give him false hope. Callen gets called on the packet Nell gave him and Hetty says that she might trust him or open the packet. Callen says he will find out the truth about his family on his own and Hetty breathes a sigh of relief.

Summary: Special Agent Sam Hanna is sent undercover as a bomb specialist as the team races to locate stolen explosives somewhere in the city. Meanwhile, to much protest, Hunter changes the dynamics of the team and has Callen partnered with Kensi and Sam with Deeks.

Hunter brings the team the case of Marine Sgt. Marcos, a demolitions expert, who was just killed this morning in a blast while driving the SUV of an infamous club owner, Winslow, on an L.A freeway. Callen immediately questions Hunter on why this is their case and she just points out that they need no other reason than Marcos was a Marine. Additionally, Hunter decides to switch our team's partners which just enrages Callen even more.

Sam and Deeks head to Marcos home. When they arrive they see a man in the backyard running from a work shed, as they give chase the shed explodes. Sam takes down the man and once they take him to the boatshed, Sam and Callen interrogate him together - to Hunters annoyance - and discover he is Marcos' friend and was the one who connected Marcos to Winslow. Winslow paid top dollar for Marcos to build five remote denotation bombs but after Marcos delivered the bombs he regretted it and was on his way to give Winslow back his money when he was murdered by one of his own bombs. Marcos' friend, racked with guilt, volunteers to help Sam infiltrate

Winslow's organization to find out the target and stop him from detonating the bombs. They discover the target is the new club of Winslow's former protégé turned rival. Callen and the team work to evacuate everyone within a one block radius while Sam works with Winslow inside pretending to help fix the bombs that Marcos supposedly rigged to be duds. Winslow catches on that the police may know what is going on and Marcos' friend is killed in chaos as Winslow activates the bombs by accident. Sam rushes to find an exit as the building explodes. Hunter sends Callen and Kensi on what appears to be a wild goose chase for Winslow's girlfriend who doesn't seem to exist. Nell finally finds a picture of her and shocks everyone when it is Agent Hunter. Callen rushes to confront Hunter and finds Hetty back in her office, seemingly aware of everything that has transpired under Agent Hunter while she was gone. Hetty tells Callen to sit down and gives him a piece of the puzzle to his past - his mother's name.

Summary: The NCIS team becomes involved in the Libyan conflict when a news reporter is murdered. Callen learns something about his past from Hetty and it could affect their relationship.

A KWL3 reporter covering a Venice festival get shot at during a news shoot. The drive-by is serious. She is shot many times by an automatic weapon and her video reporter friend rushes to her aid but watches her die. She did a series of stories on a Libyan figure. Her investigation into an Internet figure cost her her life. The man went back to Libya and formed a following of rebels after Gaddafi shut down Libyan Internet. The reporter had contact with a naval intelligence officer on Libyan affairs.

At the HQ, Deeks brings his dog Monte in who begs Hanna for food. Monte is the bomb sniffing dog who has proved himself action. Monte has canine PTSD. Eric works a dog whistle and it affects Monte. At the TV station Kenzi learns that the video reporter had a thing for Adriana and he knew about the death threats she received. He reports she has a Libyan contact at a source. Liver and raisins was a Libyan specialty dish.

Callen and Hetty share information about Clara his mother and father worked in the CIA and it is in his blood. George Callen parachuted into Romania 1944 to overthrow the fascists who sided with Hitler. he hunted down war criminals including the Kmescu family.

Callen mulls the role of his antecedents in the American intelligence community. he married in 1947 the Roma girl and the Kmescus sought revenge and murdered him and his mother fled to America with their child. Hetty was her handler. She went back to Romania as a student that was her cover. She vanished for six years then reappeared desperate to get out of Romania. She then had two children. Callen has a sister. Hetty was contacted through channels.

At the last minute Hetty was ordered to abort the mission. They had agreed to meet on the beach. This was the beach assassination that Callen remembers witnessing as a child and Hetty explains this is why she went back. Hetty asks for Callen's forgiveness. Callen works out his feelings with a punching bag.

Hanna gets begged for food at for Deak's mutt. Eric must teach them password encryption breaking and when Deaks asks why he says then he can read anything, and remarks he has read Kenzi's diary. Adriana Gomez called a man twice the day she was killed. She was investigating gaddafi and the real identity of a known killer. She was told to back off on the story.

Commander Madison is her intelligence contact and Hanna and Callen make a visit, The man who pens the door is under pressure from a reflection in the glass pane of a window hanging. Callen fakes going back for a warrant and give Madison the high sign they pause and then rush the door shouting 'NCIS'. They jump in through the door and fire guns but the interloper runs out the back and escapes.

Deaks calls out the license plate number. The men identified with the car are associates of Assad El Levi. The men wanted intel from Commander Madison. The Middle Eastern man wanted Adriana to stop doing her stories. Celine Akeem and a partner rushed Madison trying to find out what he knew about El Levi's real identity.

Yusef and his friends and escaped and came through LAX on tourist visas. Hanna says they must have had help. Adriana would have had a broadcast exclusive on the Gaddafi spokesmen. They look for the source through the cameraman. he says she went to a Libyan cafe. They locate Cafe Tripoli.

They find Adriana's credit card indicates she went to a Libyan cafe three times. Deaks says that they are a young couple service animal like Monte. Deaks and Kenzi come in and see the Libyans watching El Levi the mystery figure on TV. Kenzi and Deaks pretend to be friends of friends of Adriana's source. Two men leave after getting nervous and Deaks recites the number.

The car is registered to a Libyan expatriate who owns several small businesses. One of the closed businesses is an auto shop which has a large power bill current which Eric finds suspicious. Deaks and Kenzi radio it in and Callen and Hanna go to check it out. They find computer wires ripped out and high speed internet connections. they find the studio for the broadcast of El Levi.

Callen says he never went to Libya and has been broadcasting locally the whole time. The Middle eastern political figure has been broadcasting live from the business address locally from Los Angeles.

Kenzi thinks the dog Monte wants to hear any voice on the radio. Kenzi and Deaks stalk out the house the car and auto shop is registered to. A an associated with Hejazi the dictator approaches in a car. Eric says he left Ferraz Hejazi's shop in a hurry.

But the elderly man who answers the door is not the one hosting the broadcast. He is an honest citizen who does not realize his son is enabling the dictator who wants to start a war uprising in the Middle East. Eric and Nell use the IP address to plot the activity of the counterterrorist and what they plan. He always broadcasts live.

Assad El Levi was broadcasting from his shop and Hanna asserts he gave him a key. Callen says that they killed Adrian because they couldn't get to her. Callen says they can protect him if they share information. Hanna and Callen says it is only matter of time. the man lawyers up and asserts they have him because they raided the auto shop.

Eric finds a parking ticket on one of he cars know to be uses by the Libyans in pursuit. But then they check out the car and find the body of a young deadLibyan in the back seat. Tariq Al Cousa met and loved their country enough to launch the internet show. The Arab Spring then began. Tariq was an IT tech and a programmer. He saw a way to help the rbels.

They said Gaddafi had many resources. The man assumed he was still there. Tariq said he could be more effective from America. Tariq made El Levi made it seem like he was in Libya for morale. But the Libyan rebel effort flourished with the figure of El Levi online. Farraj knew that it was possible Gaddahfi has sent them. Tariq has a sister but Farraj insists nobody else knew what he was doing.

Nell notices that Hassad El Levi is online again and referencing events that happened after they found his body. Callen thinks the sister might be behind the new El Levi. Kenzi and Deaks interview the sister. They ask who has taken over the broadcast. She said only Farraj Hejazi would be trusted for this role. She thought she was being follow

Nell and Eric discuss appearing in each other's dreams. Assad El Levi is asking them to meet in small town 50 clicks West of Misrada. Gaddafi pulled a lot of his troops away from that area. This is not right unless he knows about the rebel summit. The messages have been sent to Gaddafi's military command. The rebels are being set up to die.

Hetty contacts the CIA to tell the rebels they are being set up. The voice of the revolution is to be trusted. Kenzi asks Eric to track a red van hanging around the restaurant. Hanna reads the van brand of an Arabian market. Hanna goes in acting like he is planning a feast. Hanna spots a man hiding in the back and the NCIS team corners him in the back. Hanna pleads with the man in Arabian not to use the knife but he rushes Hanna and Callen shoots.

The dead man had phone calls from Farraj. Kenzi and Deaks intentionally let the father out of their sight to make a phone call which Eric and Nell track. When they bust the Libyan rebels nearby, they dress up Hanna who warns the Libyan men away from the ambush in Libya far away. Hetty reports later most of the rebels were able to avoid the massacre.

Hetty awards Monte special membership in the NCIS LA team. Hanna is disgusted slightly. Hejazi's father was taken into custody hours ago. But Farraj Hejazi is shown taking up the torch from his incarcerated father's role before the flag.

Hanna finally feeds Monte. But Callen approaches Hetty and wants to know how they got to America from Romania. Hetty says that it took two years to find him. She put him in foster home after foster home. Hetty says they never found out what happened to his father. At home, Callen opens a declassified file with pictures of his long dead mother smiling happily.

Summary: A joint operation between NCIS and LAPD is necessary when a known terrorist is linked to a local drug cartel. Sam is distracted when an important item comes up missing.

A shootout at a pawn shop uncovers and unlikely working alliance between Al-Qaeda and a Mexican drug cartel. NCIS:LA works to figure out why these two odd bedfellows are working together and does their alliance risk U.S national security. To complicate matters, a young female Mexican police chief who was appointed after every other police chief was murdered by the cartel and everyone in town was too afraid to take the job, inserts herself into the investigation tracking down the Mendoza cartel member who murdered her brother. Deeks takes a liking to her as she does toward him but Kensi is less enthusiastic about having her around.

As our team investigates the case they seem to have two FBI agents always one step ahead of them and when they finally catch them they realize they are CIA. The agents were trying to cover their mistake in allowing Al-Qaeda to steal a highly sophisticated drone which they now intended to sell to the Mendoza cartel to fund their terrorist activities. The agents lead the team to the location of the exchange when the police chief calls out one of the agents as a dirty cop who works for the cartel.

Tempers flare and suddenly a car drives by and shots ring out at our team. When the smoke clears both CIA agents are dead and our police chief admits to killing the dirty agent but says it is only after he shot his partner and turned the gun on Kensi.

Our team doesn't know if they can trust her and who is telling the truth. Soon they discover who is lying and rush to reclaim the drone from enemy hands.

Callen), Linda Hunt (Henrietta 'Hetty' Lange), LL Cool J (Special Agent Sam Hanna), Daniela Ruah (Special Agent Kendi Blye), Eric Christian Olsen (LAPD Detective Marty Deeks), Barrett Foa (Tech Operator Eric Beal), Renée Felice Smith (NCIS Intelligence Analyst Nell Jones)
Guest Stars: Yuji Okumoto (Akio Tanaka), Drew Fuller (Connor Maslin), Ron Yuan (Yosh), Jerry Kernion (Boss), Yuu Asakura (Maeko Tanaka)
Production Code: 307
Summary: When a Marine that was dishonorably discharged is accused of murder and claims he was framed, it is up to NCIS to figure out the truth.

Callen reports a radio talk show call in with Deak's drawl who complains about falling for his co-worker. Kendi looks interested while Hetty confirms Deaks has a drawl. Sam Hanna is away again and his co-workers notice. Kendi begs to know what assignment he is on.

A man gets beat up on a Los Angeles subway red line and is left for dead. The man is Chinese. The cameras see the young man who did it and an APB is put out. Callen and Hanna find him but are not sure what to think. He is labeled a bad egg.

Meiko Tanaka is the young woman allegedly assaulted but Nell can find no record of her in the USA. The man says Tanaka is his girlfriend who asked for asylum. The NCIS feel they should be loyal to a fellow Marine.

Erik reports the video from the red line train has a second act. A handsome man makes Kendi's heart beat faster. Hanna and Callen see Deak's heartbroken look.

The murder looks clear first of a young Japanese man beat up by an American former NCIS who was dishonorably discharged. But the other man later leaves another wallet that frames the first man. Kendi is upset her dream man has flaws, while Deaks brightens. The Japanese national was killed by the second man.

Callen and Hanna find the man. They chase him but a black Cadillac arrives and chases him and he runs. Callen saves the former Marine following him by tackling him. They question him at the boat shed and he says his girlfriend is the supposed assailant victim and a Chinese national who wants to marry him come to the USA and stay. They question his story.

Tanaka goes to a business conference at the Japanese Gardens and pretends his daughter is in Japan. Callen and Hanna introduce themselves. Hanna understands Japanese. Tanaka says his daughter is in Japan negotiating a rail contract. He calls her there when asked. A woman answers.

Hanna speaks Japanese and speaks to the woman. After hanging up, they walk away. Hanna calls Erik and gets him to trace the phone call and see if it really came from Japan. They have only one woman's word anything bad happened and they can't find her.

Upon returning to the boat shed the heat is on. Hetty informs them they have been officially removed from the case and ordered to stand down. This is Tanaka's government reach and influence talking. With nothing to hide, why would they be prevented from investigating further?

The crew believe maybe the NCIS man has been framed after all. They look into the morgue where a man shows up to claim the body. He has connections to Tanaka's organization. The NCIS thinks he made it very fast for a simple Japanese man to get to the USA overnight. He claims the body.

Then they go to the hotel Tanaka is staying in and plant cameras on a pastry tray Deaks delivers. The hidden micro cameras see Tanaka's daughter come out of the room. She is in Los Angeles. Tanaka schedules a plane to take back the body. He will use it to smuggle his daughter out as well, leaving the assault charge on the ex-marine.

The NCIS crew are really told to step back. Hetty says Vance put her on a short leash. But Callen says they gotta do what they gotta do. Nell and Erik dress up as airport security clerks who hold up Tanaka's plane and staff boarding due to excessive security checks.

Although the flight manifest says the dead man's widow is coming, he is not married. It is the daughter who is in a black veil. Erik insists due to a heightened security threat all persons must be searched for metal objects due to a terrorist threat. Comically Erik demands every stitch of clothing be searched.

Nell pretends to do a female security search and the veiled woman with Tanaka gets beeped. Then Kenzi confronts Meiko under the veil with questions about the assault from the NCIS man. Kenzi boards the plane veiled in black as Meiko and then hides in the bathroom. Callen sneaks her out through a cache after Deaks spills luggage all over the runway.

The pilot laughs at Deaks dropping the luggage everywhere. Tanaka on board yells at his daughter. He thinks she is hiding in the plane restroom. He opens the door to find only her clothes and shoes which Kenzi had to take off to get through the passageway. She has vanished. Tanaka is shocked.

At the Los Angeles beach, they reunite the Marine and his girlfriend Meiko Tanaka. He marvels she got away from her father. She says he still doesn't know how she got away.

They hug and even Kenzi mists up. Then Deaks and Kenzi make a date for a strictly co-worker dinner. Hanna leaves and Callen goes to the shed where Hetty has a cup of tea. Callen questions whether or not she ever regretted not having a family and Hetty is content.

Summary: When a Navy ID is found on a dead body tied to a hazardous material smuggling case, NCIS is granted permission to investigate in Mexico and asked to help locate the missing materials.

In Mexico, a man jumps from a parachute into a motorcycle, landing on the ground and suddenly falling as a shot sounds out. Another man comes up, tracking his body and then freeing and clutching the mysterious box. He crows in triumph and hauls the heavy box across the sand. He is shot and killed. A person with red boots comes riding up, and gets the very heavy box, leaving two bodies behind.

At the boathouse, Callen and Hanna watch Deaks and Kenzi walz to a record Hetty has put on. Deaks and Kenzi pair up. Kenzi is wearing high heels and Deaks steps on her feet. Kenzi complains the heels hurt. Hetty asks Callen and Hanna to step up and do the walz, and they protest. But Hetty insists. She is serious.

Eric interrupts in the nick of time. Two bodies in Mexico await their expertise. As they go wheels up with their Go bags, Hetty leaves, and Eric says they owe him big time. Hanna and Callen agree. Hanna and Callen trade winks over Nell having a bouquet of flowers on her desk that brings Eric up short.

In Mexico, the Mexican police show them the bodies in the desert. Callen recognizes one of the dead men as a British arms dealer. They see a remote kill with a custom shell was the final kill.

They track a heavy object dragged away and find tracks from the border. Deaks makes friends with a pig and Kenzi says they are the same species. They spot a truck that ramped the motorcycle and find security camera footage lading into the United States.

Callen and Hanna visit the arms dealer's widow, who says there was gold in the box. She says because her husband was dishonorably discharged she doesn't even get a pension. he man intended to steal it to support his wife and a coming baby. Nell calculates the box might have contained eight million dollars worth of gold.

The truck matching the Mexican sand tracks leads them to a Los Angeles auto garage. Callen and Hanna get into a gunfight with the uncooperative gang members there who don't bow to Federal agents without a warrant. Hanna knows there are guns and drugs on the premises and they are risking a lot.

A gunfight breaks out while the lead members get away. Callen and Hanna are trapped behind heavy gunfire. Hanna starts a personless Mustang running, and the car distracts and rushes the automatic machine gun gunner and Hanna shoots him. Callen and Hanna find a cooperative mechanic hidden under a car who tells them everything at the boathouse.

The man says the box is filled with brown heroin. Jaime says a slick operator who is half Indian with red boots ran the truck and got the box. Hanna and Callen realize everyone is being told something different to move the box into the country.

They profile the red-boot-wearing hustler. Jaime says he wore some badass red dragon wrist bands. Deaks says this is the work of certain local tattoo accessories shop. Eric tracks the Internet orders of the shop website through a quick low level de-encryption and finds only one local red dragon wrist band order with an address in downtown Los Angeles.

Nell sees that Eric receives a bouquet of flowers. Eric asks if Nell is in a relationship that requires flowers and she confesses she sent the flowers to herself.

Kenzi and Deaks join Hanna and Callen exploring the penthouse downtown. The man with red boots and dragon wristbands is dead, trying to snort powder of what was in the box. The wireless devices don't work there. Hanna and Callen go to check out the security cameras but they see via live feed someone returning to the penthouse.

Hanna tries to call and warn Kenzi but the coms are out because so much metal is in the building. The Indian man comes in. He pulls a gun on Kenzi just as Deaks starts babbling about the art in the place. Deaks babbles about guns and girls in art and how the world needs more of it. The man thinks Deaks doesn't know he is there.

The man tells Kenzi not to move but Deaks lands a gun on him, breaking his patter to say if he harms her he is over.

Hanna and Callen come in, threatening the intruder, but Sam recognizes the man. He is a CIA deep cover man who Hanna has been working with for the last year. He has been undercover in the Sudan. These are the mysterious trips Hanna has been taking every weekend, the team is interested to learn.

He says there is really uranium in the box, a deep secret and the destination is a dirty bomb or other terrorist act for Los Angeles. He tells Hanna his cover is blown and there is an Agency leak. Hanna is not CIA so his cover is not blown.

Hanna asks for clues and the man says he can't return to the Sudan again. This means Sam's mission is now a solo undercover one. But Sam says it means the world to his wife and family that he is home and safe and not working abroad undercover. Sam agrees.

The box is gone and Kenzi sees Dolly marks to the elevator. Someone got the box away. A van moved away from the scene. They break into the destination, a factory, at gunpoint. They profile the men in the camera and find they are working as air conditioner employees. The surprised workers blurt out that they just fix old air conditioning systems.

The CIA man calls this a real estate acquisition and Callen says it is an attack like 9/11 without blowing up buildings. They can spread the powder of uranium inside the buildings making them uninhabitable for decades. People breathing it will be killed.

Eric and Nell track where the mystery employees went for the day. Samir Abbas and another man Mala work at Anderson and Kirk technical services. Two of them were found on a real jobsite and one is missing. They track another man who is unaccounted for.

They track his van and stop him on the street. He keeps quiet and knowingly smirks, and denies any knowledge of any attack or uranium. The CIA man says it will be somewhere public. Deaks demands to know the target. But the GPS shows the van was out on a job at the Los Angeles Convention center. Kenzi radios in the target.

Eric says there are 30,000 people in it right then. There is Game World Expo happening. Callen and Hanna arrive when the alarms tell Convention center people to exit the building and remain calm. Eric tells Callen to navigate the Convention Center to the main lobby.

Alarms sound in the Convention Center and the people are herded out quickly. Sirens sound. They evacuate the Convention center and find the air panels the powder was meant to ruin. Callen finds the maintenance area and sees the staff working the air conditioning ducts. Hanna gets the drop on the man hunting Callen. The CIA man Sala comes with them.

One of the men brandishes the powder and tells Hanna and Callen to stay back. Sam sees his undercover friend Sala closing in and he gets in contact with the dust. They get the man but Sala is covered with the nuclear material.

He is suffering from uranium damage and Hanna sends for an ambulance and a radiological decon team. Sam feels guilty when the man escapes. They track him on camera from the security footage back at the boathouse.

Sam says he should have stayed with him. Hetty reports the CIA will take care of Sala the best they could. Nell says that with the uranium damage he has a few months left. He has a wife and a seven month old baby, Sam says. The CIA made sure he was decontaminated.

Sam starts that Sala was returned to the Sudan to continue working for the CIA. But Sam says he will die there. Hetty says it doesn't matter anymore. Sam says he is going in too.

Hetty says of course he is and there is a Gulfstream 5 fueling up right now. Hetty has transport arranged further on as well. Sam leaves. Callen tells Hetty he should go too. Hetty says that for now it is a CIA task force.

But Hettys says to Callen, 'I know I don't have to tell you to be ready'.

Summary: A joint CIA-NCIS operation gone wrong leaves an undercover Sam missing in Sudan, forcing Callen and the rest of the team to look for him before all is lost.

A man matching Hanna's description is tortured and killed by Sudanese rebel soldiers using a video camera. They brutally burn the man as he falls dead. Nell reads the official document and two CIA men have been confirmed dead.

Governor Khaled rules this part of the Sudan. Travel arrangements to Khartoum are made for Callen. Hetty says there is a link in the CIA's chain of command. Hetty orders the link found.

Callen tearfully opens the body bag but realizes it is not Han's body but sala's. Callan calls Hetty and says the scar on Hanna is not on the body he uses a geiger counter and realizes it is the other man. Callen scouts out

Callen watches Governor Khaled's group and Nell and Eric identify the players. Jada, the sister is agent Hanna's primary target. Callen is espied by a man who runs and Callen chases him. Helmsley takes off his kaffiyeh at Callen's command and shows his identification documents.

Callen meets an Global Criminal Tribunal man, Alex Helmsley, meets Callen in the Sudan. He shows that Sam is meeting Kalil's sister and she is forbidden fruit. Khaled has been hiring American security. The Global Tribunal can't get witnesses for the atrocities trial. Helmsley checks out and he says Callen is looking for three bodies but he is looking for a thousand.

The man says that thousands of bodies are never found from mass murders. He shows him that Sam is undercover meeting with the sister of the killer. The man appeals to Callen to help him uncover Khaled as a mass murderer.

But Callen and Alex Helmsley see Agent Sam Hanna go into a hotel room and kiss passionately with Khaled's sister Jada. Helmsley says Jada is Khaled's property and Khaled has burned men alive for less.

Hanna was one of four agents to monitor Khled. They wanted access to the terrorist network. Neil Vernon has instructed him not to speak to him.

Sam meets Khaled's sister in the hotel room. They kiss. But Sam backs off and asks to approach her brother directly for permission to know her. She says Khaled would never allow a Westerner and a Christian to be near his sister. Sam is angry she didn't tell him. She says he can do with her what he wants.

Jada says all they have is right now to be together.

Nell finds Colin Rand as the CIA man in charge. Rand's cover business is in Los Angeles he has accumulated a personal debt. Deaks' buddy in LAPD says he was busted for cocaine in West Hollywood. Deaks says a drug debt is good motivation for selling agents in the field.

Kenzi and Deaks are told to meet with Rand to determine if he is the leak. Hetty is told to protect the agents at all cost.

In the motel, Hanna is trapped. In the car Helmsley says the bodies from the massacres have never been found. Callen can't help him. Callen says the mission is to get the Sudanese Al-Qaeda who attempted a US attack.

Callen sees a man hanging around Hanna's room. Jada's cellphone rings and her brother raises the roof. She thinks he suspects. Hanna hears a voice at the door, it's Callen talking in Sudanese warning him. Sam and Hanna come into the hallway to talk to Callen. 'Welcome to Sudan'.

But one of Khaled's enforcers goes into the hotel hallway and sees Sam talking to Callen. (an obvious Westerner) they chase the man outside and Helmsley shoots him. Hanna wants to know who Helmsley is and Callen says he is OK. But a small child playing with a ball sees the murder and runs away. Callen chases him but can't get him he's gone.

Callen says why didn't he pick up the phone and email? Sam says he got too hot. Hanna plans to play he is revealing Helmsley as a sneaky Westerner to earn Khaled's trust.

Callen is told he is staying in. G will help. Hanna wants to take his picture and show it to Khaled. This is the reason he shot the enforcer, because he supposedly speaking to him.

Deaks and Kenzi talk to the man in the cover agency. His secretary blocks them. He says Vernon is going to get Sam's name one way or another.

Vernon is the only agent besides him that had the names of the task force. The embedded agents were revealed to Khaled. Kenzi asks if Vernon has Sam's name. They ask why Vernon doesn't know about Sam. He says because he was outside the CIA.

Kenzi says they would die for him and he would die to keep him safe. He says what about the breach in security? Rand says 'Ever try investigating your boss?'

Hanna pretends he saw the bodyguard talking to Helmsley and shows him a doctored photo.

In the Sudan, Khaled burns the body of the man they shot. Khaled asks Hanna about coming to work for him full time. He says he is buying. They destroy any evidence of his government's activity with Al-Qaeda. He says he is resisting working for Khaled because of business not family.

Next day Sam and Khaled's sister are driving and she stops the car. They walk in a field they talk about she was cooking and he returned to the Sudan just to be near her. He says he only took this job to be near her. He says he saw her and changed his mind. He says he came halfway around the world to be near her.

She says the only thing worse than knowing him gone would be knowing he is dead. Hanna argues for Khaled being decent and his sister blows up. She says in the name of patriotism he has killed thousands. Jada says that is why she has brought him there.

The field is ten kilometers from Khaled's farm. He sends a photograph to Hetty and Eric. They look at the hill shown. From pictures it is a creek bed two years ago. Nell and Hetty realize it is a mass grave.

The rebels that stop Hanna in the car with the sister are Southern Sudanese. Callen and Helmsley are in the tent. Hanna says all the documents are burned. Hanna says that it will take years before another agent can get in.

Khaled burned all documents lining the Southern Sudanese but even if they dig up the graves and nothing links Khaled to the bodies they have nothing. They need a smoking gun and they need a way to find the link. Callen says it is not an NCIS matter. But Hanna persists.

Hanna says they always tape their actions. Helmsley dares to hope there are tapes. Hanna says he wants to bring Jada to the West. Callen asks Hanna why he won't leave. Hanna says he'd bet money on it. He needs to find the proof of massacres of three villages. He asks Callen to back him up because he wants this, and Callen agrees.

Back at the boat shed, Nell and Eric research Colin Rand's boss. They hack Vernon's computer. Nell suggests they look for emails that have been securely erased. They find encrypted files attached to an email address in the Sudan. They bring up the three CIA ID's.

They look at the camera from the computer. Deaks and Eric and Nell identify the office. They see an office with pictures of Khaled and assume it is his. The encrypted attachment is the CIA ID pictures of the three dead agents. Kenzi is shocked and says he is the leak.

In the Sudan, Governor Khaled throws a party. The sister is sad and her brother Khaled finds her and says she is lying about why she is crying. He says she does not want to marry Samir, the arranged marriage. He says he does not want to have this discussion again. It is a family matter of family honor. He wants her to gather her wits and look nice for the visitors.

Hanna talks to Jada, who realizes she can never be his. Hanna approaches and says they can leave tonight.

Khaled will hunt her down if Hanna takes her to the West. Jada says only an affront to his honor would threaten him and Hanna says they have to have the tapes to shame him into remaining quiet about them leaving. Jada is upset and Hanna says they wouldn't have to show them to anyone just having them would keep Khaled quiet.

She says Khaled is her only family and she would never betray him. Hanna says he loves her and lets her go. But after walking away she turns and tells him where the tapes are. In his office is a large cabinet and large wooden box the tapes are in there. Hanna finds the carved box and the tapes. Jada said he wouldn't want the world to see those.

In Los Angeles, Deaks and Kenzi close on the office of the traitor. They tell Eric that Colin Rand is dead. Eric says that is weird because that minute an email is going out from Rand's computer. They run through the place and find his secretary using the computer. She is the leak.

Hetty orders the transmission stopped. Hetty says for Eric to stop the computer transmission and crash the network no matter what. Eric says he can't crash the CIA network that fast. Hetty orders Kenzi act.

They shoot but the secretary shoots back and sends the email with Hanna's NCIS service picture and documents. In the Sudan, Hanna calls Callen and says he has the information and is coming out.

At Governor Khaled's mansion, the little boy from the street comes into the dining room. He says he saw something. As Hanna leaves nobody is at the dining table. He walks outside but then soldiers and Khaled runs into the forecourt and armed soldiers span out.

Khaled says 'So, you are the spy'. He slaps him and says 'Find out who he works for and then kill him.' Jada sees this.

Callen asks Jada, how much do you love him?

In the tunnel Hanna is being tortured. The man says they all beg to die and they all tell him the truth. Jada comes into the room and tells her minder to leave them. She comes forward to Sam and asks if she was using her. She says 'He said he loved me'.

They believe they were working for American intelligence. Maybe CIA. Jada shoots the torturer from behind.

Sam says she is on American soil now. She will be asked to testify against her brother. In exchange she will be given asylum for her cooperation. Callen says that she can eventually get U.S. citizenship. Hanna says she will never see him again. She says she will never testify.

She starts crying and says all that time, all those emails, he was holding her hands. Jada is very shocked. She says she will be killed if she goes back. Hanna nods. Jada is disbelieving. Kenzi says for her to come with them. On closed circuit camera from the boat shed, Hetty observes the toll the mission has taken on Sam Hanna.

Hanna gets home and goes into his daughter's bedroom. Then he goes into his bedroom and his wife asks how was the mission in Miami. 'Hot' he says. He picks up his wedding ring and puts it on. His wife says she missed him and she loves and he replies back the same his face like a stone.

Summary: A botched assignment forces Hetty to fire Deeks and send him back to the LAPD. Meanwhile, an awkward goodbye between Kensi and Deeks leaves her with unexpected emotions for her old partner.

In Griffith Park, the Clarence Fisk organization is watched by NCIS while he meets with white supremacists for buying stolen missiles. Fisk wants money. Deeks and Kenzi watch nearby joggers run around the perimeter. Callen and Hanna watch Fisk meet the white Aryans.

Deeks and Kenzi watch the public move along. They radio to Callen when one of the women joggers gets stopped by the thug. But Deeks shoots one of the thugs when he reaches for a gun and then they find he was reaching for a cell-phone.

Then the LAPD is blaming NCIS for spooking Clarence Fisk. The remaining DX explosives are still for sale to the white supremacists. Deeks is under suspicion for being trigger happy.

Sam Hanna speculates Deeks might get suspended. Fisk has stayed ahead of them for way too long. Kenzi asks what about Deeks. Hetty fires Deeks when Bates cuts his liaison ties with NCIS.

Callen says we can offer him moral support but not much else. Hetty talks to her counterpart in the LAPD but they wanted him for fifteen years. Deeks is sent back to the LAPD.

Bates meets with Hetty about Deeks. He says that Deeks had skills but he was never one of the guys. But now he is trigger happy and must answer for it.

Hetty says he saw a threat and acted accordingly. The Lt. Bates says Internal Affairs will judge. Bates is considered the best interrogator in the LAPD. But somehow he never caught Fisk.

Eric reports Fisk just called his attorney Monica Lee and she has never lost any of the 15 LAPD cases. Callen alleges the winning streak means a leak. They look at the attorney and the connection with the LAPD. Angela Tully the missing LAPD investigator working on Fisk and perhaps the mole.

Eric and Nell find out that Monica Lee got her entire law school education paid for by Fisk. He owns a shell corporation that paid for her special schooling.

Callen and Hanna go to the lawyer to smoke her out. They claim to be business associates of Fisk's and got a visit from the task force. She says that it's impossible because it was dissolved. They say she could only know that if she'd heard from the leak.

She wants to know who they are and says she is very busy and walks out. They track who she talks to.

Deaks punches the bag saying he might just be another thug with a gun. But Fisk has 20 bricks on RDX explosive.

Kenzi and the group say goodbye to Deaks as he leaves. Kenzi thought he would have more to say to her. Hanna wants Lee's cellphone logs. Fisk paid for Lee's legal education.

Bates says he thought NCIS would fight a lot harder to keep him. Deaks says he can help but Bates says he is on traffic duty. Bates tells him to get a shave and a haircut. Deaks is noticeably uncomfortable about getting a haircut.

Meanwhile Kenzi mopes around the boat shed. Hetty probes why Kenzi is more upset than she should be about a partner. Then Bates calls Kenzi and she tells Hetty he wants to meet with her.

Deaks looks into the haircut angle and sees car shadowing him in the background. Deaks goes running and then crashes through the driver's window with a brick from an alley. He grabs the driver and pulls him out of the car, and finds it is a familiar face.

He says the class clown has been bad and Deaks says the Valedictorian Quinn is in Internal Affairs. Deaks says that Quinn is the worst tail in law enforcement. Quinn talks fast. There is a mole inside the LAPD, and it is Bates.

At the boat shed, Bates tries to get Kenzi's take on Deaks. He tries to get under her skin. He says that partners like Deaks come and go. Deaks swore he'd never work with a female partner again and he says to ask Deaks why. Bates says Tully is one of the good guys.

Bates has a personal laptop and Quinn wants Deaks to get the Fisk laptop. He says if he files for a warrant then Bates will know. Deaks and the valedictorian talk about the Bates case. He says not all good cops come from broken homes.

Deaks says that Quinn is paid to bust cops. Quinn says Fisk's mole inside LAPD is Bates. Deaks says he could never figure out why he had LAPD in his sights, he had Harvard and prep school. Quinn says Deaks is the one who can help now.

Kenzi finds Bates's girlfriend, Angela Tully, the investigator. She is staying in a Hollywood hotel. She places calls to her mother and Bates inside the same time window and Eric flagged her contacts.

Kenzi tracks her to the hotel room and she says she had to break off a relationship to be with Bates. Tully is married. She says she is there because of the breakup. Bates wants a family now and she wants to take a break from both of them.

Deaks gets to the office of Bates. He stops into the office and finds Bates' laptop. He gets the thumb drive transfer. He gets a call from Bates and jumps out on the ledge while Bates is jabbering at him. Deaks falls into another office as Bates barks at him.

Nell purposely walks up to Kenzi and asks a dumb question. Kenzi follows the smoke to where there is fire. The guy Deaks supposedly killed landed in Dulles.

Callen tells her without the ploy she would never have been believable and they would never have taken Deaks back. Kenzi knew something was off. The fake shooting was a ploy to force Bates to cut ties and take Deaks back. It was Hetty's call. Kenzi is angry her feelings were forced to the fore and Deaks' weren't.

Deaks meets with Hetty but she gets a phone call. He gets word of an off-the-book raid Bates set up and notifies Deaks. Bates says that Clarence Fisk is his. Callen and Hanna watch the meet shape up. They notice the Aryan brotherhood is continuing to make the deal.

Deaks and Kenzi are tasked with tailing Bates to the meet. Kenzi and Deaks talk and he says they were pretending their thing. Kenzi says oh so they do have a thing. He thought they could talk about it over drinks. She has plans every night for the rest of her life.

Kenzi tracks Bates waiting for Quinn but Deaks shows up. Quinn turns the gun on Callen and Hanna. Bates says Quinn will show him the leak. Callen and Hanna close in from busting Fisk. 3 bricks short of the full explosives load. Kenzi jumps out that the car is rigged to blow.

Mom and Dad set him up with a free ride. The free ride came from Fisk. If he didn't become a cop, his cop, or Fisk would wreck everything. Desk runs up and Quinn is upset because Deaks is the hero.

Deaks says 'this is over, man.'

Quinn says the only person he saw with love was Tully, and she fell for Bates.

After Deaks cuffs Quinn, Bates tells Deaks he obviously has a home at NCIS. Bates says not to trust the tea-sipping Svengali (Hetty) and make sure the ninja (Kenzi) doesn't come after him.

At the boathouse Kenzi calls Hetty on the betrayal of trust making her the scapegoat for the Lt. Bates ploy. Kenzi says after Deaks was taken from her she felt like she was fifteen again and the police had no answers about her father's killing. Kenzi is deeply hurt.

Hetty says that is why she was the one to back up Deak's cover story. Hetty couldn't take any more risks. Hetty says she is in Kenzi's debt. She says she'll be cashing it in one day.

As Callen and Hanna discuss the concept of 'swagger' in a villain, they note that it is more than a car or a way of dressing. Hanna pretends to be 'game' and recognises a badass in Fisk, like himself.

Hanna as Game, says Game recognizes nothing and Callen responds that 'Haters are always gonna hate'.

Time and again they repeat this exchange. When Deak flubs a chance to make up with Kenzi, Deaks asks for help. Hanna and Callen recognize nothing. Deaks is shot down.

Deaks begs Hetty for advice, and she says 'Haters gonna hate'.

Summary: The holidays lead to distractions for the team as Sam tries to get the perfect gift for his daughter and Eric is all set to meet Nell's parents. Only the team is assigned to find a stolen device that could cause destruction throughout the city.

A couple of snogging young adults hide in an office and almost get caught by a security guard. He turns and gets attacked from behind by a mugger in the dark office, and a college professor is attacked.

The Parker Pony is sold out and Hanna has to have it for Christmas for his daughter. He instructs Eric to buy it in an online auction for him and keep tabs. Hetty tells them Happy Holidays. She is hosting a drinks party later. Attendance is mandatory at one of Hetty's drinks party.

The CIT engineering department is where the guard was when attacked. This is the lab of Gareth Carlyle, an expert on EMP. This man knows an individual EMP blast can destroy electronic device in a forty mile radius. The flux compression generator is being invented. Copper coils generate a pulse that can cripple a chip in a control tower, bus, hospital, computer, or LAPD operations.

Carlyle is ex-Navy. They talk to Carlyle at the college and he did a stint overseas. He was too burnt out by Desert Storm. They ask about who would steal his device. He says disinterest is more what he is up against. The DoD cut way back on the EMP budget.

Kenzi and Deeks meet the guard. He is back on duty despite the ether. He blames the kissing couple were in on it, because they got him away from the desk. The guard says that Carlyle remembers his birthday and is a nice guy. They say he didn't make tenure. A shame.

Hanna and Callen spot Carlyle running away, not to a lecture. They trap him but he lies to them about running away from the elevator. He drops his keys trying to get into the car. Callen and Hanna get him and ask what he is doing.

The flux was in the trunk of his car. It was set to go off by someone in the Engineering department. It got stolen. At the boathouse he says he will help but in the wrong hands it could be disastrous.

Kenzi and Deaks investigate background on the professor. The Commission decided he was not worth investing in.

They talk to his daughter. The father's research is good but being ignored. Deaks says is he working on anything new. She says he lost faith. It was terrible. She last saw him a month ago.

Callen says Kenzi is going back to school. Her background and appearance will fool and attract the students. Kenzi walks into the college engineering department, saying she starts the next semester. They introduce her around.

One man does not seem friendly. He says he doesn't shake hands with women. He asks a lot of questions. Kenzi fences with him giving answers and Deaks pretends to be a janitor and spills something.

Deaks goes in the locker room while Kenzi distracts the men graduate students. Deaks find something in one of the lockers. Eric identifies an M-47 incendiary bomb. Filled with Napalm or phosphorus from Vietnam, it might leak. Chester's locker. Deaks has handled it and freaks out.

Hanna keeps Eric bidding on the auction for the pony toy. Nell apologizes to her mother for not making Christmas. The staff are working Christmas and must use their back stories to falsify what they really do. Nell says she is a TV news editor and Eric is a professional blackjack player until he got banned from Vegas. Deaks tries to get in on Kenzi's holiday plans. She is grim and does not buy into the kidding.

They watch the garage footage where the Professor's car was parked. Santa drives a Gremlin. He sprays the camera with fake snow. Santa has the flux. Callen says they have to find the Gremlin. Chester's place is filled with bombs bullets and ballistic missiles. They set off something that hums and then bursts with deadly sparks and they hunch in the corner.

Kenzi says it is a Tesla coil. They have to short it out with a wet shirt. She says for him to take off his shirt. He has to pee or Perish but Deaks spots a goldfish bowl. He wets the shirt and throws the bundled shirt at the Tesla coil. It shorts out and the shirt starts burning but the sparks stop.

They talk to Chester at the boathouse he says the Tesla coil was to scare intruders. He says if the flux is in danger to go after Carlyle's assistant she scares him.

Han says driving a Gremlin is a crime. The owner did a suicide. Donated his car to charity. El Aziz was his roommate. They track his credit card spending and wonder how he can roommate can afford $800 sushi. Kenzi turns down Deaks coming to Hawaii. (This is Hawaii 5-0 business).

Nell does the web-cam thing with the family. Eric jumps up and meets the family. They find the Gremlin and hope to get prints on the door. Hanna agrees for a $500 bid for the pony. Eric tells Hanna they got sniped with a $1,001 bid.

The car is hot and getting hotter. Callen notices. They see it explode from inside. Hanna says he only saw a car do that once in training. A chemist showed him how to do it.

Nell says on the Gremlin some Nitrocellulose plastic triggered the puff of smoke. Kenzi reports another break in at Carlyle's lab. An amplifying device was stolen that makes the flux explosion much much worse and could destroy Los Angeles.

The professor says a nine mile hit will hit a target zone. Anything with a circuit board or chip is immediately fired with enough nodes the whole system goes down. One or to months and then hospitals loss of water purification no food refrigeration. Rioting trauma and disease

Aziz has has uncle's plane and Bevan has cash for weapons. Kenzi and Deaks approach Bevan. He has a truck. The Professor says those idiots think the can control the cone of EMP surge but they can't. Hospitals and every structure will absorb the signal. Pacemakers will also be threatened.

Bevan is taken to the boathouse and Kenzi and Deaks discuss the penalty for accessory to weapons theft. Bevan breaks and says the whole scheme is it is part of robbery. That night at midnight some bank downtown will be hit. They collect nonmagnetic tools. .

Hanna and Callen pose as airport inspectors. Asiz says the are being singled out. Hanna says in Farsi to shut up or he'll throw his a in jail. They find only toys and clothes in the donation boxes.

Hetty says Callen and Hanna better be working on Plan A and Pan B or she will be identifying them from dental records.

In the car Hanna implies he will tell his daughter Callen let her down when she does not get the pony toy. Deaks and Kenzi are aghast. They find the building with the bank in it. They shadow the man working with a blowtorch on the wall. Deaks says Not a lot of veggie tacos in the Penn.

Kenzi pursues and tells Nell to close the parking garage. Hanna and Callen find the assembled flux capacitor on the roof. Eric says he has to do it on his own.

Liquid nitrogen is what Callen uses to isolate the power supply from the bomb timer housing. Plan B is pouring the liquid nitrogen into the power housing and throwing the ropes over the side of the building. Callen and Hanna jump just as the top of the building blows up.

The ropes are not very long and as they dangle Hetty calls and says next time think of packing parachutes.

The professor says he is not a bad man. He says he can't get a message to his daughter but he says no. The daughter is escorted him.

Hetty throws her drinks party with a cask. Flown all the way from Yorkshire England. Nell makes Sig Sauer and Glock sugar cookies from the reconfigured burn room incinerator.

Callen has a gift for Hanna. They give him the Parker Pony. Hetty says she knows Mr. Beal has quite the action figure collection Deaks gives Kenzi a weird botanical Hawaiian lotion.

Summary: When a researcher with the Department of Defense is found dead, Nell must put her high IQ to the test when she goes undercover as his replacement. Meanwhile, Hetty's ability to lead the team is questioned by the new NCIS Assistant Director, Owen Granger.

Hanna and Callen stake out an operation, listening to jazz. They get an emergency message on their phones, 'Agent needs assistance.' Kenzi gets dressed and runs out on a man. (this is the sting) She says 'I will call you.' Her cover is as a dental hygienist. She leaves and gets in the car driven by Deaks.

Kenzi asks if this is a legit alert? She said she had him just where she wanted him. Deaks says 'Hows that?' Kenzi says 'Just drive.' Deaks drives.

Hetty is not answering her number. Nell says the eyes inside the dock house are disabled. The teleconference is on fug.

Nell tries a thermal imaging layer on screen. Callen walks the perimeter. They scan the screen. Hetty sits in a chair there is a man in suit in the corner.

Callen sneaks in calling Hetty's name. She does not move. He asks if she is OK. 'Care to tell me what this is all about?' Callen is curious. 'Ask him' she says. The rest of the team comes in slowly.

'Special Agent Callen. The direct approach, you walk directly into a trap.' The suit man says. 'Is that what this is?' Callen asks. 'Could be', he says. Callen says 'I know you?' He says 'No, not nearly as well as I know you.' 'It's too bad you brought the entire team.' he says. Hanna says 'You twitch, I'll kill you' Hetty says 'His name is Wallan Granger, your new assistant director.

The crew reacts in disbelief. Hetty says 'I told him this was bad idea. But he is the boss'.

The new assistant director has a mission for them. A man named Brad Bolton is dead. He was an agent. Brad and his wife are employed by a research company that works with the DoD. What makes this more than a domestic dispute, Callen says it might be just to establish an alibi.

The new assistant director wants to know 'Who killed Brad Bolton and what got compromised?' Brindall Security is the company. The group assumes they can infiltrate it. The new assistant director says 'It's a think tank, not a company'.

Nell was actively recruited and will go in. Eric questions her aptness and that she never mentioned she was recruited by a think tank. He asks her IQ but she does not tell him.

The new assistant director has some chilling words for Kenzi. 'Agent Bligh, I'd like to speak to you about your recent trips to Hawaii when you get a chance.' Kenzi later discusses with Deaks that she went asking questions about her father's wartime death but the people told her the same things she already knew.

'Double double toil and trouble.' Callen approaches Hetty in her dark office. Callen asks Hetty if she is just going to let this guy take over. She is silent and he walks away and stirs her tea. Bligh says maybe we should talk to Director Vance. Callen says maybe this is the tight leash they heard would be put over Vance.

They ask how Hetty is. Callen says she seems caged. Hanna says Hetty doesn't do well in captivity. Hetty has managed to avoid a lot of the backstabbing in D. C.

Nell hears a knock at the door. A man is here and he says he is JT and that he saw her he was a fighter pilot who punched out over Fallujah. She is replacing Brent. Nell asks is it true that he died. The guy gossips and gives her a computer. She says thanks. His fly is open, Eric points out. He sees her look down. He backs out of the room. Nell says to Eric 'What are you twelve?'

Callen and Hanna stake out Brindall research's premises. They look at the coffee stand and see messages written in people's names on coffee cups which are then discarded and check out low tech human intelligence. Brindall research needs a laser mike or an EMR detector.

Callen and Hanna saw her with an actuarial agent they saw her with at the house. They bring in the wife for questioning to the boat house. The actuarial agent is writing a novel with her creative partner. Roger McAdams really is an actuarial agent.

They look at surveillance pictures. Who is this guy, Callen asks?

She is writing a novel. It's about a noblewoman and staving artist. But the actual insurance man is a black man, the handsome man in the picture he is using the false identity.

They review the people from the park scene. The coffee vendor is a former Israeli national. The soccer mom is just a woman with a baby.

They bring the man posing as McAdams to the boathouse. They find out he is following them for a fee. They start to find out who he is working for and why but then the new assistant director walks into the interview room and says they are done.

Then the new assistant director swoops in and hands them over to the authorities, making Callen and Kenzi and the others angry. The new assistant director mocks their expectations of participating in the development of the case. He sneers at the 'new broom' sweeping the NCIS LA clean.

The group wonder how to handle this. Hetty questions what they thought would happen. They decide to go along for now. Hetty tells Callen not to mistake inaction for not doing anything.

Summary: NCIS needs to find who's responsible for ambushing the vehicle transporting Jada Khaled so their case can be salvaged. This means Sam will have to face up to Jada for the first time since bringing her back from Sudan.

In a parking garage, two men try to get Jada into a car safely. But another car tries to push them over the ledge. Khaled reaches out and forces an attempt on Jada the sister they got out of the Sudan. Sam is emotionally stung by the guilty jolt. Hetty says possibly that Sam could sit this one out. Sam says no. Callen tells Sam they have to put Khaled in the ground with all the mass graves. Callen postulates another person might be responsible to escape the taint of association with Khaled.

Nell says Elmsley has not been heard from. his hotel name is the one Sam stayed in when he knew Khaled in the Sudan. Deeks and Kenzi investigate whether or not the freedom fighter is also missing who Sam worked with in Khartoum. First they catch credit card scammers using Sudanese IP addresses.

But Sam pretends to try to water-board the credit cards' scammer. Callen and Sam sweat the man in the boathouse. The last time he talked to Khaled was three weeks ago. He says he did not order a hit on his sister. They trace the car in the Jada hit to a camera where Alex Elmsley points to them. Callen and his team get to the address where he pointed.

Elmsley says they took his family. He had to make it look like a real assassination attempt. He says they have his family. It's payback for him and Sam and they knew he'd have access to them. He says he has twelve hours to find his family. He escapes them through a construction chute and drives away. He does not know who "they" are, he assumes they are with Khaled.

They identify former DSSG French spooks meeting with Adrian Montalban of Montalban international. They have ranches including Los Angeles. The data servers are in a private cloud.

Callen wonders if the Khaled is the source. They want to intercept Montalban communicating with Khaled who has been in hiding.

Hetty is packing a piece when Callen asks for a expedited covert entry search warrant for the server bug. Hetty says that while they are all concerned Sam carries the burden of emotional blame. He would do anything to save Jada and Elmsley's family.

Deaks and Kenzi pulls the Swedish hand-off and play a CEO Mr. Stone and secretary Darcy. She plays crumbling secretary and sneaks into the server room and plants snooping phone. Nell coaches Kenzi where to put the phone connect.

Erik organizes an online intercept which starts a video conference with Khaled. But Sam is called a liar by Khaled. Sam calls him a killer. He even tried to kill his own sister.

"When Jada dies it will be at my hand. As will you". Khaled says all the countries now does not want to be a friend.

Khaled taunts Sam that with all their technology he is still free. He says to Sam he will strike and he will bring shame to all of their families as well.

Montalban has tossed Khalid to the wolves. Khalid says they kidnapped her. Sam says that they rescued her. Khalid says that he is sure she feels differently.

Nell says the Montalan files are encrypted and Callen as for her to look through the ones concerning the Sudan and during the time Khaled was in office.

Callen thinks that Montalban is a middleman for the French government. But the foothold in the Sudan turned molten. Callen theorizes that Jada wants to give her deposition and the minders will move her again. The French government will have serious explaining to do if Jada testifies.

They plan a trap. The French brokering weapons to Khaled means Montalban was the one that wanted Jada killed to silence her testimony. Sam goes into the boathouse room where Jada is, breaking off the coms.

She says he does not get to talk to her. Sam says she was lonely, and after everything they have been through, he had no choice. Deaks says that the 800 lb elephant in the room is if anything happened between Sam and Jada. Then Jada says she is trying to understand. "I wish I could."

They get the IP addresses for Khaled from the credit card scammers computer man and plan a trap for Khaled. Then Callen shows Jada the pictures of the Montalban personnel and she identifies two of them. They are French operatives. They tell Elmsley to use the information.

He calls them from a burn phone. Callen says to suggest he has Jada and wants his family in exchange. Callen thinks that Adrian Montalban was filtering weapons to Khalid through a source. This will prove embarrassing now that Khaled has war crimes reputation now hanging over his head.

Montalban escapes the ambush but is later trying to board private plane for Morocco. Jada and Sam are OK. Hetty tells Callen that "Sooner or later our sins catch up with us".

Khaled now wants Jada, and he is coming from Spain.

Summary: With national security threatened, the team must determine what went missing when a diplomatic service van was hijacked. After five years as partners, Callen and Sam are about to confront their biggest challenge.

Callen and Hannah are in the middle of heist. One of the robbers is compelling Hannah to kill Callen. He smacks in a few punches, after which he is told to finish Callen off. He takes a mighty swing at him. That is when the story moves six hours into the past. The two partners are split over liking beer or champagne, and it doesn't take long for Callen to show he is impressed at the crate of Belgian beer. However, Hannah has found himself a bottle of champagne, which is not 2002, but 2007 sounds like a good year. Before long, they are arguing about who made the first strike at the warehouse raid. Hannah insists he did, but Callen remembers the opposite. Hannah always takes first strike. Yes, he does, but in all the encounters after that incident. Hannah is still not conceding. That is when Callen gives up, but sarcastically. Kensi and Marty arrive and enjoy the fun. Kensi suggests may be they both went in together!

Hetty arrives with news that they have a new case in hand. A diplomatic security service van was attacked outside LAX about 20 minutes back. It obviously looks like a hijack, and they have reports the hijackers headed to a warehouse in the city. They have information on the carriers — two DSS (Diplomatic Security Service) agents — Diane Dunross and Roger Clark. They have worked at the organization for 10 years, which is information enough for Hannah to suspect something. Hetty warns them and asks for ultimate caution. They are dealing with the State Department in this case. Callen wants to know if the Assistant Director is involved in the case, and Hetty replies he has taken special interest.

When the agents arrive at the crime scene, they canvas the car. However, the carriers are not there. Eric reports from the computer lab that GPS tracker shows the agents have headed towards the federal building in Westwood. And about the car, the agents figure out that it was sprayed with bullets from the front. Although the DSS agents are required to stick to protocol — keeping to inside the bullet proof car during an attack, it appears as though one of them jumped out. That is because a passenger door seems to be hit with bullets as well. The hijackers attacked from the front. When Callen and Hannah arrive at the federal building, they start interrogating the agents, but it appears as though they are more interested in showing good hospitality by serving martini. Why don't they just answer their questions. What was inside the crate?

They are diplomatic carriers, and therefore do not ask questions. They are in the dark about what they are carrying. They were just following orders. Who gave them orders? In comes Regional Supervising Agent Ed Gornte of DSS. He understands NCIS is investigating the matter, but he would like to debrief his agents first — he has a flight to catch for DC in an hour. Diane lets on she was the one to break protocol by stepping out of the car. She got carried away. Other details — hijackers were four men in ski masks, took the crate into a blue Ford F150, and they were boxed by a black jeep as well. Hannah puts Eric on the job to look out for the cars. When brought to NCIS premises, they are unable to tell what was in the crate. It is impossible because they are not supposed to know. As Callen and Hannah interrogate them, it is being recorded and the DSS agents are unaware of the sharp surveillance cameras. They are not letting on any facts, but Eric has discovered that the crate was reported stolen earlier. It flew out of India. That is when Callen and Hannah leave them alone. They pretend to have no conspiring plans, but soon start communicating in secrecy by writing on a sheet of paper.

In minutes, NCIS agents discover that the hijackers were caught on surveillance cameras as they unloaded the crate. From picture matchers, it turns out that that the hijackers are linked to cartel crimes in Mexico. And from the surveillance tape it turns out they have to get to a winery, because the van the hijackers are using, belong to one. When Kensi and Marty get there, they know the crate they are looking for, and soon identify it with the number. It contains an immense load of the basic chemical that is used to make meth. Before long, gunshots ring the warehouse, and Kensi and Marty take the two attackers down. However, when questioned, the winery seems to have been unaware. Marty explains that is quite possible.

By now, DSS agent Roger Clark has gotten hostile when Callen brought up his love in Malta, suggesting that he would trade his reputation and honor of serving the country, because he wants to start a family with the girl he is seeing in Malta. Now the DSS agents are in separate rooms. Callen interrogates Diane, and Hannah Roger. It turns out that they have always watched each others backs. Besides, for Diane, he is the partner — even outside DSS. However for Roger, he is seeking to start a family with the girl in Malta, but he is glad that he plays an anchoring role in Diane's life. Listening to the interrogation are Nell and Eric, who realize that they need to get Gornte's statements. It is three hours before his flight touches down at DC. And Callen and Hannah find out that this wasn't the first time the DSS agents got hit. It turns out that a professor may be linked to hijacking case, although he has a clean record — the hunch comes from his connection with Gornte.

When they reach the professor's place, he is dead. Before long, Gornte fires a shot, but Marty takes him out. They have killed Gornte, and the only solution to the case appears to be a confession from either DSS agent. Turns out that they are not revealing anything as yet, and when Hetty sees that Gornte role is dubious, she orders a swap. Hannah will interrogate Diane, and Callen will do the same on Roger. This time it turns out that Diane was ready to trade her entire career for watching Roger's back. He had a drinking problem, which she kept from DSS, knowing that it could end his career. And with Roger's appreciation for Diane's focus and grit, he cannot do anything but hear her testimonial in disbelief. Then comes out the story about cartels, as Eric announces the way to carry this out.

They will use a substance that looks and tastes like the meth base, and send it to the cartel like the crate was supposed to move. Callen and Hannah will pose as the drivers serving through DSS, while Kensi and Marty will be watching their backs from a distance. When they get to the airlift zone, it turns out that Hannah will have to kill Callen as per the terms. After a few punches, when Hannah is about to make his final blow, he strikes one of the cartel goons. At that instance, Kensi and Marty have arrived and start firing. Callen frees himself, and picks up a gun. Hannah and he start shooting the ones left to be taken out.

When they arrive at NCIS HQ, they announce to the DSS agents that they have discovered emails sent from Clark's account on the days he was in Malta. The village does not have internet, and so someone hacked his account. It turns out the person was none other than Diane, who had already established links with the cartel herself. She explains she did it as a way to get back at him for visiting that woman. He was all she really had, but he was always talking about retiring — which would leave her behind. Roger cannot believe it — she would have always been his best friend.

Summary: An international killer who can take on the façade of any personality he needs has been able to evade law enforcement across the world, even Callen. With Assistant Director Granger breathing down their necks, the NCIS team must track this killer down.

The scene opens with two men getting into their car. Just then a man, whose face is not seen comes to the car and shoots both of them, but taking care that they are not killed. Just then the phone rings and the man asks one of them to talk. His name is Paul. Paul knows the caller. His name is David. He tells him that they have been shot. The man asks Paul to tell David that the deal has to go through or his wife and children. Just then the man pours gasoline on the men in the car. They are terrified. David tells Paul to tell the man that they will go through with the deal. The man leaves and Paul calls 911. But just then the man comes back and sets the car on fire and leaves. At the NCIS office, Kensi gives Marty one of her organic blends, which tastes like wood!!

Just then Granger calls for Callen and Hana. In granger's office the duo meet Interpol agent Kallstorm. Kallstorm educates them about the killing that took place last week and that this case could have ties with one of their cases. Granger tells the detectives that the two pharmaceutical executives who were killed were selling expired medication; but at the last moment they got cold feet and decided to back out. The buyer killed the two men and the boss left with the shipment four hours later. The detective wants to know about their connection with the case. Kallstorm tells them that the MO used is the same as a French-Moroccan arms dealing gang. Callen tells Kallstorm that they took down the gang six months ago. It was led by DeGramont and Callen tells him that he is dead. But Kallstorm has taken this MO to three continents and is positive that this is the same guy.

They show him the surveillance video where the team shot the entire gang. The only guy who survived was the driver named Kareem. Callen tells him that they would talk to Kareem and check if they could get any leads. The duo goes and meets Kareem in the prison. But to their surprise he is not the same guy they shot. The guy who was shot is French, taller and skinnier. Eric calls Callen and updates him with the fact that the guy in the prison is Hector Ramirez and that Hector's family was paid $100,000 and a jail administrator was paid $150,000 to switch the records of Kareem and Hector, who quit two days later. Callen tries to remember something about Kareem and tells Hana that he missed something. Eric tells Hana that the administrator erased all photos of Kareem. They run a facial recognition for DeGramont.

Just then they see an id with DeGramont's photo but with the name Kareem Ghilas. So now, they realize that the driver who Callen interrogated was DeGramont. So Kareem, who they thought was DeGramont was actually the driver. Granger is in a foul mood and tells Callen that it was his fault that DeGramont escaped and from now on he will be responsible for all of his actions. Next Callen and Hana go to meet Kallstorm to have a look at the burnt car. They find nothing. But then Hana looks at one of the shoes of the executive and tells Eric to run a match. Just then they get the 911 call made by the executive. Callen tells the team that the voice of the perpetrator had a Russian accent, mostly eastern; Moscow, but the guy who he spoke to at the hospital had a low class French accent.

Just then Nell traces the name on the shoe. It was Edison, which is a club. Marty goes to check the club. They check the voice records for Kallstorm's Russian and Brazilian case. Callen infers that DeGramont's actual MO is switching identities and the best he is ever seen. They call him the chameleon. Next, Marty is at the Edison club. There he meets one of his exes and she is not very welcoming. The club's manager tells Marty that he does not recognize DeGramont. Even the other workers deny any recognition. He tries asking his ex, Erin. She tells him that it could be that he was in the club, as she does remember a guy with different accents. Next, at the office Kallstorm tells Granger that the Brazilian police did mention that DeGramont had an affinity for tattoos.

Callen tells the team that he only acts as a foreigner but doesn't know those languages. He only uses the accent. The team infers that he is staying in L.A. to get the meds which can fetch him 6 million dollars. Kensie tells Callen that she is going undercover at the Edison. Kallstorm thinks of it as a bad idea. But Callen tells him that they know what they are doing. Kenzie, all dressed up, reaches the Edison. The other three are also at the club. The bartender cannot keep his eyes off Kenzie. Marty clicks a photo for a facial identification. Callen asks Kenzie to take a walk and sees a guy with long hair following her. But when she turns around; he's gone. Callen follows him. But just then a man walks up to Kenzie and tells him that he likes her tattoo. He has an accent. Callen signals Hana that they are going into the back alley. When the man makes his advances towards her and pulls out a knife, Hana cuffs him.

The man tells the team that her husband wanted him to do this. Callen realizes that they have been set up, and that he wanted them to be here. Callen wonders as to how he knew that the team was going to be at the club. They check the man's cell phone. Just then there is a video text on his phone wherein someone is setting fire to Kallstorm's car, with him inside. Granger is infuriated at Callen as he thinks he got an Interpol Agent killed. But Hetty defends Callen and tells Granger that Callen is not the one who is responsible for the killing. Granger tells the team that he is taking over. Just then Eric informs everyone that there has been a five million dollar cash withdrawal from the Nigerian Consulate's bank account. Nell updates them with the email trace.

Granger takes Kenzie and Marty to the consulate and asks Callen and Hana to go to the café. At the consulate, the people refuse to co-operate with them just then they see a van drive by and they follow it, but they find nothing. Granger tells the man from the consulate that he is not concerned with the meds but he wants to know who they bought it from. At the office, Eric talks to Interpol agent, Linderoth. But the agent has a surprise for him. He tells him that the man in the video is not agent Kallstorm! He sends them a photo of the real agent Kallstorm. Linderoth tells Eric that they are not able to make any contact with the real agent Kallstorm. Eric updates Hana and Callen about the same.

At the café, the owner recognizes the photo of the 'fake' Kallstorm and tells them that he has been there a couple of times. He takes a shot and calls DeGramont. Eric traces that call and gets a location. But the chameleon reads through it and tells Callen that this call cannot be traced and hangs up. But the duo doesn't fall for that and go to the hotel the call was traced to. There is a Kallstorm staying there. They ask the receptionist for the key to the room and enter it. But shock rams into them, when they see a dead man sitting on the chair, the real Agent Kallstorm. At the lab, the team is checking on the video tape of the med deal with the Nigerians. They figure out that the chameleon is playing the driver again.

Hetty tells Granger that it was he who blew the entire thing because now the chameleon knows everything they know about him and that is not good. She tells him that he had the guy all along and he let him go. At the hotel, Callen and Hana are checking the surveillance video. They figure out that the man had two rooms in that hotel and that he is still there. They go into that room and find a man sitting on a chair, but it is not him. This man tells him that he was hired and assured that he could not be found. After saying this, he falls to the floor, dead. Just then Callen gets a call from a 'blocked' number. It's the chameleon. He tells Callen that the fish at the hotel did not go very well with the guy who was impersonating him, so now he is dead.

He also tells Callen that his mouth hurts and brain throbs because of the bullet he put in his head. He continues to tell him that one day he is going to kill him, soon. That's all he lives for! He is sitting at the poolside and Callen hears the splashing of the water. The chameleon drops his phone in his drink and leaves. At the office, Callen and Hetty question Granger as to why did he come here because he brought Kallstorm with him. he simply says, 'I am here to catch a killer'.

Summary: The arrest of Kensi for the murder of her father's former associate leaves the NCIS team astounded and scrambling to prove her innocence.

The scene opens with Agent Deeks asking Agent Blye why she broke up with him. She tells him that he is just broken. They are in a boat shed and Deeks thinks that it is a surprise party for him. Granger tells them to come in another room. He tells Deeks that Blye can sit down and that he has to go. Deeks watches as Granger sits down with Blye. Meanwhile, Agent Callen and Hanna go up to Eric and ask where Hetty is. Deeks comes up and tells that Granger is about to go crazy on Blye. Hetty calls the agents in her office and Nell fills them in to what is going on. David Blake, a retired serviceman, was killed in a car crash. She says that Blake was a sniper for Blye's father. Eric finds out that Blye comes from a line of snipers. Hetty says that Blye has everything to do with this because she was the last person to be in contact with David Blake. That is why Granger is with Blye now.

Meanwhile, Blye talks to Granger about the fact that her father was a hero and says that she was in Hawaii to track Blake down. However, he didn't want anything to do with her. Granger says that Blake died in a car accident and if she had anything to do with it, she is going to be in trouble. The agents look up information on the team that was with Blye's father. Jay Fisher is the only one alive. It appears that Blye only joined NCIS to get information to track down her father's killer. The agents accuse Granger of running a secret investigation behind them. Hetty talks to Granger and tells him that he should of came to her first before interrogating Blye. She says that she won't forget it. Hanna and Callen get to the car that was involved in the car accident. Callen says that it is possible that Blake came to take Blye out, but it looks like someone took him out first. They find that this was murder and Blye is officially a murder suspect. Hanna says that is only if they tell Granger.

Later, Granger talks to Blye and she says that her father was a hero and that she would do anything besides murder. Granger says that Blye's father wasn't the real American hero as she thinks. Hetty tells Deeks to hit the streets and she will take care of Blye. Hanna and Callen go to Eric and he is finding to get the phone list. Nell tells him to relax. Nell finds that Blake called Fisher and says that they have an address. The team gets there and Deeks tells Hanna and Callen to get a better car. Callen asks how the CIA is involved in this. They go up to Fisher's trailer and go inside and find it empty. Deeks says that they have a locker number. Eric tells the agents that they have footage of the trailer park and one of the people that stand out is Blye. She visited Fisher. Granger tells Blye the truth of the Sniper Group that the CIA organized. He says that she can come and go as she pleases. Blye goes up to Hetty and asks if she knew and she says that she didn't. Granger says that if Blye is responsible for this, then the NCIS team will be disbanded.

Deeks goes up to Blye's home and has coffee for her. He invites himself in and says that there are Federal Agents watching her house. He uncovers a sniper rifle and Blye says that it is her father's. She changes the subject and he plays along. He tells Blye that they are hiding the facts from Granger. She tells him that there are things that she hasn't told him when Deeks' phone rings. He tells Blye that LAPD found out that Blake's car was rigged and says that he has to bring her in. Eric and Nell tell Callen and Hanna say that Alex Harris is the handler of the team. They speculate that Harris could be taking out his old team. Blye is taken into custody to a secured location and Eric tells the team that he tracked the burner phone that Fisher has been using to a theater district. The team goes to the location and Eric and Nell find out that Blye has been requesting forms regarding her father's death. They wonder why Granger, if he had known for years that Blye has been looking into the death of her father, why hasn't he told them.

The NCIS team arrives at the theater and walk around. They run into Fisher, but he fights back. Fisher runs off and rides off. Suddenly, the motorcycle that Fisher is on explodes. They realize that this had nothing to do with Blye, but then say that it could still be Blye though. Deeks gives up the phone that Fisher had on him and asks Eric to call the number that was called on the phone. If it was Harris, then they could psych him out and get him to answer. However, when they try, it is no use. At the hotel, Blye asks the agents to get a message to her team, but they tell that it is against protocol. The NCIS team goes to Blye's computer and finds the files that she had on her system. They find that there are pictures of the Civil Defense Shelter and the note that they have is matching to that of the Shelter. They get to the location and find that it is a bomb shelter. They see that there is a bullet hole in the lock. Harris could be inside. Deeks says that bomb shelters are dumb and Hanna says that he has a bomb shelter for him and his family. Deeks tries to back peddle, but the comment was made.

They go into the Shelter and realize that there is a lot of supplies. They toss something to trick the person inside. They tell him that they are Federal Agents. It is Harris on the other end and he surrenders his gun and they take him into custody. Back at the hotel, Blye asks them again and then hits the agents and knocks them unconscious. She leaves. Back at NCIS headquarters, they interrogate Harris and he says that he will talk, but only to Blye. He says that it will be at a place and time of his choosing. Granger says that he won't allow Harris make the rules. The agents tell Granger about the information that they know and how he allowed access to Blye's father's records. Granger gets the information that Blye has escaped. Blye walks up to Hetty and she says that there is a lot of damning evidence. She tells her that her past doesn't matter and that she has to make sure that she is protected. Meanwhile, Eric tells Callen and Hanna that Granger and Harris were in the same division.

Deeks escorts Harris to the location and tells him that if he harms Blye, he will make sure that he won't survive. Harris laughs. Callen and Hanna drive and Hanna asks what the answers are not what he wants. Callen says that the truth will set him free. Harris meets with Blye and Deeks walks off. Harris makes sure that they are not being watched or followed. Eric is trying to get eyes on them, but they have to wait. Blye talks to Harris and asks why he killed the men. He says that he didn't. He says that her father was murdered and that the man killing off the team is the same man who killed her father. She asks what the man's name is and he tells her that after the man takes him out, he is coming after her. Harris is shot and Blye runs. The episode ends with a to be continued as Blye is shot.

Summary: The team runs into problems while attempting to clear Kensi Blye from charges of murder after she has a deadly confrontation with CIA agents.

The scene opens in the park where Kensi is shot. But thanks to the bullet proof she is unharmed. Callen, Hanna, Marty and Nell are in the park. They are trying to find Kensi. Kensi is hiding from them, when she spots someone and follows him. Back at the office, Hetty and Eric are tracking Kensi's movements. Eric tells Callen that Kensi was at the park and she is following someone. The guy is a pro and Kensi is hunting down this man who knows about her father; not happening!! Hetty calls Kensi and tells her that she doesn't have to do it alone. Kensi reminds her of a favor Hetty owes her and tells her to consider it even. She throws away her cell phone. The four reach the office and Eric tells them that Kensi has gone dark and there is no way they could trace her. Callen asks for Granger and surprisingly he seems to have gone dark too. Marty has some suspicions about Granger but Hanna tells him to look at it from every angle before jumping to conclusions.

Callen tells them that Granger, Harris and Kensi's dad were a part of the same operation in the 90's and he is sure that he is the only one who can put the pieces together. Hetty needs Granger to be tracked down and brought to her. She tells Marty to look out for Kensi when she turns up; as she will need a friend. Kensi is walking down the street. Suddenly she notices a man in a car and starts running. The guy follows her. But Kensi tricks him, beats him unconscious and gets away with his car. Eric tells Nells and Marty that LAPD is reporting an incident, where a girl beat up a man twice her size and escapes with his car. Marty knows this is definitely his girl. While they are checking the footage, they spot Granger. Kenzi follows the address fed in the GPS in the car and reaches a house. She tiptoes to the back window of the house and sees a woman talking to a guy. Eric informs Callen that he has spotted Granger at the spot where Harris was killed.

He also traces the car Kensi is driving and gives Callen the address fed in the GPS. The property Kensi walks into is registered in the name of Julia Feldman. Marty finds Kensi. Kensi is in pain because of the hit in the park. Marty checks the damage. Next we see, Callen and Hanna break into an apartment and find Granger. He is carrying a rifle. They ask him to put down his weapon. Callen asks him about the incident at the park. Hanna checks Granger's gun and finds out that it has been used recently and has been cleaned. They bring him to Hetty and she asks the two to leave. Meanwhile Marty tells Kensi that she has a cracked rib. Granger tells Hetty that he did not kill Harris. He tells her that he has two suspects in this case: Kensi Blye and Peter Claremont; the same guy who Kensi sees talking to Julia. Granger now knows that Kensi is innocent. So that leaves him with Peter. Peter is supposed to be dead six years ago; but now Granger feels that he is alive.

Granger tells her that the whole team believed in Peter's death; but when Granger started to think about the accident which supposedly killed him, it did not track right. He had his doubts and began to reconsider the reasons why Peter had vanished. Callen wants to know why Peter faked his death in 2006; why not before and why not after. 2006 seems to be a special year; Kensi joined NCIS. Granger said that the first thing Kensi did was to pull out all the files related to her father's death. She starts digging into the past. They assume that Peter killed Donald Blye; but the question is why. Just then Nell calls Callen and tells him that the last call Peter made was to a man named Peter Nelson; whose facial recognition matched with Peter Claremont's. Granger is right. Meanwhile Kensi wants Marty to do her a favor.

She wants the woman of the house; Julia, to be kept in protective custody. Marty is curious to know why she is so important to Kensi. She tells him that she is her mother. She tells him that she has not spoken to her mother for fifteen years. She also tells him that since somebody tried to kill her today, she is the target and the man could also use her mother as leverage to get to her. Just then Granger calls Marty and tells him to put Kensi on the phone. He knows that they are together. Hetty assures her that Granger is on their side. Kensi tells them that she already knows about Peter Claremont and tells them that she saw him at her mother's house a few minutes ago. But she wasn't sure; so she let him live. Granger tells her that there is a truth that she doesn't know. Officially her father's unit had 18 kills but actually it was 19. The last one was in America; a guy named Stevens and his death was made to look like a heart attack.

He was a journalist. Weeks after Stevens died, her father allegedly died in a car accident. So now Steven's daughter Megan, who also is a journalist, will try to get in touch with Kensi. Granger tells her to figure out a way where she could talk to her. Kensi promises Marty that she will be back as soon as she gets a chance to talk to Megan and sort things out. Marty really loves his partner; agrees to keep her mother safe. Marty meets Julia; and it is awkward. He tells her that Peter is a threat and her daughter who now is a cop, has sent him to her. He wants her to go with him. She agrees. Next we see that Kensi meets Megan. Initially Megan did not entertain; but when Kensi tells her that there could be a connection between both the deaths, she lets her in. Meanwhile, Julia meets Callen and Hanna. They are surprised to know that Kensi has a mother. She wants to meet her. She tells them that Kensi feels that she left her father for another man. But actually when her husband told her about the things the unit did; she took Kensi along with her; and told her that she is moving because she fell in love with another man.

She ran away and went to her father's place and tells her mom that she never wanted to see her, ever. Meanwhile, Kensi tells Megan that she is sure that Stevens did not die of natural causes and she has no clue who killed her father. Just then Megan gets a call and tells the caller that a family friend stopped by. Kensi looks around a little and realizes that Megan knows more than what she is telling her. The two pull their guns out at each other. But Kensi gets a clear shot; and Megan is dead. She checks Megan's phone to see who the last caller was. Marty tells Callen and Hanna that Kensi was supposed to come back after she spoke with Megan; instead they traded shots and killed her in self defense. The three reach Megan's place. They find out that the girl Kensi shot was not the actual Megan, but some imposter. They find the real Megan's dead body in a trunk. She was shot in the head. Nell finds out that the girl who is posing as Megan worked for the same unit run by Peter.

Nell and Eric are trying to identify Peter's team; all ex-military; all shooters. Kensi calls Peter. He tells her that he was the one who killed her father. She tells him that this would end today. Nell finds out that the article Stevens was working on was actually about Peter and that is why he was killed. Kensi goes to her mother's house. She calls the team on a secured line. Callen realizes that Kensi knew that Peter would have Julia's house on surveillance and the moment Kensi would walk in, he would kill her. Kensi too knew about Peter's plans; and that is exactly why she called them. Kensi hears Peter's voice talking to her. Meanwhile the team arrives at Julia's house. On one hand, we see the team take down Peter's men; and on the other we see Kensi take down Peter.

The team sees a wounded Peter lying on the floor. When Peter tries to shoot Kensi; Granger pulls the trigger at him. Hetty finds the evidence Peter was looking for from Megan's bank vault. It was the phone conversation; where Kensi's father calls Stevens and tells him that he needs to disappear as his life is in danger. He also tells him to meet Granger; the only person he trusts and tells him about this conversation. Granger would help him. Kensi hears thi and is relieved. Granger also hands over her Father's diary to her. He knows Donald would want her to have it. She wants to meet her mother and apologize to her. She meets Julia, her mom; and now she is home.

Summary: An international conference at the Vietnamese Consulate could be threatened when a shooting takes place nearby. The team is assigned to assess whether or not the shooting is a terrorist attack before the Secretary of Navy arrives.

When a young Vietnamese man is shot approaching the Vietnamese embassy, Callen and the team are charged with protecting the embassy. There's an upcoming Pan-Asian conference being held there and they've received several terrorist threats. While investigating the shooting, Kensi and Deeks uncover a human trafficking ring being run by Yen Tan, a woman who owns a shirt manufacturing company. Initially believing she was behind the threats, our team discovers her husband, Binh, reviled her ruthless ways and saw all capitalists as evil. Binh is the militant behind the threats and they're able to stop him before he bombs the embassy. During the course of the investigation, NCIS:LA uses a Vietnam Vet as an interpreter who discovers his daughter and grandson were some of the couples victims and they manage to reunite the family.

Summary: When the body of a Navy Intel Officer is found, evidence points to a team of Navy SEALs who are about to depart on a hostage rescue mission, leaving former Navy SEAL Sam Hanna to interrogate the group and possibly compromise the mission.

Chief Hanna is met with suspicions and hostility when the death of a Navy SEAL on leave comes to his attention. But the missing man is part of a team ready to go and rescue civilians in a cave in Iraq.

Eric plays computer games in OPS and complains that another player, Hotshot 7, follows him into every theater. It is Hetty, who has warned him about playing games again and again. Eric whines as Callen and Hanna take away his X-Box. Eric jokes that war is hell.

The dead man is a mystery. The men on the squad all claim to have gone to a movie together. But they all say the same thing about how the movie ended, leading Callen to believe they did not stay and exchanged notes about what to say. Task force Delta won't break.

Ensign Aaron Powell's body was found wounded and killed. He was a communication specialist working in Afghanistan. A lot of classified information passed through his hands. Hanna is confounded to discover he was a Navy seal. He had a wound which was cared for and then died.

Kenzi and Deaks find that Powell had a mailbox and did a dead drop. There is an account in a bank with $300 and a safety deposit box for one of the men. In it there are envelopes with cash inside. This is now deemed a terrorist operation. But the leader of the unit puts pressure on Hanna to let the men go to save the two civilians.

A special knife was used to make the first wound. Signs of torture are seen. Because they have previous experience in-theater, their knowledge precludes a replacement team while the murder is investigated. Sam identifies a knife of this type as a navy SEAL type of thing to have.

The death of one of the men of a team ready to re-deploy means Hanna has only hours to break the case. The NAVY SEAL team refuses to work with Callen, turning away questions. And Sam pleads with Callen to let him question the men on his own. Hanna asks Callen to back off.

Callen investigates whether the men actually stayed at the theater. One of the men actually dated another man's girlfriend. They look at this for motive. Ensign Powell's murder ruffles a lot of arrogant NAVY SEALs handed to the Hindu Kush rescue mission.

The commander is using the imperative of the mission to get the SEALs away from the investigation. Even though protocol demands they stay for the murder investigation, knowledge exclusive to the few men means they have to go themselves. The Taliban are moving Rowe and Davis every few hours.

The men refuse to talk to anyone except Hanna.

Sam does so, but the men remain as a tight knit group to their alibi. Callen discovers the men are lying and went through the fence into the post. They find a blind spot in the cameras where the fence is ripped. Sam says there is no physical evidence. There is no motive.

Hetty calls a meeting. Powell's safety deposit box links him with foreign national and espionage. Callen points out that even if NAVY SEALs don't kill for jealousy they would kill a traitor. Hanna agrees.

Hanna must then question the men again. Kenzi says it like watching someone question their family and Deaks agrees. Hanna claims the men are SEALs and answer to a different code.

Meanwhile Deaks and Kenzi finds the packet of sensitive information and cause it to upload to its destination. This is the secreted information about the mission the men were going to be on.

'The DoD wants this taken care of now.' The commander can barely make his men cooperate.

Kenzi asks to call the MPs when the agents needed for questioning bristle and insist they need to get on a plane instead of answering Callen's questions. Sam asks no questions and points out that only he can get information.

Slowly Hanna is the only one who can deal with the SEALs. They lie to Callen about where they were and what they did.

When Hanna finally gets all the men together in the room at the boat house, he turns off the cameras and microphones and deals with the men privately. Hanna finds out that they captured the dead man and wounded him to find out where he was selling information about the mission. The man didn't think the prisoner would die.

The men wait to see what Hanna will do. Presumably because they were acting out of loyalty to the SEAL code the shouldn't be charged with murder.

The men acted together and threw the body away. The man who wounded him with the knife dressed the wound. But the coroner finds later that asthma and a panic attack caused him to choke. But Hanna must decide if they acted out of rage or malice. He lets them leave for the mission.

Hanna is tasked by Hetty about letting the men go. Hanna says there was not enough information to charge anybody. He says the confession of one of the men was a malfunction of the microphone and could not be used. Hetty says this cannot stand, he let them off.

Callen and Hetty listen on the hot mike to the mission in Hindu Kush in real time. One by one the men are hit while the leader calls for a sitrep (situation report). Finally they get the two civilians free.

Only when the hostages are rescued at great personal loss of life to the team does Hetty relent and tell Sam she agrees with his assessment and can close the case.

Summary: When a former Marine is suspected of creating a chemical bomb, the NCIS:LA team joins the FBI's domestic terrorist task force including Operational Psychologist Nate Getz.

The episode begins with a woman checking on her eye-makeup while driving and she drives straight into a truck standing in front of her and the light was red. The guy from the truck steps out and just then they hear a noise from the trunk of the truck. They realize that it is a bomb and they run as fast as they can. The truck explodes. At the office, Marty is surprised to know that Nell and Blye hang out together. They chitchat for a while about everything other than work. Just then Eric signals them to come upstairs as they have their next case ready. Hetty shows them news footage. A man named Gavin Knowles has been arrested by the FBI after a bomb detonating in his truck thus thwarting an act of terrorism. The team learns that the truck started smoking and the Gavin abandoned the truck before it could explode.

Hana thinks it was a chemical bomb and highly unstable. Gavin is a former Marine with no training in explosives; could have trained himself. Callen finds something not fitting right. Granger wants them to find what the FBI didn't. The team arrives at a spot for investigation and Special Agent Ambrose asks them for their id. Gavin is in custody. Blye inspects the truck. Just then Nate Getz arrives and tells the team that the FBI has it wrong this time. He tells them that he has joined the FBI task force. He tells them that Ambrose wasn't interested in his opinion and thought that they might be. They need to find a way to question Gavin. Callen and Hana go to Gavin's apartment and they try tricking the Agent on duty in letting them in. but just then Ambrose arrives and stops them. He asks them to finish their paperwork first.

Marty and Blye are at the diner and asks the guy at the counter about Gavin. The guy asks them to talk to Mia. She tells them that they have been dating around 6 months and that Gavin was freaked out about what happened to his truck. She thinks that he is innocent. The counter guy tells Marty that Gavin used Mia's phone to make some calls. Marty asks Eric to trace Mia's number. The calls were made to a garage. All of them go to collect more information and Eric finds an excuse to leave Nell and Nate together. Nate thinks that she was flirting with him to make Eric jealous. Nell denies. Blye and Marty are at the garage and they find a lot of bikes arrive at the garage. They inform Callen. Hetty educates the team, and Marty and Blye on the phone, that an anonymous tip was given this morning, stating that a terrorist group was responsible for the blast this morning and not Gavin.

And there are more bombs. The news outlets have got the wind of this tip. Next, Nate, Callen and Hana go to the FBI office. Ambrose is disappointed with Nate joining hands with NCIS and he tells the trio that the FBI has closed the case on this one; despite the news that there could be more bombs out there. Callen tells Ambrose that if the case is closed then there is no harm in speaking to Gavin and Ambrose allows Nate to interview Gavin. Callen is watching Nate's movements on his phone. Nate asks Gavin whether he has spoken to a psychologist before and is that the reason that he was medically discharged. Gavin tells Nate that it was an honorable discharge. He tells Nate that he has got nothing to do with the blast and that someone must have planted it in the back of his truck. He was about to tell something about the FBI, when Ambrose walks in and interrupts the process.

There is more to this than what meets the eye. At the office, they analyze the photographs taken in the garage; and check for the biker gang's records. Most of them have been in and out of prison. Marty and Blye go to the garage, dressed as bikers. But they are recognized. One of them tries to escape and Marty runs behind him. Blye has situation inside the garage under control. Marty arrests Harold. Marty tells Harold's that during parole he cannot hang out with other felons. They ask him about Gavin. He tells them that someone has been asking around as to how to make a compact bomb; size of a pack of cigarettes. He doesn't know who. Just then the FBI Chief announces on television that the tip is nothing but a hoax. They will not be pursuing it further. Marty and Blye go to meet Mia once again. The door to her apartment was unlocked.

They go inside but don't find her. They find that she plays a jumbo violin. Eric tells Hana and Callen that he has traced the tip to Hollywood. The duo leaves for Hollywood to the given address. They arrive at the address. There was no one around and the gate was locked. When Callen touched the lock; the car on the other side of the gate explodes. Nate was right that the FBI had got it wrong. At the office, the team analyzes the explosions. Nate thinks that they are trying to get their attention. Nell find out that the car used in the second bombing was stolen after Gavin's arrest. They suspect Mia and they need to find her. But Nell tells them that Mia has changed her identity as there is no record of a Mia Jameson until six years ago. Marty shows them the picture of the violin he took at Mia's place and points out as to where she could be servicing it.

They go to the shop. The shopkeeper tells them that her real name is Jessica. They tell him that they need to look at all the receipts as they have to find her. They get an address. Hana and Callen go to the address. They find a girl who tells them that she is a house sitter until the owners return on Sunday. She tells them that the maids told her that their daughter Jessica ran away when she was in high school. They tell her that they need to check Jessica's bedroom. They find a picture of her boyfriend. Eric and Nell tell the team that the boyfriend was arrested as a suspected terrorist. They both played in the youth orchestra. All this happened six years ago. Rafi was killed in prison by his fellow inmates, as an act of patriotism. And the FBI agent who handled this case was Ambrose.

Blye points out another guy in the pictures; the same counter boy from the diner who the FBI identified as Zachary Cole. But he told Marty that his name was Adam Malnick. He changed his identity six years ago exactly when Mia changed hers. They figure out that they are out for revenge for Rafi's death as an innocent man was convicted and then killed. Marty and Blye go back to that diner and Adam flees on seeing them. But Hana gets hold of him. He tells them that he only built the bomb and it was the FBI and media who went around telling everyone. He tells them that he doesn't know about Mia's whereabouts but agent Ambrose might. So Ambrose is her next target. He tells Eric that Mia must have baited Ambrose in meeting her. Nell finds something not right about the pictures. Adam isn't from the group but his phone has the logo and Rafi was arrested as FBI heard conversations from his phone about the chemical bombs.

Marty figures out that Adam was the one who used Mia's phone to make a call to the garage.

Mia was trying to prove that Rafi was innocent. And Adam was taking pleasure in playing this game. He first gets Rafi arrested and then pretended that he was upset about Rafi's death. He then set off another bomb to prove the FBI wrong. They track Ambrose and head to the spot. Mia doesn't know that the bomb has been planted on her. Nate figures out that Mia wanted the FBI to admit that Rafi was innocent and she would want it on record. So the bomb might be in the tape recorder. They reach the spot but Mia has already turned on the tape recorder. Hana very carefully takes the recorder from her hands making sure that the contact with the button isn't lost.

No plan to handle this bomb. They use a bobby pin to hold down the button. They set the recorder to the ground and run. It goes off. They tell Mia that Ambrose would declare Rafi's innocence and also make sure that Gavin is released. Mia wants Adam punished and she would do whatever it takes. Ambrose apologizes to Gavin on behalf of the FBI. Mia is being questioned but there would be no charges pressed. Hetty tells Callen that Granger sends him a gold star. But he wants it to go to Mia.

Summary: Part 1: Danny and Chin Ho partner with NCIS agents Sam Hanna and G. Callen to track down a suspect who's threatening to release a deadly virus on the population. Part 2: The joint NCIS:Los Angeles and Hawaii Five-0 task force head back to the mainland as they follow the suspect who's threatening to release a deadly virus.

First Part — Hawaii Five-0 S02E21 episode "Pa Make Loa"

The episode begins with a man frantically banging at the door of a house. The mother and the children are scared. The mother calls 911 and tells them that her ex husband is trying to break into the house. The cops arrive and announce themselves; the man comes out and the cops are horrified when they see his face- his face is covered with large boils filled with puss. He asks for help. Next, we see that Danny is at Steve's residence; going through his things. He finds a map with a location marked on it. Just then Ho arrives. Danny shows him the map and tells him that Steve has gone to Japan. Ho tells him that Shel Burne could be the answer to a lot Steve's questions; including about his father's death.

Just then Danny receives a call from the Governor and the two leave. They arrive at the scene and Kono too joins them. Ho tells Kono that a strange husband bangs at the door of his house and then drops dead when the HPD arrives. He had hemorrhaging small pox; a rare disease. But that's eradicated. Danny tells her that the Governor wants them to investigate the case discreetly, while the CDC determines as to how the guy got the disease. The CDC has incinerated the body and Kono wonders how to begin with the investigation. Max tells them that he has the blood and tissue samples; and also the guy's pictures. The victim's name is Bryan Palmer and he was honorably discharged from the army ten months ago. Ho wonders that if the guy is from the army then he should have been vaccinated; but Max tells him that the vaccination could have worn off, as it is effective for 3-5 years.

Danny wonders as to how Bryan got infected with an extinct disease. Max tells him that the only two places where the small pox virus is stored is CDC and a place called Vector in Russia. They suspect it to be a terrorist activity. Max also adds that Bryan must have been exposed to the virus in the past two weeks. He thinks that Bryan wasn't infected the traditional way but was injected with the virus. He says that if Bryan had been walking around with it for too long, then within a few weeks the entire island could be infected. Danny and Ho meet Bryan's wife, who is kept in an isolation ward. She tells him that Bryan moved out a couple of months ago. But they were trying to work things out; but then he stopped coming for family counseling and would not return phone calls.

She tells them that Bryan would have occasional bouts of drinking, where he would shut himself up and not talk to anyone. Ho decides to check Bryan's room at the Breakers Hotel. Danny finds some syringes and some sort of a liquid with it. But Kono educates them that the drug they found in Bryan's room is an antidepressant and the injection mark is due to the same. But his autopsy doesn't show any trace of the antidepressant. Kono finds out the name of the pharmaceutical company who are conducting the trials, Biostratum; but they don't know who the participants are. But the local project manager, Ken Tanner, could tell them who the participants are. But Tanner hasn't shown up at work today.

Meanwhile, the HPD calls and tells them that they have found the co-ordinates of Bryan's cell phone location; its active. Kono tracks it down while Danny and Ho go to Tanner's residence. But they find him dead in his car in the garage. They figure out that Tanner was murdered. Kono goes to the location, and finds Bryan's cell phone and clothes wrapped in a plastic bag; it has a biohazard label on it. Danny informs Ho and Kono that Tanner was killed by a man named Dracul Comescu; his prints were found on Tanner's car and keys. He is a Romanian national and is on the NCIS watch list for some special projects in LA. Danny calls Hana from the NCIS team and asks him about Dracul. Callen is surprised that Dracul is in Hawaii and tells Danny he also has some personal issues with him. Danny informs them that Dracul has gotten hold of the small pox virus.

Meanwhile, Charlie tells Kono that he has found clothes of different sizes in the plastic bag. It means that there are other victims too. Callen and Hana arrive in Hawaii and they meet the team. Kono tells them that they have found three other sets of DNA from that plastic bag and it belongs to Paul Kelly, Terrance Hill and Luis Salazar. They are not to be found anywhere. They were all single and that makes them the ideal victims. They all visited the anti depressant trials; and the trials are legit. Danny believes that this could be some sort of an experiment and that Dracul got the information of these guys from Tanner, as they were ready to go through drug trials. So they need to find out where the experiment is being conducted.

Just then Ho tells them that Tanner was in great financial difficulty; but two months ago he got a wire transfer from CF&Q. Callen recognizes the company as one of Dracul's holdings. So, Tanner keeps half of the money and the other half he spends on buying medical equipments, which was sent to a warehouse in an island, which is called the Quarantined Island. They reach the island and find that there are cameras all over. Just then a car drives out and Callen sees Dracul in that car. They chase the car but in the end they only find the driver. They go back to the ware house. They find Luis and Paul dead in their beds. They too were infected by small pox. But it isn't the small pox that killed them; Dracul shot them in their heads.

Max arrives at the scene with the CDC team. He tells them that the equipments are very sophisticated and that someone with acute scientific knowledge is involved. They also find tapes that have documented the progress of the disease. The doctor going through the tapes tells Kono that normally the incubation period of the virus is 16-28 days; but with this version of the virus, it is just three days. This means that anyone who comes in contact with this virus will be dead in 3 days. The doctor tells her that the voice that narrates never shows his face on the camera. She says that she knows the voice, but cant place him. Meanwhile, Ho and Danny go and visit Dracul's driver at the hospital.

Danny threatens to inject the samples that they found in the ware house. He wants to know about Dracul. But the driver does not answer. But then when he sees that Danny has actually injected the liquid in his drip, he begins to crack. He tells them that Dracul has taken 9 vials with him and the sale is happening today at the International market. But then he also tells them that when Dracul arrived to pick up the vials, the guys were found dead, shot in the head. The doctor was missing but he does not know his name. Danny tells him that the drug that he injected in his drip is vitamin B 12. It aids in healing. Five o and NCIS are at the International market. Kono is keeping a watch from a distance. Kono tells Danny and Sam that the Chechens are closer to them. And Callen goes to get Dracul.

But Ho notices that Dracul isn't carrying anything. Hana and Danny get the Check ins and find a bag full of money. Hana tells the team that the buy is still in play. Dracul's bodyguard hands him a case. The vials must be in it. But Dracul notices Callen standing at a distance. He fires the gun in the air and the people in the market start running. Callen and Ho go in. But they manage to lose sight of Dracul. But Kono tells them that they split up and the bodyguard is next to the fruit vendors. Callen also spots Dracul. The bodyguard holds a girl hostage and tries to escape. But Kono shoots him. Callen is still chasing Dracul and he gets him. They have an argument and Callen shoots him. Callen gets the case of vials. Next, both the teams are enjoying the shrimps at Kamekona's.

Just then Kono calls Danny and tells him that the doctor from CDC told her that the vials they recovered from Dracul, did not contain small pox and that the virus is still out there. Kono thinks that the doctor switched the vials. The doctor's name is Gerard Perman. It seems that the doctor double crossed the guys he was working for. Kono tells the team that Perman is leaving for LA. Danny asks her to send him Perman's picture. They arrive at the airport. But the guy they find there isn't Perman. The guy tells them that Perman gave him $500 to switch flights and that he had some sob story about his girlfriend he is traveling with. Hana calls his colleague in LA and asks him to detain a passenger traveling under the name Benjamin Gallagher. Hana tells the team that they have a problem; flight no. 792 landed in LA five minutes ago.

Second Part — NCIS: Los Angeles episode

The episode begins with the flight attendants find the dead body of a woman in the restroom of an LA flight. Her eyes and nose are bleeding. The flight is about to land. The suspect's name is Dr. Jarrod Prozman and he is traveling in flight no. 792; but he is traveling under the name of Benjamin Gallagher to remain unidentified. He has a female companion and is carrying a biochemical weapon; a deadly small pox virus. Eric and Nell are trying to reach Callen and Hana; but the equipment is acting up. But Eric manages to set it straight. This time the Five O team is flying with the NCIS LA team. They are working on this case together. Kensi and Deeks are at the airport and ask them not to let the passengers de-plane; but they already have.

They had to let the passengers go as they had to remove the dead body. This is news to Kensi and Deeks. They see the body and inform the others. The woman's name is Sharon Walker. The only thing that links the doctor and the victim together is that they stayed in the same hotel in Hawaii. At the airport, Kensi and Deeks are looking for Jarrod, but Eric tells them that he left. He did not go to the baggage claim and left six minutes ago. Eric educates Kensi and Deeks about Prozman. He is a renowned epidemiologist, but was disgraced in 2007 for cooking up data to pump his research. But there has to be someone paying for all this. Prozman is broke and has no source of income. The NCIS team introduces Danny and Ho to the rest of the team. Danny's sarcasm isn't appreciated much. Hetty has a word with Callen and Hana in private. She tells them that if this leaks out, there would be chaos. Hetty announces that Deeks and Kensi need to get inoculated; but Deeks isn't a huge fan of needles. And Hetty manages to make Deeks cry out loud. He passes out.

Kensi and Deeks arrive at Sharon's house. Sharon's twin sister opened the door. They look exactly the same; so much that even Kensi was confused for a moment. They break the news to her. Meanwhile, Hana, Ho, Danny and Callen check Prozman's hotel room, but they don't find any leads, as the room was rented out for just a day. They figure out that Sharon's death wasn't a planned one. Just then they spot Prozman and Ho and Hana chase him and pin him down. Next, Hana and Callen are interrogating Prozman. He wants a lawyer. Prozman tells them that he didn't know it was small pox; he thought that it was some sort of a research. He adds that Sharon had cancer and thinks that she could have been relapsing. He stole her personal belongings because he panicked. But obviously the detectives don't buy his story. They show him a video shot at the quarantine centre, where Prozman was documenting the progress of the disease.

Prodman has nothing to say. Callen finds lots of money in Prodman's bag. They want to know who is paying him off. He tells them that her name is Dr. Rachel Holden. Eric and Nell find out more about Holden. Meanwhile, Prodman tells the duo that Holden met him at the hotel, gave him the money and that was the end of it for him. He doesn't know who is she doing it for or who the buyer is. They get an address for doctor Holden. Kensi and Deeks go to the hospital to find out more about Holden. The hospital wants to discuss the entire thing with their legal counsel before they talk to the cops. So Deeks decides that they should play doctor and nurse- Deeks dresses up as a male nurse and so obviously, Kensi is the doctor. Deeks manages to sneak into Holden's room and finds a message written on the white board. He is stupefied. At the office, Nell tells Eric that Holden hasn't used hr credit card for several months, but the last two purchases were plane tickets; one for Prodman and the other one for her, that will leave from LA the next day.

She is going to Costa Rica. So whatever she is doing with the virus is going down today. But they don't know when and where. Just then Eric tells Nell that if the person who is handling this virus knows about its deadly effects; they also might have access to the vaccination; which means, the person would have to steal it from military or State Health department facility. They find out that two weeks ago there was a break-in at the State health facility center. Nell finds out the man who is responsible for the break-in at the health center; his name is Gabriel Marchal. He is linked to several unsavory groups; the ELE. Both the teams are keeping an eye on the suspected area. They locate Gabriel. But they have to clear the area without causing chaos. They are successful in doing so. They search the van they were expecting to find the virus; but its not there. They arrest Gabriel.

But he denies exchanging anything with the doctor. Nell tells Callen that Holden had wired a large amount of money into one of her accounts six weeks ago. Eric tells Hana that he did not find anything in Holden's computer hard drive. But there were few of her articles related to work. But it is the nature of those articles that is a little disturbing. In one of her latest articles, she says that a pandemic is the best way to control population. She thinks that by eliminating small pox from the planet; we have eliminated nature's life balancing systems. She thinks she is doing God's work. According to Holden, the best way to save the planet is to naturally thin out the human herd. Nell has an important finding. Holden had bought some supplies, which Nell thought is for business. But then she bought around 300 t-shirts for school children.

So, she would distribute the infected t-shirt in a school, the students would take the infected t-shirt back home and infect their families as well. Kenzi remembers seeing a group of students at the airport. They find out about an international gathering and they decide to shut it down. But its too late; the convention started an hour ago. They go to the convention center. They find out that there are free t-shirts being distributed. They locate Holden and announce themselves. But she runs. She tries to escape in her car, but the teams manage to get hold of her. They also find the vials. They arrest Holden. She tells them that the earth is dying and its we who are the disease. She was just trying to help.

At the office, Nell tells the group that the Health Department and the CDC are vaccinating all the people who might have come in contact with those bags and t-shirts. Hetty thanks the Five O team on behalf of NCIS. Danny and Ho leave to catch their flight. Both the teams managed to save the earth.

Summary: NCIS believes they have found a Russian sleeper cell in the middle of the suburbs, so they get Kensi and Deeks to go undercover as a married couple.

The episode begins with Deeks waking up and finds that Kensi isn't in bed. He goes out and Kensi arrives after her jog. Just then we see that someone is clicking their snaps from a car and there is a revolver in his next seat. Next, Callen and Hana are doing a bit of virtual sparring and Hetty calls for them. Deeks and Kensi are posing like a married couple to check into a Russian sleeper agent in a suburban neighborhood. They have put on more surveillance cameras around. Their focus is on Floyd Hobbs and Serena Miller. Next, the 'newly weds' tells the team about the Felton kids and Jane Felton; their mother. Then it is Bob and Rob and then finally Bret Turner and his fiancée Paulina Graffetta. But they are still not able to find the Russian businessman Michael Kroyov, who is the only solid link to the sleeper agent.

Unfortunately Kroyov vanished before he could give the sleeper agent's name; but Nell has footage of him at an ATM ten days ago. Hetty tells the team that Kroyov's claim about the sleeper cell has been taken very seriously by the DOD. Hetty has a word with Deeks and Kensi saying that they should not give into their emotions just because they are forced to live together. Both of them pretend to find that thought funny. Just then Eric interrupts their conversation and shows the three of them a recent footage they found of Kroyov. In the footage, Kroyov is in a hotel and he enters the lift. A man who is already in the lift is about to get out. He taps Kroyov's shoulder, a friendly gesture. Moments later Kroyov collapses on the floor and dies. Now, the only connection to the sleeper agent is dead. Next, Kensi is preparing snicker doodles for the old man in 504 and goes to give them to him. Next, Sam and Hana go to a Russian guy and shows him Michael's photo.

But he doesn't recognize him. They then show him the photographs of the people from the neighborhood. H says that Jane Felton resembled his ex-wife. On their way out, Hana thinks that he actually reacted on seeing Serena Miller's picture. Callen calls up Eric and asks him to pull up every detail about Jane Felton and Serena Miller. Meanwhile, Kensi arrives at Hobbs' house. She introduces herself and tells him that she is house sitting for her uncle. But he doesn't open the door. She checks his mails and leaves the cookies on his doorstep. On her way out, she finds a guy drive away with his car and Hobbs has taken the cookies. Next, Nell and Eric inform Callen and Hana about the poison that was used to kill Kroyov. Also, they tell the duo that there is nothing much about Jane Felton and Serena Miller works in a bank. Hana thinks that access to personal information is the best place for a sleeper agent.

Eric informs Deeks that Serena Miller is on a vacation in Florida, according to her boss. But Kensi says that she saw Miller drive down in her BMW this morning. So, one of them is lying. Next, Kensi knocks at Miller's door and Deeks is keeping a watch outside. But Miller doesn't open the door. So, Kensi uses a lock pick and unlocks the door and enters inside. But inside the house, Miller welcomes Kensi with a gun drawn at her. But Kensi tackles her to the ground and Deeks comes in. Miller tells her that her real name is Nadia Borsov. She tells them that she has nothing to do with Kroyov's murder. She tells them that her handler thought that Kroyov was a traitor. He is making arrangements to get her out of there.

She tells them that if they want any more information, she needs protection. Kensi decides to drive with Miller and she sends Deeks to run interference. Deeks meets Bob Wright and they have a small chat. Meanwhile, Miller gets her car door to get into the driver's seat, when there is a small prick and she begins to have some sort of a seizure. Kensi informs Deeks. She is breathing her last and she tells Kensi that her handler is Alex Vaznev and he is here. She passes away. At the office, Nell tells Callen and Hana that there is no record of Alex Vaznev living in the neighborhood. Hana thinks that he would be using an alias. Callen suggests that it could also be a woman. Callen asks as to what they would do with Miller's body. Hetty tells them that they can do nothing for the poor woman as it could blow their cover. She tells Callen and Hana to find out why Arcady lied to them. Arcady is the same Russian man they met earlier.

Meanwhile, Deeks and Kensi are having a chat, when someone breaks their window. First it seems like an attack and the two draw their guns. But it is one of the Felton kids. He gets scared when he sees the gun and runs. Next, Callen and Hana go to Arcady's house and find the guard lying dead on the stairs. They then see that two men are trying to drown Arcady in his pool. They shoot them down. Arcady tells them that Miller's father was a friend and that she wanted out. So he tried to help and he thinks that her handler must have found out. He doesn't know who her handler is. He says that the two men lying dead in front of them worked for Miller's handler. Meanwhile, the neighborhood finds Miller's body. Deeks and Kensi talk to Paulina and she tells them that the dinner needs to be cancelled.

Kensi sees Hobbs and tries to go to talk to him. Just then Jane accuses Deeks for scaring her son. But they tell the mother how her son shattered their glass with his sling shot. By the time this is resolved, Kensi loses Hobbs again. At the lab, Eric and Nell tell the duo that they two men they shot earlier were connected to the Russian mob, but no connection with Kroyov or Miller. Meanwhile, Deeks is jogging in the neighborhood, picking up Wi-Fi signals. He meets Bob and Rob and they plan on meeting for dinner sometime. He returns home and finds that the music system is in it's full blast. Just then he finds bloody prints on the floor. But it turns out that Kensi is having a bath and she had cut her foot on a piece of glass.

Meanwhile, Callen and Hana are in one of the dead men's house. They find a lot of ammunition, fake passports and money. Next, Deeks and Kensi are visiting Paulina and Brett for dinner. Kensi tells Deeks that she is not able to get a read on them. She points out that Paulina is trying to flirt with Deeks because she thinks that they are trying to throw them off. They snoop around a bit when Brett and Paulina go to get some wine. Meanwhile, at the house, Sam finds the camera that has Deeks' and Kensi's pictures in it. They have been made. Brett and Paulina are giving the two the grand tour of their house. Deeks receives the message from Callen. They draw their guns. But they find out that the surprise that awaits them was a kinky set up by the couple, a sex dungeon. Kensi and Deeks leave. On their way back, two people fire at them.

It is Rob and Bob and yes they have been made. Kensi and Deeks try to get to a car. Just the Hobbs opens his door and lets them in. But Rob and Bob enter through the kitchen door. But the helpful Hobbs turns out to be Alex, Miller's handler. Kensi gets her shot at Bob and Rob and Deeks cuffs Hobbs/Alex. Well, the hand cuffs were taken from Paulina's sex dungeon; a leopard print. At the office, they discuss about Alex and then leave for the day. But it is not over for Deeks. Hetty has few questions for him about the handcuffs.

Summary:	Motivated by revenge, the Chameleon once again challenges the NCIS team after an undercover assignment sets in motion a deadly mind game devised by the criminal mastermind.

The episode begins with a guy, enjoying his drive when suddenly there is another car that drives up behind him and deliberately bangs into his car. A chase follows and later on the guy who is being followed is killed by the bald guy who was following him. But as the bald chap is about to get into his car, he too is shot from a car that is standing at a distance. Next, at the office, the guys are having their usual chit chat, when Eric signals them to come in to the computer room, announcing the new case. The guy who was being chased is Conrad weaver and the bald guy who was chasing him is Earl Mayfield. They both were in Point Blank shooting range which is an FFL, Federal Firearms licensed facility. Richard Mayfield is Point Blank's proprietor and also earl's uncle. Earl is an ex- army ranger and a suspected mercenary.

The others that are employed are Richard's brother Blake, cousin Neil and step daughter Mara. Family that shoots together stays together. There is a new employee at Point Blank, Agent Renko. For some reason Renko is undercover in Point Blank. Hetty is trying to find out more about Renko's case handler. Eric tells the team that there was a text on Earl's phone saying that Renko is not what he seems to be. Nell says that they did send a coded message to Renko's cell but there is no response. Hetty tells her team that before Renko's cover is blown, they should get him out of PB. They all go to PB. Deeks and Kensi are at the shooting arena, while Callen and Hana go to the weapon store. Callen finds Renko there and he drops a hint. Renko gets out and is about to leave. But just then Blake comes and stops Renko from leaving. Deeks informs Callen that there is trouble and Renko has been made. A gun fight ensues and all the Mayfield men are killed by our team. Mara is arrested and Renko is safe. But just then there is a shot fired and Renko is killed. The cops and the NCIS team are not able to see the shooter. They rush Renko to the hospital.

Hetty is angry as the team failed to secure the area. Hetty asks the team to report to Ops, but Kensi volunteers to stay back with Renko. Neil Mayfield is in the hospital but in a coma. Mara is their only source of intel. She wouldn't speak, so they check her hard drive. They look at the security footage of the incident. They infer the killer who shot Renko is trained. Just then Granger arrives. Hetty asks him to talk to the team as she doesn't want to answer his questions. She is irritated that she isn't able to access Renko's file. Realization dawns upon her and she figures out that Granger is his handler. Granger tells Hetty that they received a tip saying that Richard's business was dirty and that he was supplying weapons to a small terrorist ground. Renko was new and so he was telling time. The only thing Granger knows that the buyer was supposed to text Richard about the time and the place for the deal to take place.

At the lab, Eric tells them that there were two other employees in PB; Paul Manning and Walter Henderson. Paul was arrested the previous day by LAPD for DY. When in the army, Walter was enrolled for a sniper program but was washed out for misconduct. In the lab, when team is trying to link all the murders from the beginning, Kensi calls. She informs Hetty that Renko had a cardiac arrest after surgery and the doctors couldn't save him. Renko is no more. Next, Callen and Hana interrogate Mara. She tells them that the accounting books go back to 2003. On the surface everything looks legit but actually it is not. Mara says that she has a kid and a lot of financial liabilities. Rich knew that and he paid her to keep her mouth shut. Nell tells Granger and Hetty that the deal is supposed to happen soon but she could not trace the call as it was a burn phone.

Just then Eric gets a hit where he tells them that the other employee Walter just checked into a motel. Callen and Hana go to the motel. The motel owner tells the duo that Walter is a psycho; exactly what Mara had told them about Walter. They go to the room and find Walter lying on the floor in a pool of his own blood; he has been shot dead. Now, none of this makes sense. Granger thinks that there could be some other reason for Renko to be killed. Maybe it had nothing to do with PB. Just then there is a text on Rich's phone stating that time and address for the deal. Mara tells them that probably the earlier deals were bogus and she thinks that Richard hid the weapons.

Mara tells them that there was some problem with the back stop at the shooting range. Normally Richard would ask someone to deal with hit but this time he took care of it himself. The team goes to the shooting range and they find the hidden weapons. Next, Hetty tells the team that they will cover the area where the deal is supposed to go down. Granger says that the team will not be able to cover the entire area. But Hetty insists. Hana, Callen, Deeks and Kensi go to the decided spot. Just then three guys walk up to them and tells them that their boss has gone to get some coffee and that he will write out the check in a while. All of them realize that the three guys are phonies. One of them tells Callen that a man named Carlo picked them up and told them that they could get some extra cash by simply helping him with some crates. Carlo also wanted the three guys to stop the team and delay them. The guy Jeff tells Callen that his guy was using a rental truck.

Callen calls Nell and asks her to check. They get a hit but the driver's face cannot be seen. Nell tells Callen that either the driver is really lucky or he exactly knows where the cameras are. Callen asks Nell about the shootings that happened. Nell tells them that all of them were shot in their jaw. Callen puts things together and he figures out who the real guy is; it is the Chameleon. Eric tells Callen that the GPS of the truck is on and he tells him the location. The four arrive at the place. They see the Chameleon standing right in front of them. The four get out of the car. Just then the Chameleon's phone rings and Callen asks him to drop the phone. But the Chameleon still answers it.

They hear a voice screaming 'HELP ME'. At a distance, there is a car and there is a woman in it. Her hands are duct taped to the steering wheel. The woman is Lauren Hunter. The Chameleon disconnects the call and the car blows up! The Chameleon surrenders. Next, Hetty is in the morgue with two dead bodies lying in front of her. Hetty is talking to Lauren's ghost. Lauren asks her if Hetty is angry, but she tells Lauren that she feels like she is drowning. Hetty tells Lauren she is number four and that there are three others. Lauren wants to know if Hetty talks to them too. 'From time to time'. Just then Granger walks in and tells Hetty that none of this makes sense. The Chameleon leads them there and then surrenders himself. He hasn't spoken a word yet. He is going to hand him over to Callen.

Summary:	The third season concludes with the team being drawn into a deadly mind game with a master criminal motivated by revenge.

The episode begins and Callen is interrogating The Chameleon. But he doesn't answer to any of Callen's questions. Just then Kensi walks in and asks them to spare a minute. The Chameleon asks Callen the time. He tells Callen that exactly after six hours; he will be walking out of this place and Callen will be holding the door for him. Next, Granger informs Callen that NSA Kelvin Atley has gone missing. Atley had accessed a file code named 'Cherokee'. It is actually a cover name for a person who has information about the top most military secrets. They believe that The Chameleon has Atley. Callen goes back in the interrogation room and asks the Chameleon about the Mayfield. The Chameleon instead tells them about the Mayfield.

He had set them up so that he could get Renko's attention. The series of incidents was like a game of chess for the Chameleon. He countered each and every move made by Callen. He then gives Callen a login id and a password to a particular file. Eric tells them that it is a public website where the files are uploaded and anyone with the password can download the files. The password he gave Callen is Muley Hasan. The file is a video file. The video has Lauren Hunter talking on the Chameleon's behalf, where she tells them that the Chameleon is a French national and his name is Marseille Jean Vier, also he has Atley. She says that if he doesn't get what he wants then he will put Atley in the market and sell him to the highest bidder. He wants 50 million dollars deposited in his account by today afternoon. After saying this, Lauren tells something in a different language.

The Chameleon hits her and the video ends. So now, it is clear that the Chameleon wants to do a prisoner exchange. He wants to be set free in exchange of Atley. Now, the language Lauren spoke in is Romani and it is a cell phone number; it is a burn phone and the GPS is switched off and it was activated 3 days ago. Callen doesn't want them to release the Chameleon. Granger tells him that it is not a choice that they could make right away. Next, Callen asks the Chameleon as to how did he get to Atley. He tells them that he got to Atley the same way he got to the rest. Everyone has a weakness. Callen and Hana figure out that if they don't buy Atley, Iran will. Next, Eric gets a signal on the burn phone. He gives the team the address. But Granger doesn't want Callen to go as he wants him to keep the pressure on Jean Vier.

Callen stays back and the other three leave. They arrive at the warehouse. Meanwhile, the Chameleon tells Callen that he needs to know his opponent's next move before he does. Callen realizes that sending the team to the warehouse is a trap. He tells Eric to recall the team. Eric does that and the three try to escape. The warehouse blows up. Deeks and Kensi are fine but they don't see Hana anywhere. But our big guy stumbles out from the backside of the warehouse; they are relieved to see that Hana is safe. Callen is furious. He tells the Chameleon to try pulling the trigger on him. Callen then has the gun pointed on Chameleon. Hetty arrives and asks Callen to stand down. Hetty wants to know whether Chameleon spoke Roman and he says that he doesn't as well as she does. So, he knew what Lauren said in the video and he used the number to set them up. Hetty is in pain. Lauren was her favorite.

She knew her for thirty years. She asks Callen if he saw her face before she died and if she was afraid. Callen tells her that Lauren was angry and defined; but she was also afraid. Callen doesn't want to let Chameleon walk out of this place and Hetty tells him that they don't have a choice. Next, Eric checks the video footage in that area after the bomb was detonated. There is a car that jumped the red light. Eric begins to tell the license plate number, and Deeks completes it. How did he know? Because he is staring right at it! They walk towards the car and two guys from the crowd gathered around the warehouse, make a run for their lives. They chase the Mercedes. Eric finds out that the car is registered to the Israeli Consulate! Not good! He informs Hana. Granger tells Hana to cut them loose. Their identities have been verified by the State Department. Hana is irritated.

After hanging up the phone, Hana pretends that they are going to arrest them for attempt of murder. But they tell him that they were only looking for some- a French national! The last place they saw him was the warehouse; so they came back and staked it out. But they had no idea that the building was wired. But there is more that Deeks manages to get from them- the SD card from their camera. They are going to be really pissed. They check the photos. It appears that The Chameleon has got himself a new crew. But there is also a mystery man. But no clear shot and hence cannot be identified. They try to track down their cars. They get a hit and tell the team the location. They arrive at the condo. Kensi tells Callen that the condo manager identified Kelvin Atley and that he is on the eighteenth floor and there are seven others.

They barge into the room but find the seven guys dead; and Atley is missing. Just then Kensi sees a message on the wall and alerts the others. It says: 'CHECK'. Meanwhile, Eric and Nell try to find out information about the mystery man. Next, Granger tells Hetty that the authorities aren't happy with the way the Israeli agents were treated and they also mentioned a missing SD card. Just then the team arrives and Granger announces that the exchange will take place. Callen is pissed and thinks that Renko and Lauren died for nothing. Before the argument between Granger and Callen could get heated, Eric butts in with the information about the mystery man. His name is Nazeem Vaziri and he is Iranian. NSA believes that he has close ties with Iranian Intelligence. Callen and Hana tells Granger that the Chameleon would have told Vaziri the name that Atley knows and he is going to get paid.

Also, he will be paid by them as per his demand; Chameleon gets paid from both sides. Hetty tells Eric to check for any fund transfers into the Chameleon (Jean Vier's) account. Granger puts his foot down and tells that they are running out of time and that they have no other plan. Hetty says that she is sorry. Next, Granger walks into the room with Callen and gives the Chameleon all the documents and a phone as per his demand. He makes a call to confirm the transfer. He then destroys the phone and puts it in a glass of water. He walks out. The four are driving along with the Chameleon. He gets them to the place where they can get back Atley.

There are news channels present. It is a strategic move. He tells Callen that Atley is in the SUV across the park. Kensi and Deeks leave the car to get Atley and Hana and Callen stay back in the car with the Chameleon. Kensi and Deeks see Atley, but he is drugged. Eric hacks into Chameleon's bank account and there is a transfer for 50 million dollars from Tehran, Iran. So, Callen was right. Meanwhile, at the park, Callen is not ready to let Marseille Jean Vier (The Chameleon) walk away this time. He pulls the trigger on the Chameleon and finally he is dead. Callen is arrested and the entire footage is on the television. Hetty tenders her resignation that she was supposed to in 2010. With a heavy heart, Hetty sees one of her best agents being taken away by the cops.

Summary: Following Callen's public shooting of the Chameleon on last season's finale cliffhanger, all is not well with the team, as Callen is placed on suspension and Hetty adjusts to retired life.

The episode begins with Callen walking out of prison after spending a night. Hana is waiting for him. He tells Callen that he has been suspended and Hetty has resigned. Callen tells Hana that he didn't have to come. Hana points out that they have got some company across the street; Callen sees the vehicles parked across. Hana is pissed at what Callen said. Callen gets into a cab and leaves. One of the vehicles follows the cab. Hana crosses the street and asks Vaziri what he is doing there. He warns Vaziri to stay away from Callen. Next, we see that Eric is trying to stop Callen's arrest video from going viral. But a new one keeps popping up. Granger is on the phone with his superior.

Granger tells Hana that the Agency has started a misinformation campaign to prove to the Iranians that Atley's information was wrong. Also, Director Vance wants to know why one of his agents shot an unarmed man. He also tells Hana that the CIA is looking for someone to take the blame. And if they don't deliver, they would be shut down. Kensi and Deeks go into the interrogation room to talk to Atley. And they tell him that the CIA is really keen to talk to him. So, if he tells them what he knows, he doesn't have to talk to the CIA. Atley says that he wants indemnity from prosecution. He then tells them that he only gave the Iranians Cherokee's name, not the file.

He also says that he downloaded all the encrypted conversations between Cherokee and Langley; it proves that Cherokee was a spy for the CIA. It also lists the names of all the informants who worked covertly for the US in Iran. The file is in a safety deposit box in LA and Jean Vier and the Iranians know about the file. He then tells them the location of the key to the safety deposit box. Next, Granger goes to meet Hetty on her yacht. He tells her that Iran is paranoid about the fact that CIA is trying to set them up. He updates her with all the information he just received. Hetty says that she wants out of this spy game and asks Granger to leave.

He leaves, but as he is leaving, we see that someone is clicking their pictures. Next, Callen is enjoying his swim in the ocean and Vaziri is waiting for him on the shore. He wants to know about the file and Callen tells him that he is not Atley. Vaziri asks Callen to state his price, but Callen walks away. Hana is watching all this from a distance. Next, Eric tells the team that a car that is registered to one of Vaziri's company is spotted outside the bank which has the file. Granger tells them that they need to secure the file before the Iranians get to it; else they all might have to look for another job. Next, we see that Hetty drops her plans of sailing into the Atlantic and walks back; only to find Hosein Khadem waiting for her.

She always knew the reports of his death were fake as they were clearly exaggerated. Hetty talks about the current scenario and she finds out that Khadem knows too much. Khadem invites her for a cup of tea; but she declines. She then sees Vaziri in Khadem's car. She knew that she have never trusted Khadem. She then asks Hana to come out; she knew he was hiding behind the tree as he is keeping an eye on Vaziri. Hana tells her that Langley is breathing down Granger's neck, looking for someone to blame. He then tells her about the file and that if they don't find it, the unit will be shut down. She tells Hana to go back home and that Callen and her, are on their own. Hetty then walks into a bar, where Callen is waiting for her.

Vaziri and Khadem also arrive at the bar, but she tells Callen to ignore them. She tells them that Iran is paranoid that they have got the wrong spy and Vaziri is trying to confirm that Atley has given them the right name. She then tells him how she knows Khadem and how he became an enemy from being an ally. She is now waiting for Khadem to make the first move. Callen loses it. He walks up to Vaziri and tells him that he will state his price; he wants Vaziri to keep Khadem away from Hetty. In return he would tell him the name of the spy in Tehran; Cherokee. Next, Granger tells the team that a call has been intercepted, where Vaziri informed Iran that an NCIS agent has confirmed the name of the spy. Now, CIA is demanding Callen's immediate arrest and this has come from the Sec-Nav.

So, if they want to help themselves and Callen, they need to get the file. Next, Deeks and Kensi are entering the bank; they have managed to secure the key from its hiding place. Sam is also outside the bank and so are the Iranians. Kensi pulls off an amazing act and the bank guy is totally distracted by her. Deeks takes advantage of this and he gets to the safety deposit box. He secures a USB. Both of them leave the bank. But Eric tells them that the Iranians are on the move; someone from the bank must have tipped them off. They have got backup; so, Plan B. They run. They run to the parking lot and a gun fight ensues. Hana comes to their rescue. While running towards their car, Deeks drops the briefcase he had with him.

Hana tells him to leave it and they drive off. Eric, Granger and Nell watch the Iranians get hold of the briefcase. Next, Deeks tells Kensi and Hana that the arrest warrant for Callen just went out. Eric informs the team that something major went down in Tehran after they received Atley's USB and 30 minutes ago they sent an encrypted email to Vaziri. Granger wants that decrypted and Eric says that they aren't allowed that level of access where they could look over NSA's shoulders as they decrypt it. Granger asks him to 'just do it'. Eric manages to hack into the NSA's systems. The message reads that Vaziri needs to get back to Callen for confirming conflicting information and take 'necessary measures'.

Since Vaziri got the message 30 minutes ago, Granger knows that they are too late to rescue Callen. Next, we see that Vaziri has got Callen. Callen tells him the same thing that he told him earlier. Vaziri is pissed and asks Khadem to kill Hetty. Callen asks him to stop. He then tells him that all this was a lie and a conspiracy by the CIA to eliminate the man they fear the most as he cannot be bought. Atley then traded this information with Jean Vier. Vaziri tells him that the whole world saw Callen killing Jean Vier. Callen tells him that the only one who can tell him the whole truth is Jean Vier himself; he is alive! Cut to Granger and Hana telling Jean Vier that it is time to go for a ride.

Callen tells Vaziri that they staged his murder so that Vaziri would believe that he had nothing to lose. He now offers another trade; him for Jean Vier; the man Tehran paid 50 million dollars for the false information. They agree to the trade. Vaziri arrives at the decided spot with Callen and Hana arrives with Jean Vier. Callen and Jean Vier walk past each other, and Callen says, 'Checkmate'. Hana gives Callen his badge and gun. Hetty rejoins work. Time for an operational de-brief: Cherokee has been released and promoted for his troubles. His specific duty now on is to protect the Tehran government from foreign spies.

The Agency wants to know why they worked up this audacious plan and didn't include them in it!! cut to the flashback where Hetty devices the last part where she fakes her resignation and Callen will shoot Jean Vier; the only way to make them believe. At the bank, Deeks had replaced the USB with another one and all they had to do was make sure it fell into the Iranian hands. Before Granger leaves he tells Hetty that there is one problem; body washed up at the Marina this morning, Hosein Khadem. He was shot; guess he had a fall out with Vaziri. Hetty smiles; she asks Granger that they could talk over a cup of tea, or maybe something stronger.

Show Stars: Chris O'Donnell (Special Agent G. Callen), Linda Hunt (Henrietta 'Hetty' Lange), LL Cool J (Special Agent Sam Hanna), Daniela Ruah (Special Agent Kensi Blye), Eric Christian Olsen (LAPD Detective Marty Deeks), Barrett Foa (Tech Operator Eric Beal), Renée Felice Smith (NCIS Intelligence Analyst Nell Jones)
Guest Stars: Glenn Morshower (Brian Adams), Antonio Leon (Omar), Felix Ryan (Danny Levian), Anthony Azizi (Adanan Al-Ahmadi), Kate McNeil (Carol Adams), Enuka Okuma (Marine Major Denise Young), Matt Bushell (Jason Smith), Jonathan Fraser (Bob), Courtney Hope (Mary Clark), Roshawn Franklin (Air Force Drone Pilot)
Summary: A drone strike on a bomb-making compound in Afghanistan reveals the body of a recently retired Marine, leaving the NCIS:LA team to investigate why the Marine returned to Afghanistan and whether or not he betrayed the country he fought for.

The episode begins with three men getting out of a vehicle and entering a small building; this is in Afghanistan. Their movements are being watched by the marines. The marines have a positive ID on target AAA and launch an attack on the building. One of the targets exits the building and the building blows up. The man runs away. Next, Callen is standing at his sister's grave and Hetty tells him that he should replace the hedge stone with the correct name. He tells her that this helps him pretend to think that his sister is out there somewhere. Sam has got a new chair and he wants his old one back. Eric says that it is gone for charity.

Sam is not okay with it and wants Eric to get back his old chair. Well, it is on its way to a girls' school in Nigeria. Sorry Sam! Sam throws his chair to the ground and breaks it!! Next, Nell educates the team about Adnan Al-Ahmadi; also known as AAA. He is a bomb maker for Al-Qaeda. He nearly escaped a drone strike. When they checked the place, they identified the remains of a lot of his associates and one of them is an American Marine; David Adams. His investment ended 18 months ago and so he isn't supposed to be in the Middle East. They need to find out what he was doing in Afghanistan. Adams comes from a highly decorated Marine family. The family is refusing to accept that David was in Afghanistan; let alone that he is dead.

Callen and Sam go to talk to Marine officer Denise Young. Young tells them that Ahmadi has always been one step ahead of them and that they have recovered documents from him which show that he has in depth knowledge of their operational procedures. Fortunately most of them are outdated but they are all classified. And that could have gone to them only through someone from the Marine unit. They suspect David. But Sam says that David did not display any such tendencies when he was in the core. So, why turn traitor now? Kensi and Deeks are talk to David's parents and his mother tells them that David was glad that his tour ended. He liked being a Marine but he was eager to start a new chapter of his life.

His father tells them that he promised them that he would return in one piece. David loved his girlfriend to death and was also planning to join school. So there is no way that he would have gone back to Afghanistan. He doesn't know much about what David did as it was mostly classified. Deeks asks him that if it wasn't David, who was killed, then where is his son? Eric and Nell find out that eight days ago, David took his first flight from LA to Cincinnati and then changed multiple flights till he arrived Abu Dhabi. Meanwhile, Kensi, Deeks, Sam, and Callen try to figure out why David went back to Afghanistan. They think that since David had access to a lot of intel, he probably went to make profit out of something he found.

Eric calls Callen and tells him that they found proof that David went to Abu Dhabi but haven't found out how he got into Afghanistan. Also, there was a $2500 deposit made into his account that originated in Dubai. Deeks and Kensi go to talk to David's girlfriend, Mary Clark. Mary is sure that there is no reason for David to go back to his Afghanistan. They tell Mary that David quit his job two weeks ago. Mary tells them that David got a new job in Alaska in an oil company. He changed his job as she is pregnant and that David thought that they are going to need more money now. He didn't tell his parents anything as he was waiting for the right time. Callen and Sam then talk to Jason Smith, a man who took two tours with David to Afghanistan.

Smith tells them that David was very sympathetic towards the Afghans and thought that they required a lot of help; but he was not a traitor. Smith thinks that if David went to Afghanistan without telling anyone then his first guess is that David was working for the CIA. Hetty gets off the phone and tells her team that Langley swears that David was not working for the CIA. Eric and Nell find out that David was hired by a company named ATAMA, which provides security and protection all over the world. It is a private security firm; high pay for a dangerous job and that is why David did not tell anybody about his new job. Hetty tells her team to turn the heat up at ATAMA security. Callen and Sam go to the security company.

The place is empty. They announce themselves and a guy begins shooting at them. Nice customer service! They manage to tackle the guy and take him to the office. His name is Danny Levian. Danny tells them that he only answers the phones and there is no one else in the office. There is another guy named Jones who also is in the office; but he hasn't seen him since last week. Callen tries to intimidate him and asks him about David. But Danny denies recognition. Meanwhile, Eric and Nell are at the ATAMA office. They soon figure that an ATAMA security is a scam; but that still doesn't explain why David was in Afghanistan. Eric and Nell update the team that four of the employees of ATAMA were former military and the rest are missing. These guys were never heard from after reaching Dubai.

They claim that they are a decade old company, Eric still hasn't been able to trace their origins before the last three months, and he still couldn't find out where they are based. So it is a glorified company for identity thefts; but someone still wired money to these guys. Why? It turns out that they aren't only stealing identities; they are stealing people and supplying them to people like Ahmadi. Callen and Sam tell Hetty that they want to go to Dubai. After a bit of reluctance, Hetty agrees. In Dubai, a man is waiting for someone named John Harris. Hetty, Nell, and Eric are watching them through the button cameras that are installed on the team. Sam stops Harris from reaching this man and Callen walks up to this guy as John Harris. But he doesn't buy it.

Deeks tases the man and Kensi takes him away on a wheel chair. But all this is done smoothly and no one in the crowded airport senses anything wrong. They bring the man to a desert and ask him about Ahmadi and threaten to kill him if he doesn't co-operate. Next, they drive to a torn down building. Callen is sitting next to that man with his gun aimed at him. Sam gets off the running vehicle and sneaks into that building. Callen introduces himself as John Harris. Ahmadi senses that something isn't right. Just then a woman (Kensi) arrives wearing a burkha and Deeks arrives in a cab. A gun fight ensues and the team has Ahmadi and Omar, the guy from the airport, at their gun point.

Hetty is happy with her team's work. The team is on their flight back home, and Deeks is showing his vacation photos to Kensi. She isn't interested in seeing them at all. She is glad when Sam shows interests in seeing those pictures and she gets up and sits next to Callen. Hetty is in the ops area and she turns on the surveillance screen. She sees that Kensi is sleeping on Callen's shoulders and Deeks is resting his head on Sam's shoulders. She laughs.

Summary: When four people are killed in an explosion at a diner, NCIS is brought into to investigate as they were linked to a classified project. Kensi finds herself sympathizing with a teenager that is related to the investigation.

The episode begins with three men at a diner, and a fourth one enters. They assume that he is the one who invited them; but it turns out that the new guy was invited as well. He confirms the code 'Echo 1' and then takes the seat. The waiter comes to take the order and the new guy orders in Spanish. But the waiter doesn't follow Spanish and so he translates it into English. One of them clicks a picture of the group and the last guy isn't too excited about being on a blog or the internet. Just then they notice that there is no one in the diner and seconds later the diner explodes. At the office, Deeks is running late and Kensi tells them that he went to Vegas last night.

She ratted him out! Deeks arrives and starts sparring with Sam when Callen receives a call from the ops. Eric briefs them about the latest case. He shows the team the pic the guy took at the diner and tells them that the four bodies were pulled out from the diner. Sam knows that the diner was closed down last year and now it has been open without the land owner's permission. So, who are these guys and who did they piss off? The group consists of a millionaire, a college student, a grandfather, and a guy who was licensed to drive a bull-dozer. Connections? They all followed a twitter account linked to the naval intelligence. Eric states that they all got invited to the diner which either means that there was an ambush created by the navy or their account is being hacked.

Why is the naval account on twitter? Navy was working on a project and the intelligence was hiring high IQ individuals to check the integrity of the project. Operation Wide Awake is classified and the four victims were the elite on the project and they were referred as Group Echo 1. Callen and Sam go to meet the man behind the project who also wants to brief the two of them. The guy tells them that on the surface, Wide Awake looks like a strategy game, but it is actually designed to check the possible ways a lone person or a group of people can pose a threat to the nation. He four people did not know each other and it is surprising that despite the precautions, their account id hacked. But he also reveals that the Echo 1 group consisted of five members; so the fifth member, Mike Hoffman is still out there.

Next, Deeks and Kensi go to Mike's apartment. Deeks plans to go to Vegas with Kensi. Initially she refuses but when he challenges her, she agrees. When they arrive the building, a girl runs past them. They go to the apartment and they see bloodstains on the wall. Kensi's jacket is also stained. Kensi follows the girl while Deeks heads to the apartment. Kensi loses the girl and Deeks finds a man lying dead on the floor. There is no id on the man. Deeks feels that given the circumstances, the girl looks pretty guilty. But Kensi says that they don't know anything about her. Callen and Sam arrive at the scene. Kensi finds out that this man isn't Hoffman.

Callen says that since Hoffman wasn't killed at the diner like the rest, maybe this man was sent to finish the job. Kensi sees a photograph pinned up on the board and states that the girl's name is Astrid and she clearly knew Hoffman. Eric calls in and states tha Hoffman was a loner. Nell confirms that the group did not know each other; so this makes Hoffman the next probable victim. Callen and Sam go to meet the head of Wide Awake, Mathers. He doesn't recognize the picture Sam and Callen show him. He tells them that he has been getting some help from one of his friends, George Toretto, who is an analyst at Pentagon. He was supposed to compare the pentagon's classified threat matrix results with the results of Wide Awake.

But the problem is Toretto didn't give him the results. They tell him that they are going to raise the security of the building. On their way out, they see Astrid at the security check. But when they call out to her, she runs and manages to get away. Nell tells Kensi and Deeks that the neighbors started seeing Hoffman and Astrid together a couple of months back but they kept it to themselves and nothing of importance was found in her apartment. Kensi thinks that she might be carrying a gun and she might have not been aware of security protocols. That is why when the metal detector went off, she ran. Eric says that Hoffman's laptop has been wiped clean by a pro but he did find Wide Awake's latest gaming application in it.

Callen and Sam find out that Torreto's bank account shows a deposit of $100,000, 5 days ago; all cash! Sam thinks someone is paying Toretto to sabotage the program. They arrive at Torreto's building. Someone seems to have tipped him as Toretto escapes and the guy who was following him, rams into a truck, and gets killed. At the office, Nell identifies the body in Hoffman's apartment, as Max Naylor with some priors and the driver who was killed also had some experience in demolition. Kensi states that Astrid might know something about Wide awake and hence she showed up at the naval office. Eric tells them that he has got a signal from Hoffman's phone. They dial the number and Astrid answers the call and then disconnects it.

Kensi is very empathetic towards Astrid. She talks to Astrid and tries to befriend her. Astrid mentions something about poker and tells her where Hoffman is at the moment. They lose her once again. Callen asks Nell to check Hoffman's financials and it appears that Hoffman has a bit of a gambling problem; seems like a motive! Hetty tells Nell to play operation Wide awake as she has a high IQ and she could figure out what those four men did, after which they got killed. The team then heads to the Casino from where the last withdrawals were made from Hoffman's account. They find Hoffman in the casino and get hold of him. Eric calls Callen and tells them that Mathers is gone. Next, Kensi and Deeks interrogate Hoffman and find out that Astrid was the one who used his laptop and also probably the one who played Wide Awake as she is extremely intelligent.

She also never lost a game of poker. He thinks she is his daughter. Sam doubts that Astrid suffers from asperger's. Callen points out that only two people had access to Hoffman's data; Toretto and Mathers. Nell tells Hetty that once the final level is reached, operation Wide Awake doesn't work. Hetty finds it unlikely that Mathers did not know about this. Callen and Sam go to Mather's house and find that someone broke into Mather's house. It is Toretto. Toretto tells them that Mathers is trying to kill him. He says that Hoffman realized that Wide Awake was a failure and he had emailed Mathers about it.

Mathers was worried that the rest of the group would learn that as well and so he lured them into the diner and killed them. Since Toretto was supposed to compare the results, he too knew about the failure. That is why Mathers paid him to keep quiet. But now, he doesn't know where Mathers is. Eric and Nell tell Deeks and Kensi that Astrid tried to reach Mathers. Kensi knows that if Mathers finds her, he will kill her. They figure out that Mathers is at the same casino where Hoffman was found.

The team arrives at the casino and they find Mathers. They follow him and they are shocked to find Astrid aiming her gun at Mathers. Kensi takes charge and convinces Astrid into lowering her weapon. Mathers is arrested. Case closed. Next, Kensi and Astrid bond over a game of poker. Hetty joins them. She asks Astrid whether she is feeling lucky.

Summary: It's an issue of national security as the NCIS team investigates whether the death of a U.S. senatorial candidate's staffer was an accident or a murder.

The episode begins with Clay talking on the phone with Tom telling him that he wants to talk to Monica. He tells him that he doesn't like the neighborhood as it feels like a war zone. As he is about to cross the road, he is run over by a car; it looks like a hit and run. Two people from the pizzeria Clay had just visited, witness the accident. Next, Callen, Hetty and Sam are working out and Nell realizes that Hetty is a political 'junkie'. She is about to discuss about the Presidential debate that will be held tonight and she says that she will if she is in front of the TV. The group warns Nell against discussing politics with Hetty.

Granger calls Callen. He is waiting for the team in ops. He shows them the recorded footage of Clay's accident and tells them that he died on impact. Clay worked for Monica Tenez, who is running for Senator. So, why is a hit and run case an NCIS case? Well, Granger shows them footage where they see that the car that hit Clay arrived at the scene and waited for Clay to appear. Granger wants them to find out if this murder had to do something with Tenez's Campaign and are the others in danger as well. And if it is, it is an issue of national security. Clay lived alone and Callen tells Kensi to check out Clay's house with Deeks. Kensi find that Clay was working on his resume; looks like he was planning to quit; maybe because of Tenez was slipping on the polls.

They wonder if his plans of quitting the campaign had something to do with his murder. Callen and Sam visit the campaign office. Eric and Nell brief them about the guys involved in the campaign. Jack Caldwell, the campaign manager. He has a 90% success rate and is disliked by his opponents. Rebecca Collins heads Tenez's fund raising campaigns. Andrew Ryan, head of Security. They then talk to Tenez who happens to know the names of all her employees. She tells them that Clay was liked by everybody. He used to mail receipts to the donors. She tells them that Clay wanted to talk to her about something and that he called last night; but when she was on the line, he wasn't there. This was around 9.30 at night. She knows she has a lot of enemies; and some of them wished that she would just 'go away'. As they leave, Lisa comes up to them and tells them that Clay was scared of something that he found in the mail.

She hands over a picture to them which has five faces and KILL written across them; Tenez is one of the faces. At the office, Nell knows that all the five faces are running for the Senate. Granger asks Nell and Eric to find out what they have in common. Sam and Callen show Tenez the picture and they advise her to ramp up the security. But, Ryan says that it is not necessary. They also want access to their campaign servers. Caldwell says that this will take a week. Deeks and Kensi go to meet Tenez's opponent, Senator Dick Osborne. He knows about the list as it is very difficult to keep secrets in this game. Osborne says that the reason he is able to beat Tenez is that she is too nice and that makes her weak in politics.

He also tells them that 'a little birdie?' told him that Tenez is planning to drop out of the race. At the office, the entire team watches Tenez on TV where she says that she is not going to back out from the race just because she is threatened. This one has some spirit! And Kensi thinks that the country needs a politician of her kind. So, Hetty says that they need to get her out of this. Eric and Nell find nothing in common between the five candidates (targets). Hetty feels that they should place some in the campaign office; someone smart and irresistible; and that is Kensi. Hetty knows that Kensi likes Tenez and so she needs to be extremely alert and not let her passion cloud her judgment. Kensi then goes to the campaign office and Caldwell likes her confidence.

She then accidentally (intentionally) drops coffee on Caldwell and he goes in to change his shirt. Taking advantage of the moment, she plugs in a drive on his computer and Eric downloads all the files. Kensi gets the job of a 'glorified envelope lick'. She needs to post receipts to all the donors. Nell finds a weird email sent to the office and one of them says that 'last night was just the taste of what is to come'. Eric traces the IP and Callen and Sam arrest the guy. His name is ED Mosker and he maintains a fringe blog, the Anarchist pastry book. He denies sending the last message. He feels that someone has set him up or sent that message using his screen name. Callen feels that he is telling the truth.

Deeks arrives and tells them that Caldwell has been making political promises for a good pay and these promises are in conflict with Tenez's position on those issues. At a campaign rally, Kensi gets a chance to meet Tenez. She introduces herself as the 'new girl'. Kensi looks around and sees a sniper at the top of the building and she quickly pushes Tenez to the ground. Tenez realizes she isn't an ordinary campaign worker and Kensi tells her that she is a Federal Agent. Tenez gets back in her car and drives away. Later, Tenez declares to her team that she is dropping out of the race as she doesn't think that her campaign is worth losing another life. She is going to declare it at the fund raiser tonight. Hetty feels that they have been focusing so much on the outside threat that they failed to check the in-house threat; the campaign itself!

At the fund raiser, Kensi learns that today's event was organized by Rebecca. Ryan tells her that Rebecca hasn't managed to raise enough funds and he is surprised that they have managed to keep the lights on for this long, given the current state of things. Nell, Erica, Hetty and Granger manage to get a peek into the financials of Tenez's campaign and they find that the funds are being reverted elsewhere. At the fund raiser, Kensi recalls the incident and realizes that Tenez wasn't the target at all; it was Rebecca. No one knew where she was except for the people in the office. Nell finds out that there are two signatories on the second account where the money is being reverted. One is Rebecca and the other is Lisa!

Lisa is after the money. At the fund raiser, Kensi takes Rebecca and Lisa to the kitchen. When she learns that it was Lisa behind all this, she aims at Lisa. Lisa too has a gun on her. Lisa tries to shoot at Kensi, but Kensi gets her shot at Lisa. Tenez arrives and Kensi tells her that it is all over. Tenez says that it is not and leaves. Next, Kensi arrives to meet Hetty. They discuss the case where Clay had found out about the money being reverted but didn't know that Lisa was behind it. And he turned to Lisa with his funding and Lisa took care of him. And she always planned to kill Rebecca.

Kensi leaves and it is time for the Presidential debate. Hetty picks up the phone and tells the person on the other side to direct the first question to the President!

Summary: When a CIA agent who worked with Sam Hanna over eight years ago seeks his help and is soon found dead of an apparent suicide, Hanna and Callen suspect foul play and a bigger conspiracy. Meanwhile, Deeks finds his inner "dog whisperer" with Kensi as the two go undercover and enter a dog show with a prized poodle.

The episode begins with Sam receiving a call from a blocked number. It is from a guy named Frank Turner and he needs his help. He tells Sam that he knows where to find him. Sam then arrives at an old building and enters a dark room full of books and files. He then sees the man hanging from the ceiling. Just then a poodle walks out from behind one of the desks. Next, Callen arrives and Sam tells him that they were together in the joint task force eight years ago. He has no clue as to why Turner called him. Sam wonders how he managed to hang himself as there is no ladder around. Callen suggests that he could have used one of the shelves; but Sam knows that Turner wasn't an athletic guy to use that shelf.

He wasn't a CIA field agent, but more of a researcher. Just then a record starts playing and lights get turned on. Sam mentions that Turner was a lot into crosswords and word games. Eric arrives and isn't too pleased to see the hanging man. That's why he doesn't leave ops. Eric tells them that the street cameras and the security cameras went out when the power went out. He then says that LADWP's computer system is designed to stop a cyber terrorist attack. Callen notices the blown door knob and wonders why someone would do that if he wanted to make this look like suicide. Nothing is adding up! the transformer had blown up and Callen asks Eric to check the camera on that site. Deeks and Kensi arrive. Deeks sees the poodle.

Sam knows that Turner was a highly trained CIA and was trained to live conspicuously. There is no way the poodle could be his. Nell is looking for any missing reports on a poodle. Deeks goes to send sometime with the poodle. Kensi finds it weird. Ever heard of the dog-whisperer? Next, Eric looks at all the papers and wonders if there is a computer he could search. Turner was a hard copy sort of a guy. Callen states that despite having retired, Turner was still gathering intel on Al-Qaida, North Korea etc. Nell tells Callen that she went through the camera footages before the power cut and noticed that Turner had a visitor that came over three times. She tracked down the visitor; it is Megan Hendley, a flight attendant.

At the office, Deeks has scanned the microchip on the poodle and finds out that his previous owner was Jason Young from Tarzana. Next, Sam and Callen go to Megan's house and they see her trying to escape. they follow her and she places a strong kick on Sam's chest and aims her gun at him. But Callen arrives and announces himself. She surrenders. Something tells Sam that she isn't just a flight attendant! Well, he is right. She is CIA and Callen confirms it. She tells them that Turner has worked for the Agency for the last two years and they were romantically involved. She knows that Turner is dead as she confirmed it from the morgue. Turner called her yesterday and left a message. He also felt that she was in danger.

Megan tells them that Frank felt he was being surveilled. She tells them that Turner was working on the Sinclair Project which was on during the end of the Cold war where the disclosure of sleeper agents took place between the Presidents of US and Russia. So, this project was a mission to find the sleeper agents and collect their weapons. She says everyone thought that Turner was mad and no one wanted to hear what he had uncovered. Callen asks Sam the mission he was working on with Turner. It was about an arms deal and he says that Turner was spooked by something. The ME calls Sam. In the morgue, she tells them that she didn't find any signs of a struggle and all signs indicate a suicide.

But the headline is that she found a strip of cloth in Turner's stomach. It has a code on it. They take the strip back to Turner's room and they find a baseball bat. Sam wraps the strip around the bat. This was the technique used to send secret war messages and Turner knew that Sam was studying warrior cultures! This message is indeed for Sam. Nell updates Deeks and Kensi about Chaucer, the poodle. He was flown to Paris twice to breed and Turner bought him a month ago and entered him into a dog show. This leads her to Robert Pierce, a dog groomer. Maybe Turner used Chaucer to get close to Pierce. Pierce is one of the contestants in the dog show. So, Deeks is now going to take Chaucer to the show.

Meanwhile, Eric tells Sam and Callen that Turner used a cipher but changed it a little. So there has to be a key and since he didn't use a computer and the message is for Sam, the key has to be somewhere around. At the dog show, Pierce's dog Uma puts up a great show and Deeks is having a tough time. Kensi talks to Pierce. But then we see that Chaucer puts up a great show. Kensi asks Pierce if they could let Chaucer breed with his dog. But he gets spooked and rushes to leave. But Kensi announces herself and stops him. Pierce then tells them that his ex-boyfriend was stalking him and so he hired a detective. He hired a detective who tells him that a man was watching his house.

The picture is Turner's. But Pierce is too young for Sinclair project. Eric then brings up another code and they infer that Turner was looking for Pierce's parents. Sam and Callen go to meet Pierce's parents and they talk to his father. His mother has Alzheimer's. After a short conversation, they leave, thinking that Turner was indeed paranoid and no way could that man be a Russian sleeper agent. Callen notices a vehicle nearby and they wait around the corner to see what's up. They see few men get down and walk towards Pierce's father's house; they are CIA. There is a gun fight and Pierce's father comes out and takes down two agents. The rest flee. Sam then tells him that they need to talk.

James tells them that he isn't a Soviet agent. Nell gets an ID on the man from the vehicle around Turner's loft; Yuri Kozlov. Sam thinks that he is FSB. So something Turner was investigating made the Russians nervous. Sam then notices that in one of the pictures, Koslov was talking to Isaac Sidirov; the arms dealer the task force was monitoring when Turner and Sam worked together. He was former FSB and is now an arms dealer. Hetty announces that there is a problem as all this proves that the Sinclair project is real. CIA and NSA are already interested in their investigation. So, why go after James? Callen knows that the FSB is never wrong. James agrees to talk but he needs immunity and safety for his wife. Hetty grants it.

James then takes Sam and Callen to a room. He uncovers a nuclear bomb bigger than the one used in Hiroshima. Carrying this heavy secret throughout one's life isn't easy! James then tells Sam that he was born in Somalia and was taken to Russia when he was nine. Then he was sent to Seattle with a new identity and profession. He was conditioned to detonate the bomb but when he had a family he was persuaded not to. The agents take James away. Next, Callen and Sam deduce that Sidirov was after the bomb which means there were more sleeper agents and more bombs. Sidirov was looking for the agents and Turner wanted Sam to find them before Sidirov does. They then figure out that Sidirov had found out about Turner and he was going to kill him.

Turner had the names in his head and he knew he would be tortured. So he did kill himself. They then work the code and get the names of the sleeper agents. And the bombs are in eight cities; the ones that were considered the largest in the 70's and the 80's. One of the guy's facial structures doesn't match his childhood photo. Hetty asks Nell to call the national Security Division of the FBI. She will talk to anyone who picks up the phone quickly.

Production Code: 406
Summary: As their investigation continues, evidence turns up that links the death to a group of Russian agents. Sam's deepest secret is at risk of coming out.

The episode begins with Hetty walking into the Operations and asking if they have all seven cities online. Eric says Dallas and Houston are audio only and the rest they have. Since the status on all the cities are Phase Line Green, she orders the command to be executed. We see that Deeks and Kensi are in San Diego. Kensi walks towards a house with a package and calls out to Mr. Andrews as his package has been delivered to her house. But no one is answering and Callen gives orders to barge in. The whole team gets into the house and find a man sitting on a chair; dead. All the seven cities have just one thing to report; TARGET DECEASED.

Looks like Andrews had been tortured and the FSBs made it look like they didn't find what they were looking for, when actually they might have found it. They are pros. Hetty tells them that all the other nine sleeper agents in the other cities have been tortured. So, Sidorov has seven different teams; seems like an expensive operation. So they need to haste up their investigation before Sidorov gets to the bomb. Granger is in the ops and they brief him about Sidorov, who is an arms dealer and how FSB hired him to investigate Turner. Sidorov learned about the sleeper agents and now has this brilliant idea to get to the bombs.

Since FSB inherited the KGB files, they had a good chance of accessing the list of the agents. Hetty thinks it is time to have a conversation with Arkady Kolcheck, a former KGB. Arkady tells Callen and Sam that Sidorov has a wine fetish and Callen asks Eric to checkout some wine storage facilities. Arkady gets worried when he learns that they have discovered a nuclear bomb.

Sam and Callen have and they realize that they are being tailed. They then manage to corner their tail and the guys draw guns each other. Sam knows one of the guys, Agent Snyder, CIA and was with him in the task force. They don't like each other. Snyder tells them that they need to get an undercover agent into Sidirov's gang and that too someone he trusts.

Sam says that they will co-operate only if this is a joint mission; else no deal. Snyder agrees. In the ops, Sam tells Nell and Eric to call him first before they call Granger. Sam says that this is personal and the two don't want him to explain. Callen wants to know what this is all about. Sam tells him that he, Turner and Snyder were together in the task force. Three other agents were put undercover to get to Sidirov. But they didn't get out alive. Snyder has a plan but he is too careless about the lives of his agents. Sam says that they need to get close to Sidirov first so that they can run this. But Callen knows that Granger won't keep this from the CIA and he will bring in Sidirov as soon as he knows about Sidirov.

At Andrew's place, Nell tells Deeks and Kensi that there are no storage facilities in the nearby area. Deeks sees that the cops have found heavy glass lifters in the belongings. What is a teacher doing with those? Kensi asks Nell to pull up the house permits. There are no basements. Deeks has an idea and he starts stomping the floor and asks the rest to do the same. One part of the floor sounds different and they use the suckers to lift that piece of the floor. In the ops, Nell and Eric track an associate of Sidirov; Dmitri Greshnev. They then scanned the hotel footage where Greshnev is staying and they find one where Sidirov arrives at the hotel. Granger arrives and asks them to get in touch with Snyder.

Just then Kensi calls saying that they found something; it is a room under the floor. Deeks says that it is a good thing that they found Sidirov; as he has got at least one bomb from Andrews'. Granger wants them to inform the FBI about one missing bomb. Granger wants to inform Snyder. Eric distracts him with the working of a 35 year old nuclear bomb while Sam talks to Hetty. Sam wants them to place the agent so that they can keep the agent safe. The duo tells Hetty that they need more time. Eric tells Granger that the bomb is definitely functional. The duo is planning to meet Arkady again. Granger asks Hetty what is going on.

The duo asks Arkady about any man who wants to kill Sidirov and he tells them about Kirkin, who control heroin trade in West Russia and Sidirov killed his brother. Sam asks the guy who Kirkin used for hitting US and he tells him that his name is Varlamov; a professional and proficient guy who takes care of Kirkin's dirty business. They get to Victor Varlamov and tell him that he killed a girl who his boss impregnated and wanted to rid of. Sam pulls a fake attack and Victor takes that moment to flee. Kensi gets a pic of him running and Deeks tackles him on his way out of the building. But they are all stumped when they see Granger. Granger tells Sam that he has got his back. Hetty is going down the line for him and so is he.

Sam asks Callen if Quinn is ready. Who is Quinn? Well, she is what all this is about. Next, Callen is on the roof with a rifle and Granger is outside the hotel. Deeks enters Sidirov's room and bugs it. Callen fires shots on the ground and Sidirov runs into the hotel. Two men are headed towards Callen and Kensi. Callen walks past them and Kensi is on the phone telling the cops that she saw a man running down the stairs. The men check her phone and see the video of Victor running down the stairs. In the ops, they see that Sidirov recognizes Victor from the video and wants Kirkin dead. He wants his lieutenant to hire a hit-man. Sam says that they need to get in touch with Quinn fast.

He then checks with Nell who is preparing a rock solid fake for Sam. Sam tells Callen that this is what he was afraid of. Next, we see that Sam is walking out of a prison and gets into a car and kisses the woman waiting in the car. Someone is clicking his pictures. Quinn and Sam are in bed and Sam says that it has been a long time since they made love like that. Guess marriage changes everything. Sidirov's men barge into the room searching for Quinn. Later, we see that Quinn and Sam meet Sidirov and Quinn introduces Sam as David Forman and her partner and he is very good. Sidirov tells her the job is to kill Kirkin and he doesn't want to see Sam as he doesn't like him. He hates sharing his women. Sam walks away.

Next, Sam is frustrated and is punching at everything in the gym. He hasn't heard from Quinn. In the ops, the team learns that there are three bombs with Sidirov now. Granger arrives with the news that a woman's body has been found. But we then see that the dead woman is Anna, the girl Sidirov was travelling with. Snyder thinks that Sidirov didn't want his style to be cramped since Quinn is back. Sam receives a message and Snyder knows it's Quinn telling him that she is fine; and he is right! Sidirov is on a flight but Snyder knows that he will be back as he gave Quinn a quarter of a million in advance; won't be for nothing.

And then the fun begins. But later, they get into an argument about Quinn and Sam bashes up Snyder. Deeks and Kensi are lost. Callen tells them that Sam and Quinn worked together in the same task force and they fell in love. Next, Sam is home with Quinn and he says that he thought that marriage would put an end to all of this. We see that Quinn is a cop and his wife. She says that returning to this makes her feel alive. And they need to get Sidirov first. Sam agrees and he removes his wedding ring.

Production Code: 407
Summary: The NCIS: LA team heads to the beach to question the possible link between a surfer, an Internet video and a dead Naval tech scientist. Meanwhile, as Callen and Hanna investigate the victim's intelligence connections, Deeks and Kensi go undercover to catch their suspects and some waves.

The episode begins with the driver of an ambulance reporting a case of multiple fractures and pulmonary contusions. The ambulance is taking the victim to the hospital and a van pulls up in front of the ambulance. A man gets out and shoots the ambulance driver. A man who is standing next to his car clicks pictures of all this on his phone. The shooter then shoots the ER guy sitting with the victim. He then pulls out a knife, works on the victim and leaves. The guy who is taking the pictures hides. At the precinct, everyone is waiting for food and Deeks has gone to pick it up.

Deeks comes with a hazelnut and mango chutney sandwiches and the others run to the kitchen to get some food; whatever is remaining that is. Eric calls them to the ops. Hetty tells the team that the victim was a Civilian Naval technology scientist Kevin Stone. He was already in a critical condition and the attacker used the knife of him for some kind of a personal touch. This was shot on a smart phone and uploaded online on a file sharing website. Stone was looking into some surveillance project for a while now and he is single and has no priors. Callen and Sam are supposed to meet Stone's supervisor at the naval lab. Deeks and Kensi need to work on the report and Eric and Nell need to trace the id of the man who shot and posted this video.

Callen and Sam meet Andrew Hughes and he tells them that Stone was working very hard off late as he was looking forward to attend a conference in London. Stone was developing tools to streamline the surveillance process; nothing sensitive and most of their work is pretty mundane. In the coroner's lab, Rose Carlyle enquires about Nate and Kensi tells her that since he is undercover, they don't know much about his personal life. Rose then tells them that there was something implanted inside Stone and it seems to have been removed by the killer. They inform Callen and he confronts Hughes. They want to know what Stone was working on.

He tells them that Stone was working on a high end surveillance technique and if it gets in the hands of the enemies, it will set their program back by five years. Now that is not mundane work! Nell tells the team that the technology is called ISEEP. It is a small device about the size of an aspirin and some motors are as small as a grain of sand. Hetty tells them that the military has been developing this technology for years. The enemies could never manufacture a device like this but they could develop technology to render it ineffective. They find out that Stone was going to London; but he was also going to make a stop in Istanbul. The smart phone shooter is Lance Eddings and he lives in a small apartment in Hollywood. He was abandoned by his parent at the age of 3 and was raised in foster cares.

Kensi and Deeks go to Lance's apartment and Sam and Callen search Stone's house. Callen learns from Stone's laptop that he was into day trading and had accounts with several brokerages. And his recent transactions show that he was pretty desperate. He was on painkillers and antibiotics prescribed two weeks ago. And the doctor is Adam Keller from Westside Beautification Center. Kensi and Deeks go to Lance's apartment. Kensi looks at some magazine and states that he seems to be into conspiracy theories. He is also a surfer. Time to go surfing! Sam and Callen go to a clubhouse to find Adam Keller and they find him in his car with a bullet in his head. Eric and Nell tells Hetty that Homeland has flagged a Turkish diplomat Demir, arriving in the States and has Iranian agents working for him.

The Turkish government is aware of the accusations but since Demir is highly respected, their hands are tied. Deeks tells the team that Lance spends his weekend with the famous surfer Sonny Amador and his boys. He was big at one time but then a knee injury laded him on the sidelines and he was then arrested for some low level crimes like weed possession etc. Hetty tells them that Lance is their last chance and so Deeks and Kensi will have to go surfing and meet Sonny so that they could get to Lance. Deeks does a good job befriendng sonny and he agrees to buy him and his guys' beer. Kensi arrives at the bar and Deeks flirts with her. He buys her an expensive drink; double. Eric tells Hetty that forensics reports say that they found aluminum silicate at both the crime scene and when this is mixed with water, it forms clay.

Nell gets a hit on Demir's credit card and gets the name of the restaurant he is in. Sam and Callen go to the restaurant and talk to the owner. He admits that Demir is a family friend. He needed his car and so he gave it to him. At the bar, one guy recognizes Deeks as Deeks had arrested him a while back. Lance walks in. this could be trouble. Before the guy could blow his cover, Deeks punches him. Kensi follows Lance who runs towards his van and he drives away. In the ops they trace the van to a girl named Freedom Weinberg. Deeks and Kensi get out of the bar. They get hold of Lance, and bring him in for interrogation. Lance agrees to help and leads them to a guy named Martinez. But Eric and Nell find out that Martinez is a small time drug dealer and has an alibi that he was someplace else during Stone's murder.

Lance is protecting someone. Lance then tells Deeks and Kensi that he wants to talk to Sonny. Eric informs the team that moments ago Sonny's body was found by the cops; shot to death. They realize that Sonny was connected to this and lance knows something. This time Callen goes in to talk to Lance. He shows Lance the picture of Sonny's dead body and he tells him that this is because of him as he is protecting the man who killed Stone in the ambulance. Callen manages to get Lance to talk. He tells him that he called Sonny after he saw what happened and Sonny told him to send him the video. Sonny planned to extort some money from the killer and asked Lance to follow him. Only a part of the video was posted online to show the killer that they could screw him if they want.

Lance admits that he led them to the wrong guy so that Sonny could go to the killer and get the money for the video. But Sonny ended up losing his life. Eric then downloads the entire video from Sonny's cell phone and the killer is Clint Sears. He is connected to the Al-Qaida family. Sears and Stone frequented the same restaurant over the past month. Sam feels that Sears is the middle man between Stone and Demir. Sears must have been following Stone to make sure that he got to the airport and saw that he got into an accident. So he followed the ambulance and cut the device out of him. Eric and Nell hack into Demir's and Sears' computers and they figure out where both of them are headed. Nell then finds out that Sears is into ceramic classes and has entered a lot of competitions.

That explains the aluminum silicate. Hetty is sure that the exchange will take place somewhere at the classes as Sears would like to be on familiar grounds. Demir is headed towards Malibu and Eric figures out a way to slow him down; he hacks into the traffic system and slows down the traffic and Demir is stuck. Sam, Callen, Deeks and Kensi go to the ceramic classes and they find Sears hiding there. A gunfight ensues and Sears is shot. They retrieve the device from Sears. Next, the fantastic four are on the beach; Callen and Sam waiting for food and Deeks and Kensi are surfing. Hetty calls Callen and tells him that the device is back to the naval base and Demir is on his way back to Turkey and the CIA is keeping a close watch on him.

Summary: The NCIS:LA team questions the motive behind the murder of a retired CIA agent turned millionaire and in the process also questions what Hetty knows about the case.

The episode begins with two girls walking out of a room of a rich, old man. Dex calls him and tells him that Seattle is breathing down his neck. We learn that this old guy is a secret agent and that the ongoing lawsuit would not really affect his financial status as much. He then disconnects the call and goes to the balcony to enjoy the ocean view. He tries to light his cigar with his lighter and his head gets blown off! At the HQ, we learn that Deeks had borrowed an album from Sam and Callen tells Kensi that borrowing anything from Sam is not a good idea. Deeks tells Sam that his dog ate the album.

He tries to give Sam an mp3 player and Sam debates that vinyl has a richer sound. Eric whistles; Hetty wants them in ops ASAP. Nell briefs the team about the recent death; Victor Potter, an ex-CIA who was killed in an explosion at his beach house. The security footage is from the neighboring house. The explosion was caused by the lighter. Potter retired three years ago and then made millions by consulting directors, gaming companies, etc. The Black Bag is his game. Taking up this case was Hetty's decision. Then why didn't she brief them? Callen tries to talk to Hetty but she blows him off.

He finds this weird and Sam tells him that something is always up with Hetty. The four go to Potter's beach house. Sam thinks it is ammonium nitrate. Callen figures out that Potter had company. The computer has a firewall so they will need Eric's help. They then get hold of the tablet in which Potter had recorded some kinky videos of the girls who gave him 'company'. Deeks recognizes one of them; Nicole and she works for LA's high class escort services, Seven Star Oasis. Nell runs the faces but none of them are listed; maybe they are here illegally. Kensi and Deeks go to Seven Star and Kensi poses as someone looking for work. Wendy who takes a liking for her tries to get fresh with her.

Meanwhile Deeks transfers the database from Wendy's computer and they manage to get out of there. Nell goes to get Hetty as there is a message for her. Hetty is looking at a picture of Potter and Granger together. Callen is there and Hetty senses his presence. He wants to know what is in the box. She tells him that it is the past which is securely locked away. Nell arrives telling Hetty that there is a message from Granger. Nell then tells Callen that they have ided the girls who were with Potter. Callen wants Nell to keep an eye on Hetty for him. Callen and Sam then arrive at a house and they find two bodies of the girls who Nell just ided. One of them is still breathing. They then talk to Nicole.

She tells them that one of their clients wanted them to meet Potter; something like a side business where the girls could make more money without involving their agency. The client didn't seem to care about them sleeping with Potter. He only cared about some prank with Potter's lighter. The client then came back to their place to pay them; by trying to kill them. Nicole tells them that his name is Ruiz. She tells them that Ruiz wasn't a prick like the others and she sort of liked him, till the time he tried to kill them. At the ops, they learn that Ruiz does anything for people with money. They get a location on Ruiz. Callen wants to know where Hetty is; but Nell has no idea.

Granger arrives and tells Callen that Hetty's whereabouts are her own concern. This means that he knows where Hetty is. But he doesn't divulge anything. The four then go to the café where Ruiz is. A woman who is sitting in a van tells Ruiz that he has company; she sees the team walking towards Ruiz. She tells him to stay where he is. She then drives towards Ruiz and shoots him and drives away. They lost the van. Eric too could not get anything as everything happened too quickly. Callen is upset. They defied a direct order to stand down from Granger and now they have nothing to show for. Hetty tells them to take a case and then she disappears and then Granger is all over them and he too disappears. A lot seems to be missing! Callen thinks he knows where to find the answers.

They tell Nell to open the safe and take out the box as the answers are in that box. At first Nell refuses to do it but then later on she agrees. They take out the box and look at the picture. It appears to be taken about a decade ago, somewhere in the Middle East. In that picture, Hetty is with Potter, Granger and a third man. Looks like Hetty is gone looking for the third guy. Nell tells them that the third guy is Barry Brooks, another CIA. They all know each other from Afghanistan from the 80's. And then they worked together for the CIA-NCIS task forces. Brooks seems to have had some conflicts with Potter as he accused Potter of embezzling their missions for profits.

Brooks was filing a multimillion dollar lawsuit against Potter asking for his share in the profits from the video game. Potter emailed Hetty asking for advice; this happened the previous day. So, Hetty must have visited Brooks. They go to Brooks' place and find him dead. There are bloody drag marks on the floor and Brooks has written 'Nogales Bo' with his blood. Nogales is a town in Arizona; it is also Spanish for walnuts. But what is BO? It looks like the old man took beatings from a couple of men. Sam then sees a trip wire and pulls a drawer to find explosives in it. This was meant for Hetty. Later, the bomb squad disables the device. The team then brainstorms about what is going on and why is Hetty making it so difficult for them. Callen finds a walnut on Hetty's table.

He points out that Hetty is allergic to nuts. So what is it doing on her table? He tells Eric to search Hetty's computer and pull up Hetty's last search. Eric finds out that her last search was for Casa De Nogales, a safe house that was used for any government organizations that needed it. They go to the safe house. Hetty, Granger and Dale Farmer are there. Farmer is CIA and used to be Sam's recruiting leader. They tell them that after Potter's death and Brooks being silent, they thought staying at the safe house would be a better idea. Hetty doesn't know who is after them as they had made a lot of enemies over the years. They tell them about Brooks' death. Just then five shooters arrive and open fire; Farmer is hurt. The woman who killed Ruiz is one of them.

The team manages to shoot down all of them and as the woman tries to drive away once again, they get her as well. She tells Callen her name is Fatima Khan. She is about to shot him, when Hetty takes her shot and kills Fatima. Hetty knows Fatima Khan. Her father used to be a cab driver and when she was 12, her father started driving for Noreen Haseeb, a founding member of Al-Qaida. Haseeb had a meeting and Fatima's father was driving Haseeb to the meeting when the cab exploded.

CIA was behind this explosion. Fatima then became a computer engineer and then she became a part of ISI-CIA task missions. This gave her access to classified files. She had her own agenda of avenging her father's death. she wasn't born a killer, they made her one. Later, Granger and Hetty have a drink. Granger tells her that Potter planted the bomb and it was her finger on the detonator.

Summary: The NCIS:Los Angeles team investigates the strange and brazen heist executed by gunmen in costumes that could directly impact the U.S. economy. Meanwhile, as Deeks testifies on a case, Granger insists on partnering up with a very reluctant Kensi.

The episode begins with a robbery at the LA Live Center. The robbers are wearing costumes of a clown, a gorilla, etc. They rob the van, shoot the guards guarding the goods and then blow it off. At the precinct, Sam is doing some paper work and Callen and Kensi didn't show up on time as they did not want to do it. Deeks is not to be seen. Granger arrives and tells Kensi that Deeks is testifying on a particular case and so he would be assisting Kensi on field. Oh No! Eric signals them to arrive at the ops. Nell and Eric then show them the footage of the robbery. Thanks to lots of traffic cameras; they got a lot of footage and details of what went down.

One of the guards has survived, despite a head injury and the cargo was 100 gold bars, the kind used in international markets, banks and IMF. And the total worth is 70 million dollars!! Hetty arrives and tells the team that the gold is an interest payment on a trillion dollar loan they have from China for a particular project. So, they need to recover it. Sam and Callen reach the crime scene and take a look around. It seems to be an odd place to conduct a heist. The robbers have left nothing behind. They recreate the scene. Sam finds blood nearby and they follow the trail and Sam freaks out when he sees the clown (who was one of the robbers) lying dead in the trash can.

So, our strong man is scared of clowns!! At the ops, Nell tells them that this clown is Clive Mayfield; he has done time for armed robbery. They have also pulled up information on Clive's associates. Kensi is on her way to talk to the injured guard. Eric and Nell see that Sam is missing and Callen tells them that he is dealing with something. Eric knows the 'thing'; it is coulrophobia, fear for clowns. Nell asks Eric if he has some irrational fears and he begins to tell her about this one nightmare where he arrives at the ops and it is dark. But someone is there and is holding something in the lap.

But before he could finish the story, Hetty arrives and tells them to get back to work if they don't want their paychecks to bounce this week. Sam and Callen go to check the clown's house. It looks like he left in a hurry. They find an empty glass cage which is used for holding a large case; and it is empty! They don't want to look anymore and they leave! Kensi goes to the hospital to talk to Jack Williams. He was shot in the head and he tells her that he doesn't remember anything. He says that he doesn't even recognize his wife and children. Kensi hands over her card to him and leaves. Granger doesn't believe Jack completely.

He wants a guard outside the room. Kensi thinks that Granger doesn't believe Jack but Granger tells her that there is a possibility that the robbers would come back to finish an incomplete job. Nell calls Callen and tells him that she got a hit on a clown costume. He tells her to give it to Kensi; Callen knows that Sam wouldn't be comfortable in following that lead. They also tell her to check snake supplies for a big snake. Granger and Kensi go to the costume store and ask the owner to hand over the surveillance tapes. At the ops, Eric and Nell tell the team that the guy who bought the costumes is Duncan Walsh and he too has a long rap sheet; somewhat similar to Clive's.

Callen, Sam and Kensi go to the last address listed under Walsh. They find three bodies on the floor; looks like they were executed. There are all of them except Walsh; the one they are looking for! They identify the three dead men as the robbers at the Live Center. Duncan was the cargo van driver. Kensi tells Callen and Sam that Duncan was spending a lot of late buying dinners, jewelry and women's lingerie. They check his phone list and find a lot of calls made to Gloria Bryant. Kensi goes to meet Gloria and asks her about Duncan's whereabouts. Gloria tries to escape through the backdoor but Kensi had predicted this.

She then shows Gloria the pictures of the dead men and tells her that Duncan could be next and that she has to tell her where he is. At the office, Hetty tells Granger that despite Deeks isn't an NCIS, he is a part of her team and if anything happens to him, she would take it personally. Sam, Callen and Kensi go to a parking lot where they find Duncan in a car; dead. They also find the gold in the back of the car. Weird. Callen thinks that he was expecting something more festive. At the office, Hetty congratulates her team. But Sam tells her that there is one more man unaccounted for and maybe he is the one who killed all of the others. This was too easy. Something is not right. They drill one of the gold bars; it is tungsten. So, who would want to steal fake gold? Callen thinks that maybe they didn't know that the gold was fake.

They need to find out who is buying so much of tungsten. Hetty fears that if the word gets out that America's banking reserves are compromised, it would create havoc. This seems to be like a terrorist attack on the American economy and if this gets out then their economy would be finished; forever. Now, the guy who was wearing the gorilla mask is still missing. Nell asks Eric to run the tungsten with the smelting facilities. Kensi has a strange encounter with Granger and according to Sam everything about Granger is strange. Nell asks Sam if he still needs to know about the reptile supplies and he says that he doesn't need that anymore. Eric arrives and declares that one Carlisle Industry received a half ton shipment for tungsten last week. They go to Carlisle Industry and Kensi renders the guy at the front desk unconscious and they three go in.

They see that there are four guys inside and they manage to get one by one. Sam has a close call with the fourth guy who is smelting the tungsten and Callen and Kensi shoot him. They find the identical gold bars lying around. They also find the gorilla costume that the man was wearing during the robbery. Next, Kensi pays Jack a visit at the hospital and is glad to know that he is recovering. At the HQ, Eric tells the trio that they got a hit on the man in the gorilla mask; he is an Iranian, Jahveed Abbasi. He is involved in a lot of terrorist activities. This was an attack on the economy and they stopped it! Hetty is proud but she also wants them to keep this whole thing a secret. This should never get out. They all leave for the day.

Summary: Callen, Sam, Kensi and Deeks spend Christmas aboard an aircraft carrier investigating the death of a fellow NCIS special agent. Meanwhile, Nell and Eric make the most of the holidays back at headquarters and Hetty takes a trip.

The episode begins on an aircraft carrier where two officers get into a fight. The XO is not happy and wants a full report on it. Next, we see that one of the officers is found dead. At the precinct, Kensi tells Deeks that she has no plans this year as she is planning to spend Christmas with her mother. Deeks asks her to get her mom along for snowboarding and also spend some time in his cabin. Nell arrives and tells them that they are being called to the ops. At the ops, Eric tells the team that NCIS special agent Jason Niles who was afloat was found dead and the COD is blunt force trauma.

There is one suspect, Petty officer Simon Allen is an intelligence specialist and according to the last report Niles was keeping an eye on Allen for erratic behavior. Also, Allen got into a fight with Sergeant Jefferies on the day the body was found and both men are tested positive for cocaine use. Hetty has arranged for all of them to be flown out on to the ship; looks like Christmas is going to have to wait. Hanna and Kensi are dressed like marine officers and Deeks is a civilian contractor. Deeks is not too happy about his geeky undercover but when he learns that he will have to cut his hair in order to be a marine, he chooses to be a contractor. Sam is not too happy about going on the ship. And it is not Christmas; it is Sidirov that is bothering him.

What if he comes back when they are away? Callen tells him that Michelle will handle him. Next, the team lands on the ship and they are welcomed by Petty officer Smalls. Deeks who is posing as an analyst starts flirting with her. Lieutenant Abernathy shows Kensi the way to her bunk. Callen interrogates Allen and Jefferies. Both of them deny using cocaine. Jefferies says that he doesn't know Niles and that he learned about him when he was reported dead. Allen tells Callen that he saw Niles just once when Niles intervened in an argument that he was having. The argument was about some music.

Allen then tells him that he was jogging around the deck before the fight took place and that since there was some ongoing work, he was on the lower deck. Smalls is showing Deeks around and he manages to slip away. He then goes to the site where the dead body was found and he finds something. He then ends up in a fight with two seamen and Sam arrives and tells him that he will take it from there. Deeks tells Sam that he found evidence which might indicate that Niles was killed elsewhere on the ship and then his body was dragged down to where it was found. Nell and Eric update Callen about the two officers who got into a fight with Deeks; officer Lambert and Officer Wilson. Also, Lambert worked with Allen for Intelligence.

Deeks then explains to Callen and Sam that he found spinach on the site and it is impossible that it fell there accidentally as the site is on the other end of the ship from where the mess is. But it is even more difficult for someone to drag the body from one end of the ship to another! Abernathy is showing Kensi around when they see that Master Chief is behaving erratically and is trashing down things with a wrench in his hand. Kensi and Abernathy tackle him. But later Sam tells Kensi that the wrench is not evidence as it does not match the wound on Niles' head. Kensi tells Sam that the chief's altered state of mind was caused due to cocaine toxicity. The XO is not happy about the allegations against the Master Chief and he tells Callen that he trust the master chief and that his men are drug addicts.

He then tells Callen that the carrier is a dangerous place and that he should be careful. The four hold a secret meeting. Sam tries to justify the XO's behavior as his career is on the line and he cannot be blamed. Kensi says that someone smuggled drugs on board and is dealing and maybe Niles was close to find out who is doing this and that might have gotten him killed. Callen points out that all the three of them denied using it. They decide that they might have to search the ship; but that is difficult! So, Callen decides that if he portrays that he is getting close to the person dealing in drugs, maybe the perp would get nervous and make some mistake. Callen interrogates Master Chief Brown, and Brown tells him that he does not drink, smoke or do drugs. He has to set an example for those under him.

He says that there is no way he can explain his violent behavior. At the ops, Nell has brought some elf's costume for Eric. But Eric refuses to wear it as he thinks it would be disastrous if Sam, Callen or Deeks saw him wearing it. Nell wanted to do this for the children and she is now upset. On the ship, Callen tells Sam that Brown has the cleanest service record he has ever seen and he feels that someone is trying to set him up. Deeks is still snooping around and he finds Lambert is fixing the refrigerating system which keeps crashing. Deeks goes to check the stores. He sees the pipe valve and assumes that Niles could have hit his head on that. He clicks pictures and just then someone comes from behind and tries to choke Deeks. Deeks is unconscious and he collapses to the ground and the man (whose face is not shown) runs. Eric tells Sam and Callen that he is not able to get in touch with Deeks. And he also confirms that the picture that Deeks sent him match the murder weapon. Callen tells Sam to alert Kensi. He then goes to Brown as he feels that the Master Chief knows the ship the best.

They arrive at the site where Deeks clicked the pictures but there is no sign of Deeks. Sam questions Lambert and Lambert tells him that Deeks was snooping around a while ago. Just then they see that the guy who was supervising the refrigeration repair is walking away with the trash can and he doesn't stop despite being asked to. A gun fight ensues and the man is killed. Deeks falls out of the trash can. But there is still no sight of the drugs. Deeks says that the refrigeration was being tampered with so that the veggies could rot and this could throw off the K9s. but Sam knows that this is not easy. They then check a wall and it is freshly painted. Callen scrapes off a bit and finds that the cocaine is mixed in the paint! These guys are good!!

Next, Eric educates the team about the dead man; his name is Leonard Wall. He is a contractor and he used the Navy to move his drugs. Case Closed. Next, Eric tells the team that he has managed to get tickets only for the 27th of December and this means that they are going to have to spend Christmas in the sea. Hetty is off for vacations and there is nothing Eric can do to help. On the ship, Brown thanks the team for all their help. Just the Hetty arrives. She was on her way to her vacation spot and she decided to make a pit stop. She has made arrangements for only for Sam so that he can go back to Michelle and spend his Christmas with her. He is ecstatic. He sweeps Hetty in his arms and kisses her. He leaves.

Everyone is happy for Sam. At the office, Eric is unhappy to see the empty precinct. Nell arrives wearing her elf costume. She then kisses Eric; well they are standing under the mistletoe. She wishes him happy holidays and is about to leave. Eric rushes to get his elf costume.

Production Code: 411
Summary: A former defendant of Deeks is targeted for discovering information that could dismantle a lucrative car shipping operation with links to a global terrorist ring. Meanwhile, the NCIS: LA team tackles the large-scale stolen car operation from the inside when Kensi goes undercover in an auto body shop.

The episode begins with a woman speeding in her car, continuously looking at the rear view mirror; she is tensed and scared. She calls Deeks. Her name is Jenny and Deeks wonders why she is calling in the middle of the night. A terrified Jenny tells him that there are some SUVs that are being smuggled outside the US and they are being used for various crimes in Asia. Just then another car follows her and she is totally scared. She picks up something from the dash board and crushes it under her feet. She asks for help but before she could say anything more, her car rams into something and the line goes dead.

At the precinct the next day, Callen declares his resolution of staying of caffeine and Sam mocks him by saying that 92% of people can never keep up their resolution. Deeks who has been in the office for hours, calls them to the ops for their next case. They hear the recorded conversation. They then check the security camera footage where they see two men abducting Jenny after the crash. Deeks was her public defender when she was charged for some misdemeanors. But later when Deeks became a detective, she became sort of an informant. And she was right about the crimes in South-East Asia. Hetty tells them that one the cars belonged to a soccer mom in Beverly Hills and two weeks later, it blew up a government building in Philippines. Maybe Jenny was dismantling international terrorism.

Her daughter Talia is a sophomore at Whitley University. Callen and Sam go to check Jenny's vehicle. The officer says that Jenny is a drug addict who is out on parole and once she is found, she will go back in. they check the car and it is filthy. Looks like she lived in it! Callen finds a list of three vehicles and their models. They also find last night's dinner. Sam finds a dead USB thumb drive under the gas. It is the same one that we saw she crushed under her feet. Deeks and Kensi go to the University to meet Talia. She does not remember Deeks. She is pissed with her mother and she says that she last spoke to her mother two years ago. She also states that every day she wakes up prepared to hear that her mother is dead. She cannot help them in anyway. Eric and Nell try to revive the USB; but no luck.

But they have figured out the logo that was on the take away car. The car was stolen. Sam and Callen go to meet Jaime to get some information on stolen car. Deeks and Kensi go to meet Mrs. Allison Hall who lives in a HUGE mansion. It was her car that was used to kidnap Jenny. They talk to her and learn that there was a break in where some jewelry was taken; but they did not notice their spare car key missing from the kitchen. She does look a little uneasy. Kensi wants the security camera footage. She is getting late for an appointment and she asks them to be quick. Eric goes through Allison's CC statements and Nell figures out that she is a shopaholic. Callen and Sam bring Jamie to the interrogation room and they ask him about the SUVs.

He doesn't want to tell a name as he will be killed. They tell him that they will pay him and that Kensi will have his back. Well, that sounds good! They ask him to take Kensi as a new member for their crew. Next, Jamie and Kensi arrive at the place where the stolen cars are boosted up and he introduces Kensi to Esposito, the guy who runs the show. Esposito is pissed at Jamie for giving out his location and profession and Kensi proves her worth. Deeks is across the street trying to sell old phones. Kensi totally wins Esposito's trust; obviously with the help of her team who help her use a fake app and also stage a fake police chase where she smoothly loses the cops! Eric and Nell tells Callen and Sam that Talia was lying about not being in touch with her as her electronic footprints narrate a different tale.

She has something to hide! Eric tells Sam and Callen to check on Talia. They find Talia walking at a distance and a man in a hoodie arrives and punches her and tries to grab her bag. Sam and Callen rush to the scene and the hoodie manages to escape. Talia tells Sam that now they are going to kill her mother. later, Talia tells them that the men told her to bring her laptop to the park; else her mother would be killed. she feels that thanks to Sam and Callen, she would surely be killed now. Sam assures her that since those guys couldn't get what is on the laptop, there is a chance that Jenny would be still alive. She says that she last spoke to her mother day before yesterday and that she has been sober for three years.

Eric and Nell tell the guys that there has been an email sent to Talia by Jenny which is password protected; but it is an audio file and not easy to decipher. There is another email which says that the key is in the stack. Callen thinks there is a message in that as to how to access the audio file. Also, there is a hit on the phone call made to Talia. At home, Callen manages to find the key; it is the audio from a birthday card which is kept in a stack. They access the email and send it to Eric. Eric sends the information on the guy; Gonzalo Vargas; he works for a landscaping company in Beverly Hills. We also see that he is the same guy Kensi and Deeks pass by while visiting Allison. Esposito pays Kensi 1.5k for her brilliant work and he wants to hook up with her. She refuses.

Eric tracks down Vargas' location. It seems like he is about to visit Esposito's auto shop. Ouch. Eric alerts Deeks as Vargas had seen them at Allison's mansion. Kensi tries to leave but Esposito stops her to introduce her to his boss Vargas. She tries to hide her face and Vargas thinks he has seen her before. He recognizes her. Deeks asks for backup. He then enters the store and Vargas recognizes his as Kensi's partner. They are about to be taken to the yard where the 'four' bodies will be gotten rid of. Sam and Callen arrive and a gun fight ensues. All the bad ones are killed. They then go to the yard where according to Jenny's manifest, three SUVs are supposed to be shipped to Singapore. Using thermal satellites, Eric traces the container that shows a body but it is not moving.

They find Jenny in the trunk of the car. They revive her and she is glad to see her daughter Talia. She had done some booking work for Vargas and she waited so that she had a full story. Deeks always told her never to come to him with half a story. At the precinct, Hetty tells the team that they are going to send the shipment as planned; only that there are going to be 'significant' changes made to the vehicles. Sounds like they are going to have access to a 'treasure trove' of Intelligence! Deeks overhears Kensi making dinner reservations. It is his birthday and Hetty has brought in a bottle. Deeks thinks that he is the one going to dinner with Kensi.

Sorry birthday boy; it is Jamie who is having dinner with her. Jamie has also brought his mother and he introduces Kensi as his girlfriend. Kensi agreed for this dinner because Jamie saved her life during the gunfight at the store where Esposito had held her hostage. They order drinks and Jamie's mother asks Kensi if she liked children? Oops.

Guest Stars: Kathleen Rose Perkins (Coroner Rose Schwartz), Kent Shocknek (ZNN reporter), Aaron Jaeger (Sgt Charles), David Bickford (David Lerner), Gerald Downey (Marine Captain CACO), Jonathan Murphy (Ian Bruckhurst), Michael Gier (Stuart Westridge), Teri Reeves (Antonia Prietto)
Production Code: 412
Summary: A Marine's death raises suspicions from his wife about his last battle. Sam and Callen try to find out whether there has been a cover up. When Hetty invites Operational Psychologist Nate Getz, the team suspects an evaluation is coming up.

The episode begins with a man walking out of the LA Department of Coroner's office. A man sitting in a car on the opposite side of the street clicks his pictures. Later, the photographer gets out of his car and breaks into the coroner's office and picks up a report from the drawer. It belongs to a man named Edwin Prietto. He then leaves. He gets into the car and is about to read the report, when someone who is in the backseat slits his throat and takes the report. At the precinct, Deeks arrives and declares that Kensi is in a bad mood as one of her plants has died; it is a cactus.

San tells her that it is the job, which keeps her away from home and so she doesn't have time to care for the plants. Eric, who is practicing mime, tries to call them to the Ops for a briefing; but in the end he ends up using his voice to explain his actions. Nell tells them about their latest victim, Stewart Westridge, a private investigator. Hetty tells them that the Navy has expressed interest in one of his cases that was commissioned by a widow of a Marine. Antonia Prietto, the widow of Edwin Prietto, wanted an autopsy report to the County morgue's office and hired Stewart to investigate her husband's death. Edwin was killed in the Pakistani border during a routine security sweep or it could be a cover to hide the truth.

Callen and Sam go to meet the widow and ask her as to why she is suspicious about her husband's death. She tells them that the guy from the Casualty Assistance Core's office told her that Edwin died on the Pakistani border; but she knows that he was posted in Kandahar as he called her from there the day before he died. She tried talking to other people but she felt they were stone walling her. Neither has she seen her husband's body or the report. Deeks and Kensi examine Stewart's car. The car has come up clean. So this means that the killer was a pro and his aim was to kill Stewart. Kensi wonders what if the Marine Core was trying to cover up something.

In the morgue, Antonia arrives to see her husband's dead body. She notices that his hands are significantly lighter and the coroner tells her that this happens once you donate bones and tissues. But Antonia says that Edwin wasn't a tissue donor. She is now sure that the Core is definitely hiding something. The Marines had the morgue strip Edwin's body so that no one could find out what happened to him in Afghanistan. Callen and Sam question Rose as to how this could have happened. Ian arrives; he is the same guy who Stewart clicked pictures of. Rose asks Ian about the prep he did on Edwin. Ian tells them that he removed tissue as it was there on the paper.

But he sees that the file is missing. At the ops, Eric tells Callen and Sam that Stewart broke into the Coroner's office and walked out with a file; could be Edwin's reports. Just then Nate arrives and Sam figures out that it is the annual psych evaluation. Oh no! The four at once get out of Ops and that leaves Eric and Nell with Nate. Eric immediately blurts out that Nell and he kissed. That is a surprise for Nate. Not happening!! Deeks and Kensi check Stewart's house. They find that Antonia's papers are missing. So the killer killed Stewart, came to his house and took Antonia's file along with Stewart's computer.

Deeks manages to fish out a wireless hard drive hidden in plain sight. Nate knows that Hetty has some other agenda for calling him; a psych evaluation is just a charade. But Hetty doesn't disclose the real reason. So, he is just a pawn in her new game. But she tells him never to underestimate the power of a pawn. Sam and Callen talk to the officer who told Antonia about Edwin's death. Sam wants to see the copy of the paperwork that was sent to the morgue. The papers show that Edwin was a tissue donor. Sam feels that Antonia is hiding something from them. Just then they find out that Antonia, who worked for a grief support group, has now gone public with Edwin's story. The story says that Edwin had been harvested for tissues. Either they are dealing with a distraught widow who is looking for answers or a woman with a different agenda.

Nell and Nate arrive telling Hetty that another soldier was injured on the day Edwin died and he is now recuperating in a hospital. Kensi and Deeks are assigned to go to the hospital, Callen and Sam go to talk to Ian and Nell and Nate try to get Eric dig deeper. Nate tries to talk to Callen and Callen plays along by building up a fake story. Nate realizes what Callen is doing but he plays along. Kensi and Deeks talk to the Sergeant and he isn't of much help. Ian tells Callen and Sam that the COD was consistent with the Marine Core report. Kensi and Deeks go to the Director of the funeral home and he too did not know that Edwin was a donor. Eric hacks into the wireless hard drive and finds out the surveillance pictures taken by Stewart.

They are shocked to find Rose's pictures in it. So from a friend, she is now a person of interest. Nate is having a hard time believing it as she is more than just a friend to him. Hetty wants Nate to interrogate Rose. So, this is why Hetty brought Nate in. This is his assignment. Nate brings Rose to NCIS and Rose realizes that she is being interrogated. He wants to know why an investigator would investigate her. Kensi and Deeks go to look around Rose's house. They find Edwin's morgue report on her dining table. They are shocked. Callen and Sam walk into the interrogation room with the file. She cannot believe that they doubt her. She tells them that the signature on the file is not hers; close but not hers. Nate confirms it. Eric and Nell find something.

They find that the county morgue has a spike in the number of tissue donors. And they were buried by the Fairfield Manor funeral home; the same home that buried Edwin. Nell states that Ian's signature is there on all the transfer papers. So Ian and the funeral home are working together and stealing tissues from dead bodies and selling them in the black market. Next, Hetty and Nate go to the funeral home as a mother-son pair. They meet the Director, David. Kensi and Deeks break inside the home to search for Ian. But they found him dead in a coffin. Looks like the partnership went south. Callen and Sam going in as people whom Ian owes money. David asks them to leave but they get hostile. Hetty tries to intervene and Sam who is in character calls her 'shorty' and asks her to learn to keep her trap shut.

Hetty and Nate leave David tries to run but to no avail; he is arrested. The team attends Edwin's funeral service and Antonia thanks the team. Nate tries to talk to Rose; she hopes that she can forgive him. Hetty tells Sam and Callen that Edwin was on a classified mission. That is why the Core could not tell Antonia about Edwin's location. Callen leaves but Hetty asks Sam to stay back. She wants to discuss about his undercover performance which sounded very genuine. So, she gets started. She wants to know what he meant when he called her 'shorty'.

Production Code: 413
Summary: Callen goes undercover in order to penetrate a Chechen terrorist group that recruits foreigners and plans their next attack in the United States.

The episode begins with a police officer following a white van and signals it to stop. He then checks the license of the driver; Dennis McGrady. Dennis is driving with his friend and he tells the officer that he is helping his friend move. The officer wants to take a look at what he is moving. Dennis is nervous. Just as he was about to open the door, his friend shoots the officer and runs back into the van. The officer shoots Dennis who is trying to run to get inside the van. The friend drives away with the van.

At the precinct, Deeks has bought an aquarium and has managed to have fishes in it which represent the counterpart of his team member; there is no Hetty as the smaller fishes tend to get eaten by the bigger ones! And yes he is the goldfish! Eric arrives and calls them to the ops. They are briefed about the case. We learn that Dennis is the alias the driver was using. His real name is Karim Moussa, and he belongs to a terrorist group that links the Al-Qaida to the Taliban. The surveillance camera could not get the face of the friend. Karim is from Chechnya, which has become a hot bed for Islamic terrorism. They know that Karim was trying to protect something or someone at the back of the van. Hetty tells them that thanks to the vest, Sergeant Rick Gibson survived the shots.

Deeks and Kensi go to the car rental company to find out about the details of the person who rented the car. The guy at the counter seems to have OCD. He tells them that a guy named Dennis rented the car. His friend was an African American and the guy describes his height, built, waist and clothes pretty precisely. But he doesn't remember the face too well. Rick says that he did not look at the accomplice. His accent did not support the name on the license. He also tells them about a take away bag that he saw in the van; he describes the logo. Eric and Nell track the take away joint and they also see that the van was in that area an hour after the shooting. They predict that the camera should spot the van, judging by the route it took. But surprisingly, it did not show up. Nell calls Callen.

Callen, Deeks, Kensi and Sam spot the van. But the van is clean; except for some traces of ammonium nitrate which is used to make explosives. Nell tells the team that the tyre has traces of recycled paper pulp and there are just three in the area where the van was. One of them was shut a while back. It was owned by a Chechen national, Akmed Movladiiev, who was sent back when his business turned belly up. The satellite images show that the van entered the facility and then left. Probably, it unloaded the ammonium nitrate and then the driver dumped the van. So what is happening in LA that could be a target for a terrorist attack? The Israeli PM is attending the museum of tolerance this week and author Ephraim Nabeel is going to lecture on his book and former Secretary of States is speaking at the Reagan library.

So, it is time for some old fashioned stake out. So, the four are waiting outside the run down mill. They have some action. A man walks out of the building. But Eric is unable to track him as he is bunched up in the crowd on the street and is unable to isolate him. Kensi does the bump and manages to hold him stationary for a while. Eric tracks him. He is Jamal Alvurov, a Chechen national with a chemical engineering degree. Eric has sent a virus to his phone which helps him to track all calls and emails sent from that phone. There is one coded email which describes a person arriving on a flight. There are three Chechen nationals on that flight and the closest to the description is a man named Anwar Amurov. They infer that the mention of a red baseball cap means that they have never met that man before.

So, Callen decides to show up in his place. Hetty thinks that this is a bad idea. but Callen tells her that they have no choice. Also, he is aware of the Chechen dialects. Callen dresses up and Hetty corrects his tenses. Nell wires him up; but he takes them off as he points out that these guys are smart enough to use minimal technology to stay off radar. They will strip him off first. They go through Anwar's files and he has no skills that would make him a Jihaad player. He has a four year old named Anya. So, the operation begins and Deeks and Kensi take Anwar with them and hand over the red cap to Callen. Callen walks out of the plane and we see that the guy who drove off with the white van is waiting for him.

He asks Callen to follow him. They go to the building and there they meet Jamal. Jamal tells him about Jihaad and he introduces Callen/Anwar to Gloria and Chovka Zelimov. The African American guy is James/Masud. They then kill James and tell Callen that his work was done and soon Callen's too will be. Kensi interrogates Anwar and Anwar defends the actions of Jihaad. He then lawyers up. Deeks arrives with pizza in the building and manages to get it delivered into the building. Chovka not wanting to gather any outside attention buys it from him and then takes it inside. He is about to throw it off when Callen stops him and tells Jamal that he has always wanted to eat American pizza.

He has a talk with Gloria and before he could learn much, Jamal asks her to leave. Callen, who has by now finished the pizza, pulls out the button camera that is hidden in it and fixes it on his button. But he does not manage to get the ear piece. Jamal then takes Callen to the van full of ammonium nitrate. He then hands over a paper and pen to Callen. Hetty realizes what is happening. / she tells the team that the paper and pen is for writing the last letter to his family; Anwar was called in as a suicide bomber and now Callen is the chosen one. In the warehouse, Callen focuses over a paper written by the author Nabeel and also a strange map; it is the map of the Braddock University. Hetty figures out that Nabeel is their target as the author had written some questionable papers against Islam.

Jamal makes Callen wear the vest. Chovka will be driving him. Jamal then hands a gun to Gloria and tells her that it is time for her to do the deed. She takes it. The team is around the building and see a van leave. They chase it. Kensi shoots Chovka but they see that the van is empty. Everyone is surprised. Just then the ops receive news that Gloria shot herself in her head in the middle of the route that Nabeel was supposed to travel. So, now the traffic needs to be diverted and Nabeel's vehicle will have to take the route which passes through the warehouse. Hetty now realizes that they will blow up the warehouse and Callen never left the warehouse. In the warehouse, Callen is zip tied to a plank. Jamal knows that Callen is not Anwar as he remembers that Anwar was left handed and they all sat in the last row in school.

He then places a cell phone on the vest and is about to leave. The team arrives and shoots Jamal. They then go to free Callen. They cut off the zip tie and Callen is about to get off when Sam stops him. The plank is rigged on a pressure plate which is connected to some explosives. Sam cuts off the wire and everyone is relieved. At the precinct, Deeks cannot find his aquarium. Well, that is because it is with Hetty.

She asks him why there is no fish that represents her. Well, she has brought a fish that she puts into the tank; it is a guppy. They try to warn her that small fishes won't survive with the bigger ones. But once the guppy is poured into the tank, the other fishes look at it for a moment and then they turn around and swim in the other direction! Looks like even the fishes are wary of Hetty's counterpart!

Summary: The team goes undercover in order to investigate a crime connected to a cartel suspected for terrorist interactions.

The episode begins in Mexico, where there are a few guys guarding a house. Just then a task force arrives and takes one of them down. They enter the house and go into a room to check on two people sleeping on the bed; but they are dummies. This is a trap. Just then a few civilians come in and open fire at them. But it is too late to abort the mission; all of them are killed. At the precinct, Kensi gets a huge box in the mail and Deeks is curious as to what is in the box. But Kensi tells him to mind his own business. Granger arrives and asks them to come to the ops. The team watches a video recorded by a helmet camera. The task force had invaded the house of Luis Cisneros, the Head of the Molina drug cartel and wanted by the FBI.

They see how the mission turned into an ambush and the elite team was wiped out. This seems to be a leak of intel. The person needs to have high clearance access to such kind of information. They try to narrow down the list of suspects and they end up pulling the list of the tactical role players. So, Granger tells them that they need to train with a few guys for Special ops; and these guys make Al Qaida look like a walk in the park. This is done to take a close look if these guys are the leak. Hetty briefs them about the weapons. The team arrives for their training and their button cameras are activated. Sam feels that Deeks and Kensi are not really prepared to be tossed to the deep end of the game. They walk into the simulated 'KILL HOUSE'.

But they fail the mission. And somewhere Granger is laughing at them! Chad Parish arrives and talks down to the team. He is former SWAT member and has been in the team for just two months. David Inman arrives and tells the team that their biggest flaw was to break up; fragmented team! All they had to do was sit back and see how they wanted to be killed. David is an ex-marine and is the group leader. Granger tells Nell and Eric to dig deeper into the TRP's history; he knows that everyone has a weak spot. Nell points out that all of the TRPs are single except for Chad Parish. He has a wife, Jenna and she is two months pregnant. Sam and Callen think that Chad mentioned the ambush that happened in Mexico. Callen thinks that he did it intentionally.

They feel that either Chad could be the leak or might want to stay clean as he has a baby coming. They need to have a talk with him. They then go for their next mission which involves civilians. The team avoids casualties, and manages to take one of the guys with them. But their car gets rigged. They fail this one as well. The man they took with them is David. Just then a man comes running out and tells David that one of their guys is hit; it is Chad. He is dead!! Sam tells Callen that the LAPD has said that Chad broke his neck due to a bad fall. But Callen wonders if it was an accident or murder. David arrives and tells the team that he is going to have to cut this contract. They will be assigned to another team for their training to take down Cisneros.

He tells them that he will wait for what the LAPD has to say and then conduct his own investigation. Chad is the first guy they lost in training. Callen asks Kensi and Deeks to follow David while he and Sam would work the crime scene. Granger has decided to bring David in. Getty thinks that this will compromise their mission. Granger points out that this mission was compromised the moment Chad got his neck broken. Next, Deeks and Kensi follow David who goes to meet Jenna and tells her about Chad's death. She pushed David away and runs into the house crying. Deeks and Kensi think that this is the right time to talk to her. They ask her about Chad and his work. She tells them that Chad was the black sheep of the tribe as he was the only married one.

Chad always talked about quitting but they needed the money. She then continues to tell them about David's dream project; a high tech training center in Mexico. Meanwhile, Nell goes through the crime scene and tells Callen and Sam that there is one camera that could tell them about Chad's death. Hetty calls Callen and asks them to come back as Granger has brought in David for interrogation. Callen and Sam watch Granger talking to David; and it no where looks like an interrogation. It looks like some date!! Callen is suspicious and asks Eric to dig into David's military records to see if there is any connection between him and Granger. Eric tells them that Granger had specifically asked him to dig about David earlier.

He tells Callen that two months of David's services are being heavily redacted and this time coincides with the time when Granger ran a black op in Iran. Callen has a question for Granger and Granger comes out of the interrogation room to answer it. Callen wants to know why he did not tell them about being friends with David. That is because, Granger thought that he was always considered as public enemy number 1. He asks them to sit back and watch the interrogation; they might just learn something. Eric tells Deeks and Kensi that he did get some information on David's new training center in New Mexico and David has already put in 2.3 million dollars in it. There is no way his military contracts could fetch him that kind of money.

In the interrogation room, Granger tells David that he had sent his team to him to get some information about the leak on Cisnero. David had figured out that something about the team was off. Granger also tells him that he vouched for him and wanted his guys to be trained for difficult operations; but he feels that David blew it off. He has solid intel on Cisnero's location and thanks to Chad's death, he will not be able to train his guys to take out Cisnero. Eric calls Callen and tells him that he knows about Cisnero's whereabouts. Cisnero has gotten sloppy; that means he is in a hurry. Granger arrives in the ops. And David has managed to escape. He is on the move. And this is exactly what Granger wanted!

Eric tells them that David is going to the Kill House facility. So, they now need proof that David was behind Chad's murder. They try to get in touch with Nell. But her cell phone is offline. Sam says that they left her at the restaurant to check the camera footage. They are sure that David has got her!! They go to the training center and Sam knows that David knows how they think and now he would be expecting them to move in a certain way.

But they decide to do otherwise; they stick together as a team. They manage to arrest Luis Cisnero who is in the training facility and they also successfully manage to rescue Nell. Later, Granger apologizes to the team as he wasn't completely honest with them and he risked Nell's life. Callen tells him that it is Nell's call. Nell tells him that it is all good.

Summary: The team investigates the only survivor of a former terrorist group. Kensi and Deeks follow a trail that leads them to the woods.

The episode begins with Bryan Ross introducing himself on a show called 'The Bigfoot Hunters'. The Director is not happy and asks Bryan for a retake. Just then they hear a rustle in the woods. Moments later a man stumbles in their direction and falls down to the ground; he has been stabbed. At the precinct, Sam is preparing for a historical event at his daughter's school and he is dressing up as the first black astronaut who went to space. He called in a favor and has managed to get the space suit. Kensi tells the trio that a guy named Morgan is retiring; but none of them know who Morgan is.

Eric arrives and declares Morgan's retirement party and they also have got a case.

Eric tells them that the dead man is Dean Albertson and he has been wanted for act of terrorism since the '70s. Albertson was the founding member of the group called GBP; Gun Barrel Party. This group was wanted for a string of bombings and most of the members of the group did time with the FBI; including Albertson. Nell tells them that GBP declared its comeback and that they would attack the American institutions that support injustice. This is an issue of National security. The manifesto was posted from a coffee shop and so it could be anyone using WiFi. There were eight guys in the group and as of now only one of them is alive; Jim Mullins and he is serving time in prison. Callen asks Kensi and Deeks to check the crime scene and Deeks is not comfortable in the woods.

Kensi and Deeks go to the woods and Kensi back tracks Albertson's trail. Callen and Sam go to prison to meet Mullins. They tell Mullins about Albertson's death and he doesn't seem to be affected by the news. Mullins is in prison for murdering two security guards during a bank robbery. They tell him that GBP's return has been announced and somebody is trying to take advantage of the same. Mullins tells them that Albertson ceased being his buddy since the time he deserted the cause. Callen feels that somebody reached out to Mullins before they could and so he asks Eric to get him a list of Mullin's recent visitors. In the woods, Kensi and Deeks find a cabin and they realize that Albertson was living there with a woman. Just then a lady walks in, attacks Deeks and tries to run away.

But Kensi grabs her and takes her to the precinct. The woman's name is Leah Dewhurst. She tells Kensi that she is Albertson's girlfriend and she had no idea about his death until now. She tells Kensi that she was at the grocery store and also, she doesn't know anything about Albertson's past. He wouldn't talk about it. Eric tells the team that Mullins had two visitors in prison; one from his sister who lives in Ohio and the other is from a professor, Roy Hale. Callen and Sam go to meet Hale. He tells them that he is writing a book on the GBP and he is merely explaining their point of view. They then tell Hale that Albertson was stabbed to death. Hale says that he did not know about that and he feels that it would make an interesting chapter in his book.

On their way out, Sam notices some graffiti on the pamphlets that were put up on the notice board. Callen clicks a picture. Eric tells them that the graffiti belongs to an anarchist group which calls themselves Red Tide. There was a message that was uploaded on an anarchy board through the WiFi at the University. Hetty tells Deeks and Kensi that it is time for them to go back to school. Deeks will have to pretend to be a janitor and Kensi will go in as a student. Kensi meets Hale's TA, David and has a conversation with him. David thinks that she has come for the protest; he checks her in for extra credits. He then invites her over to a discussion at Hale's house. It is mainly for guy students but he is sure that the professor will make an exception.

Kensi asks for Hale and David tells her that Hale doesn't come for the protests anymore because the numbers of the protesters are dwindling. Janitor Deeks enters Hale's office and plugs in a drive into the professor's computer to let Eric gain access to the information on it; but there is nothing on it and Eric finds that odd. Callen tells Deeks to keep digging. Just then the Red Tide group attacks the campus and Sam, Callen and Kensi manage to knock them down. Just then Deeks tells them that he has found something; it is a box of explosives. It does not have a timer; but it has a cell phone trigger. This bomb can go off any second. Deeks evacuates the building. They infer that someone wanted Hale dead. Callen and Sam go to check his house. Eric tells them that Hale's phone is turned off.

Sam and Callen arrive at Hale's house and they see his car in the driveway. As they approach the house, there is a huge explosion. Later, the team thinks that Hale was attacked because he must have come across something in his research on the GBP and someone did not want that information to be published. But they are not sure that Hale was in the house when it blew up. Nell calls Callen and tells him that one of the Red Tide members they busted, Allen Sanderson, was one of Hale's graduate students. His father owns the largest construction company and his father bailed out on him due to his illegal activities. Eric tells Callen that the serial number on the bomb led them to a construction site which belongs to the Sandersons. And the bomb found in Hale's office is a fraction of the total explosives that is missing.

Sam and Callen interrogate Allen and tell him that Red Tide is considered as a terrorist organization by the Government. Meanwhile, Kensi talks to David. David tells Kensi that Hale took him under his wings and saved his life because David was having a tough time with his father. Deeks talks to Leah and shows her Allen's picture; but she tells him that she has never seen him before. But she recognizes Hale standing next to Allen and she tells him that Hale came to meet Albertson couple of times. But she also tells Deeks that Albertson called him Johnson. At the ops, the team discusses that Johnson belonged to GBP and he was killed in the explosion at the cabin while they were making bombs. Eric uses the age progression software on Johnson's picture and it is a 91% match to Hale.

The crime lab informs that Hale's body was not found in the house. Eric tells Callen that Hale is on the run and security camera footage proves that Hale was at a center where they make fake identities. Callen updates Allen about Hale's recent activities and tells him that Hale is running again, leaving him behind. Allen tells them that Hale has a storage unit in Hollywood. They are on the way to the unit. Allen also tells them that Hale is planning to blow up one of the Southern Californian fortune 500 companies. Hale is loading the explosives in his trunk and the team arrives. They arrest Hale. Hale tells them that he wasn't at the cabin when it exploded and the cops found his prints in the wreckage, and declared him dead. He saw this as an opportunity and started a new life.

He saw that the present generation wasted their time tweeting and so he enlisted Allen and his group for his cause. He then says that Albertson's murder was an accident. He had gone to meet him to ask him to join him. But Albertson's mind was elsewhere and they ended up in an argument. Albertson pulled out a knife and a struggle ensued. Albertson slipped and fell on the knife and there was nothing Hale could do. Hale tells them that he sowed a lot of seeds in the classrooms over the years he taught and he feels that some of them will definitely take root. Case closed. Next, Callen is still concerned about what Hale said. And we see that Hale was right. Hale's death has affected David and he is going through websites learning how to make bombs.

Just then Kensi arrives and asks him out for coffee so that they can talk. Hetty tells Callen that a good friend arriving at the right time will be of great help. We now know why Kensi meets David. It is Morgan's retirement party and Sam gets Callen the last piece of cake. Nell, Eric and Deeks join the party. They then ask Sam about the competition at his daughter's school. Sam tells him that he was the second coolest dad; the first one was dressed as a Navy Seal!

Summary: Callen is concerned that Sam might be too invested after he takes on a missing persons case for an Afghani elder who helped him years ago when he was wounded on a mission.

The episode begins with a guy entering an electronic shop. He steals a laptop and leave, but the owner notices that and chases the guy. The guy is then knocked down by a car. We see that two men lift him and put him in the car and drive away. The owner recovers the guy's bag with the laptop in it. At the precinct, Deeks and Kensi are going to attend a seminar. But Kensi doesn't want to go to it. She tells Sam that she made Deeks join the sniper classes with her and so now she has to accompany him to the seminar. But later, Deeks tells Sam that he hates going to the seminar. He is going because he wants to pay Kensi back for taking care of his pet last week and he feels that Kensi is very much into these things.

Sam finds this entire thing very amusing. Sam gets a call and he looks worried. He goes to the Ops and tells Eric that there has been an accident and he wants to check all the surveillance footage. Sam tells Eric that this is a personal matter. Eric stops. Granger arrives and tells Sam that he cannot deal with personal stuff on Government time. Sam tells him that when he was in Afghanistan, a man named Yusef Khan helped him when he was wounded. Khan risked the safety of his family and village for him. Now, his nephew was in an accident and is missing. He wants to help Khan. Granger does not allow it. Sam tells him that he has accrued 219 hours of leave.

He is taking it, but Hetty intervenes. Eric arrives and tells them to take a look at the accident footage. They see that Amir Khan is being taken by the guys who hit him with their car. Hetty tells Eric that this cannot be pursued. But Eric states that the facial recognition on the man in the passenger seat leads to Hakim Habib. Hakim recruits local US Muslims and then introduces them to the ways of the Taliban. Hakim has never come to the US before; so why now? Hetty tells them to find Hakim, and Sam will find Khan's nephew. Kensi and Deeks go to the store and talk to the owner. The owner tells them that Amir has been coming to the store for the past two weeks and test driving latest laptops and this morning he tried to steal one.

They tell the owner that they will have to confiscate the laptop and all the surveillance footage. Sam goes to meet Yusef Khan. Khan tells Sam that Amir has no history of violence. Sam then shows him Hakim's picture. Just then a black SUV pulls in front of the dry cleaning store and opens fire. Sam pushes Khan to safety and shoots down the gunman; but the SUV drives off. Eric tells Callen that the dead man is Aleed Durrani and he is a member of a small time radical group of the Jihadist front. He also has a brother, Salim Durrani. Khan tells Sam that he knows that this is the work of the Taliban. He tells Sam that once Sam escaped, the Taliban came to search for him and on finding out that Sam escaped, they killed his family.

He managed to save Amir by fleeing to a refugee camp. Sam did not know about this. Sam wants to hide Khan in some safe place off the grid. Callen thinks it is a bad idea; he says that they should put Khan on the system so that they can keep an eye on him. He says that Sam is not thinking with his head. Sam agrees. Deeks and Kensi go to Amir's house and search the place. Deeks finds a laptop and it looks brand new. He wonders why Amir was trying to steal a laptop when he already had a brand new one. They then find a gun under the bed. Eric finds something very interesting; he finds a footage which shows the Duarrani brother dropping Amir at the store. They knew each other.

Sam tells Khan about the gun and Amir's friendship with the Durrani brother. He feels that Amir was involved with some radical group. Khan blames all this on Amir's American girlfriend, who he doesn't like. He tells Sam that the girl wanted Amir to relinquish his heritage. Sam wants her address. Kensi is pissed with Deeks because he read her diary. She now wants Deeks to tell her something that no one knows. Deeks tells her that he was a stripper in his college days and he did that for some extra funding. They then go to meet Amir's girlfriend. The girlfriend tells them that Khan was forcing Amir to be something he didn't want to be and he also thought that she was bad influence on Amir.

Sam and Callen go to a mosque and locate the black SUV which pulled in front of the dry cleaners'. They then see Salim Durrani walk out of the mosque. They think that Salim wanted Amir to do something and Amir refused. That is why they had fallout and Amir had a gun. They follow Salim, hoping that it would lead them to Amir. Eric and Nell find some emails on the store's computer. They look like they are for Hakim. Granger fears that if Hakim is involved, it means that something is happening on a large scale. Sam and Callen follow Salim to a hookah bar. Salim escapes in a silver sedan. Callen and Sam follow the car. During the pursuit, Sam's car window is shot at and Sam is pissed. He then fires shots at the sedan.

Salim is arrested and the driver is dead. Callen finds a lot of ammunition in the trunk of the car, enough to start a war. Sam gets nothing useful from Salim. They arrive at the HQ and Hetty mentions the bad driving skills. Sam tells them that it was Callen who was driving. Kensi is shocked that Sam let Callen drive the Challenger! Sam feels that they should get the girlfriend, Nicole and Khan in the same room. Maybe they know something collectively that they don't realize. Kensi and Deeks go to Nicole's place and find that two men are trying to abduct her. A gunfight ensues and Nicole gets shot. The two men are also killed. Deeks finds a picture in one guy's pocket. It is a picture of Khan and Sam together and Sam's face is circled.

Deeks realizes that the hit at the dry cleaners was actually for Sam. Sam arrives at the safe place and finds that the guard is missing. Khan tells him that Amir called and so he had to 'let the guard go'. Amir walks down the stairs and Hakim Habib arrives with his men. Sam realizes that this was a set up. Hakim says that he can now finish the job by killing the guy who got away years ago. At the ops, everyone is tense because Sam is not reachable. However, the GPS shows that he is at the boatshed. All the cameras in the boatshed have been disconnected, but Eric knows about the secret camera and turns it on. They see that Sam is held captive and is being beaten up. Hetty wants Nell to inform Callen that the boatshed has been breached.

Hetty wants Sam to be saved at all costs. Khan is upset with Amir for his actions and Amir tells him that he doesn't want to carry this burden all his life just because his uncle made a wrong decision. But Hakim plans to kill Khan and Amir as well. He calls Amir a coward for turning on his own uncle and he wants to kill Khan for sheltering the enemy. Just then Kensi, Deeks and Callen arrive at the boatshed. Kensi and Deeks pose as a couple having an argument and Callen tries to get into the basement. They shoot down the men, arrest Hakim Habib and free Sam. Amir feels that the others would still come for them and he tries to shoot Sam. Khan tries to stop him and ends up shooting his own nephew; the last of his family.

He tells Sam that if he had let Amir shoot him, then his whole family would have died in vain. Sam thanks Khan and Khan leaves. At the precinct, Hetty decides that she will be punishing Sam for disobeying her rules about federal resources. She then offers Sam one of the finest Scotch ever made. Sam is happy. He wants to know how much it costs. Hetty tells him that he will find out in his next pay check!

Production Code: 417
Summary: Sam fears for his family's safety when his wife is called to resume a former CIA cover after a case suggests ties to the infamous Sidorov and his stolen nukes.

The episode begins with a man, Victor Varlamov, arriving at the park and pulling out a note from under a bench. Just then another man stabs Victor with an ice-pick in the back of his neck and then in his chest. The killer then cuts off one of his fingers. Sidorov is watching this on his computer. Next, at the precinct, Kensi is filling out a survey form from a bridal magazine and Deeks tells her that her biological clock is ticking. Nell arrives and tells them that Victor Varlamov was killed this morning. Nell and Eric tell the team that the footage was pulled from a Venice chess park.

Victor was hired by Anatoli Kirkin (a rival mob boss) to assassinate Sidorov. They feel that the killer did not turn his face because he knew about the camera. Callen thinks that Sidorov might have staged it so that he could watch from a remote location. Callen tells Eric and Nell to check how many people have watched this video. He also wants everything on Victor. Callen then leaves to talk to one of Victor's poker buddies. Later, Kensi and Deeks take a look at Victor's dead body and they find some letters (not in English) carved on Victor's forehead. They also notice that the killer has cut off Victor's middle finger.

Deeks does a search and tells Kensi that the letters correspond to the English letters, S L O N, which is Russian for elephant. Callen tells Sam about the message carved on Victor's forehead. They then meet Arkady and he tells them that in this case SLON means a prison. He also tells them that cutting off the middle finger could be because of the tattoo that was on that finger. Arkady has his doubts on Dmitri Greshnev. Callen says that Dmitri flew off with Sidorov. Arkady feels that Dmitri is back. Callen tells Sam that if Sidorov and Dmitri are back then they will try to find a buyer for the stolen nukes. Sam tells Callen that if they are back, they are going to come after his wife.

Nell tells Deeks and Kensi that Sam is not able to reach Michelle. They are about to leave for Sam's house when Hetty arrives and tells them that they will have to partner up with CIA officer Snyder and keep him busy till Sam and Callen get a handle on this case. She tells him that they will have to keep the CIA in the loop if this case is about Sidirov and the missing nukes. Sam checks on Michelle and finds out that she is fine. Deeks and Kensi manage to keep Snyder at the boatshed and Snyder realizes that they are trying to stall him. Nell tells Callen that there was a new number that popped up on Victor's call list and it was from a burner phone. She is trying to trace where it was purchased.

Sam and Callen are about to leave when Sam notices a car pull over and a man walks towards the house. Sam follows him and he sees this guy hugging Michelle. Sam jumps at him. Michelle tells Sam that this man is Officer Sobatino and he is CIA. Callen and Sam arrive at the boatshed with Sobatino. Deeks and Kensi are surprised to learn that Granger wants them to work with CIA. Eric appears on the screen and tells them that a computer logged on the chess park camera ten minutes before Victor was killed and then logged off after his death. Sam and Michelle are undercover as Foreman and Quinn. When they reach home, they find Dmitri waiting for Michelle.

He wants to know why she didn't kill Kirkin. He thinks that Sam is distracting her and gives her 24 hours to finish her task. Michelle tells him that it is difficult because Kirkin has doubled his security and he seldom goes out. Dmitri tells her to get the job done and leaves. Sam calls Eric and tells him to track Dmitri's car. Sam leaves to follow Dmitri. Sobatino hits on Kensi and when Snyder tells Deeks about Sobatino's intentions, Deeks looks a little uncomfortable. Next we see that Kensi likes Sobatino's company. Sam is following Dmitri and the cops ask him to pull over. They search him and find two guns and Victor's murder weapon in his car.

Later, Hetty arrives to meet Sam in prison and Sam tells her that Sidirov wanted him out of the way so that Quinn/Michelle could kill Kirkin because Sidirov knows that Quinn is used to him being in prison. He knows that Sidirov wouldn't kill him because that would make Michelle too distraught to do the job. Hetty tells him that she is not going to bail him out for the moment because she feels that Sam is going to be safe in prison. Sam is pissed. He fears that Michelle is in danger and Hetty gives him her word that she will take care of Michelle at whatever cost. Callen doesn't like this idea and tells Hetty to spill out her master plan.

Hetty tells him that she doesn't have one. She wants Callen and his team to come up with one. Kensi has a plan. She tells them that they need to convince Kirkin to cooperate with them so that they can convince Sidirov that Michelle killed Kirkin and that way he would come out of his hiding and they can trace him back to the stolen nukes. The Agency guys like the plan. There is just one problem; Deeks has to go to the spa where Kirkin works from. Deeks doesn't like the idea of being amidst naked men, but he has no options. He approaches Kirkin and tells him that he is from NCIS and that they want to kill him. Kirkin's guards tackle Deeks. Kensi is about to go in when Deeks walks out and tells them that Kirkin has agreed to cooperate.

Sam tells the police officer that he wants his one phone call. He then assaults the officer and escapes. Next, Kirkin is at a restaurant and he is ready. Kensi and Deeks are there as well. Michelle walks in and shoots Kirkin, creating chaos and quickly leaves. Kensi sends the eye-witness footage to Eric so that he can float it on the internet. Nell tells Hetty that the cops have sent out an alert on David Foreman (Sam) because he assaulted a cop and escaped from prison. Next, Michelle arrives at a park and waits for Sidirov and Dmitri. Snyder, Sobatino and Callen are at the park too.

Sidirov and Dmitri arrive and Sidirov tells her that she needs to get on a flight and leave the city for a while since she murdered Kirkin. Dmitri looks around and figures out that Snyder and Sobatino are keeping an eye on them. He alerts Sidirov. Sidirov shoots Snyder and gets away in a lifeguard's van. Dmitri takes Michelle with him and is about to shoot her, but Sam arrives and shoots Dmitri. Callen wonders how Sam tracked them and Sam tells him that he tracked Michelle's phone. Next, Sobatino is upset about his partner's death and tells Kensi that he has been called back to DC to head up a task force. He leaves.

A teary eyed Kensi then tells Deeks to promise her that he will never get himself killed. Later, Sam and Callen arrive at the precinct and Hetty is in a foul mood. She tells Sam that he did not trust her and escaped prison. She then tells him to go and spend some time with his family while he can. She is going to have a tough time explaining to her superiors as to how Sidirov escaped and why the only lead they had, is dead. She knows that all this is far from over.

Production Code: 418
Summary: When a murder weapon in Idaho matches a case in Los Angeles, Callen and Sam head to Idaho to join NCIS:Red, a mobile team who travel to various locations to solve crimes.

The episode begins with a car crash in Moscow, Idaho. A man stumbles out of the car and walks up to a public phone to make a 911 call. Another car stops at a distance and a man walks towards this guy. The guy tells the 911 operator that his car crashed and that someone is after him. His voice is barely audible because of the wind and heavy snow. The mysterious man draws a gun and shoots the guy. He then pulls out things from his pockets and scatters it around the dead body. He leaves. The car explodes.

At the office, Deeks finds a box on his desk and he knows it is Kensi's box, but Kensi tells him that she is giving that box to him. Deeks finds it weird and thinks that it is some sort of a trick. He decides to open the box, but is interrupted by Eric, who tells the team that they have their next case. They go to ops, where Hetty tells them that a man was found shot in the back of his head, execution style. The victim is Rachmed Santoso. Santoso, an Indonesian national, was a vocal supporter of the radical Islam and a suspected arms dealer. Nell tells them that the chatter in Taliban indicates that an attack on US is imminent. Hetty receives a call. Nell tells the team that Santoso dropped off the grid ten days ago and the killer took his shoes. Hetty tells them that there is a change in plans. The weapon that was used to kill Santoso, was also used to kill Gunnery Sergeant Edward Tyler and he too was shot in the back of his head too. H etty tells Sam and Callen that they should leave for Idaho and that their RED team is already on the ground. She asks Kensi and Deeks to find Santoso's shoes. Kensi and Deeks go to the crime scene and they find a trail of footprints, but a single set. They follow the trail and find the shoes neatly placed under a tree. Kensi concludes that the killer kills Santoso, wears his shoes, walks down the road and steps in on his own footsteps, thereby eliminating them. Next, Sam and Callen arrive in Moscow and Logistics Officer Danny Gallagher welcomes them. He tells them about his team is going to be led by Special Agent Paris Summerskill, but at the moment she is being outranked by Granger. Sam and Callen are shocked to see Granger in Moscow.

Danny takes them to a truck, which is where they work from. He introduces them to the RED team, which comprises of Paris Summerskill (the boss), Spl. Agent Dave Flynn (also the cook), Spl. Agent Claire Keats, and Tech Assistant Kai Ashe. Paris briefs them on the case. Hetty calls the team and tells them that 'they found the missing shoes'. Everyone finds the call weird and Granger knows that Hetty is not telling them something. Sam and Callen try to work out the connection between the two murders. Callen points out that a professional never uses the same weapon again, and that too, a low velocity round.

The next day, Nell arrives at the Ops and finds that Eric did not go home last night. He tells her that Hetty was freaked out at the fact that they did not have any leads. So, he stayed up and went through the security footage and saw that Santoso had parked his car in a parking lot, a quarter mile away from where his body was found. Santoso rented a car under a fake id, but he slipped up by giving the hotel address to the car rental company. Eric tells Nell that Santoso has been staying there for the past couple weeks and that is the time his name was linked to the attacks. Kensi and Deeks go to the hotel room. They figure out that Santoso had company. Kensi tells Eric to check the security footage for the last week. Deeks finds empty boxes of 9mm ammo and lots of them. At the trailer, Callen and Paris discuss the crime scene and they notice that Tyler's cell phone is missing. They then reconstruct as to what could have happened and they figure out that Tyler must have dropped his cell phone and that is why he used the public phone to make the 911 call.

They go to the site and manage to retrieve the phone that was hidden under a thick coat of snow. Sam tells Callen and Paris that Santoso had five people with him. They are on their way back to the trailer and Paris tells them that they did not find much on Tyler's phone. A truck arrives and rams into their vehicle and tries to run them off the road. Sam breaks the sunroof and shoots at the truck driver. Callen and Paris join in, but the driver escapes. Danny, who was driving the car, is unconscious and Callen calls for help. Sam goes looking for the driver. Next, at the trailer, the two teams are having a video conference and they go over the contents from Tyler's phone. Claire looks at a video that Tyler shot at the airport terminal and notices that a man was trying to cover his face.

Hetty tells them to send the picture to all airports and find out about that man. Sam tells the team that Tyler was wearing his uniform and so the man (probably a criminal) could have doubted that Tyler was on to him. At the Ops, Kensi and Deeks go through security camera footage and find four men leaving the building along with a driver. Hetty recognizes one of them. At the trailer, Kai gets a hit on the airport guy and he tells them that he is probably using a fake id, Robert Spears, but he flew into LA this morning. Hetty calls and tells the team that a man named Alhed and four others were recorded leaving Santoso's building. They are Afghani military and disappeared from a DOD training last month. It is advanced aeronautics and all of them are qualified pilots.

Sam and Callen arrive in LA with Paris and her team. Kensi tells them that Spears rented a car which was used to pick up the men from Santoso's building. He then upgraded and bought a car with GPS which was found abandoned next to the house of a TSA officer. He was dead when the police found him with the security card was missing. Callen tells Eric to find out which gate the TSA personnel used at the airport. Eric locates the van and informs Callen. They too locate the van. Sam alerts Kensi and asks her to stay close. They follow the van and a gun fight ensues, in which four of them are dead and one slightly injured. Spears, manages to get away. Next, at the office, Granger tells Hetty that the Red Team has one guy less because Danny is still in the hospital. Hetty hands over a file to Granger and Granger is reluctant to approve it.

At that moment, Analyst Roy Haines arrives. Hetty is surprised that he is early. Hetty tells the team that Roy will be filling in for Danny and she asks Paris if she is okay with it. It looks like Roy and Paris have had some kind of a 'history' because Paris lands a heavy punch across Roy's face. Later, we learn that Roy and Paris were partners and that he was on an operation where he was investigating an arms dealer in NY. An ambush followed and three of the assailants were killed and Roy was wounded and almost died. Hetty believes that there is more to the story that Roy isn't telling them.

Eric tells the whole team that they have a lead on Spears. Spears made a satellite call three minutes after he slipped away. Spears, tells the guy on the other line that he will take some time to organize and get Alhed to him. He tells him to stay at a hotel in Al Centro and to use the name Jackson. Hetty sends Callen to interrogate the terrorist they have in custody. She tells Paris to keep an eye on the hotel. Paris is about to leave and Hetty reminds her to take Roy along with her.

Production Code: 419
Summary: While the LA team chases leads digitally and locally, the NCIS:Red team travels in their mobile trucks, nicknamed "Laverne and Shirley," in a race to track down a cunning terrorist before he disappears.

The episode begins with Granger telling Hetty that he still cannot understand as to who redacted the report on Roy's shooting. He feels that there are a lot of unanswered questions about that night. Next, the Red team arrives at El Centro (Roy included). Callen and Hana interrogate Ari Yusuf Sayed, the terrorist they captured. Deeks is sure that Ari would not speak till the time Spears is out there. Callen and Sam lie to Ari saying that Spears was killed in El Centro by the guy who helped Spears cross Mexico. Ari is shocked. They know that Ari knows the name of the other guy.

Ari tells them that he is Jose Ramirez. They inform the Red team about Ramirez. Paris briefs her team about Ramirez. She says that Ramirez specializes in smuggling people and weapons across the border. They find out that Ramirez owns a ranch and they decide to check it out. Roy tells them that there is just one way into Ramirez's ranch and so they need to be careful. Dave, Paris and Claire go to the ranch and click some pictures. They see seven guys walking out and getting into two cars. They leave immediately. The two cars follow them and Paris thinks that they are on to them. Claire thinks it is not possible as they just got there, but Paris is right. One of the guys begins shooting at them. Claire takes charge and a gun fight ensues.

One of Ramirez's cars flips and the driver gets out. He is about to shoot Dave and Paris shoots him. They arrive at the trailer and Roy tells them that he had some drinks with the County Sheriff. After the Sheriff got drunk, he let Roy download the GPS database with which they can track down the GPS in Ramirez's car. At the ops, Granger is going through the video from the airport and Hetty arrives. He tells her that five years ago, when he was in the Special Task Force, Bobby Wilson, a whistle blower was murdered despite being under witness protection and they could not get his testimony. The MO was not exactly the same (the killer used a pillow to muffle the sound), but it did keep him awake for months.

Granger feels that Spears is the same guy who killed Bobby. He also feels that if Ari says that Spears is a fundamentalist, then what was he doing acting as a contract killer five years ago? In the trailer, Dave goes through Roy's GPS database and tells Paris that there are multiple trips made in and out of El Centro and the first visit is to Ramirez's ranch and the ranch is also the final destination. The second most visited place is a beach and it is worth checking out. Next, Eric hands a flash drive to Deeks and Kensi which contains all the unsolved murders from the past five years, where the victim was shot in the head with a low velocity round.

Hetty wants the duo to go through the files and search for common denominators. Nell arrives and tells them that she found surveillance pictures from outside the airport where Spears is talking to a man wearing a red scarf. Alongside, Dave, Claire and Paris arrive at the beach. Dave tells them that there is a house at a distance and Paris tells them that they will walk. When they arrive at the house, they find bodies lying in front of the house. They go inside and find multiple dead bodies lying dead on the ground. Claire realizes that they are illegal immigrants. They go outside and see that Ramirez is dead, a single gunshot to the back of his head. It looks like Spears was a step ahead of them.

Later, Sam and Callen arrive at the scene. Paris tells them that there are 15 bodies, including Ramirez and his two bodyguards. They feel that Ramirez was tipped off that somebody was trying to get to him. So, they arrive at the house, the body guards go in and kill the immigrants. Paris tells them that Ramirez was already dead when the two bodyguards came out and they too were shot at the back of their heads. Callen feels that something is not adding up.

At the trailer, Roy fixes the waste pipeline and Kai comes out to talk to him. Kai thinks that it was dumb of Spears to kill Ramirez. Roy says that the MO is the shooter's signature and that they haven't yet proved that Spears is the shooter. Next, Hetty calls Deeks and Kensi to the ops. They are on a video call with Kai and Roy. Eric tells him that they managed to get footage of the guy wearing the red scarf. His name is Tommy Kraus. Tommy has a satellite phone and it is the same phone used to contact Spears. Nell says that Kraus is an underworld 'fix it' guy and he can arrange for anything and everything. Hetty wants Deeks and Kensi to get Kraus.

They go to Kraus's house and meet Brett. They pressurize Brett a little and Brett tells them that Kraus has gone to some hotel in El Centro and won't be back until the next day. They stake out the hotel and arrest Kraus. At the ops, Kensi tells Hetty that there are 13 cases in the past that match with the recent killings. Granger thinks that they are contract killings. The question is, why would a Jihadist get into contract killings? Next, Dave examines the bullets that killed Ramirez and his bodyguards and finds something. During the interrogation, Kraus tells Claire and Sam that he is not an enemy of the country. He says that the moment he found out what Spears was up to, he decided to put an end to it. He says that he hired a contractor to clear the mess, Santoso, Ramirez and Spears. They are shocked to learn that Spears isn't the killer, he is the target.

Nell and Eric go through the airport footage and see that Kraus is talking to someone. It is a woman. Kraus tells Claire and Sam that the shooter is a woman. Dave tells Paris that there is lipstick on the bullets that he examined. Nell and Eric look at the women and feel that they have seen her before. She was on the footage that the Marine shot at the airport. At the hotel, Paris also realizes who the killer might be. She sees that killer get into the elevator. A gun fight ensues between Paris and the shooter and also between Callen and Spears. Spears, gets shot by Callen. In the parking lot, the shooter is about to shoot Paris from a point blank range, but Roy arrives from behind and takes down the shooter.

Paris takes the shooter's gun and pulls out the magazine and sees that there are lipstick marks on the bullets, 'the kiss of death'. Next, Paris tells Callen to stay back for dinner, but he tells her that they need to leave because Sam has a family. He wants to know what happened between her and Roy. She tells him that it is complicated. Roy comes out and tells Paris that they have a new case and it involves a 'long' trip. At the precinct, Hetty tells Granger that Tyler did not get killed because he filmed Spears; he got killed because he filmed the woman. The woman has been killing for years for money. Granger is relieved that the woman who killed his witness is finally killed.

Production Code: 420
Summary: After a Navy lieutenant and pilot are poisoned by cyanide laced water, the NCIS team investigates to see if the two were targeted or if it was a trial run for a large-scale contamination.

The episode begins at a strip club, where few friends are celebrating their friend's birthday. A lap dancer arrives and takes Joshua, the birthday boy, for a special treat. As soon as they enter the room, Joshua feels a little unwell. He passes out and the girl goes to get his friends. The friends arrive and see that Joshua is frothing and having seizures. They try to retrieve him. At that moment, another officer falls on the ground. At the office, Kensi has lost her tax return form and it needs to be submitted next week. She is shocked to learn that the rest of them have already submitted it. Eric arrives, announcing the latest case.

In OPS, they watch the footage from the strip club. Eric tells them that the dead guy is Lt. Joshua Gordon, a Navy pilot. The other officer who passed out is Naval Flight Officer Randall Baker and they also have a dead dancer. Eric and Nell tell them that it is cyanide poisoning, and that Officer Baker will soon be released from the hospital. The people who were poisoned weren't drinking any alcohol; only water. Eric tells them that the Jihadist group is taking credit for this attack on the internet. Sam reads the post and tells the group that the message is full of grammatical errors. He feels that the person who wrote this doesn't seem to know Arabic that well. Hetty thinks that that someone is trying to point fingers to deflect attention. Kensi and Deeks go to the bikini bar for investigation. They meet Detective Lopez and Lopez shows them that bottle of water that is poisoned.

He says that the water was changed by the janitor, Zaki Faheem. They have found the cap of the bottle and it looks like someone injected poison in advance. They are looking for Faheem. Deeks says that he wants to review last night's footage. Callen and Sam are talking to Baker. They ask him about Joshua and if he had any enemies. Baker tells them that Joshua was a good man and it was not in his nature to make enemies. He says that he raised his voice only once on a guy named Fryman. Fryman is no longer in the service and was dishonorably discharged. Sam and Callen notice that Baker's hands are shaking and Baker explains that this is the side effects of cyanide and it should get better with time. Kensi and Deeks find a syringe in the dumpster behind the bar.

They inform Eric and Nell. Nell tells Kensi that they have located Faheem's cousin. She also tells her that 200 pounds of cyanide has gone missing from a silver coating factory. Sam and Callen go to meet Dominic Fryman. Dominic tells them that he never got along with anyone in the Navy and also he wanted to be home with his son. They ask him about Joshua. He tells them that Joshua had no family, no girlfriend and he never even dated anyone. He says that Joshua had a lot of secrets. Elsewhere, Kensi and Deeks manage to arrest Faheem and bring him to the interrogation room. Faheem tells them that he did not tamper with the water. He says that he heard about the dead guy and was sure that they would suspect him. That is why he called in sick.

Kensi and Deeks learn that Faheem is a well educated man and he works at the bar for money. They tell him that they will go through every email, text and phone call made by him. He tells them that a man with a beer belly kept coming for two nights in a row, asking if there were any job openings. Deeks wants him to identify this man from the security footage. Callen and Sam go to the silver coating factory and the woman at the factory tells them that they had ordered for five barrels of cyanide and there are just four. They check the remaining barrels and find out that they contain salt and not cyanide. This means that 1000 pounds of cyanide has gone missing, enough to kill 4 million people. Sam and Callen arrive at the ops and Hetty turns on the news channel.

It seems that three heart attacks have been reported in the past five minutes. Callen thinks that the cyanide could be in the city's drinking water. Later, Eric tells the team that the COD in the three cases is cyanide poisoning. There was only one house in that block that gets bottled drinking water. Sam thinks that this was a local attack. Callen tells Kensi and Deeks to check the water supply in the neighborhood. He tells Eric to pull any recent rentals or vacant house in the same neighborhood. Kensi poses as an ambassador from the water supply department and tells the people that she can offer them tips on reducing their water bills. She says that she will need to check their faucet settings and supply pipes. They agree.

Deeks poses as a water sewage worker. The owner of the house, an old man named Eugene, tells Kensi that she should not go to the next house. He says that they shoot porn films and it will not be safe for her. At the ops, Nell receives a message from Kensi saying that she stumbled upon an adult film shoot. Eric tells her that Chanceworth is an epicenter of that industry. Eric tells Callen that he got a hit on a vacant house a block away from the area of the poisonings. Callen tells him to check on it. Kensi goes to the vacant house and sees a machine connected to the faucet. She tells Deeks to come to the house. At the ops, Eric tells Callen about a group called DNA (Designing New America), which aims at making America a better place for the children to grow up.

They want to get rid of child molesters, drug dealer, violent felons, etc. Callen tells them that it is obvious that they have a grudge against strip clubs. Nell tells them that they are coming up with protest at a lot of events like, political speeches, federal buildings, military funerals etc. Nell also tells Callen that the group wants the Defense to redirect their funds for education instead of war. At the house, Deeks and Kensi confirm that the pump they found was used to pump cyanide into the water system. Next, Sam walks up to a group of protesters at a military funeral. Callen, who is posing as a protestor, gets into a fight with Sam. The group leader is impressed with Callen's conviction and tells him that he should join their group.

The leader's name is Lawrence De Vries. Eric runs a facial recognition and finds out that Lawrence is a member of the DNA. Lawrence wants Callen to wear a blindfold while he drives him to the place where they function from. Sam is keeping a close watch on Lawrence. Nell tells Kensi that the vacant house had a plumbing visit and there was some equipment that was taken inside the house, but never came out. The van that transported the equipment was from a rental company. Kensi and Deeks go to check the car rental company. There they find Alex, Dominic's son. Alex tells them that the company belongs to his uncle. The uncle tells them that he cargo van was rented by a Mexican guy.

They check the copy of the driver's license and learn that it was Faheem. They go to Faheem's house. Elsewhere, Lawrence arrives at his secret club house with Callen. Eric and Nell tell Kensi and Deeks that Faheem does not even have a proper license. They send them a traffic camera footage, in which they see that the guy they met at the rental company was the one driving the van. They decide to go back to the rental company. At the club house, Callen learns that he has been played. Lawrence arrives with Dominic Fryman and the guy from the rental company. Dominic is the leader of the DNA group. He tells Callen that he is trying to change America into a better place for their children.

Dominic gives Callen two options; either they shoot him to death or he drinks the cyanide. Callen tells him that he is not setting a good example for his son by doing this. Callen decides to drink the cyanide and they lock him up in a room. Eric and Nell manage to trace Callen's location and Sam goes to the warehouse to search for Callen. Sam finds Callen and also sees a syringe lying next to him. It looks like he took an antidote. He is glad to see that Callen is fine. Later, at the ops, the team gears up to find Dominic and his team. Callen is not too stable because of the poison, but he insists on going with the team. Nell tells about an unauthorized repair work at the city's main access points. Next, the team arrives at the site.

A gun fight ensues and Dominic loses all his men. He refuses to surrender. He ingests a bit of the cyanide and falls on to the ground. Callen tells them that they need to find the cyanide. He finds Alex sitting next to the equipment, ready to pull the valve. Callen convinces him to back off. Case closed. The next day, Hetty pulls a prank on Deeks. Callen arrives to meet Alex and they play a game of catch.

Summary: The missing body of a cartel boss sends Kensi and Deeks to Mexico while the rest of the NCIS team looks for a potential leak within the DEA's special task force.

The episode begins in a morgue in Tijuana, Mexico, where two morgue technicians are having lunch. They get a call and are informed about the arrival of a new body. The guys arrive and the technicians check the form that is handed over to them. They look slightly surprised. They hear some noise coming from one of the containers, and they go to check it. A man, who was hiding in the container, shoots them and walks away with the recently arrived corpse. At the precinct, Sam wants Kensi to babysit his kids on Saturday, since he wants to go to the clipper's game with Callen. Kensi tells him that she is not good with kids.

Deeks agrees to help Kensi, but she is still reluctant. They label her as a "kid hater". Eric announces that they have a new case. In Ops, Eric briefs them on Miguel Barbosa, the kingpin of the Barbosa cartel in Tijuana, Mexico. Nell tells them that Barbosa was gunned down in a shootout with the law enforcement, backed by the US Navy and DEA, but Barbosa's corpse was stolen upon arrival at the morgue. Sam tells them that this is a regular occurrence with the cartels. While watching the video footage from the morgue, Callen figures out that the shooter knew that the corpse was coming in. They also figure out that the shooter was waiting in the container for two hours.

Deeks concludes that the shooter knew that the gunfight was going to happen and Barbosa was going to get killed. Callen thinks that their side has a leak. So, they need to find the leak and track down Barbosa's body. Eric also tells them that this operation was headed by Agent John Ness, from the DEA (Drug Enforcement Agency). Nell adds that the Tijuana Police have a high value informant, who is an expert on the Barbosa cartel, but they will only release information on him in person, and on their own turf. Callen and Sam decide to talk to Ness, whereas Kensi and Deeks head to Tijuana to talk to the police. At the DEA's office, Callen and Sam learn that Ness chased Barbosa for ten years, and he also lost a leg.

Sam notices that this session is being recorded, and Callen assures Ness that they do not doubt him. Sam tells Ness that this case is not over until they locate Barbosa's body. Ness shows them a picture of Barbosa's dead face, and tells them that it was sent to him from the scene. The duo leaves. Deeks and Kensi are at a bar in Mexico. They meet Officer Sanchez from the Mexican Police Dept. They ask him about the informant, and Sanchez points out at the boy singing on stage. At that moment, Sanchez gets shot. Deeks manages to save Javier, the informant. On their way back, Javier tells them that he wants a lawyer. Deeks and Kensi continue their discussion on kids.

Kensi then tells Javier that he is not going to get a lawyer because "she said so". Javier says that Kensi is crazy and she reminds him of his mother. Deeks assures Javier that he is absolutely safe with them. At the office, Eric tells Sam and Callen that Javier is a narcocorrida, a cartel singer. They make music that glorifies criminals like Barbosa. Javier was Barbosa's personal songwriter and performer. It seems that Barbosa's cartel was having problems because Barbosa's right hand man, Pedro Moreno, wanted to take over. The men were taking sides and there could have been a civil war, but Barbosa died, and hence the war did not take place.

Callen thinks that Moreno killing Javier, would be the final nail on Barbosa's coffin and his legacy forever. In the car, Kensi tells Javier that those men didn't want to kill him. The shooters took shots at Sanchez, her and Deeks. They wanted Javier alive. Next, Callen and Sam go to meet Ness. Ness, offers them macaroni and cheese, but they pass. They tell Ness about the recent findings and ask him for his opinion. Ness, who is having his breakfast, chokes and falls dead on the ground. Sam thinks that Ness was poisoned. Callen orders the security to lock down the facility. Later, Sam tells Callen that there are no leads on Ness's killer. Hetty arrives and tells the duo that the Secretary of Navy wants an after-action report on Ness's murder.

Sam decides to go and meet him and tells Callen to go to Kensi and Deeks. In the interrogation room, Javier tells Kensi and Deeks about a song he wrote for Barbosa, he called 'Resurrection'. Barbosa asked him never to sing that song to anyone because it could ruin a surprise. Callen concludes that Barbosa is alive. Later, Eric shows Callen and Sam the pictures from the shootout, and thinks that Barbosa faked his own death, it was a decoy. Callen thinks that Ness was so obsessed with Barbosa that he got tricked. This is why Barbosa had his body stolen from the morgue, before the officials found out that the dead body was a decoy.

Since stealing bodies from the morgue is a routine with the cartels, no one suspected a foul play. Hetty explains that Barbosa wanted Ness and Moreno to let their guards down, so that he could easily kill them. She says that they must find him soon. In the interrogation room, Kensi and Deeks tell Javier to help them find Barbosa and they could put him in witness protection, but there are no guarantees. They give him some time to think. Hetty is not too happy to use Javier to lure out Barbosa. She thinks that not only will they risk Javier's life, but this will also put Kensi and Deeks in danger. Callen convinces her that this is their best option.

Later, Javier agrees to help the team. Deeks and Kensi drive down the road to witness protection when they see a silver Range Rover following them. Javier tells them that Barbosa has got people everywhere. Deeks tells Kensi to make a turn, but that road is blocked by a garbage truck. Deeks realizes that this is a trap. A gun fight ensues. Javier gets out of the car and runs. The silver Range Rover arrives and two men shove Javier into the car. They take Javier to Barbosa's hideout. Javier is shocked to see Barbosa. The NCIS team has placed a button camera on Javier's shirt. Eric and Hetty watch Barbosa talking to Javier.

Hetty is sure that Barbosa won't keep Javier alive for long. Nell tracks the location through the camera's GPS and sends it to Deeks and Kensi. They arrive at the building and they notice several security cameras. Barbosa asks Javier what he told NCIS. Javier says that he did not tell them anything because he himself didn't know that he (Barbosa) was alive. Barbosa doesn't believe this. His men beat up Javier. At that moment, Barbosa receives a call from Ness. He is shocked. He looks at the monitor and sees a man walking into the building. He cannot believe his eyes because he himself killed Ness. He threatens Ness that he will kill him again.

Barbosa tells his men to leave Javier and go after Ness. It is seen that the guy who Barbosa saw on the monitor, is Callen. Callen impersonated Ness very well and tricked Barbosa. Callen lures Barbosa's men to an entire team waiting outside the building. Barbosa is about to shoot Javier when Kensi and Deeks enter the room. They manage to gun down Barbosa with Javier's help. Javier hugs Kensi and cries. Case closed. Next, Kensi tells Sam that she will babysit his kids, but only if Deeks agrees to help her. Deeks agrees.

Summary: Callen questions Hetty's motivations when a bizarre case involving a mysterious woman is revealed to be an undercover agent from her past.

The episode begins with a woman arriving in a parking garage. She sees three men walking towards her. She tries to run. She finds another man standing next to his car and she asks him for help, but one of the three men, shoots him. One of them manages to grab the woman. At the office, Sam tells Callen to dress up as professor Lupin, a werewolf, for his daughter's birthday party. Callen reluctantly agrees. Kensi is cleaning her gun with Deeks' t-shirt when Deeks arrives and tells her that he had that t-shirt since high school. He says that it was his rock band's uniform.

Kensi is surprised and wants Deeks to sing, else she would tell Callen and Sam about Deeks' band and they will use all the available technology to dig out the footage of him singing. Deeks begins to sing (he is terrible) when Eric arrives and tells them that Hetty wants them in ops. Nell tells the team that a woman was attacked by three men and two of her attackers, along with a bystander, have been killed and the woman is missing. Callen wants to know why they need to solve this case. Hetty tells him that 'she' wants them to solve this case. They don't find any leads on the woman and the attackers. Hetty tells them to find out about the attackers' identity.

Kensi and Deeks examine the dead bodies, but they don't find anything. There are no ids and fingerprints. The facial recognition also came up with no results. Sam and Callen examine the crime scene and Sam finds a lot of blood on the stairs. He sends Eric some pictures. Hetty looks worried. The team comes back to their desks and Eric tells them that Nell found some additional footage from outside the garage. They see that the woman tackles her attackers and ends up gunning down two of them, and the third attacker was also shot, but he survived. Everyone is amazed. Sam thinks that the woman is a professional.

Kensi wants to know who the woman is. Callen wonders why Hetty is interested in this woman. Hetty arrives at the boat house and knows that the 'mystery woman' is hiding there. She is glad to see that the woman is fine and the bullet just grazed her. At the office, Sam and Callen figure out that Hetty is holding out on them. They also know that Hetty is protecting the mystery woman. Callen and Sam arrive at the boat house because they figured out that they might find Hetty there. Callen wants answers. Hetty tells them that the woman's name is Grace Stevens and that she is one of theirs.

Later, Grace tells Callen and Sam that a guy named Nolan Vandenberg, who came up on their radar, has been supplying equipment that could be used to facilitate the enemy's nuclear program. She says that she went undercover and lived with Vandenberg for three years and worked with him for 11 months, but she wasn't able to find who he is supplying to. She says that when Vandenberg found out about her, he sent his men to kill her. She feels that after last night, Vandenberg might have fled the country.

At the OPS, Nell tells the team that Vandenberg's company has purchased a property in North Mexico. Nell also finds out that Vandenberg has not left the country and he has booked a three bedroom suite at a hotel in Baltimore. Callen tells Eric to find out more about Grace and her reason to join NCIS. Eric fears that he might run into trouble. Callen tells him that he won't, if he doesn't get caught. Next, Deeks and Kensi pose as a couple and book a suite in the same hotel. Callen and Sam are in the lobby. Nell poses as the housekeeping staff. Kensi fixes a button camera on Nell's uniform. Callen and Sam spot Vandenberg in the lobby.

Nell goes into Vandenberg's room and goes through his briefcase. She finds audio and video bug detection devices, and she disables them. At that moment, she hears the sound of the flush. She quickly places the briefcase back in its original position. A man with a gunshot wound walks out of the bathroom. Grace, who is watching the team from ops, identifies him as Visser, one of her attackers, who she shot. She tells the team to get Nell out of there. Kensi poses as a member of the Hotel Management team, and manages to get Nell out of the room. In the lobby, Sam and Callen see that two men arrive to meet Vandenberg. Grace tells them that she has never seen them before. Eric runs a facial recognition, and finds out that they are attachés from Niger and Namibia, the third and the fourth largest suppliers of Uranium.

Callen notices that they handover a case to Vandenberg, and he decides that they should get hold of it and Vandenberg. Callen tells his team to be in position. Visser leaves his room to go to the lobby. Kensi tries to stall Visser, but she fails. Deeks and Nell are in position. Everyone waits for Callen's orders, but Callen aborts the operation. At the ops, Sam tells the team that they should bring in Vandenberg. Grace tells them that with Vandenberg out of the picture, the attachés will look for other suppliers. Deeks suggests that they could set up a bogus company and act as the ones who could supply them with the equipments. Everyone likes the idea. Callen goes to ops and asks Eric if he managed to locate Vandenberg.

Eric tells him that he has no clue as to how he exited the hotel. Eric hands a flash drive to Callen. It has Grace's history in it. Eric tells him that Grace's past is very much like Sullivan's, Hunter's and his (Callen). Callen goes through the contents of the drive. Sam arrives and notices that Callen looks slightly disturbed. He asks Callen what's going on but Callen doesn't say anything. Callen confronts Hetty. He knows that Grace was an orphan just like Sullivan, Hunter and him, who Hetty plucked out of an orphanage, trained them and recruited them into NCIS. He wants to know how many of them has she done that with. Hetty loses her cool and yells "A lot". Callen leaves.

Later, Callen and Grace have a short conversation. During the conversation, Callen has a new idea. He tells Grace that since Vandenberg still wants her dead, they could use her as a bait to lure him out. Next, the news channels broadcast about a woman who was attacked and left in an alley. It is Grace. At the hospital, it has been two hours, and the team is about to lose hope when Vandenberg arrives to meet Grace. The team manages to arrest him, Visser and another bodyguard. Case closed. Next, Hetty pours a fifty year old whisky for Callen and apologizes for losing her temper. Callen admits that he should not have instigated her. They have a long chat.

Summary: Looking for information on a notorious arms dealer, Deeks goes undercover and makes friends with a female source. While keeping surveillance on Deeks and the woman, Kensi is challenged by new emotions.

The episode begins with a guy trying to gun down a woman walking on the street, but he misses his shot. A chase ensues and the woman gets into a black car. A guy steps out of the car and fires at the shooter. Taking advantage of the distraction, he gets back in and asks the woman what she did this time. The woman kisses him. It is Deeks. They quickly drive away. At the office, Callen, Kensi and Sam talk about fitness and workouts. Eric tells them that Hetty wants to them in the ops. Nell shows them surveillance footage and tells them that an hour back, Monica Davis was the intended target of a shooter in Hollywood.

Sam notices the way Monica evades the bullets; it looks like she is used to being shot at. Eric tells them that Monica is a hostess at an Afro-beat night club, N'Kosi. They wonder why someone is trying to shoot Monica. Hetty thinks that the shooter may be involved with Johannes Waaldt aka Jojo, the owner of N'Kosi. It appears that Waaldt does a lot of charity work in Africa, but back in the day, he was a well known international arms dealer. Callen thinks that Monica must have seen something she wasn't supposed to see. Hetty tells them that they don't know that for sure because they haven't heard from their inside man, Deeks aka Max Gentry. Nell enlarges the part of the footage where Monica kisses Deeks. Kensi is surprised.

Hetty tells them that Granger set this up and Deeks is undercover. Nell tells them that Deeks hasn't checked in yet. At home, Deeks tells Monica that she screwed up the whole thing and now she is in danger. Monica doesn't understand the seriousness of the situation and she is busy seducing Deeks. Deeks had told Monica to quietly sneak in and get some pictures, but she ended up stealing a pouch of diamonds from Waaldt. Deeks feels that this whole thing is a bad idea. At the office, Kensi is worried that they haven't heard from Deeks. Nell arrives and tells them that Deeks sent an encrypted text which didn't reveal much. Hetty tells Kensi to backup Deeks. Sam and Callen decide to go to the club to find out more. Callen is worried about Kensi, and tells Eric and Nell to keep an eye on her.

Sam and Callen arrive at the club and tell them that they want to book the club for an event. Sam is wearing a button camera. He sees Waaldt sitting with two other men. Nell and Eric run a facial recognition. Nell tells Sam that their shooter is Pieter Smit, a South African native, and he has worked as security for a lot of cartels. The other man is an international banker, Noah Bernisoni, but he has no criminal records. Elsewhere, Kensi texts Deeks and tells him to wear his ear wig. She asks him what is going on. He tells her the whole story. He feels that Kensi is jealous of Monica, but Kensi denies it. Monica hears Deeks talking and wants to know who he is talking to. He gives her some stupid excuse. Monica kisses him and Kensi can hear them.

At the office, Nell tells Sam and Callen about the diamonds. Callen tells Sam that they might have to use some new tactic to get to Waaldt. At the safe house, Monica is still trying her best to seduce Deeks. Kensi does not like it. Waaldt calls Monica and Deeks tells her not to answer the call because Waaldt can track them down. Monica doesn't listen and picks up the call. She tells Waaldt that he has to pay up if he wants the diamonds. Next, Callen and Sam manage to get hold of Pieter. Kensi arrives at the safe house and tells Deeks that Sam and Callen have got the shooter, and that they want to use Monica to turn him. Deeks goes to the bedroom to get Monica, but he finds out that she escaped through the window. She took the diamonds along with her. He definitely didn't see that coming.

Sam and Callen bring Pieter to the boat house. They try to get him to talk, but he doesn't say anything. Eric calls Callen and Sam, and tells them that Monica escaped with the diamonds, but since her cell phone is on, they are able to track her. Also, Kensi and Deeks are following her. Callen asks Eric where Granger is. Eric tells him that Granger is untraceable. Kensi and Deeks arrest Monica, and Deeks reveals his true identity. Back in the interrogation, Callen asks Pieter what Waaldt is planning to do, but Pieter refuses to answer. Sam prepares to clip off Pieter's ear. Pieter tells them that Waaldt was brokering a deal, but he doesn't know for what. He tells them that Bernisoni was negotiating for the seller.

He also tells them that the seller is a Russian because he heard him speak Russian when he came to the club a few days ago. This means that Pieter saw the guy. They show him some photographs and ask him to identify the seller. It is Sidirov. Deeks and Kensi arrive with Monica. Callen tells them that Sidirov is the seller and Pieter doesn't know anything about the buyer. Callen tells them that they need to come up with a plan. They think that they can make Waaldt believe that Pieter and Monica paired up and stole the diamonds, but for that Monica needs to co-operate. Deeks decides to talk to Monica. Monica tells him that she risked her life for him, but he ended up lying to her. He tells her that he did not tell her to steal the diamonds. Monica still has feelings for him and she tells him that she is ready to co-operate.

Deeks tells her to call Waaldt and tell him that she is scared of him because he tried to kill her. He tells her to tell Waaldt that she is ready to give him the diamonds for a hundred thousand. Monica tells Deeks that she will ask for $250,000. She then whispers something into Deeks ears. Deeks walks out of the room. Kensi tries to talk to him, but Callen stops her. Kensi goes inside and wires Monica up. Monica asks her if she trusts Deeks. Kensi tells her that she trusts Deeks with everything because he is her partner. Later, Monica arrives at the decided spot with the diamonds. The entire team is present there, but in disguise. Waaldt arrives with his men and the exchange takes place. He shoots Monica, but the Kevalar saves her.

Kensi shoots Waaldt. Deeks checks on Monica. She tells him that she was better off with Max. Case Closed. Next, at the office, Kensi arrives to hand over an envelope to Deeks. She tells him that it is from Hetty. She then asks him about Monica. He tells her that she is sore, but definitely lucky. Kensi tells him that Waaldt hasn't said a word yet. Deeks asks her if she is alright. She tells him that she is. It is an awkward moment. Kensi leaves. Deeks opens the letter that Hetty sent him. It says, "Sunshine and Gunpowder". Deeks smiles.

Summary: As the search for stolen nuclear weapons is revived, Hetty sends Callen and Kensi overseas while Deeks helps stateside as Sam and Michelle go undercover.

The episode begins with a group of Geologists surveying a barren land. One of the students spots something at a distance. They go to check. The professor notices the timer on the nuclear weapon and tells his students that they need to get out of this place. They try run as fast as possible. The bomb explodes. In the ops, Eric tells the team that Gamma rays and X-rays were picked up by satellites, but the radiation has affected only the uninhabited areas of the desert. Granger is on a video conference with his team and he tells them that Russia, China, Great Britain and India have denied any involvement.

Callen tells Hetty that this is like the Wella incident. Sam and Michelle arrive. Sam tells Kensi that in '79, there was a nuclear explosion and no country took responsibility. Granger thinks that this is one of the three bombs Sidirov acquired. This was done to prove that the bombs are functional and it also exponentially increases the value of the other two bombs. Granger tells the team that NCIS and CIA have been keeping an eye on a man named, Michael Zhrov. Michelle tells them that Zhrov works with Sidirov and meets potential clients when Sidirov is in the wind. They need to find Sidirov and also make a plan to get hold of the other two bombs. Hetty tells the team that Callen and Kensi will be going to Iran. Kensi is preparing to leave for Iran. Deeks is worried.

Later, in Iran, Callen and Kensi manage to capture Marcel Janvier. In the ops, Nell tells the team that a white cargo van entered Mexico two days before the explosion. It was detected by the radiation center. However, the Mexican border patrol missed it. That is how Sidirov got the bomb into Mexico. Later, the same van was spotted outside the Biltmore hotel in Los Angeles. Nell tells them that according to CIA, three men from Sidirov's gang entered the United States and stayed within blocks from the Biltmore hotel. Deeks tells them that CIA doesn't have surveillance of Sidirov arriving or leaving. Granger tells them that they need to find Sidirov soon. Sam, Deeks, and Michelle stakeout the Biltmore hotel. Michelle sees a black woman entering the hotel. She tells them that she is Sidirov's types.

Moreover, she is wearing an expensive designer dress; a designer who Sidirov pays to "doll" the girls. Eric tells the team that the girl got off on the 9th floor and one of Sidirov's men has opened the door. This means that Sidirov is in there. Eric tells them that there are no cameras around the stairs and they lead straight to the garage. Michelle tells them that Sidirov always takes the stairs and has 3-4 men with him. On their flight back, Callen tells Janvier that he wants him to broker an arms deal for them. He tells Janvier that this way he could exact revenge against Vaziri and Iran for cutting off his hand. Sam and Michelle assume their undercover identities (David and Quinn) and capture Sidirov.

They tell him that they need a lot of money, and want him to go to the bank and withdraw the money. Sidirov asks his men to stand down. On the flight, Callen tells Janvier that he wants him to call Vaziri and make him an offer; a nuclear bomb. Kensi tells him that their mission was designed to prove that he (Janvier) financed his escape from prison. They ask him to call the Iranian Ministry of Intelligence and ask them to have Vaziri call him. Sam and Sidirov are in the bank, and Sidirov wire transfers the money to Sam's account. Outside, Deeks arrives with the cops and tells Sidirov's men to drop their weapons. Sidirov sees this and flees the scene with Michelle and Sam. Granger arrives at the scene. He tells Deeks to bury Sidirov's men in the system.

In the boathouse, Janvier receives a call from Vaziri. Eric traces the call. Janvier tells him about the weapons. In return, he wants Vaziri to guarantee his freedom and also a nice profit from the deal. Vaziri tells him to set up a meeting with the seller. After the call, Janvier tells Callen that he wants a good amount of money sent to his daughter in Paris. Callen tells Janvier to call Zhrov and tell him that they he has a buyer for the weapons. Callen also tells him that his daughter will not get any money if they don't find the other two weapons. Sidirov arrives with Sam and Michelle (David and Quinn) to meet Zhrov. He tells Zhrov that he wants to move the merchandise and get out of the country. Zhrov tells him about Janvier's call.

Sidirov trusts Janvier and tells Zhrov to set up a meeting. He then tells Sam and Michelle that he wants them to protect him. They ask him to pay upfront. Sidirov introduces them to Veronica and Maya, two ex officers from Russian Special Forces. Sidirov tells Zhrov to call Janvier and fix the meeting but the location would be decided by him. Zhrov calls Janvier and tells him the location. As per Callen's instructions, Janvier tries to tell him that the buyer wants to decide the location, but when Zhrov tells Janvier that this is not negotiable, Janvier agrees. Zhrov gives him the coordinates. Eric tells the team that it is in the middle of nowhere. Hetty tells Callen that from the looks of it, Janvier will have to drive in. Later, Callen and Kensi wire up Janvier.

Callen tells Janvier that if he does anything to jeopardize his people, he will kill him. Janvier wants Callen to make sure that his daughter gets the money. Janvier then goes to the restroom. Later, Janvier, Sidirov and Vaziri meet at the decided spot. The price is set at 20 million in gold. Sidirov asks for 5 million upfront. He also says that if the deal goes south, he will keep the gold. They all agree and leave. Callen feels that something is not right. Next, Vaziri's men hand over the down payment. Deeks and Kensi keep an eye on them from a distance. Sidirov likes the quality of gold, and tells the girls to check the exchange location. He tells them to take Quinn/Michelle along. Sidirov walks up to the car and asks Quinn if she is playing him. In response, she places a steamy kiss on Sidirov's lips.

Deeks tells Kensi that they should not mention this to Sam. Kensi tells him that Michelle was protecting their cover. The topic shifts to Monica and Kensi is irritated. She tells Deeks that he never tells her what is going on in his mind. In response, Deeks kisses Kensi. Kensi goes to check on Michelle. Sidirov returns and tells Zhrov and David/Sam to deposit the gold in the bank. He tells Sam to cuff himself to the briefcase just like Zhrov has. Sam agrees. Sidirov then pushes Sam into the pool and holds him down. Deeks goes in to help Sam. Sidirov knew that this would happen. Deeks jumps into the pool to save Sam. Eric loses all electronic contact with Sam and Deeks. Later, Callen arrives to check on Sam and Deeks.

He sees that Sidirov took them. He feels that Janvier tipped off Sidirov about Sam. Callen heads to the boathouse. The Russian girls take Michelle to the 30th floor of a building. They tell her that they are waiting for Sidirov's orders. Sam wakes up in a room. Sidirov knows that he is an agent. He tortures Sam by passing electricity through his body. He asks Sam if Quinn is an agent. Sam says no. Kensi arrives at the building and goes in to save Michelle. Michelle ends up in a fight with the Russian girls. One of the girls pushes her out off the window. Michelle hangs on to a plastic sheet. In the boathouse, Callen confronts Janvier. Janvier closes his eyes. Callen notices 'DAVID AGENT' written on his eyelids. This is how he tipped off Sidirov.

Janvier tells Callen that he lost his hand because Callen gave him to the Iranians. He blames Callen for all that is happening. Janvier tells Callen that his only aim is to destroy everything Callen loves. He tells him that Sidirov is going to kill Sam. In the room, Sidirov continues to torture Sam, but Sam doesn't budge. He maintains that Quinn is not an agent. Sidirov decides to torture Deeks and get the truth out of him. They ask Deeks if Quinn is an agent. He says no. They drill into Deeks' gums. Sam watches helplessly.

Summary: The team must locate the stolen nuclear weapons as Deeks and Sam must physically and emotionally recover from their ordeal.

In the "NCIS: LA" season 4 finale, Michelle was left hanging out a window, Kensi fighting off Sidorov's Barbies to try to get to her. Well, Michelle didn't need her help making it up because she pulled herself up and ended up saving Kensi. Blonde Barbie took off, with Kensi following, and after the blonde got herself into a crash, it was off to the hospital in an ambulance. Or so she thought. Kensi refused to stop interrogating her with agents' lives on the line, and Owen was the helpful EMT telling the blonde she was paralyzed when she couldn't feel it when he stuck her foot, or rather, the air around her foot. Blonde Barbie sang like a canary, giving up the location of the auto body shop where Sam and Deeks were.

Unfortunately, the team had to put their trust in Janvier once again, as his next meeting with Sidorov and Vaziri was the only time they had to get to Sam and Deeks. However, Kensi and Owen weren't there to rescue them, not yet. Instead, they only had minutes until Sidorov returned to the shop, but it was Michelle who was waiting outside to inform him that she pulled off one of his Barbie's heads. Her cover still intact, she had to demand answers from Sam about who he was, and he claimed to be an FBI agent. She shot both him and Deeks in the chest before leaving with Sidorov to "make some money." Once they were gone, Kensi and Owen could move in with the EMTs, but the only thing on Sam's mind: Did Deeks give up Michelle? No.

It was brutal Once at the hospital, however, Deeks wouldn't let the doctor near his mouth, and could you blame him? After the dental torture he just went through, would you want to see all those tools laid out on a tray and have someone looking at your teeth? Kensi tried to help, but Owen pulled her away to continue working, and when they joined Callen, she told him Deeks wouldn't even look at her. It was time for another meet of the three evil men, and once they heard the location of the bombs, they'd move in on them. However, all they mentioned was a ship, so they were stuck following them once again. While Owen followed Vaziri and Kensi followed Sidorov and Michelle, Callen chased Janvier through the mall, only to end up pulling an innocent maintenance worker off his cart and finding the piece of flesh Janvier cut out of himself to remove the Overwatch spray.

After last May's finale, one of the conversations we most wanted to see was one between Sam and Deeks with the former admitting the latter was a good cop and that he underestimated him. "Ascension" gave us what we wanted and more, as Sam paid Deeks a visit in his hospital room. "I owe you for the rest of my life for what you did for me," he told the LAPD detective, who looked like a lost little boy who was in desperate need of a hug. But Deeks wasn't sure about being a cop anymore. "That'll be a huge mistake," Sam told him. "You're a great cop. You're going to make a great agent." "I never thought I'd hear that coming from you," Deeks said. "That was my mistake," Sam admitted. "I won't make it again." Yes, there's the unresolved Deeks/Kensi stuff and their conversation, but we don't think there was anything Deeks needed to hear more than what Sam told him in that hospital room.

Meanwhile, Sidorov was ready to celebrate his day's work in a hotel room with Michelle and wine, but after a distraction kiss, she snuck away to the bathroom with his phone for Eric to hack. However, just because Sam and Deeks didn't give her up didn't mean she was safe. He knew she had his phone, and by the time Sam (did you really think he was just going to sit back, relax, and heal in a hospital room after being electrocuted when his wife was with Sidorov?) and Kensi got to the room, they were gone. After Eric got hits for multiple planes being chartered from different airports under Sidorov's companies, Sam realized they never left the hotel. They were on the roof, but they weren't going anywhere. Sidorov thought he was going to get away, playing to Sam's weakness of Michelle, but when Andros turned to the door, Deeks was there to shoot him. (Apparently CBS borrowed a cream from the same shop the CW turns to for the guys on "Supernatural" to take care of their injuries to help get Sam and Deeks out of the hospital with enough energy to be bruised and battered but still able to work.) Sidorov was distracted, and there was something very satisfying about Sam putting a couple of bullets in him.

Owen had tracked Vaziri to an apartment in Hollywood, the same apartment an exotic dancer with convictions for fraud, theft, and prostitution flying under Janvier's daughter's name, went to, but when Callen and Owen got inside, the woman and Vaziri's men were dead. As for Vaziri, he was tied to the bed, his hands cut off. "It's all about revenge" with Janvier, Callen realized. Vaziri cut off one of Janvier's hands, so he took both of his. A helpful guy on the street called out to them that Janvier was just down the street, and as he drove towards Callen, the agent shot him. But when he came up alongside the car once he stopped, Janvier told him, "Finish it. We both want it." We had to wait a few minutes (and a "Four Months Later") to find out what happened to him, but as we saw, Janvier was locked up. "Eight feet wide. Eleven feet long. Twenty-three hour a day lockdown. Triple life sentence. Priceless." Callen greeted him as he waited in his cell. "Two hour plane ride just to see me step into a cell? Not much going on at home, I guess," Janvier remarked before spouting off about "The Count of Monte Cristo": "It's the story of a man who spent 21 years in prison only to escape and exact his revenge." And as Callen left, he called after him, "The game is not over." With Janvier alive, he was right. The game won't be over until he's dead.

Summary: Psychologist Nat Getz returns to help Sam and Deeks overcome their recent trauma and return to work. The murders of a former Navy Admiral and journalist on a plane are the focus of the rest of the team.

The "NCIS: LA" team investigated when a plane from D.C. crashed after the pilot didn't respond when air control reached out, but as they soon learned, it had been a case of sabotage. On board the plane were William Gardner, a former vice admiral who had been a key player in the War on Terror but forced into early retirement for his uncensored criticism, and a journalist, Jason Carter, who had been ghostwriting his memoir. Someone didn't want that book published. When they went to check out his apartment, they found out someone had torched it, and there wasn't anything left. His girlfriend said he had seemed stressed when they spoke four days prior. But the bad news didn't end there. Someone had virtually erased Jason as well, and security footage of the airport showed that whoever took the flight recorder had entered earlier in the day in a vehicle they reskinned as an emergency one. This was proof of sabotage.

They were able to find a digital recorder at the crash site, but unfortunately, it was hard to hear what was being said. There was something about cover-ups and war crimes, but all they could do was piece it together. If they had proof of Americans working overseas while employed by the government committing crimes, it was motive enough for their murders. They were able to lure out two men by having the news report that Jason's girlfriend had excerpts of his work, and when they broke into her home, the team was waiting. Once in custody, they lawyered up, but these were just small fish. Someone higher up ordered this. The job was done for the day, but it was far from over. Anyone else thinking this could set up a potential "NCIS"/"NCIS: Los Angeles" crossover? Their plane originated in D.C., after all, and they do still have to catch the major players.

Before getting into the heavy stuff of the episode, let's address the only real light-hearted moments. After a group date — three girls, three guys — with Kensi and Rose, Nell was getting message after message, and while at first she told Eric it was her mother, she did eventually tell him about the group date, leading to another one of those awkward conversations between the two, this time about him going on a date, no wait, not with her. Yep, they were still dancing around that. Meanwhile, poor Eric also was stuck wearing pants in "Impact," pants Hetty got him, and he hated them. "Sad face," he said when Kensi and Nell noticed. Nell even found him in his boxers, ready to incinerate them at one point, and in the end, Hetty decided to let him go back to wearing shorts. "I have sensitive thighs," he tried to explain to the others. But he had a problem: Nell had cut the pants into shorts for him, and Hetty wanted those pants back.

Now onto what we had been hoping would be in this episode. Hetty brought in Nate to talk to Sam and Deeks about their traumas, and the honest conversations continued. Though Sam insisted he knew how to bounce back fast and that he was fine, the beating he was giving the punching bag in the gym suggested otherwise and the last thing he had to say to Nate during their session revealed the truth. Sam was tired of everyone being too nice to him — Michelle didn't want him to do the dishes, Callen got amazing tickets to a Lakers game — and Nate could see where he could eventually crack. "The only way to survive is to let go. I keep a little something behind in case there's a chance to escape or attack, but the rest of me is gone. I see him whaling on that guy in the chair, I can't help him. When it's over, I reconnect and the only thing left is some scars. I'm afraid one day I may drift off and never reconnect," Sam admitted. "Then what happens to the guy in the chair?" After, Nate expressed his concern to Hetty: "The trauma and damage he experienced, it's cumulative, physically and psychologically, as you well know. If it happens too many more times, he could reach a breaking point where he can't take it anymore. You also know what could happen then." Sure, we know Sam as this tough guy, we know that he's been through traumatic experiences before, but eventually something does have to give, and what "NCIS: LA" did right was show that it could happen — and even Sam admitted it.

Speaking of Deeks, while Sam returned to work, Deeks did not — and he wasn't answering his calls or a cronut on his doorstep. Hetty surprised Deeks with a visit, and she found him unable to sleep, trying to use storm sounds and relaxation tapes. "I'll leave you to your storm," she told him after letting him know she needed to know if she needed to find his replacement. "Hopefully it'll pass without too much damage." Nate ended up finding him on the beach, and Deeks admitted that he couldn't sleep because his mind just kept running when he closed his eyes. As Nate explained, while it wasn't his first traumatic experience, something about it had more of an impact on him and his brain was trying to make sense of what happened by finding something to compare it to from his past. Because nothing came close, it was harder to resolve. What Deeks needed to do was talk about it — and sleep.

Unsurprisingly, the matter of Deeks and Kensi's partnership was a hot topic. "You're partners, it's a special relationship," Nate told him. What made their partnership unique from others — and when Deeks could truthfully answer that — everything else would become much clearer. "It's a complicated relationship," Nate said to describe Deeks and Kensi's relationship to Hetty. "He's very close to his partner." As the episode ended, Deeks once again ignored a call on his phone, but Kensi wasn't going to take no for an answer. She, like Callen, was worried about her partner, and even if he didn't talk about what happened, she was going to be there for him. She was at his door with food and that cronut he never took off his doorstep. "It's like America and France made sweet slow love and they had a pastry baby," he said. It was an adorable and purely Kensi and Deeks scene as they settled on his couch to eat and she forced him to watch a movie with her. As she began explaining the film to him, he leaned back and began falling asleep. "What happens next?" She asked as she leaned back next to him. "It's a love story," he told her.

Summary: Still grappling with his emotions, Deeks returns to field work while NCIS investigates a biotech death related to a classified vaccine.

The case in this "NCIS: LA" episode took a couple of twists before they finally figured out who was responsible for blowing up Tom Norris and his car, and while the end result wasn't too surprising — jealousy, power, and greed are always pretty good motivators — it was a fun ride. Norris had managed to evade a police chase only for his car to explode when he was hiding. His company, Norris Biotech, had been working on a ricin vaccine (oh, "Breaking Bad's" Lydia would have been very interested in that), and once Sam and Callen looked over his car, they found white phosphorus near the trigger — and Omni, a transnational criminal organization had been found with some of that phosphorus during a sting, but not all of it. Was Omni responsible for Norris' death? It was looking like they were, especially when they turned out to be the reason why Dr. Leonard from Norris Biotech was stealing the vaccine samples (and really, Sam could have been skipping and still would've run down the doctor in the Biotech parking lot) and had invested in the company after they reached phase 2 of the vaccine trials. They had his family and had offered a trade. The NCIS: LA team intervened, they set up a new meet, and, as expected, it didn't go down as expected. They cornered the guy on a roof and killed him, but he had passed the vaccine case off to a woman on the bus, and they tracked the case back to a race track, the same race track Norris had been a member of and where Kensi had had fun driving Hetty's car. But Omni hadn't been responsible for Norris' death.

It was someone in Norris' company, and who better than the person who had started the company with him? Yes, it was Paulson. He had seen it as an opportunity to get out from Norris' shadow and take control of the company. Like every other killer out there, Paulson tried to run and then just began shooting wildly. Sam easily tackled him — and he's not a giant, he's just husky. Dr. Leonard was made acting president of the company, and Omni's shares were made property of the US.

Even Deeks wasn't quite sure if he was back for good when he first came in to the office, and he was clearly not the same guy he had been before his trauma. "I'm going to take it one day at a time," he told Kensi when she found him at the shooting range. While everyone welcomed him back, Callen had his concerns, concerns he made known to Hetty, Sam, and Deeks himself. Sam thought Deeks would be fine, saying he'd seen guys go through worse, but when Deeks didn't take the shot, his excuses and his insistence that he was fine didn't convince the rest of the team. As the episode ended, Callen pulled him aside and told him that he didn't want him there until he was ready to be back. It wasn't safe for Deeks or the team for him to be second guessing himself. However, they were good once Deeks insisted he was ready to be back, and as Kensi and Deeks flirted their way off to dinner, Hetty watched with a "Welcome back, Mr. Deeks."

Summary: The NCIS:LA team finds themselves in danger while investigating a kidnapping case of a man claiming to be Callen's father.

After Eric and Nell received photos of a crime scene, Hetty interrupted the team's rock climbing contest to bring them in for the case — well, almost all of them, at least. She was sending Callen on a field trip, or at least trying to send him away since this was a "need to know" case and he wasn't cleared. But they could not have been more obvious, and Callen just walked on past Sam and Granger at the crime scene to check out the severed finger and the message left on the wall: "Callen, we have your father." Upstairs in "Michael Reinhardt's" bedroom, Callen found a box of photos showing him over the years, in his foster homes and even in LA in 2010 at the cemetery.

Eric and Nell were able to identify one of the men they were after, and it should have been no surprise to anyone who knew even a tiny bit about Callen that it was a Comescu, Vasile to be specific, and yes, he knew Callen killed his brother. If Reinhardt was really Callen's father, he was merely a bargaining chip, and... Callen had already left and went off grid. He paid Arkady a visit to ask about one of the photos, one of Arkady and Michael. He told Callen no one had ever introduced himself to him as his father. As always, Arkady was very entertaining, from the gun in his fridge — which was still cold as he stuck it in his pants — to his comment about not having any bodies in the trunk of the car at the moment as Callen set his own trap for those trying to trap him. He ended up killing both men who were following them (one was Anton Comescu), and he left Arkady with the bodies after a call to Eric before continuing on his mission.

While Callen hooked up the battery he took from Comescu's car to wires and doused clothes with gasoline over it and then set up a meet with Vasile, Kensi and Deeks interrogated Arkady, who claimed he waited around for them because he didn't want to see Callen, his friend, die that day. Then Hetty sat down with him for a chat, and Arkady told her the terms of the trade this time: consideration in the future when he might need one. He admitted he knew Michael.

Meanwhile, Callen met Vasile and directed him to the trunk for Anton, setting off an explosion and giving him the chance to get a gun from under the car. After a shootout, Sam was inside his car, which was flipped over, Granger was on the ground, bleeding from a gunshot wound, and Michael was dead after the scene that opened the episode. The final shootout ended with Callen shooting Vasile and Michael telling him, "Tell him the debt is paid," before dying.

But was Michael Reinhardt Callen's father? In the morgue, standing over his body, Hetty and Arkady explained that Reinhardt was not Reznikov and could not have been his father. But she thought he knew his father and owed him a debt. Arkady had helped refugees start over in the US, and Michael was one of them. He had said he owed his life to a Russian soldier, and it looked like he had kept track of Callen for him. He let Comescu believe he was his father to repay the debt. Someone by the name of Reznikov did exist, but he was arrested and sent to a labor camp in 1974. There was no record of his death. In the end, however, Callen got a gift he probably never expected: home movies of himself and his father. Inside the box was a note: "My family."

Summary: When a former Navy officer's girlfriend is kidnapped, Nell joins the team in the field after the ransom demand is for intelligence information. Deek's has no idea he's violated one of Hetty's rules.

Robin had just finished a 10K run when she was very publicly kidnapped at the finish line. Her boyfriend, Garrett, was an intelligence officer who specialized in highly classified drone navigation design, and it looked like the kidnapers may have wanted to trade for that. He was even lucky enough to get an early discharge and was running his own software company with his partner, Oscar. However, the pieces began to come together when a man he served with explained that Garrett wasn't exactly hurting for money like they thought. In fact, he had $75 million coming in, and it began to look like he was giving secrets to the Chinese government. Or was he?

The truth came out, and Garrett explained that they wanted him to design drones to help with farming and environmental management. But then they asked him to modify the design, and he realized it was for military application. They took Robin to force his hand, and Oscar handed off the tech to an Asian teenager nearby. They found the guys who kidnapped Robin and killed them, but she was gone. That was because they had let her go. Yes, she was looking more and more guilty by the minute, and unfortunately, we were right. Robin was running the long con on Garrett for the money, and Oscar was working with her. The best part about the case? It had to be seeing Nell in the field (and Eric's jealousy). At one point, they had commented it looked like two different cases. If that had been true, it may have been a better episode.

Meanwhile, Deeks surprised the rest of the team when he showed up to work on a motorcycle, and they had to explain the rule: no unnecessary risks. He tried to appeal to them and later to Hetty, but he was not keeping that bike. "You can donate your organs after you finish working for us," Hetty explained. While he claimed he just liked the bike and there was no hidden meaning, Kensi thought it could be traced back to his torture. Risky behavior was a common symptom of PTSD, she explained, even as he denied it, but that was a common theme throughout the episode, from him teasing her as he put on his vest before they went into the warehouse to her tackling him out of the way of the van.

Production Code: 506
Summary: Callen goes undercover at a prestigious high school after a 15-year-old hacker compromises terrorist missions.

It all began as a joint NCIS/FBI/CIA task force ready to take down a cartel with ties to terrorists walked right into an ambush. Two agents lost their lives, and a third was in the ICU. The new SecNav, who has only appeared on "NCIS" so far, assigned the team to find the mole that tipped the cartel off, and that meant Kensi and Deeks got to interview FBI Agents Jenkins and Ambrose, CIA Agent Lowell, and NCIS Agent Carter, who had sleep apnea thanks to his run-in with Kensi. They all insisted they followed protocol, and that was when Eric discovered the CIA and FBI had been hacked. "You can run, but you cannot hide from the E to the B to the T to the O," he exclaimed, proud of himself. The malware on Lowell and Ambrose's phones converted calls to texts, and with those two targeted, the team had to follow them. It looked like Ambrose had something shady going on with a teenager, but they were drawn away when Eric located the hacker, only for them to find a teenager, who kicked Deeks between the legs before trying to run. She just thought he was a pervert. Poor Deeks!

But the only thing Cindy was directly guilty of was hacking the mean girls at her school to find out what they were saying about her. As she explained, if they had Wi-Fi, she only needed their phones to get to their computers and vice versa. These mean girls also happened to be the daughters of VIP parents, and to keep an eye on things, someone had to go undercover at the school. The guys all chose Kensi, even as she protested, but she couldn't go in when she got there. In the end, Callen had to go in to deal with the "savage beasts," as the school administrator called the students, but his substitute teaching days were cut short when a teacher was found dead in the lounge. He had hanged himself after he was blackmailed for being too friendly with the star hurdler of the track team. Yes, that girl was one of the girls Cindy hacked.

Eric and Nell took a look at the girls' Facebook pages and found one "friend" whose identity couldn't be confirmed: Matt. Cindy met him in a hacker chat room, and he liked to wear baseball hats. Hacker confirmed. Eric discovered that "Matt" had hacked Cindy the previous Saturday, and she confirmed everything they suspected: he drove her for frozen yogurt after bowling — his car had Wi-Fi — and had her watch a video. They were able to get a photo from traffic footage and ID him as Ethan Bloom. He had a clean record, but he also happened to come into money lately. He was selling the information. They had no way of finding him — except Cindy. She had him meet her at the bowling alley and was ready to strangle him. When she didn't play it cool, instead of shoving him, he ran, and the team followed. Deeks chased him up stairs, but the rest of the team saw the "For Lease" sign on the side of the building and knew the door was locked, meaning Ethan had to jump back down, right to where they were waiting. Ethan was caught, the malware was destroyed, and a new joint task force was already assembled. All that was left was for Cindy to figure out how to use her skills for good. Oh, and if she had it her way, maybe look up Eric in five or six years.

Meanwhile, Deeks, after his hippie aunt sent him an article about being healthy, got himself a "walking work station," as he called it. "I just don't get kids these days," Callen commented upon seeing Deeks going one mile per hour at his desk. Deeks loved it, the others didn't care, and Hetty reluctantly "agreed" to let him keep it — until, as she claimed, it drew enough power to cause a delay in their network. Then she just got rid of it.

Production Code: 507
Summary: The NCIS:LA team must notify Homeland Security when a murder investigation exposes a larger threat to a Los Angeles-based train.

A security guard requests backup as he is chased by two men. One of the men knocks the guard out and places his body on the train tracks. The guard wakes up just as the train runs him over.

At the office, Deeks warns the team that the planet Mercury is in retrograde and he says strange things will start happening. Beal blows a whistle and calls them all into his office to review footage of the security guard's death. As the man was thrown under the train, one of the masked men said "Allahu Akbar". Hetty walks in and mentions that Al-Qaeda has targeted trains before.

Hanna and Callen meet with Jeremy Pernell, from the railway's public relations, at the crime scene. They ask for the name of the supervisor on duty last night but he says he can't give them any information. Hanna thinks that Jeremy is either stupid or trying to hide something. In the yard, Callen finds a strange dial. They send a picture to Beal who tells them what the piece is used for. The word Rome is written on it and Nell Jones says that a recently fired brakeman was named Rome. He lost his job when he tested positive for marijuana after a crash. He has no terrorist background but it looks like his room mate, Gil Bellamy, is a demolitions expert. Nell says that Bellamy has a history of commenting on bomb building websites that deal with terrorists.

Deeks and Kensi head to Rome's apartment building. They find a man leaving Rome's apartment and he runs when they yell to him. They catch him and find that he's Anthony Trager, a private detective. He was there looking for any problems that would sink Rome's unlawful firing charge. Kensi and Deeks enter the apartment and think that Rome was either very dedicated to trains or an obsessive killer. Deeks finds explosives and highlighted rail maps. Kensi thinks these guys are ready to strike.

Hanna and Callen meet with Rome's mother to ask her a few questions. She's busy and needs to catch a train. She hasn't seen her son lately and denies that he's a criminal. She didn't know that he had a room mate and insists that he doesn't do drugs. They ask for permission to access her cell in case Rome calls her.

Deeks and Kensi disguise themselves as FRA agents and meet Yolanda Campbell. Yolanda sets them up in the board room and allows them to conduct their investigation. Deeks hears a noise and they find a man shredding paper near a locked cabinet. They narrowly avoid being seen by Trager and escape into a women's bathroom. They need to hide in a stall to avoid Yolanda.

Hanna and Callen head to the Harvard House Hotel where Bellamy has stayed after getting restraining orders from his girlfriends. The owner recognizes Bellamy and gives Hanna a key to his room. Hanna opens the door and notices a wire. He ducks out of the way with Callen and they avoid an explosion that blows out the windows.

At headquarters, Hanna suggests that maybe Rome is helping Bellamy because he is being forced to against his will.

Deeks creates a small bomb to create a diversion that will allow them to search the room with the shredder and locked cabinet. They take the files and leave the building together.

Beal shows the team video of Rome and Bellamy arguing. Nell states that the company deleted all emails relating to Rome. There was one shredded letter from Rome that states his concern about dangerous materials passing through residential areas, against the law. They believe that Rome was a whistle blower and partnered with Bellamy to get revenge. Bellamy has taken it further than Rome wanted though. Rome's mother Jillian calls Hanna and tells him that one of Rome's friends stopped by. He said that Rome was okay and dropped off a box of stuff. Hanna tells her to get away in case it's a bomb.

When Hanna and Callen arrive the bomb squad tells them that the bomb wasn't real. Callen shows Jillian a photo of Bellamy and she says he's the man who delivered the package. Beal calls Hanna and tells him to step away from Jillian. He has news that a freight train has been hijacked north of town and the train full of chlorine gas is headed toward town. If it explodes Beal guesses that 100,000 people will die. Rome is the man in control of the town.

Deeks and Kensi arrive at the bus station and accost Bellamy. He resists arrest at first but they manage to bring him in for questioning. He claims he isn't the one who set the bombs up. Bellamy isn't surprised that Rome is driving an explosive train into the city.

Callen gets into contact with Rome and puts Jillian on the line with him. He didn't want anyone to die and says that he's trying to help a lot of people by rerouting the hazmat runs. He's bringing the train to the station and promises to stop there.

Nell finds that Rome's drug test was falsified and the train company was lying about their routes in order to profit. Rome was telling the truth but Bellamy was not. He told Rome to steal the train and says that there will be a huge explosion.

On the tracks, Hanna finds an IED. Any movement on the tracks will cause it to explode. Callen tries to reason with Rome to stop the train in order to stop the bomb from killing so many people. Jillian begs her son to stop and he agrees to slow down. As he puts on the brake the train speeds up. Callen realizes that Bellamy sabotaged the brake lines. Rome decides to try and disconnect the chlorine gas tanks and leave them behind. He can't disconnect them because the train is going too fast. There's nothing Rome can do and asks them to get the bomb off of the tracks.

Hanna is digging around for the bomb ignition but it could take awhile. Nell has found that Trager is corrupt and Hetty suggests that Callen play dirty to even the score. He confronts Bellamy about being paid by the train company along with Trager. The team intimidates Bellamy into revealing the location of the bomb igniter. Hanna rushes over to look for it.

The train is bearing down on Hanna but he continues to dig. He finds the C4 and the igniter. Hanna cuts the wires and jumps out of the way just in time. The train stops nearby and everyone is safe.

Deeks and Kensi find Trager, who's happy that Rome won't be suing the railroad anymore. Bellamy told them everything and they know that Trager is the one who murdered the security guard. He runs away but is quickly surrounded by cops.

The team works late to finish all the reports they need to fill out and send to several federal agencies. Deeks continues to spout his conspiracy theories but no one believes him.

Summary: With a nuclear terrorism attack looming, the team must find the stolen nuclear detection device. As the case proceeds, Hetty realizes someone from her past is back and could jeopardize her career.

A security guard locks up an office for the night. A man enters through the ceiling using a rope. He turns on a computer at one of the desks and copies data onto a hard drive. He exits the building down a fire escape ladder and gets a ride from someone on a motorcycle. A masked man walks up and starts shooting at them. The motorcycle crashes and the security guard takes the masked man down. He turns towards the man near the motorcycle but is shot by the man lying on the ground behind him who was wearing a bullet proof vest. One person gets away on a motorcycle but the man wearing the vest retrieves the hard drive.

Hanna discusses money with Callen after he spent a month building cabinets. Everyone suggests that he should have hired someone so that he could relax doing whatever he wants. Marty agrees with Callen's preference to hire a professional. Kensi says that a man who can build things for himself is sexy. Eric calls the team up using a morse code text message.

The team arrives and Eric tells them about a robbery and shooting. The security guard shot, retired Marine Gunnery Sergeant Dennis Martin, is currently in surgery. The thieves stole files that reveal the location of devices that can locate and detect sources of nuclear radiation. The devices are used to prevent terrorists from bringing nuclear bombs into the country. Hetty calls and asks that Nell send a copy of the files to her. The dead thief, Brody Stallworth, has a long list of robberies but they haven't discovered the identity of the other man. The guy who got away on the motorcycle took a bullet and is probably looking for a hospital.

Hanna and Callen break into Brody's house and find a workshop that has custom tools for their jobs. Callen doesn't understand why these burglars broke into the Department of Energy, it's not your typical break and enter. Hanna finds a garage door opener. They go outside to courtyard with multiple garages and push the button. They head inside and find the motorcycle driver that was shot. In the surveillance video he was shot once but he now has three wounds. They believe that the shooter followed him back here to finish the job. They spot a security camera and hope that it can identify the man or his vehicle.

Deeks and Kensi visit the Department of Energy where the robbery took place. The supervisor, Laura Baker, says that the computer was accessed normally and the workstation belongs to Roy Kessler. He didn't show up for work that day and Eric says he is catching a flight in twenty minutes.

Callen and Hanna question Roy about his trip and his connection to the robbery. Roy says it looks bad but he claims to have been drugged last night by two girls he was partying with. When he woke up his pass key was gone. Callen asks why he was going to run away rather than help the investigation. Roy logged into the system and panicked when he saw what had been stolen. The thieves only copied part of the database, Los Angeles County. He warns that everyone is in danger.

Nell shows the team the image of the man wearing the ski mask that was seen outside the garage. He was also spotted nearby using a payphone with his ski mask off. They have no identity yet though. Eric says Martin is out of surgery and conscious.

Hanna and Callen meet with Martin, who isn't sure he will walk again. He asks for his phone and shows them a photo he took of the shooter driving away. The license plate can be seen in the photo.

Granger talks to Hetty about pulling the Griffin file. He asks if she thinks that Griffin's behind the bomb plot but she hopes he isn't. They couldn't prove anything years ago but Granger still blames Hetty for letting him go. He states that if Griffin is behind the attack, everyone will blame Hetty, ending her career.

Callen and Hanna show up where the car driven by the shooter was last seen. Kensi and Deeks are on their way but Callen and Hanna head in. Inside they find a blank sheet with many pins all over it. Deeks and Kensi arrive and help search for any clues. Callen finds a sheet that shows routing information for Cobalt-60, which is something used to make a dirty bomb. That would be worse than a nuclear weapon and Callen says this is all about psychological harm. The weapon will be used to disrupt everything. The pins may represent every possible location but there are too many to search quickly. Hanna worries that they may already be out of time.

Hetty tells Nell to find Griffin. She hopes that he isn't involved in the case and says finding Griffin is priority one. She asks Nell to be private about the matter.

Eric shows up at the warehouse and shows Callen and Hanna that he found the shooter's identity. The man is Farat Hadad, a member of the Syrian Special Forces. Eric can't make any sense of the pins on the sheet but he receives a message that the department had an alert to a possible radiation detection. Callen says they can't leave Eric alone but Hetty shows up with a shotgun to protect him.

Callen, Hanna, Deeks and Kensi head to where the alert was. They don't immediately see anything and wonder if it's just a set up. Callen spots a man in a jacket and realizes it's Hadad. They follow him and pull their guns on him. He panics and grabs a woman as a hostage. Hanna shoots him and Kensi brings the woman to safety. Callen searches Hadad but there's no bomb.

Granger meets Callen at the scene and asks why he didn't take Hadad alive. He asks for Hetty's location and tells him there's nothing he should worry about. Hanna shows Callen a note and photo of a man found in the magazine that Hadad was holding. He believes that Hadad was going to take that man out. Callen runs a detector over Hadad in search of Cobalt-60. He finds a weak but positive signal on his clothes. Callen receives an ID on the man in the photo, it's Richard Towzen. A man that is still in Ohio. Callen believes that the alarm set off her today was just a test to see the reaction to the radiation alarm going off. Kensi says that if he has radioactive material to waste on a test there must be even more out there.

Hetty encourages Eric to continue working at solving the pins. She suggests that he ask Nell for help. Eric asks Hetty why she is here and what's going on. She explains that it's possible that the man who is behind this may be a man that slipped through her fingers. She finds a hidden button behind some books. A projector turns on that overlays a map over the pins. The pins are meant to represent vulnerable targets from San Diego to Seattle. The red flags indicate targets that are in a one mile radius of downtown Los Angeles.

The team gathers around the map of targets and say the first alarm may have been a diversion. Callen believes that whoever set up the test must be watching from somewhere nearby. Nell looks at pedestrians who are nearby watching the scene. Nell recognizes one man as Griffin. The man enters a subway with Hanna and Callen following close behind. Griffin moves onto the tracks rather than be arrested. He trips and falls and Hanna and Callen move onto the tracks to lift him out before he is hit by an oncoming train.

Hetty faces off against Griffin in questioning. He remembers her as the woman who ruined his life. Hetty says that he swore he was innocent yet they are back in the same position. She offers that he help to save lives in order to help his children. Hetty asks what the target is and Griffin says he doesn't know. She tells him it's over but he was just running scenarios and collecting data. He needed the money but doesn't know their target. Griffin says the data is encrypted but it won't take the Russians long to crack it.

Eric informs the team that the house Griffin identified belongs to the Russian consulate and is therefore considered Russian soil. Callen says that isn't a problem as long as they are caught. He does warn that they could be in for a lot of trouble if anything goes wrong.

The team plans an elaborate ruse in order to make the Russians leave the house. They leave the house out the front door while Callen and Hanna sneak in the back. There is still a man in the house and he walks into a room where a man is doing something on a computer. One man tells him that he can continue working on the plane. Hanna heads up the stairs and creates a diversion to draw the man out. Hanna and Callen both attack a man and knock them out. Callen grabs a hard drive and makes his way out. Kensi tries to prevent the Russians from entering the house but one man flashes a gun and shoves his way in. Callen and Hanna jump out of an upstairs window onto a truck that Deeks has driven up the driveway. They make their getaway as the Russians shoot at them.

Granger enters the headquarters and tells the team they better not have been involved in the gunfight with the Russians. They retrieved the technology but Granger believes it will destroy relations with the Russians. Hetty points out that they can't say anything without admitting that they stole the files to begin with. Granger gets off the phone with the secretary and tells them that they dodged a bullet this time.

Callen considers getting a tattoo but Hanna thinks it's not something he would actually do. Gary gathers everyone and says that Naval Intelligence Officer Gary Leonida was found in the rehab's pool. He was on leave from Kabul for the last two months. He checked himself into the rehab that was known to be used by the rich and famous. SecNav is concerned because Gary knew sensitive information. It's suspected that after he overdosed he stumbled into the pool. Records show that Gary had a visitor the day before he died, Val Wrinkler.

Callen and Hanna meet with Martin Lake, manager of the rehab. Martin says that usually in these cases a friend brings in the drugs. Gary hadn't been there long so no one really knew him yet. They asks Martin for surveillance footage from the last three days and he goes to get it. Hanna finds marks in the grass that look like a body was dragged.

Kensi and Deeks arrive at Winkler's and hear screams from inside. They enter with their guns drawn but find it's just a video game on the TV. They ask Winkler to come out from a room and he puts an axe through the door. Deeks kicks the door in and they bring him in for questioning. Back at the office, Kensi and Deeks question Winkler. Callen and Hanna don't believe what Winkler says about the friendship he had with Gary. Winkle denies visiting Gary yesterday and instead says he saw him three days ago. Yesterday he was in Vegas and bought some crystal meth. He came home and really got into the video game, so much that he attacked them with the axe. He knows how screwed up he was but he wanted Gary to get better.

The team reviews surveillance footage and finds that unless the footage was tampered with, Winkler did not visit the rehab center. Gary's autopsy report states that he had a type of truth serum in his system.

Hetty wants Kensi and Deeks to go undercover as nutritionists to Tranquility Villa. She changes her mind and decides to send Deeks as a patient.

Nell finds Anwir Faziz, an exotic car dealer and suspected terrorist financier. He recently loaned Martin Lake a large sum of money which has still not been repaid. Martin owes Faziz huge and finding out Gary was an intelligence officer may have lead him to inform Faziz.

At Faziz's car dealership, Callen and Hanna approach Faziz's office. They don't expect any of Faziz's bodyguards to be at his legitimate office but they are stopped by a man with a gun. He tells them to come outside with him. Outside, Hanna recognizes the guard as Homeland special agent Tom Panetti. Callen explains why they are there and Tom agrees to investigate. He will cover by saying they were muscle sent by someone Faziz is having trouble with.

Kensi meets with the Marcos the chef for the rehab. She thinks all of the food is unhealthy and complains about it. Deeks walks by with a woman who is giving him a tour of facility.

Eric finds that the footage of Winkler outside the rehab had its time code changed. He wondered what else may have been falsified and shows that the footage from outside Gary's room was changed. Nell informs Kensi, who moves to Martin's office to connect his computer to Eric's. Martin enters while the files are being transferred to Eric but Kensi holds him off long enough to finish the transfer.

Hetty tells the team that Gary had a very high level of intelligence clearance. Eric says Martin is not working with Faziz but he knows someone who might. He shows video of a woman outside of Gary's room one hour before her death. She looks in and is chased away by a man inside. Hetty says Deeks needs to find the woman.

At the rehab, Deeks talks to one of the other patients and describes the woman seen in the video. Her name is Heather Williams but she went missing last night. The patient says that Heather loved the Chateau.

Hanna and Callen find Heather's car parked outside the Chateau. They approach the room she is staying in and spot two armed men enter before them. They run to the room but the men are holding Heather hostage. She escapes one of the men's clutches and runs onto the balcony. She climbs the ladder to the roof while Hanna and Callen have a gun fight with one of the men. Callen chases one man outside but he drives away in a stolen car. Hanna chases the other man onto the roof and tackles him before he gets to Heather. He lets the man go to save Heather from falling off of the roof.

Callen questions Heather about the man she saw the night of Gary's death. She saw Phil, the new meditation teacher in Gary's room. Gary was loaded with a bottle of pills next to him. When Heather saw the look in Phil's eyes she ran away. She went to hide at the Chateau. Hanna offers to help Heather find a new rehab center.

Nell discovers that Phil's true name is Robert Hayes. He has previous arrests for protesting and is part of an extreme right wing group. The group believes that no one is innocent in middle eastern countries.

The team enters Hayes' house but he's not there. One of the rooms contains maps of Pakistan and plans to bomb it. Callen connects the computer to Eric, who has bad news. Hayes used the information gained from Gary to take control of a US drone over Afghanistan.

Eric tells the team that their only hope is to ground all the drones because it's too hard to identify the one that Hayes is planning to use. Hetty suggests that an easier and quicker route is to find Hayes before he can do anything. Eric mentions that a couple hours ago, Hayes opened a web page for a nearby motel.

The team arrives at the motel and immediately gunshots are fired at them. They fire back and approach the room. Deeks fires in from the back to create a diversion. The team enters the front and takes out all of the men. There was a laptop open on the desk but thankfully arrived before Hayes could launch a drone attack.

The team celebrates outside of the motel when Eric calls. He says a drone has just been taken over in Afghanistan. Callen believes that Hayes was just part of a set up. The drone is heading towards a small village just over the Pakistani border, that is the home of Pakistan's ambassador to the US. SecNav scrambled jets but there's no guarantee they will get there in time. Nell has no evidence of a co-conspirator but Hanna thinks there must be some evidence at Hayes' home.

The team searches through Hayes' house for any information. Kensi recognizes a cereal bar as one from the rehab center that only one person ate, the woman who gave Deeks the tour, Peggy. The team arrests her at the rehab and Hanna aborts the launch with seconds left to launch.

Peggy is the one who set up Hayes so that she would avoid capture. It didn't work though thanks to Kensi. Deeks invites Kensi out to dinner and she agrees. They dine at a nice restaurant and Kensi thinks there's a reason they went to such a nice place. She thinks that he wanted to ask her out on a date without specifically saying so. He admits that he doesn't want to be at dinner right now, he would rather be at his place with her. She gets up to leave and he follows.

Summary:	Callen and Sam enlist the help of a Gurkha, an elite Nepali soldier specializing in knife fighting, to retrieve a missing thumb drive. Meanwhile, Kensi and Deeks struggle to find a balance in their partnership.

At a naval base in Bahrain, a man enters a room and opens a safe. As he places a flash drive and a gun inside he is attacked by someone wearing all black. The attacker beheads the man and takes the flash drive.

Hanna and Callen are shocked when they find Deeks working when they arrive at headquarters. They ask Kensi why he might be so tired but she has nothing to say. Callen points out that she's wearing the same shirt she had on yesterday. Eric calls them in for debriefing while Hetty watches them all from above. She tells Granger that the price has gone up but he says something else has come up. He hands her a file and says she won't like it. The folder is about a classified project White Ghost. She says it was only a matter of time.

Nell explains to the team how Hill was murdered right before he was set to deliver a plan on how to seize Pakistan's nuclear arsenal. The team worries that this information could be used for nefarious purposes. Callen has been to the base and says it's secured by warriors known as Gurkhas. The knife used to murder Hill was a knife that belongs to Gurkhas. The flash drive is now being tracked to a hotel in Hollywood.

Hanna and Callen enter the hotel and approach a room. Deeks and Kensi enter the room next door because it's not sure which room the flash drive is in. A man shoots at Kensi from the parking lot and the team moves to take him down. Callen shoots a man in the hallway but he doesn't have the flash drive. Kensi finds a scared little girl and tries to comfort her. A man holds his gun to Kensi and orders her to drop her weapons. The man lets the girl and Deeks moves towards them. Kensi orders him to take the shot but he refuses. A car pulls up and the man gets in. Kensi picks her weapons up and punches Deeks in the face for not taking the shot.

The team returns to headquarters and Eric tells them the GPS signal has been disabled. Nell states that the man who was shot was from Pakistan. Callen thinks that Pakistan tried to frame India for the murder of Hill. There are still two Pakistani agents on the loose with the flash drive so Callen tells Eric to find them.

Hanna and Callen explains to Hetty what happened at the hotel. She asks if their team is ready and Callen says he hopes so. Hetty doesn't think hope is an option.

Deeks confronts Kensi in the shooting range. She points out that he would have taken the shot 24 hours ago. He agrees that he would of but it's not yesterday anymore. Eric walks in on their conversation and says the LAPD found the body of one of the shooters from the hotel.

At the scene of the crime they discover that the dead shooter doesn't have the flash drive and he was killed with one cut. Callen suspects that the shooters were ambushed by Gurkhas who didn't like being framed. Hanna thinks the killer is closer than they think and he looks over at a man that matches the physical description of a Gurkha. As they walk over the man runs away. They chase after him and he pulls a knife in an alley. Hanna and Callen fight with him and manage to knock his knife away. He doesn't have the flash drive and admits to being a Gurkha. He shouts something out and Hanna says that it's their war cry and the Gurkhas are coming.

Callen and Hanna question the Gurkha, Jemadar Thapa. He admits that India's minister of Defense sent him to clear the Gurkha name. Thapa says he is only here to carry out his orders, no more and no less. Callen suggests that Thapa actually has the flash drive.

Hetty says the White Ghost is a dangerous man and it will be a dangerous mission. That's why Granger will handle it himself.

Nell thinks that the remaining shooter will try to take a private plane out of the country. She searches for the car in parking lots near airports and finds a match. Hetty enters and asks her to get Callen.

Callen gets off the phone with Hetty and tells the team that they are to take Thapa with them. SecNav has ordered them to treat him as a member of the team. Deeks takes Thapa's handcuffs off and welcomes him to the team. He tells Thapa that he trusts him and the two become friends. Thapa promises not to let him down.

Callen, Hanna and Kensi head to the airport in search of the remaining shooter. Kensi prepares a sniper rifle and refuses to talk about her personal life. Callen spots the man and tells Deeks to move in when he sees the flash drive. Deeks sneaks around a building with Thapa to get a better view. The man exchanges money with a pilot but then shoots him. Callen tells Deeks to move in but Thapa is already gone. The man fires at Deeks when he tries to stop him. Callen and Hanna move in behind Deeks and they search for the man and Thapa. They find the man dead but no sign of Thapa. The flash drive is gone.

Hanna reminds Deeks that he's not in this alone. Thapa is loose and now the most wanted man in LA. Deeks regrets not taking the shot that would have stopped the man so Callen suggests that he get them back in the game. Deeks thinks he knows a way to get Thapa and the flash drive back.

Deeks tells Hetty that he can make it right. He doesn't think Thapa will sell the flash drive but will instead bring it back to India. The only way to get a fake passport is from a gangster that Deeks had mentioned to him. He once went undercover as a lawyer to try and bust Talita Pambakian. She found out another officer was undercover and shot him in the head. Deeks wants to reestablish contact and beat Thapa to her.

Kensi doesn't like the mission because there is no way to contact Deeks if something goes wrong. He wants to pretend they are just two ordinary people and he asks her to dinner. He can't take a gun with him undercover but she offers him her knife.

Deeks enters Talita's storefront posed as Marty Finch, a lawyer. The NCIS team listens from outside but the signal is weak because the walls are made of thick concrete. Deeks hides the knife as the security guards pat him down. He meets with Talita and says that an undercover cop is coming for her. He describes Thapa and offers to work for a percentage rather than a fee this time. She says he must earn his pay and has her guards escort him to the freezer in the next room.

In the freezer, Thapa is tied up by his hands. Talita asks Deeks to prove his loyalty and hands him a gun. He takes the gun but says he doesn't shoot people. Talita informs him that it's only loaded with one bullet and if he doesn't shoot Thapa he will also be hanging there. Deeks raises the weapon.

The team outside loses contact with Deeks when he enters the freezer. Kensi gets out of the car and rushes the building. She takes out the security guards outside and heads in as Hanna and Callen cover her. Kensi rushes in but Talita shoots Thapa. Deeks takes Talita out and carries Thapa out of the freezer. Hanna finds the flash drive in Talita's coat pocket.

Kensi meets with Deeks outside. She says they will figure things out and talk about their situation. She promises to talk if he promises to be patient with her. Deeks leaves in the ambulance with Thapa. On the way to the hospital, Thapa tells him that he will never forget what he did for him. Thapa advises that Deeks take his time with Kensi and she will wait for him.

While waiting for Deeks at the headquarters, Granger tells her to pack her things. There's a plane waiting for her because she has been reassigned. She asks Hetty if it's true and learns she will be back when the job is done. Hanna asks Hetty what it's about but she can't say.

Deeks returns to find Kensi gone. Hetty informs him of the classified mission she is taking part in. He asks how long she will be gone and Hetty says indefinitely.

Summary: When a former Romanian Communist leader and suspected war criminal is discovered to be living in Los Angeles under a false identity, the NCIS:LA team must locate him before he disappears again.

While a family is out to dinner at a restaurant, a woman makes eye contact with the father as she walks by. He excuses himself and walks downstairs. Soon after, an FBI team enters and the woman says the man ran downstairs. They search the building but can't find him.

Hanna meets Callen in the gym but finds him sleeping. He suggests he sleep at home rather than avoiding work outs. Hanna hears Hetty's voice and turns to see that she is remote broadcasting video onto a mobile device. They don't feel comfortable that she can follow them even when she's not there.

Eric and Nell debrief the team about former Romanian war criminal Anton Zevlos. He helped in a human trafficking program that also harvested organs from the slaves. The Romanian government believes he has been living in Los Angeles as John Vasile for the last twenty years. No one has been searching for him because many war criminals remained in Romania. After the FBI failed to bring him in the NCIS team was asked to bring him in. Callen suggests they start by talking to his wife. Deeks offers to go with Hanna and Callen but they say they're good.

When they arrive at the wife's house, Hanna thinks they should have brought Deeks because of how lonely he is now that Kensi's gone. They greet Carla Shear, the Vasile's attorney and she lets them into the house. Maggie Vasile thinks it's a misunderstanding and had no idea about his past. She thought that Anton fled Romania to escape the country. Callen pushes a button on Anton's desk and a secret compartment opens. It is full of rifles and propaganda. Callen finds information that shows Anton became paranoid about 15 years ago and started tracking friends and enemies. Hanna notice two handguns missing and believes Anton has them on him.

Deeks bothers Nell and Eric in the office. He asks them about Kensi and how to get in touch with her. There isn't any way though. Deeks gets scared when Hetty's robot rolls up and asks to see him in her office.

In Afghanistan, Kensi gets out of a humvee at an American base. She enters her lab and meets her coworkers for the first time. She introduces herself to Rachel Harris, who is surprised that she works for Hetty. No one there knows what Kensi's mission is though so Rachel tells her to get comfortable while she figures out what's going on.

In Hetty's office, she asks Deeks how he has been. He misses his partner and wonders if it's his fault that she was sent away. He returns to Nell, who tells him of another man who is a former KGB agent. Michael Bell owns a charter company and Anton may use him to escape.

Hanna and Callen follow Anton's vehicle in a high speed chase. It ends when Anton hits a fire hydrant. They approach the vehicle and find two kids inside. The driver says that a woman gave it to them because her husband cheated on her. Hanna believes that Shear is the one responsible for this since Maggie has been covered by the FBI. Callen calls Deeks to tell him that the Range rover was a diversion. He hasn't seen anything but just then he spots a man get out of the car. Nell identifies him as Donald Banks, a CIA agent. Callen asks Eric to shut down all flights from Bell's company and also asks him to find Shear. Eric states that Shear has just arrived at Anton's house and they also have new intel.

Back at headquarters, Eric explains to Hanna and Callen that it looks like Shear is being paid under the table. Nell thinks Shear is their best bet to find Anton. The team sets out to find both of these suspects.

In Afghanistan, Kensi approaches a computer but a man tells her it's classified. She guesses him to be the man that left a note in the fridge about his food.

In the headquarters interrogation room, Deeks questions Shear, who has voluntarily come in to talk. As Hanna and Callen watch, Nell calls Callen with new information. Deeks confronts Shear with the fact that she is sleeping with a client, Anton. He asks when she learned about his Romanian past but she refuses to talk anymore. Callen and Hanna enter and convince her to stay. She wasn't aware that he was wanted for trafficking humans, especially children. Shear admits that Anton had $68,000,000 invested in real estate and he won't leave without a guarantee to live the same life. They think he may foreclose his properties for any amount in order to get cash fast.

Granger finds Kensi at the base and shows her a high powered sniper rifle. He tells her that it's now her gun and explains the target. A task force will find the target and she is to kill him.

Hanna and Callen track Anton to the only branch of his bank in town. They enter after him and see him talking to the manager. Anton takes out a gun and fires at them. He throws a grenade and takes the manager as a hostage. Anton shoots the manager and runs away. Callen tells Hanna to go on while he looks at the injured. Hanna rushes outside but can't find Anton anywhere.

Back at NCIS headquarters, Hetty tells the team that they won't find Anton. SecNav told them not to pursue him any longer but Callen refuses to stop searching for him. Hetty tells Deeks to release Shear. Hanna believes that Anton used his friends in the Romanian government to put pressure on the American government to turn a blind eye.

Eric tells the team that Banks spent a good portion of the 80s in Romania. Bell has one flight chartered today and it's to Costa Rica with two passengers. Callen believes that Banks maybe friends with Anton. They decide to lift the ban on flights.

Nell poses as a desk worker at the airport and greets Banks when he arrives. She sends him through and says his friend left a message to go on along without him. Banks boards the plane where Deeks is pretending to be the captain. When Banks bends over, Deeks grabs his gun and orders him to stay seated. Callen and Hanna are there as well and they tell Banks the plane is about to crash. As they prepare to jump, Banks confesses everything. After he admits that he snuck Anton into the country, Callen and Hanna return to the cockpit to land the plane safely.

The team thinks SecNav shut down the search for Anton because he threatened to reveal CIA operatives abroad. Callen thinks Anton's only choice is to lay low and receive help from Shear. He tells Nell to alert the coast guard and harbor master where Shear was seen.

Shear meets Anton at the marina and he denies the child trafficking allegations. Callen and Hanna arrive soon after and chase them. Anton holds Shear hostage when the move in on him. Callen tells Hanna to take the shot. Hanna shoots the gun and then Anton. He's glad that Anton will face a war crimes tribunal and spend the rest of his life in jail.

In Afghanistan, Granger asks Kensi how the rifle is. She doesn't like that the other members around her don't seem to like her.

Back at NCIS headquarters, everyone avoids the Hetty bot that roams the halls. Hanna and Callen end up running into Hetty herself though. She just got off the phone with the CIA and they told her that Banks was arrested along with Anton. They deny any knowledge of these events though. Hetty knows they disobeyed her orders and gives them tomorrow off, without pay. She warns that she doesn't play favorites, even under extraordinary circumstances.

Deeks works late on paper work but he actually just views photos of himself with Kensi. Meanwhile in Afghanistan, Kensi does the same thing.

Production Code: 512
Summary: NCIS delves into the reasons behind an attack on a senator's daughter. Deeks partners up with Nell to back up Sam and Callen in their effort provide security for the daughter. One of Kensi's co-workers gives her the ideal holiday gift.

Lily Lockhart prepares a meal when her dog runs to the door barking. She goes to see what it's doing when she notices the dog is outside. A man in a motorcycle helmet tries to grab her but she escapes to a room. The man grabs her and pulls a gun out. Her dog attacks the man, who she notices has a scar on his neck, and runs out of the house. Lily runs to a woman for help. There's a gunshot and the sound of a bike taking off.

At the office, Callen and Hanna discuss Christmas decorations when Deeks walks in. Eric calls them over to be debriefed about a case. Nell describes that

Lily Lockhart, daughter of Senator Lockhart, had a home invasion. Her dog is still in surgery after being shot. The state department wants to know if it's more than just a home invasion. He's in LA with police protection because he's been spearheading an investigation into China's cyber warfare unit. Hetty arrives and asks Hanna and Callen to secure Lily for an interview. She also asks Deeks and Nell to interview the senator.

At the police station, Hanna and Callen pick up Lily. She hasn't talked to her dad in two years and wonders why he always seems to mess up her life.

Deeks and Nell visit Senator Lockhart at his office. He thinks China's cyber warfare unit needs to be monitored. He says that a government contracting firm was the one to first alert him to chatter about death threats. The company, Nigra, are specialists in cyber warfare and deemed the chatter a threat. Nell asks about Lily but Lockhart says she didn't want to talk to him.

On the way back to the office, Lily talks to Hanna and Callen about their work. She works as a private chef with slow cooking. A truck blocks their path and a car speeds up behind them. Hanna tells Lily to duck while he shoots at gunmen that exit the truck. One man shoots the engine before Hanna takes him out. More masked gunmen from the car head toward them as they take cover behind their car. Hanna puts a stick of dynamite in the gas tank and the three of them run away. Two of the remaining gunmen are taken down by the explosion. They enter a nearby building and inform Hetty of what happened. Eric sends a team to take down the remaining gunmen.

In Afghanistan, Kensi greets Granger in the office. Everyone else has been sent on vacation but Kensi has a job to do. Granger explains signs that point to an upcoming attack. Kensi knows they need to find the White Ghost soon. Vostanik Sabatino enters the room and greets Kensi. He's been here three months working undercover. Kensi explains that she was brought in as a sniper to take down the White Ghost but Sabatino worries for her. The guy she replaced was murdered and Sabatino was the one who found the headless body.

Armed men enter the building that Hanna, Callen and Lily are hiding in. Lily jumps into a dumpster while there's a shootout. Callen says to take them alive but Hanna kills one of the men. Lily points out that the man who attacked her had a similar neck scar. Callen takes a photo and sends it to Eric. They make their way out of the building and spot a man with binoculars on top of a bridge. Callen believes the men are following them by tracing their phone signals. They dispose of their phone by placing their phones in a bag and putting it into the sewer that heads to the ocean. They are alone but can't be traced now.

Hetty asks Eric if there's any information about the photo Callen sent him. The man is Malik Terzik, a Bosnian mercenary, but Eric doesn't know how he's connected to the Lockharts. Eric wishes Nell was with him but she's covering for Kensi while she works an important mission.

Kensi confronts Granger about why he didn't inform her of the man who's place she's taking. He didn't tell her because it didn't affect the mission. He hoped that she wouldn't have to be told that to avoid having that happen to her. She leaves with Granger to go work Intelligence. Sabatino works alone so isn't coming with her but offers to do something later.

Lily panics when she learns that Hanna and Callen only have two bullets between them. Hanna assures her that they'll be fine and Callen thinks he knows of a way to get more bullets.

Deeks and Nell head to the area where Callen's and Hanna's phones were last traced. Nell says if they are out of ammo, Callen may know an ammo cache nearby. She doesn't know the location though.

Hetty meets Lockhart and tells him that Lily is under the watch of her best agents and they will bring her home. She shows him a photo of Malik but he doesn't recognize him. Lockhart did a lot of work in Bosnia and Hetty is looking into that as well. He feels bad that he can't do anything to help Lily.

Callen finds the cache and disguises himself as power company employees along with Hanna. They convince some other workers to move to another street. Once the men are gone, Callen accesses the cache. They reload their weapons. Callen is followed as he walks up a street. The man chases after him but loses him in a parking garage. Once the man puts his gun away, Hanna and Callen order him to stop moving. A car rolls up behind him with Nell and Deeks inside. Hanna arrests the man.

In Afghanistan, Kensi and Granger return back to base and see a Christmas tree. Sabatino decorated and cooked while they were gone. He tells them that mail arrived and placed it in their rooms. Kensi finds a wrapped present on her bed.

Callen and Hanna call Hetty and tells her that the man they arrested refuses to talk. They suspect he's afraid of Ludomir Susic, the leader of the Bosnian mercenary group he is part of. Susic has never surfaced in America until now and he was spotted at LAX. The arrested man's phone has only contacted one phone number, Susic's. Lockhart has disappeared and Nell points out that his bank account received a $200,000 transfer yesterday. Hanna thinks they may be looking at this whole situation wrong and suggests that he's working with Susic. Lily was targeted to motivate Lockhart to carry through with the deal. Hetty sends the team to Pershing Square when Eric discovers that's where Susic's phone is.

At Pershing Square, Deeks spots Susic heading towards Lockhart. Nell transmits the conversation to the other agents. Susic threatens to eventually find Lily but Lockhart says he will kill him first. Susic claims that his men will shoot Lockhart and there's already a bank account that will brand Lockhart a traitor. Lockhart asks why he's doing this and Susic explains that in 1994, Lockhart's unit killed a Bosnian warlord. Nell sees the spotter and the team moves in to take down Susic's men. Everyone takes a man down while Deeks gets Lockhart to safety.

Back at the NCIS headquarters, Lockhart is reunited with Lily. They are happy to see each other again and Lily's dog is also brought back to her. Lockhart thanks Hanna and Callen for going above and beyond the call of duty. Lily thanks them for all they did.

At the Christmas party, Deeks tells Nell that she did a great job out in the field. Everyone enjoys a glass of Nell's strong eggnog and makes a toast to Kensi.

Meanwhile, Kensi opens her gift from Hetty. She thinks it's Christmas cake but there's a phone inside. She uses it and it calls Hetty. It's a secure line and no one knows about it. Hetty asks Kensi to smoke out a potential traitor among her task force. There's one other number on her phone to a secure line. Hetty tells Deeks to check his desk drawer because she left him a gift. He sits down and opens the ringing box. He answers the phone and talks to Kensi on the line.

Summary: Kensi and Granger reunite with the rest of the Los Angeles NCIS team when the murder of a federal agent in Los Angeles might be tied to a possible terrorist attack.

A man in a car photographs a few people who leave a store. He zooms in on one photo of a woman. An angry man bangs on his window and calls him a pervert for photographing his wife. The man parks in a parking lot and connects the camera to his laptop. As he makes a call, a man smashes in his window and places a bomb on the dashboard. The attacker calmly walks away while the car explodes.

Hanna and Callen walk into the office and find Deeks trying to learn Danish. He really wants to learn a foreign language to augment the team's skillset but Hanna and Callen already seem to know every language. Deeks receives a call from LAPD. There's something at a crime scene they want the team to take a look at.

At the scene of the burned out car, Hanna guesses that an explosion blew the car up. Some burned papers were found and Deeks discovers a crispy camera. Hanna finds a pin that belongs to an organization that investigates financial ties to terrorism. He calls Eric to see if the organization, Fincen, has any agents in LA. Callen looks through the burned papers and believes some photos are of Taliban commanders.

Back at the office, Eric debriefs the team about the only Fincen agent in LA, Stuart Green. He was supposed to get in contact with Fincen after he arrived in LA but Fincen never heard from him. He had previously been working in Kabul. Callen suggests they contact the Fincen team in Kabul but Hanna says it won't be easy.

In Kabul, two masked people enter a store. The owner of the store thinks it's a robbery but the intruders say it isn't. The masked people reveal themselves to be Granger and Kensi. Granger tells the Fincen agents that they have a message from Green. The storeowners say they better have a good reason for being there because they have spent years building their covers.

The team prepares to have a video conference with Granger and Fincen Agent Kazimi. Green was in LA trying to plug a leak. Fincen went undercover to track money that the Taliban was using and they tracked it to a broker in LA. Granger asks the NCIS team to find the leak and plug it with everything they have.

After the conference call, Nell shows everyone the photos that were recovered from the burned camera. The photos are pixellated but are still able to be identified as rug patterns. There's only one Afghan rug store in town and Callen hopes that it's also their broker.

Deeks, Callen and Hanna stake out the rug shop. Hanna takes photos of man that Eric identifies as the owner of the shop, Behnam Navid. He opened the store three years ago, right around the time IED attacks started happening in Afghanistan. To get inside, Deeks decides to go undercover as Sven, an interior designer. He goes inside with Hanna who pretends to be a club owner who hired Sven to decorate his club. Deeks snaps photos of a man in a backroom and Nell identifies him as Behnam's son, Ehsan. Eric says it looks like there are four or five calls a day to a broker in Afghanistan. They leave the store after Ehsan leaves with a gun tucked into his waistband. Ehsan notices Deeks and Hanna following him and he makes a run for it. They chase after him and Callen corners him in an alley with a car. Ehsan's gun isn't loaded but his duffel bag is full of money. They arrest him and bring him in for questioning.

At the office, Hanna and Callen question Ehsan. He claims to have been going to the bank to deposit the cash. He is proud of the business and says it is used by immigrants to send money back home. Ehsan has two sisters and his mother in Afghanistan who he sends money to. He shows the agents video of the family wishing his father a happy birthday. Hanna shows a photo of Green and Ehsan recognizes him as a customer. He says the brokers in Afghanistan would never do business with the Taliban. It's completely anonymous though so he can't be sure and worries that this may effect his chances at getting citizenship. Callen offers to help him if they can have access to his records. Ehsan agrees to the deal.

Nell compares codes from Ehsan's records alongside those in Afghanistan. The Fincen agents were able to track it to Dr. Abdul Sadati, who works at a tuberculosis clinic near Kensi's location. The clinic is run by an American charity that has a good reputation. Callen suggests that someone could have infiltrated the organization. The charity is throwing a benefit and the team plans to use Ehsan to identify their target. Callen tells Deeks that his new partner is Ehsan.

Ehsan and Deeks prepare for the benefit with the help of Hetty. Deeks explains this is the first time he has partnered with a civilian and tells Ehsan about his partner Kensi. Finally ready the two head out. Hetty asks Deeks to keep Ehsan safe.

At the benefit, Nell works the front desk and welcomes guests in. Callen is disguised as a Russian doctor who was working in a leper colony. Inside, Deeks and Ehsan scan the attendees for anyone who may be a customer of his business. A woman watches the two of them walk through the room.

Hetty advises Granger and Kensi on how to act outside of the clinic where Sadati works. If it's actually a clinic they need to be careful not to hurt anyone. If it's a front for terrorists they will be in danger.

At the benefit, the woman following Deeks introduces herself as Anna Chang, the executive director of the charity. She thinks they are paparazzi since they were added to the list last minute without her approval. She asks if they will leave or be forced out by security. Ehsan steps in and claims that his younger sister was saved by one of her clinics. She allows the two of them to stay. Deeks congratulates Ehsan on a job well done. Ehsan spots the man they are looking for and Eric identifies him as Roger Ali. He works for a finance company that dispenses funds to overseas clinics, including the one that Sadati works at. Hetty orders Callen to take Ali alive and discretely. Callen approaches Ali but is forced to punch him when he resists. He pretends to be a doctor seeing to him.

The team in Afghanistan breaches the clinic and finds that it's not a clinic. Kensi finds C4 along with the parts needed for bombs.

Callen and Hanna interrogate Ali about his real identity. They accuse him of skimming funds to send to the Taliban but he claims it went to medical clinics. Callen shows him a photo of Green but he claims innocence. Hanna offers him the choice of talking or Guantanamo. Ali isn't afraid of prison though and refuses to speak.

Kensi receives a photo of Deeks and smiles to herself. Granger calls her over to have a look in a locked cabinet. They open it to find numerous explosives and phones used in the bombs. She opens a notebook that looks like a ledger. Granger wants to finish this so Kensi offers to take the ledger to the Fincen agents.

Ehsan requests to borrow the suit from the agents so that he can impress a girl. They agree to let him borrow the suit and hope that Hetty doesn't find out.

The NCIS team goes on a video conference call with the team in Afghanistan. Kazimi says they have bad news, the ledger indicates payment going from Afghanistan to LA. It has been flowing that way for 18 months and Callen worries that the Taliban are planning for an attack. Kazimi has even worse news, the payments have stopped. Hanna knows this either means the mission is no longer viable or it's about to happen. Granger tells them to alert Homeland Security but because of the anonymity of the broker, there is no way to tell who they are looking for.

Eric shows the team one of Green's photos that has been recovered. It shows a black van with a replaced grey door. He found the van one block away from an auditorium that is about to hold a naturalization ceremony. It's too late to cancel and there will be over 1200 people there. Nell traces Ehsan's cell and Deeks leaves to go pick him up.

Deeks interrupts Ehsan's date and tells him that they need him to identify another customer. Ehsan understands the risk and volunteers to go.

At the auditorium, Ehsan does his best to look for someone he may recognize. He spots the man and Deeks and Hanna move in towards him. Callen prepares his sniper rifle in case he needs to take the man out. Ehsan tells them they have a problem because he spots a woman that always entered the store with the man they are chasing. Callen tells Ehsan to leave the building after Deeks moves towards the woman. Hanna stands behind the man and tells Callen that the man has a deadman's switch. Deeks reports that his target also has the switch. Callen orders them to grab the switches to allow him to shoot them. They must do it at the same time to avoid the bombs going off. Deeks and Hanna both grab the switches while Callen shoots both targets. Hanna's target set the bomb so he only has 30 seconds to defuse it. Ehsan rushes up and offers to hold the switch while Hanna defuses the bomb. Hanna defuses the bomb safely.

Kensi watches reports of the NCIS team's successful removal of the bomb threats. She sends Deeks a text. He smiles when he receives her photo. Ehsan says it must be a happy day for all those who have become citizens today. Hetty arrives and tells him to keep the suit on. Ehsan thinks he's in trouble but Hetty brought Judge Malcolm Smith to swear in Ehsan as a citizen. Hetty has also started the process for obtaining a visa for the rest of his family. Ehsan doesn't need to repeat the oath because he already has it memorized.

Moss (Transient/Cop), Janine Kawasaki (Hostess)
Production Code: 514
Summary: A suspect in NCIS' murder investigation of two former military contractors puts one of the team in serious peril. Callen gets set up on a blind date.

Two former D7 guys were found dead, and the team was led to Robert Brown, formerly D7. Unlike his former coworkers, he wasn't working for the new D7, Durendell Securities, but people wanted him dead. When they brought him in, he said bad stuff went down in Afghanistan and wanted protection, which he didn't think they could give him since D7 had the Defense Department in their back pocket and half of the Pentagon on speed dial. However, when Deeks and Granger (he of the facial hair that made him look like a pirate, according to Eric) intercepted a Durendell employee breaking into Brown's house, we got what was maybe the best Granger moment yet as he fired next to the guy's ear and threatened to put the next bullet in his head for answers. It turned out Brown was a psycho who had killed three women in Afghanistan... and they had left Nell to watch him.

As we've seen before, Nell can take care of herself, and she did, stabbing him several times even as he had control of the gun and an arm around her throat, but it was a good thing Sam and Callen arrived when they did. "Not bad for an analyst," Granger commented of one of the strange meerkats he thought could use a window or an exercise wheel earlier in the episode.

Meanwhile, Kensi's arc in Afghanistan just kept getting more and more interesting, meaning we became more and more worried for her, especially with what we saw from Hetty and Granger in "War Cries." While Granger told Deeks Kensi was "doing good" in Afghanistan (and turned down his offer to use his vacation time to back her up), he did wonder why Hetty insisted on sending her and didn't buy it when she said he needed someone he could trust. There seemed to be more to Granger asking Nell and Eric and then Deeks if they had been in communication with her, and his "not really" when Deeks asked if there was anything he ended to know spoke volumes.

As for Kensi's mission, Booker has grown on us as a character, and with Kensi suspecting Sabatino, we can't help but wonder if she should be looking into Booker. The signs did seem to point to Sabatino. What exactly happened when he and the previous sniper were out there? Who were the three men in local attire he met with? Why was he pulled from the Sidorov case? There was something (maybe more like a few somethings) very sketchy about Sabatino.

Finally, since the episode's descriptions revealed that Sam was setting Callen up on a blind date, we got some classic Sam and Callen banter, though the ending wasn't a surprise at all, and it played out exactly like we expected it to: Sam and Michelle "couldn't make it" but their friends stayed anyway for dinner.

Summary: The NCIS team needs to determine if an explosion at a fish market is terrorism or a failed drug smuggling deal. Granger and Kensi continue their search for the notorious white ghost with an investigation into a helicopter crash.

A homemade bomb explodes at a local fish market, killing two people. Nina, a DEA agent who was working undercover at the fish market in the hopes of busting an Ecuadorian drug trade, joins Deeks and the team to help solve the case. The prime suspect turns out not to be Ecuadorian, but is a Yemeni citizen tied to Al Qaeda. At the last minute, the team manages to intercept a septic truck headed to bomb the U.S.S. Iowa. After a chase, a shootout, and a massive gas tank explosion, they catch the bomber alive. Meanwhile, in Afghanistan, Kensi misses her shot at the White Ghost on purpose when she sees it is her former fiance, Jack.

Zero Days

Guest Stars: Matthew Del Negro (Jack Simon), Tate Ellington (Ira Wells), Jim Holmes (Lance Witten), Jack Topalian (Boris), Ali Olomi (Insurgent), Natalie Britton (Receptionist)
Production Code: 518
Summary: While online during game play, Eric overhears his computer systems expert friend being attacked. Now it's up to NCIS to figure out if the computer system that manages the Russian missiles is at risk. A familiar face from Kensi's past shows up in Afghanistan.

Eric and his friend, Ira Wells, are trying to enjoy a night of online gaming when suddenly a group of snipers shoot their way into Ira's apartment. Ira, as it turns out, is a hacker for hire who has downloaded a little jewel called "zero days."

Due to the fact that he was involved indirectly, Eric is detained in a tiny cell sandwiched between two prisoners — Big and Bigger. Deeks goes to set Eric free but not before capturing a photo of Eric and his former cellmates. Eric, by the way, is in serious need of a wardrobe stylist even for his nighttime attire. Deeks finds dude's bright red polar bear pajamas particularly funny looking.

While Sam and Callen are at Ira's techno-palatial apartment, they run into Ira or rather a frightened Ira runs down the stairs into them. After Sam and Callen introduce themselves as federal agents, Ira informs them that it was federal agents who stormed his place.

Over in Afghanistan, Kensi is in a bit of a pickle. She's missing.

Sam and Callen watch (on a screen) Nell skillfully and flirtatiously interrogate the geeky Ira. Oh, Eric is carefully watching as well, but he may not see so clearly due to all the steam rising from the top of his head.

There is nothing like being in debt to motivate an employee working for the company that has "zero days" to sell it to the highest bidder. Lucky for him he won't have to pay the debt. The buyers kill him.

Nell is sent out into the field sort to speak. She's with Ira. Again, Eric is watching them closely via video screen. Testosterone levels are increasing and the male chests puff out all for and over little ole Nell. She pays none of them any real attention or least she may be pretending not to.

The guys are too late in preventing "zero days" from getting into the wrong hands, which is used to help launch a naughty missile. Eventually though, they are able to intercept it and it's another job well done for the team.

Production Code: 519
Summary: After learning that Special Agent Kensi Blye disappeared and the Taliban may be holding her captive, Hetty sends the NCIS:LA team to Afghanistan on a rescue mission.

Hetty's little mini-me, Nell, summons Sam, Callen and Deeks to the office and gives the grim news — Kensi is missing and presumed to be taken by members of the Taliban. Naturally, Deeks is about to flip out royally.

Faster than a speeding bullet, our guys arrive in Afghanistan and team up with Granger to search for Kensi. Unbeknownst to Deeks, instructions have been given for him to have a lesser role in the search given his lack of training and emotional status. So he is left behind to question a blind man who is not being very cooperative. You know the stubborn old cuss type.

Eric and Nell receive a foreboding time-delayed video message from Kensi. One of those if-you-have-received-this-message-then-I'm-already-dead kind of videos. This is TV land so we know this is not true.

Hiking through non-lush type terrain, the rest of the guys find the cave where Kensi once was held captive. No Kensi, but Callen does find a photo showing a "dead" Kensi lying on the ground. He is not buying it and when Hetty forwards Deeks the photo, he goes all Sam and Callen on the old blind man.

While in the hills, Callen captures a young girl who was using them for target practice. Granger wants to kill the little militant midget, but Callen emphatically points out she is only an orphaned child forced into doing evil bidding and includes her in their journey. During their trek, the men spot about 35 Taliban members walking through the valley. There is no sign of Kensi being amongst them.

As an emotional Deeks prepares to torture the blind guy for information, the man babbles on and on about how much he loves the Taliban. But Deeks is no heartless torturer. In fact, he's a genius. While the out-numbered Sam, Callen, Granger and some other dude are busy exchanging bullets with numerous Taliban marauders, they suddenly hear a helicopter flying overhead.

It's Deeks and the old blind man. Apparently, the man is the father of a Taliban leader. Deeks negotiates a trade off. The dad for Kensi. It works. Kensi is a sight for sore eyes or either a sore sight for your eyes because the kid looks as if she had been tumbling around in a clothes dryer. Poor thing.

Nevertheless, she is reunited with her team, more importantly with her partner Deeks who gladly holds her in his arms. They are coming back home.

Production Code: 520
Summary: When Nell joins Deeks in the field to investigate a former marine being tracked by Al Qadea for embezzling Iraqi money, Eric is assigned a new Ops partner.

It's Kensi's first day back in the office since that miserable mission in Afghanistan and much to her disappointment, she is assigned to work in ops while Nell joins Deeks in the field. It almost doesn't seem fair except for the fact that Nell has proven her weight in gold as an operative working in the field. Nell desperately wants to be a field agent, but not at Kensi's expense.

Now as for Eric and Kensi working together, that is another story. Eric and Nell reign as the king and queen of geek. Kensi, on the other hand, is not only bored but way out of her element while everyone else is out searching for Adrian Davis, an ex-marine who embezzled money from al-Qaida. Hetty wants Kensi to be assessed. Granger thinks she should hit the ground running.

Davis' wine partner and former marine buddy Gabriel Stanfil insists he's had nothing to do with the embezzlement. Obviously, somebody disagrees since Sam and Callen go to the man's home and find the late Stanfil marinating in his own blood.

Sam also finds some of his "laundered" money in a floor safe in the "laundry room." Go ahead and laugh. The guys know there should be more money and they're right. More cash turns up hidden among Stanfil's private wine collection, but every month a box of wine (money included) goes to a guy named Foster. Foster, who is bedridden due to war injuries, served in the military alongside Davis and Stanfil. Some of the stolen money was being used to help pay his medical bills. Forty-two million dollars is a lot of financial aide and much of it still missing with al-Qaida looking to collect it out of Davis' hide if need be.

Eventually, Davis leads Sam, Callen, Nell AND al-Qaida to the money. There is a small shoot-out with the al-Qaida trio being on the losing end and finally, Kensi gets the green light to go back in the field. Good thing too. Deeks, ever the jokester, claims he suspects Nell was starting to fall in love with him.

While the deal is in progress, Hetty sits with Angelo trying to decipher if he is friend or foe. He convinces her that he is definitely friend but is very concerned about the safety of Olivia and wants to be sure that she gets away safely. In order to do this, Angelo tells Hetty to pass along the safe word "Flint Michigan" to Callen. Supposedly when he says it in front of Olivia, she will know they are part of Angelo's team and she will go quietly. Hetty trustingly relays the message but when Callen says it, they are anything but safe. Callen and Sam have been made. With their cover blown, it seems there is no way out of this one. Production Code: 522
Summary: A 10-year-old girl Sam once provided protection detail for in Saudi Arabia goes missing, and he's convinced her disappearance is directly connected to the theft of software for a new unmanned-aerial vehicle being developed by her engineer father.

A young girl from Sam's past, Riley, has gone missing, or has she? Her mother believes that she is safe and sound at an undisclosed location with her father but Sam cannot kick the feeling that something is amiss. His suspicions are confirmed when a video of the girl saying she and her father have been kidnapped is found.

Riley's mother Jessica is involved in the building of a top secret drone for the U.S. Navy. Although there has only been one drone built, there were several replacement parts manufactured which have gone missing. The team fears that in the wrong hands, the missing parts could be used to build another drone, which could be used for terrorism.

Sam believes it is no coincidence that the parts and Jessica's family have gone missing at the same time. The team enlists her help to set up a meeting with the kidnappers. However, when contacted, she ditches the NCIS team to secretly meet up with them in an attempt to get her daughter and husband back safely.

Callen, Sam, Kensi, and Deeks go in pursuit of her but she is step ahead and for a moment this makes Callen wonder if Jessica is somehow involved in this whole plot, something Sam refuses to believe. Going back to question a suspect in custody, he mentions the only thing that he was able to overhear the group of bandits talking about was a wall. It seems like nothing at first but then they realize the handwriting is literally on the wall. Where Jessica was last seen, camouflaged in the graffiti is an address of where she was to meet the kidnappers.

The team arrives and finds Jessica bound and Riley and her father locked in a room. Luckily, everyone is safe, thanks to Sam and his intuition. Riley is not surprised to see that it is Sam who comes to their rescue, she knew she could count on him to figure it out.

Production Code: 523
Summary: When a news reporter announces the group responsible for the deadly explosion at a military-sponsored charity event, the team must investigate her claims and search for the attacker.

A bomb goes off in Venice Beach leaving dozens killed. There are no leads until a local news reporter, Dana Steele, states that the Jihadist Liberation Front (JLF) has claimed responsibility. However, the team learns this is not true and now they have to not only find out why Dana has reported this but who is actually responsible.

Dana claims her intelligence came from a source whom she refuses to reveal. After being pressured, she gives the name Merle Jarvis and Kensi and Deeks head out to find him. However, they quickly learn he is just a local nut job and not her true source.

Callen and Sam track her down and see her meeting with a mystery man, her true source. Before they can approach, they witness the man stab her to death and flee.

Sam catches him and they learn that he is Bakri Deng, a former Chemistry Professor from South Sudan, now living in Los Angeles and is the real bomber. Bakri was upset that Dana, who wanted to increase her credibility as a reporter by being the first to report who was responsible for the bombing, gave the wrong information to the public. He wanted to be sure everyone knew he was responsible so he could bring attention to his cause, the conflict in the Sudan, which claimed his family. After a letter writing campaign, which had lasted several years fell on deaf ears, Bakri had to make a bigger statement, the bombing. When Dana refused to retract her story because it would make her look bad, he became agitated and killed her.

Bakri and his two associates rented three cars from a salvage yard and stole one hundred pounds of HMX, a chemical used to build explosives. With Dana now dead and unable to retract her story, the three are planning another, car bombing. Callen and Sam now had to find his associates before it was too late.

When they are found in the basement of a hotel prepping for the explosion, one is apprehended and the other is killed by Callen as he makes a move towards the explosives.

The bombing brought back feelings from 9-11, reminding the team that every day is a gift and made them grateful to one another for not just ensuring their safety but the safety of the city they love.

Summary: When the NCIS:Los Angeles team and DEA uncover the cartel's plans to slyly transport billions of dollars' worth of cocaine from Colombia to the U.S. using a submarine, Callen and Sam must quickly locate the missing vessel. Meanwhile, Hetty is called to Washington in the aftermath of the controversial mission in Afghanistan.

The case given to the team is the apparent suicide of Lieutenant Coronel Steven Hill, whose body is found near the Whittier Street Bridge. The case isn't as cut and dry as it seems when the coroner's report shows that Hill died an hour before being tossed from the bridge from a cocaine overdose.

Cell phone records from that area lead the team to a gang member James Martinez. James' cell phone has a video from the night the Lieutenant was killed. In the video there is the distinct sound of a car in the background. From that, Eric (The Amazing!) is able to not only isolate the sound, but also come up with three possible types of cars it could be, and all the owners of those types of cars who live in the area. All Hail Eric!

Of the owners, a parolee by the name of Michael Wilson is the one that stands out. Callen, Sam, Deeks, and Kensi go to Wilson's house and come under fire from bullets and a hand grenade. Sam is able to turn the grenade back on those inside and when the dust settles, they find a shackled and deceased Jennifer Anderson. Her husband Charles is a yacht builder who was forced by what he assumes is the drug cartel to build a submersible boat to smuggle heroin. Jennifer was being held as collateral.

At Wilson's house, a car registered to "Ali" with an address of a dock in San Pedro was found. Sam and G find the dock, the sub, several nefarious characters, no drugs, but pounds of ammonium nitrate. This vessel isn't to run drugs, it's to be used as a torpedo. G boards the sub and someone inside shoots at him but Sam takes him out and boards the sub to check on his partner. Before they can make their way out, three men trap them inside by holding them at gunpoint and closing a metal door.

The engines fire up and things go from bad to worse. After receiving barely audible calls for back-up, Kensi and Deeks finally arrive but the submarine, Sam, and G are nowhere to be found. That is one of the things left hanging for next season.

The other is what is going on with Hetty? She was informed by Owen that she was placed on "administrative leave effective immediately pending investigation." She is to return to Washington D.C. to meet with her superiors but they never say why. Kensi believes it has something to do with Afghanistan but it's never confirmed. Hetty quietly departs for Washington seemingly unsure if she will return.

Summary: Callen and Sam are trapped in a terrorist's armed submarine headed for an aircraft carrier in San Diego. Hetty ignores her orders to report to Washington as the team tries to locate and stop the armed submarine.

Sam and Callen are stuck on a submarine that's not even equipped to make underwater excursions. Yet the terrorist group that believes the ship is part of their jihad — took it underwater anyways in order to sneak up on their location and kill hundreds (possibly thousands) of people.

The boys got on the ship because they thought they were stopping drugs that were about to be trafficked. Though they didn't learn how wrong they were until after they got on the ship and by then it was much too late to warn the rest of their squad. Callen's ear piece couldn't work from their location and at best all he and Sam could hear from the team was that the Coast Guard was on their way.

So while the LAPD has warned the Coast Guard about the kidnapping of two of their own — no one is suspecting a bomb! Meaning Sam and Callen have to find a way to slow the ship down and if they can't do that then stop the terrorist by any means necessary.

The guys worked to drain the sub of its power and soon the "captain" of the ship struck back by cutting off all power in Sam and Callen's room. And, sadly, the power also controlled the guys' air supply.

Hence the next part of the plan came about when they learned they had nothing to lose. They had figured out early on that the sub was heading to San Diego to meet with naval ship that was carrying a nuclear reactor. So if they were going to die anyhow — they wanted to be from sinking the sub before it could carry out its mission.

Meanwhile, above water, Kensi and Talia got into a physical altercation over Deeks. Talia thought Kensi had a thing for him and so she confronted her. Told her if she didn't make a move then eventually some other girl was going to swoop in right under her nose.

And that's what caused a fight between two seemingly competent professionals. Then again they were still viewing the case as drug related. Once they realized the people they were going after were in fact buying up a whole lot of fertilizer — they naturally rearranged priorities. The ladies called their lead in and Beale was able to confirm their suspicions.

But there's not a lot the team can do at this point. Hetty came back when she heard about the guys and even she's doubtful about how this is all going to end. Beale had looked to her for guidance and she told him to pray. It seems that's all they can do!

With the ship sinking, the terrorist chose to cut off their own air supply just to keep the mission going. And Callen had used the extra time slowing the ship down had afforded them to send out Morse code to the Navy. He warned them about the bomb so now the Navy has orders to destroy the ship on contact.

The guys' friends want to save them from that, but what other choice is there? Allow the ship to carry on and kill even more people. Or sink the ship and merely kill five and three of which would have been suicide bombers. So Sam and Callen had to be sacrificed. There was no other way around it!

Plus Hetty ran out of favors she could use back in Washington!

Salvation came in the form of desperation. The ship has lost so much power, the bombers had to open up the guys' hatch to see what little they could salvage. And in the end they were no match for two fully qualified shooters. Callen and Sam gained the upper hand and risked swimming their way to the top just to escape certain death at the hands of their own people.

And when the Navy dropped their missile — they had swam far enough to not be affected by the blast.

Summary: The team discover that one of their own is compromised when they investigate the murder of a Navy contractor who was involved in illegal transactions involving confidential data. Meanwhile, Hetty is placed under investigation in Washington, D.C., and representatives from the Department of Justice arrive in Los Angeles to investigate the team.

A van pulls up in front of a house and a guy hops out with a hand truck and goes to the door. He rings the bell then steps up and picks the lock. We see mail piled up in the box. He heads inside and starts piling electronics into his empty boxes. He heads into an office and unplugs the monitors but then a dog comes in with blood on its mouth and barks at him. He follows the dog and sees it was eating its owner!

In DC, Hettie is at hearing and they tell her she's hostile and making things hard. She asks if there was a question. They ask why she's stone walling. Her attorney whispers to her. She tells the guy he needs to pretend to give her advice and he reminds her she always ignores him. She tells him to sit up straight and say this and hands him a note. He says he understands the prosecutor's frustration but the work she does is delicate.

He says they are trying to protect active and ongoing operations. Hettie says they could put agent's lives at risk. She asks them for some patience and Thomas agrees but then asks her about Afghanistan. Kensi and Deeks spar and trash talk. She finally knocks him down and straddles him. He asks if she learned that in pole dancing class and says she hits like a girl. Beal comes in and Deeks begs for mercy. Deeks finally taps out as she chokes him with her legs.

Beal asks what he should have done and Deeks says he should have come off the turnbuckle. He says he doesn't watch wrestling and they call him un-American. Kensi spits out her mouth guard and drops it in Deeks' hand. He says he's going to wash it in the urinal and she tells him it's his anyway. He's grossed out.

In the war room, they are told that there was an anonymous tip about a body. It's Brian Bell, freelance programmer, strangled to death. Nell says they may recognize him from this and shows them a story about him being a boy genius. Granger says he worked for the Navy in cyber-security. He was chasing down Chauvenet — a new Silk Road. Nell shows them some secret websites — like Amazon for terrorists — bought and paid for in virtual currency.

Granger says Bill had access to all sorts of sensitive information and says that the killer took his computers. They hear the tip came from a phone booth and wonder who does that. Granger says he's pulling Callen and Hanna and they remind the boss that they are in deep cover. He won't hear it and tells Beal to pull them out. Beal calls Hanna and says the exterminators are done at the house but Hanna won't do it. He does agree to check in. Hanna hangs up on his coded call.

He's overseeing a road crew and chews out one of the prisoners — Walinski — aka Callen. He tells him to enjoy the fresh air and get back to work. Callen throws down his rake and they start to argue. They get into a physical altercation and says he's got two weeks in the box then yells at the other prisoners to get back to work. They show back up at the office and Hanna tells Granger it better be good. He says they can go back under once it's done and fills them in on the case.

He says he was working on a deep website. He says they need to talk to deceased next of kin. He tells them to think of it as a furlough for good behavior. They want to know when Hettie is coming back. The committee asks why Blye was sent to Afghanistan. Her lawyer says she already answered. He asks why Blye was a better choice than a Navy SEAL. Hettie asks Thomas if he's been to Afghanistan. He says no and she offers to arrange a visit.

She says Blye has something no soldier does. She says she's a woman. Her lawyer explains that local women can't talk to men but they would talk to a woman. Hettie says that's common sense knowledge for anyone who has actually served their country. Thomas tells a woman to call Adams at the DOJ and tell him to send his people in now. She nods.

Kensie and Deeks are at the victim's house. He defends the geek stuff and says much of it is collectibles. They check the fridge and Deeks says he had the same amount of food she does and that it's no wonder the dog turned on the guy. She tells him he's mean. Deeks spots conspiracy subscriptions and then she spots a gas mask hanging in the closet. Hanna and Callen go talk to the sister. She says he changed after their parents died. She says he had no enemies or friends. She says he barely left the house, had groceries delivered and no in person relationships.

She said he never talked about his work and she says she wouldn't understand it anyway. She says Brian was prone to paranoia. She says she slept over some nights and asked him to move in with her family. They thank her. She asks if they know someone who could adopt his dog. Hanna says his daughter is allergic and Callen says he's never home. Hanna tells him to reconsider. He says it would be good for him. Callen reminds him he feeds him and takes him for walks and calls Hanna his dog.

He peels off without unlocking the door. Callen calls him a very big dog and he races back to pick up his partner. Nell says Brian had surveillance cameras but the tape is on his hard drives that were stolen. She shows them some footage from a neighbor showing the thief that broke in. She found similar crimes and then shows them the pay phone with the guy making the call. They are working on facial reconstruction. They wonder if he has the computers.

Deeks tells Callen his beard is like an angelic bath mat. Hanna says he is no one to talk about hair. He asks Hanna if he had dreadlocks back in the day or an epic Afro like a death star. They call him Thor and Kensie calls him a thore loser. Granger shows up demanding an update. Kensie tells them about the MOPP suit in his closet. Beal comes down and says intruder alert and they all run upstairs.

We see people outside the building. The woman holds up a badge for the Department of Justice. Granger takes Nell with him to see what's going on. The woman says she's Special Investigator Wallace there to do a forensic audit of the facility and all employees, authorized by Justice. Granger calls the Secretary of the Navy and tells Nell to send the warrant over.

Wallace says they need work space and privacy for interviews. He tells Nell to set them up in the gym. She leads them away. He tells the others what's going on and has Bela pull up the gym food. Granger says they're looking for info to bring down Hettie then the rest of them. He tells them all to make themselves scarce and tells Beal to keep an eye on them and make life hard on them. Beal says they got a match — Douglas Fisher is the thief. They all head out.

Thomas asks Hettie about Bernstrom Kohl. He says he was a German agent she shot. She asks if she killed him and he says he doesn't know. She says she was never a good shot. He says they got information that he was sequestered in an LA nursing home until he died four years ago. He says Kohl had a wife that matched her description. Thomas asks if she kept a foreign operative hidden and the lawyer says this is new information and they need to investigate to protect national security.

She says she kept Kohl as an asset until he was murdered by his own country. The lawyer asks why she admitted it and she says it was the truth. She tells him she's been tailed the whole time. A woman bumps into him and slips something into Hettie's pocket. She heads to the restroom. She pulls out the cell phone she was slipped and dials it. Granger answers and she asks what's up. He tells her they are under siege — a DOJ full forensic audit.

She says Thomas is a sneaky bastard and she may have underestimated him. He says to remind Nell that they have an old building. She says they are digging a deep hole for her in DC and he tells her to watch her back. Callen and Hanna show up to Fisher's place and knock on the door. He answers and says they're not open. He asks what it's about and he says he'll be right out. He closes the door and Callen says he's not coming back out.

He comes out the back where Kensi and Deeks are. He ducks back in and Deeks says it's like playing whack a mole. He drives his van out through the garage door and they shoot out his tire. He runs into a fire hydrant and water spews everywhere. They ask doesn't he know they're in a drought. Wallace asks Nell for Callen and Hanna. She says they are on a case. She tells her to call them in. She asks for Blye. She says she's also on a case.

Nell says she can interview her but Wallace says to tell Granger to produce them in 30 minutes or face a warrant. Granger says he'll handle it and tells her and Beal to also go to the boat shed. He tells her what Hettie said about this being an old building. She says she gets it. She goes to a store room and opens a back door and turns on a light. Beal tries to sneak out when Nell shuts the lights off.

Wallace asks what happened and he says it's a super old building and they get rolling black outs when people are using their A/C. He says it could be 20 minutes to three or four hours. She says this is unacceptable and asks about backup generators. He says this is not Homeland Security. He asks if she'll put in a good word for them to get some. He tells them there is a Taqueria up the street with free WiFi.

Nell has the security footage and says the killer slipped in through the doggy door. She shows it to Callen and Hanna. He took a pic of the guy after he killed him and they decide it was murder for hire. Beal says he may have a motive. He says Papa Legba runs Chauvenet. He says he thinks he figured out his identity and was blackmailing the guy for money.

Nell says if you find out his true identity, Chauvenet is shut down. Beal says he doesn't know who it is and says he's trying to reconstruct his research. Callen says the assassin was likely hired on the website. Hanna asks what if he survived. Since the police are sitting on the crime scene they can contact Papa Legba posing as Brian to try and lure the killer back.

Kensi and Deeks are at the morgue taking dead body selfies for the investigation. He asks how they will make the dead guy look alive and she says make up. He says it does work for her. She asks for his shirt to put on the dead guy and he says it's his favorite and you can't wash out ghost. They argue — he refuses. Beal sends out the fake email from "Brian" giving him just three hours to pay up or be exposed.

They get an almost immediate response asking for a down payment and installments for the next 10 weeks. They are at Brian's house and tell him not to leave the computer. He sits. We see someone creeping through the dog door. Callen calls him bad doggie and they kick him in the door. They have the hit man at the boat house. He's former military and police but neither for long. Danny denies but Hanna says they have video of him killing Brian. They have his phone with the photo of dead Brian.

Nell comes in with emails between Danny and Papa Legba. He says he doesn't know who they guy is and says no one knows who he is. They tell him the man he killed knew who he was and that's why he hired him. Nell says she doesn't think he knows. Beal says he thinks he knows. He looks back at when Chauvenet started and says you had to advertise the site. He found comments from Justin Stewart talking about it when it was new.

He says the guy owns a recycling facility with no business contracts or license. Deeks poses as a homeless guy dumpster surfing near the place. Beal says there are no surveillance feeds. They tell Deeks to do a 360 and he reports a guard out back smoking. They figure there must be more security inside. Kensi says she's ready. We see Kensi arguing with Hanna who tries to shove her in a car.

The security guard comes out and tries to stop Hanna from taking her. He acts defeated and says he's brave for a rent a cop. Kensi pulls her badge out and tells him to drop the gun. Deeks chokes out the smoking guard and drags him out of sight. They sneak inside. There are guys doing all sorts of illegals when they call out Federal Agents. One guy pulls an automatic rifle and shoots at them.

Callen and Deeks shoot some of the guys coming out and the rest give up. Justin is trying to scrub the computers when they come in. He says he wants his lawyer and Callen says he bets he does. They all show up and Granger says they did good today. Nell says his computer has given them a ton of black market leads. They show them something they found on Chauvenet. Callen says he recognizes the address. It's Hettie's house.

The file was sold. Someone paid $250k to find out where Hettie lives. Back in DC, it's a rainy night. Hettie heads back to her hotel and goes inside. Her shadows pull up to the curb and she looks at them. We see that someone in another car has her file, a photo and a gun with a silencer.

Summary: Hetty receives some shocking news from NCIS director Leon Vance while she is investigated by the Department of Justice in Washington, D.C. Meanwhile, Nell goes undercover as Hetty to protect a fellow team member.

Tonight's episode continues with the fallout caused by Hetty. Hetty had previously funnel government spending money and used it to pay off a group of well-known terrorist. She did it to rescue one of her own and technically she was acting within the bound of her authority. But, those who have waited to take her down now have their golden opportunity. One they're going to milk for however much its worth.

Hetty is currently stuck in Washington and the Department of Justice is doing their best to find fault in her actions. Meanwhile, with Hetty out of commission, the department has sent in someone to question her team. And Chief Investigator Ava Wallace wants to find dirt on Hetty. So far the team have been doing their best to derail her investigation.

They aren't complying. As in they're refusing to sit down for their interviews with her!

But something else besides the annoying investigator eventually grabbed their attention. A couple of men had broken into one of Hetty's homes. Hetty apparently sleeps in a different house every night in order to throw off anyone looking to target her but recently her home was listed on the black market. So someone out there is actively pursuing her.

Callen and Sam are trying to neutralize the threat to Hetty. The team as a whole is investigating who's after her. Yet, while they were busy doing that, someone might have targeted their friend. Hetty collapsed in her meeting with the Department of Justice. And let's face it Hetty has never been frail!

Although the collapse was later revealed to be part of her ruse, her team was still left in the dark when they continued to hunt for whoever was after their friend.

Yet Wallace kept interfering. She cornered poor Eric and made him sit down for an interview. So he got his own and made the interview as drawn out as possible. Then when Wallace got to Sam in the middle of an operation — he decided to teach her lesson. He took her on potentially dangerous car chase. Said if she wants to ask him questions then now was the time.

Safe to say the interview did not go well. Which pretty much best describes the forensic audit in general. Wallace didn't fly out to LA to get a clear picture — she was given scapegoat and was told to find information to back that up. And that's why the team doesn't want to cooperate with her.

They've even taken to hiding outside of the office in order to avoid her. But she has been given special powers of authority. Meaning she can legally arrest and detain any of them if she so chooses. And that's exactly what she had did to Callen. Though he chose to escape rather than pander to her whims.

Wallace was left alone with Blye while the rest of them set up a sting for would be kidnappers. So Blye couldn't dodge answering some questions. Wallace had wanted to know why she left the safety of the base. According to Wallace, that was incredibly stupid of Blye and none of what's going on would have happened if Blye had merely chosen to use common sense. Blye is blamed for her own capture and for the consequences that happened afterwards. Hence after their meeting, she quite honestly needed Deeks to be the strong one in their relationship.

As for Hetty, she escaped the "tribunal" because she wanted to see what was going on for herself. Her personal security guard was killed during the break-in at her house and so she couldn't sit this one out. But help unknowingly arrived just when she needed it.

It seems this entire investigation into her actions was led by Leon Vance. He had wanted to protect her so he found a way to get her to leave LA. People are trying to get to her like they always are but this time there's a leak from inside her office. That's how they were able to find her house.

Leon knew about the leak for some time and yet he's only now telling Hetty about it because it's too dangerous for her to go back. And with Hetty out of danger — the situation back home is only going to get worse.

Her team barely survived the sting they had set up. And when that was all done with that they then heard from Eric that Matthias is back in the country. Apparently, all of Hetty's enemies have heard about the blacklist with her address and no one could resist the temptation.

Summary:	The team members desperately search the city when they learn that someone from their past is targeting one of their own. Meanwhile, operational psychologist Nate Getz visits Nell to help her through a traumatic experience.

There's a reason why the team fears the return of Mattias Draeger and it's about more than just their good friend Hetty's safety.

Mattias is simply dangerous to have around. He was barely in the country for more than a day before he started killing people again. But while having someone like Mattias (a killer with a vendetta) so nearby would usually mean all hands on deck for the NCIS team — Jones is currently MIA. On last week's episode, she killed someone and that was the first time she ever discharged her weapon.

Hence, she's dealing with a few things and if her calling in a sick day is inconvenient then so be it. Nothing anyone is going to tell her is going to make her suddenly feel better. And if someone were to attempt to surprise her — she might accidentally shoot them. Jones hasn't been able to let go of her gun since the incident!

Meanwhile, Hetty has shockingly been offered a job in Washington. Vance and even the admiral both told her she could rise to all new heights if she, you know, merely stayed put in Washington. Yet Hetty envisions returning home and to her job. That is if she still has one.

Though, she'll most likely survive her public flogging — Hetty made sure Vance wouldn't manipulate things in the hearing with the Department of Justice. She let it be known that she can (out of old age of course) mistakenly reveal where all the bodies are buried.

However Hetty later changed her mind about staying for the hearing. Once she had heard from her people back home, namely Granger; she devised another "prison" break. But this time she didn't even bother with faking a heart attack. She just walked right on out.

And no was able to stop her because he set off the fire alarm thereby making illegal for a certain congressman to lockdown the building.

Granger had told Hetty about Mattias. And he was forced to tell her about Callen. Not only did Callen put up his own money as bounty for Mattias but he's also informed some of the city's toughest about said bounty. Meaning there's a free for all going on in LA.

Although catching Mattias was never going to be easy. When they did find out about the man he had killed earlier — they surveillance the site and ended up falling into Mattias' trap. Mattias wanted to draw the men there in order to kill them and finally have them out of the way so he could then target Hetty. Yet the plan failed in spite of him receiving some unexpected help from a Russian National.

If the Russians have their hands in what's going on then a quick capture and imprison is not going to work with Mattias. So Callen and Sam paid a visit to an old acquaintance of theirs. They went to see Arkady.

He was the team's best shot at knowing what the Russians had been up to but instead of helping — he warned them about an oncoming second Cold War. It seems the conflict started up again and this time it's not going to be considered all that cold. The Russians are looking for a fight and so they want someone like Hetty. She's been around a long time and in her years of service she must have picked up at least several good state secrets.

And that's where Mattias comes in. He was sent to fetch Hetty and take her back to Moscow. So he set up a second trap and this time the team wasn't so lucky. Mattias had planted a bug on all of their cars and that ensured one of them would show him how to reach Ops headquarters.

Mattias arrived at the building a few minutes before Hetty did. And their final standoff (old school to say the least) was all about mind games rather than just a rain of gunfire. Hence Hetty was able to convince Mattias to turn himself in and the only person who was injured during the few times a gun was fired was Agent Wallace.

And getting shot might help improve her relationships with the people she was investigating but who saved her life anyways!

Hetty is back and Mattias has been neutralized. Though most of that wouldn't have been possible without Jones's help. She pulled through at the last second and showed up to support Hetty when she needed her. So, as it turns out, she is field agent material.

Summary: Callen and Sam travel to Mexico to track down the only employee who escaped a professional hit at the Department of Defense. Back in the States, the rest of the NCIS team work to uncover the motive behind the shooting.

The Department of Defense's West Coast accounting office was attacked on tonight's episode of NCIS: Los Angeles. And now the government wants answers. Or at the very most explanations because there aren't any obvious reasons of why that particular department of the DOD was assaulted and from all appearances the culprits didn't even seem like they wanted to rob the place. They just came in and killed three of the four people that were there.

The one victim that managed to walk away from the incident was spotted (via security feeds) entering the bathroom seconds before the shooters entered the building. So in any other case there would be no reason to suspect Milton other than the unfortunate fact he soon disappeared after the shooting.

In all honesty, Milton could be innocent of any involvement against the DOD but the fact he chose to flee to Mexico so soon after he witnessed the murders of his friends and co-workers doesn't exactly inspire confidence in anyone. Hence to get to the bottom of why he fled — Callen and Sam had to go after him. Though the case was never going to be easy for the guys.

No matter what the situation is — two federal agents aren't exactly given a welcoming party if they ever choose to cross the border. And Callen and Sam had to learn that tidbit the hard way.

A DEA agent tried to give them a tough time although technically they're all supposed to be on the same team. So really finding Milton was only ever going to be a two man job. And those men were Sam and Callen. What little help they expected from the Mexican government never actually materialized. Even when they really needed like when they ran into some other guys looking for Milton.

It seems Milton has "family" in Mexico. His fiancée and her family were waiting for him to bring them all up on visas and so when he felt his life was threatened — he chose to go hide out with them. Believing no one would look for him there. However he was proven wrong. And by time Callen and Same found him — he was ready to talk. Especially as they were the only people standing between him and killing squad.

Milton and one his co-workers had found a discrepancy a few days ago in billing. 41 million dollars was allocated for a black ops mission involving a Delta unit. But Milton later learn there was never any missions involved. Meaning money was simply being sucked dried.

And this information was seemingly backed up when the rest of the NCIS team found out several security drives had vanished after the shooting. But something was wrong with the mounting evidence. While it fit Milton's story and made it look like the boss he had reported to was dirty — no Delta quad would have let Milton escape. They're too good at their jobs for that!

So Milton had to be dirty all along. There was no other explanation for it. The team back in LA had figured out the convenient bathroom break was a ruse and the boys in Mexico realized he was dirty when one of his future relatives accidentally showed the guys the money Milton must have stolen from the DOD. It's why the unit pursuing him wanted him back so much. Milton was the one with the money and everyone else (Callen, Sam, all of the females that were unwillingly being used) were just in the way. But thankfully back up arrived right when it was needed.

Milton's friends weren't actually a Delta team. They were Arms' Dealers and Milton was using them to launder some of ill-gotten gains. So when the real Delta team (the one that was being framed for Milton's crimes) found out where he was — they arrived in the nick of time to help.

Milton and cohorts were taken down and the unsuspecting women he had duped — well they might have or might not have been left some of the money he had stolen. But if they were they it's safe to say it was well earned. Once the ladies figured out Milton was one of the bad guys — they quickly sided with Sam and Callen against him. They even went as far as to offer up assistance when in all likelihood they thought they were all going to die.

So the guys were grateful towards them and as for the woman — maybe next time they won't be so quick to jump on the first guy's offer to take them all to the states!

Summary: Sam is arrested for murdering a woman, but Callen and Granger work to clear his name. Meanwhile, Kensi and Deeks discover a link between the victim and a student from Sam's past.

Sam Hanna has been arrested for the murder of Leyla Walden and yet neither Sam nor any of his friends have even heard of the victim before her murder. Sam was with Callen when the feds from the FBI came for him. And the both of them would have resisted arrest anyways possible if Hettie hadn't called in to advise them against it.

She simply let the other guys take Sam and told Callen to come into the office. Callen had felt like she was giving up on their friend at the time and later when he was assigned to desk duty while the investigation went ahead on Sam. But, secretly, Hettie was forming a plan to free Sam of all charges. She just kept mum about that last part until Granger was out of the office. Hettie didn't want him to know what she was doing. He would have told her to let the FBI handle it.

And none of Sam's colleagues trusted the FBI to be of any actual help. After all they were the guys that arrested Sam in the first place. However the FBI ended up having a stronger case than anyone would have thought.

For instance, there was both DNA on the body and a video of Sam at the scene of the crime. As for the crime itself, the killer broke Leyla's neck and was able to escape detection as in all types of surveillance that was Leyla's street once he was initially caught. Only a man of Sam's skill would have been capable of all of that.

So before anything else the team had to disprove the evidence and find out some information about a Mr. Ray Turner. Turner was a former SEAL who now makes a living out of outing fakes

SEAL. But, more importantly, he also knew Leyla. He is probably one of the few people that did. They used to meet every Tuesday about something or another and so he's literally the perfect person to know who would have targeted Leyla. He was around her long enough and his old instincts could have picked up anyone following her.

Yet Turner was at first apprehensive about helping the unit. He's grown a bit paranoid of the government over the years so it took a lot of convincing and for his boat to blow up before he could trust Callen and Sam. The same person that went after Leyla then tried to kill Turner so he told the guys that Leyla had asked him to look into a man claiming he was SEAL. This other guy was about to join private security and she didn't want to take her chances.

Though when Turner looked into this other guy he then learned the man was using a fake name. The team not only found out that Stevens, that's who they're looking for, does have military expense (not as a SEAL) but that Sam also used to know him. They worked together back in the day and funnily people used to say they could pass as twins. So fast-forwards to the present and when Stevens committed a crime he then knew the perfect person to take the fall for it.

Stevens acted as a gym owner with a couple of partners that also claim to be ex-government agents yet meanwhile he's been operating an identity theft ring.

It seems like he stole more just Sam's identity — he also stole Sam's DNA from back in the day. And he didn't stop with Sam.

But he and his partners never got a chance to empty their accounts prior to going on the run. Once they realized they failed to kill Turner — they panicked. Hence they had asked a girl that works at their office to make a drop off. Though they were prepared to kill her the second they were done with her.

Luckily, the team was able to move in before she could get hurt and they soon collected all of Stevens's partners. Which left only Stevens and Sam wanted to handle the other man personally. Sam wanted to humiliate Stevens like Stevens humiliated him. So he pummeled the man claiming to be a SEAL. And after he had Stevens in crying mess, he made him confess on camera that he wasn't in fact a SEAL.

Then he handed over the footage to Turner who went LIVE with it in a matter of seconds!

Production Code: 607
Summary: A man is murdered by a small drone, and the investigation reveals he was connected to a terrorist group that is planning an attack on Long Beach. With time running out, Nell uses her drone expertise to try to prevent a disaster.

A seemingly uninteresting man was killed by a drone on tonight's episode of NCIS: Los Angeles and somehow that case wound up being assigned to the NCIS team. As the story goes, after cops were initially called to the scene, the victim was identified as being Elias Minas. A Greek citizen that was once involved the in the notorious gang known as PK.

Because of his association with a group known for their domestic and ambitious acts of terrorisms — Elias was supposed to be on the no fly list. Yet, for some reason he managed to get around that and fly to LA. Apparently, Elias had made a deal with Homeland when he first attempted to enter the country on his own. And, seeing as Elias didn't want to spend the rest of his life in jail, he then chose to turn on his "friends" at the first opportunity he got.

In return for helping the Greek government arrest several prominent members in PK he was then granted immunity by the Americans and was even allowed to enter their witness protection program.

Although, as it turns out, he didn't really what to live his life according to someone else's rules. Elias disappeared not long after entering witness protection. It seems someone had forgotten to put his new identity on the no fly list so Elias was able to travel to wherever he wanted to go. And it was the Americans that helped him do it.

Now, fast-forward to the present, and Elias was murdered. So at first the team assumed some of Elias's old friend in the PK might have finally gotten to him. But they aren't claiming reasonability and if it had been them — they would have bragged.

So who sent a drone after Elias Minas?

That's the mystery and everyone wants to know the answer. It's actual imperative that they do because once the team started to check into what Elias had been doing in LA — they soon realized that he had created a drone himself. However the one he was ordered to make was much larger than the one that ended up killing him.

According to the theory the guys are working off of, Elias was hired to create a drone and someone had simply used his semantics to create a much smaller one to then target him with. In doing that they knew they would remove all witnesses and, frankly, the only evidence there is of there being a second drone will merely link back to Elias its designer.

Though the group now operating a full functioning drone weren't as smart as they themselves to be. Getting cocky proved to be their downfall because they soon made a mistake just as everything was working in their favor. And in doing so one of their own got caught in a gun fight with Sam and Callen.

The man they ended up killing was a known (all over the internet by the way so there goes secrecy) as a Live Free First member. From what the tech team was able to surmise — the radical group/cult was completely anti-corporate. They believe money, oil, and anything else they feel is being monopolized should rightfully be returned to the American people. So as part of their manifesto — they said they were going to target the two largest cities known for their corporal greed.

New York City and Los Angeles! And unfortunately for the team, Los Angeles proved to be the nearest target.

Live Free First were going to target the South Shore Oil Refinery. And if they succeeded the following blast would have possibly wiped out over a hundred people in the nearby town. So, in the end, the team had to chase down a group of inept terrorists before they accomplished what they wanted to do or failed at doing that thus creating an even bigger mess.

And so to stop the potential catastrophe they had on their hands — Callen with Nell's help of course had to remotely assume control of the drone. Though he really didn't know what to do once he had control. So he inadvertently caused a small explosion and luckily no one was hurt by it.

Nell was invaluable in stopping the terrorist attack and that's why Hetty later took the time to talk her one on one. Hetty wanted to know why Nell has gone after a job in the field. She's qualified and originally that's what Nell said she wanted to do. So why the hesitation?

Nell told Hetty that she still wants to one day work in the field but for now she's too scared to pursue it. There's a part of her that never got over the shooting she had been through. So instead of rushing things — Nell wants to make sure she's ready before she goes after a job that would require her not to freeze up out in the field.

Summary: When a former Marine turned homeless is murdered, Kensi and Deeks go undercover for the investigation and find a link to the Mexican cartel.

A new case is testing what little relationship the team has built with Granger on tonight's episode of NCIS:LA. A homeless was found tortured and murdered. And when his fingerprints were ran through the system — the team was alerted to it. It seems the homeless, Harrison Goodsell, man was once a CIA operative known as Grey man. That means he can basically become invisible at any given time. No one really knows him and no one will miss him. Grey men don't have families or friends. They just live for their work.

But his skills, that he must have relied on so much in the past, had gotten rusty.

Hence he was literally picked up right off a lot the homeless population tend to frequent and all it took was a stun gun.

As they were initially reviewing the case, Granger had told the team not to worry about getting their hands on CIA files. They didn't have to worry about what information Goodsell was privy to. He said he had already spoken with his CIA contacts and that they said Goodsell had cracked up on the job.

After he had a breakdown, the CIA claimed they cut Goodsell loose and from there he ended up on the street.

However someone is lying. While it had looked like Goodsell was living on the street, there's evidence of him showing up at restaurants all over the city wearing a freshly pressed suit and even handing out tips. So he must not have been as tapped out or as broken as the CIA were claiming.

Also it can't have been a coincidence that Granger soon disappeared from the office. He had told Hetty he was having froyo with a dead guy and neither Callen nor Sam could resist following him. They found him meeting with a reluctant CIA operative.

Paul Barnes was in charge of Goodsell's mission overseas and the truth about Goodsell did end up being more than what Granger was trying to sell. It looks like Goodsell wasn't let go from his job. He went MIA about a year ago and the agency has been looking for ever since.

Granger thinks Barnes was sent in to kill Goodsell. But Barnes has a different story. He said Goodsell had contacted him. They used to work together and so that meant trust. And Goodsell wanted to return to the fold. He wants to come back in and he claimed to have information that would help make that happen.

Goodsell has been looking into the Pena cartel. Lately, he's been noticing them using the honey trap on several DEA agents and he had sent a couple of photos to Barnes before he was murdered. Several of those photos pinpointed as to who the two prostitutes used in the scheme were. And from there — the investigation took an unexpected turn.

The team thought the cartel was trying to find ways to keep their boss out of prison. But then they realized they were wrong when one of the men being used in the honey pot scheme, Turner, told them they had already caught Pena. They had enough information on him to extradite him and now they were merely waiting for him to be delivered.

So if it's not to protect Pena then it must be about freeing Pena. At least that's what they thought. And yet, they were wrong. Turner said that he made a mistake by sleeping with Monica. He told his boss and even the federal agents he didn't mean to give her so much information but he was hiding something from them.

He kept the fact he had fallen in love with Monica to himself. He did that because once he had fallen in love with her — the cartel had her and her daughter kidnapped so they could pressure him into doing their bidding. The truth is they were never going to help Pena escape. They wanted him assassinated and they were going to make Turner do it.

The DEA had a made a deal with Pena. He would get a lighter sentence if he turned on all the Mexican officials that have helped him keep his illegal activities. So, his former friends turned on Pena and were going to stop him before he could talk.

Though none of that explains how Goodsell got involved. Goodsell, as it turns out, is Turner's father. He had found out about him last year and immediately disappeared afterwards. It seems he wanted to watch over his son (from the shadows) and when he found out about what Turner had gotten himself ensnared in — he was planning on bringing in the CIA just to help.

Sadly, Goodsell died before he could assist his son. But thankfully his death led to Sam and Callen stopping Turner from committing a federal offence. The boys busted in and helped.

They stopped Turner from killing Pena and Deeks arrived in time to rescue Monica and her daughter. So while it wasn't much what he did — Goodsell did leave an impact on his son's life.

Summary:	Hetty orders a lockdown and Eric becomes one of seven suspects after Granger is poisoned by the mole.

Granger was poisoned on tonight's episode of "NCIS: Los Angeles" and the culprit could be just about anyone among the team.

Granger's condition was revealed after he crashed his car in a horrific car accident. Apparently whatever was in his system was slow acting. He had enough time to get in his car and be a couple a miles away from headquarters before the effects kicked in and knocked him out.

But this recent accident is just one more on a long list of "accidents" the team has been experiencing. So while Sam and Callen don't like the idea of it — they've come to acknowledge that there may be a mole inside of their unit. And they're not the only ones harboring suspicions. Hetty is looking at Granger's situation as another occurrence of a rat inside of her organization.

And as for Granger, he survived yet he doesn't seem like he's actually getting better. During the moments when he happens to be lucid, he seemed to back up the theory of an eminent threat. Although another side effect of the poison Granger had digested was that he was weaving in and out of consciousness. So even his lucid moments should be taken with a grain of salt.

The very few times Granger could string a sentence together — he told Deeks and Kensi "it wasn't safe". And then he burst into an uncontrollable rage before giving in to seizures. So again — grain of salt.

Though Hetty might not be so lucid either. When she heard about the poisoning, the entire office was searched. And the poisonous flower was ultimately found but Hetty didn't want to evacuate people in the office. Thereby saving anyone else from getting infected. Instead, she ended up doing the exact opposite by locking the place down. Meaning no in and no out. At best, until she found the traitor!

Hetty has Deeks and Kensi investigating everyone inside of the building. Meanwhile Sam and Callen will be following up leads on the outside.

Hetty is also leaving nothing up to chance. She's even willing to do a polygraph just so she could be ruled out. But strange things are occurring behind the scenes. Beale has had money transferred into his account recently and he doesn't know where it came from. So the traitor is essentially throwing as much diversions as they possibly can at the team just to escape notice.

First Beale then a woman mysteriously committed "suicide" while they were still in lockdown. Luckily her death was investigated and Deeks and Kensi saw that she was strangled prior to being strung up but if the traitor can kill someone to act a smokescreen then who's to say if anyone is safe.

Not surprisingly, people are even starting to view each other with suspicion. Everyone that was red flagged was cordoned off. Including Beale. But there was DN A left behind at the fake suicide. So Kensi and Deeks went into the secluded area to collect samples from everyone. And well that freaked out the rat.

He revealed himself. The somewhat shy and husky Carl that no one had been paying attention decided to grab everyone's full focus. And he did so when he took Beale as his hostage. He tried to use Beale to open to all the door he needed to escape lockdown. But Beale led him into a trap with Sam and Callen waiting for them at the other end.

Carl was taken into custody soon after that but for some reason his arrest didn't seem to faze him in the slightest. If anything — he was smiling when he got arrested. He later explained that he had committed one of the biggest security breaches in U.S history. And seeing as no one wanted that kind of information out there for their enemies — he knew he was going to be offered a plea agreement to keep quiet.

So Carl was smug. After everything he did he still felt he had a reason to be smug. Because, at the end of the day, he honestly thought he could play double agent and in return he would get a house on the beach somewhere. However no one wanted to give in to him.

And that led to Sam and Callen putting the fear of God into him by allowing him to believe he was going to be sent into some black hole in which he would never be able to climb out of. They knew if they truly scared him — Carl would reveal who he's been working for. And as for the rest of the team, they were just glad Carl was going away. He had caused so much damage — they all felt they would be happier never seeing him again!

Though Granger, when he came back to his old self, would probably have loved a chance to meet Carl in a one on one!

Production Code: 610
Summary: Sam reflects on his relationship with his father when the team investigate the murders of marines who have sons in military academies.

A member of the paparazzo was murdered on tonight's episode of "NCIS: LA". His name was Jack Chapman and though he's had several bad run-ins with celebrities — its doubtful any of them are smart enough to recreate IUD just for him.

One of the suspects, Kip Brigham, is actually a friend of Deeks. Kip is a basketball player and Jack had pictured him coming out of an illegal gambling den. But there doesn't seem to be any hard feelings on Kip's part. In fact, Kip went on to use his new status as a bad boy to win himself contract that was double than what he was earning before.

Thus the one person that's had a reason to kill Jack turns out to have no reason at all. Also he had a pretty solid alibi in case the team needed any reassurances.

So there's a possibility the bomber may not have been targeting Jack. Especially as the bomb itself was set off at someone else's house. Jack was house-sitting for an old friend of his when he was murdered. And that friend just happened to be military.

Marine Gunnery Sergeant Mike Johnson had Jack watch the house while he was away. He was too busy on a mission to do it himself and technically that house wasn't even his main home. And yet someone clearly wanted to kill him (using old information most likely) and slowly it's starting to look like it had something to do with his son.

Nell and Beale had looked into similar cases like their bombing and what they found was several other bombings that involved the murder of military fathers that also have sons in military schools. Typically, fathers like Johnson can be kind of strict. And some would say they tend to push their own children a tad too far.

And that's what their suspect is probably thinking as well when he targets these men.

The team is working with the theory that the bomber/serial killer leaves behind gifts for the sons. Hence the odd items that can be found next to the victims. And their killer could be seeing himself in these kids because he also had a hard relationship with his own father.

The killer must have seen himself as harshly disciplined and in need of someone saving him. And that why he's targeting only a certain set.

But the killer has been getting away with these murders for quite some time. So in order to catch him the team knew they would have to use the proper bait. Like Johnson. Johnson managed to escape his fate the first time but the team believed if they dangled him in front of their killer — it would drive their suspect to seek Johnson out again.

And the plan worked. It did push someone to the front but it wasn't their killer. No, their killer had an accomplice. Sadly, he had a weak younger brother that was easy to manipulate. So he used that brother in an attempt to run over Johnson while he went about planting more bombs.

Though their real killer was David Mills and apparently his stepfather (a military man) was abusive towards him and his family.

The stepfather "disappeared" a few years ago and as for David — he was dishonorably discharged from the military after getting into a fight with his superior officer. At the time, he was known to have problems dealing with authority figures.

And clearly he still has those problems now. So Sam and Callen got David's mother to give up his location and then they proceeded to threaten their suspect (once they found him) with one of his own bombs in order to find out who was his latest target.

David had been planning on murdering Marine Master Sergeant Shawn Lewis but he hadn't known the man's son was going to be the first back at the house. Luckily, Sam got to the boy before he could get hurt but that doesn't change the fact in the end David nearly killed the very same kid he was deluding himself into believing he was protecting.

Summary: A burglary occurs at a cyber-security company, but Callen is forced to steer clear of the investigation when Hetty tells him that his girlfriend, Joelle, is one of the lead witnesses. Meanwhile, the team discuss their personal holiday travel plans.

A burglary was brought to the team's attention after it not only happened around the holidays but the fact the potential contents of the robbery could have dire consequences if it got into the wrong hands. The thieves had broken into a cyber-security company that specializes in building firewalls against harmful malwares. And that particular company actually creates some of the anti-viruses the Department of Defense uses.

Hence this case is more than just a little important. If the thieves had ended up making off with their goods — the entire department would have been at risk.

But luckily they did not. Though they did nearly risk Callen's cover. Callen has been seeing a woman named Joelle and she was taken hostage by one of thieves when they tried to make their last stand. Fortunately Joelle is fine now. And she was only shaken a bit by what happened.

Callen on the other hand seems to be more worried than she is. He desperately wanted to go to her and offer a shoulder to cry on if she needed. Yet he wasn't allowed to go near the crime scene. You see Joelle thinks he works in security — she doesn't know about his real job because he's not allowed to tell her about his real job. At least not so early in their relationship so she's been pretty much kept in the dark in regards to her boyfriend.

And anyways, Callen had to investigate the case. The thieves weren't average everyday snatch and grabbers. They were a bit too high up on the scale to do something so juvenile. So Kensi and Deeks had a chat with the owner of the cyber-security company. And he told them they had bigger things to worry about than his anti-virus program.

In order to create that program, the owner had to get a hold of some of the worst viruses in the world and that's what he did. He collected them all and put them on convenient servers. And that what the real thieves got their hands on when they held a diversion!

Those servers put more than the Department of Defense in jeopardy. They actually put their world at risk and funnily enough they're worth millions for all potential buyers that have been dying to get their hands on it.

However, once the team got a hold of some of thieves involved, they appeared to not know where the malwares were. The ones that could speak and were not in fact zoned out of their minds made it known that the malware was hidden.

So the team reviewed the security footage from the break in and they saw when the pass off was made. But it wasn't good news for Callen. Apparently, one of thieves had planted the malware server on Joelle while she was taken hostage and now she's at risk because of it.

Callen was in a tough position He knew he had to do his job but he also knew what it would mean for his relationship if he ended having to tell Joel he lied. So making that decision was bound to be hard though in the end he followed his conscience.

Callen was the perfect person to do a sting on his own girlfriend so he was chosen to go into her home and collect the malware. Yet to do so he had to go over to her place acting like the concerned boyfriend all the while his friends were secretly watching them from outside. Thankfully, though, Callen didn't have a problem recovering the malware — what he had a problem with was the men that came gunning for Joelle after their inside men handed over her information.

It appears the owner of the cyber-security company thought he could make some extra money on the side. So he made a deal with a few people (no one should be making deals with) and they were all supposed to get a cut of the action when they sold the malware. But there proved to be a glitch in their plan. Hence they were forced to act quickly and spontaneously. You see no one had suspected they would need to ditch the server so the owner had to later use his advance computer knowledge to track Joelle down.

And having men shoot at them at the same time he was returning fire — is what destroyed Callen's cover.

Callen kept Joelle safe and he took down the men that were after her. But afterwards she couldn't even look at him because she felt so betrayed. Callen had lied to her about everything. Including Sam and Sam's wife. So Joelle told him then and there that he should just leave.

And sadly that would have been the end of them. Yet something appeared to change on her end. Maybe it was simply a day she needed to think things over but later Joelle went to Callen and it looks like she's offering him a second chance. With conditions — of course.

Joelle wants Callen to be honest with her and if he remains so then who knows what will happen?

Summary: Callen is taken hostage when terrorists take control of a building where he is working undercover to investigate an arms dealer. When the NCIS team arrive, they discover the entire building is wired with explosives.

Callen was doing some undercover work in attempts to find evidence against a suspected arms dealer when out of nowhere masked gunmen burst into the building and interrupted his investigation. And it seems this group of terrorists (though they've hadn't announced their organization to any media outlets) do not in fact care about whose building they broke into or about money they can make by holding an entire office building hostage which, in all honesty, is kind of scary. If they can kill the one man they could have ransomed for millions (the arms dealer) then what's to stop them from killing someone like Callen who they only know as the mailman.

Callen's friends were quickly alerted to the situation and though they wanted to move in right away to rescue him — they were at first deterred by what looked like a well-crafted plan. It appears the group planted explosives by wiring the whole building to keep out any sort of rescue team before they had even begun shooting people. So, getting everyone out isn't going to be as easy as the team initially thought.

Nevertheless, the rescue team did make it into the building without triggering any of the alarms or the security cameras. And they split up once inside. Deeks and Kensi were going to try and help the hostages while Sam was going to act as Callen's backup during what they hoped to be one quick and final confrontation.

But, once again, Deeks and Kensi were put off. The man watching the hostages had strapped himself to live explosives and that basically made the one person standing in their way bullet proof. So they couldn't take him down without risking casualties. And they couldn't use their phones to call in for help because the terrorists had also shut down all phone services into the building.

So Deeks ended up having to sneak out alone (without Kensi) in order to try and find some way to call back Sam. Sam had gotten his friend free but the terrorist hadn't all been taken over. The leader was still alive and as long as he was — no one was safe.

The group was looking for something. And the team didn't what it was until Sam and Callen stumbled across a doctor wandering the building. The unfortunate truth is that company using the building was more than just a front for arms dealing. It seems like they actually were working and one of the jobs they were assigned to do was to find a cure for a virus. However the end result ended up being what Beale and Nell refer to as Ebola on drugs. It's just as deadly but fast acting and can be caught as easily as the common cold.

After they got back into contact with the head office, Nell and Beale were able to identify the group that's been harassing their team. Apparently they were once a part of the IRA. Though they separated themselves from each other after the IRA found this group to be too radical.

And, in spite of having a well-equipped federal team on the inside, the group still managed to get their hands on the virus!

Deeks and Kensi took care of their suicide bomber and they secured the building. Yet Sam and Callen weren't as lucky in their own endeavours.

The doctor that had been wandering was actually a plant and after she threw one of the deadly virals into Callen's path, thus preventing at least one of them from following, she then made a run for it. But Callen didn't want Sam to stick around and watch him get sick. So he told Sam to complete the mission. And in the end the doctor only got as far as the roof before Sam shot and killed her.

Yet, while they were successful in preventing an outbreak, the team still had to worry about their friend Callen. Though the CDC helped solved that problem. Rather than dying, Callen woke up in a hospital in Georgia and right by his side was Sam who knew all along Callen was going to need support after he found himself in Georgia.

Callen is going to be ok but that was close call that shook everyone up!

Summary: After the U.S. consulate in Tunisia is attacked, Callen and Sam go on a secret and perilous mission to retrieve key evidence from the crime scene. When they return, they seek help from the U.S. Ambassador, who narrowly escaped the attack, to provide missing information.

The team was called in on a red alert on tonight's episode. It seems US Ambassador Kelly barely escaped a failed assassination attempt at the US consulate in Tunisia. However Kelly's security detail, including a good friend of Sam's, weren't as lucky. They died trying to buy her time she needed to escape and now everyone wants answers. Most especially, Sam.

Hence, the team opening an investigation into the near fiasco is personal. Sam wants to know how the terrorist came so close to the consulate that they ended up getting so close to Commander Harris they were able to kill him. Meanwhile,

Washington simply don't want a repeat of Benghazi and the fallout from that.

So, you see, this incident has put everyone on edge. If the terrorist had succeeded with their mission then Kelly would have been the seventh ambassador assassinated. And something like that makes people like Captain Beck fed up with using diplomacy when really he wants something to be done already. Commander Harris was one of his men and so the Captain told Kensi and Deeks that off the record he doesn't want them to bring back perpetrators — he asked them to bring back bodies instead.

However, Beck turned out to have more answers than anything either Sam or Callen could find at the scene in Tunisia. The boys came back from their trip and yet they didn't have much to say for it. But the rest of the team eventually found out that Harris had gotten a personal visit from his boss and that Beck had lied when he claimed he hadn't seen Harris in a while.

According to reports, Beck and Harris had a meeting behind closed doors. And whatever they talked about — Beck is not repeating. Kensi and Deeks paid him another visit and he willingly chose to stonewall a federal investigation rather than tell him about his meeting with Harris.

Yet, the team couldn't figure out why the captain hadn't changed his stance after there was a shooting right in front of his office. The very same people that had attacked the ambassador in Tunisia have now followed her to the states to finish what they started. And still Beck refuses to discuss his meeting with Harris.

So when they couldn't get Beck to comply — the team put out a surveillance on him. Though that only yielded one vital piece of information and that was he was colluding with the CIA.

But it's not like they could just ask the CIA about Beck and without their help — they would never know what Beck has been doing. Or what he talked to Harris about.

Yet a picture would go to show there is at least one person that knew what all the secrets and road blocks were about and that was Kelly. She was photographed arguing with Harris a few days before the consulate was attacked. So she was asked (despite the risks) to come to NCIS Los Angeles headquarters.

There, she filled in the team with what little she knew. It seemed Harris had been running a risky op she hadn't known about. And when she did learn of it — she confronted him. She wanted to know who was involved with this op and he refused to tell her.

Then they were attacked and she dropped the issue. But Kelly saw what neither Sam nor Callen did. She saw that whoever had been running a surveillance on the consulate wasn't really after her — she was barely in the pictures — Harris on the other hand appeared to have been followed everywhere he went. So he must have been the real target all along.

But then that didn't explain why she was attacked again in front of Beck's office. At least until Kelly admitted Beck was the only other person besides Harris that knew what this secret op actually entailed. So whoever had targeted Harris was also now targeting his boss. Who the team soon found out they had to recuse.

Beck was forcibly taken from his home and whoever kidnapped had left behind too many clues in their wake.

The man that had started this all was Munir Al Zarzi. He's a known terrorist that has a penchant for beheading his victims. So when the team hit him — they knew they would have to act fast and hard. Else Beck could die in the process of his own rescue.

Though no one expected Deeks would be the hero of the day. Deeks managed to sneak up behind Munir and knock him out cold before the other man could even finish his rant about evil America.

And even though he was bruised — Beck hadn't told the terrorist anything and he still refused to talk about the op with NCIS.

Summary: Callen and Sam work undercover as food truck owners in Mexico to find the source of an anthrax poisoning and prevent a bioterrorism attack.

The drought that has been affecting LA has started in on the NCIS team. Apparently, the only way they can conserve water is for them to go without a few luxuries and do other things they find incredibly disgusting. Like not flushing.

However, when Deeks informed Sam and Callen about this, the guys refused to follow protocol. For them, it was one thing to get rid of the fountain they had in the background but it was quite another for them to come into close call with someone else's pee. So when a call later came in about a new case — the guys were probably hoping that whatever it was they'd be out of the office for most of the day or week! Yet, the case they got was no laughing matter.

A man had been admitted to the hospital after he fell sick from anthrax. Anthrax is generally a terrorist's weapon of choice so when they received a call about a mysterious sick man — the team had to handle the case as a possible investigation into terrorism.

Though there was just one thing wrong with that. For it seems their victim had no ties to extremism. In fact they were dealing with a Mexican nationalist. So if anything they had to worry about what's going on beyond the border.

Their Mexican counter-part had informed them that there had been a few grumblings about someone intent on weaponizing anthrax. But if so that would mean someone was planning to attack LA or any other state near the border on a large scale.

So, to get to the bottom of what was going on, Sam and Callen had to go in undercover. They went to Mexico pretending to be food truck drivers and yet he soon learned that the Mexican might not be as helpful in the investigation as they thought.

The guys had been staking a place for a couple of days that had been reported to have anthrax activity when out of nowhere their Mexican contact told them they had received bad intel. At the time, Agent Fuentes put it down to the fact the Mexican government may not want to share any of the credit. But, unbeknownst to them all, someone had cut the brakes on the food truck and whoever had them moved must have done that with the brakes in mind.

At the time, Agent Fuentes put it down to the fact the Mexican government may not want to share any of the credit. But, unbeknownst to them all, someone had cut the brakes on the food truck and whoever had them moved must have done that with the brakes in mind.

So someone wanted to kill Sam and Callen. And in the meantime Deeks, Kensi, and Granger eventually came upon a tunnel connecting LA to Mexico that was normally for drugs.

Deeks and Kensi had found their victim's father and according to him his son would never get involved is something like. At least not willing. Though he might have gotten exposed to the deadly chemical while he was "traveling".

It appears their victim had used a secret tunnel to make it the states and he must have done so without the cartel's permission (they wouldn't risk their business dealing over someone like the victim who from all accounts was a man just trying support his family). So not only is his father now in danger but the victim's wife and son needed to be moved as well for their own safety.

The guys followed up on the tunnel and they did rule Guzman had contacted anthrax by accident but the cartel still wanted to silence anyone he might have told. So, after Granger and Guzman turned back for their own good, Kensi and Deeks followed the tunnels until they reached Tijuana.

Then, they went about finding Guzman's family. But the search for the makes of the anthrax was going to be taken care of by Sam and Callen.

Sam and Callen had found another dead body but it was of their chief suspect. A chemist known to favor certain extremist sympathies was murdered yet his security identity was oddly still in use. So the guys called in headquarters and had whoever had been using their suspect's id traced.

And surprisingly they found a Mexican official they had actually befriended a few days earlier.

Though the official had apparently forgotten to mention a few things. Like his father being an Iraqi biologist and that he had taken his mother's Spanish name in order to throw off suspicion. So in a race against time they had to find their friend before he used someone's else ID to book himself on a flight heading out of the country.

And by sheer luck, Sam and Callen stopped a major terrorist attack but regardless of their heroics — the red tape surrounding immigrants in the US ended up nearly ruining this win.

The Guzman family, that the team had all saved, was being threatened by homeland security. It seems the US government wanted to return the family to Mexico even though there was a price on all of their heads.

So Granger stepped in and somehow he miraculously managed to get a visa for everyone. And it only because of what he did that government didn't end up being jerks!

Summary: Callen and Sam are kidnapped when they follow an anonymous tip about a missing NSA agent. When the team discover they are missing, they realize it may have been a trap set by terrorists.

avail!

But there was several hints about what the guys must have been up to when they were taken. Apparently Sam and Callen were investigating a missing NSA analysis when anonymous tip came in and gave them an address. Now everyone believes the address along with tip was a set up. Yet no one knows who's behind it all.

Wherever the guys were taken to, it thankfully wasn't that secure. So Sam and Callen managed to escape their cell and try their own luck at freeing themselves.

Meanwhile, back at Headquarters, Kensi and Deeks were receiving their assignments. They were told to trace Sam and Callen's last known location and eventually they found the scene of the crime. The scene of the kidnapping, itself, was easy to identify after Deeks and Kensi found the car surrounded by used tranquilizers and gas canisters.

Though, Kensi started to worry when she found those items and Deeks, like always, had to be the one to placate all her fears. This time he did so by telling her that as long as they didn't find blood — there's still hope for Sam and Callen.

As for Sam and Callen, there "escape" was too good to be true and eventually they came upon an electrified fence. And, knowing those two, they probably would have still tried to give the fence a go, in spite of the danger, but they were stopped when another victim revealed himself.

Yet, this other man claiming to be held against his will wasn't exactly a new face to them. Apparently, Martin Samir is the same NSA analyst the guys were trying to find.

He disappeared a few weeks ago and somehow he broke out of his room the same time as Sam and Callen. Which ended up meaning that all three of them were now in this together. Or so the guys thought when they let Martin come with them.

Martin on the other hand was just a tad too happy about sneaking away from the guys to allegedly answer the call of nature. And there isn't a person alive that is that happy to be using the bathroom outdoors!

And as for Deeks and Kensi, they found which truck the kidnappers used but they were given orders not follow up on the lead. Because, even though it's their friends that's missing; they had to follow Granger's orders when he places them on a new op.

NCIS recently found an ISIS cell in LA and as they're going about demolishing this cell — Sam and Callen are to be fostered off on different agents who barely know them. Hence, the odds of Sam and Callen being found have just been lowered. Though that doesn't seem to matter in the face of such a large undertaking.

And as it turns out the guys could look after themselves. Not long after they found the real Martin Samir — they entered into a gun battle with the impersonator that's been following this entire time.

It looks like the fake was planted in order for ISIS to find out about their rogue member's upcoming meeting with Granger. But Sam and Callen had suspected "Martin" and so they gave him false information to pass on to his friends. So while "Martin" was leading known terrorists into a sting — Callen found a way to notify NCIS of where they could find some ISIS members.

And after that, the guys simply had to deal with "Martin". Which turned out to be so bad because, thankfully, the impersonator made it easy for them by knowingly killing himself. And that was that.

The guys took out an ISIS cell and they didn't even need their informant!

Summary: Sam is shot while trying to apprehend a spy contracted by the CIA. The team enlist the help of Thapa, the elite Nepali soldier from their past, to help locate the shooter. Meanwhile, Kensi and Deeks have their first official argument.

The elite Nepali soldier Thapa is back on tonight's all new episode of "NCIS: LA". It seems India sent him after a woman named Ella Desai. Ella, who worked on certain nuclear projects back in India, had wanted to hand over information to CIA in exchange for citizenship and protection. However India didn't want her to reveal too much information. Hence Thapa was sent in to retrieve her.

But, during a confrontation with Sam and Callen, someone (that is a third party) tried to take shots at Ella. This person thankfully missed their intended target yet Sam was shot attempting to protect her.

India, of course, is denying all accountability and to prove that they're even offering their assistance in finding this would be assassin. They've given the NCIS team Thapa to use. And Hetty has no reason to turn him away. She's choosing to believe Callen when he said Thapa was just as shocked as they were when someone started to fire at them and that means Thapa is going to be filling in for Sam. The one missing person from their team.

So, naturally, Thapa is doing his best to help. Though, this investigation is starting to its toll on him as well as on Callen. Callen, for his part, hasn't been doing so well with his partner and best friend in surgery. And as for Thapa, his belief in his handlers was inadvertently shaken. Because while he was at first positive his people were innocent of the assassination attempt — he later found evidence of another elite soldier.

Ella didn't know why anyone would want to kill. Or if she did then she was keeping mum about it.

Thus, the team was essentially shooting blind as they tried to carry out this investigation. And unfortunately that meant they wound up in someone's trap instead of finding answers.

Going up against a squad of Nepalese soldiers, Kensi, Callen, Thapa, and Deeks were able to fight their way out of the trap. But the answers they eventually found didn't seem to make any sense. Especially when it was proven their assassin was actually after Thapa and not Ella!

So that begs the questions as to who wants to kill Thapa?

Thapa thinks it might be his own people that set him up and if so he wonders if Ella was also part of the trap. You see Ella was originally not considered all that valuable. As a potential asset that is. Yet, when Sam got shot and not only was Thapa sent but then a team of former soldiers came after him — Ella's value suddenly went up. And the CIA couldn't wait to get their hands on her.

Thapa, once he started to connect the dots, then tried to get answers out of Ella. Though by then it was already too late because the CIA had taken her into protective custody. So Thapa now believes his people are prepared to kill him in order to plant a double agent.

And that in turn made him worry about his family back home. For instance what's going to happen to wife and children now that he has a price on his head?

Sam woke up in the hospital and the first thing he had asked for was Callen. Apparently, he never got the chance before he was rushed to the hospital to warn his friends that he had seen Ella plant a tracking device on Thapa. Hence, by time they found it, it was already too late.

Thapa had tracked to Sam's hospital room and another group of soldiers was sent in to kill him.

This time, however, they completed their mission regardless of everyone's best efforts to stop them. And do you know what happened after Thapa was killed? His government had the nerve to cover up what they did by granting him a posthumous award for bravery.

It seems that Thapa's government is claiming it was terrorist that attacked Thapa and thanks to Ella getting caught in Thapa's eventual death. Both her government and the CIA have dropped her. Meaning she's on her own. And she'll stay that way, even in prison, unless she provides the NCIS team with names!

Summary: The NCIS team must find two missing Afghanistan soldiers who are training in the U.S. so they can't disclose classified military operations to their captors. The team worries that Sam is back to work too soon and Callen figures out that he and Sam have very little in common.

An Afghan soldier is training by running some laps when two other suspicious looking individuals chase him down. He gets stabbed and accidentally killed in the process.

Sam comes back from the hospital, a bit late – at 8:02 a.m.

Sam and Granger chit chat about day-trading in front of the gang. He confronts Sam about his health and says they have to go to the gym together to do "burpies" in order to get back in the ring.

The gang gets debriefed on the case.

All agencies have been called in to investigate. There needs to be compliance between all agency, and the fact the murder wasn't a hate crime needs to be proven.

Sam is back after proving his health to Granger and the gang teases him more about his health.

The gang meets with the DEA unit.

Callen tries to get information from the DEA agent he's talking to, and they can't seem to find the boss. They trick the agent into telling them why the DEA selected the soldier to be a part of the training program.

Agent Richards selected Farhad and the two other soldiers because they all had high level clearance in Afghanistan.

Beal and Nell talk about Beal's female friend who helped him gather some necessary information. Nell helps him put the pieces together.

They figure out a place that Agent Richards frequents, and Kensi and Deeks find the drunk woman at the bar.

Richards reveals that the other two men involved are now missing.

The gang realize the kind of trouble they're in, and Sam says he wants to talk with the guy who trained the soldiers at the DEA.

Hetty and Granger tell Nell and Beal to keep looking for the two soldiers.

The soldier's trainer adamantly defends the innocence of his students. He believes that the two soldiers are not guilty, and are actually in danger themselves.

Beal and Nell reveal that a cafe abduction led to one of the soldiers managing to escape just in time. The other soldier was caught going to morning prayer.

It turns out to be a terrorist group that would want to know the classified information these two soldiers would possess.

The gang needs to find the other soldier before he's kidnapped, and need to rescue the second one.

Two theories emerge about the soldier that wasn't kidnapped yet, and the gang splits up into two teams to locate him.

As Callen and Sam do a stakeout, Callen tries to find more things they have in common.

Kensi and Deeks locate a boutique owner who says the soldier was in the store this morning and bought a baseball cap and black t-shirt. They believe that Nell is right, and that he's probably going into hiding.

Sam and Callen get their eyes on him.

As Sam tries to take the soldier from running, there's a drive-by.

Sam and Callen apprehend one man, while Kamal escapes and the rest of the people in the van do as well.

The captured man says he was just asked to drive, and that he's not part of the terrorist group.

The gang switches partners, as Kensi and Sam go after the location Beal fed them. Callen and Deeks stay back with the captured driver.

Kensi and Sam chase down Kamal and convince him that they're here to help.

He finds out that Farhad is dead, and that his other friend was kidnapped in the morning.

They find the location of a girlfriend's parent's shoe repair shop, and try to figure out how to approach the situation.

Sam gives Kamal a weapon, and tells him to be smart.

Kamal gets them into the house and a shootout takes place.

They find Abdul in the back, beaten up and bloody, hanging by his hands from the ceiling. There are hostages in the back.

Abdul says he didn't reveal any information.

After all is said and done, Kamal turns down an extension of his Visa in order to go home. Sam shows his affection for the fellow soldier.

Summary: The team investigate when three FBI agents are killed in an explosion following a successful undercover sting operation. Meanwhile, Deeks and Kensi realize Hetty knows about their relationship when she pairs Kensi with Sam, and Deeks with Callen during the probe.

Several FBI agents are dead because of some faulty C4 they had borrowed from the D.O.D and the Bureau is looking for someone to blame. Apparently the bureau was conducting a sting in which they planned on catching homegrown terrorist actually buying the C4 from an undercover agent but after the switch had been made and the terrorist were taken into custody — the C4 unexpectedly went off. After the agents had already reclaimed it. So the FBI wants to know who dropped the ball and got some of their men murdered in the process.

However an investigation into who had the C4 and what time was it transferred to someone else ended up revealing not a mistake but an intentional act. It seems someone purposely messed with the C4 and also planted a smaller bomb on the terrorist's car. You see it was the smaller bomb that was remotely activated to go off when only the federal agents were around. Meaning someone merely wanted to blame the incident on the C4 instead of using.

The C4 would in fact have caused an even bigger explosion than what killed the agents. It was more powerful and in the wrong hands could have wiped out almost a whole city. So whoever targeted the feds did so in hopes of killing only them.

And thankfully it wasn't that much of search in finding their culprit for it was revealed he wanted to be caught.

Vakeel Shah immigrated to the states from Pakistan almost twenty years ago. Since then his started his own garage and has paid all his taxes. But a few years ago he was forced to take his nephew in after the young man lost both of his parents in a car accident.

Vakeel loved Navid and then Navid was captured in a sting operation, set up by the FBI, and was taken down as a terrorist. So that's what motivated Vakeel into creating this grand plan of his. According to Vakeel, his nephew was a confused boy and it was the FBI that had given a plan, showed him how to make a bomb, and they destroyed his life.

So Vakeel killed a couple of agents with one bomb. But there are other bombs out there and until he feels like the Bureau has learned its lesson about pushing young men into something they don't understand — he's willing to put the whole city in jeopardy.

Meanwhile at headquarters there's something strange going on with Hetty. For some reason she's decided to split up Kensi and Deeks for this operation. And that has something to do with this mystery woman that had been following them around.

The woman, as it turns out, was detective with Internal Affairs and she's looking into Deeks.

She attempted to get information on him from Kensi but that didn't work. And so she didn't bother telling the other woman about why there was an investigation. Nor she did bother approaching Deeks rather than hiding in the shadows.

So no one knows what's going on and the team is frazzled as it is trying to find Vakeel's bomb. For it seems that in addition to having an agenda, their terrorist also borrowed some of the FBI's methods. Vakeel had found some of their tactical plans online after a hacking group had released them and now he's using their own maneuvers against them.

Meaning every plan the FBI came up with, to be used only for sting operations, he's read. And now he's using them.

He found a couple of kids, much like his nephew was in his mind, and he converted them to his cause. As if Allah was his cause. But Callen made Vakeel see what his actions really were.

This wasn't about a lesson. This was about Vakeel's pride. For it was him that raised a terrorist and it is his fault for not noticing his nephew's extremism. So Callen begged Vakeel to give these kids, he had manipulated, a chance. But Vakeel didn't know how to get in touch with them. He purposely told them not to carry around cell phones in case it distracts them from their mission. So it was Sam that had to talk down two potential terrorists from blowing up FBI headquarters. And while he was able to do so — there really is no happy ending to this story.

Those young men will never be free again or see the light of day again and as for Vakeel, who was once decent man, he threw away his beliefs in order to exact revenge and that got him a prison cell right alongside his terrorist nephew.

So there is no silver lining. And as for Deeks, he claims not to be hiding anything but Hetty warned him that Internal Affairs weren't just looking into him — they were on a hunting expedition. It seems they were going to use everything in his past against him so if he really is innocent then why do they want to take him down so badly?

Summary: The team investigate when a missile test is hijacked and the missile is sent off course. Hetty brings in a young computer specialist to assist in the probe, but Nell becomes jealous when the tech guru and Eric start to bond.

Tonight's episode kicks off with a test run of a new missile. After it is fired the engineers begin panicking because someone overrode their destination and it is heading straight for a civilian boat. They watch in horror on their computer screens as the missile blows up the boat.

At the office the next morning, Marty, Daniela, Callen, and Sam are briefed on ADRD's missile disaster. They have no idea if anyone was on board of the boat that exploded, Henrietta orders them to find out who hacked the missile and shut it down. Marty is going to contract Mission Control and find out what they know about it since the FBI systems were just hacked last month. Callen and Sam head to the docks to meet with the coast guard. They are dragging the ocean — so far they have not found any human remains from the explosion. The coast guard found a water proof case that was on board the boat — Callen opens it and finds 48 vials on Fontanel. They think the boat may have belonged to a drug dealer.

Marty and Daniela arrive at ADRD, their tech guys are working on the computer system and trying to figure out how their system was hacked. They realize that one of the employees, a guy named Doug, received an email inviting him to a Navy event and when he clicked on the email it uploaded spyware on his computer. Marty sees the list of recipients that the email went to and realizes it was people in the Army, Navy, Airforce, and Marines — which means that all of those agencies have been infiltrated by the same hackers.

Callen and Sam get a partial ID number from off from the boat. They run it through the DMV and learn that it was registered to a dentist named Stanley Maslow. They head to Semi Valley to track down Stanley — he is shocked to hear that the boat was blown up. He rants that it was parked at Marina Del Rey. They correct him and inform him that it was off the coast and nowhere near the marina. Stanley says that his son was staying on the boat, but he slept at his friend's house last night and he is safe. Stanley says that his son Wyatt is a bit of a loner and an inspiring architect, he doesn't think that anyone would have wanted to kill him. He explains that the Fontanel was completely innocent and he sails down the coast to help underprivileged people with dental work. Callen and Sam aren't buying it.

Daniela and Marty track down Wyatt at school — he says that his ex-roommate Josh was a computer science major and they were fighting for months. He thinks that Josh might be responsible because he has "mad computer skills" and he is mentally unstable. Meanwhile, Callen and Sam are keeping an eye on Stanley's house. They spot a woman in a black SUV dropping off a package, when she leaves they decide to follow her. As soon as they pull out, two police cars barricade them and pull their guns on them. The cops order Callen and Sam to get out of the car — they should that they are federal agents. The cops apologize and say that they thought they were burglars.

Daniela and Marty head to Josh's dorm room — he isn't there, but they head inside and snoop around. They open his computer and the flash drive explodes and the screen says "nice try loser." Josh definitely has some serious computer skills to rig his laptop like that.

They pull security cameras from the marina, but it isn't helpful because they weren't running between midnight and 8 AM. Jones does some research in hacker chat rooms and learns that a group named "Disavow" is responsible for taking over the missile and Stanley's roommate Josh is a member of Disavow. Henrietta brings in an intern who specializes in hacking and goes to Stamford to go undercover and try to infiltrate Disavow.

Sam and Callen track down Mally, the girl that dropped off a package at Stanley's house. She explains that Stanley's son Wyatt is her boyfriend and she was just dropping off some blueprints that he left at her house. Mally explains that Josh was a "total creep" and he tried to hit on her but she turned him down and started dating his roommate. Sam thinks that the missile may have been payback for Stanley stealing Mally from Josh.

The intern Blaze chats with Josh online and he agrees to meet him in person, he has no idea that she is working undercover. She tells him that she wants to join Disavow. While they are sitting at the park chatting about the hacking group — Kensi and Marty are posing as a married couple near by and keeping an eye on Blaze. Suddenly a kid on roller blades rolls past them and steals Blaze's backpack and then is whisked away by another guy on a scooter. While Kensi and Marty are going after the laptop, they notice that Blaze and Josh have disappeared.

Jones and Eric pull Josh and Wyatt's text messages — they are a little confused because there are no bad texts between them, and they were supposed to hate each other. Meanwhile, Josh takes Blaze to a house full of computer hackers and nerds, they were the ones that stole her backpack because they wanted to make sure she was the real deal. Josh gives Blaze a tour of the house, and she sits down to play video games with him. Kensi and Marty create a disturbance outside of the house — and Blaze sits down and hacks in to his computer and finds emails proving that he accessed the missile. Josh catches her and attacks her, but Marty and Kensi come to her rescue. They question Josh and go through his computer and realize that the leader of Disavow, a man named Isaac, actually framed Josh and put the software on his computer.

Eric and Jones track down Isaac and learn that he is none other than Josh's old roommate Wyatt. They bring Wyatt in for questioning and he explains that he framed Josh because he tried to rape his girlfriend Mally. They do a background check on Mally and learn that her parents were actually Indonesian terrorists that were killed by the US Army. Mally is out for revenge and used Wyatt and Josh's computer hacking skills to get access to the US's army and Navy computer systems.

Wyatt says that ally doesn't have access to the codes he stole, they are in a safe at his dad's house. Wyatt heads to his dad's house with Callen and Sam and find that ally has already been there — she shot his dad in the head and killed him and emptied the safe.

Kensi and Marty head to Mally's apartment and it has already been cleaned out. They pull the security camera footage and realize that two men with Mally appeared to take their intern Blaze hostage and left with her. Sam and Callen track down Mally's car at the school's theater — they head inside and Mally's guys begin opening fire on them. Mally takes Blaze hostage at gun point, Blaze fights her off and Mally takes a run for it. Sam and Callen chase ally in to Hermose Park and it is like a jungle — they have no idea which way she went so they decide to split up. Mally takes another pedestrian hostage, she tries to fire at Sam, and he shoots her dead. They find the hardware that she could have used to take down the entire country hidden in a puppet in her backpack.

Summary: Callen and Sam work undercover as a prisoner and guard to infiltrate a white supremacy group believed to be in possession of stolen nuclear material. Kensi transforms herself into a tattooed biker chick to play Callen's girlfriend. Meanwhile, Callen's first meeting with Hetty is revealed.

Apparently, an old group that Callen had previously infiltrated had ended up back on the fed's radar. The Aryan Supreme Alliance had been recently suspected of stealing nuclear material. And though known to create explosives — stealing nuclear material meant the Aryan had something big planned. So with Callen already having friends on inside of the organization, his team was forced to send him back in. And by in — that meant prison. Oakville Prison.

See, last anyone from the alliance had heard or seen Callen; he was being put into solitary for jumping a black guard. So in order to find out what a racist group was planning on doing with such a bomb — he had to reacquaint them on the inside. Then he had to do something that went against every cop's moral instinct — he had to help them break out of prison.

Though the group has garnered interest, its leader was on the outside. It seems had been freed not long after Callen got "sent away". So Callen needed someone to take him to Dallas. And if necessary, lay out some groundwork.

So, after they staged a breakout and met up with the other brothers, Callen needed backup. And luckily it came in the form of Kensi. Kensi pretended to be his biker chick and for a while their cover was safe. But then the Aryan surprised them all.

Instead of asking Callen for his help in building a bomb, they asked him to rob a bank. And sadly that's something the team was no not planning on.

They were able to move fast and to arrange things so that no one got hurt during the robbery. However Callen showed his hand. It seems he had grown attached to one of the younger guys in the group and though he didn't anything of it — he left himself too open as he was trying to convince the other man to leave this life behind.

So eventually Callen was betrayed!

Charlie told the other guys about the way Callen had been acting. So right away Dallas had his suspicious. And sadly those feeling only intensified when he noticed all the odd behavior. For instance there was no mention of the feds being at the scene when the news was going over events.

Hence, Dallas ended arriving very quickly at the idea that Callen must have been plant. Either someone the cops were hoping they could use to bring him down or just a cop himself. And so, because Dallas needed to answers, he began questioning Callen over several long hours. With the occasional torture thrown in.

Meanwhile Callen's friends had no idea where he was or if he was safe. Thus they had to find Dallas's hideout even though the leader of alliance didn't even bother tell his followers or his wife any of his plans.

Kensi first started in on the wife. To go off of their rapport from earlier, she confessed to being an agent and then she told the other woman that no good could come from supporting Dallas in this. Other women have taken this road and they're all in jail. So she got the woman talking but it was poor luck that she didn't know much.

All she did know was how long did it take for Dallas to travel home after he had been out by his hideout.

So that gave the team some sort of time to use a reference. And that information coupled with what Sam had learned from an Aryan brother ultimately helped the team figure out where Sam was being held. But infiltrating the abandon warehouse to recuse their friend was a problem. The mission was not going to be easy. They knew the other guys could outweapon them. Yet, and most importantly, they couldn't come blazing in with a task force else they risked Callen's life.

They had to move slow and there couldn't be a lot of faces. However not a lot faces ended up leaving the building in once piece.

Despite their best wishes, there was a shoot-out and Charlie who had earlier turned on Callen had somehow had a change of heart in the middle of it. But unfortunately he was never given a chance to walk away from the brotherhood. A federal agent had shot him and later he died in Callen's arms.

Though, the young man's death cut him deeply. It seems he saw himself in Charlie, before Hetty had saved him that is. So he had wanted to give Charlie the same opportunities that he got in life. And now that's never going to happen.

Charlie died and the brotherhood died not long after.

Summary: Callen and Sam are shocked when an old acquaintance they thought had been murdered shows up and asks for their help. Their investigation uncovers a possible breach of America's economic sanctions against Russia.

The apparent body of Arkady Kolcheck has been found on tonight's brand new episode of "NCIS:LA" and sadly for one of their one that means Callen might never learn his father's identity.

Remember a while back, Arkady kind of dropped into his life and then proceeded to tease him with the information. And in case that wasn't bad enough the former KGB agent also eluded to there being one big secret behind it all. Thus, he ensured he wet Callen's appetite.

And yet he did so only to then disappointment him.

That moment, the one he waited years for, never came. Because before Callen could find some answers, events and the unfortunate situation at the time ended up getting in his way. So in actuality that should have been the end of one very confusing and troubling chapter in a federal agent's life. But here's the thing, Callen still believed Arkady was alive.

A body was found but who's to say it belonged to Arkady?

Security footage from a local parking garage seemed to have picked up only some of what went down. So all the team did see was Arkady running and a car exploding. And apparently Callen didn't want to make snap judgement on the body they found on the scene.

One it was badly burned and two he was also probably deluding himself. And on the last part, Sam thought so as well.

However Callen was right in this instance. And low and behold Arkady was alive. He was just hiding while he believed someone was out to kill him. Hence he only revealed himself to the two agents when he finally admitted to himself that he needed help from the NCIS unit.

Though this help he was demanding came with strings attached. For example, no one wanted to find themselves suddenly breaking the law all because a former KGB agent led them on a wild goose chase. So either had to tell them why people were hunting him or Hetty was going to let him loose.

And though Arkady refused to give up even a drop before he had to, he did eventually tell them why he was being hunted.

See, Arkady had made arrangement for a shipping company that wanted to circumvent certain US sanctions. And what he was shipping for them was enough oil, translated into cash, that could fund an entire country or war. So, in this case, it was the same people that hired had him to do the job that now wanted to kill him.

Apparently, the DOJ was looking into the company and so the owners didn't want to take any risky chances and were prepared to cut their losses. They contacted Arkady and told him they wanted him to return their shipment to them and that would be that. But, according to Arkady, once the boat left dock — he lost sight of it. So how could he return something that he in turn lost?

Or so he claims!

Thus the price on Arkady's head came about when he failed to adhere to the number one rule in business. The client is always right! And seeing as no one wants a foreign country to get their hands on that shipment — Hetty gave the go ahead to her team to conduct an operation.

They used Arkady as bait and took down the people that had initially hired Arkday. Though an unexpected addition also came to the meeting. And so they had taken down another assassin as well.

But funny story about the second assassin. The man never once took aim at Arkady. It seems like his motivation was always to kill the company owners that had suddenly lost their oil.

Odd, that! Yet Arkady didn't look like he wanted to stick around to find the answers. So at the first chance he got, Arkady left and once again Callen was left with literally nothing. As in Arkady didn't reveal any secrets (not even about himself) and despite assisting him — he and the vanishing shipment just could not be found once the dust settled!

Production Code: 622
Summary: The team search for an expert marine sniper who escaped from a veterans hospital when it's discovered he's connected to the leader of an extremist group. Meanwhile, the case reminds Kensi of her past as a sniper.

The team was actually in the middle of discussing parenthood (and possible parenthood for some), thanks in large part to Deeks bringing up the topic when he recently decided to become a mentor, when a case that seemingly came out of left field caused great alarm in the department. Apparently, on tonight's all new episode of "NCIS:LA", a mentally disturbed veteran had escaped the VA hospital he was checked in and now no one knows where to find him. Or if he'll be a danger to himself and others.

Hence the race is on to find him but to do that he also have to figure out what kind of man they're looking for.

Former Marines Sgt. Connor Rutnam was once a sniper. And highly decorated one at that. However, things began to change for him after one too many missions/ deployments abroad. As it turns out he was one of the unlucky ones.

PTSD eventually kicked in and soon he was unable to even function properly in regular everyday life. So, that being the case and with the help of his family, Rutnam booked himself in at the nearest clinic. And everyone believed he was getting better the Veteran's Hospital.

Both his wife and his daughter noticed improvement. But unfortunately for them, that may have all been a show.

Not long after he started to "improve", Rutnam attacked an orderly and used his uniform to escape the hospital. Though Rutnam's plan seemed to be more thought out than what anyone thought the mentally unstable man was capable of. See, once Rutnam was free — he then caught a ride with someone that appeared to be waiting for him on the outside.

A witness, a veteran himself, described the getaway car to Sam and Callen and he said the driver looked middle-eastern.

And later the boys found drugs hidden beneath Rutnam's bed. So they sent Deeks and Kensi into the Veteran's hospital undercover and the guys found a drug pushing orderly. Now the guy they picked up was a dealer but he wasn't the one feeding drugs to Rutnam. If anything he said it was Rutnam's friend, Mark Simmons that has been supplying their sniper.

Mark it seems had served as well but a few months ago he was dishonorably discharged after he got involved in a radical group. One that called for eradication of all Muslims in America. But, you know what's odd about Mark? For a man that claimed to be anti-Muslim — why did he hire someone from the Middle East to go pick up Rutnam from the hospital?

They eventually connected Mark to the same man that had picked up Rutnam and no way would this man have facilitated a hate crime against people that for all intent and purposes looked like him. However, if there was a larger plan at play then maybe the idea wouldn't be so ludicrous.

A terrorist group was using Rutnam and feeding the poor veteran drugs in order to better manipulate him but further investigation revealed it wasn't the Aryan group working with Simmons. In fact it was extremist Islamic group that recruited Simmons earlier that wanted to stir up an Anti-American mentality. And in all honesty if NCIS hadn't been involved then that plan could easily have worked.

Just the idea that an American hero back from war and who, after he experiences personal setbacks, has suddenly decided to go off on a killing spree — would scare nations with any sort of American Military. And who knows where that would have lead.

But, luckily, that's not what happened. Because NCIS did find their victim and he is a victim by the way. And they stopped him from willfully killing on Simmons's orders.

Summary: Callen and Sam search for Arkady when crew members from the missing oil tanker used in his deal with Russia are found dead in the ocean. Their investigation also uncovers Arkady's personal connection to the ship.

A body washed ashore and unfortunately it's brought Arkady back into the picture. The last time Arkady was involved with a case, several dead bodies popped up. There were two assassins that had to be dealt with. And, oh, a brother-sister duo were put into jail before they could start another war.

And this time, Arkady didn't bother going to the NCIS for help. Something immediately went wrong and he got so scared that it made him run.

So of course it had something to do with the missing ship that last we heard was carrying over 100 million dollars' worth of oil. Oil is apparently the one currency that's actually universal. And, surprisingly, such a ship could ultimately fund a war.

But that same ship was never found or retrieved when the agents first heard about it. Arkady had claimed had lost track of it and that he had no idea where it was. And so the location of the ship remained a mystery until one of the crew members suddenly washed ashore one day.

Prior to that, everyone had pretty much forgotten about the ship. They figured if they couldn't find it then neither could anyone else. Yet things are different now and more bodies are popping up by the minute.

The brother and sister that had initially hired Arkady to move the oil for them were both found dead. And the assassin attached to their case could mean something very bad for the US government. See, cyber intelligence revealed that a known criminal Karposev was in a fight with Arkady over the location of the shipment. And that means things can get really bad very quickly.

Karposev, in no uncertain terms, does not value human life. So even Hetty is worried about him and what he can/ will do if he get his hands on the ships. And that's if he doesn't already have it.

A dead crew member could honestly mean anything.

However Arkady doesn't really kill people anymore. He's more in brokering deals now. Meaning there has to be a client and a seller. Else, why would he involves himself?

Hence, when the guys did get their hands on Arkady, they had to ask him some very tough questions. And though Callen and Sam had built up a slightly off-beat relationship with him — the other man was strangely silent with them. As if he had something to hide so wasn't in a joking mood.

But that all change when it was proven that Karposev was the one behind the assassinations on the original sellers. Surprisingly the two knew how to find the shipment. The brother had put everything, including a tracker, on his laptop and it's likely that he would have gone after it once he was released from prison.

Yet he died and it was Deeks and Kensi later caught one of Karposev's men's at the scene.

So after that the guys couldn't keep playing around anymore. They had to make a deal with Arkady and what do you know he was desperate enough to take it. See Arkady wanted to go with them when they found the ship. He said one of his own was on it and that he wanted to protect his people.

Karposev had kidnapped a woman by the name Anna. And Anna was important to Arkady. But it wasn't until they found the ship still docked in LA that the truth came out.

Sadly for Arkady, Anna was not on the boat. Nor for that matter was the oil because Karposev had already run off with both. And it looks he was going to hold an auction for the oil.

Anna, though, was Arkady's daughter and so when he heard that Karposev had gone back to Russia — he knew he was going to follow him. And he invited Callen to come with him to help.

After all Callen wants to find out about his father and Arkady knew he could use information as bait.

So despite Sam warning him away, Callen had to take the offer and go help Arkady rescue his daughter from a mad man. It's been established that Karposev is dangerous but with that oil he also become next threat lev el dangerous. And Arkady couldn't take such a man on alone.

Summary: The case involving Arkady and his personal connection to an oil tanker now leads Callen, Sam, Deeks and Kensi to Moscow, where the team must assume multiple undercover identities to locate their suspects. Meanwhile, Callen uncovers new information regarding his father.

The mission to rescue Anna Kolcheck is made that much harder when third players suddenly show up. Apparently there are men that want to kill Anna's kidnaper. Ivan Karposev is a notorious criminal and to be fair he's made a lot of enemies while creating a name for himself. So in all honesty its completely natural that someone somewhere wants him dead. Yet the third party are disrupting an active case. Because rather than actually being helpfully in finding young Anna — it seems that having even more people hunting him has made Karposev go further underground. Thus the NCIS team that just showed up in Russia would have been and for time felt like they were screwed.

But that's only because Anna and her own certain skill set hadn't been taken in account. See, Anna is more than Arkady's daughter. Once she upon a time she was a cop. Then she quit the job in order to go work in the private sector that specifically worked towards Russia's interest.

So, no, Anna wasn't a typical kidnapped victim and she proved that when Sam and Callen eventually caught up with her and a dead Karposev.

And as for that touching reunion that was supposed to happen between father and daughter, as it turns out Anna kind of has daddy issues. Her father never raised her and it was his actions that led to her kidnap. Thus her first reaction upon seeing him was to attack him.

Anna hates her dad and Arkady wasn't exactly being repentant. He gave her space and he didn't appear to put up a fight when Sam dragged him away. If anything he's been acting odd since he arrived in Russia.

While the team was looking for his daughter, he was making "conversation" with Hetty. And though he was supposed to help the team with their investigation — Arkday then began playing mind games with Callen about his father.

Callen thought his dad disappeared in the seventies yet Arkady is claiming something else. So is he finally telling the truth or has been setting Callen up for a fall?

Besides the pressing concern of finding out who his father was/possibly is, there's also the men the team have to deal with. For it looks like Karpov had gotten mixed up with Isis. And Hetty is setting the guys up with Anna in order to deal with the problem.

Anna wanted a ticket to the states so Hetty made her deal. A fresh start and in return all she had to do was help the team find the boat that caused so much trouble. While stopping Isis in the process.

But Sam didn't quite trust her. He was worried she would betray the team meanwhile his partner (the one he should have been worried about) was having Eric break into Russian Intelligence in order to get word on his father. If it was any other day that would have been risky but with men on the ground in Russia — what Eric was doing could have killed them all. And Sam ended up having to talk his friend away from a ledge.

Terrorist from around the world were all heading to Russia in order to buy ship that could fund a war. So, really, everyone's daddy issues needed to be pushed aside. And that included Anna's reluctance to work alongside her father.

The team set up a complicated sting to catch all the buyers and as for Eric, he went about to finding the ship from his computer back at the office. So score one for Tech. But the guys on ground ran into some problems.

A hail of gunfire eventually put a halt in finding everyone that had been looking to get their hands on illegal goods but some good did come out of it. Arkady had been injured while shielding his daughter. And for that act alone, she forgave him everything else.

However their newfound bond was put on hold when Arkady was too injured to be moved and was forced to stay in Russia while the rest of the team made a run for it.

But don't worry about Arkady. Hetty says his special "friends" will get him out. Apparently he's too important to them (and most of their illegal enterprises) to be locked away in a prison cell. So Hetty told her team to stand down on anymore rescue missions and ordered them to clear out.

It was time they all went home.

Callen though wanted to stick around for a little bit longer. For him, Russia held the answers he's been waiting for his entire life. And he couldn't simply give up when he's gotten so close.

And maybe it was because of his actions (like his reluctance to leave) that Hetty ultimately lied to him. See she took him aside and told him that she had looked into his father. And according to her, the older man had died in 2008.

But the last scene of tonight's episode showed Callen's dad as very much alive.

And normally Hetty doesn't make mistakes. When she says something it's either the truth or it's intentionally meant to get a job done.

Summary:	Callen goes rogue and embarks on a secret mission leaving Sam and the team in the dark. Hetty demands Callen's operation be shut down and tasks the team with finding him.

Callen was keeping secrets from his unit. No one knew why and everyone had theory but none of them meant anything good. So Callen's friends were left in the awkward position on tonight's season premiere of "NCIS:LA" of having to spy on one of their own just to find out what he was up to.

See, things had ended quite ugly for Callen last season. He came very close to meeting his father when the rug got pulled from underneath him when he was suddenly told that the older man had died a few years back. So while it may be acceptable that Callen is now no longer sharing with the group — particularly about his feelings — his complete silence about his after work ops, and he was caught in an op, is something his unit has to investigate.

Not only is Hetty worried about Callen but Granger has already had to deal with one mole inside of the organization and doesn't want to have to deal with another. Thus those two had to make a call and they were the ones that asked Sam to spy on Callen. Sam had to see where the other man went and hopefully figure out what he's up to and whether or not it was legal.

Yet Sam and Callen have been partners for years. And so that meant that Sam could be a little too close to the other man in order for him to see the bigger picture. So Sam then had to take a simple assignment and turn into a project for the entire team — in other words he outsourced the spying on Callen job to the others because he felt they would be more objective.

And, though no one liked the idea of spying on Callen, they did agree to do it.

There were simply that were off for all of them ignore. For instance there was a man that was following Callen one day and Sam had to step in to save his partner. At the time Callen claimed not to know why anyone would target him but back at the office the tech guys traced their shooter back to the CIA.

The CIA apparently had something in play and Callen it seems has stepped right in the middle of it. Subsequently they are both looking for the same man — Arkady. Arkady was said to have died but no one actually believes it. So it was revealed that Callen has been trying to track him down and has even gotten into bed with Russian mobsters for a lead.

Hetty didn't want to believe the worse like Callen possibly doing the mobsters an illegal favor but Granger knew they couldn't afford to take chances. So he put out a BOLO the second he found out who Callen had been talking to.

And sadly that led to citywide search. Callen was a hunted man though nothing was coming up on any of the security feeds until the local police eventually spotted Callen's car. Then in a scene reminiscent of OJ's car chase, the police were led by Callen all over the city only for him to shake them off in the end by ditching the car in an easily accessible valley.

Naturally, Hetty and Sam were there waiting for him. But Hetty didn't want to use anything stronger than taser on. And Sam had his own plan about what to do with Callen.

In the final hour Sam ultimately chose to trust his partner. He knew that Callen must have been doing everything he did for a reason and that the reason would probably clear his name. So Sam merely pretended to Callen let go when he could have caught him and that allowed him to get close enough to Callen to plant a tracking device.

And do you know where Callen went? He returned to the mobster's house. It seems that while he was interested in finding out what happen to Arkday — he came across the newest option that the mob and also terrorists have been using as currency.

Artwork!

That's what Callen's whole undercover op had been about. Sure he wanted to know Arkady whereabouts or final resting place but when he realized that the mafia had been stealing paintings and using them to fund their more radical endeavors — he had to step in and find a way to stop them. And it didn't want to blow back on the agency if he didn't succeed.

Did Hetty like it when she found out? No. She felt Callen should have trusted her enough to let her in on the plan.

But, as it turns out, Callen knew about the device that Same put on him. And he willingly let his people follow him so that they could finally know what he had been doing.

And let's just say Hetty wasn't happy with Callen when all was said and done. If he wanted to know what happened in Russia then he should have asked her. Hetty has a folder for everything!

Summary: DEA agent Talia Del Campo seeks help from NCIS after her partner is murdered. Meanwhile, Kensi grows suspicious that Deeks is hiding something, but he surprises her by introducing her to his mother.

DEA Agent Talia Del Campo sought the NCIS's team help on tonight's all new episode of "NCIS: LA" and it didn't look like she was kidding about being in fear for her life.

Someone had taken a shot at Talia. Kensi and Deeks had arrived at her hide-out and were in fact in the middle of reassuring her when suddenly several shots rang out. So rather than write off her incident as a one-time thing — they had to take the threat both to her life and to a federal agency seriously.

Earlier, before weapons were drawn, Talia had been investigating her partner Agent Moore. Moore had been with the DEA for fifteen years yet recently something wasn't right about him. And it was enough for his partner to grow suspicious.

Thus she had taken steps to look into his dealings and, unfortunately, that's how she found out that her partner had been on the take. At first he was pretty discreet about it but, after she found out he had made a copy of all the agents out in the field, that's when she knew he was working with the cartels. And that he was at risk of getting numerous agents killed.

And so she brought him. Talia hadn't taken any joy from it but that was her she job and so she came up with a plan. Not long after arresting him, she was going to find out who he had been working for and on a personal note found out why he was willing to betray his country.

But according to Moore, he said he never had a choice. That whoever "they" were ended up stripping him of all choices.

And that was as far as he got when another dirty agent came storming in. Agent Mark Moore was then killed before he could reveal who he was working for. And Talia in turn had to kill the second agent in order to make it out of the interview room alive.

So following that mess that just happened to have gone down in middle of DEA headquarters, Talia knew that any and all investigations from then on out had to be planned offsite. Where hopefully no other dirty agents could get to her. But somehow reaching out to NCIS didn't actually help. The armed men only arrived after the arrival of the NCIS agents.

As if someone at those offices had clued them in.

So there was a leak in more than one agency and the only place they could think of to get to the bottom of what was happening was the Citadel. The Citadel was where the HL7 testing services were carried out and it was the results from those same tests that determined whether or not an incoming agent was capable of being out in the field.

Deeks has some troublesome memories of the place when he was trying out for NCIS so he knew how hard the test were. Yet, to get to whoever was leading the rogue agents, Sam and Callen knew they had to get inside the Citadel and pose as incoming newbies. So Sam went in as a guy who was going to pass the test and Callen went in as someone that was going to fail the test.

Which, as it turns out, wasn't so hard for Callen. The test brought up some remaining feelings about his father and so truthfully there's a chance he would have lashed out even if those tests had been real. But upon failing the tests, Callen ran into Jon Bennett and then he made a "friend" out of poor Jon.

Now typical someone that has failed the test should have been immediately escorted from the building. Yet Jon didn't seem like he wanted to let Callen down and, instead he oddly approached him with an offer. He told Callen that he could still get a job with high clearance if only he was willing to bend the rules a bit.

And that's how everything began to add up. Jon and the person he works for probably got a lot of dirty agents because once a person agrees to take a job they got from an unauthorized deal then their forever in someone's pocket.

Take what Moore said in the beginning as an example. They got to him from day one and then he couldn't reveal he failed a test and that his job was handed to him with strings. That would have incriminated him as well as his puppet master. However more was done to keep these particular agents compliant and, after making a deal with a very frightened Jon, Callen got the young man to tell him all about the shadow agency that had been working behind the scenes.

First they bribed their agents and then they threatened family members. So under no circumstances would anyone have talked. And Jon wouldn't have been any different but the mere idea of solitary confinement that Callen had been threatening with — made him tell NCIS everything he knew.

He admitted that the person that had been studying the test results, a Dr. Susan Rathburn, was also the same person they were looking for. See while she was studying the results, Rathburn determined who would most likely be willing to bend the rules and that's how she was able to recruit people over to her side. So she's smart and she has a lot of resources at hand.

And when NCIS tried to apprehend her, she wasn't all that scared to let loose her own personal snipers. Thereby allowing her to escape the trap they had set out for her.

But what the good doctor hadn't counted on was Hetty. Rathburne didn't think she was a threat because she had seen Hetty's test results. So Hetty took a great deal of pleasure of telling the other woman how she was able to fake her results — the HL in HL7 actually stood for Henrietta Lang.

And there was no way Rathburn was going to be able to threaten or frame her.

So the team arrested Rathburn and, after they spent a day with someone laughingly flirting with Deeks, Deeks decided that Kensi was finally ready to meet his mom. She had come over a few days ago and he had been hiding that little tidbit until no longer felt like he had to.

Production Code: 703
Summary: A 20-year-old Peruvian massacre is investigated after a famous fashion model, believed to be one of the survivors, becomes a potential target. Kensi goes undercover as the model's assistant, while Deeks poses as her chauffeur.

It's that time again at the office. The agents have to do their bi-monthly security assessment and what that means is that there's going to be a lot of paperwork.

Though the guys never got pass complaining about the assessment before they were immediately pulled into active duty. There was an attempted kidnapping case in St. Louis and it seems the victim of that attempt is not the only one that should be afraid for her life. Thus tonight its Sam and Callen that's on reconnaissance. Meanwhile Kensi and Deeks had to go in undercover.

The woman that was attacked was one of four possible women that may have survived a massacre over twenty years ago. Apparently, at the time, there was a General Alfredo Silva in charge of the army and it was under his order that a group of dissidents were murdered. But there had always been a story that child survived. The Girl that Lived.

So the Global Criminal Tribunal wants to find this girl. If she can recall what happened at the massacre then her testimony might be just the thing to stop Silva from getting elected president.

It seems the former General had come up in the world and he's currently very popular with the people so he doesn't want anyone drudging up the past. Particular the Tribunal who have been after him for the past few years now. Hoping they could pin at least one war crime on him. But the person that brought this girl to the Tribunal's attention was Alexander Elmsie.

Elmsie had already been let go from the agency once before so it was imperative that he got this case right. And because three of the four girls had been eliminated thanks to a DNA Test that only left one other possibility. A Catalina Diaz who was based in LA.

Catalina was a model so Deeks pretended to be her new driver and Kensi chose to act her newest assistant. And it was their job to lower her defenses. Talk to her, befriend her, and then slowly introduce her to the federal agents that were willing to protect her from Silva.

But the plan went awry. Catalina at first claimed not to have been at any massacre much less no anyone that has been. So Hetty pulled out the big guns. She threatened to destroy Catalina's career if she didn't assist in the investigation into Silva.

And although she agreed, Catalina took the first opportunity to evade her NCIS detail and run off with her brother who she had also earlier claimed was her boyfriend.

So there was a lot of mystery surrounding Catalina. And besides protecting her there didn't seem like she had that much value in the case.

Earlier, Granger had admitted to swiping Catalina's DNA when she wasn't looking and it didn't match any of them victims from the massacre. So Elmsie for one began to doubt they were even barking up the right tree. And that maybe the whole "The Girl that Lived" was a myth. Most likely based off a Harry Potter movie.

Thus, in other words, Elmsie wanted to give up.

Elmsie has changed since the team last saw him. He's a broken man and this investigation hasn't done him any good. There was a leak at the Tribunal so that's how Silva found out about all the girls and when Elmsie tried to help Sam and Callen find out who had spilled to Silva — someone then attempted to set him up as the fall guy.

Thankfully the guys stopped the people that were trying to kill him but Elmsie couldn't return to Tribunal after that. Nor did he have a home to return to so that he might just have a break from the case. After his last blunder on the job, his family ended up leaving him and now he barely gets the chance to visit his daughter seeing as no judge likes an alcoholic. Even if he's in recovery.

So it's understandable why Elmsie would feel disheartened but Sam and Callen came across a woman that had tried to burn down Catalina's apartment. The woman claimed to not be an affiliate of Silva's yet no one believed her until Elmsie decided to look into the brother that Catalina tried to hide.

The brother fits the same age that Silva's son would have been if he had survived a house fire when he was a couple of months old. So Elmsie took a second look at the article and Sam and Callen realized the baby's mother was the one that just tried to burn down an apartment.

Her name was Blanca. And Silva allowed her and her child to survive the massacre because he thought she was pretty. However not long after she had given birth to his son — Silva started to pay attention to her daughter. So Blanca faked their deaths knowing that Silva would be too proud to admit she ran away and she made sure to put her children up for adoption in America.

She didn't want Silva to find them and for a long time that worked until an investigation was opened. So Blanca agreed to testify as long as her children were safe. As for her children, though, Sam and Callen had to extract them from quite a dangerous situation involving Silva's men but ultimately they agreed to go along with the plan.

They'll testify to the Tribunal so long as they could finally stop running from Silva.

Summary: Callen and Sam mysteriously receive a cell phone and the caller threatens the lives of innocent people if the two don't do exactly what he says.

The team were just coming off of a grueling case where they arrested billionaire for funding domestic terrorism when they decided to give each other a break by enjoying a day off. However Sam and Callen never got the chance to enjoy sitting back, much less finish breakfast, when someone pulled a diversion tactic on them. Meaning the guys were looking in one place and thus missed the chance to see when a cellphone was dropped off at their table.

Now the phone was strange on its own but then someone called them. Their mysterious caller addressed both men by name and rank. Proving, whoever he was, he knew who he was dealing with. And when he knew he had worked them enough to cause real fear then that's when he demanded they get rid of anything that could lead their unit to tracing them or he was going to kill at least twenty people. So the guys weren't actually left with a choice and the caller knew that.

They did as he commanded and got rid of everything. Their phones and their ear wigs. Thus there was no way anyone could track their movements.

And after they complied, the caller finally gave them hint about the twenty people that were in mortal danger. The guys figured out he had planted a bomb and with another hint they realized the bomb had planted at the nearby bus stop. So rushing to the scene, the guys cleared the bus stop out and saved everyone from the following blast.

Which, oddly, amused the caller. He said he didn't think they were going to be able to save everyone and was thus left surprised by their capabilities. Yet the game wasn't over. The caller wanted to see if the guys would be just as good at their next assignment.

He arranged for a way for them to sneak into a building where they could either steal millions of dollars in diamonds for him or watch as thousands of people were blown to bits. So again the guys had their hands tied. Though they managed to secretly send a message back to headquarters.

They purposely alerted traffic cameras to their whereabouts and, like they wanted, Nell and Eric picked up their location.

The guys saw the car that Sam and Callen were driving and they identified some of the tools in the truck as things one would generally use to break open a safe. So the fact the guys were located near the diamond district connected all of the dots. Earlier the tech guys found out about the cell phone so they knew what the caller was demanding Sam and Callen to do.

Though stopping him proved to be a problem. Back at headquarters, Eric and Nell came up with a name for their perp. Thus the mysterious caller was no longer mysterious and neither were his motives because the diamonds were in fact the cherry on top.

See, the caller was Chad Brunson and the team had had a run-in with his younger brother Tyler back in the day. And Tyler died because of a sting operation gone wrong. So Chad has been out for revenge this whole time.

Apparently Chad was always protective of his little brother. And an example of this would be when Tyler had gotten in trouble at school. Well, the principal tried to discipline Tyler for what he did but he never got the chance to carry out whatever punishment he had in mind. Chad later found him beat the older man to death for Tyler.

And just so the younger kid didn't get in trouble, Chad also confessed to what he did before he went on the run.

So, judging from all appearances, Chad didn't necessarily care about the diamonds. He merely wanted to catch Sam and Callen committing a felony seeing as they were the ones in charge of the sting with his brother — and even after they gave him the diamonds — he made an anonymous call to 911 without telling them where the second bomb was located. Thereby completing his plan to get the men responsible for his brother's death thrown into prison.

And as some of us may know, federal agents don't do so well in prison.

But Chad was unaware about Deeks and Kensi. The other two followed Sam and Callen to their meeting with Chad and therefore they kept an eagle's eye view on what was really going on. And after their fellow agents realized Chad was using a catering company to sneak his bombs — all four agents descended on Chad and his team.

Thus they got Chad in the end but right before he died he made it seem like the NCIS was going to collapse to one of its own. And the last anyone checked they had driven out the mole. So that made everyone question if they were actually safe?

Summary: When his prisoner escapes from custody on flight from Singapore to Los Angeles, NCIS Special Agent DiNozzo teams up with the NCIS Los Angeles team for the search.

Special Agent Tony DiNozzo is in need of some assistance on tonight's episode. Apparently a prisoner by the name of Rio Syamsundin managed to escape his US Marshall detail while they were still in-flight. So Tony needs the help of the West Coast division in tracking down his prisoner and bringing the other man. And he quietly asked that the entire investigation happen under the radar.

It seems his boss Gibbs doesn't know about the switch. And while it was technically not his fault, DiNozzo didn't want to get into trouble for someone else's mistake and just wanted to fix the problem in the little amount of time he had. Which wasn't a lot. The prisoner had gone missing on early am flight and Gibbs was expecting DiNozzo to be on the two o'clock flight in the afternoon with their prisoner.

So the agents were on a time crunch though at the time they didn't know it. They were given a case and that's what they pursued with only a minimum of questions. Hetty on the other hand had figured out that DiNozzo wanted to hide this transgression from Washington so she kept his "secret". And merely stood back and watch while her people went hunting for Rio Syamsundin.

Mr. Syamsundin laundered money for numerous organizations. Therefore there was a hope of taking him down and thereby making his associates weak enough to catch. And yet all that was in jeopardy because of an elaborate plan that appeared to have been created for the sole purpose of Syamsundin acting like a tourist.

Sam and Callen had theorized what happened on the flight and they think Syamsundin had a double waiting in the next seated area and a flight attendant on the payroll. So the Marshall was drugged and that's when the switch happened. However, as the team began to look into Syamsundin's whereabouts, they found out their prisoner wasn't actually hiding. He had rented red mustang convertible and for all intents and purposes was driving around the city just to take in the view.

Summary: The NCIS team searches for Sam's former partner, Ruiz, who disappears during an undercover operation to buy a deadly explosive.

Sam found out that his former Mark Ruiz had gotten himself into some trouble. Apparently Mark was working as an undercover asset for ATF and, during a cash transaction with arms dealers, something had gone wrong. Either they were onto him or the breakdown in communication was part of the plan all along but a bomb had ultimately went off and the last images of Mark showed him making off with all the money he was supposed to have handed over to his handlers. The same handlers that he never contacted afterwards.

So that's when ATF decided to pass Mark's off onto someone else and unfortunately he became NCIS's problem. And, despite the evidence, Sam didn't think Mark was dirty.

He had worked with the other man for over a year before Callen came along. And in that time, he had grown close to both Mark and Mark's family. Some would say too close seeing as Mark has been holding a grudge against Sam for all these years. Therefore, when they met again, it was explosive.

Sam and Callen had been sent in to apprehend Mark and Mark didn't come in easy. He had put up a fight. And had even knocked Sam out in the process. But Mark was unable to escape both men and so he was taken into custody. Where he had to come up with plausible reasons for why it looked like he blew up a building with people still in it and then robbed the corpses.

See, the deal that Mark was allegedly working on involved military grade explosives. A couple of college kids had recreated the weapons seeing as the Department of Defense have been cracking down on such things. Only the college kids went on to sell those explosives to someone who wanted to resell them. So Mark was brought in because his cover as an explosive expert allowed him to oversee the deal and gather enough evidence against the men.

But the buyers and sellers had a problem. The seller didn't actual want to sell and he had been planning on robbing the buyers while he still kept the weapons. So it was this other man that had set off the bomb and, at the time, Mark just didn't have the proof to vindicate himself.

And that's why he went dark.

Yet, Mark hadn't left NCIS with any choices. They had to believe him in order to receive his help in carrying out the original deal. And it was only when they met the seller that they realized Mark had been telling the truth the entire time. He was clean and he didn't kill anyone.

Meanwhile their seller was proven to be a terrorist. He had been going about business under a false name yet he was sending money and weapons back to the Philippines. Apparently there's an extremist cell residing there as well and so the seller was secretly funding their agenda. And he told no one about his plans. Not even his own men in the states who thought they were going to be sell the explosives for two million dollars.

However Sam had to inform them about the type of man they were working for and convinced them to turn against him.

Which they did. They shot their boss right then and there. Then followed that up by offering to carry out the trade as a regular transaction with Mark and Sam. So all the guys had to do was pick up the money that Mark had stashed and then bust Diego (the new boss) and his brother for arms dealing.

But the guys got to talking when they thought they were alone and so Mark addressed the problem that's been bothering him since he's seen Sam again. It seems he wanted to know if Sam had slept with his wife while he was in rehab and at first Sam was stunned. He didn't answer the charge right away. But when he did, he called Mark out for being that paranoid.

Sam had never slept with his wife and didn't know where that accusation came from. Though their conversation had alerted the men that were following them into figuring out something wasn't right about them. So Callen and Granger had to step in to stop Sam and Mark from getting killed.

Although that wasn't their last close call. Later Sam and Mark finally finished the deal and so they had a swat team move in to wrangle up all the suspects. Only one suspect got away hence the men pursued him. And, well, Sam was almost caught in the crossfires when Mark took a bullet that was meant for his former partner.

Luckily Mark was fine in the end and that heroic maneuver of his had also endear Sam into forgiving him for earlier. But Mark had long way to go to repairing his relationship with his wife and son. He had been pushing them away out of misplaced jealousy and that wasn't fair to them.

So hopefully they can forgive him.

Production Code: 624
Summary: As the rest of the team work to prevent the cult from selling government secrets, Kensi and Deeks go undercover as cult members to rescue a former Department of Defense employee brainwashed into revealing classified information.

A woman by the name of Kate Ramsay came to the NCIS' attention when she claimed her husband was being held against his will by a cult-like church.

Kate's husband was David Ramsay and he was a former Department of Defense. Apparently David used to be a DARPA engineer, but after his brother died, he began looking for meaning in his life and found the Church of the Unlocked Mind. Only Kate said the church ended up doing more harm than good and that enlighten never came.

Unfortunately, she and her husband were immediately separated upon their admittance into the church. And in the few months that they were there, Kate was constantly kept away from her husband. In fact she later told both Sam and Callen that it was like the church wanted to break up her marriage so that they could keep David all to themselves.

And once Kate saw what they were really doing, she couldn't stay. So she ran and she would have liked to have run with her husband but the frequent separations meant only one of them could go and Kate was it. Therefore she was given a chance to escape and her husband was left trapped at the Church's compound.

But the reason Kate's concern for husband had garnered federal interest to begin with was because her husband had been working on a new 50 caliber guided bullet for the DOD before he left and so his former superiors wanted to know what David could have said during his auditing.

Auditing was a stage that every oncoming member had to go through in order to join the Church of the Unlocked Mind. Only the process requires something total honesty. As in members had to discuss their lives before their church and they weren't allowed to hold anything back. Not even say government secrets.

Though oddly David wasn't the only person that was high profile before joining the church. The church had also welcomed several CEOs and actors. And there appeared to be another thing that many church members had in common — they all had access to otherwise private and profitable information.

So the NCIS looked into that angle and it turns out the church's spiritual enlightenment was a front. It made its money from corporate espionage and things had subsequently changed for them after David joined the church. Because not long after he did, a high-ranking church member was caught on surveillance meeting with a man the US government suspects is a spy for China.

And so the NCIS had to send people in. However Kensi and Deeks might not have been the best choice. On one hand they can be especially great at their job but on the other things have changed for them since they've become a couple.

For instance Kensi was supposed to go inside the church's complex as a drug addict that slept her way through Hollywood producers and governors to fund her habit but she nearly risked that very same cover when Deeks had an issue with his earwig. Deeks had apparently left the thing in his ear even as they were about to "receive" their baptisms and so he came up with a plausible story for why his head shouldn't be dunked under the water. He said he had near fatal accident when he was a child.

And at first, the guys dunking him appeared to be understanding. They told Deeks to trust them and the moment they got the go ahead from the man in charge they then set about practically drowning Deeks. Though later they claimed to have been helping him face his fear.

So the church members weren't people that either Deeks or Kensi wanted to mess with. But they went in undercover to get David and couldn't leave without him. That's why they stayed on despite their baptism and why Kensi went along with the women to their side and Deeks stuck with the men.

Yet Kensi ended up being in more danger with the other women than Deeks was with the men. It seems that the women have all been brainwashed into believing that he had to please Lee. Lee being the man in charge. So they had drugged Kensi's wine and was prepared to rape her in order to please Lee.

Kensi though was able to fight through the drugs and escape before she could be shown her "new beginning". And she was off wondering the walls on unsteady feet while Deeks had finally come across David. David had been sent to the Discipline Arena because his wife had escaped the compound and he was in the middle of being tortured when Deeks quietly told him he could get them both out.

Which was a promise that he barely managed to keep.

The church members had all been brainwashed into attacking whoever they saw that was trying to run. So the hordes of people coming after Deeks and David. And when they eventually found the still drugged Kensi — she was slowing them down.

But the guys got lucky. Their team moved in even when they didn't receive the go ahead from the attorney that the Department of Justice had sent in to oversee the case and they found their agents before they were made to disappear like countless others that had defied the church. So David was reunited with his wife.

Though he nearly put state secrets into the Chinese's hands and the reason he won't be held accountable for that was because of Sam and Nell. The unlikely duo found their spy and church member hiding out in a car parking lot before a deal could go through. So the bullet is safe.

And funnily enough Hetty skyped in just when Deeks and Kensi were expressing their joy of being alive.

Production Code: 708
Summary: The team searches for Jada, the woman Sam led to asylum in the U.S. four years ago, after she goes missing. Meanwhile, Kensi goes undercover with DEA agent Talia Del Campo.

Remember Jada Khaled? Well, she was once known as the sister of an infamous warlord in Sudan but that had all changed when she had later been convinced by Sam personally (as well intimately) into betraying her brother. So she had eventually gone against everything she had believed in order to start over fresh in the US. And all she had to do in exchange was testify against her brother.

But unfortunately someone clearly wanted to stop her before she could actually testify against said brother.

Jada's transport vehicle had been hit by some of the Molina cartel's men and their efforts to kidnap her that day had done more than enough to convince her to run. So that's what she ended up doing. Jada ran before he personal detail could stop her and the case of finding her before the cartel did had suddenly been dropped in the NCIS's lap.

So once again a case has somehow become personal for the NCIS unit based out of LA. For it looks like Sam had never fully forgiven himself for essentially tricking Jada into falling in love with him while he had secretly been spying on her brother. And that guilt of his had only gotten worse when he found out that Jada had then ran on top of everything else.

However neither Granger nor Hetty particularly trusted Sam to be out in the field. So he was held back to interrogate a man they had found at the initial crime scene involving Jada's transport. A man named Diego Salazar. And his partner was given Deeks as a substitute.

Now Deeks and Callen were supposed to check out the scene for themselves and try to get a feel about where Jada would run seeing as she didn't really know anyone in the city. And they began to look at US Marshall Drew Groller. Groller had admitted to becoming personal attached to Jada's case and from all accounts it seemed like they had been good friends.

Therefore if Jada was going to call anyone then Sam and Deeks were betting it would be Groller. Yet Groller didn't appear as if he wanted to help NCIS with their investigation. If anything he actually came across as hostile towards them.

So the guys later had to figure for themselves that he was someone that blamed them for Jada's unhappiness. Or if they were being honest, he was someone that blamed Sam seeing as Sam had done little but more than just trick Jada into a false relationship. He had also made her believe that they would be starting over in the US — together!

And it was that betrayal that hurt Jada more than anything her brother could do.

But Jada's brother Tahir had been the one behind the attack on her vehicle. Deeks and Callen had later tracked Groller to a meeting with a man named Wayne Morris. So they looked into Morris and they found out that he funneled money for known organizations including both Tahir's as well as the Molina cartel.

So a connection had been made between the men that went after Jada and her brother. However Morris had later confessed that it wasn't Tahir's plan to hurt his sister. He claimed the other man merely wanted Jada returned to him so that he could have her back in his life. You know as the sister he adored.

And that was just a story that no one was buying. Yet, while Deeks and Sam were getting that information, Kensi and Agent Talia from the DEA were going through Molina's organization in order to find the heir to the empire. Apparently no one had gotten a good look of Alex Molina since he was thirteen and they figured he would know the real reason why Tahir asked for his sister's return.

Which he did but, unbeknownst to Sam, the man he had been interrogating had not been Diego Salazar. It had been Alex Molina. And Molina had let himself get captured as a way to delay the NCIS for as long as possible.

See, the plan was for him to keep Sam busy because he had known going in who Sam had been to Jada while Morris talked Groller into believing that his friend Jada would be safe if she were to go home to Sudan. And sadly the plan worked. Jada had honestly come to trust (thanks to Morris and her friend Groller) that her brother was willing to welcome her with open arms.

And by time Sam tried to reach out, it had already been too late. She no longer believed in his promises and he had been physically too far away to stop her from boarding her plane.

So she got on her plane and by now everyone figured her brother has killed her.

Production Code: 706
Summary: The team searches for a missing teen girl who is feared to have been recruited by a terrorist organization.

The episode opened with a mystery. A man in his prime by the name of Lucas Belridge had been accidentally run over by a truck, but that wasn't the mystery. If anything that part was pretty open-shut while the note that was actually found inside of Lucas's car was the one that told a whole other story.

The note itself was revealed to be a hidden message that referenced one of ISIS's best recruiters. So NCIS were tasked with figuring out whether or not Lucas was a terrorist or possibly a terrorist in the making. And to be honest it didn't take that long for the guys to realize they were barking up the wrong tree.

Lucas hadn't been a terrorist and his three cellphones could easily be explained. They were for his daily life on top of his two side jobs that his wife didn't know about.

It seems Lucas had gotten fired for refusing to cheat on his wife and sleep with his boss. So he had to take whatever he could get and what he found was a job as a deliveryman. Which was in no way threatening. And a job as a professional driver for Uber.

Therefore the guys decided to look into the Uber angle seeing as there was chance one of Lucas's patrons could have dropped the note. But by following a lead, NCIS found out about Zahra Yacoob. A 16 girl that had used her father's Uber account to get a ride to a bus that would in turn take her to LAX airport.

Apparently Zahra had been recruited as an ISIS bride and no one had known about it. So while her parents had be worrying themselves over the daughter they believed was missing, Zahra had been prepared to betray their trust in order to go live as a jihadist's wife. Because it looks like she wanted to have friends.

It seems the teenager had run into some problems at school that resulted in her friends mostly abandoning her. So naturally the young girl was lonely. And unfortunately teenage girls can be very susceptible when they find themselves ostracized.

Though in Zahra's case, the woman that targeted her had at least pretended to be a modelling agent at first and then later won her over by making the young girl feel like she could really make a difference. Albeit with more than a handful of photos.

However, without knowing where in the world Zahra was at the time, Kensi had to play a part. She had to go to the modelling agency as a gullible model that wanted to have her time in the limelight. And it was there that Kensi got to get up close to the ugliness of bride recruitment.

See they didn't just stop at tricking these girls into going war-torn areas. The agency did in fact take photos that unbeknownst to the girl were being used to accumulate interest overseas.

So Kensi pretended to be naive as they wanted her to be and, at the first chance she could, she went snooping around in hopes of getting information on Zahra and every girl that had passed through the "modelling agency". But unfortunately Kensi was caught in act of doing so. And was unable to complete her search before the alarm had gone off.

And sadly one of the guys on the scene ended up making their escape. Therefore the only person that Kensi had in her custody was just another brainwashed woman who believed she was more than a glorified pimp. Meanwhile the real mastermind had gotten away and as apparently still had two girls waiting in the wings.

But thanks in large part to Nell and Eric, the guys did eventually find the all three teenagers before they could board their flight.

And it turns out they didn't need that much convincing. It seems they had begun to think about their respective situations after they left home and out of the three — two of them had seen this mistake. So Kensi was able to talk them down and get them to come with her for their own good.

Though just as their case was being resolved, LAPD moved in and they arrested Deeks for the murder of Francis Boyle. A charge that for some reason doesn't appear to be all that surprising to Deeks.

Production Code: 707
Summary: Deeks is arrested and interrogated in connection with the murder of his former partner, while the team tries to prove his innocence.

The whole team is playing catch-up to the case that got Deeks arrested, though at least Callen can use this as a distraction from his problems with Joelle. It was difficult to watch Deeks being paraded into the police department in handcuffs. Formally arrested for the murder of his former partner Francis Boyle, Deeks spends the entire night in an interrogation room with an Internal Affairs agent. Years of playing the game and being on the other side of the table have made Deeks a master in the Interrogation Room. He follows up the detective's ad nauseum insistence that Deeks is a murderer with his usual funny quips. It's a good strategy, if you don't count the part where Boyle's ex-partner Detective Steadman tries to beat Deeks.

In the meantime Kensi is on the warpath. She works with the team to help Deeks but is pulled away when Deeks' mom calls to tell her future daughter-in-law that Internal Affairs is tearing Deeks' house apart. Kensi tries her best to calm her boyfriend's mother, but the only thing that's going to calm this mother is seeing her son. Mrs. Deeks still has so much guilt over not being able to protect Deeks from his abusive father. Deeks tells his Mom he doesn't regret shooting his father because it set him on the path to who he is today. Deeks is a good cop who fights for what is right, even when it's not quite in line with what he should do. Kensi's frustration goes into overdrive when she finds out that Deeks is being transferred to County Jail. In her anger she actually yells at Hetty! Luckily a visit from her future mother-in-law calms Kensi down a bit.

The plot thickens even more when former Internal Affairs Detective Quinn escapes from jail. Nobody believes this is a coincidence. Ever the pessimist/realist, Callen is worried about what they will find if they look into the case. He is right to worry, since they find out that Deeks has been secretly sending money to a prostitute that Boyle was with the night he died, and that she was Deeks' informant at the time. Sam and Callen track down the girl who tells them that she was sent in to set Boyle up by Quinn. When Quinn never showed up to arrest Boyle, she believes that it was because Quinn was too busy stealing Boyle's illegal stash for himself. Ipso facto, she believes Quinn is the real murderer; or at least that's what she says, even if her eyes say differently.

Sam and Callen figure that Quinn will reach out to his former lawyer Monica Lee, who since her last encounter with NCIS has been disbarred. They strike out with her, so they meet with Deeks' LAPD Lieutenant Bates. He is the one person in LAPD who is actually on Deeks' side and wants him cleared. To that end, he helps Deeks escape from lockup so that he can clear his name. I really like this guy! Deeks believes the key to clearing his name is to find Quinn, so he heads to Monica's house, only to find Steadman there. This man really is a psychopath since he takes great pleasure in beating Monica in front of Deeks. Deeks thinks on his feet and leads Steadman to the boat shed under the guise that he stole his money years ago and hid it there. Deeks stalls long enough for the rest of the team to apprehend Steadman.

Afterwards, Deeks is reunited with an overjoyed and relieved Kensi, but he still has a scowl on his face. A meeting with Hetty confirms the worst: Deeks was actually guilty the whole time. Turns out Hetty had Quinn secretly transferred and leaked the story that he escaped so that they could draw out Steadman and clear Deeks. It doesn't change the fact that Deeks is completely guilty, even if he did murder his partner to save a life. As if this knowledge wasn't bad enough, Deeks questions how he can continue to lie to Kensi. Hetty offers advice, but not the kind any die-hard Densi shipper would like. She reminds Deeks that it's easier to keep secrets when there's no one to tell.

Summary: A suspected North Korean spy is poisoned and hit by a truck carrying Christmas trees. The team investigates and tries to learn who is smuggling spies into the country. Meanwhile, Deeks and Kensi try to include their mothers in their Christmas plans; and Hetty notices that Granger isn't in a holiday mood.

Jason Lam was once suspected by Homeland Security of being a spy for North Korea. However, there's a possibility that North Korea changed its mind or that Jason simply had a lot more enemies than a national government agency could have guessed because either way Jason had recently been murdered. And it was up to the NCIS team to bring his killer to justice.

Although it was a literally a race against the clock for our beloved team. Usually they try to give their victims' the necessary respect but this time they were worried about their family members coming in for the holidays.

Sam had to pick up his son from the airport and both Kensi and Deeks were only children that wanted to and yet could not abandon their mothers at this time of the year.

So everyone had places to go and people to see. But for some reason Callen wasn't all that worried about being late for a dinner with Noel. If anything it seems like he forgot all about her and just wanted to focus on the case.

Though speaking of the case, it wasn't hard for them to figure out a suspect. Jason had apparently been Mike Hobbs's partner in a creating fake handbags and their partnership had come to end when Mike had gotten caught while Jason was allowed to roam free. So it was easy to see why Mike would hold a grudge but the kicker was that he had been released a few days before Jason died.

Therefore Mike looked like the team's best guy. He had motive and he had means. Yet, sadly for them, they found Mike in a muck he must have slept in. Meaning he was in no condition to have killed Jason.

But, luckily, security cameras did pick up the person that carried out the act. A young woman in a blond wig had inject Jason with what looked like an EpiPen and she had quickly disappeared off the scene before the feed could pick up her face. So the team were back at square one.

And the one thing they could of was to ask the store that Jason had last visited if he was a regular customer. They said he wasn't and the guys believed them. That is until they went over to Lam's and found what looked like a hundred of the shop's special robots just lying around. And realized they had been lied to.

Plus someone had turned on the oven at the house so they also figured out that someone had tried to burn the place down right before they showed up.

So Deeks and Kensi returned to the shop and they were carrying out a surveillance while Callen did some digging on his end. However Callen ended up running into Jason's killer who had also tried to kill him. And Sam was nowhere in sight.

Sam finally had to leave the guys to go pick up his son and that meant Callen was out in the field alone. And for a second there, it really did look like Jennifer Kim had gotten the drop on him. But Callen had landed the right karate kick at just the right time.

And he later took Jennifer into custody where he demanded to know what her real name was. Jennifer Kim had been an alias and no matter how hard Nell and Eric tried — they couldn't find out who she actually was. Though they did find something peculiar.

They found out Jennifer had worked at MH Imports. Which was Mike Hobbs' former company yet he told Callen that he didn't recognize the young woman. So that's when the team knew that Mike had been holding back on them.

As it turns out, Mike had had a list of North Korea's operatives' names. He had followed Jason one day and put the pieces together once he realized a mere toy shop was in fact a command center. And Mike being greedy, wanted to sell the list.

But Callen got to him first and decided to use him to stage a trap with the officials coming to pay Mike off.

And so a plane was carried out. Mike arranged to meet a couple of men in suits at a Christmas fair on the pier and he later gave them the list in return for cash. But then they tried to kill him and Callen had to save his life.

So the plan went bust and the team were racing to catch everyone before they could escape. And Sam came back. He had left his son in the car and had helped out his team.

Meanwhile back at headquarters, Granger told Jennifer a story. He said that he had known her mom back in the late eighties and that he could guess what happened to them. Jennifer's mom probably taught her English but that put her on the radar and led to the North Korean government taking her away where they could train her. And chances are she hasn't seen her mom since she was a child.

And so Hetty wanted to know if any part of the story about him and Jennifer's mother was true. Although he never really gave her a clear answer. He just said "Happy Holidays".

So there's a chance that Granger could have a pretty big secret. But Deeks had at least come clean on tonight's episode with his own secret. He told Kensi that John Quinn didn't kill Boyle, he did. Although he did so to protect Tiffany and funnily enough Kensi had pretty much guessed the rest.

And afterwards everyone got the chance to enjoy the holidays with loved ones. Including Callen who finally realized what this time of year is all about.

Summary: Kensi and Deeks go undercover at a decommissioned nuclear power plant to investigate the radiation poisoning of a gunnery sergeant who was moonlighting as a security guard at the facility.

Gunnery Sergeant Hugh Patterson passed out on base on tonight's new episode of NCIS: Los Angeles because of radiation exposure of all things. But the case got assigned to the nearby NCIS because no one knew how Patterson got sick.

After he had passed out, Patterson had been taken to the hospital where they detected the radiation poisoning as well as the fact his health had been perilously in danger for months on end. Apparently the poisoning had caused a system shut down and if Patterson were to live then he would need someone to donate stem cells. And unfortunately his doctor told Deeks and Kensi that there was only 65 percent of that happening before it was too late.

But while Patterson lies in decline at some hospital, the guys couldn't ask him questions and instead had to rely on the information provided to them by his eight months pregnant wife, Jamie. Jamie had been the one to tell Kensi and Deeks about Patterson moonlighting on the side. And, unbeknownst to her, her husband had been lying to her because he didn't want to worry his heavily pregnant wife.

So when she had told them that her husband took a second job in construction, Jamie only ended up being half right. She knew her husband took on a second job to keep up with the bills that were going to come with the baby however Patterson withheld the truth about his new job. He was actually working security at Santa Flora Nuclear Power Plant.

Which as it happens was supposed to have been decommissioned seeing as they no longer generate power anymore but for some reason didn't want to let either Sam or Callen through the front door. The guys showed up hoping to get some honest answers from the plant manager Ryan Westphal. And Ryan chose to take them on a tour that had first been created by their PR firm.

Safe to say, the guys were disappointed with the Disney white wash version. So when the chief engineer at the plant asked to see them alone — they took the opportunity offered. But it looks like Leo Chadmont wasn't as reliable as they thought.

See, they believed Leo when he said the plant was one big safety hazard and that the plant itself was putting people at risk. Yet Leo forgot to mention something to them. He didn't tell them that about all of things he had lost because of the plant being decommissioned.

His boss on the other hand took offence when Sam and Callen accused him of being reckless. He said that every safety measure had been put in place and that they shouldn't Leo. Leo had taken a huge pay cut once the plant had been shut down and that lead to both his divorce and his kid dropping out of school.

So the guys were just realizing they had been had by someone with a motive to wreck the plant, when Patterson woke up and gave them the information they needed. He had told them that he had spotted an open door on of the camera feeds and had gone to check it out. And the timeable he gave them was what led to the deleted footage at the plant.

Though, luckily, nothing is ever really deleted and Nell and Eric had no problem with getting the footage. And what do you know the footage incriminated Leo.

Leo had still been at the plant when all safety measures were removed without anyone knowing it. The valve, the alarm, and the security cameras had all gone out but the footage the guys were able to track down showed the nuclear reactor had been devoided of all water. Which is how Patterson became infected.

But just as the NCIS team believed they were closing this case — an explosion alerted them to something else going on at the plant.

Leo had been in contact with a man he thought was a professor but who was actually a homegrown terrorist. Apparently the man had told him his name was Richard Nadra when it was really Rashad Nadar. And of course ISIS was never mentioned in their conversations but Nadar still walked away with just the right amount of information to completely deflood the nuclear reactor.

And without the water acting as a safety measure, radiation could spill over for miles on end.

So both Sam and Callen stayed behind after everyone else had been evacuated and they did their best if not to disarm the bomb then to at least remove it from the water supply. And when Rashad died after a nasty run-in with Kensi and Deeks — he had enough time to call the bomb. But by then it was no longer a threat to the nuclear plant.

Instead it was just a threat to Granger. Granger had gone inside with a heavily padded body suit and he literally threw himself on top of the bomb. Thereby taking away any effect it might have had.

And although Patterson was still in the hospital, his son was born and the stem cells from the umbilical cord will hopefully be just what the doctor ordered.

Summary: The team investigates the murder of a tech entrepreneur turned venture capitalist who secretly developed a daemon, a background computer program that allows for undetectable data collection.

The body of Larry Overson was found floating at the nearby marina. Apparently the billionaire tech entrepreneur had been murdered on his private boat and then dumped overboard but the reason his death resulted in an NCIS investigation was because of Overson's former life as a Navy Intelligence Officer. And the fact he had also once been assigned to the NSA.

Therefore, there were certain people in Washington that needed answers about what had happened and what they wanted to know more than anything else was if Overson's death had anything to do with his former occupation. And so at first the agents working the case had gotten lucky. Nell had ended up finding a credible suspect thanks to security cameras at the marina and she didn't think their suspect was a spy for some foreign government. She just thought Mark Powell wanted Overson dead for his own reasons.

Mark you see was quickly discredited as a spy because he hadn't been just anybody. He had been Overson's former best friend and Naval Lieutenant. And together they had created that ant-virus program called Overguard that had made Overson rich. Though Mark had tried to fight him in court for his share of Overguard and sadly that resulted in Mark losing all of his savings in lawyer's fees.

So if anything Mark would have wanted to kill Overson out of revenge. And therefore that's when Sam and Callen's mind went once they noticed that Mark had made a run for it. Yet Mark later claimed that hadn't been running because he was guilty. He said he had been running because he had been afraid he would be next.

Back at the station, Mark had told the guys about what had happened between him and Overson. He said Overson had called him out of the blue asking to talk and that it had initially thought Overson was finally going to apologize. Only that hadn't been the case.

Rather than apologizing, Overson had accused Mark of selling off a program they had created while they were in the NSA. The program had been called Daemon and it seems it was capable of collecting massive amounts of data without anyone noticing. And thus it could be sold at a great amount of profit. However, both men had agreed to never sell it or hand it over to the NSA.

They had found out about what the NSA had really been doing with their other programs and they realized that in the wrong hands such a program like Daemon could be dangerous. So when Overson had later found that program in an app — he had thought Mark had gone back on his word. Which he said he hadn't. Not technically anyways.

The app that Overson had been talking about had belonged to company he had been thinking about investing in. Flipbit had grown to have a million users but he had needed more funding in order to keep up. So Overson as an Angel Investor had been checking out new startups that showed promise.

Only he saw the program he had created hidden in their app and had wanted to stop what he thought Mark had started. Only Mark denied everything. He said he hadn't known that their program had been in use. But he did know how his lawyer was able to rob him blind.

Earlier, when he had been suing Overson, he had told his lawyer about Daemon in hopes of discrediting his once best friend and his lawyer had also been given access to all of Mark's files.

So Mark theorized that the lawyer, Wilson Rowe, must have gone behind his back to sell the program. And Kensei and Deeks were going to ask Rowe about the backdoor deal when someone had then taken out Rowe. Rowe had been killed because either had set the killer on Overson or had warned the killer about Overson. In other words, he died because he knew too much.

Yet Nell and Eric were able to determine that the shot that had killed Rowe had come from the top of the Flipbit building. Only Sam hadn't run into his sniper on the rooftop. He had actually run into Noam Haber. An Israeli Mossad agent who had been acting as the company's head of security when he was really hunting down a Pakistani spy.

Though seeing as they were on the same side, Sam had decided to drop the fact another agent had been hunting on his turf and head back to headquarters. Where he and Callen found out that the Daemon hadn't really been in the app but in the automatic update. That had been scheduled to happen later that day but which had been pushed forward. Probably after their spies must have learned his covers had been compromised.

And so the NCIS had to storm the building. They got the bystanders out of the way and they had found the Pakistani Agents who had eventually been brought down by both NCIS and Mossad. However, the American government knew that Pakistan still had the program and they had to pretend to be on friendly terms seeing as the Pakistani government had denied all involvement in what had been the biggest breach in security known to man.

Although, fortunately the Americans were able to come with their own program to fix the few phones that had been compromised. So that data sharing was over for now but Hetty said that as agents they were merely waiting for the next catastrophe.

And as for Mark Powell, he had told his lawyer about the Daemon in hopes of selling it. Which they were able to do. Therefore, he hadn't been as innocent as he claimed and he had killed Overson because he had been afraid Overson would stop his upcoming payday.

So there was at least one person that the NCIS could arrest and he'll now been known as a traitor for the rest of his life.

Summary: Kensi and Deeks announce they are moving in together and then are assigned to protect Kensi's ex-fiancé, who is in possession of a list containing important contacts in Afghanistan that people are willing to kill to get their hands on.

Kensi and Deeks had been in a great mood at the start of tonight's episode. They had apparently just moved in together and were considering that to be a huge step in their future together.

However, it wasn't long before Hetty informed them about a case she was putting them on. Their boss had later told them that she needed them to act as protection detail for a contact of hers. And that this contact had been targeted once already.

But like usual, Hetty had left a few details out. She had simply told Kensi and Deeks about their mission and had pushed them out the door before they could even realize that she hadn't named the contact. And that she might have had a good reason on why she would keep that to herself.

Hetty's contact as it happens was Jack as in Kensi's former fiancée Jack. Jack had come to town recently in order to meet up with Hetty. And he had been targeted on what was literally her front doorsteps. So while Kensi and Deeks were asking him about his situation, Hetty was explaining to the rest of the team that they were looking for a rogue ICE Agent.

ICE or Immigration Customs Enforcements was an organization that was charged with looking into artifacts around the world. And one of their agents, Sy Riggs had gone to Afghanistan not that long ago with a mission in play. Sy you see had told Jack that he was cataloguing historic sites but as time went on Jack began to notice a few things that were off.

For instance, Sy had begun to leave out certain people that they had met or events that had occurred in his official documents that were to be sent back to the ICE. So Jack had chosen to follow his instincts by looking into Sy on his own. And he ended up finding out that Sy had been secretly creating two catalogues. One for his organization and another that he could sell to the highest bidder.

Unfortunately, historic pieces in the Middle East were being sold all over the world. And with the unrest in many of the regions, it was easy to smuggle out pieces or in this case a list of where the pieces are. Which they could then sell to antiquities dealers for millions.

So right around the time Jack found out that Sy was dirty, he had contacted Hetty. He had told her that he had information on Sy Riggs and had even flown to LA in order to be debriefed. But the second he landed, that's when people began shooting at him. And how he eventually found himself in protective custody.

Therefore, Hetty had entrusted Kensi and Deeks with more than just Jack's life on line. And they knew it was more important to focus on their job than it was on the fact they were watching Kensi's ex.

Kensi and Jack hadn't after all ended on the best of terms. He was suffering from PTSD and had pushed her away because he thought she deserved better. And she hadn't tried to reach out to him even though she knew she could have fought him over his decision if she really wanted to.

And so they had both made mistakes that neither had thought about in years. Yet Deeks thought they should have a moment alone to talk. Both Kensi and Jack had moved on with other people but they had never really gotten closure they needed from each other.

So Deeks had talked Granger into letting the two have some time alone. But it was long, before he regretted that decision. See, the team had ultimately found Riggs at a dump site.

The ICE agent had been tortured and murdered by the people he had been attempting to do business with. And they had also found Sy's list of sites burned to bits. So that had made the guys wonder about who they were dealing with because real antiquities dealers wouldn't have burned Sy's list. Not when he had practically written everything down in there.

However, the people that Sy had met up with and had wanted to keep as secret might have wanted to destroy the list. So just as the guys realized they might be dealing with the Taliban or another extremist group that Sy must have accidentally friended — they then knew that Jack was in danger. The men they were hunting wouldn't have found Jack if he didn't want to be found. But if they threatened his family — he would have happily turned himself over.

So Kensi's friends had rushed back to the apartment and there they had luckily managed to save both Kensi and Jack before the latter's actions could cost them both their lives.

And as for Jack's family, Hetty had been protecting them since Jack boarded the plane to the states. Thus his wife and daughters were never really in any danger. And Jack had to apologize for what he nearly did in order to save them.

But Jack and Kensi did talk about their joint past and they have both gotten the closure they needed in order to fully move on with their lives.

Summary: In order to locate Arkady in Russia, the NCIS team goes undercover with his daughter, Anna, at a gala in Los Angeles to gain access to the Russian Consul General's computer.

The guys received word about a very public kidnapping but for some reason Hetty gave them a time limit on their investigation.

Anatoli Kirkin was a known Russian criminal and recently he had traded information in order to escape prison time. So NCIS had every reason to believe that one of Anatoli many enemies or even some of his former friends could have ordered for him to be dragged away from his security detail. However, Hetty's main concern had been whether or not Callen had been behind the kidnapping and thankfully he sworn that it wasn't him though not that he hadn't been thinking about it.

All that Callen had to say on the matter was that eventually he would have had to fill someone in on where they could find Anatoli if not Anatoli's body. Therefore, Hetty had to make a decision about Callen out in the field. And she ultimately decided to take the drastic step of issuing an order rather than one of her suggestions.

Hetty told Callen that he had only until lunch to investigate Anatoli's disappearance and then the guys had to go back to their regular cases. But maybe Hetty should have just removed him entirely from the case. Callen and Sam had later gone out to check up on a few leads and they were actually doing fine when out of nowhere Callen had simply lost it.

He got into a gun fight with a couple of guys that could have had answers. And that had left Sam a little confused about what had just happened. So he had to ask his partner what that had been about and not that surprisingly Callen tried to dismiss his actions. As if it had been nothing instead of it being serious concern.

But like a good partner, Sam hadn't said anything to Hetty when they got back to headquarters and he had even been prepared to ignore the time limit when Eric later found footage surveillance that showed where Anatoli had been taken to. So the guys had honestly tied up Hetty's hands on this one and she had no other choice but to tell them that they could continue on looking into Anatoli's disappearance. And so the guys had gone to the nearby waterfront though it didn't seem that anyone had been in there in a while.

Yet luckily Callen had overheard Anatoli and they ended up running into his kidnapper when they went to go rescue him. And so that's when they knew that weren't just dealing with anybody. They were dealing with Ana as in Arkady's daughter Ana.

Ana was in town because she heard that her father was still alive and was set on helping him escape whatever prison he was in. However, the only person that could actually help her with finding her dad was Anatoli. Ana had been instructed to put photos of a kidnapped Anatoli in a secure file so that's exactly what Nell did for her.

And while they waited, Kensi and Deeks worked on Anatoli. They figured he knew more than he was letting on and they were fortunate that he was willing to talk. Anatoli actually seems to have a special fondness for Deeks so he told him about Russian Consul General being the only one that has access on his computer to where certain fugitives might be held and in what particular prison.

But a message had been dropped off for Ana. Her father had shot a video of himself from two days ago and in it he basically told her that she didn't own him anything. So he wouldn't blame her if she wanted to stop right there and then.

Therefore, Ana had been given a choice. She was told that she could stop but she knew that leaving her father in his situation would eventually mean leaving him to his death. So she still wanted to rescue her father and NCIS were willing to offer her whatever support she needed.

And so the agents had gone with her to a party thrown at the Russian Consul General. Kensi and Deeks had acted as extra servers and they helped fool the security team's iPads into believing the other three were on the list. But surviving the party was the bigger concern.

The security guards wanted to search Kensi because they wanted to check for a facial recognition scrambler. So that had lessened their time at the party and therefore both Callen and Ana had to create a diversion just to buy Sam enough time to get to the computer in General's office. But all they could think of was a heavy make-out session that neither wanted to admit to afterwards.

Although that session had helped Sam and Sam had found out that Arkady was being held alongside a CIA operative. So Sam and Callen had been authorized to rescue that operative but then they had been told that Arkady was on his own. And that if the guys decided to rescue him, they would be acting as rogue agents on unsanctioned mission.

So the guys had to ask themselves whether Arkday was worth them risking everything else.

Summary: In Russia, Callen, Sam and Anna plot to break Anna's father and his CIA agent companion out of prison. Meanwhile, Callen finally learns what the "G" in his name stands for; and Kensi and Deeks take Eric into the field on an assignment in L.A.

Sam and Callen were back in Russia but never before had they been in such a dangerous position. The guys were tasked with breaking their old friend Arkady Kolcheck as well as a CIA operative out of a top secret Russian Prison. And unfortunately their mission in Russia was deemed too classified for the rest of their team. Who they were forced to leave back in LA. So the only back-up they had out in the field was Arkady's daughter Anna.

And Anna was something of a loose cannon. She was smart and Callen definitely found her beautiful, but Anna's main concern was always going to be her father rather than the CIA operative. Thus Hetty knew better than to take her eyes off Anna even if she had to keep abreast of everything by randomly spying on the guys digitally.

Although, things were pretty rocky back in LA. Granger for one hadn't approved of Sam and Callen's mission and he thought it was foolhardy to send them in with so little backup. So Granger actually had a few choice words for Hetty.

He told her that he should have been sent in as well and dared to say that mission shouldn't have been sanctioned otherwise. But the reason Granger had gotten so antsy about the Russian trip was because he had asked Nell and Eric to run simulations on the prison and ways to escape it. And no matter what they tried — they couldn't figure out a way for either Sam or Callen to leave that prison safely once they had gotten inside.

So it didn't look good for the guys but Callen had a backup plan. The guys first plan of tricking a guard into giving the men they needed some drugs that would make them appear as if they had a heart attack seemed feasible, but Callen was playing it safe when he reached out to Pavel Volkoff. And to be frank Pavel wasn't asking for much.

In return for helping them commit a prison break, Pavel just wanted a man called Artem Fedor to be handed over to him. Which was both easy and odd. Artem had been born in Russia and he's been living in California since he was a kid yet the only thing that seemed suspicious about Artem was the fact he had committed several credit card frauds.

And that was nothing. So Eric wanted to know why a man like Pavel was so intent on getting his hands on a man like Artem.

Yet in spite of his questions, Eric had helped Kensi and Deeks capture Artem and that meant they could give Pavel what he wanted.

Only back in Russia, the guys had managed to do what they set out for. They had gotten Arkady and the CIA operative out of the prison. But they also needed a place to hide for the night while they vetted their unknown member.

You see the guy that was claiming to be CIA had given the authorities a name associated with the Cia, but that didn't necessarily mean he was actually CIA. So the guys had to vet him before they could even think of taking him back to the states. Much less trust him with their security.

But Randall Sharov did seem to know what to say. He had told Callen that they had met once before when Callen had been in Russia and had Randall had also provided an example of when he once saved Callen's life. So the one remaining test had been for Randall to find them a safe house which would have been the real Randall's job in the first place.

And Randall passed the test. He brought them to a house where they ran into an ally and in the short time they had in Russia — Callen got to meet his father. Who told him that he knew what Callen had done in his life and that he knew Callen to be a good man because of it.

So that trip to Russia had meant the world to Callen. He helped a friend, returned a favor, and learned that his parents had wanted him to know where he came from which to a man who thought he had nothing — made him feel like he had everything.

Summary: After extensive surveillance footage of Sam's family is found in Africa, Sam and Callen fly there to determine who is responsible and for what purpose. Meanwhile, Sam's family is moved from their home to a safe house.

Agent Sam Hanna was dragged halfway around the world in order to receive intel. Apparently there's been a leak in NCIS Office of Special Projects and only Sam could be trusted with the information found in Western Eritrea because it had only been Sam's family that had been threatened.

Both Sam and Callen had initially gone to Western Eritrea because they were looking for Thomas Karume. Karume was a notorious warlord and the African Standby Force had nearly caught on to him in that particular region. But, unfortunately, Karume had managed to escape them by mere minutes.

Although in those minutes, Karume was able to set fire to mostly everything except one board. That just so happens to have surveillance photos of Sam, his wife, and his kids. So the Standby Force had to take the threat seriously and agencies across the world had been notified about what they had found up on the board.

Only no one decided to tell NCIS this. Kensi had later checked with her Naval Intelligence friends and it seemed they too had been made aware of the situation, but they had been advised to tell no one at Special Projects. Again because of the leak within the department.

Thus the first time anyone in the unit had heard about the threat had been when Sam called LA to fill in both Hetty and Granger. And, as it turns out, neither of them had been pleased with the way their people had gotten shut out. For they did believe that their guys were the best equipped to handle such a threat. Particularly if it was personal.

And so Sam and Callen had gone about hunting for Karume with the satellite pictures that were provided to them though the pictures ended up revealing more information than even the Standby Force knew to be aware of. The pictures, you see, had naturally showed images of Karume and his camp followers. Only one camp follower stood out because Sam and Callen had thought Jada Khaled would have been dead by now.

Jada had once betrayed her warlord of a brother and so they thought Tahir Khaled would have immediately killed her the second she returned to Africa. Yet he hadn't and more importantly he took her with him when he joined forces with Karume. Which according to gathered intelligence was six months ago.

And back in LA, Kensi and Deeks were trying to find information on Karume. So they called up their old friend Elmslie and, while he couldn't give them a secret contact, he was able to connect them with Emmanuel Salim. Salim had been a child soldier conscripted by Karume and therefore he knew the warlord's tactics.

But Salim was currently working at the Center for South Sudanese Justice and his bosses didn't believe he should hand over pertinent information. Thus one man ended up telling Kensi and Deeks that they should arrange a list of questions that would be submitted to the board. And that they would get their answers that way.

Which also known as the long, drawn-out way. So what Kensi and Deeks chose to do instead was threaten Salim with a warrant for his arrest because he once been caught with a small amount of pot found on him. And they did this knowing that such an arrest could mean Salim would be extradited back to his war-torn country.

Therefore, the guys had proven willing to do just about anything for Sam and his family. And it resulted in them getting the information they needed on Karume. Like how the warlord lived completely off the grid by never so much going near a computer.

Yet, by digging into things they were told not, Kensi and Deeks had alerted Karume's people in LA. Who then broke into Elmslie's house and had left a lot of blood behind. Which was presumable Elmslie's.

Though, thankfully, Elmslie's secret contact had made himself known after Elmslie disappeared. CIA Agent Alfred Mahdi had said he was just as worried as everyone else about Elmslie and so he provided NCIS with information on how Karume was trafficking money. And unfortunately the Center for South Sudanese Justice turned out to be a cover for Karume's organization.

Meaning the charity raising money to stop Karume had actually been funding the Lord's Resistance Army this entire and the staff were in on it. Including Salim. Salim had after all been brainwashed as a child soldier so he never left the LRA. He just pretended to in order to get Karume whatever they wanted.

And in return Karume didn't kill Salim's wife and son. But, Salim did later help the guys in figuring out where Elmslie had been taken and so Elmslie had been rescued. And the CIA were able to stop the money laundering once and for all.

Meanwhile, Sam and Callen had both found and lost Tahir. Tahir had apparently allowed himself to be captured because he and Karume wanted their own chance at killing the people hunting them. Yet, Tahir missed his chance at killing Sam when Sam had found out that Jada was with the Sudan Army and had gone rushing to see her.

Although Jada had clearly moved on from their past. She was engaged now and so she told Sam that he didn't have to rescue her anymore because she was finally happy. And this time it was real.

However, her new happiness was the one piece of good news. Jada's brother and Karume were still at large. And they were going to continue wreaking havoc seeing as NCIS still hadn't found their mole in their organization. So that meant Sam's family was still at risk

Summary: A convicted Cuban spy escapes U.S. custody just before he is set to return to his country in a prisoner exchange; and the team is shocked when they learn that Anna helped him break free.

The episode kicks off with a man being transported — he is driven in a red van with a hood over his head. They arrive at a house — the man appears to be some sort of prisoner. The agent in charge of him seats him in a chair in the house and tells him that in 12 hours, "he will no longer be America's problem." But, it looks like the prisoner has other plans — and an accomplice. Someone left a syringe taped under the chair he is seated in, he stabs the agent in the neck with the needle and makes a run for it.

Kensi finds Deeks in the boatshed taking a shower — she demands to know what the hell is going on and why he isn't showering at home. He says that he went surfing before work, but she knows he is lying because he didn't bring his board with him. Deeks confesses that he hates getting ready for work at home because the bathroom is always a mess and there are over 11 bottles of shampoo in their shower. Apparently, Kensi's messiness isn't cute anymore. She flushes the toilet, scalds him, and steals his towel — she's not happy.

At the office, Kensi arrives and says that Deeks is having car trouble — or probably looking for a towel. Callen, Kensi, and the rest of the team are briefed on their new case. They watch a video of the prisoner escaping from the safe house in Hollywood. The man that was stabbed in the next was US Marshall Anthony Howard, and the prisoner that escaped and is now on the run is Ricardo Pena — a convicted Cuban spy. He was a part of a prisoner exchange. They were trading him back to Cuba for Brian Seymour — an American soldier. They need to find Pena before Cuba realizes that he escapes and calls off the trade.

Callen and Sam. head to the safe house to investigate. Deputy Howard arrive to show them around, he's still recovering from being drugged by Pena. He says the only people that has access to the house and could have planted the syringe are other agents, and a cleaning company that they had a contract with.

Callen and Sam get a call from Nell back at the office, she ran a search in the employee database at the cleaning company — and apparently they just hired a new woman to clean the house last week. She sends Sam and Callen the photo and they recognize the woman immediately, it's Anna Kolcheck. Anna is definitely the one who planted the syringe for Pena in the safe house — she just visited him in prison last week. Eric finds security footage of Anna picking up Pena a few blocks away from the safe house, but they lost the once they don't on the freeway.

Back at the office, Deeks and Kensi are working the Communist angle. When Pena was arrested, he had infiltrated an anti-Communist group called Agency 5 in the US, and he was plotting to attack them from the inside. Deeks thinks that Pena may have switched teams, and joined the anti-Communists, and that is why he doesn't want to go back to Cuba.

Deeks and Kensi track down Ben Walker — the leader of Agency 5, and something doesn't add up. The DOJ officer told them that they arrested Pena for conspiracy, because he was plotting to take over Agency 5 and attack the US from within. But, Ben Walker says that Pena only came to three meetings — and he never even spoke to anyone, he just snuck in and had a few donuts and left.

Callen and Sam are able to track down Anna's car that she used to pick up Pena. They find the car parked and abandoned on the street — and there is a lot of blood inside. Someone was seriously hurt, but they have no idea if it was Anna or Pena.

Meanwhile, Henrietta appears to be missing — no one has seen her in a few days, and she hasn't showed up to work all day. Assistant Director Granger is keeping the case running smoothly, he promises the team that he will find Henrietta, but in the mean time they need to find Pena before news gets back to Cuba that they lost him.

Kensi and Deeks pull Pena's file, something is fishy... he has two different birthdays listed and him entering the US in two separate occasions. They bring the attorney, Heidi, from the DOJ in for questioning and demand to know what is going on. Heidi confesses that she was two years out of law school and inexperienced and someone chose her for the case — they were given a mandate to put Pena behind bars, the orders came from some place very high up and everyone was in on it — the judge and the DA.

Callen and Sam pay their old friend Arkady a visit — he insists that he hasn't seen or talked to Anna since she got to the US. A few hours later, Eric gets surveillance footage from a shopping mall of Arkady meeting up with Anna in the parking lot and giving her the keys to a new car. The NCIS team rolls out to chase down Anna in the Mercedes. They manage to corner her as she crashes in to another car, and they bring her in to custody — her arm is bloody, and they get her stitched up.

Anna says that Pena turned on her and pulled a gun on her. He ordered her to drop him off on a corner, and he thinks she is the Russian Attache. Anna says that Arkady didn't have anything to do with her helping Pena escape — she took a paying gig from someone else. She is supposed to meet Pena at a bar later to give him his papers.

Callen goes undercover with Anna and meets Pena at the bar. Everything is going smoothly, and then Pena slips up and uses a Russian word, that only a Russian would know. He realizes that Callen picked up on it, and in a split second he pulls a gun out and takes Anna hostage and manages to escape from the restaurant without anyone taking him down.

Afterwards, Kensi asks Callen what just happened — why did Pena freak out for no reason. Callen reveals what he just figured out. Pena is Russian, that's why he escaped and is trying to hard not to go back to Cuba. He's not even from Cuba. Kensi says that no one is ever going to believe them — but Henrietta appears out of nowhere, apparently she was at the restaurant the whole time, and she says that she will believe them.

Henrietta explains to her team that she pegged Pena as a Russian spy years ago — but no one believed her, or wanted to believe her. Back then the US was courting Russia, and they didn't want the Russians to know that they picked up one of their men. So, they tossed Pena in prison as a Cuban spy and tried to throw away the key.

Hattie and Callen head back to headquarters, where they left Arkady handcuffed to his own steering wheel. Arkady looks at Pena's photo and confirms that he is from Russia and he is a "bad seen," apparently Pena's real name is Roman. HE says Roman was an engineer and he came to the US for their technology, he says that they can probably find him at the National Aeronautic Research Center.

Callen and his team rush to the NARL leader's house — a man named David Webster, they have reason to believe that Roman might go after him. They find Roman in the kitchen torturing David and Anna is badly beaten, and tied up in a chair. Roman tries to make a run for it, but he is outnumbered and Sam captures him and they bring him in to custody. Case closed!

Summary:	Callen tries to connect with a boy in imminent danger who has been brainwashed by a terrorist cell. Meanwhile, Deeks and Kensi discuss having children.

The episode kicks off with two young boys, in the street — they have been strapped with bombs and are being watched by men across the street. Whatever the boys were supposed to do with the bombs, they are having second thoughts. They decide to make a run for it — and the men in suits start chasing them. One of the little boys is hit by a bus and the bomb he is wearing explodes — his brother watches from a few feet away and cries his name.

Deeks and Kensi are bickering at work about living together. Deek found a baby magazine and thinks she wants to have kids. Things gets awkward — luckily Hettie calls them in to be briefed on the explosion downtown. Callen and Sam are on the scene — they learn that a kid was hit by a car and it appears that he was wearing some sort of suicide bombing vest. The explosion was caused by Binetex. They can't find the other boy that was at the scene.

Back at headquarters they are running facial recognition on the boys and the men chasing them on camera. One of the men's name is Mondal, he is a member of Alquaeda and has been operating out of India. The boys aren't Indian though. One of the twins names is Tomar Sahavi and he is Israeli — his parents are David and Rachel Sahavi. David Sahavi is an Israeli diplomat and he is stationed in Tel Haviv.

Kensi calls David and Rachel in Tel Haviv, he says that what they are saying is absurd — there is no way that his son Tomar was involved in the bombing, he is in Israel with them. Kensi is skeptical, so David puts his son Tomar on the video call. He is very much alive, and also looks identical to the twin boys that were spotted on camera with the bombs.

Callen and Sam are trying to track down the missing boy from the explosion — they follow him to an office building and hop in the elevator. They can't find him anywhere and realize the boy went up to the roof. They find him hiding inside a water tower on the roof — Callen climbs in to the tower with the boy and learns that his name is Nadir. Nadir is strapped with a bomb, and if he lifts his thumb off from the phone in his hand — then they are both going up in an explosion. Nadir has been clearly brainwashed, he says he just took a trip to heaven. And, warns Callen not to come any closer or else he will blow both of them up, he won't take his vest off or else that means he won't get in to heaven.

Back at headquarters, Deeks and Kensi are trying to get down to the bottom of Tomar and his twins. It turns out the Sahavis travelled to India to go to a fertility clinic and hired a surrogate. They think that the other boys that are identical to Tomar were born at the same fertility clinic and created with the same donors.

Meanwhile in the water tower, Callen is still trying to talk to Nadir. He says that he would rather die than live without his twin brother. He was all that he had — his parents abandoned them when they were babies. Nadir doesn't trust Callen — he says that Americans kill kids all of the time.

Back at headquarters, Kensi and the rest of the team find out that Nadir was born by a surrogate mother who was impregnated by a fertility doctor named Dr. Baral. Apparently Baral uses his customers eggs to impregnate very young girls, with several embryos, he gives the parents one of the babies and sells the rest of them on the black market. Baral is already being investigated by the FBI for his suspicious practice.

Meanwhile, in the tower Callen is trying to explain to him that his mother and father are still alive and he has another brother named Tomar. They get David and Rachel on the video camera and they talk to Nadir and show him his brother. Nadir believes them, and agrees to let them take the vest off from him. Sam and the bomb squad arrive at the water tower — but they are in over their heads, they don't think they can disarm the bomb.

Deeks and Kensi finally get a break on the guys that had strapped Nadir and his brother with bombs. They get an address and Sam, Deeks, and Kensi arrive at the house with the swat team. They find the men from the video inside, and arrest them and take them in to custody. Sam heads upstairs and finds four more kids with bombs strapped to them.

Back in the tower, Callen and the bomb squad has managed to hack in to the phone that he was holding and are getting the bomb off from him. Sam comforts Nadir while they pull the vest off from him.

Production Code: 720
Summary: The team members search for a North Korean spy when they are assigned to protective details for the commander of the Pacific Command.

The episode kicks off with someone shredding documents, using a 3D printer to create some sort of plastic gun, and then printing out a ticket to Los Angeles online.

Sam and Callen show up to the office and find Deeks reorganizing Kensi's desk and cleaning it. They warn Deeks that his girlfriend is not going to like it. He insists that Kensi is going to love it — he is just helping her declutter her life. Kensi arrives, and Sam and Callen were right, she is not happy about her new desk. She freaks out when she realizes that Deeks vacuumed up her fathers' Marine Corp badge. Deeks digs it out of the mini vacuum cleaner.

Hetty and Granger arrive with a rack of suits — he says that the team is going on a personal security detail. They protest, that is not their job. Hetty explains that the Commander of the Pacific Command is coming to town. High-level NAVY officials are coming from Japan, Indonesia, South Korea, and Australia to discuss the new artificial islands in the South Sea.

Granger heads to the shooting range, and has an awkward run-in with Gates. And, it turns out that Gates is a pretty impressive shot. Hetty interrupts, Granger wants to know is Gates is part of the security detail, but she says no. She is worried about Granger dealing with the Koreans. He reassures her that the "past is the past." Meanwhile, Callen and Sam are getting briefed by the Commander's security detail. He warns that the gig is actually pretty boring and they should go easy on the coffee if they don't have good bladder control.

Meanwhile, DEeks and Kensi's security details is a little more eventful. There are students from the Phillippines protesting the artificial islands and they are causing a ruckus. When the Commander arrives all hell breaks loose. They manage to get him inside safely. Deeks and Kensi spot a man in a suit with a gun and they tackle him and handcuff him.

Sung Ahn is the man's name — and it turns out that he is from South Korea and he was doing recon work for the Commander from his country. His hand-gun is registered and his story backs up. Deeks and Kensi give Sung back his gun. He reveals that his team believes that his team believes someone from North Korea could be trying to take a hit out on the South Korean Commander at the big naval meeting.

Sam and Callen check in to their hotel — they video chat with Hetty and fill her in on Sung Ahn, they explain that there might be a North Korean mole in town with the South Korean team, preparing to take out their commander. Hetty apparently already knew about the mole, and it is pretty clear that they were put on the security detail to smoke out the mole. One of the South Korean security officers gets mysteriously ill (thanks to a bottle of Ipecac in the mini bar) and Sam volunteers to join the South Korean detail so that they have a man inside.

Kensi and Deeks are busy checking out a member of the South Korean security detail that is acting strange, Captain Kang. He leaves the security detail and wanders off and uses a pay phone. Kensi has Nell trace the call but it goes to a burner phone.

Eric calls Kensi and Deeks — they got a hit off from the website that the mole has been using to interact with people in North Korea. According to the website, the plan has been "activated." But, the message was sent from the MDD missile air base. The mole might not even be in California to kill the South Korean Commander. He may have tagged along on the trip to get the missile base so that he can deactivate them.

The South Korea commander insists on going to a karaoke bar — Sam and the security detail has to tag along. Captain Kang is still acting strange, he excuses himself to the bathroom, Deeks follows him — but seems to have lost him. Kensi finds Kang in the ladies room instead of the men's room. He says he didn't realize and heads to the coat room where a woman passes him a hand gun. Deeks and Kensi chase Kang outside, but they lose him.

Granger finds the a woman that was in the bathroom — he thinks that she might have been meeting Kang. Her name is Dawn Amaro, they run a background check on her and learn that she is a pediatrics nurse from Pasadena — and she travelled to Korea last year.

Back in the interrogation room, she confesses that she knows Kang. She met him in Korea and she was helping him get his niece out of a sex trafficking ring. Dawn says Kang was acting strange, he gave her a burner phone so that she could call him, told her he left a gun for her under a park bench, and then he told her she was in danger. Just in case she is in danger, Deeks and Kensi stash Dawn in one of the hotel rooms they are staying in to make sure that she is safe.

The next morning Eric calls — he found Kang, he was caught on camera boarding a metro bus in downtown Los Angeles. Sam and Granger hit the streets, they follow Kang in to the Federal building. They try to arrest him, but he defects and tells the officer on hand that he can't go back to South Korea because they are going to kill him.

Sam and Granger sit down with Kang at the Federal Building — he says that he was smuggled in to South Korea from North Korea when he was 17 years old with fake papers. He has been a mole in their navy ever since. He gives them 500 screen shots of missile codes on a tiny coin, he was supposed to be sending it back to North Korea — someone left it for him at the payphone in the hotel. Kang says that he has decided to defect now because he is in love with Dawn and wants to be with her.

Eric and Nell get to work — they trace the screenshots and learn that the flashdrive was created someone at the American missile base named David Murray, they get a warrant out for his arrest and the Marshalls are on it.

Dawn arrives at the Federal Building and she backs up Kang's story —they are in love. Kang agrees to go back to the boatshed with Granger and Callen. As they are leaving the federal building, an agent from North Korea tries to shoot and kill Kang. But, Kang pulls out the plastic zip gun that he printed off and shoots and kills the agent. As they are getting in the car another SUV arrive with more men from North Korea trying to kill Kang — apparently they got word that he is trying to defect and they are not happy about it.

They hop in a security car and try to head to the boat shed — but another SUV follows them an opens fire. So far, Kang, Callen, Dawn, and Granger are safe — but their driver has been shot in the neck. Callen reaches over and drives the car until the SUV crashes. Granger and Callen hop out and another car full of Koreans arrives and opens fire. Luckily, Kensi and Deeks arrive at the last minute and help them take out the rest of the Koreans and get to safety.

Back at the boathouse, everyone seems to be getting their happy ending. The security agent that was shot is out of surgery and he is going to be okay. They learn that they took out five of the seven Korean sleeper agents that have been roaming the US. Deeks has a present for Kensi, he got her dad's badge that he accidentally vacuumed framed so that she won't lose it again. Everybody celebrates with some lunch from a Korean restaurant.

Summary:	The team learns that operational psychologist Nate Getz is working with an infamous crime leader, after he fails to check in with Hetty while working undercover on a mission linking organized crime to terrorism.

A seemingly straightforward carjacking was revealed to be so much more on tonight's episode: apparently the team's old friend Nate Getz had been sent in undercover to infiltrate organized crime that has been linked to terrorism in LA. And as it happens Nate had been revealed as taking part in that particular carjacking, but what the team had to figure out was whether or not Nate was still one of them or had he been turned?

Nate had been a friend and the department had once trusted him. However,

Nate hadn't made contact in over twelve weeks and so the first sign his people had of him still being alive had been the carjacking. Which in this case wasn't just any carjacking because the innocent produce truck they had robbed had in fact been a cover for the transfer of outdated AK-47s that went perfect with the armor piercing ammunition that just so happened to be included. So the guys back at headquarters had realized that the ammo might have been the true target yet they didn't know for what?

Or why Nate had even helped the people he was investigating? Nate it seems had led the group he had infiltrated into finding that decoy truck and so there were a few that believed Nate had truly double-crossed the U.S. Government. Though the guys had still wanted to believe so they had gone to the location Nate had last been seen and they had actually tried to help him when they found him unconscious. And unfortunately that had simply been another ploy.

Nate hadn't been injured or left for dead, instead he had set up a trap for Sam and Callen. The two men that he knew would ride out to his rescue if they could. So the second the guys had their backs to him in order to focus on his approaching friends, he pulled out a weapon of his own and even convinced his new boss to take Callen prisoner. Although he had again interfered when Alisa Chambers tried to kill Sam.

For some reason, he didn't think the latter part was necessary so he left Sam behind at the scene while he and the others drove away with Callen. Callen though had been taken for a purpose. He was apparently one of the few people that knew where the JD-X (highly sensitive explosives that could wipe out up to three blocks) was seeing as he had once been in charge of the JD-X security protocol. And therefore Callen knew why Nate had helped their enemies get their hands on the AK-47s.

It had been a test. The people that Nate was suddenly siding with had wanted to test him to see if he really was one of them and so he handed over the coordinates to the weapons. That in a grand scheme of things hadn't actually mattered. What did matter was the JD-X that and how Callen knew better than anyone else what they had to do in order to bypass those very same protocols he helped set up.

But Callen wasn't one to crack under the pressure much less interrogation. So he was able to withstand a little waterboarding and Nate's constant input. That had really been more about how they both had a reason to mistrust Hetty because she never tells them the truth. And yet it still hadn't been clear by that point, at least to Callen that is, if Nate had turned.

Nate though had helped Alisa in finding the truck and getting to Callen, but then he saved Sam's life and admittedly took it easy on Callen. Nate did after all know a lot more about Callen than he let on to his boss so Callen had been left unsure. He couldn't tell what was a turned agent or what was method acting at its finest. However, Nate had helped Alisa get her hands on the JD-X and he had again saved someone's life.

That time it had been Callen's. Alisa, who was known around the world as a black widow thief whose partners either end up dead or missing, had wanted to kill Callen once they no longer had a purpose for him. Yet, Nate had talked her into letting him live albeit for a little while longer. He said that they had to dispose of Callen in pieces and that such a thing would take time that they don't have.

So that's how Nate had saved Callen's life and thankfully Callen's people were given enough time to later rescue him. Although Nate had seemingly helped with that as well. Sam had it seems gone by Nate's place to see if Nate really did give up on his past life and what he found was a hidden compartment inside of an air vent. And it revealed several photos that Nate had taken of the getaway car that they were still using.

And so Nell had traced the car which she found in Mid-City, but Sam had made the connection between the area and the JD-X.

Though an eventually cross-check between Alisa and all known terrorist groups in the area did show why a diamond smuggler had changed her MO. It appears that she's been working with Omni and so the guys had to catch her in the act of selling the explosives yet they had followed the car in hopes of making a move that could lead them to rescuing Callen. Only Callen had ended up making the first move.

Callen had thrown himself out of the getaway car so his friends had stopped to see if he was ok and unfortunately they lost the car. But Nate did reveal his true colors in the end because he had found the bug that Callen placed on him and he had chosen not to get rid of it. So thanks to Nate who let the tracker continue tracking him and Alisa — NCIS and a fully armed SWAT team descended on Alisa the second she tried to sell the explosives to Omni.

Yet, afterwards, Nate had to make a round of apologies. He had done what he had set out to do however he had nearly convinced his friends that he shouldn't be trusted so he had to apologize. And later he told Hetty that maybe he wasn't set out for the undercover thing, but she told him that him that now was only the beginning of what they were about to do.

Summary: Granger escorts Jennifer Kim, a North Korean spy who is his long-lost daughter, back to Los Angeles and interrogates her.

A friendly basketball game between Sam, Callen, Deeks, and Kensi had been interrupted when the guys got a call about Aaron Kim. A name that none of them had been familiar with, but SECNAV was. SECNAV had been going through the list that Mike Hobbs had provided that detailed the North Korean spies he helped get into the states and Aaron had apparently been one out of two people that wasn't dead or in custody. So it was quite important to them for NCIS to figure who killed Aaron and why?

So the team decided to split up. Sam and Callen were going to look into the people caught on the surveillance footage shooting Aaron Kim down in Venice Beach while Deeks and Kensi were going to look for the last remaining spy still on a list. Only Deeks and Kensi had gotten some help. Aaron Kim and Han Choi had been together recently so Nell checked the Venice Beach area and she had found out that Han Choi had been in the area just a few minutes before Aaron's death. And therefore Deeks and Kensi at least knew where to look.

But Han Choi had quickly disappeared from the scene after the shooting happened. So Deeks and Kensi believed he was probably hiding after what happened and they were forced to retrace Han's movements by mostly taking a guess. Like they knew that the street cameras had caught him in a store however there was no clear sign of him entering that same store. And so odds were he came in through the back.

And that's why Deeks and Kensi checked the back. They had had seen an alley way back there so they followed it until they met a very helpful lady that thankfully knew Han Choi. In fact, she sees him regularly because she was his landlady and so she had helped the guys get into Han's apartment and there they ran into a young woman. Who happens to be dating a man she thought was named Corey.

"Corey" had told her that he was born in the states and that he was a denim artist that makes custom jeans. Though his girlfriend had no idea where his workshop was and she was also skeptical about him being a spy. She said the Corey was a lying cheat, but she didn't think he could North Korean much less a spy for them.

Yet, Sam and Callen had found a body thanks to Aaron and Han. Aaron and Han had left the states for a while and they had only just gotten back from Mexico. So they had needed to buy guns in a hurry and had found the perfect man to provide them what they needed. Only the guys had chosen to kill him over paying this unfortunate third party so the Aaron and Han hadn't been the nice guys that everyone thought they were.

They had simply been murderous spies.

Speaking of which, Granger hadn't come into the office because, after SECNAV had been alerted to the fact people on the Hobbs list were dying, he decided to personally escort Jennifer Kim to her hearing. Jennifer Kim was the young woman that had beaten up Callen all those months ago and she is assumed (with a great amount of evidence) to be another North Korean spy. However, Granger was personally invested in Jennifer seeing as she was his long-lost daughter.

Jennifer though was so keen on getting to know him. She knew that Granger had thought it had been her mother that had stopped them from knowing about each other, but Jennifer revealed to him that she had always known who he was and it had been her decision not to meet him. So Granger had told her that he understood and he had tried to understand. Saying he probably wouldn't have wanted to have met his father either if he thought his dad had abandoned him. Only that wasn't the reason why Jennifer didn't want to meet him.

Jennifer told her father that she didn't want to meet him because she hadn't needed him growing up. She said she grew up loved and that she had volunteered for the assignment to the states without once thinking about looking up. But then she had apologized for saying everything she did. She realized it had been a little too harsh to tell Granger everything.

Though they had a much bigger problem on their hands than their relationship. The other guys had found Han Choi and they had realized he had been the one to take out his friend Aaron so that meant he was now part of the cleanup crew. And so the only possible reason Han would stick around town was if he had someone else on the list to take care of. So that had made everyone think Jennifer was the next hit.

So Granger and Jennifer had landed the private plane at an unknown location because he didn't think it was safe to tell anyone where they were going or stick to the original plan in case the mole ratted them out. Yet, that small change also meant they were basically on their own when Han and his people did catch up to them. And so Granger had to take a chance on Jennifer when he handed her gun to help him.

But it turns out she didn't. Han had followed Jennifer into of the nearby hangers and he had disarmed of the gun yet not the fork she took from the plane. So Jennifer was able to finally take Han out and, afterwards, she chose to accept Granger's help when he told her that he could speak to some people in the DOJ that could lessen her prison time if she denounced North Korea. And despite what she said earlier about not needing him in her life, she did agree to see if they could be friends after everything.

Summary: Sam and Callen go undercover as firefighters when top secret information about suspected terrorists is stolen from a secure Department of Defense container at the site of a fire.

A SCIF, or a place used to process classified intelligence, is burned in a huge fire. Some valuable intelligence is stolen from the SCIF, and whoever committed the arson also killed a firefighter on the scene. Whatever was on the stolen drive was a lot more powerful than the NCIS originally thought if a DOD sergeant was kidnapped for her thumbprint clearance.. Even worse, the firefighter's killer may have been one of his own. So Callen and Sam go undercover at the firehouse as new temporary replacements. This is a good thing since tensions at the firehouse are mounting. Losing one of their own has definitely taken its toll on the house. Despite this, Sam and Callen theorize that the mystery firefighter who killed their victim wore outdated gear, which means he is probably retired.

What they actually discover at the scene of another fire is firstly, the missing DOD sergeant strapped to a chair meant to be burned alive. Secondly, they find the actual killer on site. He is a rejected potential firefighter, so it would make sense that he would target LAFD, not the DOD. The real organizer of this ridiculous crusade is arson investigator Peter Hackett, who Sam and Callen met in the beginning of the episode. Hackett wants a list of names on a classified list of potential terrorists. Unfortunately that list is only a theorized list of terrorists, as in most of the people on it are innocent. Deeks breaks their suspect in custody by pointing out that his own brother is on the list simply for donating money to a charity with questionable ties to the Middle East. He tells them where Hackett is just in time to save another victim.

Deeks spends most of the episode fretting about how good his life has been lately. So many years with NCIS have either made him paranoid, or ten times smarter since Deeks senses that a shoe is about to drop (and no, it's not Eric's literal one). The big revelation was not at all what I expected-Mama Deeks has found herself a man. Given her proclivity for bad taste in the past (abusive husband), Deeks is scared that his mother could get hurt. If she does though, things are different now. Mama Deeks knows how to stand on her own two feet, as does her son and future daughter-in-law.

Hetty has a huge weight on her shoulders. She is extremely concerned that things have been so quiet in the search for the mole. She senses that something horrible and unexpected is coming their way.

Summary: Sam receives a distress code from his son Aiden that his military school in San Francisco has been taken over by an extremist group led by Tahir, Sam's arch enemy. Sam, Callen, Kensi and Deeks rush north in hopes of apprehending Tahir and freeing the hostages.

The episode kicks off in San Francisco — a security guard is making his rounds late at night at what appears to be a dorm room at an academy. A boy sneaks out of his room and meets up with a girl in the rec room. She tells him that she is leaving school and dropping out. They hear a ruckus in the hallway and find that the security guard was just killed by two guys with machine guns, the boy is snatched up by the killers, but the girl makes a run for it.

Hanna wakes up to an emergency text message from his son Aiden in the middle of the night saying that the academy has been taken over by armed men. Kensi and Deeks rush to headquarters — Granger fills them in on the takeover at the academy. Callen is skeptical that the takeover is real, all they have is one text message from Aiden, no one at the academy will answer their phones, and they have a strict no cell phone policy.

Granger wants to call a few local cops in San Francisco to go check out Keating Academy. Sam says there is no way in hell they are letting a couple of cops botch this job, his son's life is on the line. While they are arguing about what they should do, Aiden sends his father a video clip, the students are being marched down the hallway in their pajamas by the men with guns. One of the men in charge is Tahir Khaled. Aiden and the girl that snuck out of bed are hiding in a hallway. Tahir's men hasn't found them yet.

Meanwhile, Sam, Kensi, Callen, and Deeks board a plan and head to San Francisco. They try to come up with some sort of game plan while they are in the air. Callen takes Sam aside and tells him that he needs to call his wife Michelle and tell her what is happening. Sam says that he isn't calling her until this is all over — he doesn't want her worried.

At the school, Tahir drags one of Aiden's teachers in to the office. He demands to know where Aiden is — they know that he is missing. They have accounted for every student but him. Tahir tells the teacher that he is going to shoot a student for every minute that she doesn't find Aiden.

Sam and his team land near that academy, it's still dark outside. They call Eric and have him hack in to the school security camera — so that they can get in to the school without Tahir knowing. Meanwhile, Tahir is getting ready to kill one of the students. Sam and Callen hear a gun shot come from inside the building.

Back at headquarters, Granger is getting worried. The kidnappers have been radio silent and they haven't made any demands or even announced that they took the academy over. If they don't have demands — then that means they may have no reason to not kill the hostages.

Sam and Callen manage to get in to the academy — Aiden left his dorm room window open for them. But, he's nowhere in sight. Sam and Callen make their way down the hallway and set up cameras so that Eric can watch over them from back home. Tahir calls out for Aiden on the PA system. He tells him to come out of hiding before he kills his teacher. Sam knows that Aiden will turn himself over — to save his classmates, he and Callen rush to try and find Aiden before he comes out of hiding.

Aiden turns himself in to Tahir. Tahir tells him to call his father's cell phone right now, or else he is going to mail him back to his father in pieces. Meanwhile, Kensi and Deeks find the girl that was hiding with Aiden before he turned himself in. Kensi switches clothes with her — and then wanders out in the hallway so that Tahir's men will round her up and put her in the cafeteria where they are holding all of the other kids. Now they have a woman on the inside.

While Tahir is beating Aiden — Sam picks up the microphone in the office and calls out for him on the PA system. He taunts Tahir and says that they have "unfinished business." Tahir leaves Aiden with his men and runs off to find Sam since he knows that he is in the building.

In the cafeteria Kensi is planning to take down the guards. She creates a diversion and Deeks is able to run in and shoot two of the men, Kensi stabs the third one. All of the kids in the cafeteria are safe — they start evacuating them out of the building.

Sam turns himself over to Tahir and keeps him busy while Callen searches the building for Aiden. Callen finds Tahir and unties him. Meanwhile, Sam and Tahir proceed to beat the living hell out of each other. Sam is about to deliver a deadly blow to Tahir when he sees his son Aiden. He stops himself, and lets them take Tahir in to custody alive.

Everyone manages to make it out alive. And, Tahir is officially arrested and taken in to custody — he can't hunt down Sam and his family any more. After everything settles down, Sam makes Aiden call his mom Michelle and tell her what happened, because he is too chicken to tell his wife. Outside, Kensi and Deeks are teasing each other by the ambulances. Sam gets checked up — Callen reassures him that Tahir is going away for good this time.

Tonight's episode ends with Granger and Hettie having drinks together and celebrating their successful mission.

Summary: The NCIS team is investigated by the Under Secretary of the Navy due to the identification of a mole in their department. Meanwhile, the team travels to Syria to apprehend a High Value Target but the mission goes awry and one team member is severely injured.

After a shipping container sets off radiation detection equipment at LAX, Homeland Security has requested their help. The radioactive material found in the saline is supposedly headed to Cyprus for refugee relief, with a final destination of Syria, but it's cesium 137 chloride, with enough to make several radiological dispersal devices. The dirty bombs' main purpose is as a terror device. The container was paid for by a local charity group.

The investigation leads to a phony company whose name in Arabic means "vengeance," which leads to a guy setting the place on fire with Sam and Callen inside. Sam runs through the flames and tackles the guy out a window, with Callen providing back-up in the form of a fire extinguisher since Sam's leg is on fire.

The guy may not want to talk, but they do manage to get into his phone (registered to Elias, so there's his name) after tricking him into breaking Eric's and then forcing his thumb onto his real cell. (Poor Eric and his Pokemon Go.) Plus, a woman at the charity group's headquarters recognizes him as someone she saw with one of their donors (aka the guy driving a red Ferrari who kept going when he saw Sam and Callen with Elias).

But what's important is that there's a photo out there of Elias with Ahmed Han Asakeem in the background. Asakeem was a Syrian citizen who came here with his family, was in Naval intelligence and then defected. He's now a high-value target. This could be how they get him. After a text comes to his phone threatening to detonate a dirty bomb in LA if they don't release him, Chen wants to respond as the suspect, pretending that he escaped, but Sam and Callen know the chances of that working are about as high as the chances of anyone in this office liking either Duggan or Chen.

While Duggan agrees to let them go ahead with the exchange, he wants his men to join them, and they might as well be wearing neon pink shirts that proclaim, "We're Feds Trying to Pretend We're Not." Deeks and Kensi's covers, on the other hand, are as great as always, with him pulling out his homeless gear and Daniela Ruah's real-life pregnancy becoming a "fake" pregnancy, complete with a stroller holding a gun, not a baby. Elias gets shot by a cyclist, and Deeks takes off after the shooter on a bike in a not-very-exciting chase but loses him. Duggan takes them off the case.

That's not going to stop them, thanks to the Wonder Twins getting a hit on the Ferrari and sending them Bassel Rizvi's address. A woman lounging around by Bassel's pool has no problem letting Sam and Callen, the accountants armed with guns to protect his money, into the house to see Bassel. After making Deeks hand over his wallet and keys and strip, Bassel jumps off the balcony when Kensi joins them, but Callen tackles him into the pool.

Bassel and Elias were just rich kids playing terrorists, spending money to rub shoulders with Asakeem – and he's the one they're after now. He's still expecting that shipment of radioactive saline, so they're going to give it to him and be there waiting when he shows up for it.

Granger and Hetty gets a heads-up of about 30 seconds before Under Secretary of Defense Duggan and his task force walk in and take over. The station has been compromised, and they're going to fix that, Duggan claims. How? "Replacing you and your staff," he informs Granger.

Since the breach hasn't been resolved to DC's satisfaction (the mole is still out there), the task force is there to do just that, Duggan announces, during which Nell makes a quick stop up in Ops. After interviews and polygraphs, they'll get to keep their jobs, but most won't be there, the Under Secretary explains. "I feel like we're being Punk'd," Sam says, and while Granger tells the team to keep working while he figures out what's going on, Hetty's plan is retirement. She even starts packing up her desk.

Is this the time to think about a career change? If you ask Deeks, yes, and he reminds Kensi that she's always wanted to go to Bali and she can ride her horse on a beach there (two items on her bucket list). The thing is, this is who she is, and yes, at some point there are (probably) going to be kids for them, but she's not ready to not be a federal agent just yet.

Granger tells Duggan that what he's doing makes the least sense and makes it clear that his people do keep this country safe. All Duggan does is suggest that he focus on his future because someone has to take the fall since they can't even find a mole in their own house, and he's already offered Hetty the same deal. Does he honestly think that any of these people would turn on one other?

While Nell thinks that they're irreplaceable, especially Hetty, Hetty argues that they're all replacement. Nell reminds her that she taught her to never give up and that Henrietta Lange is not a quitter, so what should she do? Find everything she can on Duggan. That was obviously going to be a move at some point. Something about that guy just seems off.

Echoing that "no one's irreplaceable" sentiment is Duggan to Granger. At one point, sure, he and Hetty were untouchable, but that's not the case anymore. "This is the end of all of you," the Under Secretary informs him. DC thinks Hetty runs the show and that Granger has feelings for her, to which Granger quips, "What can I say? I'm a romantic." And while Duggan's bragging about how he can do more with one drone than with 50 of Granger's agents, I'm just thinking that that drone comment is going to come back into play later on.

Summary: The team travels to Syria to apprehend a High-Value Target but the mission goes awry and one team member is severely injured.

The team heads to Syria to capture Asakeem, leaving Duggan a "You're welcome" note with Bassel. After Kensi takes out an insurgent, the team uses intel from his phone to find Asakeem's location. Though grabbing him isn't much safer than just killing him, Sam and Callen do manage to sneak up on him and knock him out. But just as the team's in a pretty good mood on the helicopter and thinking the mission is a success, things go "really south," really fast.

Insurgents on the ground bring the helicopter with a rocket launcher, and while Sam, Callen and Deeks are able to move around, Kensi's stuck under the chopper. To make matters worse, not only can they not get Kensi out, but they also know that the men who shot them down are heading their way.

Duggan's still being his unlikable self, this time finding Hetty as she's packing up and going on about how he knows she wants what's best for the agency and she's lucky it wasn't worse since she let the real culprits waltz right in. It serves him right that he slices his finger on her pen/knife.

Hetty has more important things to worry about, however, like that feeling she has that something's wrong with the team. She, Eric and Nell head to the boat shed, and once there, Nell discovers that the helicopter sent out a distress call and then disappeared off radar. Hetty's gut was right. With anti-air threats, they can't even send in help yet because it's too risky. They can send a drone, but they're going to have to use Duggan (without him knowing) to do it and get back in Ops. The problem? They're locked out.

Things just get worse in Syria. Kensi's unconscious, her blood pressure is dropping, she doesn't have a radial pulse and her carotid is faint. They need to get her out immediately, which means rigging something together to lift the helicopter up enough to pull her out.

It's an old building, remember? Once Duggan should be gone for the night, Eric and Nell enter the burn room through the tunnels, but with Ops locked down, they need a way to override the system. They set a fire and call the fire department to keep Duggan from being alerted. It works, and they're in. While Eric may not be able to log in to the system, he and Nell did create a back door just in case. Now all they have to worry about is Duggan and his task force showing up.

Meanwhile, Callen and Sam pull the chopper up while Deeks slips the inflatable raft under and is able to pull Kensi out. That's when they see the damage to her leg – an open fracture – and they have to be careful about moving her in case she has a spinal injury. They may not have a choice, though, not with insurgents heading their way and their only possible bargaining chip, Asakeem, MIA. Someone really should have kept an eye on him.

While Callen goes after Asakeem, Sam and Deeks carry Kensi on a stretcher to the rendezvous point.

Back in Ops, Nell requests satellite images under Duggan's name, and they wait for their drone request to run up the chain for approval. Granger finds Hetty alone in the armory, and she tells him that while she hates Duggan, he was right. She was at the helm when they were compromised. (Who else knows where this is going?) What matters now is the team, he argues, but she sends him away with, "I don't have anything more to give you." But he's not asking for himself. He's asking for them.

After falling for the "Hey, something's on the ground, let me look at it" ruse and letting Asakeem get the jump on him, Callen gets him back in his custody.

Just as Eric and Nell manage to find everyone via the satellite images, they get drone approval, and with the team taking fire from the insurgents, Granger tells Eric to request a missile strike from the drone. He's never killed anyone before, the Tech Operator protests, and so he instead fires near them. When that doesn't work, Granger tells him to put the drone on top of them, and Eric does. The threat is subdued, and help arrives in the form of transport.

The team is brought to a carrier, and Kensi is taken to the OR. They did manage to repair the damage to her femoral artery, but she needs a head CT and an MRI before they can determine any possible neurological issues, and that means getting her back on land ASAP. While Deeks wants to go with her, protesting that he's her fiance, there's no room for him on the transport. All he can do is hope that this mission was worth it as Asakeem is walked by the team.

We knew that Kensi had to be out of commission in some way in the beginning of NCIS: Los Angeles season 8 due to Daniela Ruah's pregnancy, so this isn't terribly surprising. Neither is what happens near the end of the episode regarding the mole hunt.

After Duggan gets a call about the air strike he supposedly called in, he and his task force burst into Ops, determined to catch them in the act. Eric, Nell and Granger are long gone, but Hetty isn't and she sends Nell a text: "1D4D52C4." Chess moves, Granger explains. The Queen's Gambit, sacrificing a pawn to gain an advantage.

No one else is there, Hetty tells Duggan. She knows she's finished, and she even has an envelope in her hand, but it doesn't contain her resignation like he suspects. It holds her confession. "Congratulations, you found your mole," she says. He knows it's just another one of her Hetty head games. She did this alone, she continues, and everyone else gets to keep their jobs. He'll accompany her when she hand-delivers her confession to the Secretary of Defense, she goes on to tell him. Duggan has Chen cuff Hetty. No, it's not necessary, but he wants it done.

Production Code: 803
Summary: The team investigates an abduction case while down two members, with Hetty being held in Washington, D.C., for questioning in the mole probe, and another still in ICU following the mission in Syria.

A Muslim man was kidnapped right outside of his own Mosque, however there was a reason this case was NCIS and it wasn't because of the victim or his faith. It was actually because of the perpetrator. The woman that had purposely sideswiped her intended target in order to overpower him and through him into her truck was a military reservist that was allegedly working for some non-profit. Her name was Jasmine Garcia and she had recently come back from her tour in Afghanistan and so it wasn't surprising that her victim had also come from that country.

Her victim had been Gabriel Mir and he had been born in Afghanistan. So the theory that NCIS was working with when they first got this case was that Jasmine either got really lucky with her choice of victim or she knew him from Afghanistan. But Gabriel's brother had vetoed one of those theories. Ben Mir said that he and his brother came to this country as kids yet neither of them have been back to their home country since then. Ben also mentioned that his brother attended his mosque habitually while he was more in lax in his faith. And so that's why he hadn't been with Gabriel when Gabriel had been abducted in broad daylight.

Yet, there was no need for Ben to feel guilty about that because Eric and Nell found out that Jasmine had leased a warehouse. NCIS had naturally checked out Jasmine's house first though all they found was a frisky housekeeper and a house in perfect condition. So Eric and Nell had checked out other properties and that's how they found out about the warehouse. The same warehouse as it turns out that Jasmine had locked up Gabriel. Gabriel had been bound and gagged when Sam and Callen found him. And other than that, he was considered to be ok physically and he wasn't hesitant about talking.

Gabriel had claimed that he had never met Jasmine before and that he thought she had originally panicked when she kidnapped him because she didn't want to be sued. Though when she tied him up and stashed him at the warehouse, that's when he gave up the idea that she had merely panicked and assumed she had taken him because she was a serial killer. So Sam and Callen had to put Gabriel's fears to rest on that one. They told him that women are rarely ever serial killers and that they hadn't found any evidence that she had done this beforehand. And so NCIS didn't really know why Jasmine took Gabriel.

Another theory, though, did seem plausible. NCIS thought Jasmine might have PTSD. PTSD would explain Jasmine's aggression and the fact that she chose to kidnap Gabriel. Gabriel was obviously Muslim because she had seen him leaving his mosque and Gabriel also had middle eastern coloring. So they wondered if Jasmine kidnapped Gabriel because she wanted revenge for what she might have done or seen in Afghanistan. However, there was something about Jasmine that didn't allow them to believe she might have PTSD so NCIS chose to go with the simpler method of finding out why she took Gabriel by just asking her.

NCIS had planned a trap for Jasmine at the warehouse and they were able to capture her despite their limited man power. Unfortunately, Kensi was still in her coma and Hetty was stuck in Washington playing mind games with the Under Secretary, but Nell has been working out lately and she was quickly becoming a force to be reckoned with. So Nell was able to take down Jasmine and Jasmine was brought in to answer questions whether she liked or not. Though what Jasmine wanted and what NCIS couldn't deny her was her lawyer. Jasmine for some reason or another had already had a lawyer on speed-dial so she called her in.

But the lawyer Jasmine had called hadn't really cared about the serious charges that Jasmine was facing because she said most of what NCIS found was inadmissible. Jasmine apparently had been in the middle of her own investigation when NCIS barged in and stopped her before she could extract information from Gabriel. So what Jasmine had her lawyer then wanted was an agreement on the table and only then she would tell Sam and Callen what was really going on. And so the guys agreed to the agreement because they suspected that Jasmine's behavior could be easily explained and they wanted to find out about her investigation.

Jasmine it seems had met several ISIS brides while she was serving overseas when she ended up meeting quite a few that had originally been from the US. So she talked to these girls and found out their stories however what she found out was that Gabriel's cousin had pulled a scheme back in the states where he convinced these girls that they were about to have their big break when truthfully he had set them up to be ISIS brides. Yet, what Jasmine failed to understand was that Gabriel didn't have contact with his cousin and that he wouldn't be able to help her because of that. And therefore Jasmine's plan in somehow using Gabriel to get to his cousin was always going to fail.

Where Jasmine tried to get close to Bryson Khan by using his family, NCIS were able to conduct a ploy of their own that actually allowed them to capture Bryson. NCIS had found out how Bryson was able to lure the girls and they sent Nell there to act as a model wanting her own chance. However, Nell wasn't really a desirable ISIS bride and she was about to be passed over when Nell decided to show off her bade and just arrest Bryson herself. So Bryson was brought in and he questioned about the girls he helped kidnapped. And he wasn't surprising that he crumbled under the pressure.

Bryson had said where the Dutch guy was going to because he didn't know the man's name and he had also let NCIS know that the girls were being shipped out. So NCIS barged their way in and they were able to rescue the girls though it will be a long time before any of them will be ok. But in other news, Hetty had been cleared by the Secretary to go back to her unit and so she will be rejoining her team soon.

Summary: After a Homeland Security agent is poisoned by a notorious Triad assassin, NCIS uncovers a warehouse of counterfeit purses and a money trail to stolen government funds. Meanwhile, Nell joins the team in the field.

Callen did something stupid: he had apparently decided to do an Ironman triathlon without any kind of preparation whatsoever. So he was sore and barely in working condition the next day when he actually had to go to work. But fortunately for Callen, he and Sam weren't the only ones running point on their latest case. Homeland Security Agent Jessie Evans and a friend had been lured to a party where Jessie was later murdered. And there seemed to be a pattern about Jessie's murder because he wasn't even the first dead agent to that NCIS knew about.

A second agent had also been killed recently and in NCIS's backyard. Though it was important to note that both the first and second victim had been working in one specific unit. They had both been in the Customs field and strangely it seems they had spent most of their time working on counterfeit goods. So everyone and especially DHS had wanted to know if all of their agents were in danger or if Jessie along with the second agent had been working on something important. The last option, however, had been considered a bit of stretch until the NCIS started to investigate the case and Deeks finally came into work

Deeks was spending most of his spare time and part of the early workday day by Kensi's side because he had sadly thought that she would wake up if he was around. However, Kensi's condition hadn't markedly changed since the doctors first informed her loved ones that she was in a coma. So eventually Deeks was going to have to remember his other priorities and for now, his friends have mostly been covering for him. Granger, after all, was a stickler for the rules and, with Hetty doing some mole hunting, he was still the one in charge. And yet he hadn't said anything when it began getting noticeable that Deeks has been late to work a lot.

So he along with everyone else must be giving Deeks some room to breathe and Granger had only intruded on Deeks's time with Kensi because he needed more hands on the case. Some footage taken at the time of Jessie's death had showed that he had been killed by a triad assassin. The assassin's name was Ming Wah and generally, she would have been working right alongside Zhang Kiu. Yet, it had been confirmed that Zhang had been taken out by his enemies several years ago and therefore no one knew who was footing Ming's bill now. And all NCIS had was the fact that someone must have hired her.

But Who? Nell had been teamed up with Deeks so it had only been Eric back at headquarters to do some cyber sleuthing and he ended up finding a warehouse where Ming was last seen. So four agents had been dispatched to bring in Ming Wah who was considered to be highly dangerous yet neither of them had thought that someone as skilled as Ming would dirty her hands with counterfeit handbags. That's what the warehouse had been full off and, well, it just didn't add up. The counterfeiters, of course, had taken time and care by recreating prestigious designers and so the bags were passable. And so the real question was why hire Ming Wah to help hide bags.

Sam though had said that counterfeit was more harmless than it looked. He explained that the counterfeit handbags could fund child labor, human trafficking, as well as terrorism. So really someone was using the handbags as a means to end and two DHS agents had to die in order to cover up that very real motive. Yet, the guys had waited in the warehouse until someone came and luckily for them Ming Wah had brought along a friend. Ming and very much alive Zhang Kiu had entered the warehouse to check on their goods when NCIS announced themselves and the duo split up.

Ming went one way and Zhang went the other. However, Zhang was caught while Ming managed to escape and that worked out just fine for NCIS. Zhang was the big fish and he would probably know more about their dead agents than anyone else. So Sam and Callen had questioned how Zhang found out his warehouse was being investigated and funnily enough he had an inside guy though in this case, it would be a woman. Zhang hadn't been prepared to give her up and so NCIS had to follow the evidence. Like a dead Ming who had been killed by their inside woman because she was going to betray them all.

DHS Agent Donna Merritt had been set up a pretty large bank account in exchange for betraying her country as well as her fellow agents. So it wasn't that surprising that she would get greedy and believe she could set up her own counterfeiting business. Donna had bought up a warehouse filled with her own products and unfortunately her it was all traceable. And so it didn't matter that Donna had betrayed her own government, what mattered to NCIS was getting to her before Zhang's men could kill her. Though Nell wasn't really happy about risking her life to protect a traitor.

She had thought it was kind of pointless and so Sam had to reassure her that where Donna was going wasn't exactly pleasant. So, despite the dangers they put themselves in, the guys were able to round up Zhang's hired guns and they also caught Donna. But while Donna was going to help out Zhang, that wasn't the end of tonight's episode.

No, the end was when Hetty went to see Kensi and Kensi was actually able to grasp Hetty's hand.

Summary: A navy machinist with high security clearance is murdered on the roof of a downtown high-rise building. Anna Kolcheck partners with Callen to investigate. Meanwhile, Sam assists Hetty in the on-going mole probe.

Kensi's condition wasn't improving by much, but she was in fact making greater strides than any of her doctors would have believed several weeks ago and that gave those who loved her some much needed hope.

Kensi was now moving her leg and Deek's mother even swore that she heard Kensi talk. So Deeks had eventually been called and his mother asked him to come down to the hospital. Roberta had said that he needed to be there in case Kensi woke up and she didn't quite understand why he was dragging his feet about coming back. Yet, there had been reason for why Deeks wasn't sure about Kensi waking up.

Deeks had later admitted to Hetty that a part of him was scared of Kensi waking up. He said that there was a possibility that she was going to need a lot of help and he didn't think that he could be the type of guy that was there for her. So Deeks hadn't been sure about what to do next.

If he should go to Kensi and be by her bedside or should he stay on at the office and work their latest case with the rest of the team. But Deeks's friends and coworkers had all stepped up to cover for him at work so that allowed Deeks to return to the hospital while the others investigated the murder of Brandon Noah. Noah had been a Navy Machinist and unfortunately he had gotten into a struggle with the assailant when he lost the fight and was shot at point blank range by his killer.

However, who was his killer. Noah had been on the rooftop of an old building that didn't have cameras and there was also no logical reason why Noah would even be on that rooftop in the first place yet Noah had gone there and two people on the next over had witnessed his murder.

So Sam and Callen went to the crime scene in order to find out what they could while Granger and Nell went to question Noah's roommate. Noah's roommate was Reggie Tiller and Reggie said that Noah had gotten into this loud argument not that long ago with Neil Lott.

Only Reggie didn't understand why the two men had been arguing. His roommate had been military and Neil had been a military contractor so that led everyone into wondering later if it had been work that got Noah killed.

Noah and his team had been taking part in a technically classified drone project that only people with the highest clearance had known about. So that didn't really make a lot of sense that someone who wouldn't be part of Noah's team to know about his project however NCIS couldn't overlook anything. At least not when they had a mole of their own still running around.

Therefore, Hetty brought on some additionally help on both cases that she was working on. Brandon Noah's death and the Mole investigation. So Hetty had wanted Sam to question the man that claimed to be the mole and she had teamed up Callen with Anna Kolcheck in the meantime.

Things were still kind of awkward between Anna and Callen, but together they did great work. The two had talked to Neil Lott and Neil had said that everything had been good with Noah. Though it hadn't always been that way which was what the scene in front of Noah's house had been about.

Noah had apparently borrowed some money from Neil back when he was having some mole problems and so Neil had blown up at his friend when he began to believe that Noah was never going to pay him back. So that had pushed Noah into starting payments back to Neil and he had been paying Neil a good five hundred dollars on a weekly basis.

Yet, Noah didn't really have that type of money. Noah had a government job that didn't much so the fact that he was able to repay what he owed meant he either had a second job or had been up to something illegal. So Callen and Anna were checking out that lead when Nell and Granger found one of their own.

Nell and Granger had found an old bike part at the crime scene and they had to gone to a seller that they knew had sold of them though the guy that ran the place was really only good for his surveillance cameras. The cameras had picked up on the struggle between Noah and his killer and so Nell gave the image of the killer's face to Eric to clean up.

Eric had magnified the image and had removed most of the blurriness. So that showed the killer's face perfectly and that had helped Callen later on. Callen and Anna stumbled across an auto body shop that seemed shady and they had a good reason to doubt it was on the up and up.

The shop was where Noah went to work in order to repay his friend and it turns out that the shop had been a front for an illegal gun smuggling ring. But Callen and Anna had thought that they could handle things themselves so they went to the shop and Anna was supposed to be rummaging through files while Callen did a walk around the entire building. And that's when it happened.

That's when Callen saw their killer at the shop and also witnessed up close the illegal manufacturing of AR-15 guns. However, Callen couldn't finish observing as much as he needed to because Anna had gotten caught by some of Noah's former coworkers.

So reinforcements had to be called in and Callen also had to risk his neck to save Anna's life yet Anna had later been proud of herself because she hadn't shot people as much as she used and that had been a bit of improvement on her part. And so NCIS rounded up everyone involved in Noah's murder, including the actual shooter, and they solved Noah's murder.

Noah had been murdered because he realized what was going on at the shop and had tried to turn them all in. Though while Noah was murdered for that, he still helped put an end to what those people were doing and stopped such weapons getting into the wrong hands. So Noah was a hero and, despite not being there personally, Deeks had still been proud of his friends did, but it was a good thing that Deeks had stayed behind with Kensi. Kensi had later woken up on tonight's episode.

But Sam had unfortunately gotten nowhere far into finding the mole.

Summary:	A maintenance man stops an intruder from attacking a lieutenant commander but the probe uncovers his secret past which puts a teen in danger. Meanwhile, Sam must decide which colleague he should take to a football game.

A young couple were enjoying a romantic night at home when they heard an intruder in the house and had tried to defend themselves. Navy Lieutenant Commander George Owen had made sure that his girlfriend Ann was safely in the closet and he had left her with a cell phone to call 911 while he confronted the intruder by himself.

However, the intruder had come close to killing the naval officer and there was a chance that he would have hurt Ann as well if a good Samaritan hadn't stepped in to help. That man had been the maintenance man for their condo, but there had been something off about him.

There was technically not a lot of maintenance people around that showed military experience or that were formerly trained to kill. But that's why NCIS became involved. They knew that were something more to John Martin's story than he was willing to let on and so both Sam and Callen had been the ones that were assigned to talk to John.

Only that wasn't a possibility for them. John hadn't been around when they went looking for him and a search of John's apartment also brought up more questions. The apartment had been devoid of all personal affects and eventually the guys found some of John's weapons.

John had apparently owned military grade weapons that could kill in high numbers. So that led to everyone to question who John Martin really was. He had helped Owens and his girlfriend, he had a low profile that he had maintained for the last eight years, and yet he had all the appearances of being a sleeper agent.

Though NCIS knew that wouldn't figure out the mystery of who John was until they talked to him so they tried to find him and found out that he had a special interest in a teenager. The teenager's name was Carla and she had come home early from school because she wasn't feeling well. And so NCIS had figured out that she was safe, but couldn't understand John.

John had still gone to Carla's school and so they questioned if he possibly didn't know that Carla had come home early. Yet, something strange happened as Sam and Callen were keeping close tabs on John. John had been attacked by some strange wielding a syringe and so the guys took action however they were only able to arrest John because the other man had gotten away.

So they had then tried to ask John about the Carla and John had claimed to be entirely ignorant of who she was despite having a newspaper clipping of her in his apartment. And therefore there had been nothing for the guys to do until they managed to find one crack in John's armor.

John could hide the fact that he was interested in Carla and he could also pretend that he didn't know why he had been attacked. However, NCIS were threatening to hold onto him and he couldn't afford to waste time as long as Carla was out there unprotected. So John eventually told the guys the truth for once.

He admitted that he was ex-Mossad which was basically like the CIA for Israel and John had also said that he had quit after making a very dangerous enemy. John had said that he brought in a former Kidon soldier by the name of David Fisch and that Fisch had managed to escape before going to trial so John had been forced to go into hiding.

John had said that Fisch was a dangerous man and that he couldn't afford to let him find him or his family. So John's connection to Carla suddenly became clearer. Carla was John's daughter and was therefore his weakness. John would do anything for his daughter if she was in danger and she didn't even know that he had been watching over her for the eight years.

Carla's mother had apparently gotten fed up with being married to a Mossad Agent and she had left him when Carla was a baby so Carla thought her father had abandoned her. But he didn't and he was still trying to protect her when his cover was blown by saying a naval officer's life.

What John had done had gotten on the news because it had been so heroic and unfortunately news travel fast. So John knew that his daughter was in danger and couldn't afford to waster anytime with NCIS. Though NCIS had tried to help John by sending Anna and Nell to go pick up Carla because they realized that John had been telling the truth when he said that his daughter was in danger yet the ladies had nearly gotten themselves blown up.

Fisch had already sent one of his dogs to kidnap Carla and so blowing up her apartment that she shared with her mother had simply been his way of telling the US federal agents to back off. And Granger had wanted to agree.

Granger had originally said that John's problem wasn't for them to deal with and so he had only reluctantly agreed with the guys when it was federal agents that were nearly getting blown up. Yet, everyone had same problem. They had all wanted to find Carla and they knew the best way to do that was by dangling John in front of his enemies.

So NCIS had allowed John to pick up a message that Fisch had left for him and then they had followed John to water plant, but there had still been some unfortunate surprises. Fish had wanted John and it wasn't until that John had offered himself off that it was revealed that Carla was in one of the water's drums. And no one knew how long she had been there.

Carla have been put in a drum an hour ago or when she had been first taken. So what Sam, Callen, Deeks, and Anna had tried to look first was a sign of life. They had called out her name and had tried to tap the many drums to see if someone could tap back. However, the tap they received was barely a tap.

Carla had been so weakened that she couldn't really answer and by time the guys had reached it had almost been too late. She had almost drowned yet Sam had did CPR on her and she had been in the clear when she was later taken to the hospital. And so all NCIS had to worry about was finding John before Fisch could kill him.

They knew that Fisch had been looking for John for a long time and that it had been personal. So the conclusions they had drawn had been right when they eventually found John being slowly tortured to death. But John was rescued and he had even been allowed to see Carla who had remembered him and didn't what had changed for her dad to suddenly come back.

Only it wasn't what happened to her that had made John reveal himself, it was simply Callen. Callen and Jong had apparently talked about it and Callen had said that the only thing Carla needed now was her father. The rest on the other hand could be figured out at another time. And so John was finally getting back what had been almost stolen from him.

Though there was one thing that needed to be settled. Kensi had woken up recently and Deeks was trying to be supportive however she was pushing him and everyone else away because she hated that she couldn't do things like she would have before the coma. So Kensi was in a negative headspace and there didn't appear to be anyone that could reach out to her or remind her of how she's more than just a federal agent. And that she was something they all love.

Summary: Callen goes undercover as a patient in a mental health hospital to search for an NSA agent who disappeared while tracking an ISIS cell trying to cross the Mexican border.

Kensi was doing better and her doctors had said that she was slowing improving however it was still hold for her to be in the hospital and Deeks almost constant presence wasn't helping. Deeks would sleep at the hospital and also visit Kensi during the day. So he was always around because he wanted to be there if she needed him when all it was doing was irritating Kensi and making Deeks disorientated at work. But, as they've done since the beginning when Kensi was in her comma, everyone was trying to be supportive and they were also trying to get Deeks to laugh again.

Deeks hadn't exactly gone back to his old self after Kensi woke up so Sam and Callen tried to get Deeks' mind onto other things. Like the question game that Sam's daughter taught him and that he was teaching Callen. So Callen asked Deeks which would he rather — be invisible or fly — and the Deeks that normally would have joked about that had gone blank. He didn't know what to say and that was mostly because he didn't care about a silly game that wasn't going to help Kensi. Yet, Kensi was her own problem.

Kensi hated the fact that her recovery was taking too long and that had made her lose it with more than just Deeks. She had also snapped at her doctors and tried to throw a pity party in front of her physical therapist. However, while Kensi was treating her condition as a weakness, there was Granger calm as a cucumber about his own health problems. Granger has had to undergo an MRI recently and he didn't make that or its results stop him from taking charge back headquarters. And so it was Granger that dealt with NCIS's latest case.

Granger and therefore NCIS had been notified that NSA Analyst had washed up dead in LA. Though what had been strange was the fact that the analyst had apparently been dumped in a bag and washed up in the stomach of a shark. So there were plenty of questions to go around. Who killed Tad Larsen and where did his partner go? Tad's partner Bruce Carter had apparently been ordered to report around the same time as Tad so many thought Bruce was also dead, but that story didn't pan out and neither did Bruce for that matter.

Nell and Eric ran a facial recognition yet they ended up finding Bruce alive. Bruce as it turns out walking the streets as if everything was fine and so that begged the question why didn't check in with his bosses. So Sam and Callen had been sent to question Bruce and they did find Bruce. But when they found him, Bruce had been with another analyst and they had claimed that their lives were in danger. Bruce and the woman that later introduced herself as Jolene had explained that they had been investigating a lead to ISIS when both Tad and a fourth analyst disappeared.

Bruce had said that he, Tad, Jolene, and Gary Dill had been investigating ways ISIS was funneling money and that lead from Syria to Mexico to LA. Yet, Tad went missing and neither of the other two could find Gary. So Bruce and Jolene had said that they were scared of being next and that they wanted to get back to Washington before anything else could happen however Gary had been found alive and neither Bruce nor Jolene had been heading back to Washington. And so Callen had been sent to investigate Gary while Sam had found himself stuck with Bruce and Jolene.

Gary though had checked himself into a psychiatric facility so Callen had to pretend to be "ill" in order to see him and he saw for himself that Gary wasn't crazy. Gary was simply pretending to be crazy because he was hiding from a corrupt analyst. Like his partner Jolene who was supposed to investigate cartel activity and not take bribes from them. However, Jolene did more than just take bribes. She also stole from them and had then tried to pin it on Gary who wisely ran for his life after he noticed someone had hacked him.

Tad and his death on the other hand, had simply gotten involved after Bruce got involved. Bruce and Jolene were both cheating on their spouses with each other so they stole from the cartel as a way to start over somewhere else. Though thankfully Sam found them before they could reach the airport and he eventually got the whole story from them. So Sam had tried to race to the facility to save Gary and Callen, but he had been too late. The cartel had gotten there first and Callen played the hero by making the hired guns believe he was Gary.

So there had been a moment there when it looked like Callen would be fed to the sharks only his partner found him in time and together they had arrested the leader of the Banuelos Cartel. But all still wasn't well tonight. Kensi was constantly her own worst enemy and so she did something stupid. She had tried to walk again with no one else around and she had fell flat on her face with a bleeding wound on her leg to show for it. And so Deeks continued to be supportive. He tried joking by what happened like what Kensi did wasn't so bad and he even showed off the ring he had gotten her however Kensi told him no.

Kensi didn't want to be in a wheelchair during a proposal so she turned down Deeks which left them both unhappy.

And whatever it is that's ailing Granger hasn't been defined just yet.

Production Code: 808
Summary: NCIS investigates when a graduate student who is developing an electromagnetic weapon for the Navy is attacked. The probe reveals a connection to international warfare. Meanwhile, Kensi continues with grueling physical therapy for her spinal injury.

A graduate student at Whitley Tech had suffered serious and almost fatal injuries during a trivia game when the buzzer unfortunately, electrocuted however there was nothing accidental about what happened. The student's name was Yuri Volonev and he had been working on a military project with his professor that would give the Navy a new electromagnetic weapon. So there were plenty of people as well as nations out there that would want access to what Yuri was doing and would be perfectly happy with killing him if he wasn't willing to help. But the list was simply so large that NCIS had needed all hands on deck.

However, they got lucky. Deeks has been feeling better recently and he wasn't letting Kensi push him away so they didn't have a problem anymore with showing up on time for work. So Deeks had actually already been in the building when they got Yuri's case and he had gone to the university while Sam and Callen went to check out the tiki bar. The tiki bar that was called Pacific Seas was where the trivia game was played and it was their best bet of finding out who had tampered with Yuri's buzzer though the guy that runs the game swears he didn't leave the equipment alone and the only thing odd had been the pre-teen that had been hiding out in the security room.

The pre-teen was Nadia and the guys found her because her asthma had started acting up. Though Nadia wasn't a threat. She had instead had been Yuri's daughter and her mother had whole-heartedly thanked the gods for bringing her back to the hospital. Pamela Volonev had apparently thought Nadia was doing her homework in the cafeteria and she hadn't known that she had left until NCIS had informed her otherwise. So it was good thing that nothing happened to Nadia yet NCIS did do their best to ensure her that they were looking for who hurt her dad and she so she gave them as she could.

Nadia was homeschooled because she was a genius like her dad and so she did know a little something about her dad's project, but she was also on the shy side and that's why she gave a message to her mother to pass on to Sam and Callen. So it was Pamela that told them nothing that Yuri was working on would work without the second part of the project from Professor Chapman at Braddock University. Yet, NCIS didn't know if they could trust Professor Chapman or his partner so they sent Nell in. Nell had later approached the professor as a student from Brown and she was supposed to act a mere gawker when suddenly that turned into something else.

Someone had sent a drone to attack the professor and his assistant and Nell would have also have gotten hurt if Eric had rescued her by blowing up the drone. But the clear assassination attempt on all of them including the student they thought was an intern had proved that Chapman had nothing to do with what happened to Yuri yet it did show that someone wanted to finish the project on their own. It would be one thing to harm Yuri and quite another to try and wipe out everyone that had been directly involved. So NCIS went back to Yuri's home to check his belonging and his daughter ended up giving them her father's flashdrive when they couldn't find anything on their own.

Yuri had apparently left an encrypted video to his daughter on that flashdrive and Eric had managed to get the data he wanted by running a few tests. So they had found her father's work though they didn't have access on Chapman's end because his computer had been hacked before it was fried. Nell had looked at everything she could and all she found were suspects. The young men and women in the engineering program hadn't known that she was a federal agent so she continued to act as a potential intern. Yet, she did find out about a young Pakistani woman that was at the school on a scholarship and who did have the knowledge to hack the professor's computer.

Though Nell and even Deeks had written that woman off because they thought she wouldn't risk scholarship and technically they had been right. She didn't want to risk her scholarship however she felt didn't need one anymore seeing as someone in the Whitley's Admissions office had paid her a quarter of a million. So Deeks and Nell didn't know they were wrong until after Nadia had been kidnapped. The people that wanted the information had correctly guessed that Nadia's father Yuri might leave something in her cloud account and they had needed her in person because she had used her irises as additional security. Hence the kidnapping.

Nadia had been outside with her mom and they had been getting ice-cream when out of nowhere a car pulled up and took off with her before Pamela could get help. However, Nadia did want to cooperate with her kidnapers and they had been forced to call Pamela in order for Pamela to tell her daughter to do whatever they said. So Nadia did help them out and at the same time she sent off a picture that she knew would give Sam and Callen her whereabouts. And so the guys quickly found her and they even traced the one kidnapper that got away by the message he had sent to Braddock, but everything did come together once they knew who they were dealing with.

The guy from admission was Scott Young formerly Scott Yung whose father worked in Chinese Intelligence. So Scott had stolen key intel because he had wanted to get his father to forgive him for not getting into a top college. But Scott never got the chance to send everything to his dad because Sam and Callen later caught up to him at a strip club of all places.

So Nadia was safe and there's chance her father could get better.

Summary: Callen interrogates his father after he is found in an NCIS patient's hospital room during a radiation poisoning case. Meanwhile, the team discusses their Thanksgiving plans.

Artem Fedor was back and he was finally ready to talk to NCIS about the information he had been keeping to himself. But NCIS didn't know if they could trust him. They had apparently arrested Artem back in February and he hadn't been ready to talk to them then however him changing his mind of all sudden seemed strange and so they were little bit mistrustful about his information. Artem claimed that he knew about an assassination and that he even had the name of the victim. So they checked out the person he named and they couldn't understand why anyone would target Mary Reynolds.

Mary didn't work in any federal agency or lived a high-risked and she was a simple dialect coach. However, the victim's life as Mary Reynolds had simply been her cover and it turns out Mary's real name was Katerina. So finding out that Mary had been lying about her life had finally helped make things clearer and it wasn't a coincidence that she had been poisoned with Polonium 210. Polonium 210 was the favorite poison of the FSB which was like the CIA for the Russian government. They usually eliminated people they felt were a threat to their way of life and sometimes the lines became so blurred that their reasoning often came off as skewed.

Such as a case when the victim or target was usually a political rival of the ruling party. Though NCIS had gotten some assistance in Katerina's case. Same and Callen had reached out to Arkady who was his usual shifty self and they found out that someone had snuck Katerina out of Russia many years ago. So the guys were working on Arkady to see if there was anything else they needed to know when they were alerted that someone had tried to kill Katerina at the hospital yet there was one problem with the case. The man that had seemingly tried to kill Katerina had in turn been killed by Callen's father of all people. And so the case became personal for Callen.

Callen hadn't seen his father since he escaped Russia some months ago and so it was jarring to see the other man had not only left his farm, but had made it into the states without ever trying to seem him. Yet, the man of names had said that he had merely come to the states to do a job. He had been hired after Artem's arrest to find Katerina and so he was in the states to protect her because she was the only one that could take down Pavel Volkoff. Pavel Volkoff had sometimes been a friend to NCIS only Callen's father had Pavel often helps people when he gets something out of it and that his enemies were looking to bring him down.

Pavel it was revealed had been in power for quite a long time and a rival faction had wanted to remove him. So the rival faction hired Callen's father to protect Katerina because she had once been Pavel's mistress and had known some of his secrets. Like what happened to the millions of dollars that went missing one day. But Callen's father had also mentioned that Pavel found out what his enemies were planning and had tried to take out Katerina himself. Katerina had known where the money went and the same people that demanded its location had also tried targeting Katerina's daughter Alexandra to find out if the money was even still around.

It was quite a lot of money after all and so it would be natural if someone wanted to claim that money for themselves. However, both Sam and Callen felt that his father wasn't telling the whole truth. Why would Callen's dad want to risk his own life to come out of hiding? So Hetty told the guys she would handle the former KGB officer while they looked for Alexandra though she of course did her own thing in the end. Hetty and Callen's dad had a working relationship in the past so that allowed her to speak with him honestly and she ended up finding out what was really going on. Hetty found out that no one had hired Callen's dad to find Katerina and that the case was personal for him.

Callen's dad had once been Katerina's handler and he had pulled her out of Russia when things had gotten to be too dangerous for her. So Katerina was actually poisoned to lure Callen's dad out of hiding and it worked. He did go running to Katerina's side and, like Hetty suspected, he went running to Alexandra's side after Katerina died because he had still wanted to protect Katerina's daughter. Though there was only one way to protect Alexandra and that was to hand over the money in exchange for her life yet Garrison had another secret. Garrison had apparently donated the money many years ago to war refugees because he thought it should go to good use.

So what Callen's father had actually done was arrange his own funeral. The FSB agents that Pavel had sent after him had been told that they needed to bring the money back to Russian however that was impossible for them to do without torturing Callen's dad. Yet, thankfully Hetty's little game worked out in the end. Hetty wouldn't have risked Garrison's life which he knew so he just waited out the brutal beatings until Callen could come to rescue and later Callen finally got to get the heart to heart that he desperately needed. And so he found out why his father had abandoned him and his sister, but he also found out that he has another sister.

Callen's father had recently found out that Alexandra was his daughter and so promised his son that they were going to tell her the truth just so that there wouldn't be anymore secrets in their family.

Production Code: 810
Summary: A new lead in the ongoing mole investigation is uncovered after two men disguised as sheriff's deputies are killed in front of Callen's home by an unknown female assailant. Meanwhile, Nell visits a prison to interview an inmate who is withholding information on the department's leak.

The episode begins tonight with a police officer chasing a young woman down the street, he raises his gun as a police car arrives on scene and the young woman turns around and shoots both the officers, before stealing the car. This all happens in front of G. Callen's house.

As the officers are taken away by the coroners, Sam Hanna makes sure Callen is okay but Callen is upset that the Sheriff's office had to pay the price. Sam asks Callen if his Dad is okay and he tells him Hetty Lange has brought him to a secure location.

Sam offers his condolences to the Deputy from LAPD, and he informs them both that the two men killed were not police officers. Sam offers NCIS' help into finding out who these guys were and what they were doing. Once the Deputy leaves, Sam tells Callen that since they weren't sheriffs maybe they were there to kill him, so now the question is who was the one who killed them?

Eric Beale informs them that it appears the shooter was a female; Nell Jones tells them a dog-walker just saw the stolen sheriff's car a couple blocks from them, and Sam and Callen tell her they are going to check it out.

Hetty is in her office reviewing papers when Nell confirms that the men killed on Callen's street last night were not law enforcement officers, but they are trying to find out who they are, as well as who the shooter was. Nell then sits down and asks Hetty for another chance to question Carl Brown. Nell says she is not going to give up until she gets some answers, and she has a plan.

Sam continues to question Callen if he knows for sure his father is somewhere far away and this isn't his handiwork. Sam lectures Callen about keeping secrets, because if he doesn't tell his loved ones what is going on, he is exactly the same as his father. They arrive at the site of the stolen police car, and it is burnt to a crisp. Sam observes there are no cameras around and tells Callen to stay close to him.

Marty Deeks is amazed by the story Callen is telling him. Deeks says its obvious they are looking for an angry ex-girlfriend. Callen and Deeks keep joking about it. Eric Beale comes down and shows the team that both of the fake sheriffs has a photo of the same woman on their phone. No one recognizes her, but Beale says it sure seems like she is the shooter. They have a video showing her coming to his front door, but again, Callen is unsure why.

Deeks stays with Beale, who offers Deeks to go home to Kensi Blye. Deeks refuses to leave because both their moms are visiting them, and its too many moms for him. Meanwhile, at Deeks and Kensi's home, Kensi is going crazy with the moms. One is brushing her hair and picking outfits for her, while the other is cutting up her food like a child.

Kensi tells them to stop, and they keep bugging her. Kensi gives both the moms something to do, and pushes them both out of the house. Seconds after they leave, someone knocks at her door. It ends up being Kensi's friend from rehab, and he is carrying a case of beer, saying he didn't think she was the flowery type. She invites him in.

Nell visits Carl again, trying to interrogate him. She sits down and starts telling him a story in her life about a tough guy she hung out with and he ended up and jail, she went to college. Carl asks her if she is saying crime doesn't pay. She says she was young and thought she could help and save him, but couldn't. She said she never saw him again after he went to jail, Carl taunts her and says that maybe he is in there with him and how ironic that would be.

She said he wasn't in there because he was like Carl, who felt he was better than everyone else until one day all the inmates took turns stomping on his head, until they crushed his skull. Carl says that maybe he wasn't that tough after all, Nell tells him that her boyfriend was a lot tougher than Carl, and one day Carl will not be in solitary, and there will be a price on his head.

Deeks sneaks up on Beale who is humming, Deeks cuts him off from singing. An alarm goes off and Beale gets up and starts shaking all his limbs telling Deeks its a reminder for him to stand up and move so his feet don't fall asleep. Meanwhile at the prison, Nell tells Carl this is her last visit.

She continues to inform him that inmates see him having many visits with an agent and it look like he is a rat. "Snitches get stitches and turn into bitches". She tells him there is 50K on his head, and she said the next time she comes he will talk, if they haven't cut out his tongue.

Carl starts to give Nell information on Natalie, they met at a dive bar and the next day they went to the Santa Monica Pier. Beale follows his social media trail. Natalie turned Brown, leaked the info and poisoned Grainger, so that would be a few months ago. Deeks moves Nell's chair, and Beale isn't happy. Together they find the bar Natalie and Carl met at.

Beale tells Deeks they have to wait while the computers look for Natalie and Carl in social media pictures. Beale tells him welcome to OPS. Deeks starts babbling about getting better technology in OPS, when the computer beeps and Deeks asks Beale if this time it is pilates? Beale tells him the dead fake sheriffs are Dexter Frazier and Perry Verona.

Deeks takes the intel and leaves, but not before fixing Nell's chair. Beale says he is calling Callen and Sam. Beale is glad to be rid of Deeks, calls Sam and tells him the fake sheriffs worked for a solar roofing company, and to meet Deeks there. As they are getting into their car, Sam tells Callen it looks like he is going to have to move too, now that his address has been compromised. Callen agrees, but sounds a bit disappointed even though he admits he never settles on one place to live.

Callen, Sam and Deeks enter the place where the solar roofing company is supposed to be, but are greeted by a very young, scrawny security officer who leads them up to the stairs to the office. Once they inform him that they are federal agents, he says the cameras have been down for months, and they don't have photo ID set up yet.

The security guy tells them he wants to become law enforcement, and he would be perfect for undercover. Sam can't help but smirk, Callen tells the guy he should speak to Deeks since he is LAPD and has done a lot of undercover work. They open the doors to the office, and there is paperwork all over the place, they show the guard pictures of the dead sheriffs and he says both of them were working there yesterday.

Deeks, Sam and Callen return to the office, and Deeks cell phone keeps ringing, both Callen and Sam start laughing and tell him to answer it; it's Vinny the security guard! Sam gave him the number saying Deeks could be a good mentor. Deeks asks him where he even got his business card from, Sam tells him from his desk, the whole box is empty and Deeks asks them if that is why he has been getting prank calls?

Beale comes back with more information, that both roofers were former military. Afterwards they both became truck drivers in Iraq, hired by private contractors. Deeks says they are right back where they started. They don't know who these guys work for and why they were killed. Sam tells Beale that there were 6 people working for the roofing company, so there are still two men and two women out there. Beale says he is on it.

Hetty is watching her team from upstairs. Beale sees her and she tells him, "the wolves are at the doors, I can feel it! I am not sure it is safe to trust anyone anymore!" Beale looks at her sadly.

Kensi walks with her rehab partner, and he tells her that he is being sent back to his unit, the medical board has cleared him for duty status. He says the guys will make fun of his one leg, but he will be happy to be back with them. He entices her to take a ride in his "redneck" truck.

Beale is back to singing in the OPS room and discovers something. Nell is still talking to Carl Brown who is asking to go back to his cell. Nell says maybe he should straighten up his back a bit. Her phone vibrates and Carl tells her there is no cellphones allowed. Nell shows him the photo and asks if that is Natalie Grant. Just by the way he looks back at her, she knows it is.

Beale rushes down to let the team know that the shooter at Callen's is Natalie Grant, also known as Amber Wilcox, a massage therapist in Texas. Callen gets up and says what if she wasn't trying to kill Callen, and maybe she was coming to him for help. He explains that they have removed Carl Brown's handler and put him in isolation in prison, so has no where to turn to, and needs to turn to the people she was originally trying to kill.

After tossing around ideas, Beale says maybe she is hiding at Carl's house, the one he inherited years earlier. Hetty comes down and tells the team she is coming with them because her career depends on it. Deeks is left with her, but she insists on driving and she beats Callen and Sam to their destination.

Deeks asks if she was the one who taught Nell to drive, and she said she gave her some defensive driving lessons. Hetty tells him he should get a haircut; Deeks tells her next time he will wear a helmet, possibly a parachute and definitely a diaper.

Sam drops a camera inside the house, and they know that Natalie is in the house. Callen and Sam go rushing in calling her name. Deeks tells Hetty to stay close, but when he turns around she is gone. She is in the kitchen and when she tells Natalie its over, Natalie runs straight at her and Sam clotheslines her.

They question her, and when Natalie demands things, Hetty tells the guys let's go, admitting that Natalie is more valuable as bait than for information. Natalie says they can't leave her there, she will talk but they need to get her out of there. They take her to the boat shed. Deeks wants to ride with Callen and Sam, but Hetty tells her to get into the car. Nell informs Carl that they have Natalie, and she was leaving. Carl asks her if the story was true about that guy, she doesn't tell him.

As Sam and Callen are driving to the boat shed, two vehicles pin them in and start shooting at them. Natalie tries to run and they end up shooting her in the leg. The two vehicles vanish, but Natalie is injured pretty bad. Sam calls for an ambulance while Callen asks her who she works for, and where she met them. She said her name got leaked about a hit on someone, she was on her way to Callen's house for help when they showed up.

Sam checks her gunshot wound, and as Natalie says they probably worked for the same person she did, she gives them the name Ray and where she meets him. Natalie dies as Callen relays the information to Beale. The team find a woman in a photo, Grainger walks in and says her name is Heather, and she tried to pick him up a few months ago in a bar.

Hetty tells them she wants to send them all home, but she cannot guarantee that will be safe. Callen tells her they will handle it. Deeks says he is going home to Kensi. Callen asks Grainger if he really wants to wait til morning, he says, "What do you think?"

Deeks comes home and finds a note from Kensi saying that dinner is in the fridge and she made it all by herself. Hetty walks in on Kensi doing shooting practice, Kensi tells her that she is taking the NCIS special agent fitness test so she can prove she is ready to come back. Hetty tells her that she doesn't think she is ready to come back.

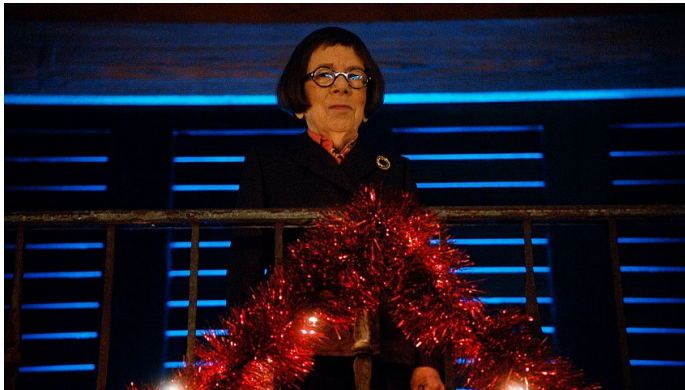

Hetty tells her to prove it by shooting with her left hand. Kensi jokes about it, but is unable to hit the target, and tells Hetty she just needs a little more practice. Hetty tells her to take her time. Grainger goes to the bar, orders a drink and the bartender says he reminds him of Humphrey Bogart in Casablanca, like a badass, but also a little sad.

Deeks says he isn't wrong, that Bogart didn't get the girl in the end either. Grainger says "Cheers!" and sips his drink. Sam promises they will get her; her and everyone else behind this. They are going to find the head of this snake and chop it off!

Summary: The team investigates the disappearance of a Navy lieutenant commander who was working with the NSA on foreign cyber threats. Later, the team celebrates the holidays together.

Kensi was back on her feet. She didn't needed assistance with getting around anymore and she was slowly getting her body back into shape however she didn't want to take things slow. Kensi believed that she could overcome months in a coma in little to no time and so she training with Nell when none of the other guys around. But sometimes she went a too far with her expectations. Kensi it seems had wanted to believe that she could just will away all that she had lost in the coma as if nothing had happened and that wasn't good for her seeing as she wasn't facing the reality of her situation. So Nell had tried to help her friend adjust to starting off slower than she would have liked.

Nell had given Kensi one of her action figures she used to play with as a child and she told Kensi the story about how she got it. She got it from her brother who didn't want to play with the only female soldier in GI Joe and he had given it to her. However, Nell had gotten offended that her brother had basically given her a cast-off. She said the action figure had been an inspiration because she had never given and had never surrender. So giving that "toy to Kensi was her way of saying that Kensi's didn't have to worry if she wasn't as steady or as fast as before. Nell believed that eventually Kensi was going to get there.

Though with Kensi still out of commission at the office, Anna had to once again fill in when Navy Cryptologist Jennifer Morgan had been reported missing. Jennifer had apparently come up with a cloud base threat detection and her prototype could be quite dangerous if it ever got into the wrong hands. So the guys had had to split up into teams to cover whatever ground they needed and for some reason Sam and Callen had both been apprehensive about partnering with Anna which was odd because they like Anna. She was part of the team and had saved their lives when they needed it more than once.

So their apprehension wasn't really understandable and it in fact, became embarrassing. They had each tried to push her onto someone else and they fight over who got to partner with Deeks. But Anna in the end, decided that she was going with Callen and that automatically meant Deeks was going with Callen however, both of their teams came back to Gregory Jenkins. Gregory was Jennifer's boyfriend and he hadn't been seen or heard from in four days. So the guys had thought that he was either dead or in as much danger as Jennifer. And it turns out that that they had all been wrong about Gregory.

The guys had found out that Jennifer had last been seen walking off with her boyfriend and the truth was that the man that had said he was going to take Jennifer to the hospital not long after an accident had been Javier Nunez meanwhile the real boyfriend was on the bus and looked in perfect condition. Gregory had been found after he turned on his cell phone and it had been odd that he was still in the city and that he reported his own live-in girlfriend missing. So Deeks and Callen went to go talk to Gregory and they found their conversation with the other man to be quite enlightening.

Gregory had revealed that Jennifer had been taken because the kidnappers wanted something from him. He said that he was working on a drug related case down in South America when he came across something he shouldn't have. Yet, they had ticked off the wrong person and that led to Jessica's kidnapping because she was going to be used as leverage against Gregory if the story went out. So NCIS had wasted time by believing Jennifer's job had led to her abduction. And no one had wanted to drop the ball on recovering her safe and sound though to do so they finally needed Gregory to give up his story.

Though story was something that could potentially bring them all down. Gregory had seemingly found out that rich and powerful were illegal hiding as well as funneling their money through an account in South America. So revealing what he found and what he able to do with NCIS's help was something that even made Eric pause however Hetty hadn't been scared. She knew that their people had the evidence to back everything up and it didn't hurt that Anna and Sam had found two armed men waiting in Nunez apartment. And so she had everything they needed to protect themselves from backlash and all she really cared about was Jennifer.

Jennifer was the naval officer and so she was NCIS's first priority. However, to figure out her location the team had had to do something unethical. They had to take their two prisoners out to an abandoned area and threaten to light them on fire if they didn't reveal Jennifer's location. So that little trip that no one was going to mention was what led to the guys finding Jennifer safe and sound. And reuniting her with Gregory, but that story was still given the go ahead so Gregory was able to take down the people that had tried to hurt his girlfriend.

But while the guys thought that was a good ending to the case, Kensi happened to be resentful of the fact Anna had more or less taken her spot.

Production Code:	812
Summary:	A Navy reservist is killed while protecting a city councilman. Sam goes undercover at a private security firm with links to several criminal organizations to investigate. Meanwhile, Callen and Anna discuss the next steps in their relationship.

The episode begins with a city councilman celebrating the "new Los Angeles", telling the citizens they made L.A. more beautiful by putting down their phones and getting off social media; meeting their neighbors and helping them. He ends his speech by telling them he made L.A. shine.

As he exit the building, his security team sees a vehicle approaching them, and tell him to get in the vehicle, but then they throw a bomb under the car, causing the security team to get the councilman to safety. The SUV explodes and another car returns and they shoot, killing a Navy reservist who was on the security detail.

G. Callen is doing push-ups when his doorbell sounds. He pulls out his gun only to see it is Anna Kolcheck. He opens the door and she wishes him a good morning, bringing him breakfast. She gets nervous and attempts to leaving saying she isn't usually like this; Callen tells her to join him. She is the one who said she wanted to take things slow and feels she is bugging him; he grabs her in his arms and they kiss.

Marty Deeks is gun training with Sam Hanna. Deeks jokes that he is a great shot in the light and the dark; Sam agrees saying its a good thing he isn't a bad guy. Sam asks how things are at home with Deeks and Kensi Blye? Deeks deflects saying things are good, but when pressed he says things aren't great, but whatever.

Sam says its none of his business but he is there if he needs to talk. Deeks blurts out that all the things he used to do with Kensi, they are no longer doing together. Sam says it will take some time after she was laid up and Deeks confesses that she can do it, but she doesn't want to do it with him. Sam insists she will come around but Deeks isn't convinced. Sam advises that he doesn't bring it up to Kensi because she needs time to get there, and it needs to come from her; not him.

Eric Beale tells them they are needed in ops; but before they go, he says he saw them practicing and do they think he is ready to do that. Deeks tells him he should talk to Callen about that as Sam smirks saying Callen cannot wait to walk him through those drills. Eric gets excited.

When Deeks and Sam arrive in ops, Nell Jones greets them, telling them Owen Granger won't be in today. Callen tells Nell to start and she reveals what happened to the Navy Reservist, Mark Newton that was killed in what appeared to be an attempt on Councilman Hill. They don't know why a councilman would have a security team and Nell confirms they do not know if it was an ongoing threat or just a one time occurrence.

The security officers Mark Newton and Junior Sancho worked for Kulinda Tactical Security (KTS). The team learns Hetty Lange got the phone call because the councilman's father once played football with a man who is a US Senator. Sam and Callen are going to the scene and Deeks takes Nell to visit with the councilman.

At the scene, Sam and Callen discuss Granger and that he hasn't been to work in three days and they believe something is up. Sam suggests that maybe Hetty has Granger working off the books and Callen says that wouldn't surprise him, but doesn't like that he is missing work and plans to check on him again tonight.

Sam looks at what is left of the bomb, claiming it was low tech but highly effective. They re-enact the events at the crime scene. They discover the story from the body guard doesn't make sense, thinking Councilman Hill wasn't the target, and the gunman was there to kill Newton.

Hill is found at Crenshaw Boxing Club. Deeks is surprised that he didn't take any time off after the attempt on his life. He tells Deeks he can't afford to because one day in the gym is one day these kids are on the streets. He asks if they found out the suspect's names. Nell asks him why he has body guards. He says a lot of people are happy with the great things he is doing but it has created some local enemies for him. Deeks informs him they believe he wasn't the intended target but Mark Newton was.

He is shocked saying that Mark was a good man. He tells them he wants to help but he has no idea why someone would want to kill Mark Newton. Deeks and Nell shake his hand and thanks him for his time.

Kensi arrives at the gym where Anna is working out. Anna comes over to speak to her, but Kensi tells her to keep working. Kensi admits that she isn't back to work yet and asks Anna if she is working, she tells her Hetty has something for her; Kensi seems happy for her but brushes her off saying she needs to do some physical therapy and walks away. Eric comes down to tell Anna she is needed in ops, but notices Kensi is there, he gives her a big hug confused as to why she is there but glad to see her.

Sam and Callen return and Nell tells them Anna is waiting in ops. She tells Callen to head up but Hetty has something else for Sam to do, only saying she had one last card to play. Callen heads off to ops. Nell informs Sam that LAPD robbery/homicide has new intel on KTS. Apparently they have been hired muscle to several LA organizations. Sam says they are using their legit company as a front, Nell says they believe that to be true but can't verify it. Hetty wants Sam on the inside and he agrees. Nell warns him that they will not be afraid to come after him.

Nell and Deeks are on site when Eric informs them Sam will be arriving shortly. Nell begs Deeks to stop complaining about her driving, he says he is getting used to it but he is still getting a custom molded helmet. She laughs and they joke around about trees and their pruning. Deeks tells her he took care of the trees in that park one summer, she doesn't fully believe him. Sam arrives for his meeting with the owner of the KTS company, Mr. Irvin. He invites Sam to walk and talk as they get a cup of coffee.

He is a little bit leery about Sam's reference. He tells Sam that KTS is very profitable but important to stay in the community. He says it is important the kids in the community see his good, strong men and wants them to aspire to be like his security team. He asks Sam if he thinks he can fit in, and offers him an opportunity to prove himself.

Callen and Anna get out of their car, Anna acting very off when it comes to their budding relationship, unsure of where this is all going. Callen insists that maybe he will surprise her with what he wants. She wants to take a trip by San Diego and was sure he didn't want to go and she didn't want him to feel obligated to go but he tells her they should go. She smiles and agrees to go. He asks what is there, and she tells him Lego land and an outlet mall. Callen is amused about Lego land.

Sam arrives at KTS. He meets the two men he is working with and gives them his condolences about Mark Newton and they tell him Newton was a great dude. Their assignment is Poppy Gold, a Youtube star who is doing an appearance at an art gallery. She has 1.7 million subscribers and a good 10 thousand are haters. She has had threats at previous appearances so they are told to be alert but mainly they are there for crowd control.

Deeks and Nell learn from Eric that Junior Sancho was in a gang. Junior was arrested 3 times as a minor, from there he enlisted with the Marines. Deeks is sure he didn't leave gang life behind him. Strangely back at KTS, Sancho grabs his bag and when asked where he was going he said no where.

Sam digs around for information and discovers that Sancho is always wound up tight and for some reason triple checked everything before they were to leave. Sam is offered to come up to the gym but says he needs to call his wife first. Sam calls Deeks, but it looks like the guard with him may have overheard the call.

Deeks and Nell observe Sancho outside with the owner of KTS. He cranked the music in the truck so Nell and Deeks couldn't hear their conversation. After a few minutes, Mr Irvin disappears. Deeks and Nell continue to follow Sancho, while Eric is told to keep an eye on the truck.

Callen and Anna believe they are chopping up the car from the drive-by shooting instead of stashing them. Callen sends Eric a photo of a tire outside the garage. Eric confirms they are a match to the shooter's car.

Callen and Anna enter the building and find the cars from the drive-by ordering the men to come to them with their hands up. One comes to Callen while the other shoves a toolbox at Anna and begins to shoot at her. Callen handcuffs the man with him and jumps on the man shooting at Anna and knocks him out, looking up at Anna he asks if she has ever been to Lego land and she laughs.

Eric check out the men they have arrested. Barmik Firas is tied to a Syrian money laundering group in Los Angeles. Anna wants to know why a group like that would want to kill Newton and what is the link. They learn that one of the men in the Syrian group was arrested with some members from the same gang Sancho was in. Anna and Callen believe the Syrians may have had a deal go sideways with the gang, wanting revenge on KTS because they were the muscle behind it.

Eric discovers everyone ties to one man, D'Andre Linton. They have no arrests on him, all they know was he was kicked out of school a couple years earlier for running a sports gambling operation. Anna says he could be the middle man and tells Eric he did nice work.

At the art gallery, Sam talks to Sancho saying it must be hard to be at work after what happened and offers an ear if he wants to talk about it. Sancho tells Sam he doesn't trust him.

Anna and Callen arrive at D'Andre's house to find out the front door has been damaged; a young boy named Joey tells them D'Andre left. Anna asks Joey about D'Andre, who tells her D'Andre ran away when those men came for him. Anna shows him a picture and he confirms that is the man who kicked in the door. They tell him they are not going to hurt D'Andre and thank him for his help.

Poppy arrives for her appearance and within minutes there is a woman confronting her with a taser. The men grab her and Poppy tells the crowd that is why you hire the pros and they all clap. Nell and Deeks are outside watching the cameras from outside and Deeks is making fun of how Poppy became a star. Nell informs him what she really does and he tells her to stop talking because there are just somethings he does not need to understand.

Callen and Anna learn from Eric that the man they are looking for has his car parked at a Performing Arts Center; they head over to the location. They enter the building and order D'Andre to drop the gun, as Callen gets closer he drops it and tells them this whole thing is his fault. He begins to cry.

D'Andre sits on a chair and tells Anna and Callen that Newton and Sancho were like his big brothers. He says Newton was trying to protect him but he screwed up and needed money so he agreed to be a look out for the Syrians. When Newton found out, he told them he was out and to stay away from D'Andre. That was 2 days earlier and today the man came after him. D'Andre ran to this place because Newton and Sancho told him this was a safe place.

Sancho told Mr. Irvin about him and he met him for the first time today and now Mr. Irvin is going after Barmik. Callen informs Sam that Mr. Irvin is going to take Barmik out. They believe he is going to do it at Barmik's girlfriend's place. When Sam arrives, Irvin has already beaten up Barmik. Sam orders Irvin to stop, and the sirens are getting louder.

Sam orders the police to stay back telling Irvin it isn't worth it and not right. He says it is right; Sam tells him to look around and he is an example to these people and children and to not under all that and change. He tells him to be that light and beacon for them. Irvin kicks Barmik one more time and Sam hugs Irvin.

Kensi looks around the office, and as she is leaving Pete sees her. She asks him what he is doing there and he tells he. Kensi asks what his assignment is and her smile fades when she learns she is his assignment. He offers her a seat and asks her how her workout went.

Kensi says she is ready to come back and he asks her why she is rushing it. She feel she isn't but he wants to be sure, saying sometimes the body heals faster than the mind. Kensi learns it is his decision to make and asks what she needs to do to prove it. He says talk to him. She rambles on, speaking rapidly and promises she will be 100% at some point. He asks her what is she isn't. She says that isn't an option and tells him he cannot take this away from her. He says he wants the best for her and the team and they both may not be the same thing. She insists she belongs there and he says not yet.

Sam is with the KTS team, they say it was great working with him and if he ever wants a career change to look them up. Sancho admits he didn't trust him but there is a basketball tournament next weekend and they could use another ref. Sam says he will be there. Irvin thanks him and they part ways. Sam walks through the party in the park and joins his team to eat.

Summary:	Planted evidence by the mole results in the arrests of Callen, Sam, Granger and Deeks, on the same day Under Secretary Duggan returns for Hetty's resignation.

The episode begins tonight with Owen Granger waking up shaky, confused and with a blurry memory. He realizes he has bloody hands and a splash of blood on his shirt, recalling a foggy night. He finds Heather Wilson lying on the ground; as he checks for a pulse LAPD breaks through the door, Heather has a pulse but is suffering from blunt force trauma to the head.

G. Callen and Kensi Blye are both working on their shooting. Kensi insists that Hetty Lange sent him to check up on her and she pushes him to tell Hetty she is ready to come back to work; he tells her it can't hurt to put in a good word.

Marty Deeks and Sam Hanna arrive at work with Deeks telling him that he is taking his advice about him and Kensi not doing the same thing every day and he is trying to find new and exciting things to do. Sam reads right through it, that Deeks is looking for a new place to propose. Deeks tries to deny it, and Sam offers him some ideas.

They are interrupted when Eric Beale says they are needed in OPS, both concerned that he isn't his usual self. The team is informed that Granger was with Heather, when they arrived after an unknown tipster reported gunshots at Heather's house, and Granger was arrested on-site. No one has been able to speak to him and Deeks offers to go there and pull some strings.

Sam and Callen head to the crime scene. Kensi asks what she can do, Callen tells her they will call her when they find something. Kensi goes to see Hetty who is speaking to Under Secretary Duggan; he is there to oversee her departure. She had 90 days to find the mole and her time is up.

Kensi is upset that they are removing the wrong person, but Hetty says she is a woman of her word. Duggan wants to brief Granger as he will be her temporary replacement, when he asks where Granger is both Hetty and Kensi deny seeing him that day.

At the crime scene, Callen and Sam don't like the feeling of what is going on. Before they can ask, LAPD Dt. Evans says he can't give them anything but he tells them he can say he didn't see them checking out the yard.

At the precinct, Granger is cuffed to a bar while Deeks attempts to see him to no avail. Dt. Ellen Whiting from Interanl Affairs stops him from embarrassing himself informing Granger is the least of his worries and they have new evidence in his cold case, and it could just be the evidence she needs. She thanks him for saving her being stuck in traffic and has him arrested.

Deeks sends a text to Kensi before Whiting can take his phone. Kensi tells Hetty that Deeks is arrested and there is no way it is a coincidence that two members of their team were arrested on the same day. Hetty agrees saying it feels like an offensive. Kensi says Deeks must have been arrested because he is no longer responding. Hetty tells her they have spent all this time chasing the mole and now the mole is heading straight at them.

Callen and Sam realize its garbage day, when they find Heather's garbage bins, they are empty too but were never put out at the road. They find it odd, Callen gets a call from Kensi while Sam finds "roofies" in another garbage bin; he takes a picture. Callen tells Sam that Deeks got arrested, but before they can figure things out the DEA shows up at the crime scene and Sam wants to know why. Sam is asked to open his trunk and inside there is a dead body and a brick of cocaine. Sam asks the DEA to really think about this. They take Sam's weapon and cuff him. Callen remains hidden.

Kensi comes to the LAPD precinct and once again hits a brick wall when she attempts to find out information on Granger and Deeks. Kensi sees Dt. Whiting and wants to know what evidence she could have on an ice cold case. When she pushes Whiting for information and who is the new source, Whiting says Kensi probably knows what happened all those years ago and says she will subpoena her to find out what she knows. Kensi leaves.

Callen goes to his neighbor Mrs Ramirez, asking her if she had any visitors today. She says not since last week and it was only a neighbor. Callen's phone rings, it is Kensi saying she couldn't get any information on either Deeks or Granger. Callen tells her Sam just got arrested too and she needs to stay on her toes.

He tells her whoever it is, they are coming after all of them and they need to stop them. He won't tell her where he is, but the ATF arrive at his place, confirming with Kensi they are all be targeted by different agencies. Kensi says its someone with a lot of connection and pull; someone like Duggan! Callen tells Kensi to hang up now as they are tracking their phones. She dumps hers in a purse of someone passing by. A K-9 jumps Callen and he gets arrested.

Under Secretary Duggan asks Hetty if she has heard from Granger yet, she tells him she is not his keeper. He questions how unusual it is and observes all the photos on the wall, complimenting her on her career and despite everything happening he has admired her a great deal. He regrets at how it is all ending, she says no one is more sorry than her. He tells her her last order of business is to find Granger.

Eric and Nell Jones meet with Kensi in a private room, confirming that Callen was right. They have to stay off all systems to get ahead of this. They were discussing ways to figure out who is after them when Eric is told Heather is awake and she has identified Granger as her attacker. All three are shocked and confused. Meanwhile, Granger is taken by an officer who is about to escort him into another room and someone stabs him repeatedly in the back, leaving him to die.

In an interrogation room, Sam is refusing to talk. He asks to speak to another agent, he is denied. Deeks is in another room with Whiting; she is more than willing to do this over and over to get the truth. Deeks wants to see his captain and she says he is unavailable and she is the closest thing he has to an ally there. Deeks continues to badger her, telling her to use her intuition, asking her what evidence she has now.

Whiting shows him a picture of Julie Sanders, a former hooker he helps out. He reviews all the coincidences happening to his team right now, and she needs to know she is being used. She tells him about Kensi bolting when she mentioned subpoena to her. Deeks orders her to leave Kensi out of it; Whiting tells him that she may not even need Kensi.

ATF Agent Duke Morgan tells Callen he has bad news and worse news. He informs him they found 500 lbs of explosives on his property and a dead body inside his garage. Callen guesses someone tipped him and he tells him his partner was set up too; guessing the body had to have been dead for more than 12 hours, clearly killed somewhere else, just like the body in Sam's trunk.

Morgan says it sounds like a convenient theory, Callen tells him to look into the fact that Callen, Granger, Deeks and Sam were all arrested today. He tells Morgan the longer they are all locked up the more danger people are in, and asks if he wants that blood on his hands. Morgan seems to believe him.

Kensi tells Hetty Heather is awake and she is happy because Duggan is getting restless. Kensi suggests Duggan could be the mole. Nell rushes over to them, telling them Granger has been stabbed. He is alive but it isn't looking good. Hetty approaches Duggan, telling him they must speak alone. She tells Nell and Kensi that a strong woman is like a teabag, you never know how strong she is until she gets into hot water.

Granger is rushed in an ambulance while Hetty speaks to Duggan. She admits that she hasn't been honest with him and Owen Granger has been in police custody since this morning and that he has been stabbed. She tells him that 3 of her agents are being held by different agencies across the city. Hetty says she didn't tell him because she didn't realize what he has to gain until now. It is HIS career that is depending on finding the mole. He says he can't help her without knowing everything.

Kensi is at the hospital, dressed as a nurse. She arrives in Heather's room, telling her she needs an MRI. Security tells her she can't leave her room without seeing her ID. Kensi puts him in a sleeper hold and takes Heather with her. Kensi tells her she needs to trust her, she is a special agent. As she attempts to get Heather in the car, a van drives by shooting at them. Kensi manages to escape, it was Eric in the van shooting blanks.

Later that night, Deeks is bored, screaming for Whiting. An officer comes in and when Deeks requests to see his captain he is told he is unavailable and they lock the door. Sam requests a phone call, but refuses to eat. Callen is speaking to Agent Morgan who says the evidence is not matching what Callen is saying. Morgan tells him it is going to be a long night. Callen tells him if he lets him out he will do both their jobs. Granger is unconscious in the hospital, tubing and wires all around him.

Heather is handcuffed when Kensi comes into the room. She produces evidence proving that Heather and Natalie were working together, and Heather set up Granger. Duggan and Hetty are watching the interrogation. Kensi offers her protection as it seems her boss no longer needs her. Kensi tells her if she doesn't accept her help she will either end up in a high security prison or dead like Natalie. She orders her to make a choice.

Heather begins to tap in morse code on the table; Duggan asks why Kensi stopped asking questions. Hetty tells him they are finally getting somewhere. The interview ends and Kensi informs them Heather is working for the CIA.

Nell and Eric tell Hetty the SWAT team is outside the boat shed as they speak. Their communication is cut off. Hetty says she will handle it and Duggan says this has gone too far and he will deal with it because it is time he did his job.

Duggan comes out to speak to the FBI and a sniper shoots him. Nell and Eric are trying to find out where the shot came from, both worried that Duggan was the last person who could help them. Hetty bows her head and Kensi says they need to get out of there. FBI breaks open the door, they find Heather in one of the rooms. The rest of the shed is empty, but they discover the hatch leading to the water below.

Production Code: 814
Summary: Hetty goes rogue, leaving the NCIS team completely in the dark, and the mole kidnaps one of the agents.

The episode begins with Carl Brown being forced into a prisoner transport van with an inmate, Vincent Garvey who has tried to kill him. The van is blocked from its route and the prisoner tells Carl it is his lucky day because there is a bounty on him.

Eric Beale and Nell Jones watch the news, both deciding its very bad. Marty Deeks is in a prison cell, telling his cell-mate jokes when LAPD Detective Ellen Whiting comes to see him. She removes Tiny and brings in several new inmates, telling them their new cell mate is a police officer.

Sam Hanna is speaking to DEA Agent Mario Sanchez about the finances of each government agency, asking him who has more money than all their agencies combined; the CIA, confirming they are being played and asks to speak to the Special Agent in charge.

G. Callen manages to get out of handcuffs as ATF Agent Duke Morgan returns to the room to interrogate him some more. Callen attempts to escape but fails, Agent Morgan promises he will pay for what he did; when he leaves the room, Callen calls Kensi Blye.

Kensi informs him they have reason to believe Heather has links to the CIA but they are trying to confirm it; she tells him Duggan was killed by a sniper outside the boat shed. As Callen asks Kensi about Owen Granger but before she can answer Agent Morgan returns for his phone.

Hetty Lange watches the news with Kensi, Nell and Eric as Granger remains in a coma in the hospital. Hetty orders them to release all non-essential personnel for their own safety. Hetty tells them she is going to the hospital as the "wolves are there for all of them" and someone needs to watch over Granger.

She tells Kensi to stay with Nell and Eric as she is now in charge since Hetty no longer works for NCIS. As she leaves she tells them the house may not fall; Eric is to tell everyone to go home and Nell is to make sure there is no access to the building. Kensi says it is time to lock and load.

We find out that the men who took Carl work for Hetty. She sits in front of the cage, tells her men to take Garvey to the beach before they return him to prison but if he does anything funny, shoot him. She informs Carl he is there for bait.

As Eric is preparing the rooms with weapons, he notices there was a trojan sent in emails Kensi shared with CIA Agent Vostanik Sabatino; all realizing he is the mole. This confirms everything Heather told them about the CIA.

Nell comes to see Callen, acting as his lawyer. She gives him a file and demands to speak to Agent Morgan's boss. While Nell is gone, she leaves a handcuff key and ear piece attached to the bottom of her coffee cup.

Deeks is able to talk to all the gang members in the cell with him when Kensi arrives. Det. Whiting says there is a subpoena for Kensi to reveal everything she knows about Deek's former partner. She kisses Deeks which infuriates Whiting. Whiting leaves and Deeks puts an ear piece in, contacting the team including Sam and Callen.

As Kensi leaves she runs into Sullivan, who tazes her and puts her in a wheelchair. Everyone can hear her but no one can see what is happening.

Eric reveals Kensi was abducted by the man she was talking to; Deeks confirm it was Sullivan, the vet from rehab. Deeks orders Eric to get the footage to LAPD immediately meanwhile Callen escapes, before Agent Morgan can stop him, he knocks him in the throat and leaves.

Hetty's phone rings and Eric reveals Kensi has been kidnapped, Callen is out of custody but they are still working on Sam and Deeks. When Eric asks if she is with Granger, she tells him no and hangs up. Carl taunts Hetty about her plan failing, she says she will kill him herself.

Deeks pleads with Detective Whiting, after she shows him the footage of Kensi being abducted. He tells her what is happening to his team is much bigger than her witch hunt for dirty cops. She says if she helps him find Kensi, he has to tell her the truth. She agrees to let him out. Sam is also released after he showed the agents what happened with Kensi.

With most of the team together, Eric reveals that Sabatino appears to be the mole; all of them wonder what the CIA's beef is with NCIS. Sam says Callen worked for the CIA, he knows what they are capable of. Kensi wakes up strapped to the wheelchair wanting to know why Sullivan is doing this. Sullivan injects her hand, causing her to pass out.

The team gathers weapons, puts on bullet proof vests. Nell confirms that Kensi sent everyone home on Hetty's order. Hetty has turned off her phone and no one knows where she is. Det. Whiting is there with Deeks, not happy she is there but admitting they need her help.

Nell uncovers a voice message from DEA Agent Mario Sanchez, he is telling Hetty that they had kept her man as long as they could but he was getting adamant about being released and they were no longer comfortable holding him. Whiting admits she nabbed Deeks because she got new information on his former partner's death.

Whiting is shocked that Hetty put the bodies in Sam's truck and Callen's house, and the only reason Kensi was taken is because she disobeyed Hetty. Callen asks them to dig up anything they have on the CIA. They are also curious about CIA Officer Ferris aka. Sullivan.

Eric confirms where Hetty was the last time she used her phone to call him. A vehicle arrives, and Carl points to the cabinet Hetty went to hide in, the man shoots at the cabinet and Carl tells him to shoot lower because she is small. When the shooter opens the cabinet, Hetty comes up from behind the shield and kills him. Hetty asks Carl if this shooter was his friend, when he answers CIA Officer Randall Sharov and CIA Officer Vostanik Sabatino reveal the shooter was with them. They order her into the cage, locking her in. Sharov offers Carl a gun, asking if he wants the honors, he takes the gun.

Callen, Deeks, Sam and Whiting arrive to the site where Hetty's last call originated from. Carl points a gun at Hetty, telling her his face is the last thing she will see. Fiesty Hetty is not afraid of telling the agents how shameful they are, and she did everything she did to protect her people. Sharov reminds Hetty that she was warned to stay out of the Middle East.

She asks where Kensi is and Carl says they don't owe her anything. Sabatino admits he doesn't know where she is but Sharov tells her Ferris has her and it is unfortunate for her because they have a history she isn't aware of.

Hetty sits on the cot and wraps herself in a blanket laughing at how predictable men are. Carl questions her laughter and she says she is the only one in a safe place now. She presses her brooch, covers herself with the blanket and the building explodes.

Outside her team rushes towards it, they find Sharov dead and the one she shot; Sabatino is alive and so is Carl who reaches for a gun. He shoots Whiting in the neck but Callen kills him. Deeks rushes to Whiting, he begs her to stay with him and confesses that he killed his partner because he was a dirty cop. He says he did a bad thing for a very good reason. He encourages her to stay alive.

Kensi slowly wakes up, who tells Ferris to let her go and run for his life. She says if he hurts her, the NCIS team will hunt him down. He blames this all on Hetty, talking about global security. He reveals he didn't lose his leg from an IUD, that some American heroes were there and blew his leg off.

He says this is personal and Kensi admits she thought he was Taliban and it was a mistake. He says they tried to warn them a bunch of times to not interfere. She apologizes for shooting him in the leg. He says he is not going to kill her but he is going to pay her back for what she did. He pulls out an electric saw and she screams no.

Guest Stars:	Kurt Yaeger (Sullivan / CIA Officer Ferris), John M. Jackson (Retired Rear Admiral Albert Jethro "AJ" Chegwiddden), Teddy Lane Jr. (LAPD Officer), Anzu Lawson (Nurse)
Summary:	Emotions run high for the team as one agent is held in an unknown location and tortured by the mole, while another discovers he was betrayed by someone he least expected.

The episode begins with CIA Officer Ferris getting creeped out by Kensi Blyth smiling at him as he tries to intimidate her with the electric saw. She taunts him that maybe she was the one who made him feel like losing a leg didn't matter; he says he was just playing a role. She scoffs that he doesn't have it in him to cut off her leg.

Nelle Jones and Eric Beale are tracing 3 phones, that lead no where; the last number is at a church in Korea town, they inform G. Callen, Sam Hanna and Marty Deeks where Kensi could be. Ferris answers the phone, but injects Kensi immediately upon hanging up.

Sam says Deeks is too close to this and losing his focus; they enter the church and go 3 separate directions. In one of the back rooms, Callen finds a woman strapped to a wheel chair with a black bag over her head; when he uncovers her face, they see it is Joelle Taylor and not Kensi.

Deeks wants to know where Kensi is. Joelle says she is fine but just rattled; Deeks gets irritated when she has no idea who took her nor where he went. Deeks dashes from the room, yelling he has to find her.

Hetty Lange is interrogating Vostanik Sabatino asking where Kensi is; he said Ferris never told him. He claims he is on Hetty's side and telling the truth; saying he wants these guys as badly as she does. Deeks comes in the room and attacks Sabatino demanding to know where Kensi is, after a few punches, Sam pulls him back.

Sabatino tells Hetty her team needs to get a hold of their emotions, she says Deeks is showing more grace than she would have expected. He claims its not personal, she says him and his ghouls were picking off everyone on her team. He said he was trying to weed out the bad ones, she again asks where Kensi is? Sam refuses to let him back in the interrogation room.

Callen brings Joelle back with him; they debate whether to release Sabatino to see where he goes or keep him locked up. Nell returns to the church to look for evidence, bouncing ideas with Eric. Their question is why did he leave Joelle behind; Nell says maybe Kensi wasn't even there and they have no idea where she is or what she has been through since Ferris took her that morning?

Hetty tells Callen to use his instincts with Sabatino because he is a parasite. Callen says the only question he has is how did Sabatino think this was all going to end? He says he was hoping he would end up the hero bringing in corrupt CIA agents. He says he is their only shot of finding Kensi. He says Ferris has gone underground and if Kensi is still alive, he took Kensi with him. Callen says they will find her another way; Sabatino says that is a mistake and Ferris is sick, and he didn't join the CIA out of love for his country.

As Sabatino continues to talk to Callen, Deeks is angry saying Hetty shouldn't have let Kensi come back, she wasn't ready. Sam says Kensi is as tough as nails, she will survive. Meanwhile Ferris attempts to wake Kensi up telling her they are home.

Sam joins in on the interrogation where Sabatino says he had nothing to do with the men showing up at his son's school. He admits he didn't know about them until he says Hetty recall Carl Brown. Sam is pissed off that Sabatino is giving his wife, Michelle a bad name; Sabatino insists they need him to help them.

Deeks throws a table out of frustration and Hetty asks him if that makes him feel better. When Hetty says Sabatino might not have anything to give them, Deeks says he cannot live with that; Hetty says he might not have a choice. He accuses her of putting Kensi in this position in the first place. He tells her if anything happens to Kensi it is all on Hetty.

Nell finds a black case that the electric saw was in, she shares with Eric that it is empty and she finds what appears to be wheelchair marks in the dirt, the same as in the room where they found Joelle. Eric yells "beard" and Nell says no beard. Eric draws his gun as an older man walks through the room he is in.

He refuses to drop to his knees, and throws Hetty's key card at Eric, revealing Hetty gave it to him. Eric learns he is retired Admiral AJ Chegwiddden. He orders Eric to get him up to speed after they joke about being gamers. Sam and Deeks give in on Sam's suggestion of trusting him. Hetty tells them to "give em hell".

A woman arrives at Owen Granger's room, telling the officer outside she just wants to hold his hand for a while. She turns off the monitors and prepares a syringe, she injects it into his IV and he shoots her pushing the monitor onto her.

Eric is showing Admiral around when Nell returns; he tells her Henrietta (Hetty) needed his help and that's why he is back. He says NCIS: LA is a mess and orders Eric to sent full security detail to the hospital and boat shed. He wants security footage of the shooting and a full work up of the woman Granger killed. He wants to know where Hetty is, Nell says she doesn't know and Eric says the boat shed. Admiral says crew it, and send security to the hospital he is going to the boat shed himself.

Sabatino brings Callen, Sam and Deeks to an address he was given, but they feel they are being set up; when they enter the house they don't find Kensi and Sam reminds him it isn't over. Hetty gives Joelle tea, and tells her, her betrayal of Callen will not go unpunished.

Joelle says she was initially there to keep an eye on Callen but she never meant to hurt anyone, she was dragged into like the rest of them. As Joelle raises her gun to shoot Hetty, Admiral knocks her out with a boat oar. He learns the red-head was Callen's ex-girlfriend.

Ferris attempts to wake Kensi up, who pretends she is choking so he would cut her loose from the wheelchair; she kicks him away from her, but he grabs a sledge hammer to crush her hands. They are heavily fighting, both bleeding when a man and woman come in and tell them both to hold it.

At the boat shed, Hetty says she needs answers from Joelle. He dumps cold water on her face but her head hurts. Hetty wants to know where Keni and Ferris are. Callen runs to Joelle who is still lying on the ground. Hetty orders him to step back from Officer Taylor (Joelle). Deeks says, "Oh Snap!" and Sabatino sarcastically says that he was supposed to be the bad guy.

Nell visits Granger, who tells her field work suits her. She comes to retrieve the woman's cell phone. She uses the dead woman's ring finger to unlock the phone. Callen confronts Joelle about her lies, he forgives her for the lying as its part of the job, but he can't forgive her for the betrayal. Callen leaves the room and Sam asked if he wanted to talk, he blames them for introducing them.

Eric calls, giving them another address where Kensi could be. The man and woman have restrained Kensi again in the wheelchair and the woman gets a call with photos of a dead Granger and Hetty.

When they arrive at the address, Sabatino is handcuffed to the door of the SUV. Ferris and his accomplices know they have arrived. Sam kills the man as Callen and Deeks dodge bullets. Kensi calls for Deeks as Ferris has the saw running at her neck.

When he shoots the man in the head, Kensi says, "double tap to the head? You must really love me!" He is worried that his baby is bleeding; Callen and Sam arrive asking if Kensi is okay, they both tell them to get out of the room. Deeks confesses she really scared him.

Deeks carries Kensi over the threshold, blissfully happy until he also sees that Sabatino is gone. Hetty thanks Admiral for coming to help; she says better people have tried to kill Granger, including him. He says he was young and Granger was stupid. She offers Admiral to stay a while, she could use the help and maybe even a good lawyer.

At home, Callen takes a saw and finally cuts the table in half that he bought with Joelle; kicking the pieces apart. Hetty sits with Granger, telling him he just needs to rest. He jokes a little and she tells him to stop being a smartass.

The episode begins with an elderly man, Louis Miller is kidnapped from a retirement home. Kensi Blye meets with Nate Getz, explains what has happened recently and asks if he could just tell her if she could go back to work. He says after everything he heard none of them should be back to work. He says it sounds like she has been back to work for a while and approves her return.

Nell Jones shares with G. Callen, Sam Hanna and Eric Beale the kidnapping from the home, and they can't find Louis Miller nor his grandson, Warren Miller, a lieutenant in the Navy; as they update the team, they locate the missing ambulance.

Callen and Sam arrive at the ambulance, and find Lt. Warren Miller barely alive; as they call for an ambulance, they realize the irony. Callen hot wires the ambulance as Sam injects him long enough to keep him alive; they are all happy to see that Kensi is back behind her desk and cleared for duty.

Marty Deeks is interviewing the 2 paramedics that were attacked and left unconscious; after their uniforms and ambulance. They realize that since Warren was left behind, its probably not about him.

Nell shares that the grandfather, Master Sergeant Louis Miller, comes from a family of long military history. Hetty Lange says he is now their case and they need to find him.

After she welcomes Kensi back, she is sent to go undercover in the retirement home with Deeks. Sam is to meet a secret service agent in the boat shed because it seems they are interested in Louis Miller in one of their investigations. Callen is told to follow her as they have another matter to attend to.

Callen asks about Owen Granger, but Hetty says he isn't the issue; he thinks it is about Joelle, but Hetty says she doesn't want to talk about that bitch. She wants to talk about his half-sister Alexandra Reynolds and the father of her child, Pacey Smith.

Callen is surprised that they are tracking his father who has been caught twice in the vicinity of them and promises to take care of it. Hetty warns him to not make a temporary solution a permanent mistake.

Meanwhile, Deeks meets with a resident in the home, while Kensi pretends to be looking for a home for her grandmother; wanting to check out their security. Deeks gets him to race his wheelchair throughout the hallways, leaving Kensi in the security room, who patches everything over to Nell.

Callen takes a gun away from his grandfather and demands to know if this has to do with Pacey Smith. He tells him in America they believe in second chances, and that is why he is there because America and Callen are giving him a second chance.

He asks his grandfather to simply stay away from Pacey Smith for him; but it appears too late since Pacey is in the trunk. Callen is furious because Pacey is the father of his grandson; he says he is a drug dealer and prison has not changed him.

Sam goes to the boat shed and meets NCIS Agent Thompson and SSSA Nicole Dechamps who reveals that the kidnapped vet may have kept an illegal coin that is worth well over 7 million dollars. Secret Service has been tracking the coins for years and found that one of the men who may have stolen one was Jackson Miller, Louis' grandfather.

Sam says its possible the Secret Service is the one who started this chain of events and Louis couldn't have done this, leaving his grandson within an inch of his life. Dechamps says she has visited Louis a few times in the home but the last visit there was an elderly man outside his room, eavesdropping. She didn't catch a name but she can do a photo lineup.

Nell sends Deeks a photo of Edward O'Boyle and he has him in his sight. Deeks manages to get himself involved in a highstakes, under the table card game.

Nate comes to see Eric and Nell, where they both admit she is doing a great job; when they get some weird intel of Edward, Nate is glued to the screen and photos and names. Eric tells him Kensi will be back later, then asks Nell if Nate is weird sometimes.

Deeks proves to the table that Edward is cheating and reveals he is not there visiting his uncle. Ginger tries to run away while Eddie smashes Deeks over the head; as Deeks and Eddie fight for the cane, Ginger attempts to escape again.

Callen and his grandfather continue to deal with Pacey, and when he doesn't answer they figure out that Pacey isn't a drug dealer nor criminal but in fact as criminal informant for LAPD.

Deeks and Kensi learn that Eddie and Ginger have been doing this repeatedly in different retirement homes, to get the elderly to sign their wills over to them. They question them about the coin Louis, and inform them he is missing.

Eddie says they have it all wrong; he knew about the double eagle coin but weren't interested in it because they couldn't sell it. Malcolm who works at the home can sell things on the dark web, but according to Edward he hadn't found a buyer for it yet. Deeks informs them they were conned.

Sam and DeChamps are on their way to the warehouse of the man who once owned the coin but lost it in an auction several years earlier. Nell and Eric say they haven't heard from Callen but Hetty assures them there is no need to worry. Pacey is with the police, happy to be out of the informant business.

He is furious that he stepped over the line for him,; and he either has to be a father or not, no more of this watching from a distance. Callen says it isn't working, whoa re they protecting with the secrets and lies.

Sam tells Dechamps they are on this mission together, as they watch an army of people leave the warehouse but Louis wasn't with them. She finds him, but they are ambushed. They thrown Louis' oxygen tank in the air and shot to make it explode. Sam grabs one of the men and demands answers.

Louis is safe, and when Kensi and Deeks tell Edward and Ginger that, they say send police units to the bus, not the home; especially since Malcolm believes Edward still has the double eagle. Eric and Nell find the bus being followed, they surround the bus and heavily armed men exit towards the bus. Hetty calls for back up but Sam and Dechamps are there as well. Dechamps asks what he is waiting for and he tells her she is impatient.

Sam tells her to get down and he steps on the gas racing towards the men when a helicopter and military Hummers arrive to get the armed men. Hetty says to remind her to send the CO at the Navy Weapons station a nice bottle of scotch.

Sam arrives at the bus to see the four military veterans from the home knock one of the men out with a butt of one of the guns. Ginger reveals that Louis told her where the real coin was but she won't divulge the location. Dechamps stands with Sam at the hospital and reveals the coin was buried with Louis son and she has no intention of digging up a grave.

Nell catches Eric talking to Nate, where she tells him it is okay that he is seeing Nate; Nell admits that she is seeing him as her psychologist too. Its been a tough year for all of them; Eric admits he doesn't know how to share what he goes through. Nell admits she isn't as strong as she appears to be either. They hug each other tightly.

Callen arrives at Alexandra's house with his father. He tells her it isn't official business and reveal that Garrison is her father. Callen agrees it is time to give her some answers to her questions; she invites them in for dinner and they agree to stay. Garrison gives Jake a coin he had once given to his grandmother; Callen flashes back to special moment between him and his father.

Hetty arrives at the hospital to find Owen Granger's room empty. The nurse explains he is gone, from what she understands is one minute he was there and the next was gone; they believe he pulled out his IV and just left. She hands her a paper with Henrietta written on it.

He tells her to be safe and he has had enough of hospitals for one life time, he has some unfinished business to do. He says he doesn't know what she is going to tell everyone but she will think of something, she always does.

Summary: Sam assumes a former alias in a risky undercover operation to take down an elusive drug lord. Meanwhile, Hetty interrupts Callen and Anna's romantic night to assign them a prisoner escort mission.

The episode begins with the LAPD in the middle of a gun fight, unaware of who they are shooting at. Sam Hanna gets a call and tells the man to get to the spot and he is on his way.

G. Callen is having a quiet romantic time with Anna Kolcheck, she promises she isn't a threat nor there to hurt him. She tells him there is no pressure, but when he is ready to fully trust her, she will be there; all of her.

Callen stops her before she leaves, but are interrupted when his phone rings and it is Hetty Lange; when he doesn't answer there is a knock at his front door. He opens the door after Anna hides. She tells him TMI and hands him a folder, needing him immediately on a plane to a prison in Arizona.

Hetty says Sam has his hands full and tells a hiding Anna that she is to accompany Callen. Before she leaves she jokes that his bed is on the curb and it looks like he needs a new one.

At the NCIS headquarters, Marty Deeks and Kensi Blye banter as Eric Beale overhears them. He misunderstands offering Deeks herbs, who quickly corrects the situation saying they were talking about getting up on a surf board. As the team heads upstairs for a new case, Hetty informs Deeks that LAPD Detective Whiting has awoken from her coma; Deeks is very concerned.

Nell Jones and Eric share about the police shoot out this morning, and how Spence Taylor escaped and they believe he is working for the drug lord they refer to as "King"; Eric reveals that Sam was on the case a few years ago, but they never quite closed the case. Nell is to work with Kensi while Deeks helps out Sam. They learn that Callen has gone to bring Ahmed Han Asakeem to LA for a deposition.

Sam brings in Taylor, revealing he was a cop. Taylor threatens to reveal who Sam is when he gets to prison and everyone will be after him. Sam tells him he is putting him back on the streets, and the longer he is with the LAPD the more he looks like a snitch. Sam also reveals they know about his family; in return for their safety Taylor needs to flip on King; but as far as everyone knows King is a ghost.

Sam tells him to call his connection Devlin Rush and introduce him. When Taylor protests, Sam asks him if he really thinks he has a choice. Taylor yells that he trusted him; Sam stands up and tells him he knows the rules; this is chess, not checkers!

Nell and Kensi meet with LA District Attorney, Frank Gibson in the middle of his press conference to talk to him about the drug bust; he introduces them to LAPD Detective Johnson who is the one who will help them win the war on drugs.

He welcomes them aboard and says from now on to go through his assistant Shawn Wilson who tells them to not call unless they have something concrete. Johnson reveals the bust was from an anonymous tip but before he can answer anything else, Wilson calls him away from them.

Sam is with Taylor when his connection arrives, Sam acts gangster and calls Taylor a snitch, throwing him off the pier. He turns his gun on Sam and says that now he owes them the money.

Sam says that Taylor was an LAPD informant, and he has the proof on a phone in his pocket. Sam reveals he knows this because he has a cop who shares intel with him in exchange for some cocaine. Sam wants to help King and be included, showing them the bag of money that Taylor had stolen. She believes he is legit, since she heard of "Switch" before.

Deeks comes up the hatch in the boathouse with Taylor behind him. Taylor isn't happy about what happened when Deeks tells him he should say thank you for saving his life.

In Arizona, Callen and Anna apprehend Asakeem, but Eric calls him warning him there has been chatter about Asakeem's custody transfer and offers to change their return flight; instead Callen says book them on every flight and every airline from Arizona to LA and every flight from Arizona to New York; every flight, every airline. Callen asks Anna if she is up for a roadtrip.

Kensi joins Deeks as he is watching live feed of Sam with King and associates. Eric calls and said the anonymous tip came from a burn phone, but waiting on more info. Sam is brought through a strip club, where he finally learns that King is actually a woman, he kisses her hand and she says she is "Queen".

Sam stands with Queen and tells her a story about his father, and how disrespected he was. He said as he grew up Sam, himself learned how to be different with different people, like a switch.

She asks why he didn't split with the cash; he makes her laugh when he tells her the money he wants doesn't fit in that duffle bag. She shares that her partner isn't happy with her and if she doesn't have all the money tonight; he wants double tomorrow. She said her partner is making huge demands, and stepping over, getting greedy. She wants Sam to help her steal the remaining money and she will kill him herself.

As they watch over Sam, Deeks' mind wanders to all the things he wants to do to Asakeem for what he did to Kensi; but she says she honestly doesn't feel anything towards the man; she trusts the job and she needs to be okay with it. Deeks says he isn't there, he wants to just break all his fingers; Kensi laughs and says she has Deeks and that is all she cares about.

Callen and Anna are driving, telling Asakeem they are going on a road trip, while they sing really loudly annoying him, asking if this is the new American torture. Asakeem says his brothers will find them anywhere; and they need to stop for him to use the bathroom, instead they just start singing louder again.

Sam arrives with Queen at Champ's place, where he says he is getting some hardware for his lady; as he turns around both Sam and Queen pull a gun on him demanding all the cash. Sam pushes him through a wall full of cash and Queen fills bags of money and they escape; Champ comes out to shoot at Sam, but Deeks and Kensi shoot him first, ordering him to stay down.

LAPD Dt. Johnson says he won't ask if they were doing ops without LAPD consent because of all the money and drugs. Deeks and Kensi leave wondering how Sam knew about this place, and what could have happened if they weren't there.

Sam returns to the strip club with Queen and her associate, where she says they are now going to send a message to Zeus and the entire city; a hostile take-over. She sits on Sam's lap, saying his man inside LAPD is going to help with the take-over.

Asakeem causes a problem in a local restaurant, instigating a fight with some military veterans; the sheriff comes in and tells them all to respect the law and orders Callen to get Asakeem out of there. As they exit the restaurant, mens begin shooting at them; the vets come out of the restaurant and kill the shooters instead. Callen and Anna learn they were not Asakeem's men, there are more people after them.

Eric informs Callen the satellite phones were from a cabin close to the prison, but the cabin was blown up when they left it. They learn a drone has been in the area for over a year, Callen sends in forensics just in case. Callen says they need to move because there is another team after Asakeem.

Sam and Queen grab some guns, and he tells her his insider said the LAPD is dealing with a murder across town and they should have all day available. He asks where it is, but says the location is a surprise. Deeks and Kensi argue about stopping Sam and Queen as they are unsure of the location and the amount of casualties.

Eric calls Kensi and tells them that Assistant Shawn Wilson's ex has way too much money in her account and he is currently at City Hall; Kensi leaves to get him. Once she has him at the boat shed, LA DA Gibson is shocked that Wilson was able to do this right under his nose.

Deeks informs Sam they have Zeus, Wilson admitted to everything. Queen and her crew load up and she tells them no one touches Zeus as he is hers. Sam hops in the SUV with her; just as they are pulling out of the garage, the police stop them. Queen is shot and learns tat Sam is a cop; before she dies she tells him to kill Zeus.

Sam returns to the boat shed, and admits something is off; Queen/King would have eaten Wilson alive. Sam grabs a folder, goes on a hunch, telling the team to stay behind in case he is wrong. He arrives at LA DA Frank Gibson's house; confronts him of being Zeus and it stops now, and arrests him.

Asakeem arrives in Los Angeles, both Anna and Callen are exhausted, they are supposed to clean their guns per Hetty's orders but he pulls her back on the couch, kissing her, saying that couldn't wait.

Eric says someone has invested serious resources into finding Asakeem. Hetty says come out come out wherever you are!

Summary: The U.S. Treasury Department is hacked, and Neil and Eric go undercover inside a couple's retreat to track a tech-savvy husband and wife who are linked to the crime. Meanwhile, Digital Forensics Specialist Dave Flynn arrives from the NCIS cyber office in San Diego to run ops while Eric and Neil are on assignment.

The episode begins with two men finishing dinner, and one being injected in the neck as the other leaves scene. G. Callen and Sam Hanna arrive at work talking about body work needed on a car Sam has been working on for 5 years. Eric Beale calls them up for a case.

Nell Jones informs them there was a cyber attack on the US treasury department system; some of the stolen information is data on undercover IRS agents and their counter terrorist investigations.

One of the suspects, Logan Gorman was found dead last night in a private dining room in Beverly Hills, his dinner guest is unknown as there is no surveillance, but the wait staff are creating a sketch for them now. The second set of suspects are a married couple, Tara and Paul Nelson.

NSA Agent Michael Donaldson is apparently a friend of LAPD Marty Deeks; so Kensi Blye and Deeks are meeting him at the boat shed right now.

Sam jokes if he is a friend of Deeks, he doesn't trust him; Sam and Callen go to the crime scene. Just as they are about to leave Hetty Lange has something else for Callen to do and orders Sam to meet Anna Kolchek at the restaurant instead.

Deeks and Kensi meet Donaldson at the boat shed, where they share a quirky joke; both their initials are MD and keep calling each other "doctor". He wants their help in locating Tara and Paul as soon as possible. Together they have over 20 years of high-tech experience and no criminal background; but they are suspects because they have both been in contact with Logan Gorman a lot in the past few weeks. Donaldson suspects they are looking at a hacking ring.

At the restaurant, Anna is curious about the special assignment Callen is on, but Sam doesn't know anything. She learns Logan had his wallet and an expensive watch on him when he was found, meaning it wasn't a robbery. He requested to sit at the Captain's table, and that his guest arrive and leave undetected through the kitchen.

Eric, Nell, Kensi and Deeks wait at Hetty's desk, and when she arrives she with Special Agent Dave Flynn, he is a digital forensics specialist to help them with this case. Dave informs them Tara and Paul are on an overnight retreat; Deeks is excited about it but Hetty tells him they will be foregoing their undercover for over watch duties; they learn Eric and Nell are going undercover instead of them. Eric is anxious about not being in the ops room, but he is even more stressed about having to wear hiking boots and long pants.

Deeks and Kensi go outside to find their vehicle for this case is an RV; Kensi is thrilled. She tells him to get in and she is driving, no debating about it. Meanwhile Eric and Nell arrive at their cabin, and quickly decide who will sleep where.

They go over their undercover stories and leave to meet the others, and set up surveillance as they head to the lodge. Deeks says they both look pretty cute right now in their camping outfits. Callen parks his car and is watching someone's house.

Nell and Eric are welcomed at the lodge, where they are told to enjoy themselves and to not be afraid to mingle. They immediately talk to Tara and Paul, but the hostess Genevieve returns to take their phones. Eric and Nell are told by Dave that they further they are from their phones, the more staticky the ear bud becomes.

Sam tells Anna she needs to understand the way Callen copes with the demands of the job when she asks him if Callen is okay. Sam confesses that he talks to his wife, Michelle about everything because there is nothing better than talking to someone who gets it. Sam sends Dave photos of the computers as Anna finds pictures of Tara and Paul with Logan on a double date.

At the retreat, Genevieve tells the couples to look into each others eyes, telling them the moment they knew they were in love with the other. She tells Eric to go first; Kensi says they should not be listening, but Deeks wants to hear it all because they should have been the ones at the retreat, the couples continue going one by one.

Callen watches an SUV pull into the drive way, a man, a young boy and Joelle Taylor stand in the drive way; Callen is in shock. As Joelle is on the phone, Callen approaches her in the driveway. The man comes back out to make sure Bev is okay, she says Callen is just someone she works with. As Callen leaves he tells her he will see her at work on Monday.

Nell talks to Tara about being upset earlier and shares a story about her sister loving animals too; she tries to get her to open up but Tara leaves to the bathroom instead. Eric catches Paul using a cellphone and he abruptly end their conversation to go to the bathroom too.

Kensi and Deeks are conflicted about being in the woods. She loves it, but he says they are terrifying. She then tells him she needs a fire and if he builds one she will roast some marshmallows and then maybe they can have a couple's retreat of their own.

The couples are sent out on a scavenger hunt, and Tara and Paul bolt off before everyone else, as Eric and Nell attempt to keep up. Back at Ops, Dave finds who was with Logan that night; his name is Trevor Young, who is a freelance broker and suspected hit man. Dave sends Sam and Anna Trevor's address. Kensi says Nell and Eric have an uphill trail to follow. Deeks and Kensi laugh about the movie The Predator.

Sam and Anna find the door is open at the address. Sam chases him but shoots him dead; he sends pictures to Dave but Anna finds Trevor dead in the kitchen; Sam believes the buyer is trying to eliminate the middle man. They don't find any thumb drive and Anna feels the Nelsons are at the retreat to make the exchange there.

Dave contacts Anna and Sam informing them the bracelet is used to make them look like a religious brotherhood, but they appear to be a group who is funding terrorist activities in the US; the smoking gun is recently they were denied tax exempt status on their organization. Dave also discovers Trevor met with Paul and Tara the day they left LA.

Hetty orders Nell and Eric to bring in the Nelsons right away; but they inform her that the couple is gone. She wants them found now.

Callen meets with Joelle at the boat shed, who admits that the man she was with is her husband and Callen could have really ruined it for her showing up like that. He is very angry when he finds out she had a 3 year old son at home while they were together.

He asks her to tell him where Sabatino is, she doesn't know but gives him a number to call if he needs her, and to never show up at her home again. Anna finds an address on Trevor's car's GPS and they believe that is where the organization is meeting.

Nell pulls a gun on Tara, revealing they are federal agents. Tara says they never sold anything, and a beaten and bloody Paul comes out of the shed. Tara tells them they kidnapped her sister Chelsea and are forcing them to do this.

Paul and Tara describe the man who had the thumb drive and which direction he went. Nell and Eric begin to look for help; Kensi and Deeks are on their way, hoping to cut them off.

Sam and Anna arrive at the address from the GPS and they are able to get a visual on Tara's sister tied up to a chair, while Dave gives them a way to get in. Deeks and Kensi are chasing the truck as Anna attacks one of the men inside the building. Sam beats the other guy who was standing by Chelsea.

Deeks and Kensi lose the vehicle, but Nell and Eric catch up to it after Nell empties her gun, Eric shoots the gas tank, and the vehicle flips and catches fire. Nell and Eric kiss and of course, Deeks takes pictures of it.

Awkwardly, at the boat shed Nell and Eric say the woods brought out a lot of truths. They are about to kiss when Dave walks in, he is in the same position as them; his girlfriend works with him in the NCIS: Cyber office.

Callen returns to the office, where he runs into Hetty. He understands she wanted him to see the whole picture with Joelle. She says facing one's pain head on and cauterizing the wounds is true bravery. She admits she hated Joelle as much as he did for hurting him. She says Callen should be proud of his team; he says he is.

Summary: An engineer who was developing a new guided missile destroyer is murdered. Callen and Sam go undercover to track his co-worker aboard a plane to Tokyo who intends to sell the classified intel. Meanwhile, Deeks plans a surprise get-together for Kensi and her out-of-town friends.

The episode begins tonight with Sheldon Rhodes arriving at his RV, when he opens it, the lights flicker and he finds warm beer in his fridge. He looks at the electrical outlet beside the fridge and realizes too late that it's a bomb.

Sam Hanna and G. Callen are working out at the gym while Marty Deeks and Kensi Blye struggle with each other about getting up and heading into work.

In Ops, Callen and Sam learn from Nell Jones and Eric Beale about Sheldon Rhode's explosion. He worked for West Central AeroSpace, an elite group of engineers who are working on a Naval missile destroyer (stealth ships).

Witnesses say it was a sudden and massive explosion, Kensi and Deeks were sent to the Aerospace company by Hetty Lange, to speak to his co-workers and friends. Hetty is sending Callen and Sam to the wreckage site, to see if this was accidental or intentional.

Sam finds a soft detonator saying they are only used on film and TV, while the military would use hard ones. Callen asks if he knows who would sell this type; Sam says he doesn't but he knows someone who does.

Belinda Fujita meets with Deeks and Kensi, asking him out on a date right in front of Kensi. He continues flirt with her to get more information. They learn that 5 of the engineers are ready to speak to them while the 2 lead engineers decided to stay home mourning Sheldon.

She begins to cry and runs into Deeks' arms, he holds her while Kensi goes inside to speak to the engineers. Sam and Callen return to let Hetty know Lincoln Stern is a friend of the team's. She says she is going to send Kensi and Deeks to speak to him, while she has other plans for them.

Nell reveals to them that 2 of Rhodes' lead engineers didn't come to work, and Aiden Tinker booked a last minute flight to Tokyo. Hetty believes he is selling the plans for the stealth ship to Tokyo, and she wants both of them on that plane, and they are to follow him to see who is buying those planes. Sam and Callen cannot be there diplomatically, so no gun on the plane nor in Tokyo.

Deeks and Kensi come to meet Sam's friend, Lincoln Stern. They argue about plans for the weekend, he tells her they have to stay in town because some friends are coming this weekend.

Stern arrives calling them Kensi and Shaggy; when Deeks corrects him, Stern says that is not what Sam said and no one likes to correct Sam. Stern asks what they are offering for his help; Kensi flirts a little and he says he will work for her for free, but wants to know what Shaggy has for him.

Sam gets first class, while Callen is stuck in the back of the plane. As soon as he sat down the man sitting beside him says his name is Big Ron, who begins talking and even offering chicken. At the coffee shop, Stern is able to tell where the yellow dead cord came from.

Callen notices that Tinker has already headed to the back to use the restrooms. He opens the door to find a dead flight attendant and a gun is pulled on Callen. It turns out to be Air Marshall Miguel Salazar, but they didn't know that until Eric confirms his identity; they share with him who they are looking for.

Salazar calls the captain who announces for everyone to return to their seats, Callen and Sam return to their seats to see if he reappears while Salazar guards the door. Nell and Eric talk about the situation suggesting he isn't selling the plans in Tokyo, someone may be trying to steal them from him on the flight.

Deeks and Kensi go to PWX Supplies, where the owner says they won't get much information other than the 2 suspects were men and they were smart about the camera angles, wearing hoodies. They find out someone across the street has surveillance on their motorbike.

On the flight, Callen and Sam walk down both aisles, where they meet Cheryl. She tells them the Captain Troy Jacobs wanted them to know they are 2.1 hours from Los Angeles and 2.5 hours from Honolulu, and wants to know where he is taking the plane.

After he assures them he could turn the plane around without alerting any of the passengers. Cheryl says the passengers are her responsibility and they need to let her know if they are in danger; Sam says he will let her know. She tells them they are on their own for 2 hours. They go down to the cargo hold with Salazar.

Deeks and Kensi are brought up to speed on what is happening with Callen and Sam. Deeks asks why they can't just get his name off the ticket. Eric explains that he didn't have a ticket and just then Eric figures out that his partner was sitting across from the woman scanning the tickets. They hacked the ticket scanner at the gate and used tickets for another flight to get past security.

Eric then notices the partner doesn't leave, and wants to see why he keeps hacking the scanner, they come to realize there are 4 people on the plane who shouldn't be there, that is why the flight attendant was killed because before take off he found them in the restrooms.

Eric tries to contact Sam and Callen but they are in the cargo hold. Salazar sees someone and gets shot immediately. Sam attends to Salazar while Callen attempts to hold off the gunmen. Sam and Callen manage to bring Salazar back up and Cheryl brings Callen to the second Air Marshall Vanessa Barley.

Kensi and Deeks arrive at the second suspect, Aric Webber's home. He was part of German Special Forces, but is a freelancer now. They go looking for his jeep.

The captain calls and Callen tells him there are 4 shooters in the cargo hold; Callen is told by Barley to bring Salazar up to the crew's sleeping quarters where there is a full trauma kit. Barley promises no one is going to come through the floorboards and into the cockpit.

Deeks runs into Weber, who tells him to leave because he is busy. Deeks pulls out his gun and orders him to put down the gas containers. Weber grabs his girlfriend, Tina but Kensi shoots him twice. They find evidence that he was definitely there to kill Rhodes and everyone in the stealth unit. Eric says if Weber was a hitman, they need to find out who hired him.

Eric reveals to Nell the reason the shooters haven't killed Tinker yet is because they believe there is a fail safe in the plans. Rhodes and the team did it for situations exactly like this.

Nell says they can't just walk off the plane with the plans on a laptop, but Eric says they could use the wifi to transmit the files. They agree the plane's wifi needs to be shut off, which cuts all communication with Sam and Callen. Before they can talk any further, men burst in the room. One of them is shot and the other, Sam kills.

As Sam is handcuffing the one man to a seat, and reassures Cheryl everything will be fine, another man comes out with a gun to Tinker's head. Sam puts his gun down and tells Cheryl to open up a line to the captain. He orders one of the passengers to zip tie Sam's hands when he yells for a "hard right" to the Captain.

Callen jumps down from the crew's quarters, they manage to get 3, when Big Ron reveals the man sitting beside him who is transmitting. Sam tells him to get his hands off the keyboard and knocks him out with the laptop. The passengers clap.

Deeks and Kensi return asking if Sam and Callen have landed yet. Based on their intel, they were able to arrest 5 Chinese nationals in Tokyo; they financed the takeover, but he cannot confirm if there are more coming. Hetty praises them all and tells them to go out and have a life.

On the plane, Air Marshal Miguel Salazar is lifted off the plane. They shake hands with Barley but Cheryl is upset that she doesn't know how to move on, thinking of a million things that could have gone wrong. Sam tells her she was at her best in the worst situation.

The Captain thanks them for saving his passengers and not damaging his plane too badly. Sam and Callen run into Hetty at the office, where she has drinks ready for them; instead of the beers they were planning on. She talks about the last year was horrible for their team, but today what they did on the plane and what the rest did on the ground; this is their purpose and they did it well. She says these are the good days and they will write the pages of this year's book together and she wants them to make it one hell of a story. AND TO HELL WITH LAST YEAR!

Summary: The NCIS team investigates a defense contractor, who is designing a nuclear attack weapon, after her estranged husband says he has proof she is selling Navy secrets to a foreign government. Kensi then goes undercover as a professional dancer at the Cuban club where the husband works, while Deeks works undercover as the bathroom attendant.

The episode begins with a man sitting at a bar, he is inquiring about a drink, when the bartender asks if he has a match, as he stands up to retrieve a lighter, he is shot in the back; the bartender scurries away.

Marty Deeks is going through Kensi Blye's phone, downloading an app. Deeks and Kensi are at odds over which sex speaks more in a day, they are going to settle it with a word counting app. Sam Hanna says he is betting on Kensi. Eric Beale comes down the stairs revealing they have a case on deck.

Nell Jones replays the video from the nightclub, the man shot was a tourist from Ohio, but they believe the real target was bartender, Victor Larmont. His connection to the Navy is his estranged wife works in the computer graphics department at NXRD, a defense contractor.

Victor, contacted the NCIS Crime reporting system claiming he has evidence that his wife is selling Navy secrets to a foreign government. G. Callen tells Kensi and Deeks to start at Rebecca Larmont's office. Deeks keeps talking and Kensi laughs, saying he is losing.

Callen and Hanna arrive at the nightclub, where they learn the shooter was conveniently off camera and disappeared into the crowd. The nightclub hasn't been shut down for business because they never have trouble before, the detective tells them if they need him, let him know.

Victor shows them a text he got from Rebecca that he believes shows she is selling military secrets, Callen and Hanna try not to laugh when they see it only says, "Meet me in the North Stairwell," he then says she just got a Porsche, something she could never afford unless she was selling those secrets.

Kensi and Deeks are told to put their phones in lockers at Rebecca's work, but they may keep their weapons. Deeks desperately keeps his talking to the minimum, so Kensi is stuck asking all the questions. They learn Rebecca hasn't done anything suspicious from a co-worker. Rebecca is shocked to see them and even more appalled that Victor would contact them about her mishandling classified information.

She says this is his revenge on her because he couldn't get spousal support from her. Suddenly the alarm sounds to close all classified files, Rebecca says someone caused a security breach. It turns out to be Victor, pretending to be a pizza delivery man. He serves Rebecca with court papers.

Back at NCIS quarters, Kensi says if this word count is going to be accurate, Deeks needs to talk like her usually does. He grunts, saying he is going to win this. Deeks and Kensi enter the interrogation room where Victor is.

Deeks tells him he cannot serve his own papers, it is not legally binding. He says Rebecca is lying about her income, and heartless. He reveals that Rebecca is all about money, and if dating investment bankers isn't working out, he feels she would sell government secrets to plump up her bank account.

Just as Callen and Hanna are leaving to take a closer look at Rebecca, Nell and Eric have breaking news for them. Eric informs them that Victor's nightclub is a hang out for Cuban expatriots living in LA. Eric also shares that Rebecca's new Porsche is financed by Alonzo.

Alonzo says Rebecca is his girlfriend, in fact, he plans on proposing to her soon. They have been together for over a year and he is only waiting for the divorce to be final to pop the question. Alonzo admits he hasn't been to Cuba in a long time because he fled the country when he got tired of Fidel's promises. When asked, he says he has never been to Victor's nightclub; he has never met Victor but hears he is desperate for money.

Deeks and Kensi return to the nightclub, they lie to Victor, saying Kensi is going to audition for a dancer. Perez Bianco tries to brush her off, but changes his mind giving her one minute to prove she can dance. She shows him she can really move and he hires her; Deeks gets the job as Men's bathroom attendant.

Kensi goes to the back of the club to find an outfit, but breaks into a room that says "private", another woman catches her going into the room, but quietly walks by. Kensi finds some old CB radios running in the room, she quickly takes photos of them.

Hetty Lange, Sam Hanna and Callen are talking about the ham radio, she tells them to never underestimate the power of short-wave radio. She says anyone can hear it, but not everyone understands it. She plays them a recording from the 70s of coded messages being transmitted from Havana to spies in Miami.

Hetty explains that the KGB trained thousands of Cuban spies before the fall of the USSR; they are free agents and able to gather intelligence and sell it to the world's highest bidder. Hanna says nuclear submarine plans would be a big ticket item, and they need to monitor everything transmitting from the club.

Callen and Hanna go to visit Rebecca, who is photographing birds. They question her about Alonzo, she denies telling him anything and said she would leave him if he asked her about her work stuff. She says maybe Victor could have access to the classified files since he has gotten into her computer and deleted her AMC account.

Callen and Hanna agree that it could be Victor, who could make a fortune on the classified information and the blame would be on Rebecca. Callen suggests he may have staged the shooting to make him look like a victim instead of a suspect. Hanna says Kensi and Deeks can check that theory out.

At the nightclub, Kensi continues to dance with Perez but Deeks interrupts them talking about Costco and the items he purchased. Perez tells him to go and stop wasting his time. In the locker room, Deeks finds a hard drive in Victor's locker; he breaks into Perez' locker and finds nothing. There is an empty locker with a pad of paper, Deeks shades the pad with a pencil and discovers letters in code.

Alonzo runs into Callen and Hanna in underground parking. They confront him on meeting with Perez in front of the nightclub although he said he had never been there. He says he is Perez' physician and he is not obligated to tell them about it.

When they threaten to shadow him all day, he says Perez has a bad disc in his back and needed some medication, which he brought to him. Callen spills his coffee on Alonzo so Hanna can place a tracker on his car.

Eric says Hetty is excited about the "one-time pad", which is used to translate number stations. Nell tells them they can test it on the next broadcast from the club. Deeks wants Eric to check Kensi's phone to see if her word count is higher than his. Eric refuses, just as he is about to tell them about the hard drive, Victor comes to throw out the trash. Deeks notices a IED in the garbage bin, jumping on Victor to save his life.

Eric says the IED was gun powder in a water bottle, not lethal at all and no suspicious activity outside the club either. The hard drive had nothing on it, it had 3 folders, 100's of recipes, canine invoices as he is a dog walker and a journal.

Deeks releases Victor saying he might not need any more protection; Victor protests saying someone tried to kill him twice. Deeks says the bullet was above his shoulder and the bomb was made for cuts and bruises; Deeks suggests that maybe he is doing these things to himself. Victor finally admits the bad guy is Perez, he owns the club. Victor mentions money laundering and extortion.

Nell, Hetty and Eric explain the one-time pad to Callen and Hanna. They are certain this pad is today's codes. Deeks and Victor are getting ready for the club, Victor offers Deeks a salsa lesson since he cannot dance. Deeks says it feels awkwardly intimate.

Perez brings flowers to Kensi, and slowly draws his fingers across her body; he is getting very close to her, grabbing her asking if she feels the chemistry. Kensi manages to hold him off until after their dancing.

Meanwhile, Callen and Hanna find a time and place they feel could be an exchange site. They watch the cameras where Rebecca works and discover that she has hidden the submarine plans in her artwork. When they arrive at her work, she mysteriously isn't there, they find all her drawings are gone from the wall. Callen says in an hour, they could be in enemy hands.

Hanna and Callen are waiting at the site when a car arrives, two Asian males exit the car. Alonzo arrives with Rebecca's art portfolio; the 2 men bring forth a suitcase. Kensi is busy dancing at the club, keeping Perez busy but in the alley, gunfire erupts when Callen yells out, "Federal Agents!"

Alonzo yells and Perez has an ear piece, he hears that everything has gone wrong and he says, "what a waste." Callen and Hanna find more than 4 million dollars and a tied up Rebecca in the trunk. Alonzo pulls a knife on Kensi who takes him out before Deeks can save her. He says he may as well return to his tip jar but asks her to hold onto the red dress.

At the end of the night, Callen wants to know who spoke the most words. Deeks has 14, 962 and Kensi opens hers and its letters instead of numbers. It is Deeks asking her to dance with him. He turns on the music and lights. Deeks says Eric and Nell helped him screw up her app, even though she won. He shares that Victor taught him some moves. He gets a charlie horse and drops Kensi on the floor.

Summary: Hetty's former Vietnam war colleagues partner with NCIS after a former Navy commander kidnaps a corrupt Veterans Affairs administrator who has been siphoning funds.

A homeless vet walks in traffic with a sign begging. He approaches a Mercedes, breaks the window with a gun and gets in the driver's side. He hits the driver in the face and tells him to put on his seat belt. He then speeds away. Beale is in the shooting range and Sam enters. Beale says he hasn't been able to shot his gun since he killed that man. Sam offers encouragement. The team gets word that the VA Administrator, Robert Bryant, was kidnapped in his own car that morning. The VA has asked the team for their help.

Sam and Callen head to Robert's house to look for clues but an FBI agent refuses to let them in. Kensi and Marty head to Robert's office at the VA just as the man who kidnapped Robert yells at a clerk that all of the veterans who are waiting need to be seen by a doctor. He dumps a bag of cash on the counter and leave. Marty sends a photo of the man with the cash back to the lab to see if they can get an ID on him. Kensi questions Robert's assistant and she says Robert has been faking the books to make it look like they are meeting their goals so Robert can earn bonuses.

Eric researches the photo and is able to find out it is a veteran, Langston, who matches the description of the man who kidnapped Robert. The team gets the GPS coordinates of Robert's car and head to the veteran's cemetery where it is parked. The car is empty but they find Robert tied to a pole. Sam and Callen find Langston's house ransacked but he is not there. The do come across Sterling and Rodrick. Robert is not seriously hurt but acts like a really jerk. The FBI arrests him due to finding several patient records in his home.

Hetty, Sterling and Rodrick know Langston from her time in Vietnam. They were all on the same team. They got worried about Langston about a week ago when they found out he was diagnosed with Agent Orange. Langston is spotted at pawn shop and the team heads out. When they get there he is gone but he had shot up the store.

The clerk says he has never seen the guy before but a street camera has seen Langston enter the store at least two other times. The clerk, Yaniv, calls his lawyer and they refuse to talk to the team. They get a warrant to check the stores cameras and bank records. Marty and Kensi see a bridal veil in the pawn shop but she gets tearful because she had hoped Granger would have been able to walk her down the aisle. The team watches the pawn shop video and the clerk was working the day Langston came in the day before the shooting. He lied about knowing him.

Marty and Kensi arrive at Yaniv's house with the search warrant. As they wait to talk with him his assistant starts shooting at them. Sam and Callen arrive as back up just as Sterling and Rodrick pull up. They begin shooting and Sam kills the assistant. Yaniv runs out a secret exit and the team finds Langston who is hurt but can walk. Langston tells the team Yaniv got his key. Langston leads them to an old semi that used to contain $40 million in gold bars but they are now gone. Yaniv took it all. The gold is left over from their days in Vietnam. Hetty says let's go get our gold...

Summary: A gold heist investigation partners the NCIS team with Hetty's former colleagues from the Vietnam War.

Everyone was concerned about the missing forty million. But Deeks had had something else on his mind. He had apparently confessed in a moment of weakness that he had killed his former partner because they were dirty. So he now feared that secret coming out because the person he had told this secret to had somehow survived a risky surgery that no one thought she would. And so Deeks has thing over his head that he feared would destroy the life he had built recently however Kensi was doing her best to calm him down. Kensi had heard that the detective in the hospital had asked to see Deeks and she chose to be optimistic about it.

Kensi had tried to tell Deeks that maybe everything would turn out for the best. However. She also mentioned that if the worst were to happen that she wouldn't have a problem with going on the run with him. Kensi said that they could skip town and just live on the road yet that idea had been somewhat appealing to Deeks because he was genuinely scared about the murder charge hanging over his head. So Deeks was distracted. He had wanted to know if his secret would get out and if he would be facing jail time. And so he didn't focus on the current investigation into the missing forty million that just happened to be in gold bars,

Yet, Deeks's team had later gotten some information about that. They had found out that the man behind the heist to begin with had had several members involved with a gang shoot-out under one of LA's underpass. So they wanted to find out what their guy was doing because he could be on the verge of starting a gang war or even a real war if he wanted to with all that money, but the gang had also had another concern. They knew that if they wanted to investigate what Yaniv was up to that they had to keep an eye on Hetty's old Vietnam friends because the older agents had a tendency to get in the way.

The older guys seemed to believe that they always knew what to do and that they were also always right. Though things were different since their days in the field and so NCIS hadn't wanted them getting in the way of the investigation. So Sam, Kensi, and Callen each took one of the older guys with them in order to keep watch and funnily enough that decision later drove them crazy. Langston liked to spit out the shells of the nuts he likes to eat and he did that in the car that he shared with Callen, but Callen's friends were surprisingly in a worst-off position. Kensi was dragged across town by Chegwidden who refused to tell her what he was doing and Sam had Bridges.

Bridges often complained that he was hungry while they were on stakeout and that he could develop cancer if he didn't get any food. But Bridges didn't have any money and was a difficult eater on top of that. So he bugged Sam into handing him money however, Bridges had apparently forgotten all about his complaints as well as being hungry when their stakeout led them to finding someone in the gang that they were looking for. And so both Bridges and Langston sort of got in the way of apprehending a suspect and they didn't appear to care that things were done a little differently now.

Like they didn't hit their suspects with their cars and they didn't threaten said suspect with hammers because the guys technically had rights that stopped from legally doing that. However, the older guys refused to take a hit. They believed their way was the right way and they didn't think differently even as current technology helped them out. Eric and Nell had looked into the suspect's phone and he had found frequent contacts that the guy had been talking to lately. So he hacked the suspect's friends' phones and had gotten an image of Asher. Asher was being held in a unmarked building yet Eric and Nell also knew how to trace those phones.

They had gotten a location for the guys and both Sam and Callen had gone out there with the men they were babysitting. Yet, unfortunately, they had been too late to save Asher. Asher had been dead for a while and everyone directly involved in what happened to him had also been "taken care of" before Sam and Callen had even arrived on the scene. So the guys knew that Asher gave up whatever information he had before his death though that made them concerned about Yaniv because if Yaniv had what he wanted then he wouldn't be sticking around LA for long. And so they tried to track Yaniv's movements.

Though Yaniv had had a secret. He had been moving the gold through a hedge fund that was run by Mallory Fletcher. Now Fletcher had previously argued that she didn't know anything about the guys that were doing business with her, but her name kept popping up in the investigation and so it wasn't surprising when her name cropped up again when Eric and Nell finally pinned down Yaniv's location. So the team had gone out there and they had told the older agents to stay behind. But they had ran into some gunfire and having the old guys unexpectedly arrive on the scene had helped them to arrest everyone.

That include Yaniv and his Fletcher who could have helped move his money undetected. But Langston, Bridges, and Chegwidden did get in trouble for saving the day because they happened to interfere with an ongoing investigation. So the old guys got a reprimand however they didn't care because it had felt good to be back in the field and the whole experience had helped them remember Granger. Granger had been the wild one who had made them laugh and they couldn't help but miss him when everything was said and done. And so they honored him later with just Hetty for company.

And that had been good for them. However, Deeks had talked to the detective and she had remembered his confession about killing Boyle. So Deeks was more or less forced into helping her as she looked into other dirty cops on the job.

Summary: Sam's wife is kidnapped and her abductors demand that Sam's arch nemesis, Tahir Khaled, be released from prison in exchange for her.

A man is walking his dog and comes across a dead man hanging from a pole. He calls the police. Sam and his family eat breakfast as he gets a call from Henry that a man in custody wants to give information but will only speak to Michelle. They drop off their daughter and head to meet with him. They review Sidorov's case before they go to meet with him. He tells her about a pending purchase of uranium.

Cullen picks up Sam and they go to check out the scene where the man was found hanging. They find out the victim is Tom Olsen. Sam is upset about the death. He and Tom were Navy Seals together. As Sam talks to the FBI the real Tom Olsen comes up. It turns out someone stole Tom's ID several weeks ago. It was a set up to find Michelle. Just as Sam calls to warn Michelle, three men break into the house and kidnap Michelle.

Sam and the police arrive at the house but Michelle is already gone. Marty and Kensi join the search for Michelle. Sam and Cullen return to Sidorov to see who he is working with. He refuses to cooperate. Marty and Kensi see that a building across the street has a camera so they download the images. The team gets a call with video of Michelle. The kidnappers say that Khaled must be released or Michelle will die. They are keeping her in an air tight room with only 8 hours of oxygen.

Hetty realizes that Khaled is in the same prison as Sidorov. Michelle thinks they drove 90 minutes to get to the kidding place. The team estimates that she is within a 20,000 mile radius and is being held in a freezer or refrigerator. Sam and Cullen go to the prison to talk to Khaled. He mocks Sam and offers no help. Sam gets a call from Sabantino and goes to meet him. Sabantino has Sidorov and shoots him in the leg and demands that he tell Sam everything.

He tells Sam he doesn't know who paid him but a large sum of money was transferred into his bank account in Russia. Cullen tries to track the money to find the kidnappers. The money originated in North Sudan. Michelle is down to 4 hours of oxygen. Sam goes to talk to Hetty. Hetty is working on getting Khaled released. They both realize that is their only hope. There is just not enough time to find her. Michelle and Sam talking about their life together and cry.

Hetty is able to get Khaled released but the team must watch him at all times without being detected. Michelle struggles to breathe. Khaled is released and picked up by a white car. Callem follows Khaled by helicopter as he drives into a parking structure. Soon five of the exact white cars leave the structure and Callem loose Khaled. Hetty calls off the tracking of Khaled.

Sam realizes that Michelle is being held within one mile of their house. All available agents join the search. Marty and Kensi return to the warehouse where they got the camera footage to search for Michelle. Three men open fire on them. They know she is being held there and just have to find her. They shoot the men and find Michelle but they are too late. She is dead.

Summary: Sam goes rogue from the NCIS team in an attempt to stop Tahir Khaled from targeting his family again.

Sam had done everything that they asked. He had told his bosses that his wife had been kidnapped and that the kidnapers were only willing to let his wife go in exchange for Tahir Khaled's release. However, that wasn't enough for the terrorists. They still killed Sam's wife even as they got Tahir back.

So Michelle had been murdered out of spite and the only thing that Sam could think about afterwards was revenge. He had wanted to kill Tahir as well as everyone that had a part in his wife's murder and he was willing to go off the books to get the job done yet Callen wasn't going to let his partner enter into something by himself.

Callen had followed Sam from the crime scene and he had even gone with Sam to a mosque. Yet, Callen hadn't been able to enter because he wasn't of the faith so he let Sam go in believing Sam would eventually come back out, but Sam had pulled one over him. Sam had used the mosque as a way to escape and had asked the imam to hand over his badge to Callen.

Which told his partner one thing. It said that Sam didn't want to follow any rules of engagement as he hunted down Tahir. So Callen had tried to find Sam before he did something stupid except Eric couldn't trace their guy and neither of them knew where he would be heading.

But what they did know was that he had every reason to be upset. His wife had been murdered and later her body had been stolen off the transportation truck. So Tahir was practically daring Sam to come after him and Sam was going to do so though he was smart enough to bring along back up. Sam had gone to an old friend who he knew didn't have a problem with working outside of the law and therefore he wasn't acting as the lone wolf as Callen feared.

He just didn't want to bring his partner much less his unit down with him and Callen did realize that in time. He simply was upset that Sam didn't take him only he was relieved when Sam hadn't been with them to see the pictures.

Tahir had left behind some pictures of Michelle being tortured because he had wanted to hurt Sam even more however Sam hadn't been with his team when they followed the bread crumbs that Tahir had given them. Though Callen did get shot in bullet proof vest for good measure. So the team quickly came to the conclusion that Tahir wasn't hiding or even trying to flee the country.

He wanted a fight just as much as Sam did and he was doing everything he could to prod the other man. Tahir had actually called a cell phone he left at the crime scene hoping he could speak to Sam and instead he got Deeks. And his threats didn't work with Deeks.

Deeks had tried to prod Tahir and do everything possible to keep Tahir on the line in order for Eric to trace the call. However, Tahir eventually gave up playing around with Deeks and said Sam better speak with him or he would send Michelle's body back piece by piece. So it became imperative to find Sam before he made a bad situation even worse yet, despite their resources, they couldn't find him and so they came up with the idea to fake his voice.

They used his voicemail messages to create responses to Tahir and they got Tahir to set up location where he could supposedly meet with Sam. So they tracked down Sam by figuring out who he would turn to and who could help.

They knew that Sam had gone to some known criminal affiliates and that he had been with Sabatino. Yet, Sam had ditched Sabatino because he didn't want him to get hurt either. So the team came across Sam and he had was going to shoot his way into a meeting with Tahir, but they warned him that they had an easier way and that they could help him.

So it took Sam a while before he agreed to take their able only he got there and he was willing to go along with their plan. They had told him that Tahir wanted to meet him alone and that they could be placed all around in places where they could keep a watch on him as he got Tahir.

But the plan fell apart because none of them suspected that Tahir would take a bus load of tourist as hostages. He had apparently taken over one of those tour buses that everyone was just so excited to get on though he and his men had been waiting for them with guns. So Sam was forced to get on the bus and he had tried to reason with Tahir to let the others go except Tahir didn't care about them.

He was the sort of the man that he would kill his own sister because he knew it would hurt Sam more than him. And so it turned out to be a good thing that Sam's team was there to back him up because they were able to stop the car.

They caused a diversion in the road which forced the driver to leave the vehicle and that gave them the opportunity to take her down. Though Callen was fast enough to get to the other two guards without anyone getting hurt. So then it became just Sam and Tahir.

Both men knew how to handle themselves and it could have been a fair fight only Tahir had a suicide vest and Sam wasn't willing to let Tahir have the last word. And therefore Callen shot off the handcuffs that were tying Sam to Tahir and the agents jumped off that bus with moments to spare.

And thankfully they were eventually able to find Michelle's body still in tact yet the whole ordeal made Kensi realize that she wanted to be with Deeks forever and so she proposed to him because it was 2017 after all.

Summary: After Hetty turns in retirement papers and then disappears, Executive Assistant Director Shay Mosley arrives in Los Angeles to oversee the team and immediately makes staffing changes. Also, still mourning the death of his wife and living in a trailer on the beach, Sam is adamant that Callen find a new partner.

Hetty put in her papers! However, the first time her team had even heard about it had been from her replacement. Executive Director Shay Mosley had been the one to tell everyone that Hetty retired and she mentioned that she would be assuming control until someone else was appointed. So the team had a few questions about that because they all thought Hetty would at least warn them before she did something like put in her papers or take a trip overseas, but Eric and Nell checked out Mosley's story and it seemed legit.

They had found out Hetty really did hand in her papers and that their boss has slowly been selling off her many properties over the last two months.

But both Callen and Kensi still thought the whole thing could be part of a ploy. They said Hetty could be aiming for a higher job and using her retirement as leverage though the techies couldn't detect a sign of Hetty's boat and were merely checking out whether she sold or not because the others refused to accept what was in front of them. So what truly pushing Callen and Kensi from not wanting to believe Hetty's retirement had been the fact Mosley rubbed the wrong way. Their new boss had dismissed what Deeks brought to the team and had asked him to return to the LAPD where she thought he could be of some use.

So Kensi for one had hated that! Deeks was important to her and she usually worked with him more than she works with anyone else. Though Callen had needed a partner because not only was the mission, but his other partner hadn't returned to work. Sam had sort of checked out after he buried his wife and has been shunning anything as well as anyone that has tried to drag him out of his grief. He gave up on the house and started to live on the beach in a trailer therefore odds were that he was giving on his job too. He hadn't come back in and he probably received the alert like all the others did when their new boss informed them LA was facing an imminent threat.

Mosley said that they had gotten pretty good intel that North Korea was going to be directing a missile at California. Yet, she had gotten this intel because of some obscure piece of information that Defense Intelligence Agent Thomas Park had sent them right before his death. The poor man had been pushed from the rooftop of a building in the city and head office assumed he would have been able to tell them more if a foreign agent hadn't gotten to them first. So Kensi teamed up with Callen to check out the grad student — Michael Lee — that had been the last person spotted near the crime scene and all they got for their trouble for a shoot-out.

The two had gone by the house because they couldn't get in contact with Michael through any other channel yet they had let themselves in when no one answered the door and had found several boxes for burner phones in the trash right before their suspect started shooting at them. But while they may have killed their best suspect, Callen at least had an answer for why everything had gotten topsy-turvy. He told Mosley that they had needed Deeks with them out in the field to prevent such problems because he was part of the team and things won't function like they're supposed to if Mosley didn't let him handle his team his way. So Mosley eventually agreed to that.

She allowed him to have that because she also reminded him that she wasn't running a democracy and that allowing him that would be rare for her. However, Callen had been happy to win what little concessions he could and as it turns out Sam came back in the end. He had gotten all of Callen's messages and had finally caved after hearing about the shoot-out because he still cared for his team enough not to want to see them hurt. So together they looked at the last image they had of North Korea's missiles and what they saw was the absence of some necessary technology. The image showed North Korea didn't have everything it needed to send a bomb to California.

If they tried then it would end up in the ocean like all the others. Though the team thought about it and they figured North Korea had simply been a misdirect. That another country or terrorist cell would bomb the states and force the Americans into going to war with North Korea because that would force the Americans to withdraw all their troops from the Middle East. So if that were the case then the odds that the bomb was already in the city was high, but Eric and Nell were also good at their job. The techies went to work and they eventually picked up the bomb. The bomb was in the back of an ambulance and the driver was one of the guys that had been shooting at Kensi and Callen earlier. So Deeks pretended like he was jaywalker when Same hit him with the car and that gave Sam the cover he needed to over to the ambulance. But the guy pulled his gun when he saw Callen and so the agents were forced to shoot their culprit yet they did get their hands on the bomb. The bomb was thankfully not a nuclear bomb only it was detonated and so the guys drove it away from the crowd and they were running out of time when Callen took a risk. He drove the ambulance into the ocean and got out in time with his partner before either could get hurt, but he had upset his new boss.

Mosley told him that she wanted to run the division without casualties because she checked and there was no other division that disarmed their weapon as much as Callen's though the days when they become sloppy like that again are apparently over according to her!

Summary: Sam works undercover as a financier of illegal currency when the daughter of a notorious counterfeiter arrives in Los Angeles. Meanwhile, Callen partners with Anna to track the family's latest scheme.

The US Secret Service had asked for NCIS's help after a lengthy investigation into the Marca Family was finally starting to bare results. The agent involved in the case — Agent Nicole DeChamps — has been undercover within the organization for a long time and she knew for a fact that the Marca Family was one of the world's biggest counterfeit organization. But the organization was a family and it was hard to get anyone to reveal something much less get one to turn on the other. So Nicole directed her people to whom she believed was the weakest link. She gave them Lucila Marca's information because thought Lucila would break in time.

Lucila was the cherished princess. She mostly handled the US front and didn't deal with the harder stuff. However, Lucila proved to be smarter than what Nicole assumed. Lucila knew that the agents that picked her up had wanted information on her family and so she decided to be "pleasant" to them. She asked them about their day, their names, how they were liking their jobs? So she was being very nice to them and had taken a step out of order until she started talking to Kensi and Deeks. The couple showed right away that they were couple and so Lucila did everything in her power to create a divide.

Lucila managed to separate the two in order to be alone with Kensi and then she made her move. She asked Kensi where she lived and found out that Kensi couldn't afford some of the places she were listing off. Yet, She told Kensi that she didn't have to settle. That Kensi could give up her crappy job, Deeks, and live the life she deserved with Lucila. Lucila propositioned Kensi and thought she could turn her against her partner. So it was a rude awakening for her when her charms didn't pan out. Kensi wasn't interested in Lucila and she kept on with the hard questioning because both she and Deeks knew Lucila knew more than she was letting on.

But Lucila had tried to play dumb. She pretended like she had never known about her grandfather's reputation until after he had passed and that her father was a legitimate business man.

Lucila said that they were good people and that they were used to getting harassed. So the two asked her about her flight to LA because her pilot had told them that he was expected to pick up a package in LA and bring that as well as the girl back to Peru. Peru was where the family were based from and it continues to hold fond memories for Lucila though she dropped her act for a second and told them that no organization could make a case based off a criminal's word.

That was after all what the pilot was and so Lucila knew they couldn't take her down or force to say anything. Though Kensi and Deeks continued to try as Sam went in undercover to back up Nicole. Nicole told Sam that her overreach team was compromised and that her cover was at risk of being blown. So Sam had reassured her and he had stepped in to act Nicole's financier with the Marca Family. The Marcas had wanted to expand their business interest and Nicole had said that she had a guy that could help them. Except Sam decide to create a character and run with it. He pretended to be a socially inept genius because he thought that would get the family to bend and it didn't work.

Sam couldn't force the family into making a deal with him at his own apartment and so he was ultimately forced to join Nicole on a boat. However, the boat couldn't be secured and Nicole's overreach team had told NCIS that they didn't like the situation. There had been one guy on the team that was a close friend of Callen's and so he hadn't hesitated to say that he didn't like the situation when he saw an armed team go on the boat following Sam and Nicole. So Callen and Anna tried to find out what was going on. The two had earlier looked into one of the businesses that the family ran and they had found the paper that was being used for the counterfeit, but the paper sample had been for US dollars. It had been for euros.

Euros were much harder to forge than the dollar because they had a holographic part to it. But Nell said that if they had the holographic signature and the ink that they could have been making counterfeit euros for years without anyone knowing. So that was just one thing that managed to slip by Nicole yet there was a second angle that she missed and was actually important to the case. She had thought Lucila was the weakest link and it turns out Lucila wasn't even Lucila. She was Claudia and her mother had been the maid at the Marca's compound down in Peru. And so Claudia wasn't conscripted in because she was family — she had joined them because she wanted to be powerful and they had allowed her because they knew she was smart.

Claudia hadn't called for a lawyer because she had wanted to keep Kensi and Deeks on her case and miss her check-in. She has to check-in every three hours or her boss would know something was wrong and so she had just passed that mark when she informed them that she had never missed a check-in before. Yet, Kensi and Deeks managed to call the overreach team and get them to Sam and Nicole before the two were seriously injured. They had figured something was wrong when the man they were dealing with had suddenly turned on them. So they played hide and seek on the boat until backup arrived.

Though with several members of the Marca family in custody, the others like Callen and Anna were able to find the counterfeit den and shut it down. So the Secret Service put the Marca out of business and the case was officially closed, but Eric had stayed on at the office because he had wanted to find Hetty and hadn't known to look for her out East. Hetty was seemingly working a case that no one else knew about and therefore she hadn't retired. She just went rogue!

Summary:	A Navy lieutenant, who specialized in monitoring classified intel, is murdered while on leave in Los Angeles. The investigation uncovers classified surveillance briefs she smuggled into the city that may have been sold to a foreign buyer.

Sam was selling his house. He and the kids had gone through the place and had taken everything they wanted to keep however none of them wanted to stay there nowadays and so Sam was selling it. But Sam hadn't told his partner that he was going to sell the house. Callen had found out when he drove pass there and thought he could drop in on a friend. So Callen had later asked for an explanation because Sam used to grill him about owning his own house one day and how important it was.

However, Sam hadn't liked that Callen was checking up on him and had told his friend that it was time to let the house go. So the two had benched their conversation because they received a case. NCIS had gotten pulled into investigating the death of Navy Lt. Naomi Elder. Elder had led a small elite unit that dealt with classified intelligence yet she had been in town seemingly on vacation. She had gone to stay with a couple of friends from college and had used their place as a home base. Elder took frequent trips to other areas where she did some sight-seeing and had recently been happy because she found a perfect pool she could use for exercise.

The friends told Callen and Sam that Elder hadn't been acting strange and that they hadn't seen anything out of the ordinary. Yet, Elder had gone to that pool to swim and someone had killed her right as she met someone. Elder had been speaking to Ryan who had wanted to get her phone number, but two bullets suddenly put their conversation to an end. Ryan said that he felt the bullets go past him on his right and that afterwards he saw something glow red not that far from where they were standing. So Kensi used his description to find out where the sniper had made his shot and it turns out it was from the building next to the pool.

The building had somewhat been abandoned and so it was easy for anyone to get inside. But Kensi had followed the point of entry and she realized that it hadn't been a clean shot. There were several things standing in the way of a perfect shot and that meant whoever killed Elder must have been an expert. So they checked the scene and they found fresh tracks from a motorcycle though they weren't the only ones to find something. Both Sam and Callen had looked through Elder's stuff and they found a slightly damaged Micro SD card. And that didn't make sense because Elder didn't know why anyone would attack Elder much less why she would have an SD card.

Commander James Miyazaki said that everyone liked Elder and that there's never been problem with her. Though Elder's things revealed she had had highly classified information on surveillance techniques and so the team had to find out what Elder was investigating. She had looked into the SD card for a reason and she had apparently gotten into contact with someone local while she was supposedly on vacation. So Sam and Callen went to go check out Geno Preston while Elder's friend suddenly had something to say. Kenneth and Lynn Styger had known Elder since they were kids and the two women had been like sisters however Kenneth said his wife was acting oddly.

Kenneth said his wife wasn't talking to him about Elder and not only was she cutting herself off from feeling anything about Elder's death, but she was also acting like she was waiting for something. However, Kenneth couldn't put a name to it and so Callen had forgotten all about it when he and Sam went over to Preston's. Preston's place had looked ransacked and both men knew Preston was dead. So that too begged the question of why. Was Preston working with Elder on the card and what would they have done with it? The card held valuable information and therefore they could have been selling it off except that didn't explain why they died.

Kensi and Deeks had followed their motorcycle information to a warehouse and there they had come under fire. Their suspect had had friends and Kensi and Deeks had been forced into shooting them just to survive the whole ordeal. But with several suspects dead, they were still left without answers. The men came to the country with fake passports and they had originally traveled from China to the Philippines and then to the states. So they could have been the party intending on buying the SD card though yet the two deaths still needed an answer and Nell and Eric tracked down the one motorcyclist that got away.

The one guy that got away had gone over to the Stygers and he appeared intent on keeping them as hostages. Yet, NCIS showed up and freed the couple. So the Stygers' part in what happened was never truly explained and they had killed the one suspect they had left though no one back down from EAD Mosley when their new boss proved to be angry with them. Mosley had taken them all to task for their lack of intel and she said that they had to get better. And so the team were saved from an overlong lecture because had had to go Washington for a meeting and was even taking Special Agent Harley Hidoko with her.

The two had made the others nervous and so their trip to Washington was considered almost as if it was break. Though NCIS later learned that money and a backup copy of the intel was found in Elder's possessions. So they all took that as proof that she was trying to double-cross China's Intelligence and had gotten killed for it alone with her partner, but they had told Mosley that they would keep looking into this because none of them believed it was quite over.

Summary: Weapons with a $1 million street value are stolen and the team tracks the evidence to a wealthy charity event. Mosley gets added to the guest list, with Callen and Sam as her security detail.

A cargo bound for Pendleton was waylaid and killed, but unfortunately it also involved a friend of Sam's.

Sam had met Byron Brown when he was doing some work for the Kulinda Tactical Agency and he still gives to Byron's charitable organization. But Byron wasn't one of the men killed for the shipment. He was actually involved in its theft. The man that had stolen a cargo — Tony Young — was a petty crook and this job couldn't have been his idea, however, Tony had turned to Byron after his partner had killed two people and had gotten killed himself. So it had looked like Byron was part of the job to NCIS and some of them thought Byron might even be the mastermind behind it all.

But Sam didn't want to jump to conclusions. He thought that there had to be a plausible explanation for what happened and that Byron could have been there because of Kulinda. So Nell had checked in with Kalinda and the fact that Byron had resigned a week ago had managed to make Callen suspicious. Callen had said that maybe the heist was Byron's exit plan. The cargo that had gotten stolen had been an arsenal of weapons and the price of them was well worth over a million dollars yet Sam had still wanted to believe by that point.

Sam had gotten to know Byron Brown quite well and he didn't want to think he had been so wrong about the other man. But the guys had sent Kensi and Deeks to deal with Young while they followed Byron. Byron had been out and about though Sam didn't remember Byron being the sort of man to attend a charity shooting event and so the guys had asked Eric to look into it. Eric had found out the event was being held by Livingston-Bradford who were defense contractors and the guys suspected that Byron was going to their event in order to make a deal.

There was going to be a lot of specialized weapons at the event and the people that were attending were doing so because they were interested in that sort of field. But that included the men behind Livingston-Bradford. Charles Livingston and William Bradford sold weapons overseas about as much as they gave out to charity. So it wasn't surprising that there had been a bit of a scandal involving one of their dealings and that they were now throwing a huge charity event to help recover their image, but what was surprising had been the guys' way into the event.

They apparently didn't need to sneak in because their boss had gotten an invite. Mosley was going to the event as an Executive Assistant Director and she had told the event's security team that she was going to bringing her own men. But the event was going to be dangerous. There was going to be booze and weapons there. So it didn't matter that the defense contractor was giving away twenty million dollars to aid the Western Sahara Conflict because the men remained on alert. They had acted as Mosley's backup and they checked out the scene.

Sam had even found Byron. Byron had been pleasant and had said all the right things however Sam could sense the other man was anxious and so he knew Byron was up to something. But Byron wasn't selling the guns. The other team — Kensi and Deeks — had found Tony. He was about to sell off the weapons except no one from the party had shown up for them. Instead, it had been another low-level crook that had wanted to buy the arsenal and he had nothing to do with either Byron or Livingston-Bradford.

So the one thing Kensi and Deeks had wanted to know was where was the vehicle. There came across the weapons and sale in progress yet the weapons vehicle was gone and Tony hadn't wanted to tell them what happened to it. But with some pressure, Tony eventually confessed to the truth. He admitted that Byron had paid him for the job and that all he had wanted was the vehicle. Tony said that Byron had even let him keep the money as well as the weapons. So that hadn't made sense to anyone. Why go to such lengths for just a vehicle unless the vehicle was tied to something bigger?

The guys had thought about it and they thought it might have something to do with an assassination. But they hadn't known they were right until they found the truck. The truck like that was able to slip right into a shooting party without anyone noticing and inside there had been a case for a sniper rifle. So Sam knew right away that Byron was the shooter and he suspected why Byron had taken the job. There had been no word from Byron's family and so the guys sent Kensi and Deeks there to investigate the scene.

The couple had gone to Byron's home armed and with their vests on. But Sam's suspicions hadn't been off the mark. There had been someone holding Byron's family hostage. So the two broke in and they managed to save the family, but the rest was up to Sam and Callen. The guys had thought about who would be the target and they thought it was Bradford. Bradford had wanted to take the company out of the arms business and it turned out to be a good thing because someone had been using their charitable donations to give even more weapons to the warlords over there. And so the figured out who wanted Bradford dead.

They knew that Livingston's had the most to lose and so they had Eric look into them while they talked down Byron before he could go ahead with the job.

But while NCIS had thought it was Charles Livingston that wanted Bradford dead, it turns out it was Charles's wife Sasha. Sasha had wanted to lose the millions if not billions that came from selling the weapon and so she conspired to kill her husband's best friend, however, Sam ruined her plan when he stopped Byron and Charles didn't stand by his wife after everything came out. So Sasha was going to be sent away for what she did and she still lost out on the life she was trying so hard to preserve.

Production Code: 904
Summary: Sam goes undercover as a day trader after a prominent investment banker with ties to a Russian oligarch is murdered. Meanwhile, one of Callen's aliases is the victim of credit card theft, and Mosley is concerned it signals something bigger.

Nelson was part of the Naval Reserve and his calls had been monitored for several years because he was a known contact of Abram Sokolov who was a known gun as well as a drug runner. But the authorities hadn't been able to find Sokolov on their own and so they had been sitting on Nelson until finally, they got what they wanted. Sokolov had called Nelson and the two had used code words like Mountebank and they had argued over it what Sokolov supposedly wanting to start over there and Nelson telling him he shouldn't.

But Sokolov had eventually hung up on his good friend because he said he'll do what he wants and so it didn't seem like a coincidence that Nelson was murdered moments after telling Sokolov no. Not many people would tell someone that dangerous "no" and therefore NCIS had a good reason to believe Sokolov had killed off Nelson before the other man could interrupt his plans. So they had tried to figure out what Mountebank really stood for and was going to infiltrate Nelson's office at the bank when Mosley pulled rank.

Mosley said Callen couldn't go in undercover on this one. She had recently found out that one of Callen's aliases had gotten their identity stolen and she wasn't the only one that thought it may have something to do with the case. Both Mosley and Sam knew that the alias, Dexter Hughes, moved in the same circles as Nelson and so suspected the identity had been stolen to keep Callen away from this case. But Callen hadn't liked being benched or that Mosley found out about his stolen identity. So he decided to look into himself.

Callen had gotten some help from Nell and she told him that someone had used Dexter Hughes to rent an apartment in Santa Monica. But while Callen did that, Sam had gotten a job at the same bank where Nelson formerly worked and he had managed to impress everyone with his tech-savvy friends backing him up. So Sam waited everyone out and had then snuck into Nelson's computer to find out what he was working on and what it had to do with some information they found because the information had been terrifying.

The team found out the bank was moving a lot of stock and it seemed like it was preparing for the market to crash. But it takes a lot for that to happen and so that made the team believe in the worse. They assumed the bank was preparing for a terrorist attack that could sink the US Dollar and so they had to find out where it was in order to stop before it was too late. So Sam made sure he got close to the boss and that proved to be a profitable relationship. He was later told that he would be accompanying her to Nicaragua and that he was supposed to act as her second on a deal.

But Deeks and Kensi had also gotten some info. They had gone to Arkady's place to find out where they could run into acquaintances of Sokolov and had gotten dragged to an underground gambling ring. The place had apparently known Arkady well and so he used that to get his friends inside. Which is how they met Sokolov's sister! She told them how she never liked her brother, but she had only agreed to talk to them once Deeks beat her several times at poker and was holding onto her jewelry for leverage. So the sister eventually told about Nelson.

Nelson had agreed to work for Sokolov because Sokolov had gotten dirt on him. But the sister also knew that Sokolov hadn't cut ties with the bank because he also had dirt on Nelson's boss Leigha Winters and so the guys later brought Leigha to the boat shed. They had had dirt on her and could prove she willingly took part in money laundering for Sokolov. So they left the questioning up to Callen. Callen had gotten back on the case after he found out a kid had stolen his identity and that the kid had nothing to do with Sokolov.

So Callen grilled Leigha until she broke. She admitted that she was working for Sokolov and that she hadn't known who he was until a week ago. But Leigha had only agreed to do it because Sokolov had something on her and so she was willing to help them. She told them that Sokolov had gotten the bank to move so money because he was going to send it to the Ukraine yet arming the Ukraine with American money for a war they couldn't win was only going to bring further conflict between the US and Russia. And so Sokolov hadn't been planning a terrorist attack, he was planning a war.

Sokolov probably hoped to use the conflict to profit and he didn't care about everyone such a war would affect. But the team did. They found Sokolov was in the city and had Leigha continue on to the meeting though they had planned something beforehand. They had gotten Leigha to go in wanting to be friends with Sokolov and had shot at them to get them to flee without the money as well as build up Sokolov's trust in Leigha. So Sokolov had thought he escaped imprisonment thanks to his new friend and he hadn't realized that he had gotten bugged.

NCIS had wanted to track Sokolov to see where he was heading and who he was dealing with. But they had made sure to stop him from fleeing with the money because that kept him from interfering in the Ukraine. So they won at what they were supposed to do and Callen had managed to make a friend out of it. He had ended up bonding with the kid that stole his identity because the kid had reminded himself at that age and how he needed someone to take a chance on him.

Summary: The LAPD calls on Deeks after his former partner goes rogue and they believe only he can bring him in.

LAPD Detective Ellen Whiting needed Deeks's help. The detective had been working with IA to investigate whether some on the force were working on the side as private contractors when their investigation led them to Lieutenant Roger Bates. But Bates was more than just a person of interest. He was being looked at as the man running the illegal racket and there was even footage of him shooting another cop. So Whiting wanted Deeks's help because she knew Bates would call him and she wanted Deeks to turn the other man in however Deeks didn't want the job.

Deeks firmly believed Bates was one of the good ones. He worked with him and knew him better than most. However, Whiting didn't care about what Deeks believed. She had actual footage on her side and therefore she hadn't given Deeks much choice in helping her. Whiting threatened to tell everyone about what happened to Deeks's former partner unless Deeks did what she asked. So Deeks had said that he would do it and later he had met with Bates. Bates had been on the run and had needed some place to hide though he hadn't been sure about who's side Deeks was on.

A patrol car had eventually pulled up behind them and so Bates thought Deeks had turned him in. Though he pulled a gun on Deeks to get him to keep driving and so all that did was warn the police that the two were together. So they lost the cop car and they also had to ditch Deek's car to lay low, but their actions did get around to NCIS. NCIS had seen the footage of Deeks's car hitting a patrol vehicle and they had even found it was because of Bates. So they had wanted to know how Whiting was involved because Deeks had told Kensi he was going to meet the detective.

But the detective had also been concerned. Whiting said she didn't like Deeks yet that doesn't mean she wants something to him and she thought something might because of the investigation.

She told NCIS about the racket inside LAPD and how dirty cops were taking outside job to make things disappear yet she said she put Deeks on it because she had a prior arrangement with him and so the guys told her that she now had an arrangement with them as well. So Sam and Callen went to the boathouse.

The boathouse was off the grid and not many knew about it. Therefore, it was the perfect place for Deeks to take Bates and it turns out they had also brought along a third person. The other guy was Simon and he was the supposed protected witness that Bates kidnapped though hadn't been a witness. He too worked for the big boss and they were moving around a lot of money for the LAPD that had at least affirmed Bates's innocence to Deeks because Deeks said no one with cash would wear Bates's suit. Yet, that amount of cash also meant it was part of something bigger than dirty cops.

Deeks and Bates had needed Sam and Callen to work one end of the investigation as they worked the other. The detectives wanted to look into who else could be dirty. However, Sam and Callen had wanted to follow the money because they were concerned a foreign power might have compromised the LAPD to deliberately security. So both of their investigation eventually met up when the money guy went straight to a safehouse for dirty cops because he thought they were going to help him make the prearranged drop.

The money guy was supposed to facilitate in the sale of a biological weapon. A weapon that Simon had created and that had been taken off of him. But Ryan Wallace was willing to hand over this weapon because it was very much a weapon to someone named Stephen Lee and the drop was later that day at a college campus. So NCIS got Wallace to play along and continue with the drop-off exchange for a lighter sentence though no surprise he tried to make a run off for it after dropping off the weapon to someone that wasn't Stephen Lee.

Lee had gotten another guy to take the suitcase and then the container had been handed to a blonde. Though by time they stopped running rings around each other, the guys found Lee and snatched back the virus before it could be used. So NCIS and LAPD stopped a potential catastrophe and eventually they even found out who had put everything in motion. The dirty cop that had used his fellow officers to assist in a treasonous act had been someone at a desk. And so Whiting moved to arrest him yet Bates who finally cleared his name had gone home.

Bates had lost two wives to the job and he said he had wanted to go home before his third wife decided to leave him as well. Yet, both Bates and Whiting thought Deeks was a good detective and so the door was always open for him to come back.

Production Code: 905
Summary: After an Air Force captain Kensi dated a decade ago breaches a missile launch facility, she is transported to the location to help thwart the use of nuclear weapons.

Something happened. However, the team had been left out of the loop on this one because EAD Mosley cleared the room before taking a secured phone call and hadn't been open with any of the details she learned. She just ordered Kensi to come to the control room and no one knew why or if it was important to what was going on though Kensi soon found herself under the microscope when an ex-boyfriend of hers decided to go rogue. The ex-boyfriend and two other Air Force personnel had assumed control over two nuclear sites and unfortunately had the means to launch nuclear codes if they so wished.

Though SecNav had specifically asked for Kensi because she knew one of the men that had butchered his way to the top and had hoped she would be part of cracking him before the situation could escalate. So Kensi's role, in this case, had nothing to do with her skill set. They wanted to grill her about Air Force Captain Kevin Miller and her role was supposed to be no bigger than that, but Kensi couldn't just be the ex-girlfriend. She had dated Miller for about three months when they were both stationed in Japan and there had been nothing about his beliefs that made her suspect he harbored treasonous thought or that he believed in the Patton Project.

The Patton Project was this government within a government thing. But the people that were supposedly in had also believed in an all-out war in which they committed genocide and wiped out all those that followed the Muslim faith because the war was a war to them. There wasn't a difference between merely going after those that were danger compared to noncombatants or even children for that matter. So the people that believed in the Patton Project were dangerous and the government couldn't rely on only Kensi to get them through this. They had also grabbed Miller's sister and they finally brought in NCIS when they couldn't trust anyone in the Air Force.

It was the Air Force personnel that had gone rogue and so the first thing that NCIS looked into was what all three had in common. Like whether or not they had hung out with the same people or liked the same clubs. Yet, they found out that all three had been taught by the same professor. Professor Ted Holmes seemed to be the only connection and so NCIS went to go talk to him however the good professor tried to make a run for it and the guys had had to run after him. So they knew that when they caught him that he was somehow involved in what was going on. And so the only problem had been the fact they hadn't known what was going on.

NCIS had been filled with there being a crisis and about the three rogue soldiers. However, they hadn't known what the soldiers were doing or why it was such a national security issue. So Callen had gotten Mosley to "hypothetically" tell him about the situation and so that's how the team found out about the nuclear launch sites. There were three people sitting on numerous missiles that could destroy the world and they were firm believers in preemptive strikes yet getting Holmes to talk about it was difficult. The guys had told him about the situation "hypothetically" and he hadn't seemed to care about what was going on.

If anything, Holmes had been smug. He had been proud of the three officers that had locked themselves in and had liked telling the team that there was nothing they could do about it. Yet, Holmes had gone a little too far when he suggested that there had to be a whole army out there helping just to get those three officers in such prime positions because that told NCIS that the military was compromised. So they talked to the other agencies and had tried to pull everyone that had ever attended one of Holmes's classes. And in the meantime, they had tried to find out if anyone in Holmes's organization was the designated handler.

There had to be a handler that oversaw the whole project and the team was trying to figure out who that was because they were the best chance of stopping a nuclear launch. But the team had taken a little too long with finding that handler and so the FBI on the ground had been forced to act. They had turned to Kensi. She had tried talking to Miller and that hadn't worked though there were still other avenues. Kensi had after all gotten Miller's sister to reach out to him and that had worked for a while before an accident had occurred. So the accident was what forced their hands. They had been trying to tunnel into the launch control center and had unfortunately made only a small hole.

The hole was essentially eighteen inches wide and Kensi was the one person that could both fit into such a tight space as well as fight her way into taking one of the three rogue officers. Meaning she was the perfect choice for the job. Though the job had carried some risks. The military couldn't risk the bombs reaching their destinations and so they had put trucks on top of the missiles openings. That way they would blow up the missiles on the ground before they could even leave their tubes. So anyone that was close to the tubes was potential victims and so Kensi could die if they launched while she was tunneling in.

However, Kensi had sort of had a friend on the inside. She and Tiffany had gotten through to Miller and he had begun to feel remorse for what he was doing. So Miller had stalled on launching the missiles and that had given Kensi enough time to get in. She got in and threw a bomb into the small space, but that naturally created casualties. Kensi had taken out Miller as well as one of his partners. Which at the same time stopped any of the missiles from launching and disappointed Miller's sister. Tiffany had hoped for there to be a way her brother could make it out of the situation alive and had begged Kensi not to hurt him.

So Kensi had felt guilty about what she had to do. Though there was no other way to stop the launch and Tiffany hadn't been the only one she disappointed. Kensi had to make things better with Deeks as well because she told him about what she was going to do and he hadn't wanted her to go through with it. Deeks had wanted Kensi to drive as far away from the launch site as she could because he had been frightened. He hadn't wanted to lose her and being that close to the possibility had made him want to talk about where do they go from here.

The team had saved the day and they had even gotten to the handler, but the mission had taken a toll on everyone. . .

Production Code:	906
Summary:	The NCIS team must locate a group of unknown assailants who illegally crossed the border and attacked California Highway Patrol officers. Also, Homeland Security sends over Specialist Sydney Jones, Nell's older and bossy sister, to assist NCIS.

There was an incident! Border Patrol had stopped a suspicious truck on the road and had found a group of illegal immigrants hiding out in the back however that hadn't been the incident. That had been the beginning. It wasn't long after the truck had gotten pulled over that several shooters arrived on the scene and killed everyone they saw whether they were illegal or not. But the team did start out with a lead on this one. They had found a young boy hiding not far away and he appeared to be the only survivor of the shooting. So Kensi had tried to get the boy to open and tell them what he saw however he wouldn't even look at her much less talk to her.

The kid pretended like Kensi wasn't in the room with him. But Kensi thought he would be more open or at least tell them his name if he had something to eat and therefore sent out Deeks to get the food, but Deeks picked up junk food. He picked hamburgers with fries and soda and Kensi got snitty with him because that didn't sound like a notorious meal. So the couple had given their guest some privacy while they discussed what was best for him and that had given EAD Mosley her chance. She went into the room with a video game and had gotten everything she could out of the kid. Which wasn't much!

He had been traveling with his mother when they got pulled over and he hadn't recognized the shooters. But he did say they weren't Mexican because they hadn't been speaking in either Spanish or English. So that got everyone thinking and they suspected that the shooters were sent after someone sneaking over and had tried to catch them before anyone else could learn that they were there though the team hadn't known how close they were with their theory until they met Nell's sister. Her sister was a fed as well and she knew who they were unknowingly tracking. She said they were part of the group Tahir-al-Sham and the group was looking for Ahmed Han Asakeem.

Asakeem had cut a deal for himself and was back in the city. But the team went looking for Asakeem and had sort of broken him out of custody in order to get him for themselves. So they took him to the boathouse and questioned him about shooters however he claimed not to know a thing about them because he wasn't involved in those type of things. Asakeem still believes he was a patriot and so he wouldn't understand why several men from Tahir-al-Sham were killed after trying to cross the border. He said that refugees were coming in more by the day and he had been trying to help his country when he had gotten taken in.

But that had upset Kensi. She had been listening on the conversation and had wanted the chance to confront Asakeem for being a traitor, but he doesn't count himself as one because he said he had remained loyal to the country of his birth. So Asakeem kept coming up with excuses for why he was a good guy and that had frustrated the person he had tried to kill. Kensi continued to believe that Asakeem was hiding something and so she tried to stay on him while Eric worked with Nell's sister behind Nell's back. She doesn't like Sydney and believed Sydney bullied her for most of her life. And she avoiding her sister gave Eric no other choice than to work with Sydney.

Sydney was just as whip-smart and together they found out who had put the hit on Asakeem. But to get Kasami, they had to lay a trap. They dangled something in front of him that they knew he wanted and so they used Asakeem as bait. Sam pretended to be a like-minded man that wanted to smuggle Asakeem back into Syria and they had even turned one of Kasami's men to get him took the deal. So Kasami agreed and they got him out in the open when they made their move. They trapped him and most of his party before they could flee and got them to own up to the others' deaths.

So it turns out that Asakeem had been telling the truth when he said he hadn't been part of what happened with the shooting and there had been a moment when he could have made a run for it, but just chose to stay and pray and so Kensi doesn't know what to think of him. But things were changing and Callen had partially found out why Hetty left. She left because she didn't want to bring down the agency with an illegal activity. So she hadn't turned her backs on them. She had just tried to do something she believed and found herself in some trouble because she got taken a prisoner in Vietnam.

And while Nell confronted her sister, Sydney explained that she hadn't meant to hurt Nell when she did all those things because she had really tried to teach Nell how to be tough or at the very most tougher than she was in a world that wasn't kind to girls.

Summary: Callen and the team question CIA Agent Joelle Taylor's backstory after she escapes from a kidnapping and turns to Callen for help.

Callen's ex Joelle came looking for him on tonight's all-new episode because she needed his help figuring out who kidnapped her.

Joelle said she left the CIA six months ago. She had apparently grown disenchanted with the organization after they turned her onto Callen and so she left to spend time with her family. But Joelle also claimed that she started to let her guard down not long into her retirement. She said it happen gradually and that it became easier as she dropped her son off at school every day. So Joelle said that it was after one of these drop-offs that a group of masked men grabbed her and threw her in a van however she never saw any of their faces and she had only talked to one of her kidnapers because he had wanted information.

The kidnapper had allegedly asked Joelle about naval intelligence and security. But Joelle admitted that had offered up what she had because she said it was months out of date and wouldn't have made a difference. So what Joelle wanted to know was who took her and why because she thought they were a danger to her family. She had a husband and a child that didn't know the specifics about what she did or at least used to do yet they understood that sometimes she would be gone without a moment's notice and so she knew that they hadn't been worried about her in the forty-eight hours she went missing. And had wanted them moved before anything happened to them.

Joelle hadn't been let go. She had escaped from an abandoned warehouse by killing most of the people that kept her captive and knew that there were more out there that had to be looking for her. But neither Callen nor his team trusted Joelle. She had betrayed them all once before and so they were hesitant to believe her tale of kidnap and escape. It had just seemed a little too fantastical for them and so they decided to treat her story with as much caution as possible because they weren't sure if she was leading them to a trap. So Callen took Joelle to see her family and convince them to go with Kensi and Deeks, but afterward, she went with Callen.

Callen had taken Joelle back to Sam's boat because that was the one place no one would look for Joelle. But Sam and Hidoko had gone to check out the warehouse where Joelle had said she had been held and they walked right into a trap. The door had closed in behind them and the building had been set on fire. So they would have been killed if they hadn't found the escape door and both of them hadn't been sure if the trap had been meant for Joelle or them though they talked to Callen about what happened and he had been more inclined to distrust Joelle rather than give her the benefit of the doubt.

Callen was still upset about what happened between them and that he hadn't really known her at all. But Joelle or Beth as her family calls her hadn't cared whether or not Callen trusted her because she said all she wanted was to keep her family safe. So Joelle eventually came clean about a few things she lied about. She admitted that she hadn't technically left the CIA because she hadn't wanted them to know that the rogue group she had once been part of had been behind her kidnapping. She said that the man behind the curtain had wanted to rebuild the group and that he threatened to kill her if she wouldn't be rejoined. And she didn't want to get dragged back in.

Joelle had left the group and she was on administrative leave while the CIA decided on what to do with her. But Joelle hadn't lied when she said she was concerned about her family and so that had been enough to convince Callen. Callen had seen how much Joelle loved her family even if her marriage was in trouble and her husband had cheated on her. So the others went back to investigating and they found out the warehouse had been owned by the Manticore Mining Group which happened to have staked all over the Middle East. And so both Kensi and Deeks had gone in undercover at the company because they knew Joelle could at best verify one voice.

Joelle heard one person give the others orders and so she knew that could identify it if she heard it again. But somehow the armed men found them in the parking lot and they tried to kill Joelle before she could identify the voice. So the others held the men off while Joelle went running into the building. She had heard a familiar voice through Kensi's command so she knew the men attempting to blow up her life was inside, but she had found out the voice hadn't been CIA. He had just been a corrupt businessman that worked with others like himself to create a syndicate and Leach had had something to say to Joelle when he saw her again.

Leach claimed the syndicate was never going to let her because they had found a way to use the CIA for their own business interests and would never give that up. But Leach had shot Joelle and so Callen had been forced to kill him before they could gain anything else from him. So Joelle had to be rushed to the hospital and she realized that she could use her injury to her own benefit. She decided to fake her death because that was the only way to protect her family from the syndicate and it allowed Joelle the chance to hunt down other members of the group before they could hurt anyone else.

And Joelle had asked Callen if he wanted to join her, but he turned down the offer because he said he had his own family to protect.

Summary:	The team tracks a highly skilled assailant determined to avenge her father's death by killing a Brazilian diplomat.

Deeks asked Kensi to cover for him at the office when his mother's boyfriend had gotten robbed and needed his help recovering his stolen laptop.

However, Kensi didn't understand why a stolen laptop could be such a big deal much less why the boyfriend didn't want Deeks's mother to find out about it. So Deeks found himself in the awkward position of having to explain a few things. He told her his mother wasn't like her sweet mother. Deeks's mom was the type of woman that might have certain pictures on the laptop and it was better than no one ever saw them though finding out what could be on the laptop meant having another conversation with his mother's boyfriend and so Kensi eventually took pity on him.

Kensi agreed to tell everyone that Deeks had important business to take care of. Though with him being out of the office all day, she found herself paired off with Hidoko. Hidoko was still technically new and so she hasn't gotten the chance to work with Kensi like she's worked with everyone else yet they had to work together on their latest case. The team had gotten a case involving several former Marines being found dead at a bar and unfortunately, their deaths had been intentional. So that begged the question why all three had been targeted.

They were no longer in the armed forces and there hadn't been an incident before the three had been murdered then the evidence burnt. Yet, Eric did some digging and he found out that the former marines had joined MS-13 not long after leaving the military. So that made sense because a lot of gangs tend to hire former servicemen for their combat training, but the suspect the team was looking for must have had training as well because they were a few things the fire didn't hide. Like how everyone had been killed long before the bar burnt down.

Sam and Callen had gone out to the scene and they had quickly deduced how everyone died. There had once been found with a broken neck, another stabbed, and a third with a gunshot wound. But there weren't a lot of men out there that were skilled enough to pull off all that much less servicewoman. So it turns out to be a good thing that there was at least one survivor. The woman that owned the place had told Kensi and Hidoko that she had been asked to show a drunk woman the bathroom and that before she knew it she blacked out only to wake up to two firemen standing over her.

The woman, however, had described the entire incident as odd. She said the firemen had found her in the refrigerator and not only had the assailant turned it off, but she also called "911" from Ms. Jackson's phone. So that told Kensi and Hidoko that their assailant was calculated. She didn't want anyone besides her target getting hurt and had taken precautions to protect civilians. Except that didn't sound like a rival gang! Another gang member would have been intent on sending a message and not anything else — so the team decided to go meet up with MS-13.

Sam and Callen hit one of their houses and they found a drug den. Though not much else and the gang had looked like they were holding themselves up in the house almost as if they were expecting to be attacked. So the guys couldn't piece what they found yet the girls had much better luck. They found one former serviceman that their assailant hadn't killed. She had instead locked him while she stole his weapons and so the only thing the guy could say about the woman was that she had an accent. He described it as Spanish and later the team learned it was more Portuguese.

The guy had paid close attention to the men that the woman had taken out and it appeared that she had been circling the security detail for the second-in-command to a Brazilian diplomat. Yet, the diplomat had had his own theory about what was going on. The Consul General knew Mosley and so he told her his man — Carvalho — had been hanging out with undesirables because he believed Carvalho was intending on killing him. So that hadn't made much sense to the team because why would Carvalho kill off his own people before attempting to kill his boss? It just hadn't made sense to them and they had only bought it because they couldn't afford to leave Souza in danger.

Souza was still a diplomat after all and the team couldn't afford an international scandal with one of their allies. Therefore, they chose to lay a trap for their would-be assassin. They pretended to be moving Souza to a safe location and the woman attacked them while they had been allegedly driving to the airport. But while everyone had made it out of the encounter alive, Kensi had had enough time to track down their assassin and ask her why she was trying to kill Souza. So it had come as a surprise when they learned that their assassin hadn't been working for Carvalho. She said Carvalho was just as another one of Souza's dogs and that Souza was the problem.

The assailant had said that Souza was brought in drugs to poison her country. However, that was as much as they got to talk about it before the other woman made a run for it. So Kensi told her team about what's been happening and they brought Souza in to find out what was really going on because it turns out it hadn't been squeaky clean. He had been using gangs like MS-13 to bring drugs into Brazil and was willing to pin his crimes on Carvalho. And that hadn't been the first time he tried doing something like that.

Souza had also blamed a bombing on an innocent man and the man had been killed for it. Though the man's daughter was their assassin. Her name was Pietra Ray and she had joined a militia group after her father died as a child soldier. So she blamed Souza for what happened to her father and to her yet Kensi who had built up a Rappaport with her had eventually managed to talk Pietra down when Pietra tried to kill Souza again. She had told the young woman that she knows what's it's like to lose a father and that she could get justice just not through killing anyone.

So Pietra agreed to stand down and was willing to plead guilty to all that she did as long as the others made sure that Souza went down as well. Yet, Mosley said that they were going to keep that promise.

Summary: The team investigates a ransomware attack that takes out the entire power grid for west L.A. and paralyzes the city. Also, as the first holiday season since the death of Sam's wife nears, he struggles to find the best way for his family to celebrate.

Hidoko had had to break some bad news to Eric and Nell when she saw them putting up Christmas decorations at the office and knew it wouldn't go down well with Mosley.

Mosley didn't like Christmas decorations and she wasn't overly fond of the season in general. But Eric and Nell thought they would be able to change Mosley's mind and so they tried plugging in their tree because "no one could hate a lit up tree", but unfortunately the duo's timing was off. They plugged in their tree the same time the whole city suffered a blackout. So they thought they had short-circuited the system at work and had actually gone into hiding because they hadn't wanted to get into trouble,

But Hidoko found them in the storage room and she told them that they were in the clear. The whole city had lost power at the same time and so Mosley didn't know about the tree incident though she still needed them in the ops room. Mosley had wanted to know what happened to make the whole city shut down and so she called in everyone. Sam had no problem with getting to work because he could swim there meanwhile everyone else had suffered setbacks in getting to work. Deeks and Kensi got stuck in traffic and Callen had been forced to check on Finn.

Finn was the young kid that Callen had sort of taken in as a protégé, however, Finn hadn't been at his apartment. He had actually rented the room out on Airbnb without telling Callen and was out in the world doing god knows what. But back at the office, the team had found out that the blackout hadn't been an accident. Someone had deliberately shut down the power grid and was holding it for ransom unless they were paid twenty million dollars. So Eric and Sam went down to the grid to check on things from there and Eric had quickly learned it had been an inside job.

Someone from inside the power company had been responsible for the malware and so they asked the boss if there was anyone at the office knew Russian. The Russian alphabet had been used to put in the code used for the malware and it hadn't been used like a pro meaning whoever was behind it hadn't known Russian all that well. But there was one person that matched the description. His name was Edgar Parsons and his boss figured he picked up some of the Russian languages what with all the video games he played.

So the team sent two of their own to Edgar's home. Kensi and Deeks had finally gotten out of traffic by then and had no problem with searching for Edgar as long as they got to motorcycle. But finding Edgar and getting answers from him hadn't been that bad. The guy had felt sorry for what he did and had told them that he only did it for the money. Not the twenty million he had told everyone he wanted in exchange for clearing up the ransomware, but the thousands of dollars he had gotten paid to shut down the power grid and so the couple realized there was something bigger at play.

There weren't a lot of reasons for why someone would shut down the power grid however the motive was the same. Someone had been plotting to do something when the power was out and so the team looked for the mysterious woman that Edgar told them about. She had apparently met with him right in front of work and so it wasn't that hard to track her. But the woman they were looking for proved to be a familiar face. She was a Fuentes of the notorious Fuentes family that used to run the Morello cartel. So Sam who had some dealings with them had questioned if their suspect wanted to rebuild the cartel.

The cartel used to be run by Jose Fuentes and Jose was locked up. But Jose had recently been transferred to a prison three miles away and so Sam decided to check it out with his newly return partner, Callen. The guys had gone to the prison and they had been told the blackout hadn't affected them. The warden said their backup generator had kicked in three minutes after the blackout and that the only problems they had with the TV. The TV was still out and the prisoners were all getting upset about missing out on their soap operas. So the guys had thought everything was fine.

They just wanted to check on Jose before they left and so they had gone to see him. But the man in Jose's cell hadn't been Jose. It had been a maintenance worker that the Fuentes had information on and so they had coerced him into taking Jose's place while the real Jose was broken out of prison. So Kensi and Deeks managed to track down the sister and they talked to her about how she broke her brother out of jail though she hadn't done it for the reason they suspected. They thought she did it so that her brother could take over the business when in fact she did because she along with her brother had grown up without their father and they hadn't wanted that for Roberto.

Roberto was Jose's son and he was born five months after Jose went to prison. But the team track down Jose at the welcome back party that his sister eventually told him about. So they were able to arrest Jose again and, while they were at it, they allowed him thirty minutes with his son so that Roberto wouldn't remember his father getting arrested so close to Christmas. And while what he had seen had been heartbreaking, Callen felt that he should try to reach out to Finn and stop Finn from doing whatever he was doing.

But all Finn had been doing was letting out the apartment to get enough cash to buy the other kids at the shelter some Christmas gifts. So Callen learned to let that one go!

Summary: After napalm is detected at a crime scene, the NCIS team investigates the sole casualty for possible links to terrorism.

A brushfire leaves one dead, and next generation military-grade napalm is found at the scene. Once they find the VIN of the victim's motorcycle, they're able to ID him as Zack Fuller and find containers for the ingredients for napalm in his closet.

Zack started navy boot camp in 2015, without completing basic training. Could he have been seeking revenge on a superior who failed him? That would be a no, as he received glowing reviews and an honorable discharge. The program he was enlisted to work in was replaced with a drone program.

Kensi and Harley follow up with a solar company lead from his room and learn from the father and son who run it that they just provided the panels. Carson tells them that he thinks he saw a book with Arabic writing on it on his desk.

Zack wanted to save the planet and had no digital footprint other than his motorcycle registration, so those who wanted to contact him for his aquarium cleaning business either called Martha or found him at the coffee shop he went to every morning. After dealing with an annoying barista who clearly doesn't like cops – no, Zack wasn't killed by the police and, no, the barista doesn't need a lawyer – Sam and Callen learn that he sometimes sat with a girl, Amanda. However, she claims that she shut him down when he tried talking to her about how he hated technology and barely knew him.

Callen calls Amanda the "world's worst liar," but that's what security footage is for, and they see that the two did talk and she had an anonymous gossip site up on her computer. She was being cyber-bullied by people from her high school, and it's possible she wants to retaliate, perhaps by torching the school, with her bullies all in one place.

But if that's the motive, it was something Zack decided to do on his own, as Amanda's shocked to find out that he had napalm. She thinks he liked her since no one else would talk to her and he was mad she was getting bullied. Did he decide to burn down the school to defend her because no one else would help?

The book Carson saw turns out to be in Hindi and on oceanology, so that's a dead end. They do, however, find a receipt for 10 cases of foam coffee cups, an ingredient that can be used in napalm. Once Eric and Nell access the security hard drive for that store, they see him leaving with another man, with his face covered by a cap and hoodie.

After assuring Amanda and her mother that her bullies will be taken care of by LAPD, Sam and Callen head out to deal with the missing napalm, only to be stopped by an explosion in a neighbor's backyard.

It was an underground natural gas leak, the fire captain reports ... but was it natural? Amanda reveals that Zack drilled a hole down 30 feet in her backyard the week before, claiming he could shut down the school without hurting anyone thanks to the plugged oil well connected to the natural gas field in the ground. He told her there wouldn't be an explosion, just nausea and headaches, and she thought the month off from school was the break she needed.

But since Zack said he'd try a different location when that didn't seem to work, they wonder if he was planning something bigger. Was he planning to pour napalm down the hole, creating a four-mile blast crater? Could he have been planning something that would destroy thousands of homes and lives? But why would he want to?

Identifying Zack's accomplice gives them something to go on – Carson, from the father and son solar company. They left the job they had been doing, and there's an 'Out of Business' sign on their company's door, near which Sam and Callen find model rocket engine parts. If they shoot a model rocket down the gas well, it'll ignite in seconds and be even faster with napalm.

Looking into the father and son, Eric and Nell uncover a "911 alert for today" post on a dark website for LA, suggesting people stay away from Bayside until after sunset. They take a drone into the area to search it, and thanks to a map with old oil wells that Mosley gets from a friend, they find Gavin and Carson in a garage. Amanda's with them and tied up.

Gavin and Carson have the rocket rigged, and Gavin's holding a dead man's switch, so the team has to be smart. Off Kensi's request, Sam and Callen stall. They're doing this to save the planet, to wipe out LA's natural gas supply, so they have to convert to solar and wind and to thin the herd. They're planning to die as martyrs, and they kidnapped Amanda because they think Zack told her everything and she tipped off the agents.

Once Kensi and Harley are ready, Sam and Callen make their moves, taking out Gavin and Carson. Kensi and Harley pour cement in through the skylight, dousing the rocket and capping the hole so the napalm can't ignite.

Deeks proposes a game that will make them better special agents. He gives them an enigmatic statement – "A man pushes his car up to a hotel and says I have no money" – and the others must ask yes-or-no questions to ascertain the truth. Sam's the first one to get a yes answer when he asks if the guy pushing the car knew the owner of the hotel.

By the time Deeks returns to HQ at the end of the day, the others have solved it: it's a game of Monopoly, and the "car" landed on Boardwalk with a hotel and went bankrupt. How long did it take? As long as it takes to Google something.

Summary:	While Hetty is being tortured by her captors in Vietnam, Eric and Nell find a clue to her whereabouts, prompting the team to organize a rescue mission with very little information.

Hetty's been gone for months with no word about where she went or why on tonight's all-new episode, but Eric suddenly remembered that Hetty had given him something that might be important.

Hetty had talked to Eric after Michelle died about his role on the team. She said she appreciated all that he did to help the others and that she knows he doesn't always get the recognition he deserved. But what had been odd about the converse. But what Hetty did next was what stuck with Eric. Eric had been given a book about the Civil War and, while Hetty had been around, he hadn't thought much of it because he thought the book had merely been a nice gesture. So it wasn't until later that he wondered if the book might have held clues as to where she went and so he tried cracking whatever code she must have hidden inside.

Eric read the book, he looked for keywords or names and had even run a black light over it to see if Hetty hid anything in the writing. But he found nothing. Eric combed through the book and couldn't find a single thing that proved it was anything more than a book yet Eric ended up calling Nell afterward because he was sure there was something there and had wondered if she could find it even if he couldn't. So Nell had questioned why Eric had waited to tell her about this book only to remember she had also gotten a gift. Hetty had given her flashlight that glowed red and so Nell pointed the flashlight on the book to see if there was anything she could find and she did.

Nell spotted three words that had been circled in the book and it seems she had been given the flashlight just to encode the book. But neither Nell nor Eric knew what Failed, Action and Skin meant. Those were the three words circled in the book and so they must hold some kind of importance, but they knew that they needed the rest of the team's help to get anywhere with the clues and so they called Callen. Callen hadn't been given a trinket and so he wanted to know why Nell and Eric got one while he didn't. So Eric joked around that maybe they had been given clues because they were the only ones smart enough to crack them.

But technically that stopped being true once they found the three words. They had no idea what they meant and neither did Callen, however, the more people they brought onboard the more it helped. So Hidoko proved to be the one person to hack the code. She said everywhere in the world had been given a coded language to act as a map and so she helped the techies to decipher what Failed, Action, and Skin meant on a map. It pinpointed a city in Vietnam and so they finally found out where Hetty was. They just didn't know how she got there or what they could say to Mosley to get her off their breaks.

Mosley had come into work with half her team gone and that had deeply upset her because she wasn't their friend, she was their boss. They couldn't take off whenever they like and then leave Hidoko to explain they were off on a mission without her say so. She was the one that was supposed to give them orders and, as time went by without anyone informing her on what's really going on, she finally lost her temper. She called them all in and shouted at them for their cavalier attitude as well as Callen's blatant disrespect. And while she may have been disappointed in all of them, she still did her best to help.

Mosley called SecNav to okay a trip for her team to Vietnam and she made their secret trip into something that was actually doable. But Mosley also questioned on a lot of things. She asked if they confirmed Hetty was in Vietnam because none of Hetty's alias registered entering the country and it turns out Hetty had paid off a smuggler to help sneak her in. So the team revealed everything they learned. They know that Hetty was in Vietnam along with the remaining members of her old CIA unit and then they showed her the old photo from the war that had the entire unit pictured, but she asked them who took the picture and why did Hetty go there.

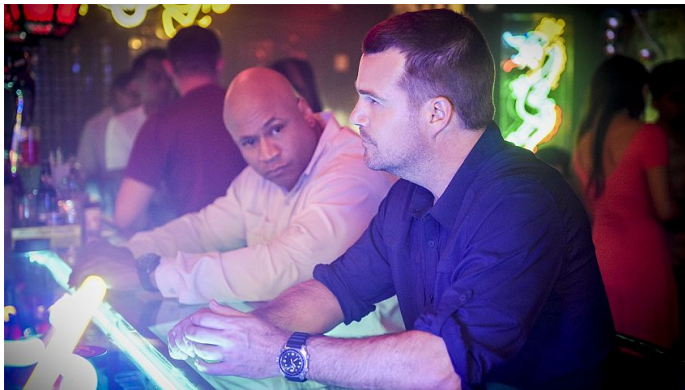

Mosley didn't want them rushing into danger on so little though she wanted them to be smart about what they were looking for and who could help. So she forced them into thinking things through and that made them realize why Hetty left. She had cashed out her entire portfolio which was a lot and that could only mean she needed the money for something. It couldn't be for her illegal boat ride or for weapons because Hetty wouldn't need that much money. But the one thing that would cause her to cash out everything was a ransom. The team realized Hetty was paying a ransom and they didn't know for whom.

They later went out to find anyone that was still in the country that could remember Hetty's time in Vietnam and they found someone that used to help her team. He was more or less a civilian that helped them and he said it was the "kid" that took the photo. The "kid" was a young man that was green around the ears and he followed Hetty around like a puppy however disaster struck and the "kid" supposedly died in a helicopter crash that Hetty manage to just barely survive. So Callen and Sam boarded a plane to Vietnam to rescue Hetty because they now believe she got into some trouble looking for the "kid".

Summary:	Callen, Sam, Kensi and Deeks join Hetty's team from the Vietnam War in a dangerous and off-the-books rescue mission to save Hetty from her captors in Vietnam. Also, Mosley calls in Nell's sister, homeland security specialist Sydney Jones, to assist the team in Los Angeles with processing evidence connected to Hetty's time in Vietnam.

The team had gone to Vietnam in their search for Hetty. Hetty had up and quit the agency several months back without an explanation, but her team knew that wasn't like her and so they've been searching for her ever since. They found out she had gone to Vietnam and that had something to do with her mysterious past that she never liked to talk about. Though the fact she was looking back on what happened in her time as a government agent and hadn't wanted the government involved meant that whatever she was doing had the potential to blow back on NCIS as well as the agents there. Hetty had cared about her agents and they had become the family she never seemingly had the time to have on her own.

They in turn loved her like she was family too. That's why they had been so concerned when she disappeared and that's why they flew to Vietnam knowing the risks. They knew that if they were caught by the Vietnamese government that their own would have to disavow them and so the team did their best to keep their mission under the radar. They bought guns using back channels and never stayed at one place for too long in case someone wondered why they were asking about someone named Hetty yet the team received all sorts of help from back home. Eric and Nell tried tracking Hetty's movements and they began by figuring out how she got into the country.

Hetty had used several boats rides, human traffickers, and had even flown part of the way. She apparently had her pilot's license and that's something neither of the techies had known about. The two had also tried following her movements on the ground and they found themselves running into problems as they tried to get answers, so they questioned asking for help. They talked about possibly taking Hetty's disappearance to SecNav to see if they could get help from there though they ultimately decided that should be their last option once everything else failed. They then tried monitoring her buddies and while they waited for that, Nell started digging through Hetty's mail.

Nell had been getting some help from Hidoko when they came across a few weird pieces and so someone else was brought in to help, her sister. Sydney was asked by Mossley to help with the search and so she came in to help. She looked through Hetty's mail with Nell and they found out that Hetty knew Queen Elizabeth. The queen had even written to Hetty saying she couldn't wait to see her at Sandringham that Christmas and so there was a wealth of things that no one knew about Hetty. Hetty it seems had also helped a family to leave Vietnam after the war and so they had asked Kim Nguyen to come in because she was one of the few people that knew Hetty from that time.

Kim Nguyen had told them the young man that had taken the photo of Hetty with her team in Vietnam was someone named either Harris or Harrison. She hadn't known much about him or why Hetty had returned to Vietnam and so she asked them if they had talked to anyone at the monastery. She said Hetty always stayed with the monks when she went back and so the women passed on that message to those in the field. Sam, Callen, Deeks, and Keni then traveled to the monastery and, while the monk hadn't known where Hetty was heading, someone else. CIA Officer Jeff Carol who no one believes was actually CIA because of how goofy and inept he was had surprised them all by actually turning out to be CIA.

Jeff told them that the agency had found out an operative was being sold to the highest bidder and that he had come to investigate it, but the team had gotten upset by that and so Jeff told them he hadn't been sure who the operative was until everyone started to show up. That included Hetty's team in LA as well as the one from her CIA days. The other group had gotten to the monastery first and Jeff had done his best to convince them to work together. He told them that they both had something to offer the other and that became clear for all of them when they found out that Hetty had gotten kidnapped by a poacher/smuggler called Dang.

Dang they believed had convinced Hetty that one of her old friends that had allegedly died in a helicopter crash was still alive and so she had come to investigate the matter for herself however Dang had used that to kidnap her and he was in the middle of selling her off to the highest bidder if they didn't stop him. So the two teams came together for form a rescue squad and with Mossley helping them get satellite images — they stormed Dang's compound and got both Hetty as well as Keane out. He had survived the helicopter crash and had later survived Dang, so he couldn't wait to make it back stateside.

As for Dang, Hetty decided to feed him to the same tiger he had threatened her with and so she promised to see him in hell.

And while having Sydney around had brought up something she hadn't wanted to remember, Nell made peace with her sister and this time it might even stick!

Summary: Callen and Sam pull Granger's daughter, former spy Jennifer Kim, from witness protection to help the team locate an underground spy who has obtained an arsenal of bomb material.

Sam and Callen have been investigating Lieutenant Keith Stiger Keith outside of their work hours after getting an off feeling when they interviewed him, and it turns out they were right to trust their guys. When they check out his fishing cottage, they just manage to avoid getting blown up, but his wife's body isn't so lucky. She was dead before the explosion, however, having been shot twice in the chest.

Since Keith had a camera set up in the cottage, he knows they're onto him, but they check out a warehouse in his name too late; he's already moved the materials inside that are needed for a massive bombing. He had to plan all of this years in advance, and Naomi's murder just kicked things into motion. But what's his target?

Keith's business partners tell Kensi and Deeks that his parents died when he was young and he was raised by their friends, who purchased a house three years ago that was paid for by the same corporation that paid for Jennifer Kim's airline tickets to the US. Is Keith a North Korean spy? Was Naomi killed because she saw something suspicious when she was staying with the Stigers?

Sam and Callen drive out to Jennifer's safe house to see what she knows, and while she doesn't recognize Keith, she does have a pretty good idea of what he's doing and his next moves. Killing his wife is a sign he was activated, and whatever he's doing is a culmination of his entire mission/life.

There's a network in LA that could help him, but as they learn once Jennifer infiltrates it, Keith's actually working freelance and the network had orders to kill him. The man he recruited to help is caught on camera heading into storm drain tunnels, meaning it's likely that the plan is to detonate the bomb under their target.

The team heads into the tunnels, splitting up to take out several of the men working for Keith. However, Keith heads further into the tunnels on a motorcycle. And as they follow him, they lose communication with everyone back in Ops, meaning they don't even know that Keith's target is the 500,000 square-foot LAPD headquarters building.

But Hetty's not worried and never doubts her team. Why not? "Because I handpicked each and every one of them," she explains to Mosley.

Hetty's right to be so certain because they do take out Keith and his men, and Sam takes care of the bombs just in time.

Summary: Callen pursues every alternative when the Diplomatic Security Service apprehends his father, Nikita Aleksandr Reznikov, as part of an exchange for two American photographers being held hostage in Iran.

Nikita Aleksandr Reznikov was taken in by the State Department. The former KGB spy had been residing in LA in order to be closer to his two kids and grandson, but the State Department had been content to look the other way until they decided to trade their former KGB operative for two Americans. The Americans were a married couple traveling through Iran who unfortunately gotten detained when the Iranian government mistook them for spies. They thought the Tylers were CIA agents that were spying on their nuclear program when in fact the couple was merely photographers. They went to the country to take a couple of photos and were later detained without questioning or anything resembling due process. And therefore the Americans didn't believe they would ever going to get these two people out of Iran.

The Iranian government was not known for their negotiations and so it had come as a surprise when they suddenly said that they were. The Iranians reached out to the United States and had agreed to exchange the harmless couple for Nikita, so the Americans willing agreed to this despite what they knew. They knew that the Iranians only wanted Nikita because they had to hand him over to the Russians to keep their latest shipment of Russian missiles and that the Russians had one purpose for wanting Nikita back. The Russians wanted him back because Palov Volkoff was running things now and he wanted his chance to kill Nikita. He has been trying to get Nikita for a long time and the Iranians had simply given him the opportunity.

Everything about this exchange was wrong on so many levels however no one cared about what happened to Nikita until his children put up a fuss. He was taken from his daughter's Alex home right in front of her son who loved his grandfather and her brother Callen happened to have been there as well. He had been over at Alex's enjoying family time and he hadn't wanted anyone to ruin that. Not even his own government! So Callen had tried reaching out to his contacts to find out what was going on and after he learned everything he then did his best to stop it. He asked Hetty for favors and had even gone to Mosley only neither could help. They both got the same answer about this order coming from the Executive office and that meant they couldn't go against it.

They would have been committing treason if they went against the order or tried to stop the exchange and that hadn't mattered to Callen or his team. They all knew what was happening to Nikita was wrong and so they tried to stop it. They had Hetty provide them with a cover while they tried to figure out a plan and everyone agreed to go behind Mosely's back. She couldn't afford another mark against her for helping them before and so they worked with Hetty to keep her out of the loop yet the plan they eventually came up wasn't that great. Callen knew they couldn't break into Iran to rescue the Tylers, that they couldn't fake his father's death, and so he came up with a plan of handing over someone else.

Callen figured that Volkoff wasn't the only one with pull. He knew that the Russian government was in and the same with the mafia and so he knew they would love Anatoli Kirkin. Kirkin had burned several bridges when he left and his enemies out-stripped Nikita's, but Deeks for one hadn't felt comfortable about turning Kirkin over. Kirkin had a massive crush on him and so they bonded over that. He hadn't wanted to send Kirkin to his death and he was the only person that had qualms about doing so. The others were all following Callen's lead and Callen said that Kirkin wasn't a good guy. He was a criminal that had killed people and so Callen pursued the plan. He reached out to the Russian mafia in the area and they had a lead.

The mafia had kidnapped Kirkin's boyfriend and was torturing him for information on Kirkin though he wouldn't give up his boyfriend and so the team rescued the boyfriend while locating Kirkin on their own. They found him through his doctor and picked him up at his other boyfriend's mansion. He had been living like a king on the latest's money and was doing just fine until the team found him. They had tried taking him in and had instead led the mafia right to him, so there were a shooting and Kirkin managed to get away. The team could have looked for him again except they were running out of the time and so Callen had used what little time he had to race to his father's side.

Callen was going to sneak out Nikita when the guards weren't looking and would have done it if his father hadn't told him "no". Nikita said the Tylers had kids of their own that were missing them and that he couldn't let them be punished for what how he lived his life. He also said that he had his time and so he wasn't going to fight the exchange. Nikita was going to go back to Russia and he told Callen that he survived once that he could easily survive again. But letting go had been hard. Callen and Alex later followed Nikita all the way to the exchange and Callen was the only one that could actually say goodbye. His sister just couldn't do it and Nikita understood why, so he told Callen to watch over his sister and nephew and had kissed Callen goodbye.

Callen hadn't wanted things to end like that and had thought Mosley would fire him except she chose not to and she had other things to worry about.

Kirkin had gotten away from the team only to come back on the radar as the new leader of the Russian mob in LA because he bought his new position with the money he had been stealing from his latest boyfriend.

Summary:	While investigating a missing person case, the team uncovers a killer who puts on shows for high-paying voyeurs. Also, Mosley assigns Callen as her partner on a joint ATF mission to apprehend someone from her past.

EAD Mosley and Hetty's relationship were seemingly on the outs when the whole squad room saw those two arguing in the upstairs office. Things had been fine between the two when Hetty came back from Vietnam however something must have changed because both Callen and Sam were so caught up in what might be happening upstairs that they didn't hear either Kensi and Deeks come in. The couple had been going over their wedding plans and had argued about what should stay as well as what should go, so their minor argument wasn't exactly quiet. Kensi had wanted Deeks to care about decorations and he refused to fake his enthusiasm. He said the wedding part didn't matter because what mattered to him had been the part where she agreed to marry him and so Kensi thought that was sweet. She still told him that she needed his help to plan the wedding and therefore he eventually caved.

Deeks had just told her that he'd do his best to help when they came upon Sam and Callen watching what turned out to be the much more important fight. The couple joined the guys in watching what was going on and they were coming up with theories when Eric called them to ops room, but that too had seemed off because usually Eric would have yelled out new case from somewhere upstairs and so he explained that this time he came downstairs because everyone was needed in the operational room besides Callen. Callen had found himself singled-out and so he told the team that he must be the reason for the fight between Hetty and Mosley. Mosley must have wanted to fire him and Hetty was arguing against it.

The others of course had all said that "no, that can't be it" and Sam had even agreed that he would quit if Callen was fired though Callen wasn't the only one to have that concern. They had all questioned if they were going to be fired or worse replaced by Hideko when the truth was that none of them was being fired. They were merely being broken up and reteaming. Mosley had wanted to change things around and so she decided to place Sam with Kensi while Deeks was to be paired with Hideko. Hideko therefore wasn't replacing anyone and Callen wasn't being fired. He too was being reassigned because Mosley had wanted to partner up with on a top-secret job that she hadn't wanted the others to know about.

Mosley had been asked by ATF to assist in the capture of known international arms dealer Spencer Williams. Williams had taken part in stealing a cache of weapons and had then sold them to Iran yet Williams was stateside again and ATF believed they could catch him stealing even more weapons. That's why they asked for Mosley's help. She had sort of dated Williams before she found out what he really did and so she wanted to catch him as much as anyone else just she made things personal. Mosley tried to dictate to the ops to ATF and had almost gotten thrown off the case because they were emotional as it was. They were watching Williams for weeks when the man they placed on the inside was killed right in front of them and they couldn't do anything about it because it would risk the op, so Callen talked to Mosley.

Callen had seen for himself that Mosley was too close to the case and so he demanded full-disclosure before he helped. He said he knew someone that could get him an in with Williams's business partner and so he could infiltrate the arms deal, but he hadn't wanted to take chances and so he asked Mosley to tell him everything. She just told him the half of it and that got Callen agreed to replace ATF's inside man. Mosley had also used Callen's in to get forty-eight hours alone with Williams because she wanted NCIS to get the first shot at him and so her teaming up with Callen had worked out in her favor while the others were stumbling across they weren't sure they knew how to deal with.

The other agents had been assigned to look into the disappearance of Lt. Commander Timothy Weir. Weir was working with DOD Intelligence as part of their Special Access Program and he missed his last check-in, so the team dug into his life and found out he had been in contact with Mandy Huang. Huang was an attaché for the Chinese Consulate and she appeared to be in a romantic relationship with the very married Weir yet Deeks and Hideko had questioned her and she claimed to have not have seen him. She said that they had a date that he never showed up to and so the other team looked into why that was. They found out that Weir's car had broken down and that he had gotten a tow.

Only the man that drove that tow was a convicted killer. He had gotten arrested for killing a young woman twenty years ago when he was high on meth and it had been a slaughter. So much so that Sam instantly suspected their convicted murder of having something to do with Weir's disappearance and hadn't seemed that way. He said he had towed the car and had left behind Weir who said he was going to hire an Uber while he drove back to the shop. He had an alibi because others had remembered seeing him at work however something must have happened because Weir was later found dead. He was found on a tracking app he set up with Huang who as it turns out was an American NSA agent. The two worked together and fell in love. And so when Huang found out that no one had heard a thing from Weir, she used the tracking app to find him.

She tracked him to a closed theater and found mere pieces of him. That's when she told NCIS who she really was and they looked into what happened to Weir as well as the others. He had been dismembered and had been put back together again with body parts belonging to other people, so the team called it in and they found out they were looking for serial killers. There was a group of people that killed and dismembered someone in front of an audience, but the team had had one of them in their custody and had let them go. They found out their convict was part of the killing ring and that he had met like-minded people who killed off the real people that worked at the mechanics shop to take their place. And so NCIS lost sight of their serial killers, unfortunately they also sight of Williams.

Williams had gotten away again and Mosley had wanted to blame Callen for that though Hetty told her that she should have been honest with Callen. Callen didn't know that Williams and Mosley had a child or that William had gone on to kidnap their son, so it wasn't until he learned the truth that he promised to help her find her son. Her son was taken when he was still a child and so she had no idea what he looked like or if he would still remember her

Summary: Callen and Sam join forces with Anna Kolcheck and the ATF when Arkady Kolcheck warns NCIS that a notorious international weapons dealer has returned to the states. Also, the case requires Eric to go undercover as a bank IT technician.

Arkady Kolcheck asked Callen for help because he believed Vladlena Sokolov was in trouble. Vladlena Sokolov ran a gambling club in town. She was known to all the serious players like Arkady and so Arkady had turned to her when NCIS needed help in locating her brother, Abram. Abram Sokolov was using an investment bank to launder money and at one point in time, he was using some of that money to arm rebels in foreign countries until NCIS found out what he was doing. They realized he was about to make another shipment of weapons and had gotten Vladlena to give up her brother before he could even make that shipment. She told them where they could find him and that gave them the head start they needed to stage a scene. They made it look like someone wanted to put Abram out of business and, he had been in such a hurry to leave town, he made mistakes.

Abram had been so busy running to save his own skin that he didn't notice that a bug had been planted on him. That bug they planted on Abram had helped the team to keep tabs on him and ensure he was no longer a problem. The team believed they knew each step that Abram made and so Callen didn't understand why Arkady came to him believing Abram was back in town. He said that couldn't be the case because the last sight NCIS had of Abram was when he was in Moldova and since then he was reportedly spotted in London yet Arkady was sure that Abram was back because he knew something was up with Vladlena. She had texted him "I need you" and Arkady told Callen that must mean she was in trouble because she would never have sent him a message like that.

Arkady promised that the text wasn't a booty-call and had said that he had tried checking things out on his own. He had gone to the gambling club and had waited there all night to see her except he never did. He said she never showed at the club which was unlike her and so he said her brother must be back in town because he was the only one that would hurt Vladlena. Vladlena had betrayed her brother and her brother could want revenge for that, but Callen needed to find much better proof than a text message that Abram was back and so he called in Mosley. Mosley was the only one he needed to sign off all intel-digging and she was glad to sing that over as long as Arkady didn't pull a stunt like he did a few weeks ago.

Arkady had swung by the boathouse a few weeks ago when he was drunk and security cameras had caught him making a scene. He had tried to sing "Betty Davis Eyes" with Betty replaced by Hetty and it had been really bad. It was an impression that stuck for Mosley and so Mosley was willing to do anything to get rid of him. She signed off all NCIS resources that Callen would need to look for Abram and had put a team on Leigha Winters. Winters had been the investment banker that Abram had threatened into assisting him with laundering cash and she had also helped NCIS to put an end to the whole scheme. That's why they believe she might be in danger if Arkady was right and Abram really was back in town.

Only Mosley had taken them all by surprise when she assigned Eric for undercover work. He was supposed to go in as a tech supervisor at Winters's company in order to keep a better eye on her and, well, Eric was sometimes his own worst enemy. He was so happy to be assigned undercover work that he just had to tell everyone and then he was warned that telling people about going undercover therefore made going undercover redundant. Eric eventually got around to it and he had done his part. He went to the company and had kept eyes on a very jumpy Winters. She hadn't been the same since that incident with Abram and so she had cut herself off from everything as well as everyone.

The people at work had all sensed that something was wrong with her and she hadn't fazed them at all when she stormed outside just to be outside. It had thrown Eric because he had lost sight of her and he was later grateful when Hidoko told him that she still had eyes on Winters. Winters was having a slight breakdown outside and so Eric had decided to tell her everything. He told her that he was NCIS and that another team was arriving to take her to safety meanwhile the others had found Vladlena. She had been beaten quite badly and had told them that her brother broke her. She told him everything about NCIS and Winters. Vladlena told them that she was sorry and they told her she didn't need to be.

Anyone could have broken under the circumstances and the last the team saw her was when they put her in the ambulance with Arkady. Arkady had wanted to go with her and the two were catching up when Abram stopped the ambulance in root. He had wanted to get his hands on Arkady because he realized how important Arkady was to not only NCIS, but his daughter Anna the ATF agent. Anna and her partner Gary had been working case tracing a missing shipment of alcohol and cigarettes and they both knew that in certain parts the shipment of American products could be worth more than American dollars, so Anna and her partner were later pulled into an investigation on Abram.

Abram saw this and that's why he kidnapped Arkady. He called Anna on Arkady's phone and told her that he wanted Winters in exchange for her father though the team thought that was fine because they could stake out the scene for this exchange and so they fell for the ploy. They went to the scene and didn't realize Abram wasn't going to show until it was almost too late. He wanted them to bring Winters to a separate venue because he was going to break into her investment bank and demand they transfer over the money he would need to buy the stolen shipment. Luckily, the team did see that he wasn't going to show and so they warned Eric and Hidoko. The two cleared the building and so only Eric was left when Abram showed up.

Abram thought Eric was just an IT guy and had put a gun to Eric's head to get him the money. So Eric was pretended to go along with them when he was getting on the computer when really he was waiting for backup and they did arrive to stop the transfer. Eric and the others took down most of Abram's men and Abram had made a run for it only Anna found him. She caught him out back and had made him get on his knees yet she hadn't arrested him. She had gone ahead and killed him, so she was going to have a hard time to explain that away because he didn't have a gun on him when she killed him.

Production Code: 917
Summary: After a cryptocurrency farm is robbed of over $10 million in Bitcoin codes, Sam and Hidoko go undercover, with Sam resuming a likely compromised former alias.

A small Cryptocurrency farm was attacked with one perp making it off with enough access codes to steal as many bitcoins in storage as so he wishes. Unfortunately, the perp used to have a partner that he just so happened to abandoned at the scene. The man later identified as Mark Nichols had been shot and left for dead. His partner hadn't even waited around to at least try to save him and so he didn't know that Nichols survived. Nichols had still needed an arm sling and was more or less safe now that he was with the proper authorities though he wouldn't talk. He had no reason to be loyal and still wouldn't tell either Kensi or Nell a thing. They had asked about his partner and the people that hired them to break into cryptocurrency because they had reason to believe that both men could have been involved with their old nemesis Barris Stone.

Stone was in the drugs trade. He was considered to be the European Pablo Escobar and had such a tangled web of people that worked for him that NCIS had needed a criminal's help to take down a District Attorney on Stone's payroll. The criminal they used to do was King. King had gotten close to Sam and he had been the one to flip her. King told them everything she knew about Stone's dealings in the state and the team were hoping to use that to eventually get DA Gibson to flip, but the man dead in transportation and so Stone possibly being back was something they all needed to confirm. Sam went undercover for that case. He had been known as a swindler named Switch and he suggested using that alias again.

Mosley knew that would be their best to getting close to Stone again and so she suggested Sam visited King beforehand to see if his alias was still viable. She hadn't wanted there to be any surprises in the field and hadn't even wanted to trust Sam going to see King alone. Mosley had assigned Hidoko to be Sam's partner on this because she knew Callen was going to be busy. Callen had been away from the team dealing with his girlfriend Anna and her problems with ATF, so by the time he returned, Mosley thought it would be best for him to work surveillance with Deeks. Deeks had been sent to watch a woman named Sasha Channing because she was Stone's go-to woman in the states.

If Sasha was willing to meet with people like Nichols then he had to have had something to offer her or an assignment given by her to him. Nichols had been asked about Sasha and he hadn't wanted to say anything until he could get some reassurances that he would be safe. He wanted to be told her was safe and the two women had promised just that. They also reminded him that he had a score to settle and so he did crack after that. He told them that Sasha had reached out to be him as well as his partner Eddy Davis for a job. They were supposed to get the keycodes and their reward would be them running a certain part of her employer's many businesses. She wouldn't tell them who her boss was and so the women instead showed Nichols some pictures.

Nichols was able to pick out Sasha and he saw Stone at the meeting. He said Stone had attempted to see everything while not be seen himself and that he had only gotten a glimpse of the man, which was more than enough. That had connected Stone to the theft at the bitcoin farm and so Sam went ahead with meeting King. King had seemed like a very great friend. She had grown close to Sam after they worked together and he had wanted to believe her when she said he was safe. He just hadn't been too sure and so he robbed an old mark and that mark had clearly still believed he was Switch rather than a federal agent. Sam had thought that added assurance meant King had been telling him the truth and so he went to an arranged meeting with Hidoko.

They pretended to be offering their expertise for the job that Nichols and, when their guards were down, the men shot Hidoko and made off with Sam. Sam had been set up. He later learned King had told them that they were heading Stone's way and so she used Sam to get close to Stone. Stone had made her life miserable and she wanted him dead yet had used Sam to get close enough to shoot everyone that stood in the way of her having a better life. The only person she wasn't going to shoot was Sam. Sam had had feelings for her and she had feelings for him. King told him that she was sorry that she did that and that she wanted to start over somewhere else. And she had asked Sam to go with her except he couldn't.

Sam said he couldn't run from who he was and so he got King to safely stand down when the rest of his team rushed through the door. Sam had suspected that King could have been lying to him and so he placed a tracker in her brace. That's how his people and safe Hidoko (who had only gotten shot in her bulletproof vest) had found out where King went once she left witness protection. So despite what King felt for him or what he felt for her, they were never going to work and Stone inadvertently proved that to them.

And Mosley asked Sam, in the end, to figure out whatever it is that was going on with him.

Summary: Callen, Sam and Nell travel to the Angeles Forest to search for pieces of a failed rocket launch, including a top-secret government device. Also, Hetty tries to help Keane acclimate to life in the states.

The team were asked to assist on a case at Proxima Aerospace, a multi-billion dollar company. They were responsible for launching rockets into space for what they termed as expedition trips and there were also given the task of delivering many of the country's spy satellites into said space, so they were a pretty big deal. The company had important contracts that needed to be fulfilled and they thought everything for their last rocket launch was foolproof to the point they publicly announced it. The whole world was watching when that Janus III rocket launched and that meant they also the moment when something went wrong with the launch. It was doing fine until it exploded for seemingly no reason and so the Department of Defense, as well as every federal investigational department, had been brought in to figure out what went wrong.

Again, there should have been nothing wrong with that launch and so right away someone had looked into sabotage. They found something off about the code used to launch because it appeared that someone had added more thrust than what was needed and so NCIS had gotten split up to handle two ends of this investigation. Mosley had Sam, Callen, and Nell go out in the field to assist the search team that was hoping they could find the more pieces of the rocket and she also had Kensi, Deeks, Hidoko, and Eric question the suspect they had in custody at the boatshed. The woman that was brought to the boatshed was a coder and the first thing she told both Kensi and Deeks was that they made a mistake. She said she couldn't have done what they said she did.

The woman explained that she had worked for years on that launch and that she would never jeopardize it. The team naturally didn't believe her and had asked her who paid her off, but she stuck to her story and later Eric found evidence that vindicated her. He found the code that was used on the failed launch and he noticed that he didn't seem like their suspect wrote it. Eric even asked the coder to write a piece of code for him and that showed she didn't use tab when she wrote code. She actually used spacing and whoever had changed the code on her computer hadn't known that about her, only the one person that can use her computer without drawing notice was her boss Donald Jenkins.

Donald wasn't too bright. He had gone to the boatshed as a representative of Proxima Aerospace and when he felt the walls closing in he tried to take a swing at Hidoko. Hidoko was able to easily restrain him and therefore Donald blew his cover for nothing. He also wasn't smart enough to hide why he crashed the rocket because a quick financial search showed that he had gambling debts that miraculously disappeared right around the same time he changed the code, so Donald was questioned and the team leaned on him because they had heard from the other team in the field. They learned that the rocket was carrying top secret government payload and that three federal agents looking for it had been murdered. And so Donald was looking at charges of murder as well as treason.

After he heard that, Donald started telling NCIS everything. He told them that a man approached a few days ago offering to pay his debts and that he got half the money to crash the rocket and that he'd get the other half after they get the payload. Donald said the guy that paid him was Franco Martinez and Martinez was too low-level to be the mastermind of everything that happened. The team knew that Martinez was working for someone and so Mosley told them to use Donald. Donald was going to call Martinez and ask him to rearrange his payment. The plan was to give Donald a USB that he would claim could help Martinez find the payload much quicker and that in exchange Donald wanted his money right away instead of after anyone got the payload.

Donald was nervous, but he did as they asked and was forced to change the plan midway because Martinez demanded to take Donald to his boss. His boss as it turns out was Sajad Khadem. Khadem was an Iranian businessman and the reason he wanted the payload so bad that he was willing to kill for it because the top-secret payload had the capabilities of tracking the Iranian nuclear program from space. So everyone wanted this payload from Khadem to the US Government and the people that ended up finding it was a couple out in the woods camping. The couple had radioed that they found something and unfortunately everyone had heard that. Sam and Callen had needed to act fast to rescue the couple and they were luckily able to get the two out alive and protect the payload. What they couldn't do was figure out who was the spy.

There was a spy within the DOD that had tipped off the Iranian about the payload and so the guys waited until one of them tried to make a run for it in order to catch the thief in the act. Except they had all liked Melissa Gates. She had been funny and goofy, so her betrayal had blindsided everyone. It luckily hadn't affected how things played out with the other team and Khadem. Khadem had tried to kill Donald after finding out Donald was talking to the feds and so Kensi and Deeks both moved in. They saved Donald's life and they captured Khadem even if he wasn't talking.

Summary: NCIS and FBI investigate the case of a Marine killed by a new synthetic opioid. At days end, Deeks shares his dream of opening a bar.

FBI Agent Zoe Morris broke into a hospital morgue because she thought a recent John Doe might be important. Zoe was a newbie. She was just starting out and had already made a name for herself as someone to watch when she reached out to NCIS. She told them that one of her contacts at the hospital morgue had called her about a body and that she had gone down there to check it out because she believes her source had been onto something. Zoe had herself been told that the victim looked like they served in the armed forces and the tattoo she had later seen on the victim had her believing he could have been a Marine however she told both Sam and Callen that she suspected their Marine was murdered by someone using a nerve agent.

Zoe described John Doe as a someone between Nick Nolte and the creature from "Stranger Things". She said his death couldn't have been natural and so she convinced the guys into going down to the morgue to see the body themselves. They all went to the morgue and were walking when they heard strange noises coming from one of the freezers, so they opened it and they found the doctor in charge of the morgue. He had gotten beaten up and thrown into there after a couple of guys broke in. He said that the men had taken the body he told Zoe about and so Zoe had been right when she said that there was a case.

Zoe and the guys talked to the doctor for a while before they got everything they could from it and by then the guys had agreed that they should work with the FBI to find out what was going on, but it turns out Zoe hadn't been working an official case. She had gone rogue and had pushed the guys into going rogue as well. They hadn't known that Zoe had pulled them in on an unsanctioned case until EAD Mosley with the trio and called out Zoe for what she did. She later admitted that she hadn't fully been honest and so she laid everything out for them. Zoe told them that the FBI had gotten an anonymous tip several weeks ago about a powerful opioid being shipped in.

This opioid was so strong that it could affect agents handling it and it could easily be turned into a nerve agent. Zoe said they had gotten the tip and then weeks went by without happening until her source called a case that didn't look like a typical opioid overdose. She had tried to tell her bosses about it and they wouldn't sign off on an investigation. The FBI actual officials said Zoe liked to rundown every possible tip even if it led to a lot of dead ends and that they didn't have the budget to keep pandering to her. And so that's when she got the bright idea to go rogue and had also lied to ensure she would get some kind of backup.

Zoe said she wasn't sorry and that it was justified. Mosley had disagreed and had asked Sam to take back to the boatshed while they clean up the mess. Callen hadn't wanted to accompany his partner because he had had enough of dealing with a millennial and so it took Hetty talking to him realize he shouldn't have been so dismissive. He had done the same thing as Zoe did and on more than one occasion. Callen was once a hotshot who rarely thought things through and that he realize that Zoe was still just figuring herself out. She needed guidance and Callen thought she could learn that by staying on the case.

The evidence had already proven that Zoe had been right about the lethal opioid and so Callen got the FBI to officially sign off on a joint task force. NCIS would be taking the lead and Zoe would get the chance to continue with her investigation yet the guys let Zoe know to take things down a notch. She was a little bit too gung-ho and so the guys let her watch while they interviewed their latest lead. The team had managed to contact someone that knew John Doe enough to know his real name had been Gabe and where he lived, so they went to Gabe's apartment and ran right into someone that had broken in. And that's how they came to arrest a suspect and find a new lead.

The guy was pretty much out because he was clearly on something when they questioned him and luckily that worked in NCIS's favor. They got their guy to tell them that he broke in because Gabe had stolen product from his boss and so he was able to give them a name of his boss. His boss was some wannabe big drug dealer and he hadn't known how powerful the opioid was which was why Gabe died like he did. Neither the boss nor the victim had had the victim killed because why would they when they needed to know where the drugs were and so Gabe died because he had gotten too close to the product.

The team later identified Gabe and Gabe Schroeder. He was a former Marine and he had been working as a handyman since he left the armed forces. Gabe hadn't had savings or a significant other and so he was practically invisible until he tried to do the right thing. He found out someone was bringing in drugs and had reported it to the FBI. Then when they hadn't done anything, he had stolen the drugs and had hidden them in a rented storage unit because he wanted to stop those drugs flooding the streets. That's how he got sick and he had been driving to the hospital when he eventually died.

And no one would have known about it if it hadn't been for Zoe, so she went with the team when they went to arrest their drug dealer and together they stopped him from ever pushing those kinds of drugs.

They had even attended Gabe's funeral afterward and had had a small reception back at Deeks's new bar that he hoped would help serving members find a familiar face.

Summary: NCIS investigates the murder of a federal prison inmate who was the adopted daughter of a notorious counterfeiter. Also, Callen is summoned by the ATF Internal Affairs board to discuss Anna Kolcheck's actions during a joint NCIS and ATF case.

Callen wasn't too averse about trying out new things: he had hated the new coffee place that replaced his old one because he didn't like change and so everyone had made fun of it because of his old man ways. They told him that he was cutting himself off from enjoying what else was out there and eventually their words left an impact. Callen thought maybe he was being a little stubborn and decided to try out meditation of all things because he figured why not. He downloaded the app and had closed himself off in a dark room however he claimed it had been easy to clear his head and so Sam had had some questions. He couldn't see how Callen could have meditated for little under two minutes and told his friend that maybe he did it wrong.

Callen, on the other hand, said he maybe he was able to master it faster than everyone else. He did it for the clarity and he claimed he got it, so Callen did his best to ignore Sam skepticism because the two had gotten called in on a case. The case revolved around Claudia Diaz. She was a Peruvian counterfeit princess that had been raised by Alphonso Marca and she turned on him to make a deal with NCIS on a different case. Claudia had gone to prison following her run-in with NCIS and they had thought everything was fine until they got the call that she had been killed in prison. She had gotten into a brawl with two women and had gotten stabbed with her own shiv though NCIS had been asked to investigate her death to determine whether or not she had been assassinated.

The two women she had gotten into a fight with were both Peruvian and so both Sam and Callen had gone to the hospital to talk to them. The ladies had each been injured in their fight with Claudia and the agents believed they might have to apply pressure to these women to get them to talk, but they got the chance to even approach them. The women had been murdered by someone lurking around the hospital and the guys had tried to capture their suspect only for him to die before they could. They had chased after him and had been there when he tried to jump from one building to another. Unfortunately, he had fallen too short for reaching the next building and so the team had lost a promising lead.

They still looked into the deceased and found out he too had been Peruvian. It hadn't been much to go on yet the team was able to form a working theory and they believe Marca used the two inmates to kill Claudia then had them killed to cover up what they knew. So the team brought in a guard that had been on duty when Claudia died. They talked to Officer Mitchell and Mitchell who had been an MP had known exactly how to answer them. She told them that everyone in the encounter had been trained and she meant Claudia as well. Claudia had known something was going to happen because she had made a shiv beforehand and so Mitchell had already looked into her visitors by the time she spoke to NCIS.

Mitchell said that had been the first time anyone had visited Claudia and the rest they found out for themselves. They learned the man that went to see Claudia claimed his name was Son Goku when in actuality it was Oscar Mori. Mori was also Peruvian and he could have delivered a message for Marca. The team went looking for him and in the meantime, they thought it best to speak to a former agent that helped them on the case. Agent DeChamps had been with Secret Service back when they knew her and it turns out she left the Secret Service to join NCIS although the guys got into a few problems when they went to go speak to her. They saw her and had been close to approached her when a couple of gunmen opened fire.

The gunmen had planned on killing one agent and, in the face of three, they lost. The guys helped Agent DeChamps take out both men and they brought her back to the base because they thought the threat to her life wasn't over. If Marca went after her, then he was going after everyone that ruined things for him in LA and so Mosley used that to continue looking into Marca. She had faced some opposition from the Secret Service and had told them that she had a part in everything because it was her team that could be in danger as well. So, Mosley, had her people move on Mori when they found him and they forced him to reveal what he was doing in LA. He had been sent by Marca and so it hadn't taken him to tell them everything. He told him that he had to deliver a message to Claudia and that he hadn't really understood it because it had been so vague.

The message had been "A supernova asked you a question". The team hadn't understood it either and so they asked about the other mission Mori had been sent on. He said that he had taken a delivery and had dropped it off at a warehouse, so Eric and Nell had found out what was happening. They found evidence that the package had been the chemical used in Japanese currency and figured Marca was trying to counterfeit their money nowadays since he had such troubles with both the US dollar and the Euro. Kensi and Deeks had been asked to follow the money while the others were going to go talk to Marca lackey that was also in prison. Callen was supposed to go with Sam and DeChamps to the visit to the prison and he couldn't because of this thing with Anna.

Anna had killed an unarmed adversary and could lose her job at ATF, however, Callen had been the first person at the scene and so ATF what to know what he saw. He talked to Anna and she told him just tell the truth. He had come in after she shot the guy and she hadn't wanted Callen to risk his own principles by lying to cover for her. She said she wasn't worth it. The two knew their relationship was over by that point and so she thought Callen would tell the truth except he wasn't sure if he should. He had pushed his meeting with ATF because he friends had found out that Kensi and Deeks were walking right into a trap. They found out the ranch the two went to was where Marca housed his American tactical team.

The tactical team was all that was left of Marca's operations in California because the man had been smart enough to move everything out of the state once NCIS nearly destroyed his business.

Only Marca hadn't killed Claudia, it had actually been another crime family and they had wanted Marca so focused on what was happening in the States that he took his eye off the ball in Peru, so even after they dispense with the tactical unit, the team knew that they needed to keep an eye on Marca.

Summary: Sam is shot during a firefight with a cartel, and a suspect reveals new information on the whereabouts of Spencer Williams, the man who kidnapped Mosley's son five years ago.

The team found themselves when they tried to stop a gang from selling fully automatic weapons. The team had had a C.I. that gave them incriminating information on this gang that was shopping around these dangerous weapons. The team had no reason to doubt what they had heard and so they arranged to "buy" the weapons however the gang found out it was a sting and even learned that they had a leaker. They killed the C.I. and had tried to kill the federal agents as well. The team had barely gotten into the building when bullets started to fly and it had taken them splitting up to deal with different parties before the team could actually stop to assess their situation. They had managed to kill almost everyone on the scene and so there had just been one person left to question.

Miguel Reyes hadn't been injured in the fighting. He had been clear-headed and therefore the team didn't question bringing him back to the boat shed. They knew that Miguel must have known something about the weapons and how the gang got their hands on them, so Callen brought him to the interrogation room to question him. Miguel was asked about the weapons and he claimed that everything had been handled by Juan. Juan, unfortunately, died in the conflict and that meant knowing he had been in charge wasn't helping out Miguel. Miguel was the one facing life in prison and Callen warned him that eventually, everyone would move on with their lives if he didn't give them something to go on.

So, that had gotten through to Miguel. He said he may not have known all the details though he knew the name of the broker that was supposed to work with the gang and potential buys. Miguel said the broker's name is Spencer Williams. William was a familiar name to Callen. Callen remembered the case he worked with ATF on trying to capture Williams and he also knows that Mosley had been looking for Williams. The broker had fled the country five years ago with her son Derrick and so Mosley had hoped to find him would lead her to her son. And so when Callen had heard Williams's name mentioned in this case, he right away called Mosley and notified her that Williams had been in the country.

Mosley had immediately gone running to the boat shed. She had wanted the chance to interrogate Miguel herself and she had tried pushing all to no avail. Miguel kept reiterating that he didn't know anything more than Williams's name and so Mosley decided to try a different tactic. She told the team that she would be taking Miguel to ATF and she had even turned down Callen's offer to go with her, so that alerted Callen. He suspected something else could be happening and had asked both Kensi and Deeks to follow Mosley. Mosley was technically their boss yet Callen asked them to ignore that because he gave them an order and so they followed Mosley. She hadn't gone to ATF like she suggested and had instead stopped at a deserted building.

Kensi and Deeks noticed that their boss was taking her time in the building and so they went in there after her. They found Mosley in a windowless room with a badly beaten Miguel. Miguel's face was so swollen that everyone knew they couldn't possibly cover up what happened to him and Deeks for one hadn't wanted to cover it up. He knew what happened was wrong and had hated it when Mosley demanded they retake Miguel. By bringing Miguel back into their custody, they would have to file a report downplaying what happened to Miguel suffering and Deeks wasn't sure he wanted to be part of a coverup. He took Miguel back to the boatshed with Kensi and together they confronted Callen.

Callen knew that something could happen and Deeks wanted to know why. He's had issues in the past with Mosley and her way of doing things, but her risking everyone's job demanded explanation and Sam agreed with him. Sam had gotten shot earlier when they were apprehending Miguel and he shouldn't have been back on the job. Except Sam heard about Williams and had wanted to help his friends. Sam told Callen that part of helping Mosley was widening the team that could help her retrieve her son and so Callen told them. They learned that Mosley had a son with William that William had kidnapped and that Callen had promised to help get her son back. The others didn't know how to react when they heard the full story and so Mosley walking in had just made everything worse.

Mosley had gotten angry with Callen. He supposedly betrayed her trust when he told her secret to everyone and so Deeks tried to point out to Mosley how she was taking her anger out at the wrong people. She couldn't shout at Callen for filling them in. It was something Deeks said she should have done herself and so he started telling her everything she's been doing wrong. Like how she claimed she was bringing the team together when she was forcing them to keep secrets! Deeks was so angry that he wasn't listening to Kensi when she told him to calm down and so the only thing that stopped him from pushing Mosley even further had been Mosley firing him. She said he was fired and that he should return to the LAPD by the end of the day.

Mosley wanted her son back so bad that she lost all sense of control. She'd beaten a man in custody, she fired Deeks, and she wasn't done. She also found out that Williams was speaking to a Mexican General and had both Nell and Eric bug his phones without a proper court order. Mosley hadn't cared whose careers she was burning to the ground because all she could think about was her son. Her son who was later overheard on the phone tap. He was happy, well-adjusted, and it sounded like he was being raised by a nanny. There was no reason to rush to his side because he was safe and so Callen tried to find a way to slow down Mosley. He talked to Hetty and had asked for her help in ensuring the team was safe no matter what happened.

Summary: Despite several team members having grave reservations, NCIS travels to Mexico for a daring mission to locate and rescue Mosley's son.

Hetty agreed to help because she too saw how out of control Mosley was. She tried to talk to Mosley about her methods and Mosley refused to be reasoned with. Mosley said that everyone had agreed to help and that no one was being coerced, which was technically true. Callen may have written the situation off a custody fight however everyone else was concerned about the ten-year-old they thought could be in danger. He was growing up around armed men and had a father with many enemies. The team figured the faster he was reunited with his mother the better and so they worked around the clock to find out where he was. It turns out he was on a compound in Mexico with his father.

His father did all of his business out of that compound and so the team had had satellite imaging. They caught Williams leaving frequently and had even seen General Arturo Vasquez coming and going. So, what they didn't see was the kid. Derrick never left the compound and so Callen suggested they go down there for reconnaissance. He thought it best if they found out the compound's weaknesses before they went down there and that's when Mosley announced a reconnaissance mission was no longer possible. She said that Hidoko went there once they found out where Derek was and that she didn't have a backup. Mosley also added she hadn't known about Hidoko until the agent was already in the air and so she was going to need the team to speed up their plan.

They said they'd go down there first thing though neither Callen nor Hetty liked this new plan. They thought there weren't enough precautions in place and so Hetty tried talking to Mosley again. Mosley needed to slow down and she refused to. She told Hetty that she had been in charge for a while and that she knew where all the bodies were buried. Mosley had to threaten Hetty to back down and so going forward Hetty had been more careful. Hetty had snuck Deeks on the team's plane because she knew Deeks would want to protect them and she hadn't been wrong. Deeks may have gotten fired, except that hadn't mattered when it comes to his team or Kensi. Kensi and Deeks were supposed to be getting married and sadly that was up in the air.

The two fought over when was the best time to leave NCIS. Deeks had gotten Kensi's promise that she would consider it and it turns out she never did. Kensi didn't ever want to leave NCIS and she was willing not to have kids just so she could stay in a job that she loved, however, Deeks did want kids and he wanted to put their very dangerous jobs one day behind them. He had honestly told Kensi that he wasn't sure if they should still get married when they want different things and with their argument still very much fresh in both their minds — it had been an uncomfortable plane ride to Mexico. They hadn't talked to each other and hadn't wanted the others to know that there was a problem.

They instead hid what was going on in order to focus on finding both Derek and Hidoko. Hidoko never checked in when she reached Los Mochis and so the team went looking for her. They traveled to the last place her comms sent her location and they hadn't found Hidoko. They did find ashes from a huge fire and sadly there had been bone fragments in the ashes. The team all assumed that Hidoko had been burnt to death when they found out and the only one that was in the slightest hopeful was Mosley. Mosley had never lost an agent before and she hadn't been prepared to write off someone she purposely chose for her team. She told the others to keep looking until they found her and then locked herself in her office.

Hetty had seen how Mosley was handling the news that Hidoko could be dead and had tried to help. She gave the team the name of a man that could help them in Mexico and had also asked Nell to do something for her. Hetty had Nell help Mosley to make a video. Nell explained to Mosley that the guys would confuse Derek if they tried to pick him up because Derek wouldn't know that they were the good guys. At least, not unless his mother makes a video in which she tells him that its safe to go with her friends. Mosley understood the video was for her son and so she had no problem with doing it. It's just unfortunate that it got her thinking and she believed her place wasn't waiting for her son in LA.

Mosley traveled down to Mexico and everyone thought she would ruin the mission. It turns out they were wrong! The guys speed things up and they got Kensi into the compound by pretending she was a horse handler hired to take Derek riding. The plan worked as in she gained admission yet she made the mistake of saying Williams hired her and Williams had still been on the compound. He had Kensi brought inside and was about to question her when the others decided to hell with it. They stormed the place and that allowed Kensi to free herself before grabbing Derek. Derek and Kensi went over the wall where Deeks had a car so that they could drive to the chopper and everything had been going good when Derek began questioning their plan. He said he wanted to speak with his dad and he would have run away when the car stopped only he saw his mom.

Mosley being there had stopped her son from running back to his father and so she saved the plan. She also got on the chopper with Derek, but not before thanking Deeks. Deeks had wanted Kensi to get on the helicopter because there had been room for her and she refused to go. She wouldn't leave the others and had asked him if he was going to go back for them with her. He decided to go. They both picked up the guys and were heading to another extraction point when they ran into the General's men. The men launched a rocket at their car and they hadn't been able to clear it in time. Their car got hit and it remains a mystery if they're all alive!

Summary: Callen, Sam and Kensi, along with an unconscious Deeks, search for a safe way out of Mexico, while a cartel boss places a bounty on their heads.

The team found themselves in such a situation because they had gone to Mexico. It wasn't an official trip and so they hadn't had any sort of backup when they decided to go a town rife with corruption however they all felt they had to go because it was for EAD Mosley. Mosley had lost her son after her ex kidnapped him and fled. She had had no idea where her son was taken until she had gotten a tip off and had traced it down to the small town. Mosley had wanted to go down there herself and just grab her son, so the only way the team could talk her out of that was by saying they could get him. They promised to rescue Derrick and bring him to her. Mosley had said she trusted them and she allowed them to go to Mexico. And while they were down there they realized rescuing the boy was going to be a battle.

Derrick's father was an arms dealer. He even had the Mexican military working for him and so they acted as a backup when people at the compound realized someone was trying to break in. The story the team had used was that they were horse trainers and that they were there to give Derrick a pony ride but that story only works if his father wasn't in residence and unfortunately he was. He saw that they were trying to get into his home and he called for backup. The military was arriving by the time the team managed to find Derrick and get him off the compound. They were trying to take him back to a chopper when the kid put a fight. He hadn't known any of them and he wanted to go home to be with his dad because that's where he felt safe. Derrick began resisting and he would have refused to go on the helicopter if his mother hadn't been there.

Mosley hadn't been able to help herself. She flew down with the exit helicopter and seeing her had been enough to reassure Derrick that it was safe because he remembered his mother. Mosley had taken her son to the chopper and she wanted the team to come with yet they had to turn down the offer because they hadn't gotten everyone. They had left two of their own behind because they placed getting Derrick out as their priority and so Mosley was forced to leave them behind. She knew she could arrange for another helicopter to come to get them while she got her son to the nearest airport and so she left them. And that came back to bite her when she had to answer for it with the man running their unit back in LA — former Navy Admiral Hollace Kilbride. Kilbride had gotten called in by Hetty and then Hetty did a runner. So he suddenly decided to be in charge!

Kilbride had found out about the mission and what happened to the team after Mosley left. Therefore, he informed her what happened. How the team had never made it to the helicopter because their car had gotten by a rocket launcher and that odds were that all four were dead however he wanted to definitely if they were dead. He ordered Mosley to return to the scene to confirm things and he had given her enough time to settle things with her son before she next had to report in. Only Killbride had been angry. He thought that the team was dead and that five agents might have gone on suicide missions just to appease Mosley. Mosley was the one he blamed and so it was good thing Hetty wasn't around because Kilbride might have made certain calls to ensure she got her job back meanwhile Mosley would have been shown the door.

But the team hadn't been like poor Hidoko. They had survived the rocket launcher and had managed to escape the cartel thanks to Hetty. Hetty had made a few calls to people that owe her a favor and one of them got the four agents out of harm's way. They eventually had to split up to better their chances and so Sam went with Callen while Kensi took Deeks. Deeks hadn't woken up like the others and for a while that had scared Kensi yet, she had kept her hopes up until he did awake and together they thought they met a good Samaritan. Some guy driving around on a motorbike had offered them a lift to the hospital and he said they just had to wait for his wife to come with the car. Neither Kensi nor Deeks should have trusted him only they gave him the benefit of the doubt and it turns out his wife had come with the car.

They said they were going to take the couple to the hospital when the truth was they were going to take them back to the compound because someone placed a high price on their heads but Kensi and Deeks managed to take out the married couple and they even stole the car. So they were able to make it to the hospital and they found out saw did Sam and Callen. The guys had met a young boy and the boy's family had been real Samaritans who brought them to the hospital. The team knew that they couldn't stay in one place for too long and they were working out a way to medevac everyone out of there when the cartel arrived. They were going to come in and kill everyone though before they could, Mosley had returned and she killed her ex. And once the hitmen knew that there was no left to pay them they decided to leave.

So Mosley had saved the team and Hetty had come through with getting everyone out of there with one of the many favors she called in.

And so the only one that wasn't happy was Kilbride because he had to inform Hidoko's family about what happened to her. He could have left that job to Mosley only he hadn't wanted her anywhere near the grieving family and his problems with the EAD weren't suddenly over because the rest of her team was rescued. Kilbride knew that Mosley was happy that she had gotten her son and he suspected that she had been the one to kill her ex, so he asked if she knew the cost of her actions and she did. Either she ends up getting fired or she'll be severely demoted.

Summary: A prototype tactical assault suit is stolen from a Navy base and used in a jewelry heist; the team must determine who stole the suit and what their next target is; retired Navy Admiral Hollace Kilbride temporarily oversees the team.

Someone managed to steal twelve million in loose jewelry and watches in under five minutes. The merchandise had been in a secure vault with four armed guards at the door. Somehow, the thief managed to hospitalize those guards and erase any footage of he or them leaving the building. It was like they were a ghost. The local police hadn't wanted to touch this case because they weren't sure how far they'll go with they what they saw at the crime scene and so they passed it off to NCIS. The team were federal agents after all and they had more resources at their back than LAPD, however, the team had run into some of the same problems. They had looked at the crime scene that indicated that there had only been one thief and then they saw evidence that said this person came with some heavy artillery that no one person could carry around alone.

Sam had gone to the crime scene and neither nor Special Agent Nicole DeChamps knew what they were looking at. They had been confused and had needed their techies for help. Nell had luckily come across something that she thought explained everything. She found footage from outside and it showed the thief as well as what he was wearing. The thief had on ballistic armor and Nell had been surprised to see it because armor such as that was technically still in its testing stage. This armor had guns, explosives, and was impenetrable. It was going to revolutionize things once all the kinks had been worked out and so Nell with Eric's help had put out feelers. They wanted to see who had this armor and how it could have possibly gotten out.

It turns the people were working on it at a base on the east coast and the man in charge of the armor hadn't noticed that it went missing while he was on duty. The man's name was Master Chief Lincoln Briones. He had since disappeared himself and so the team believed it might have been him wearing the armor. He was familiar with it thanks to his job and was a Navy SEAL. Briones was taught how to be adaptable and he could have used that experienced to take on the suit, but if that's the case then no one believed Briones was done with just one vault. He could have broken into one vault without any need for the armor and so the team believed he was just getting started on a crime wave.

The footage they found had also showed that the thief took a truck and the truck was followed to a car repair. Sam went with Nicole and the guy that ran the place was into shady things and a coward. He hadn't wanted to be arrested or transferred out of state and so he said where the guy that drove it went. The agents then passed the message to Kensi and Deeks and the two ended up finding Briones. He had been shot dead and there had been some yelling in the back. The yelling had come from Briones's nephew. It seems the nephew was at the root of everything. He had been tied up and had tape over his mouth when the agents found him yet once he found out what happened to his uncle he started talking.

The nephew took part in illegal car races. He was winning until he lost and what he lost was his car. He tried to buy it back by loaning money from a man named Rob Durant and so eventually Durant came demanding his money. Only the nephew hadn't the money. He was living in an apartment that his uncle was paying for and unfortunately that made Durant look into this uncle. When he found out that this uncle worked on a Navy base, he kidnapped Briones's wife and daughter. He then told Briones to go get him the most dangerous weapon on base and that if he didn't like it when both wife and daughter would be shot in front of him. So that's when Briones stole the ballistic armor and handed it over to a man like Durant.

Durant was crazy and his girlfriend was even crazier. The nephew told NCIS that the pair wouldn't care about his aunt or his eight-year-old cousin and he pleaded with them to find them in time. Kensi and Deeks ended up finding the two in a trunk. The little girl had needed some resuscitation before she regained consciousness and had otherwise been fine, but Durant and his girlfriend Rachel Conway were still out there and they were the problem. Durant was former police and after he was fired from the job he moved onto robbing banks. He was the chief suspect in one particular robbery and the FBI had never found enough evidence to get him. And so it made sense that after he ran the risk of exposure that Durant would return to his roots.

Sam and Nicole tracked him back to the Gardenia Casino. They had been given orders by Admiral Kilbride to contain the shooter rather than confront him and the team. The agents had understood that order to mean that no one should risk their own lives trying to stop Durrant on their own and so it was the local police that hadn't gotten that. The Gardenia Police had ignored them when they said to stay back and two officers died because they drove up too close to Durant. They were right in his blast region and had thought they were safe if they used their squad car to shield them. They believed they could penetrate the armor that way yet the armor had covered pretty much every part of Durant's body. He was fully protected! There was no place where he was susceptible and after he killed those officers — Sam truly tried to take down Durant. Durant couldn't be killed from afar and so the officers had been right on that.

Only Sam knew there was another way to get close to Durrant. He received backup with Kensi and Deeks and he asked them to rain fire on their shooter. It couldn't kill him and so Sam was just trying to distract him long enough to get in Durant's face. From there, the team worked together to shoot the gun of Durant's hand and give Sam the chance to fight him with hand to hand combat. Sam had struggled at first with getting past that armor and so it was by pure chance that he managed to push the armor away from Durrant's neck just long enough to shoot him. And so Sam got very lucky and while they hadn't been able to arrest Durrant they still got his girlfriend Rachel.

The team had done good work and they went to visit Callen afterwards to see how far he's come with his recuperation, but while he loves those guys, he hadn't told them that chances are neither Hetty nor Mosley were going to be allowed back to run the team.

Callen had talked to Admiral Kilbride and Kilbride admitted he was there for the long haul.

Summary: Callen and Sam are assigned to protect a deputy prince whose decoy is assassinated.

The team was on their own with this latest case because Admiral Kilbride flew back to DC. The team didn't know why he left town or whether it had something to do with Hetty and Mosley and so they decided to focus on what's in front of them. In this case! They were informed that a threat was made on someone's life. The person that was being threatened was Deputy Crown Prince Kamal of Saudi Arabia and the only reason he's alive is that he had a decoy travel his route to the hotel. The assassin had gotten close enough to this decoy to know he wasn't the real thing and so that's why they hadn't shot the decoy when they had the chance. The assassin also hadn't killed anyone on the prince's security team and that had been unusual. It states that whoever was making the threat was focused on one goal and didn't want to hurt anyone else.

The team thought the threat to the prince was serious and they had some questions. They wanted to know why the prince hadn't simply gotten back on his private plane when the threat to his life proved credible, they wanted to know why the prince hadn't changed his plans seeing as he wanted to stay his full vacation, and lastly they wanted to know how someone had gotten their hands on his travel schedule. The assassin had known which route the State Department was going to be taking and that might mean there was a leak. Naturally, the State Department denied the allegation. They said nothing could have come from their camp and mentioned that all the plans had been made by the prince himself. The prince was in town because his country was finally ready to open the doors to Hollywood.

Saudi Arabia had a reputation that the prince wanted to change. Prince Kamal wanted to bring in investment and the only way he could that was by setting up several meetings. He was meeting people from every corner of the film industry and he had brought along a large entourage, however, the team wanted to know why the prince was getting to make all the calls with the State Department. Agent Brian Bush was the same man that had forcibly taken Callen's father from him and, despite that, Callen still believed Bush wouldn't have played so fast with one of his charges. So the guys asked Bush what was going on and Bush admitted that he couldn't take the lead with the prince. Prince Kamal was a wealthy billionaire and his country had control over vast amounts of oil. And so the prince got to decide what happened and what the guys wore.

Sam and Callen had been outfitted for suits. The prince said he wanted his protection team to be fashionable and he hadn't liked the guy's casual attire because he said he couldn't be seen with guys that wore those clothes, but the guys went ahead with wearing the suits and they hadn't minded it too much. What did bug them, however, was the prince's attitude. He seemed fine with people trying to kill him and so they asked why that was. The prince said that his brother, his father, and various members of his family had been assassinated. It didn't even surprise him that someone would kill him now as well. He said if it was meant to be then it will happen and until then he was going to keep living his life. The prince continued with all of his business meetings and the guys had gone along with his plan because they knew the members of their team were already looking into the assassin.

Kensi and Deeks had been following leads and they were led to a motel where they found someone strapped to a chair. The person that was being held was a masseuse. She had taken a job when someone drugged her and tied her up. The person that did this also took her massage chair and so they asked this woman if she had any other clients for the day. It turns out she had been called by someone in the prince's entourage and so the duo called the guys to warn about a woman dressed as a masseuse. The guys later spotted her before she could get to the prince and they chased her before she ultimately got away. Only they had seen this woman's face and so they knew who she was. It was Joelle! As in Callen's ex who was a former CIA Agent that used him and then needed his help.

The last time the guys saw Joelle they had been helping her fake her death. It was done to protect her family and they thought that would be the last time they ever saw her, except here she was again and the guys didn't know why. She was last looking into an organization called the Syndicate. The Syndicate were a bunch of rogue agents that were operating without a country and they were dangerous. Joelle had been so frightened of them that she moved her family and faked her own death to make sure that there wouldn't be in danger though why she was back in town was something Joelle eventually decided to answer for herself. She later showed up at the boathouse and she told them what she found. She had made a connection between the Syndicate and a company called 2GS.

The company was a front for shady business deals and assassinations. It was 2GS that wanted to kill the prince and it was Joelle stopping them. She said that's why she went after the decoy. Joelle said she knew the decoy was a fake the whole time and that she only did what she did because she wanted to scare the prince into leaving the country. Joelle said that she had a source inside 2GS that was willing to come forward and that until her source could testify that she needed to keep the prince alive. She also added that she could identify the real rogue agents that wanted to kill Prince Kamal and so she was willing to work with NCIS. It was NCIS that hadn't been sure about her. Joelle had burned a lot of bridges with the team and no one else had even known that she was still alive. The guys had kept it from the others and were forced to defend their actions when the truth came out.

Joelle apologized to people she offended and learned to speak respectfully to Nell once Nell pulled a gun on her. So Joelle was later trusted enough that she went out in the field to help the guys. She said she could ID the real assassin and so she was with Callen when they were moving the prince. Prince Kamal had been convinced about his safety and he was going home, but before he did, a rogue CIA agent tried to kill him and it had been Joelle that stopped her. The woman was a few years behind Joelle and Joelle said she never liked her.

Nevertheless, Joelle did as she said she would and she saved the prince's life.

She had done such a good job that the team thought Joelle could go home now. They said the Syndicate would have heard about her being back and Joelle agreed with them however she didn't want to go back home.

Joelle didn't want to face her family and explain what happened, so she chose to run away and this time no one stopped her.

Summary: The team is in danger when their pictures are included on a cartel hit list.

The last time anyone has seen Hetty was right before the rescue in Mexico. She sort of disappeared after that and didn't even bother to show up at a disciplinary hearing in Washing. Hetty left EAD Mosley to face Washington on her own and its been a never-ending battle for her. She got several reprimanded when she faced the bosses and she had come back out to LA to pick where she let off both professionally and personally, but for some reason, she was followed. Admiral Kilbride came back and he came with friends. He came with Deputy Director Ochoa and a special prosecutor from the Justice Department.

The special prosecutor was John Rogers. He's had some run-ins with the admiral and the admiral was not a fan. He had actually been excused from the meeting with Mosley and so he watched everything unfold from the peanut gallery. He was with the team when someone remembered Kensi could read lips and the admiral backed them. He, like everyone else, wanted to know what was happening in the meeting and unfortunately, Kensi hadn't had anything good to say. She saw how bad it was when Mosley lawyered up and once Mosley had left it had gotten really good. The special prosecutor wanted to make an example out of everyone that went to Mexico, including the team.

Rogers was also questioning the kidnapping. He started to say "alleged kidnapping" when the Deputy Director shot him down, only he believes that the Mexico trip was unnecessary and he clearly wants to prove that was the case for the official record. The team was in jeopardy because of this ongoing situation and Sam and Callen were talking about it as they reported to the scene of a crime. They got a call from their friend Sabatino and they didn't know why they were called until Sabatino told them about the crime. A man by the name of Collins was executed and his killer had gotten away though not before the killer left behind his "hit list".

The killer was a cartel hitman. He had the whole team on his list and he was trying to get to them by the photo he had in his possession. This hitman didn't need to worry about finding Mosley because somehow he had gotten her file. He knew where she lived and he was going to go after her as well as her son Derrick. Derrick was still a kid and so it didn't make sense why anyone would go after him. That is until the guys remembered they were dealing with the cartel. The cartel was known for going full scorched earth and they wanted to make a point with Mosley. There was a million dollar price tag on her head and so it didn't have to be the hitman they were tracking — it could be anyone.

The team decided to trace the list to see if they could not get the person and they also needed to explain themselves to Mosley. Mosley had been in a session with her lawyer and no one wanted to disturb her, but they ultimately told her what was happening and by then it had been dressing. They already had someone watching her son and someone at her house. So her family was safe and the team even gotten a lead on where the hit list came from. The traced it back to a restaurant and found a computer savvy granddaughter that tried to run when confronted with the NCIS. And so the team had to chase after her.

They were able to catch her when Deeks knocked her out with his frisbee skills and, once they had her, they questioned her. They demanded to know who was behind the list because they knew it couldn't be her and she tried to answer with them excuses. She said her grandmother's restaurant was failing and that she needed the money. The team had already figured that part out and so they asked her about who she was in contact with. She said that she met a guy every week in Echo Park and they were able to trace that lead back to Hector Leyva. He was actually involved with the cartel and so the team went to his location.

Back at the office, however, Mosley had almost gotten herself arrested. She knew that her son was safe because the team told her so and so it was classic Mosley when she still wanted to her son with mini-armory in her bag. Both her lawyer and the Deputy Director told her to calm down. They said she was at risk of getting arrested and that she couldn't afford to give Rogers anything he could use against her. She soon got to see her son anyways because he was brought to her and so her lawyer tried to reason with her. The lawyer wanted Mosley to throw Hetty under the bus and say it was all Hetty's fault.

Mosley knew if she did that, not only would she would lose her team, she would have also destroyed Hetty's career. She wasn't sure she wanted to return Hetty's help by betraying her and was still considering her options when the team once again got in some trouble. The agents that had gone after Leyva had gotten into a shoot-out that resulted in the death of four cartel members and no one was happier to learn of this than Rogers. Rogers wanted to go after the team for more than just Mexico. He asked Eric about the time he was out in the field and had to kill two people. He also crowed that the team was making things too easy on him when he learned of the four dead.

It didn't matter that the team hadn't opened fire first. What mattered was what could be laid at their door and Rogers very clearly wanted to label this team as "negligent". Mosley seemed as if she realized this when she approached Rogers alone and asked him what she should she do to make the case against her go away.

Hetty had also realized something was happening and she called Callen to warn him that he should stop worrying about her.

She said she was safe and that she'll keep an eye on the team but she wanted Callen to just stay focused on keeping the team safe.

And so now Callen has no idea what's happening.

Summary: Deeks is worried for informant Elizabeth Williams when she is arrested during an undercover. Also, Callen meets with ATF Agent Anna Kolcheck who remains on suspension following her last joint case with NCIS.

Deeks's former CI Tiffany Williams was back in trouble. Deeks has tried to be there Tiffany. She was deeply involved with his former partner Detective Boyle and Deeks thought he owed her because of that. Only she keeps getting into trouble. Tiffany had gotten picked up on a drug charge and just managed to stay out of prison. She had been given parole and was told to keep her nose clean however she hadn't been able to do that and be an informant for Deeks. Deeks had needed Tiffany to return to prostitution because one of her johns had reportedly stolen something from the Navy and sold it to a hostile government. The guy's name was Phillip Robbins and he was obsessed with Tiffany. Tiffany was the only in they had and so they used her to get as much information as they could on Robbins. And then the plan was halted because Tiffany got arrested again.

Tiffany was arrested for prostitution and that violated her parole. She was arrested and she had hoped that her lawyer would get her off, but bungled things in the courtroom. He filed something wrongly and the judge was willing to teach him a lesson because of that. She had Tiffany remanded to jail until her trial and so the plan to use Tiffany to get Robbins was useless. The whole team had been upset when they found out what happened and no one was angrier than Deeks. Deeks thought the initial drug charge had been bogus and that someone had messed up when she was booked at the station. He also thought that the lawyer was useless and had gotten in the lawyer's face about what happened. The lawyer basically ignored him and had laughed what happened because he was getting paid either way.

The team had talked to Tiffany's mother and she had told him that one of Tiffany's friends were paying for the lawyer. The guy was supposedly from a big law firm and so he shouldn't have made such a stupid mistake yet Sam and Callen decided to look into why he might have. They had Eric check to see who was paying the lawyer and the trail went back to Robbins. Robbins was still in town and he was paying for a useless lawyer. It didn't make sense unless Robbins was purposely paying the guy to lose his case and so the guys thought Tiffany's cover was blown. They knew that they had to get Tiffany out of prison as soon as possible or she risked getting killed and so the team decided to use Kilbride's absence to their benefit. They arranged for one of them to get legally accredited and then took over Tiffany's defense.

They also arranged for someone to talk to Tiffany on the inside. She was assured that they were getting out of there and they told her about her change in lawyers. Tiffany had been pleased when she learned that they were going to be upsetting Robbins and so she had every confidence that Deeks would get her out of this mess. He had been the only one that hadn't believed her drug charges were real and he had been right in the end. The team had spotted Robbins talking to Vanessa Brown. Brown was former LAPD when she abruptly fired after some drugs went missing in her care and the fact she still had friends on the force could explain how they managed to get Tiffany arrested again for the prostitution charges. And so the team had Eric figure out what Robbins had wanted to cover up.

Tiffany had passed on what she knew and, from there, they found out that Robbins was going to steal something from VividLock Security. Callen and Kensi were going to break in to protect the asset and unfortunately they had been too slow putting their plan into action. VividLock had already been broken into by time they got to the scene and Eric reported that he spotted Robbins on his way to the courthouse. The team knew that Robbins would go after Tiffany and so they rushed through getting her released. They had Detective Whiting from IA go speak to the ADA trying the case and eventually ADA Lopez agreed to drop the charges. Deeks and Callen were moving Tiffany and was getting her out of the building when Robbins came in. He demanded Tiffany and Callen bought the team some time. He said that he was willing to trade Tiffany if they could get the ballistics that Robbins stole and, while they were haggling, backup arrived.

Unfortunately, Robbins also had backup. His dirty cop and her people were trying to kill Tiffany anyway they could and so Deeks was forced to defend her. He's been looking out for her ever since he helped her to get clean and he found out why Tiffany hadn't revealed to them that Robbins knew about her cover. She had a friend from the old life and Robbins had beaten her up as a way to send a message to Tiffany. Tiffany hadn't said anything because her friend hadn't wanted her and so she was just being loyal. And Deeks got that. He understood why she hadn't said anything and he wanted Tiffany to go back to her quiet life because he knew that was what was best for her. And so the team thought that was it. They figured they might never everything that Robbins stole and they tried to make their peace with it.

Only as they were leaving the courthouse, they saw Anna as in Callen's Anna getting marched in wearing handcuffs.

Summary: The NCIS team attempts to locate Mosley after she murders a cartel hitman and goes off the grid.

There was no one that could protect Mosley from herself: there was a price on Mosley's head. She knew that and so she entrusted her son to Sam while she went dark. Mosley was supposed to be in hiding where no one could find her and unfortunately, someone did. She met a guy over drinks and, after she followed him back upstairs to his hotel room, they got into a fight to the death. Mosley overcame her would be killer and then fled town again however she was now the chief suspect in her date's homicide and so the BOLO out for her arrest became public knowledge. It was spotted by Eric who had his own alert for her and it was probably seen by several cops willing to pass on the information to the cartel. She was in trouble and the team knew that they had to reach out to her.

Only first they contacted the Deputy Director Ochoa. They needed the clearance to go Las Vegas and see what they could find from the crime scene yet learned something from the Deputy Director. He mentioned how LA really is the graveyard. That's what their office is known as at Quantico and its sort of true. There have been several agents with great careers that have come and died because things got out of hand. The Deputy Director said that at first he had ignored the rumors and that changed because now with Mosley he doesn't think it could end in any way besides Mosley's death. The team, on the other hand, hadn't been so sure. They went to Las Vegas and they said that there was on the way that Mosley would have gone into such a situation blind.

They believed that she knew her date was the cartel. She went up there because she thought she could get the better of him and the fight had turned nastier than she thought. Sam and Callen had seen the wreckage for themselves and they suspected that Mosley had gotten hurt in the fight. They also wanted to know why she followed the guy if she suspected him and it turns out Eric knew the truth. He later informed them that Mosley had logged into NCIS because she had been looking into the cartel members. She was apparently hunting them down and she was prepared to make deals with the devil in order to get help. She had been looking into Ella Juanega who wasn't involved with the Molinas Cartel and appeared to be a businesswoman. And so Ochio told them about Ella.

Ella Juanega was a rival cartel leader. She hated the Molinas because they killed her boyfriend and so Ochio believed that Mosley would be willing to cut a deal with Ella to take down their common enemy. He also warned the team that Mosley would most likely have to make a trade and unfortunately no one knew with what. They wanted to play it safe and shut Mosley out of NCIS though they hadn't wanted to alert the Special Prosecutor. Special Prosecutor Rogers was still in town looking for any dirt he could dig up on the team and they were all making the effort to not to draw attention to themselves. The team thought they shouldn't alert Mosley and so they chose to simply track her down. They planted a bug at Ella Juanega's house.

They then waited until Mosley contacted Ella and went to meet her. Their former boss had no idea that they were listening and so they heard her as she offered Ella a file on the whole team. She told the other woman it would help keep her business under the radar and all Mosley wanted in return was a million dollars. She needed funds to disappear with her son and she didn't care when Ella questioned using the file to kill everyone on the team. What she didn't know was that the team heard everything. They pulled over Mosley as she was driving away from the meeting and they were going to arrest her. She committed treason when she turned on her team and they would have liked to have brought her in, but there had been a shootout and Mosley escaped.

Mosley had tried to tell them that she wouldn't betray them. They just hadn't believed her and they had a hard time tracking her down again. They instead used the phone she stole to gather information on her and she said contacted the Molinas. She told them that she was bringing them a friend and so the team looked into who could that be. They were all accounted for and the only one that wasn't was Arlo Turk. He had been the man that burned his cover with the cartel to help the team escape Mexico and so the team pinged Mosley's phone to find out where the trade was happening. As it turns out Mosley had set up a meeting with Ella Juanega at the same time and at the same location. She was going to push them into starting a conflict and hope that she could survive the fallout.

The team as they were at the site that Arlo Turk was in on the plan. He had a gun when the second shoot-out happened and eventually Callen had gotten the chance to take in Mosley. Only Mosley informed she never sold out the team. She handed over aliases and gave no credible information. She asked to be let go and Callen had no other choice to allow it. He and the others had talked to Arlo after the shooting had been over and they found it had been Arlo's plan. He was going to use the shoot-out to take out two cartel leaders at the same time and Mosley was going to escape in the chaos. She really was going to go on the run with her son and with Ella's money though before she left she had given the team a gift.

Mosley took full responsibility for what happened in Mexico and the team was now in the clear with the Special Prosecutor.

They were even informed that Hetty could come back.

Summary: The team partners with the State Department after the murder of an arms dealer is connected to a series of crimes that appear to be done by someone with elite forces training.

Anna Kolcheck was looking at some real time, but she didn't want Callen or NCIS to interfere: ATF had suspended her. She, therefore, didn't have the resources to fight the murder charge nor did she want to fight it. Anna had killed a man like Sokolov because she knew that he would never stop being a danger and so that's why she took the risk. She also told Callen not to lie at her hearing. He told ATF that he came upon the crime scene after Sokolov was dead and that the victim had no weapon on him. It had been murder and that's what Anna was charged with. She was going to be spending years behind bars and she didn't want her family or Callen to visit. When they did, she told them goodbye and said to leave the investigation to the people in charge. She didn't want any special treatment and she could take care of herself from now on.

Arkady Kolcheck hadn't liked it. He wanted to fight and so did Callen for that matter however they both had to respect Anna's decision when it was all over and so that's what Callen did. He went on with his life and his job. Callen and Sam were later called in when someone died. The latest victim was Rick Dotson. Dotson was a notorious arms dealer and he had been staying at a rented house with his girlfriend Karen when he had been murdered. His girlfriend hadn't seen anything because she had been in the house at the time getting undressed and so she didn't know anything wrong until she found Dotson floating in the tides. He was just left there for anyone to find him and not long after Karen called for help she noticed that Dotson security team quit.

The security team had either taken part in what happened to Dotson or they decided to quit because they were more loyal to their checks than they were to their former employer. Luckily, NCIS didn't have such restrictions. They went to the crime scene and they swept the place to see if there was anything to indicate how the killer got in. It could have been through the front door or else the security team would have noticed it and so Eric did ballistics. He eventually found evidence that states the killer swam to the house. He came by water because it was undetectable and that's probably how he made his escape. The guys continued to check out the scene while Kensi and Deeks talked to Karen.

Karen admitted that she had been with Dotson for five years. She never heard anything about an imminent threat and so all she did have were pictures. She was shown pictures of guys she should alert the security team to in case she ever saw them and so she gave these pictures to Kensi. Karen also said that Dotson's profession shouldn't be held against him because he had been a good man at heart and he had been good to her. Karen knew that the security team failed them and she didn't think NCIS would find them because she suspected the security team would want to stay hidden after what happened. And so overall Karen didn't think or at least admit out loud any thoughts that the security team could have been behind Dotson's murder.

She thought it was one of the guys in the pictures and so Nell tracked down all three. The first one was ruled out because he was in jail, the second one didn't look like he moved from his house, and this third person that was the mystery. Nell couldn't find any information on him and luck came in handy again when Sam spotted their suspect near the scene. He gave chase and he caught him through Hamilton said he was one of the good guys. He was a former Marine working on a mysterious task force that consisted only of him. Hamilton's identification was verified to some extent because they found someone that served with him in the Marines and so it was the task force that didn't make sense.

The NCIS agents wanted to know what this task force did. Hamilton explained that someone was hunting down arms dealers, drug dealers and that he suspected it was one of theirs. He said that he had been sent because his boss figured they trained the killer and that they know best how to stop him. Hamilton had been following Dotson because he thought he could be on the list and he said that he still hadn't expected that the killer would go after Dotson so soon, but the person they're hunting was a vigilante and Hamilton warned that the killer would move onto the next one soon. So NCIS chose to trust Hamilton. They spoke to who else had been on Dotson and verified that couldn't have been any of them.

Nell and Eric had much better luck. They spotted a motorcycle near the crime scene and it disappeared right after the murder. It belonged to someone named Casey and she was once married to Daniel Aguilar. Aguilar was an Army Ranger. He had the skillset and had an agenda because it seems his son William had been murdered at their home because their neighbor had been dealing drugs. Someone had carried out a drive-by to kill the neighbor and instead, they killed nine-year-old William. After his son's death, Aguilar fell apart. His marriage broke down and he couldn't go back to his job. He found a new purpose in hunting down criminals and so that's what he did. He was onto a new kill before long and so they tracked down his motorcycle until they found him.

No one in NCIS had enjoyed protecting a drug dealer or hunting down one of their own yet it needed to be done. They found him at a restaurant as he was about to kill someone else and they stopped the assassination in time, only he didn't want to come in alive. He was so set on his task that he shot his weapon and Sam had been forced to kill him. Sam and everybody else knew that Aguilar had wanted to die. He was an expert marksman and he could have killed Sam if he wanted to. He had actually shot at the wall because that's where he was intending to shoot and so he died because he hadn't wanted to go to jail.

Hamilton and Sam later broke the news to the ex-wife and she had grieved because she still loved her husband.

She had wanted him to be saved and she always thought they would get back together, but now that was no longer an option.

Callen had seen what happened when people let a tragedy stand between them and so he went to Anna's trial. And it broke his heart when she was sentenced to seven years in jail.

Summary: Deputy Director Ochoa volunteers the NCIS team to assist with a covert operation tied to a terrorist group advocating for extreme military force.

The team was met by Tobin Shaked. He was former Mossad and the team had once rescued his daughter however since then he's joined a shadowy arm of the US government. He wouldn't say who was working for and so he just told them it was a matter of National Security. Shaked said that their government learned of an imminent threat involving the Patton Project. The Patton Project was an extremist group made of military personnel and they believed in taking drastic measures. It seems their latest project to create a Muslim genocide in the Middle East and the contact they had inside of the Patton Project said that whoever was involved in this imminent attack was somehow connected to Venice Beach.

The information was shaky at best, but it was they had before the contract went dark and so Shaked told him what he and apparently Arlo Turk found. They found over a hundred people matching the description of what they were looking for and they were going to be sharing whatever they found with Shaked. Shaked hadn't said what he would do with the information and so the team did some digging. They remembered that Shaked was an assassin and it turns out he still was one. He was going to kill whoever the team handed over to him and no one was sure how they felt about it. They weren't killers and have only killed in their own or their team's defense. And therefore they had Sam and Callen speak to the Deputy Director.

Ochoa had been with Arlo Turk and they were discussing the mission, so the guys asked them if they knew what Shaked and what he was going to do with the target. They said it didn't matter. Ochoa reminded the guys that they weren't killing anyone and that they had no guarantee of what would happen to the target once they handed he or she over. He declared it was all suspicion and that wasn't exactly true. The team found someone on their list had died and that the autopsy had been sealed. They wanted to know why that was and so they spoke to the Medical Examiner that performed the autopsy. She was someone with a high clearance and she told Callen that she didn't want to lose it anytime soon.

Except they asked her why she agreed to talk to them and she said what she saw hadn't sat right with her. The doctor admitted that there were signs of waterboarding on First Sergeant Dean White and that it led to his death. He was basically tortured to death and so that set up alarms with Callen. He went back to the team and he discussed what he found. Callen believed that White was a suspect and that Shaked was the one that put him through an "enhanced interrogation". The information had even shocked Arlo because he hadn't known that Shaked was doing that to people and so he suspected he might have been brought in to put a friendly face on what Shaked was doing. They just didn't know why them.

The team was confused about why they were chosen for something like a hit job and so it was seeing them all together, including Arlo, that they remembered Mexico. They went rogue down in Mexico and so sending them on this assignment was punishment. It was Callen that confronted Ochoa and Ochoa basically said: "and?". He told Callen that his team proved they had no problem operating in a gray area and so this mission they were assigned was a way for people in Washington to feel reassured. There was nothing the team could do or say that would change Ochoa's mind and so they just had to get on with the job. The team went looking for suspects with Shaked and they eventually found someone they wanted to talk to.

They found Colonel Trevor Lawford and he had been meeting with someone. When the team tried to approach, both guys made a run for it and they Lawford. The other guy they cornered and somehow he fell off the top of the roof. The team suspected that Shaked killed him and so they confronted him, but Arlo said that he was there and that they didn't kill anyone. They claimed that the guy ran off the top of the building and it was simply too outlandish for the team to believe. So they said they were out. They left Shaked and Arlo to handle the threat alone because they didn't want to be a part of an assassination. And it wasn't until they turned away that they began questioning the involvement of their dead guy because he wasn't military.

The team didn't want to fully walk away until they found out how Tyler was involved. He was a civilian and he knew no one in the military. It didn't make sense why he would be connected to the Patton Project until the team talked to his sister. She said her brother was mentally ill. He was even suicidal and was convinced by his new friends that his suicide should be glorious. Tyler believed that he should make his death mean something and so the team suspected he might have been talked into becoming a suicide bomber. They looked into it and learned that their suspect Lawford had traveled to several psychiatric facilities all over the country and so he was using people that wanted to die to further his own agenda.

The team also realized that they had been wrong about Shaked. He hadn't killed Tyler and he shouldn't be allowed to kill Lawford because only Lawford know how many suicidal people are out there ready to become terrorists, so they reached out to Arlo. Arlo had still been with Shaked and he stopped the other man from killing Lawford when they did find him. Instead, Lawford was handed over to NCIS and Sam and Callen had tried interrogating him. Lawford was a closed book and he refused to talk them or admit he was part of the Patton Project. They got nowhere with him and eventually, Ochoa found out what happened. He pulled the team aside and made sure that Shaked got into a room with Lawford.

Shaked hadn't done anything by the book and so he scared Lawford. Lawford was married and had a daughter. Shaked used both of them against him because he faked a recording in which they both admitted to being part of the terrorist group and could be arrested for treason. Shaked hoped that Lawford was shaken enough that he would confess to what he did, but Lawford refused to break because he believed in his own ideology. He thought that if he removed all the Muslims that he would save his country from war and terrorism. Lawford wasn't going to break and that's why Sam took over his interrogation. He wanted to know how an American blowing up a plane would cause people to turn on Muslims and so he asked Lawford a few questions.

The questions hadn't made sense at first though Sam got what he needed to know. He realized that the Patton Project had put people that were on the No Fly List back on flights and that they were going to use the mentally ill to take down one of those flights. It would mean that when the plane went down, everyone would blame the guy that wasn't supposed to be on the flight rather than the real culprit. The team looked into whose gotten back onto the list and they found someone. They also found a mentally ill with her baby. She was going to kill everyone on that flight because she had been convinced that she deserved to die and that her baby shouldn't have to grow up without her. Allie was arrested and they found the bomb strapped to her stomach.

They called in the bomb squad and they assured Allie that they were going to help her.

And she broke down in tears because no one has ever offered to help her.

The team stopped an imminent attack and they rescued a mentally ill mother from people that talked her into killing her baby, so they more than proved themselves to Ochoa and he realized that while the team may be gray it will never be black.

Production Code: 1009
Summary: The NCIS team investigates the home invasion of Navy Captain Dean Hadlow, who was entertaining his friend, General Omer Abidi of Pakistan, when robbers successfully stole money, jewelry and highly classified information. Meanwhile, Deeks and Kensi interview candidates to manage the bar.

A home invasion took a turn for the worse when someone was shot. The victim was a senior naval officer by the name of Captain Dean Hadlow. Hadlow was having dinner with his wife Luanne and a couple of guests from out of town when men broke into his home. The men took cash, jewelry, and the captain's laptop that carried classified information on it but it only became violent after Hadlow tried to fight back. He stepped in when one of the men got violent with his wife and he took a bullet for his troubles. Hadlow was rushed to the hospital with his wife who had also been knocked out by the men and so it had been up to the guests to call for help. They were General Omar Abidi of Pakistan and his wife Sahar. They had been staying with the couple for personal reasons when the break-in occurred and they left the house right after made that call.

It had seemed a little suspicious. The team wanted to know why the couple hung around to find out what happened to their friends and they thought that might have the reason behind that when they went to the crime scene. The house hadn't been broken into from the outside. It instead looked like the thieves had had their own keys and that they let themselves in. So they had help from the inside. The team thought that the Abidis could have assisted with the break-in and had gone to see them at the consulate however their Ambassador told the team that the couple couldn't be questioned. They might have rare insight into a case and so the guys didn't understand why the consulate would get in the way of that.

Only they had another suspect to chase after. The team had also learned that the captain's stepdaughter was too busy to come to the hospital when she learned that Hadlow had been shot and that she was the only other person that had a key. Her mother thought Emily might be in danger as well and it turns out the girl just didn't bother. She was partying at a beach house and so Sam and Callen turned their focus on Abidi. Abidi eventually left the consulate to go downtown and, as the guys were watching him, someone tried to assassinate him. Abidi tried to run and the guys captured him before taking him back to the boathouse. The team believed that Abidi was somehow involved in what happened to Hadlows and what they found only went against their suspicions. Abidi hadn't been involved with the break-in.

The Abidis were at the house because they were trying to defect. The General was in town to pass information to the Americans on high-ranking Pakistani government officials that were working with the Taliban. He and his wife had left their country without informing anyone and so the consulate didn't know where they were until the break-in. The break-in had tipped off Pakistan and now their country was trying to deport the Abidis back home where they'd both be arrested for treason. The only reason the couple had been willing to take such risks was that Hadlow promised to protect them. He took down the information that the general passed on and he saved it on his laptop that was now out there.

The State Department was prepared to hand over the Abidis. They didn't want to risk a falling out with an allied country and so the Abidis was going back to Pakistan if the team didn't find that laptop. So they decided to take another look at Hadlow's stepdaughter Emily. Emily was hanging out with a bunch of sketchy guys and it turns out Emily knew about the dinner party because her mother invited her, but Emily hadn't wanted to waste her time with her parents' rich friends and so she was asked about that. She said she took no part in what happened and it turns out all she did was mention the party to her boyfriend. Lucas Walker had said that Emily had expensive tastes and that he couldn't find a job. And so he thought robbing her parents would be the next best thing.

Lucas told his guys to just grab what they could easily sell and no one was supposed to get hurt. Only once things changed, he quickly got rid of his haul and so the team was able to track down the captain's laptop. They found it and recovered the evidence that the Abidis were willing to give though didn't quite change things for the general or his wife. The State Department wasn't willing to work against an allied country and they were going to allow the couple to be deported back to Pakistan despite what the team found. The guys didn't believe that was fair and so they tried on their own to save the couple. They even found help from Deputy Director Ochoa who hadn't wanted to turn the couple over to be executed by the Taliban.

NCIS tracked down the car that was taking the Abidis to the airport and they rescued them from certain death.

The team eventually got the State Department to work with them rather than against them and together they managed to get the Abidis into witness protection without further risks.

Production Code: 1010
Summary: The team investigates a corrupt consulting firm after there is an elaborate bank heist to steal a single safe deposit box held by the company.

The strangest bank heist happened on the team's watch. They were all enjoying their day off when they got called into work and were notified that a group of individuals had robbed the Trust National Bank. No one was injured and the thieves only took one thing, but in order to get what they wanted, they had to release a small bomb from inside the bank and then walked off with the private deposit box of Veronica Stevens. Stevens was a businesswoman. She held several defensive contracts with the Navy and therefore the Navy thought this heist could be important to them. They took this case off the FBI and gave it to the team.

They went to the crime scene and asked around yet this heist got weirder by the second. They learned that the robbers left their guns behind. The guns had been fake and the robbers didn't seem to believe they were going to need weapons for the future. That was another thing! The robbers didn't seem like robbers. They were polite almost to the extreme and they politely asked everyone to comply. The only thing they were after was that box and Stevens claimed the box was meaningless. She said she put a bunch of family heirlooms in that box and that the heirlooms themselves didn't cost much. Stevens said they held sentimental value and that's all.

Only the team spoke to the bank manager and she said Stevens was always at the bank. She didn't deposit money or doing else besides look in on her deposit box. The team asked for the official records just in case and it was written in clear ink that the box meant something to Stevens. It was at least more important than she was willing to claim with the feds and so they did their research. They found out when the box had been accessed and found out that the robbers took extra precaution to ensure they didn't injure any of the other boxes during the heist. And so they knew that Stevens was hiding something.

Stevens had appeared unfazed when they went to interview her and she had happily complied when they asked her if she had any enemies. She had her assistant hand over her hate mail and it was a lot to take. There were quite a few people that believe Stevens to be involved in underhanded business practices and that gave the team an idea. They wondered what if the deposit box had been stolen because someone wanted them to take a closer look at Stevens. She was targeted before and so someone would have to keep track of all of her accounts in case they were also at risk. It would be a long con on a federal department though someone or a group would have to be highly motivated.

The team was considering what could be in that box when they were confronted by Special Prosecutor Rogers. Rogers had come back to town because he somehow convinced Washington that he should go through the team's old files to see if they committed crimes that weren't noticed and so he was back in the hopes of arresting someone. To do that, he was given access to everything and was allowed to be in on the cases. He had found out what happened at the bank and he wanted to know why the team was just lying around (his words) when they could be solving a crime. They explained to him how they have a process and that tried to shut him out of the case.

They said they couldn't always bring along because the car couldn't fit him and the truth they didn't want him around. They had a process and part of that process was not answering to authority figures. They liked to do things their way and so they went alone to see Veronica Stevens again. She denied the box being important again and said that there was nothing left for her to say, but the team finally did that deep financial dive into her business and they learned that she's been feeding intel to Iran. Everyone and that includes Rogers thought she was a traitor and so they brought her in wanting to know what information she's sold to Iran.

Stevens refused to answer them and so they threatened to transfer her when she finally started answering questions. She claims that she wasn't a traitor and that she was actually a patriot. Stevens said that she's been working with the CIA to feed false intel to Iran. She would get her assignments from the deposit box where the CIA would leave it for her and so she didn't know what was in the box when it was stolen because she hadn't gone in to collect the assignment yet. The team had been suspicious of her story at first, only they found evidence backing up her claim. They found the bank robbers and they were the Saudis.

Saudi Arabia has its ongoing cold war with Iran and so they thought stealing the documents would launch an investigation into an American traitor that was dealing with their enemies. Only they had stolen the CIA assignment instead. The assignment could lead the Saudis back to Stevens's Iranian contact and so the team made her give up the name. She said her contact was Farzan and she told them how they could reach him. The team thought they should move to protect this contact however they learned that the robbers had kidnapped an American they tricked into helping them and so their priority was the hostage.

The team took Rogers on that trip and so he saw first hand as they rescued one of their own as well as recovered the deposit box. It turns out the Saudis never cared about opening it. They just took it because they wanted to alert everyone to Stevens's actions and funnily enough they had told the government about a spy — they told them about the spy they were using to get information on Stevens.

So heads were going to roll for this and many were going to blame NCIS for getting involved in a spy ring, but Rogers eventually came off his high horse and had played a few video games with Eric on government property.

Production Code: 1011
Summary: The team searches for a Marine reservist with a history of PTSD who disappears after a drunk and disorderly altercation.

Special Prosecutor Rogers was still hanging around being a Grinch. He even banned the annual Christmas party at the office because it was against some obscure rule and so the party was being moved to Deeks's new bar. His bar never got the chance to official launch and the Christmas event for the whole office was going to be the first time his bar was opened to the public. Deeks was a little nervous about playing host and he had tried to back out on several occasions, but he didn't really have a good excuse until Special Agent DeChamps asked his team for a favor. She informed them that she was looking for an Army reservist. His name was Ernie Gaza and served overseas before he had been forced to come back.

It turns out Garza was a problem with drugs. He was suffering from PTSD and had used drugs as a coping method until he was demoted and found himself alone. Garza had tried out rehab and had also found work however his behavior was still erratic enough that he couldn't hold down a job for long. Garza was a highly trained individual that could be a danger to himself as well as to others and to make matters worse he was last seen shooting up a Christmas lot. He and a buddy took a joy ride around a lot filled with Christmas trees and before they had lost control of the car it had been Garza that began shooting his weapon off into the air. He also disappeared right after the car crash and left his friend to face charges on his own.

His friend was Marine Staff Sergeant Brad Hawkins. Hawkins had blacked out after the crash and he hadn't known what happened. He had been tested for drugs and alcohol and he had been clean. He had drunk maybe one drink and that had been it. There was nothing to explain why he blacked out or why he crashed the car. So they asked Hawkins if Garza could have put something in his drink. Hawkins didn't want to believe that of his friend and he tried to tell NCIS that Garza wasn't like that. He said Garza was one of the most honorable men that he knew and so the team tried to figure out why this great friend would leave Hawkins hanging. And so they asked the one other person that would have known Garza's mindset that night.

They talked to Garza's girlfriend Mia. Mia was very sweet and she said the story about the Christmas lot didn't sound like Garza. Garza had been cleaned for a very long time and he had even thrown away the pain meds that his doctor prescribed him for when he injured his shoulder. It seems that everyone that was with Garza leading up to the accident said that Garza had changed for the better. He had gotten help and was trying to maintain his sobriety, so it didn't make sense why he would give all of that up to take down both himself and his friend. The team went looking for Garza and they eventually found him hiding out on a boat. He claimed not have known how he got there and he also said he blacked out that night.

The only thing that Garza remembers is going out with his friend and so the team tested him. It turns out there had been high doses of a medication found in his system and it was the same thing that had been found in Hawkins's blood test. It was a drug that could lead them to both blackout and so the team went back to the bar that the guys had used. They had watched the security cameras as a man watched them before eventually approaching them. It was believed that this man might have targeted these two servicemen and so the team wanted to know why. They went back to the guys and they asked them what they remember about the man that approached them. And all they could recall was that the guy asked about Garza's job.

Garza was in waste management. There were plenty of people at his work who had access to money and Garza wasn't one of them. The team didn't know why Garza had been targeted and so they went to his job to ask around. They found someone with the same job title as Garza and found out that they handle sensitive waste such as pharmaceuticals that hospitals needed to dispose of. Such a shipment of drugs had just come in and so the team asked to see it, but it turns out their thief had already stolen it by then. They traced the theft back to the man from the bar and his name was Jirani. He had even taken the truck to his estates with plenty of lands and had left in full view of everybody that attended his party.

The team had to work their way through a bunch of people that were high and they tried to pretend like they could be buyers however Jirani saw through it and so the team had been forced to fight the rest of their way. They had stopped the shipment from being sold on the streets and were able to reclaim a large part of it. Only the team had had to arrest so many people that DeChamps didn't have time to catch a flight and was forced to stay in LA for Christmas. So the team invited her back to their Christmas party and she got to celebrate the holidays with her friends. They had all cleared Garza and Hawkins of any wrongdoing, so the guys weren't going to be facing any time for what they did and all they really had to do was clean up the Christmas tree lot. And so it had seemed like everyone was going to be enjoying their holidays until they remembered that Callen couldn't be with them.

Callen had learned that Anna was in the hospital and that she had gotten beaten up pretty badly.

So he chose to spend Christmas with her and Arkady.

Summary: The team investigates a possible terror threat after the chief of logistics for a naval weapons station collapses on the job. Deeks and Kensi research different honeymoon locations.

Commander Valerie Torres passed out during a meeting at the Naval Weapons Station Seal Beach. Everyone believed that the Commander would recover and under normal circumstances, it wouldn't have even required an investigation, but what caused the Commander to lose consciousness wasn't normal. She had complained about hearing something before she passed out and that coupled with her past belief that someone following her had led to everyone becoming concerned. They all wanted to know what happened to the Commander. To know if she passed out because of something medical or if she passed out because someone had really been targeting her. And so NCIS was called to answer that question.

The team first decided to check in with the Commander's husband. The husband was a prestigious professor that had been out of town during the incident and he flew right back to be with his wife. She never told him who she suspected of wanting to hurt her and so all the husband knew was what the doctors told him. He said that the Commander didn't have a stroke or a heart attack and so far the doctors hadn't found anything in the tox screens. It seems the doctors were just as stumped as everybody else and so the team decided to test everything the victim came into contact with. They went back to the Commander's post and they looked at the secured footage of that meeting. They wanted to know if it was something she ingested and they couldn't find anything to agree with this theory.

The Commander hadn't been affected by the food and she hadn't drunken anything, but both Callen and Sam had seen the exact moment she began feeling ill. She began showing signs around the time that two others felt ill and so why did they recover whereas the Commander did not? The team asked the other two to describe what they felt and they said they described symptoms commonly heard from during a sonic attack. It wouldn't take much to attack someone with sound. There used to be machines needed and nowadays someone with a common microwave could bring about an attack. And so at first, the team thought this attack might have come from the building next door because anyone with a window could have done it.

Only the Commander later woke up and she was attacked again at the hospital. Whoever was behind it was mobile and so the team stopped worrying about the building next door but they did check the security footage of outside. Eric and Nell spotted a van that had been at the meeting, the hospital, and it had even been seen outside of the Commander's home. Someone has been trying to harm the Commander for weeks and their persistent attack was why the Commander was the only one deeply affected during the meeting. She had been worn down and so the team wanted to know who was behind and even why they did it? The Commander wasn't having problems at work and she didn't have problems at home.

Neither the Commander nor her husband was having an affair. They also weren't stressed because their only child was off at college and so there was nothing in their personal lives that indicated why someone was trying to kill the Commander. The Commander had still been in her hospital bed when again someone tried to attack her, but that time both Kensi and Deeks were able to run downstairs and they fought back. They got into a gunfight with the guys in the van and one person ran away while another died. The man that died was identified as Daniel Barnet. He didn't know the Commander and they had never crossed paths because Barnet was an anti-immigration nut who part of a lunatic group that believed they needed to reclaim "their" country.

Nell and Eric used Barnet's phone to track his movements and he had been in constant contact with a man named Hayden York. York was believed to be the second man that got away, but it still didn't explain the attack and so they dug into both men's background. The techies later learned that someone that worked with the Commander had played a part in the attack and so they asked CWO Walter Purdue to come to the boat shed. He was asked why he bought burner phones for the men that targeted the Commander and he claimed he had no choice. Purdue said that he went to a loan shark to get money for his son's expensive rehab and that the loan shark had sold the loan to someone who demanded repayment within a week.

Purdue hadn't been able to repay the money and so he had come to an agreement with this man. This mysterious person that demanded something important had said that Purdue could tell him the security route for a ballistic missile and no one would harm Purdue's family. Only Purdue didn't have access to that information until the Commander was attacked and he took over her post. He then handed over what he knew to the thieves because he thought that they would never be able to pull off the heist. And it turns out they used their sonic weapon to get past security, so they did their hands on the missile and they could use it to target any Muslim gathering place they could now reach.

The team had used what they knew to track the missile and then the group behind the theft, but the moment they got close enough to be seen, they were targeted by the microwaves. They were suffering dizziness and were on the brink of passing out when Callen took a lucky shot. He shot the man that was used the microwaves and that stopped the sonic attack. It also allowed the team to get close and see where the missile was being taken. The thieves had tried to move to another location when they had been run off the road and so the team was able to reclaim the missile. They got lucky when it didn't detonate and therefore they had celebratory drinks at Deeks's new bar. Deeks hasn't named yet and for once — after everything — the bar having no name didn't bother him.

Summary: The team works with the Global Criminal Tribunal when a Syrian seeking justice is brutally attacked while delivering evidence that would prove chemical weapons were used on civilians.

David Sarraf approached the Global Criminal Tribunal. He claimed to have a video of Assad ordering a chemical attack that killed nineteen civilians of which seven were children. David said that he could hand over the file and once and for all bring down Assad, but he never made it the GCT. He had been followed by his hotel and was almost killed. David was crushed between a car and a vehicle. The vehicle was stemming the blood flow and so it couldn't be moved or David would die instantly. David didn't know this as he decided to finish what he started. David got help and he made sure that someone contacted the GCT. And it was the GCT that brought in NCIS to help get justice for David as well as the victims of the recent chemical attack.

NCIS was tasked with assisting the capture of the men that came after David. David said that these men were from Syria and were part of Assad's secret police, but Syrians connected to the regime weren't allowed into the country and so they must have snuck in. The team looked through everyone that entered the country and they found General Yoram Naser. Naser entered the country under a false and on a Lebanese diplomatic passport. He must have come in to personally oversee the mission with David and the plan wasn't just to kill the David. The men that were after him had also taken the flash drive and that was the only evidence the GCT had on Assad. Assad wanted the video erased and Naser was supposed to see it done.

But David said that the men could never view the video much less delete it. He had encrypted the file and so it could still be saved. The team just had to reach it in time and while they were doing so they also had to keep David calm. David didn't know that he was going to die. He thought he could be rescued from being pinned and so the associate from the GCT had asked Kensi to do the honors. She was one of the few people that could keep David calm and their first plan of waiting until David could talk to his wife hadn't worked out. The wife couldn't be reached and the situation was deteriorating by the hour. And so Kensi decided to do it and she told David that this was the end before she promised him that she would reach his wife.

David had lost everything else. His son had died in the recent chemical attack and he could never return to Syria after what he did, but he wanted to hear his wife before he died and so Kensi made her promise. She had her team reaching out to their people in Syria and Kensi waited with David as everyone else tried to finish the job. They later found Naser and surprisingly they came across Arlo Turk as well. He claimed that he was called in to help with the situation and so he assisted with the capture of Naser. Naser was then taken to David so that David could make a positive ID, but not long after David did just that the State Department. They said that Naser was a Lebanese diplomat and that it was up to them to investigate whether or not Naser was his real name.

The State Department found out that NCIS arrested a diplomat and they demanded that Naser being handed over to them, but no one knew how the State Department found out what was happening and so they investigated the matter. They found out that the State Department had been called by Arlo. Arlo, as it turns out, had never been assigned to Naser's capture. He had been at the hotel because he had been planning on killing Naser. Naser had killed Arlo's old partner back in Lebanon and Arlo wanted revenge. He let the State Department get their hands on hands-on Naser because Naser would get away from them and he wanted to be there to kill the other man. And Arlo had even planned to cut out NCIS.

Arlo made sure he couldn't be traced and then disappeared. So the team had to find him by using the same method he was tracking Naser — they used the same means and walked right into a gunfight. Arlo shooting his way to Naser when the others came in and assisted him. The whole team worked together to stop Naser's men and by the time they looked up, Arlo had once again proven that he was a good man. He hadn't killed Naser like they feared he would. Arlo chose to instead capture the man alive and on him, he found the flash drive. The drive being found was the last thing that David wanted on his earth. He had gotten the chance to talk to his wife and so he had been ready to die when it finally happened.

If anything, it had been harder om Kensi. She knew that Eric had checked the drive and that it had been erased, so she thought David had died for nothing and she couldn't help crying.

Production Code: 1014
Summary: The team partners with the FBI to locate a terrorist cell in Los Angeles believed to be prepping for an imminent attack.

Callen makes Marty drive behind a truck on the highway while he stands on the hood during their mission that has gone sideways. Inside, Sam tries to defuse a bomb while Blye fights a man. Callen makes it onto the side of the vehicle. They get the situation under control and defuse the bomb with one second to go. They all stand together after reflecting on what could have been. They all hope this latest save will get them out of the doghouse.

Back at headquarters, the team gets word that the enemies they just took out have another associate by the name of Jalal that needs to be intercepted. He is a terrorist. The big boss comes in and tells them not to worry. He has some agents on it. They did just work 48 hours straight. He tells them to go home. Later, the agents get Jalal but lose him after a man shows himself in front of their SUV as a set-up to free Jalal.

Marty and Blue are in bed. She is making fun of him. When he sleeps his nose whistles. They talk about how they can't keep doing this forever. Blye just wants to keep helping people. Marty agrees.

Sam arrives to see Callen who is in a bad mood about his father and all the dead ends as well as their failure to find Hetty. They get a call to head into headquarters. They are briefed on the missing agents and Jalal.

Marty and Blye get briefed from Agent Ross who tells them the guys didn't leave behind any evidence.

Callen and Hanna head to a local gym to meet a female agent by the name of Fatima who is boxing in the ring. She finishes and updates them on what she knows about Ghulam, Jalal, and the others. She tells them that if Jalal was taken it was because the terrorist group needed him for something.

Jones and Beale meet with Fatima. Fatima gushes over meeting Jones.

Fatima, Jones, and Beale update the team on what they know so far. They have a lead. They bring in a woman who works with her husband at the currency exchange. Her husband is missing and didn't come home last night. She answers what she knows about Jalal. They met him last year. He was a poor student. They hired him at the exchange. But when the money went missing they realized it was Jalal. They fired him days ago.

Blye and Marty talk to a homeless woman who lives near where the agents' SUV was burned. The homeless woman is scared to talk but shares she actually wrote down the plate of the car that the men left in after setting fire to the SUV. The plates lead them to an address. The team gets there quickly and makes their way inside the warehouse. Ross shoots fast and takes out the only man in there. They discover the makings for assault weapons, computers and more.

After going through their computers, Beale updates the team about an intersection and building of special interest. Hanna and Callen head to the location and tell the theater manager she needs to get everyone out. While helping, the two see Jalal who comes out into the center of the theater with a bomb strapped to him. An explosion happens near them followed by Jalal also exploding. Hanna and Callen are thrown backward and down a set of stairs.

Hanna and Callen come to. They help the people around them. Callen sees a wire on the entrance of the door. Outside, Marty and Blye help people upset about their loved ones inside. Back at headquartered Fatima gets choked up over the bombing. Jones encourages her to work through it.

The bomb squad works to check all of the doors around the theater. Some die inside while others lay injured. Fatima finds a video of the terrorists online wanting there will be more to come.

Summary: As the team continues to search for a terrorist cell in Los Angeles, Callen and Sam remain trapped in a movie theater after multiple bombs have detonated and every remaining exit is wired with explosives.

The attack at the movie theater wasn't a simple bomb. The terrorist had actually placed various bombs all around the theater and even the exits weren't considered safe. Everyone that had been trapped inside was told to move to the main lobby, but there had been a few stranglers that tried to ignore and leave through the back door. There was one fatality of a guy that tried to leave with his stolen items from the concession stand and there had been two children that had been close to the following blast. They hadn't been hurt and so, unfortunately, they had been trapped under some rubble until Callen found them. The kids had been trying to leave because they skipped school to go to the movies and didn't want to get in trouble with their parents.

The kids were Elias and Eddie. They were brothers and it had been Elias's job to look after his little brother Eddie, but he had been too injured to move on his own and so he made sure Callen safeguarded his brother before he himself was moved. Callen got both of the brothers out of there and soon everyone had been cleared to leave through the front door. Callen had found his partner and Sam had been okay yet it seems there was some information that Sam found that he knew he should share. It turns out their guy Abbas Jalal might not have been the bomber. He could have been pushed into doing things he hadn't wanted to do and so he hadn't been the one to pull the trigger on the bomb.

Sam remembered how Jalal looked in his final moments. The man had seemed scared and so Sam believes Jalal would have taken their help if he could. Thus he didn't sound like a man that would blow himself up. Sam had talked to the team outside and together they determined that the bomb was most likely set off remotely. The real bombers would have needed clear sight to Jalal and so he would have been across the street at a restaurant. There were no cameras and so the team had no idea who pulled off the bomb, but they could ask the person they did have and that meant Wasim Ghulam was questioned. The man didn't want to talk and had needed to be threatened with solitary confinement before his fear of confined spaces forced him to talk.

Wasim said Jalal was never a soldier. He wasn't even that important to the Mashriq Army because he just handled their money and so Wasim was asked about Jalal's ties because there must have been incentive to for him to get involved. The only one that Wasim could think of was Omar Azim. Azim had been like a father to Jalal and he didn't like the Mashriq Army. He didn't want Jalal involved in either because Wasim could remember Azim badmouthing them. Wasim hadn't thought much of it because again Jalal wasn't important to the cause and neither was a movie theater. It wasn't what the Mashriq Army were about because they fought to get "justice" for their slain loved ones.

The team looked for Azim for information on Jalal, but they found him dead at a warehouse. He had been held there as possible leverage over Jalal and he wasn't the only body that was found. There were two others that had been stripped of their clothes and had no identification on them. They must have been important somehow and so the team had Nell did a background search to see where the guys worked. Their uniforms were taken because it could be important to the next attack and so Nell did her job. She found out the two men were airport baggage handlers. There was a lot of turnovers and no one would question seeing two new faces on the tarmac. And that meant the next bomb was going to be placed on a plane.

Sam and Callen dressed for the part. They pretended to be baggage handlers as well and had gone up to the guys claiming that they had been ordered to take over, but the terrorists weren't willing to back found and drew their weapons. There was an exchange of fire before one of the terrorist tried to run off and so Callen went after him. He had been forced to engage in close combat with the guy and Callen the only one they could ask about the bomb, Only Sam had already found it. The bomb was activated in the fight and Sam didn't have enough time to disarm it. He thought it would be safer to drive away from the planes as well as any sources of oil and he made it just barely. He drove the bomb to the brink of the fence and no one got hurt.

With another attack averted, the team began to question whether the Mashriq Army was involved at all. They had been told that the MA didn't target civilians and that they didn't include outsiders. There had been South African mercenaries used at the attack on the plane and that thing with Jalal didn't sound like Wasim's beliefs. It couldn't have been him or his friend. It had to be someone else who wanted it to look like it was the Mashriq Army and who had an endgame that was entirely their own. Sam and Callen talked about it and they couldn't see what was being planned with these attacks. Neither of them had been high in casualty and so what if it was the attacks were a smokescreen.

The real terrorist wanted all of Los Angeles to be in a panic because being frightened meant they weren't paying attention, but smokescreens work best with a heist and neither of the guys knew of anything that was valuable enough to hire mercenaries. They had captured one mercenary alive and had never gotten the chance to question him because the FBI took over. The FBI and Agent Ross received orders from Washington that a team of highly trained interrogators was going to speak with the mercenary. They didn't realize that there were more of them out there. The team had never found the semiautomatic weapons and they believed there were more mercenaries focused on the target.

It turns out the target was a person. A valuable prisoner was being brought to LA on a private plane and those were the only ones allowed in the air after the attack on the plane. Everything else had been arranged to ensure the mercenaries would get to this prisoner and that included the FBI transfer. The transfer had apparently never come from Washington and so it was ultimately revealed that Special Agent Ross had been operating on his own. He was dirty and the men he brought in were there to actually take the prisoner, but the US Marshalls received a little help from NCIS. The team came fully armed and they stopped the prisoner from being taken out by the mercenaries.

The team had great work and they saved the city, but there was still a question about if they should be disbanded and so Deputy Director Ochoa has a firm "no" when asked.

Ochoa believed the team was stronger together and that if anything all they needed was Henrietta Lang back.

Summary: The team investigates the murder of a journalist who was writing an exposé on a mishandled classified military operation. Also, as their wedding day quickly approaches, Kensi and Deeks work on the last remaining items on their to-do list.

A couple of birdwatchers came across an accident. They had sadly been too late to help the woman in the vehicle, but simply calling for emergency services set about a series of events. The woman was identified as Rebecca Frazier. She was a journalist and recently she told her bosses that she was writing about a secret operation that had been covered up. Rebecca never went into details with anyone about what this mission was and so DOD were concerned. They wanted to prove that Rebecca's accident truly was an accident and if it wasn't that it had nothing to do with a secret operation.

The team were brought in to investigate the matter. Kensi spoke with people close to Rebecca and she learned that Rebecca had been trying to get into contact with someone named Odell Ikande. Ikande was a retired marine that had gotten injured during a classified operation and so it did seem like he might have answers, but if that wasn't enough, the team were told that Rebecca's last words were "find the candy". They didn't know what it meant until they heard about Ikande and realized that their victim could have been trying to say "find Ikande". Ikande had been easy to track down and so the part the team was struggled were the questions.

Whatever Ikande was doing when he got injured, he made sure to cover his tracks. He kept putting off Rebecca despite her trying several times to contact him and someone put a tracker on her car. The team later found it when they reviewed the scene and so they went to ask Ikande about it though he had been gone by time Kensi and DeChamps showed up. The ladies had found Ikande's roommate instead. She didn't know why her door had been left ajar or why her roommate seemed to have disappeared in a rush. And so the team stopped playing around with what could have happened and they had the Special Prosecutor that was back in town to get some answers.

The Special Prosecutor learned that this classified mission had involved Ikande's team being pulled away from tracking a high-value target in order to rescue some contractors that had gotten trapped. Ikande's team was only to retrieve the men which he did, but he lost four of his people and was injured in the rescue. The only thing secretive about what he did was the high-value target he had been tracking and that man got away when Ikande's team left. Therefore, there was no story.

The team realized someone else might have a hand to play in Rebecca's death and so they went back to security cameras. If someone was following her then it could be seen in security cameras. Nell and Eric checked the feed and they found one white van consistently following their victim. The van hadn't left Rebecca's sights until her car crash and so the van was looking like the culprit.

Several agents were sent to the van's last location and they barely got a word out when they came in under fire. The shooters were identified as members of a gang called Imperio Azteca and they had been in contact with Ikande. Ikande could have hired the duo, but his recent behavior had been erratic to the point where he called one of the men he saved and went on a rant about a car accident.

Phillip Beckett used to be a private contractor and he owed Ikande his life, but even he said that Ikande had sounded too off to have made any sense and that was before he had found out that there really had been a car accident. So maybe he snapped. Ikande went through a lot out in the field and losing his team like that could have broken any man. The team questioned if he was of sane mind and they almost believed the story until they learned that Ikande had called Beckett. Beckett claimed that they haven't spoken in years and so why Ikande keep turning to him. It didn't make sense and so they sat on Beckett.

Beckett went down to the boardwalk and met up with Ikande, but before the agents could make their move, a third man tried to go up to Ikande with a knife. The agents saw the knife and forwent secrecy in order to get to their suspects. They later stopped the assassin and caught Ikande. Only Beckett had gotten away. There was no reason why the man would run from the scene and so the team interrogated Ikande.

Ikande said that Rebecca had reached out to him about the mission and how there had been something off with it. He didn't know what she was talking about and so he contacted the one other person that had been there. He contacted Beckett about the story and the next thing that happens is someone runs Rebecca off the road.

Ikande didn't know what was happening, but he described the mission. He said the rebels were well-armed and that it didn't make any sense for that area. The village where everything happened was so small that it wasn't even on a map and so there was no reason why the rebels would fight over it like they did. The team thought about what Ikande told them and that's when they began putting the picture together. The gang Imperio Azteca was involved in the drug trade and a couple of members were overheard talking about heroin. Heroin was made from opium and that was the biggest crop in Afghanistan.

It was usually warlords that control the area and so the contractors must have done something to set them off. Like, say, tried to set up their hotline to heroin. The private contractors were sent to "fix" the electrical system when in fact they used as their cover to ship heroin back to the states by hiding it in broken down vehicles. The team found evidence of this and they realized that Ikande had never known what he was risking his life or that his team over. He didn't know about the drugs and so the team filled him because they needed his help. Beckett didn't know that Ikande had been captured and so he sent a threat to him.

Ikande was told to come in person if he didn't want his roommate to be killed, but his roommate Ruya had been there that day in Afghanistan. She had been the one to pass Rebecca her story and she convinced Ikande to talk to Rebecca as well. And so Ruya could be killed just for knowing what happened with the contractors.

The team used Ikande to get close enough to Beckett and once they did — they were able to arrest Beckett and his hit team.

Meanwhile Ruya who was more than just a roommate got to go home with Ikande.

Summary: After months of planning, the NCIS family celebrates the wedding of Kensi and Deeks.

Deeks loves Kensi and he wanted to marry her. She was basically the dream girl he never thought he would ever get a chance with and so all he needed to do was stop doubt that he was worth her.

Kensi chose him. He just needed to remember that to realize that he still wanted to go ahead with the wedding and with that over with he also remembered the box. His fiancée had given him a box a while back and she said that it was what he always wanted. Deeks being the sentimental nerd that he is had wanted to save the box for a special moment. He put off when he first asked Kensi out and when he asked her to marry him, but as he was worried about everything else for the wedding, he thought that if he opened the box now then they could talk about it later after the ceremony. Deeks asked Sam and Callen to help him find the box. They said they could use their resources to try and track it down. And that if anything Eric and Nell were bound to come up with something.

Deeks began having doubts at the worst possible moment. He had doubts about getting married on the morning of his wedding day and so he freaked out. Deeks snuck onto Sam's boat way too early in the morning and was nearly killed. Sam had thought it was an intruder and attacked without a word of warning, but he stopped just short of maiming the groom and so Deeks was able to answer why he came over. He had doubts about the wedding and he wanted to talk to a man of experience. Sam was married for a long time and he knew how big of a commitment it was. He also knew what to say to get Deeks to calm down.

The boys were trying to calm Deeks down about that as well when they received a visitor. Kirkin came to find Deeks because he had wanted to stop the wedding. He told Deeks that he still loves him and that they could be together, but Deeks was happy with Kensi and so Kirkin had to let it go. He said that he wishes the best for Deeks and added that he would no longer interfere before driving away while Deeks had asked the guys to never mention what happened to the others. His mild embarrassment helped him focus on where he could have put the box and he thought he left it at the office. Deeks had gone back there to see if he could find it and he thankfully came across Nell who remembered moving the box to the armory. Deeks was able to get to the box and find out that it held a key for something.

Deeks didn't know what the key could lead to, but he had been planning on figuring it out when the team was alerted to a problem in the situation room. Eric had eye-gouged the visiting technical operator when Fang Kong Li had tried to take over. The other guy had seen the alert system on the computer and had thought to handle it himself only it was Eric's computer. He didn't like other people handling it if he was there and so he fought for control over this one computer. He got into a fight with the other guy and they had needed to be separated by Nell. Nell was asking what the fight was about when Deeks came up behind her and had seen for himself that their alert was for an active kidnapping. He clicked it on to see who was kidnapped and just his luck it was Anatoli Kirkin otherwise known as his least favorite person.

Deeks hadn't wanted to do anything about the kidnapping itself. He said it was the FBI's problem and he had a mystery to solve. Deeks found out what the key was for and he had opened the locker at work with it where he was led to another clue. He followed the last clue to where he found a ring. It was Kensi's father's ring. Her father wore it throughout her whole childhood and it was one thing that made her remember what it like with her hand in his. He died a long time ago and it still hurts Kensi to know her father won't be there when she gets married, but by giving his ring to Deeks she wanted him to know that her father would have loved him because of how much she loves him. Deeks had gotten weepy when he read the message and he realized that he was being unfair to Kirkin.

Deeks confessed to both Sam and Callen about Kirkin's kidnapping. The team knew Kirkin best and they should help with his kidnapping. The guys all called Nell and Eric to see if there was anything they had learned since Deeks last saw them and it turns out there was some information. The technical operators found out that Kirkin had been kidnapped by Paulie Baroni. Baroni was with the Italian mob and so either it was an organized crime family conflict or Kirkin staged his kidnapping with his friend. The guys all believed it was the latter. Sam and Callen still went to go talk to Baroni so that Kirkin would get the message that no one was buying the kidnapping and they ended up getting into a fight with Baroni's nephew. And so the arrested the lot.

Also, Kirkin later came out of hiding anyways because he wanted to go to the wedding and well his security team had gotten angry at being ditched one time too many. They followed to the wedding and it became a thing. The security team pulled out their guns and NCIS had to fight them off at a wedding with Kensi included. She ripped her wedding dress and traumatized her bridesmaids. Only the team got all the bad guys to save one and the last one had gotten taken down by the one Henrietta Lang. Hetty came back just in time to drive a vehicle through a building and killed the last gunman. She joked about how she couldn't leave the kids alone for a minute without mayhem ensuing and everybody had just been so happy to see her that they didn't care what happened to her for those last several months.

Hetty was back and she officiated the wedding of Kensi and Deeks.

The pair didn't get the wedding they had planned on, but they got the one that fits and it worked out for them.

Summary: Sydney turns to her sister Nell for help after her high-school crush, Andre Martinez is mixed up in a Russian plot to steal intelligence from the Department of Defense. Also, Special Prosecutor John Rogers conducts mandatory performance reviews with the team.

Nell's sister Sydney was back in town. Sydney sort of showed up randomly at Nell's door and had asked to talk to her over coffee, but while that had been odd for the sister that has everything together, Nell decided to go with it. She followed her sister to the café and she was so wrapped up in her sister's drama that she was running late for the office. Nell missed a meeting and it was about two workers finding a body in a dumpster. This body was identified as Mason Walker. He was handling access control to an important defense meeting about naval defense and Walker had been guarding the war room when he disappeared. He was kidnapped and a hard drive that held everything this meeting discussed was stolen.

Meanwhile, Nell was pushing her sister to go ahead with whatever was bugging her. Sydney had taken Nell to a café that neither of them used much less frequented, but Sydney for some reason pretended like it was her favorite spot and again things became odder when Sydney tossed Nell's phone. Nell had been checking it to see how late she was for work and when she realized she was really late she showed it to her sister to say she had to go. Sydney didn't take the hint and she actually dropped Nell's phone in a pitcher of water. Only when she destroyed Nell's chances at calling for help that Sydney admitted that she needed a favor. She asked her sister to help protect a man named Andre Martinez who they went to school with and who was running from something.

Nell didn't know what, but it turns out Martinez was the chief suspect in Walker's death and the theft of naval intelligence. He was recently hired an engineer and he wasn't answering anyone's calls or showing up for work in the aftermath. It had made her boss suspicious and she handed over his name to NCIS. NCIS was, in fact, looking for Martinez as he was meeting up with Sydney and Nell. Nell was caught by security cameras at this unusual donut place and it had worried Eric. Eric went looking for her when he realized she was late for work and finding her at a place he didn't know about wasn't something he was used to. And so he kept digging until he found footage of her with both Sydney and Martinez.

Sydney had gotten her sister into deep trouble. Nell heard from Martinez how someone tried to kill him and that he believed the DOD is compromised because of it and so she willing to help him. He needed to be driven to a location that wasn't watched by surveillance nor easily tracked and that meant ditching her car after a while. Nell had no problem with it and neither did Martinez, but Sydney hated the idea of walking and her soon other reasons to complain. Like when Nell kissed Martinez to keep their cover or when Nell wanted a fuller explanation from Martinez about what happened the night of the theft. She found out that someone pretending to be a Lyft driver had offered Martinez a ride to his hotel and that he noticed that his key card disappeared right around then.

Martinez went back to the office to double-check and it was gone. His keycard had been stolen and later someone came to his hotel to beat him up, but he was able to fight the other man off and that's when he went on the run. He wasn't sure about contacting the other members of NCIS and he was only willing to do it because of Nell. Nell could talk to him plainly about his situation and he wasn't going to get that with Sydney. Sydney has this huge crush on him and she's had it for years. It's what drove her to help Martinez and so she had needed her sister to put out that they could die or go to jail. Sydney didn't even think about any of that when she offered to help Martinez and roped her sister into it. And so hearing the truth made her even grumpier than before — she didn't even like Nell's idea to contact Eric.

Nell graffiti a car and had the dumb teenager that it belonged to casually drive it around on the same street over and over again. It worked, too. It got back to Eric who was all worried about his girlfriend hanging out with an accuses murder/traitor/ potential rival. He had seen the image of Nell kissing Martinez and that's made he try to look for a silver lining. He dived into Martinez's background and that's when he learned the man wasn't a traitor. He could be the other things, but the real traitor was his boss, Commodore Kang. She "forgot" about several phone conversations she had with Martinez and then went on to ditch her security detail. So the guys followed her and found out she was in contact with the Russians and that she was either selling them the information she stole or had already sold it.

The team knew that Martinez was in the clear and so they set themselves on arresting Kang as well as her Russian friends first, but while they may not have meant for it to happen, Nell and her gang got caught in the middle of a battle of NCIS vs. the Russians. But the Russians were no match for the team. They were able to arrest them and they passed on the happy news to Martinez that he was in the clear.

The last thing Nell did was explain herself to Eric and it turns out he didn't mind the kissing if it was for a good reason.

Summary: Sam assists a Department of Justice agent with locating a former U.S. boarder patrol officer who disappeared after the cartel threatened him; Kensi partners with a special agent from the Criminal Investigative Department to recover a stolen hard drive with sensitive military information.

Sam was contacted by his old friend Hamilton because as it turns out someone wanted a favor. The favor was for Sam and the team to investigate the disappearance in the Valley. It didn't sound like much, but this family was going by the name of Harris and the truth was that their name was Wallace as in James Wallace. He was a former Border Patrol agent who after a raid had gotten into a fight with a cartel member that led to the perp dying. It hadn't been his fault and he wasn't in trouble or anything. Only this cartel member was well-connected to a gang in operating in Texas and so a man named Ortega had put a hit out on Wallace for what he did. Wallace and his family were forced to go into hiding and they were there until suddenly a family was reported missing matched the details of the family.

Sam decided to take Special Agent Fatima Namazi with him to investigate. His normal partner was out on leave after getting injured in a hostage rescue mission that went awry, but Callen didn't mind staying in LA because he got to spend time with his nephew Jake and catch up. He hasn't seen Jake in a while because he wasn't on speaking terms with his sister Alex and so it had been a miracle when Alex called him. Callen was literally the last person she wanted to turn to for help and it ended up being a good thing he was available because she needed someone to babysit at the last minute. She dropped Jake with him and then she was out there. Which Callen thought he could still turn into a good thing except it was awkward between him and his nephew. They used to be really close and now it's like they don't know each other.

Callen would typically turn to Sam when he didn't know what to say to a kid, but Sam was gone and he was getting involved in something dangerous. He and Fatima went to go carry out surveillance on a bodega and he couldn't go into the store because he stuck out like a sore thumb. Therefore, Fatima volunteered. She went in alone to suss out the scene and she was almost taken hostage for her trouble. She was asking all the wrong questions and so two guys pointed their guns at her. Fatima tried to get the guys to lower their weapons and when that didn't work she kept them busy until Sam showed up with Hamilton. Both Sam and Hamilton wanted to know what was happening with the trigger happy duo and it was revealed that they recently survived an attack on their store. It's what made them a little jumpy and so they didn't mean to threaten Fatima.

Fatima still got her hands on the security cameras from the store and she went through all of them as they searched for information on the gang. They found out Ortega was arming his troops and they even caught a sign of him with a member of the Wallace family, but it wasn't James Wallace that was being forced into a car. It was his wife Christina. Christina was taken hostage instead and so it seemed like Ortega's plan for vengeance could have been to kill someone that James loved. James still missing along with his daughter Amanda and so Fatima thought the two went into hiding when their cover was blown. Sam, on the other hand, thought James wouldn't easily give up on his wife and that he went to ground with his daughter because he was planning to make a move against Ortega himself.

Unfortunately, Sam's theory was the one that panned out. He and the others got word about a shoot-out at a gang member's home and they went to the scene where they found a bunch of gangbangers dead. They had all been shot by James. James broke into the compound looking for information on his wife and he tortured and killed several people before he was done. The worst part was that he took his daughter Amanda with him! The little girl was overheard on security cameras to look the other way and that she shouldn't worry. Except he was killing someone five feet from her position and so he lost his priorities along the way. It wasn't just about the abduction of his wife anymore. James also wanted revenge and the team knew they had to stop him from reaching Ortega.

Not only was it a big gamble on James's part, but the odds of someone getting hurt was simply too high for anyone to be comfortable. They first wanted to know what happened to his daughter and so they searched for her until they found her in the car. She was left alone with a loaded weapon and her father had given her the orders to use the gun on anyone that tried to take her. The little girl was scared and paranoid because of her father. She needed to be coaxed into giving up her weapon and once she did it was after to go after her father. They found James with a gun pointed at Ortega and Ortega with a gun pointed at Christina. It was an impasse that only ended when Sam convinced James to let the agents deal with Ortega. There was no need for revenge with so many eyes watching him and even if he didn't know it his family still needed him.

James thankfully chose his family when pushed, but the rest of what he did to get to such a position was kindly "forgotten" by Sam and Hamilton because neither of them wanted to see a good man go down.

They dealt with Ortega and they reunited Christina with her family.

And if Sam was a little hesitant to share the details of the favor he did for Hamilton then that was on him.

Summary: Sam vows to personally apprehend the suspect who attacked a Navy Seal moonlighting at a security job for a successful marijuana dispensary.

The team was investigating a robbery. They were told that two masked gunmen ambushed a marijuana dispensary SUV and injured the passenger while the driver seeming got away. There was no evidence where the drive could have gone, but his passenger was why this became an NCIS case. They were brought in because the man that was grievously injured was identified as Navy SEAL Chief Petty Officer Alonzo Garcia. Garcia was moonlighting as security because these drug businesses couldn't rent armored trucks or work with any federally funded banks because marijuana wasn't legal on the federal level and so they had to make their all-cash payments to the Bureau of Cannabis Control the long way. They hired servicemen to make the money run to Arizona on their own and most of the time these guys were carrying large amounts of cash.

This truck, in particular, was carrying over two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. The company owns several dispensaries in Los Angeles and they have to make a payment based on what they take in at each store. Hence why there was so much on this last run. The team figured that was a chance that the driver might have been involved and that's why he disappeared, but they also tried questioning Garcia. Garcia couldn't talk because the of the tube in his throat and so he communicated via Morse Code. He would blink out the code and he tried to tell the team that this was an SOS situation. They told him that they understood he had been cornered and they told him that he did everything he could. He at least stayed around to fight and that's why they tried asking about his partner.

Garcia couldn't get a word out before he began to hyperventilate and so the doctors had to end his interview. They said that the patient needed to recover first and no one wanted to push Garcia, but they didn't learn anything new from him. He couldn't tell them about the heist nor could he identify anyone. The team tried going to the woman that owns the company and she basically told them that she has no reason to suspect anyone on her payroll of being behind the heist. She pays a great salary and even offers full medical benefits. She doesn't have disgruntled former employees because everyone that was working for her needs this job. She also said that if someone was going to betray her than why now and not when she first opened a dispensary. Things were different back then and she wasn't sure she could have trusted anyone because people were worried about the legality of working for her.

It wasn't what the team wanted to hear, but it made sense. There was no reason to betray the company and risk a steady job for a one-off payday. So they began looking elsewhere for answers. They questioned if the robbery had simply been a means to an end and so they went back to the evidence they do have in custody. They ran an analysis on the ammo they found at the scene and they came back with a match to a felon. Brian Booker has a long criminal record and his prints were found on the spent bullets. He also tried to run when the team came knocking at his door and so they were forced to chase him but Sam might have put too much anger into his effort. He was so angry that a fellow SEAL was injured that he used a surfboard to knock Booker unconscious and he was going to kill him if the team hadn't told him to stand down.

Booker needed to be convinced to talk to them and after Sam's stunt, he demanded his lawyer right off. He wasn't going to talk without his lawyer present and so the team went through his house. They found a bunch of crap until Kensi came across a burner. This burner was in constant communication with two others and these other people made sure to take out their SIM card frequently so that it couldn't be traced. The team had to work on their end into forcing someone to turn their phone on and once it happened it led them to their next suspect. The second guy was Edward Morrison. He lived at the house he grew up in and he's been living there alone since his mother died. And that could be why he lost it.

Edward became a recluse and he started shooting at the team the second they announced they were federal agents. They had to call in backup just to ram the door and afterward they had to deal with an even stupider situation. Edward who had locked himself into a room had begun to cry. He said that he couldn't move or reach his gun and he asked for help. Only when they rammed the door, Edward who was perfectly fine had gotten up again and tried shooting at them. The team was forced to return fire and they killed him but not before they heard him yell "You Will Never Replace Us". Most of them recognized that as being the chant of White Nationalists and they found proof of Edward's allegiance in the house. He was a hoarder and so he kept everything. And that included receipts.

Edward and his buddies have been buying up guns at gun shows and they were stockpiling them. It turns out the money they stole was to help pay for even more weapons and so the team knew that his cohorts were about to target a place, but they were told that there was immigration rally nearby and so they went there and that's when they ran into the driver. He was sitting on a rooftop just waiting to kill a bunch of people because the ignorant and the hateful believe that the white people were slowly being erased in America.

They were wrong and the team was able to arrest the last man in this conspiracy.

But it came close and no one was going to forget that Garcia's friend had been the one to turn against him.

Production Code: 1021
Summary: After Anna Kolcheck escapes from prison with her cellmate, Callen and the NCIS team assist with the investigation and search for her whereabouts.

The team was brought in when their old friend Anna Kolchak escaped prison. She escaped with her fellow prisoner Kate Miller and both of them were dangerous. They were killers and that's why it was shocking that anyone would want to help them, but it did become clear that received outside some kind of outside help. The Marshals suspected Callen. Callen was Anna's ex-boyfriend and they were living together when he testified against her. He gave evidence that led to the prosecutors charging Anna and she was given seven long years. She killed an unarmed man and that's what Callen told the prosecutors because he wasn't going to lie for his girlfriend. Only the U.S. Marshals believed he might have felt guilty about his choices. They knew that Anna hadn't been coping well in prison and that she put on a psych hold.

The first thing Callen was asked was if he knew? Did he know that Anna was considered a threat to herself and if so how did it make him feel about his testimony? The U.S Marshalls had to know if Callen regretted what he did and if he tried to fix it. Callen asked where he was between the hours of three and five in the morning because that's when the women escaped and he told them that he was asleep. He couldn't prove that he was asleep and so he had to answer the same question over and over again until the Marshalls felt sure. They later cleared Callen of any wrongdoing and he wanted to help track down Anna, but the team wasn't officially on the case. They had been filled in because the Marshalls merely wanted to test Callen and once he was in the clear when the team wasn't really needed.

Only they didn't want to let things go and they wanted to help because they know that these manhunts mostly end in dead prisoners. Anna may not be their friend anymore, but no one wanted her dead and so they turned to the Special Prosecutor Rogers. Rogers called in a few favors and he made sure that NCIS got to assist. The team was able to find out how this heist unfolded. Anna was in the hospital not that long ago in which everyone believed she had been targeted for being a former ATF agent and it turns out she hadn't targeted at all. Anna started the fight and afterward, she was moved to a cell by herself. She was too dangerous to stay with someone else and for a while, they weren't going to assign her a cellmate. This only changed because someone set Kate Miller's cell on fire. It was believed that her cellmate was the target and so she needed to be moved.

There was just one cell that a vacancy and it was Anna's. Kate was moved into Anna's cell and the two became friends. Kate even said as much when she sent a texted someone at the Russian consulate. She used the words "made a new friend" and it seemed like she was telling her partner on the outside that they depend on Anna. Anna's father was brought in by the Marshals who questioned him about his involvement with the escape and he tried to put them off as long as possible. Arkady shouted how they were never going to catch his daughter and that she could be in South America already. It was physically impossible, but Arkady didn't let that stop him and he was bragging until it was proven that he spent all night in a poker game. And so Vladlena still has her charms.

Once Arkady was cleared, he said he still wants to help and the Marshals didn't want his help. They were escorting him out of the building when Arkady grabbed Callen and told him that he doesn't think this is what seems. Callen agreed with his sentiment. He and his team have been digging through what they knew and it didn't sound like Anna. They questioned if she could still be working with the ATF and so they reached out to their friends in that department though they were in clear in saying that Anna had been let go. The ATF cut all ties with her a while back and with everything they learned with about the escape it did seem reckless. The team tried a different route and they contacted Kate's ex. He was a businessman she had an affair with and she turned that around to blackmail him.

Kate threatened to tell his wife, business partners, and his children everything. She told him that she'd keep her silence and in return, all she wanted was information on his business relationships with certain Russian oligarchs. These oligarchs were approved to do business in the states because they were considered harmless, but a lot of money has changed hands and Kate wanted to know everything. Her name also wasn't Kate. She stole an identity off of a dead body and so that everyone believes that the simple Kate was actually a Russian operative. The Russians clearly wanted her back and they weren't willing to risk their relationship with the states by telling their neighbors that an operative of theirs was in an American prison. Not when they may need Kate or whoever she is for another mission and so she was broken out.

Anna seemed to be the ones to have to help her and, once Anna wore off her usefulness, "Kate" was supposed to kill her however she couldn't go through with it. She credited Anna for helping her and she didn't want to kill a friend. She tried to tell her handler this and he almost killed Anna. It was "Kate" or better yet Katya who stopped him. Katya killed her handler and took over the mission. She even had the men following her and so she was in the charge now. Katya wanted to bring Anna with her when she left the country and the two of them left the handler's body where it dropped. It was later found by the Marshals who ran the id on the victim and said that he must have been killed for his car. They also said that Anna and her partner were guilty of felony murder and that brought in the death penalty.

Callen said it didn't sound like Anna and so Sam reminded him of Joelle. She had been a different story, but Callen swore he knew her and he had been wrong. Which could be the case with Anna. Anna and Katya were seen on route to a private airfield and so Sam and Callen cut him off. It was up to Callen to decide if they were going to take the shot and he chose to do it. He, Sam, local police, and everyone shot up the car thereby flipping. But Anna and Katya were alive and before they could be arrested the Russians showed up. They kept firing while the women went to the plane and Callen just managed to break away when he again had his gun trained on Anna. Anna asked him to trust her and she refused to explain herself or why she was leaving her friends under fire. She just boarded the plane and left.

Callen couldn't kill her and so he didn't try to stop her, but afterward, they got more information on Katya and it was revealed that she has a close connection to Pavel Volkoff as in Head of Russian Security Services.

There was only one reason why Anna would go after Volkoff. It seems Anna did all she did because she was trying to find Callen's father.

Summary: The NCIS team travels to Cuba for an unsanctioned mission after Callen gets a lead on Anna Kolcheck's whereabouts.

Siberia — A man is dragged through the snow in Siberia. An officer commands his help. They are headed to warmer climates.

Los Angeles — Hetty sits on a bench. She reads from a book. Callen wants to know what Anna is up to. She is making some clever moves, moves like Hetty would make. He wants answers. Hetty cannot give him any.

The team meets. They are headed to Cuba to help Anna who has sent an SOS. Callan sees a photo in the files. His father is still alive. They head out in 24 hours. Callen calls Alex to tell him he found him.

Avana — They arrive in Cuba. They plan to meet a man about the weapons they need. Back home, Nell is nervous about the team getting hurt. Nate reassures her they will be fine. They hug. Rodgers shows up. He wants to know why they are in on a Sunday. They try to cover for the team.

Callen and Joelle sit in a restaurant ready to meet a man named Lionel. Lionel arrives. He stalls. Joelle wants to leave. Two cars pull up. Joelle and Callen are taken away. The rest of the team watch from a distance.

Nell and Nate try to track them. They think they might have to tell Rodgers.

Hanna and Deeks have Lionel. They question him. He didn't want this to happen. He fears Vulcough. Meanwhile, Callen comes to and face to face with his dad. He is being kept for Russia. Soldiers come in. Callen and his father are taken for a walk where they see a man being beaten. Callen's dad knows who he is. On the outside, the team is with Lionel watching the place. They need to find a way in.

Back in their cell, Callen's father shares that he knows the man. Before he can share they are both brought back out to see Joelle and Hannah. The men shoot them both. Callen screams.

The men strap Callen to a chair. They cut off his air supply and beat him as his dad watches. Vulcough shares with Callen that his father sent him away but chose to raise his enemy's son.

Hanna finds an entrance with the help of Nell and Eric. Rodgers arrives, busting them talking to Lionel. He wants answers.

While Callen's father is taken face to face to meet with his enemies son, Callen pretends to be injured in the other room. Callen's father and the man communicate with their hands using a secret code. Vulcough sees this and breaks into the room. Callen's father and the man take out two of the guards. Feet away Hanna arrives after having broken in. In the gunfight, Callen also frees himself. He heads to find his father who took a bullet for the other man. Callen comes across Anna and Joelle. They are alive. Vulcough wanted him to think they were dead.

Nell and Eric discover there is chlorine gas on the grounds. Moments later after the team find their way to one another they limp to safety as gas pours through the vents. Vulcough is left to die in the building.

The team makes their way outside to see a chopper. Rodger called them help. Anna tells Callen she is staying in Cuba.

Los Angeles — Back home, Hetty visits Callen at the hospital. His father is there and stable for now. She stays with him while Callen goes home to rest. When Callen returns back to the hospital his father asks to see his daughter, not Alex, the other daughter. They visit Hannah's grave.

Flash forward — Callen visits two graves at the same site, Hannah and his dad's.

Production Code: 1023
Summary: Callen and Sam work with Harmon Rabb, the former JAG who is now the XO captain on the USS Intrepid to stop ISIS sympathizers from attacking U.S. aircraft carriers.

A Park Ranger found a body when she was out on patrol. The body was that of former Marine Elle Simms and this marine didn't take to retirement easily. Her ex-husband said she needed the rush she would get overseas and so she tried out plenty of jobs, but ultimately she wasn't getting the high she was looking for. Simms was an addict and when she wasn't using drugs and alcohol she was looking to reenlist in any way she could. She recently joined a DEA Task Force and it had been her colleagues that reported her for going MIA. Her ex-husband has reported her going missing in the past and each time she would show up. And so he got tired of being the boy that cried wolf and he left Simms months ago.

The ex had heard that Simms went missing again and he hoped that it would lead to rock bottom, but someone got to her first. Simms was missing teeth and her fingers. She was either tortured first and then killed or she was killed and her killer took the additional step of making things hard with forensics. It wouldn't matter in the long run because in both scenarios the killer had to be a professional. Her body was even disposed of by someone in the know and so that begged the question of why? Some on the team thought it could have been the ex-husband and that he took revenge for Simms wanting the life more than she wanted him while the techies found something a little more credible.

Nell found evidence that Simms was investigating a link between Syria and the United States. She was pursuing this lead on her own and so everyone wanted to know why she hadn't brought it to her superiors. Only she had. Simms went to her boss who was also a friend and she told him what she suspected, but he didn't believe her. Her known drug use was out in the open and so her friend thought she was punching ghosts. Or in other words, seeing problems that weren't there. It was believed that she had created a problem and she was asked to prove it. Simms was left offended and she never did show anyone her proof. Her boss had even checked the database afterward and he saw no signs of ISIS being in the US.

The terrorist organization hadn't even conquered Syria yet and so why they turn their sights on another country. Anyways, the database was checked and her superiors found nothing. The team knew that Simms didn't let it go at that and so they looked into who else she might have been in contact with. They found someone in the National Guard that had been her friend and when they went to go talk to the man they were met with resistance. Neither the guy nor his wife wanted to reveal where he was or what he knew and when the team went to go around back to see if they could catch him they ran into a bomb. A bomb had been planted in the backyard shed and it was pure luck that it didn't injure anyone on the team.

The fires were put out and the scene was checked over, but it was clear that Michael Baird had something to hide and so everyone wondered if he killed himself to escape punishment. There were no signs of a remote detonation or a trip wire or even a cell phone device. It had seemed like Baird killed himself and the only one that was fighting that estimation was his wife Olivia. His wife said that he would never kill himself and so the team investigated how he was able to do it. There was an explosive permit left behind that had been in someone else's name and once they had seen that they went to go talk to Baird's accomplice, but the man fired at them the moment they announced they were federal agents.

The team was forced to return fire and they ended up killing the guy, but they later got an emergency warrant and so that made everything okay. They got to go through Madison's things and they all thought it odd that the man was addicted to his gaming computer. He didn't have any other computer and so Eric checked why a man like Madison would be playing Viking War blood. It turns out the deceased was using the game to hide his communications with two more accomplices. Another thing that became clear was that this terrorist cell (whether it was ISIS or not) were planning something big. Eric saw them mentioned the USS Allegiance and that was the largest aircraft carrier in their whole fleet. It also carried nuclear weapons and so this cell was planning on a mass casualty event that no one knew about.

But what was the hold-up? The terrorists had killed Simms weeks ago and Baird already had an airtight alibi for her death yet he kills himself and destroys evidence in such a rash way that it looks like it was done on a whim. The terrorist was already speaking to someone with access to the aircraft and so why didn't they use the explosives that killed Baird on the actual vessel. There was just something about all of this that made the team question the validity and so things didn't begin to clear until they heard that Pavel Volkoff had been in contact with the Baird family. Both Michael and Olivia had changed their names and Michael at least was born in the Soviet Union before it was born.

Meaning this may not have anything to do with ISIS. It could be the Russians portraying themselves as Middle Eastern to hide their actions and so Sam and Callen went to go join the crew of the USS Allegiance, but they found a murdered sailor and realized that one of the accomplices could have killed the other.

Summary: Callen and Sam work with Navy Captain Harmon "Harm" Rabb Jr. to locate a group of ISIS sympathizers aboard the USS Allegiance. Also, Hetty enlists her friend, Navy Lieutenant Colonel Sarah "Mac" Mackenzie, to help obtain information from a Russian diplomat.

There was a killer onboard the USS Allegiance. Special Agent Afloat Brian Lee was killed after the ship left dock and that meant the killer had to still be near, but there was also the question of why? Lee could have gotten close in another investigation or he could have been killed to silence him. He was stabbed several times and that screams personal. Someone less familiar with him wouldn't necessarily have gotten so close to the victim and an assassin would have at least made the man's death look accidental.

Sam and Callen said that they would try to find out what happened on the ship and they asked for their team to help narrow down the field. Eric would have liked to help and he couldn't. He was used to working with Nell and Nell was off seeing to her sick mother. She wasn't going to come back anytime soon and so Hetty gave Eric a new partner.

NCIS Special Agent Jasmine Garcia was assigned to the team. She was smart and she wasn't going to take being sidelined because Eric thought he knew better. He didn't! Garcia told him to put his ego aside because they had a case to work and she created an app that made things a lot easier. The app cross-referenced anyone that was acting suspiciously on the ship and who played Viking War Blood recently. The game was a cover for foreign operatives to talk to each other without alerting anyone and it helped the team find Petty Officer Second Class Vincent Davis. Davis was a Chechen as well and he took his wife's maiden name. This followed the same pattern as it did with Baird and so the boys went to go talk to him, but Davis tried to run. He was on a ship and tried to run. It was pretty laughable because of course, he didn't get anywhere.

Sam and Callen got David and they put in a room for interrogation. They tried to ask Davis about his past and his motives, but he tried to claim that he didn't want to be discriminated against for being a Muslim and so Sam put him straight. Sam was a proud Muslim man himself and he never took steps to hide his faith. Sam knew that Davis was lying about changing his name and neither he nor Callen could get the man to open up before they received a call from Garcia. Garcia said that cameras put Davis on the other side of the ship when Lee was killed and so he couldn't have done it. It didn't mean he was in the clear for everything else and so the team went with the theory that Davis had help. There was a second operative on the ship and it was going to take forever for the guys to question everyone.

The XO needed to bring in the SEALs. With the help from the SEALs as a backup, the guys began rounding up everyone on the ship they suspected was a spy and the team on the land had also found something. Kensi and Deeks found Olivia Baird. Baird tried to claim she knew nothing and it wasn't until pressed over her Russian connections that her accent came back. She admitted to being a Russian spy and added that something went wrong with missing. Baird wouldn't say anything else without her handler's permission and the handler wasn't going to give it. The Russian ambassador could only be blackmailed over his sexual proclivities by so much. He did say that the Chechens betrayed them. It turns out that the Russians recruited these men and paid them to infiltrate several branches of the military only for the Chechens to betray by siding with their Muslim brethren like ISIS.

Sam and Callen were filled in and they went back to Davis with what they knew. They told Davis that his days were numbered if he didn't help, but he already did. Davis was talking to Lee about defecting and then Lee was killed. The only other man that knew what Davis was doing was Sabatino. The CIA knew about this plan and they used Davis to get information. Sabatino then got off in Iraq and so there's just a bigger picture than simply a few spies changing allegiance. The team was trying to figure that out when they were alerted that Iran was claiming Israel and Saudi Arabia had kidnapped two of their nuclear physicists. Iran was using that as an excuse to go to war and so the team had to find Sabatino.

Kensi and Deeks went after him in Iraq. They eventually found him in the middle of trying to stop WWII and so the team needed some clarification. They demanded to know what Sabatino and so he filled them in. He said that the Chechens began working with ISIS because ISIS was losing ground in Syria. It was almost over them and they desperately need a second chance at creating the caliphate. So they brought in the Chechens and they stole ballistics. They were going to use ballistics to fire on Israel and Iran and claim the two countries were attacking each other. They also created the fake video of Iran taking umbrage with Israel to play into this narrative. ISIS was counting on the countries shooting first and asking questions second. And so the only way to stop the war was to use the secret weapon.

There had been a second Chechen to side with the CIA. This guy went missing with his American handler in Iraq and unfortunately only they could stop the oncoming war. They had evidence of what ISIS had been doing and they could prove that no country was involved, but Sabatino needed to find them and he last heard that ISIS had sent a kill team after him. No sooner did he tell Kensi and Deeks that his life was in danger that ISIS made their move.

They came after the CIA compound and tried to bomb Sabatino out.

Meanwhile back on the ship, the last Chechen agent had found his way to the nukes and began bombing the Middle East in the hope of creating a devastating war.

Summary: Callen and Sam work with Navy Capt. Harmon Rabb, Jr. to apprehend spies aboard the USS Allegiance. Also, Hetty partners with Marine Lt. Col. Sarah Mackenzie to neutralize a missile attack in the Middle East, and Kensi and Deeks are trapped in a mobile CIA unit in Iraq while under attack by ISIS.

Last time the team were in the middle of stopping a false flag attack. ISIS wanted to play countries against each other and their plan involved ballistic missiles. Not just any missiles, but American missiles. They used these missiles to attack the Middle East and it was ISIS plan to let the whole area return to the bad old days. Back when anything goes. ISIS thinks if they cause enough chaos that they could use it as a ladder to power and what they didn't know is one of the strongest teams in NCIS history were onto them.

The team was doing everything to stop ISIS's plan from coming to fruition. Only they were split up. Kensi and Deeks were in the desert. They went over there to get information on which particular group was behind this false flag plan and it turns out their CIA trailer wasn't as safe as they thought it was. They lost a lot of men in the first wave of attacks. They then went on to lose so many that it was just the four of them. The usual suspects like Kensi and Deeks and there was also Sabatino and a guy Senior Chief Wallace.

Though there was no turning back once ISIS ground forces had locked on their position. ISIS was just going to keep on coming and they couldn't rely on Kensi's sniper skills to carry the day. She couldn't only target so many at a time. She couldn't keep up with the reinforcements that just kept coming and so the team there had to find a way to make their escape. They wanted out and the second half of their team was so busy trying to break into a place. Sam and Callen were still on the USS Allegiance

Unfortunately, ISIS radicals had infiltrated the ship. They hid radicals amongst the naval soldiers and used their first opportunity to break into the defense room. They were now the ones in charge of the missiles. They had already released several by the time the guys were aware of an issue, but if that wasn't enough, the guys were also concerned because the radicals took American hostages. The hostages and the terrorists were locked in an airtight chamber. There was only one way of getting in and it was in the hands of the terrorists.

It seemed like the naval ship that was slowly being commandeered from out underneath them. The guys' sole option on breaking in also carried a risk because it turns out the sudden shift in pressure might just kill everyone and that went for terrorists as well as hostages. So, the boys first tried getting a look in. They drilled a hole big enough for a camera that wouldn't risk anyone and they used that to determine where the hostages were located. And so ultimately the guys had to decide if they were willing to put the hostages in danger and sadly it had to be done.

This false-flag plan was going to start a war between Saudi Arabia and Israel. Israel's involvement alone would bring out American interference and things will begin snowballing from there. Hetty was also trying to stop the oncoming war. She was being assigned to an intervention backchannel and everyone knew it wouldn't work if they didn't prove the attack was a false flag. As it turns out the only people that could prove it was, in fact, a false flag were the terrorist. None of the teams have found any other shred of evidence.

Kensi and Deeks were doing their best to survive. They were off killing ISIS and attempting to steal one of their cars. But Callen and Sam did do their part. They used the hole they drilled into the doors to let in gas and they knocked out everyone. It was only then that they removed the door. They sent their naval officers to be treated and no one was hurt and the guy had the chance to question the terrorists. They told them that he couldn't expect help, that he might be blamed for everything, and the guys were too radicalized to care.

Sam and Callen, however, were later called up to something that might actually work. Hetty enlisted their services in the peace mission with the guys splitting up. One going to Iran and the other going to Israel. The guys were supposed to speak to people with connections to their respective government and somehow convince them the missiles were a false flag without any form of evidence to back up their claims. But the guys had nothing. They knew they couldn't make a case without being pushed.

They only got lucky when Kensi and Deeks did what they set out to do. They blew up a trailer to get away from ISIS and they made an escape. They then hid until their real mission took over. They tracked down the ISIS prisoners that knew the missile attack was a false flag and they freed them. Thereby, finally proving that the attack was fake. Kensi and Deeks sent the information to everyone to their team and so every government from Iran to Israel to Saudi Arabia knew what happened. And were thankfully able to prevent a multi-national war.

The friends also got to reunite at the end of this. They were separated for so long that the mission almost fell apart because of it, but they were together now or at least that's what they thought until Hetty told Sam and Callen that only them two were going to stay in the Middle East.

It was for an unofficial assignment and that's never any good.

Summary: Faced with multiple cases worldwide, the team splits up, with Callen and Sam working in Tel Aviv while Kensi partners with Department of Justice Agent Lance Hamilton in Los Angeles.

The team faced multiples cases world-wide. Callen and Sam were still in Tel Aviv. They were working with Callen's Eliana on an investigation for Mossad and it didn't look like they were coming back stateside anytime soon. In fact, the pair seemed to be adjusting fairly well to their new environment. They weren't thinking about their team and neither had any idea how much their friends were struggling. The team was abruptly left short-staffed when both Deeks and Eric were pulled into something else.

Eric was off doing side work. He couldn't discuss it and Nell hasn't heard from him in a while. She was growing concerned when the team another person. This time it was Deeks. Deeks was pulled into an LAPD meeting and so he was also going to be gone. With both men out of commission, it was really up to Kensi and Nell to investigate Liam Henderson's death. Henderson was killed point-blank after he stopped a robbery at a bodega and the thief claims to have no knowledge of this shooter. It seems both people were doing their own thing that night.

Only Henderson was known to NCIS. He was the bodyguard of the late Rick Dotson and Dotson was notable because he was an arms dealer. He was actually a very dangerous man when he was alive. He was even killed by a vigilante that wanted to bring Dotson's reign of terror to an end and then the vigilante committed suicide by cop. That was when the guy pushed the police into killing him because he wanted to die. This vigilante did it because he claimed his mission was over with Dotson's death and so now everyone was wondering if he had a partner all along.

If so then it could be this partner that was responsible for Henderson's death. Henderson was executed and so were several other people connected to Dotson's security detail. This could be because this second vigilante wanted to finish what he started or it could be that there was a rival in the arms dealing game that wanted to make sure none of Dotson's people could resurrect his business. Nell did her research. She later found out that a man named Colby Talbert did try to take over Dotson's territory back in the day and that Dotson had had to fight him off.

So, Colby was a suspect. The team couldn't dismiss their second theory and so they also carried into an investigation into whether or not the vigilante acted alone. There was just one problem with this investigation. Kensi couldn't do it by herself and she ended up turning towards their old friend Lance Hamilton for help. The two of them went looking for anyone who was still alive from Dotson's crew. They learned of Rick Takada, who was still alive, and they also talked to Dotson's girlfriend Karen.

Karen claimed not to know what was going on. She was paranoid enough about her own safety that finding out about Henderson had pushed her over the edge. Karen had her team double-check all security measures and she was almost too nervous to talk to Kensi and Hamilton. They literally had to deal with her with kid gloves. They gently talked to Karen about the old days and she didn't know how bad it was with Colby. She did, however, use his first name which indicated she might have known him personally.

The team didn't push on that instance. They had heard Rick Takada resurfaced and he was their chief concern. Especially as his life was in danger. Rick was the last person alive and it seems he recognized the threat. He went to a cheap motel where he hid in a room surrounded by weapons. Kensi and Hamilton thought they would have to pry Rick out of his room. They thought the man would be so scared that he wouldn't know to trust them and so it came as a nasty surprise when they found Rick dead.

Rick had been assassinated. He was the last of Dotson's bodyguards and he was also the only one the team could have questioned. They wanted to know if the old security crew had taken over Dotson's business. It could have confirmed if Colby was behind these killings. The team was still in the dark about that and so they chose to focus on what they could do. They used evidence from the scene of the crime to trace it back to their killer. And they found their killer hiding out in a closed pharmacy.

Their killer put up a fight when he was cornered. He forced Kensi to wing him and so he was getting medical attention while she was searching his effects. It turns out their killer was an Ex-royal commando. Just like the men, Karen hired to protect her. Kensi and Hamilton and their new theory suggested that Karen was the one to hire this assassin to kill Dotson's bodyguards. These same men were responsible for Dotson and he still died on their watch. So, Karen could have killed them out of revenge.

It made sense that Karen was behind this. She hadn't fled when the team told her that someone was hunting down Dotson's men and, despite her scared little bird act, she appears to have taken over her boyfriend's arms dealing. Almost as if she's been doing this from the beginning. The team had found plenty of evidence. They found out that Karen went by a different name and that she travels with a Canadian passport. She traveled all over the world under this other name. She also seems to have been the actual arms dealer and so Karen played the team.

Dotson was just the fall guy. Karen was the real mastermind and she eliminated Dotson's bodyguards because they probably knew too much. The team had found evidence to back all of this up. They just had to arrest her and unfortunately, she put up a fight. Karen's team nearly killed Kensi and Hamilton. They were only able to overwhelm because of their superior weapons and the fact that they were used to fight against such numbers. Both Kensi and Hamilton got out of the fight alive and they also arrested Karen.

Karen was going to be put away and so Kensi, Nell, and Hamilton all celebrated with drinks afterward.

They had such a great time together. They didn't even miss their other friends and so it's a good thing that Callen and Sam were coming back soon. If their secret mission had been any longer, the team would completely have forgotten about them.

Summary: Callen and Sam run protection detail for retired Navy Adm. Kilbride in an operation to locate a missing naval intelligence officer.

Hetty gave the team a mission without any information whatsoever. All she did was that it was a favor for Navy Admiral Kilbride and that the team were to meet him at his hotel, but she left out certain parts, like how the team was supposed to protect the Admiral. They were his protection detail at an event in which he refuses to describe. Kilbride only needed two of them to act his bodyguards and the other two were to keep his prisoner safe. That's right, his prisoner! Kilbride also refused to name the prisoner and so again he was leaving the team with two few details going forward.

Someone had to say something, so they all started asking questions and they got him to crack some if not 75% of the way. Kilbride never named his prisoner. He did, however, say that he was going to an event to purchase a high-ranking intelligence officer. He needed to buy her back before the enemy gets her and he was bringing millions of dollars with him. Kilbride didn't name the officer nor was he helpful with anything else. He just said he was running this mission and the others simply had to fall in line.

Kensi and Deeks stayed with the prisoner. The guy was panicking. He was squirming around and he clearly wanted them to take the tape off his mouth. Deeks toyed with him for a while before Kensi stepped in and she removed the tape. Their prisoner then said they all had to get out of there. They were supposedly going to die if they stayed and so the guys put the tape back on to shut him up. They didn't know who he was or what he was guilty of. They knew they couldn't trust him and so they tried finding out his identity on their own.

They took pictures that they sent to Eric and Nell and they learned that their prisoner has several aliases. None of which could be trusted of course. They also took pictures of his teeth to see if they could identify him that way, but before they could send those pictures, they heard knocking at the door and it was some sketchy dudes. There were the ones that David had been warning them about. David, also they had to get out of there before the dudes killed them and so they all jumped off the balcony into the pool.

It got them out of the hotel. It also gave Kensi and Deeks the means to drag their prisoner back to the boathouse. They tried to pressure him to get him to talk, but he knows that they don't know anything. They have no idea why Kilbride took him prisoner. They couldn't even prove if he committed a crime and so their prisoner kept his mouth shut. Kensi and Deeks had nothing else to do so they waited to hear from their friends. The same friends that went dark several minutes ago with no way of checking on them.

But the guys were okay. Sam and Callen went with Kilbride to a meeting where he offered twelve million bearer bonds in exchange for Jess Adams. Adams was the intelligence officer that was kidnapped. The things she knows could also leave the US Government defenseless and so Kilbride desperately wanted her back. He tried to make a deal with a millennial that was seeming in charge there and unfortunately the wannabe thug was useless. He wanted Kilbride to leave half the money as a sign of good faith and said that they could get the other half at the auction.

Kilbride was never going to allow for them to hold an auction, but he and the others couldn't deal with the kid because they wanted to get into the contact with the real boss, so they kidnapped the millennial. It turns out the kid was the boss's son. Adnan Das was the son of self-made millionaire Vihaan Das and he really was a wannabe. He wasn't tough at all. Adnan also thought he would have rights in detention and so that's when he taught him how the boathouse works a little differently. They also left Adnan with their other prisoner and went to talk to his father.

They told Vihaan that they could exchange his son for Jess Adams. They even got him frantic enough that he made phone calls right after they left and so that's were faced with a real problem. Adnan had apparently died in custody. He had some kind of cardiac event and there was the nothing the team could have done about it, but they couldn't tell his father that he was dead and so they pulled off a "Weekend At Bernie's". They pretended the kid was still alive by putting sunglasses on him and used his corpse into luring out his father.

Vihaan brought Jess and they brought Adnan's body, but before Vihaan could get close enough to inspect his son, the team ambushed him and killed his men. They then freed Jess Adams and delivered the unfortunate new to Vihaan.

Vihaan's son and his empire were now dead, but it was a win for the team and it seemingly brought them closer to Kilbride who held his own grumpy charm. And maybe he'll be a little forthcoming in the future.

Summary: While Callen and Sam are aboard the USS Allegiance, the ship is placed under quarantine for possible Ebola exposure. Also, Kensi and Deeks investigate the murder of a petty officer who recently departed the USS Allegiance and is linked to the Ebola exposure.

Sam and Callen were back onboard the USS Allegiance. This time they were escorting the new Special Afloat. His name was Special Agent Navid and he seemed a little on the earnest side because he wanted to make a good impression. He introduced himself to Captain Douglas. He also took the time to get the lay of the land and so there really was nothing wrong with him. Therefore, it didn't make sense why one seaman came across as hostile.

The officer took notice when Navid revealed his name. Now, that could be because of his Arabic descent or the guy could still be feeling raw after everything that happened. The ship was attacked from within by members of ISIS and those same traitors almost caused war. The seaman in question could be remembering that as he heard the name though doesn't discount him from actually being a racist.

Either way he made sure to knock into Navid as Navid was leaving. The man simply wanted to go to his cabin and put his stuff away and so there was no need to give him attitude. Navid thankfully didn't see that arm bump for what he what it was. He thought it was a coincidence and he ignored it. He was more focused on unpacking. He had left behind his wife as well as his three kids to take on this mission.

He was also going to be gone from them for almost a year. Navid was already missing them and so the guys tried to make him feel better. They talked to him over his last posting in Japan and they were also cracking jokes with their team still on land. Everything was just going great until the team passed on word that the guys' ship was quarantined. It was considered hazardous because a crew member that recently came off the ship was found dead.

Lt. Grant was murdered, but one of her killers was found dead of Ebola and she had some of it in her system as well. It was believed that she passed it onto her killer and that's how he contracted it. So, the investigation was considering the ship as the starting point. The ship did dock overseas and there was the whole spy scenario. There could still be spies on board the USS Allegiance. They could have picked up Ebola on purpose and then spread with the intention of causing an outbreak.

Only the investigation got wrong. They operated under the assumption that the Ebola spread first on the ship and then the team on land later found evidence proving the contrary. Kensi and Deeks found out that Grant was being held captive for a while. Their disease expert said that Grant wouldn't have been systematic first and so her kidnappers were holding her until then. They planned on releasing her back into the wild when she was truly sick and they didn't count on her fighting back.

Grant was military trained. She wasn't going to just let herself die and so she tried to escape. She got out of the warehouse where they holding her. She also had to start running on foot. She was followed from the warehouse and got into a fight with the man that would kill her. That's how she was able to spread the disease to him. The team also believed that a second captor was still out there and so Kensi and Deeks started looking for her while the others were supposed to pass on the good news.

The team called Sam and Callen to tell them that the ship was safe however by then someone began showing signs of Ebola. It simply didn't make sense. No one knew why people were getting sick on the ship and so the guys were doing their best to hunt down a lead while Namazi and Nell were assisting Kensi and Deeks. They soon found their second kidnapper. She was a member of Mashriq Army and she bought a bus ticket with Grant's credit card.

Kensi and Deeks picked her up as after they diverted the bus. They also had to let the military disease control be the ones to physically touch. She could be sympathetic as far as they knew and the couple couldn't risk getting sick. They found out that Kensi was late. The couple thought she might be pregnant, and they were playing safe until this case was over and she could take a proper pregnancy test.

Back on the ship, things were going from bad to worse. More sailors became sick and the one guy that had a problem with Navid — Petty Officer Stephen Lamb — was considered to be a possible spy as well as an all-around jerk. He refused to comply with Navid's orders. He was even going to detain him when Lamb became systematic and had vomited on Navid. It, therefore, brought Navid face to face with the virus.

He was now at risk of becoming sick. There was nothing he could do about it so he did his job and he got answers out of Lamb. Lamb, as it turns out, was not a spy. He was merely gullible for befriending a spy and so he was in the clear. For just that one thing. The rest like him being jerk was very much true and he only stopping being one when faced with possible death. And so there was that at least.

Kensi and Deeks meanwhile had gotten a better picture of what happened. There was a third kidnapper out there and he was possible infected because he was the one that got into a fight with Grant. The guy that died was the carrier. The Mashriq Army got the virus out of their country by infecting one of their own and using him as a means to get the virus into the United States. They were then going to infect Grant who being sick would have gone to the Military Hospital.

Grant could have killed hundreds without any finding out, but she died and the mission seemingly failed. Kensi and Deeks even caught their last guy and so that should have been the end. Except no one knew how the ship became infected. Grant wasn't injected with the virus until after she landed in LA. She wasn't anywhere near her friends and so the doctors onboard had tried testing everyone for Ebola. And surprisingly they were all clean.

The people onboard were showing symptoms because it was all in their heads. They let panic and fear convince them that they were going to die. And after they had been reassured that they were in fact in the clear, their symptoms began going away and thankfully Lamb remained humble.

He did judge Navid based on the man's ethnicity and he apologized for it. Luckily, almost dying had shown him what a great person Navid was and so the two were on the road of becoming friends.

And back on land, Kensi found out she wasn't pregnant but she realized she and Deeks needed to talk about where they stand on having kids.

Summary: The NCIS team searches for a stolen painting valued at $40 million after online chatter indicates the artwork is being sold on the black market to fund terrorist activity.

A domestic disturbance led to a break in the case. The case itself was the theft of a forty million dollar painting called "the Cube" and it seems the couple that was arguing had taken a picture of themselves with that said painting after the painting was stolen. Therefore, this couple either had a hand in the theft or bought it on the black market. The couple was later identified as Luis and Lucy Garcia. They had been fighting about or-ange of all things when their fight got the better of them and they started throwing things around.

The one thing they didn't throw was their paintings. The couple was collectors and so there was bound to evidence of other fenced arts. But the reason this became a case for NCIS was that Hetty had been interested in the painting. She and most of the intel community believed the painting once belonged to Saddam Hussein. It went missing after he was caught and it was again believed to have been used to fund terrorism. There were plenty of terrorist cells out there that still consider Saddam a hero.

Any one of them could buy, trade, steal or sell this painting. This is why it was imperative that the team found out what the couple did with it and to do that they had to get pass LAPD who assigned this case to their Art Theft Detail Department. There was one detective who really didn't want to hand over her case. Callen and Sam forced her to when they said this was a matter of National Security and so she threw in a remark about them deserving Detective Deeks. Deeks was sort of notorious back with his fellow detectives.

Most of them consider him a problem because of all of the shady things he's done. Meaning the detective's remarks about him and NCIS deserving each other was technically an insult. A rather crude one at that. The boys didn't mind it however because they love Deeks and now they also love upsetting this one detective. The boys first wanted answers from the Garcias. The couple had clammed up following their arrest and they proved to be completely unhelpful. They said they had a painting either from a week to three months.

The couple swears they didn't remember anything else, but the team received help from a different quarter. They ran into an insurance investigator. This investigator, Katherine, was there to track down the painting because it was part of her job and she was a lot more help than their search team. Katherine found out the couple use Bouchier Auction House. It was the premium auction house in the city and the clientele there was heavily protected. They weren't going to tell NCIS anything if it hadn't been for Katherine.

Katherine had an in with the auction house. She also knew they had to talk to her friend there because the person that originally owned the painting, Jean Chu, had bought the painting through some backdoor deals from that same auction house. Everything seemed to point to Bouchier. The team even thought maybe the painting had been returned there and sadly it hadn't been. Katherine's connection could only dream of having the painting again. She almost burst into tears just knowing it was still out there and so this auction house would have clearly have jumped at the chance of buying this painting back.

It didn't seem to faze them if it was illegal or not. That's how much people cared about this one painting and yet the team didn't think much of it. They thought the painting looked like a child had done it. It was because they didn't get all the hype around it that they failed to realize how serious this painting on the black market was. It was only later that Nell found out the Garcias traded the painting for counterfeit drugs. They had apparently used a middleman and that's how they got the painting in the first place.

Deals on the black market were handled through a middleman. It stopped either side from figuring out who they were dealing with and it protected them as well. This way no one could testify against the other. The team couldn't proceed without that identification and so they set up a sting with Katherine's help. They set Kensi as a major art collector. She had to pretend to be interested in wannabe artists and then she had to ask for something off-market. She had to convince the curator to hook her up with the illegal art.

The ones sold on the black market. Kensi was off doing that when the rest of the team received news from Nell. Nell had found chatter surrounding the painting and the conversations on the dark web made it seem like the painting was still in LA. Nell handed Callen and Deeks an address and unfortunately, there was a little too late to get the painting back. Someone had escaped the house mere moments before they arrived. The team was now trying to connect the house to any one person and as it happens there was one connection to Christina.

Christina had been Katherine's friend at Bouchier Auction House. She also has a side business that no one knew about and it turns out the team inadvertently tipped her off when they went to her for help. Christina must have panicked afterward. She tried to offload this painting herself without an intermediary and the team found her when she was meeting with a couple of shady people in the park. The team had wanted to wait and see what happen, but Christina's friends tried to kill her so the team was forced to intervene.

They saved Christina's life by stepping in the way they did. They also captured the men that attacked her and those guys weren't talking. If the team wanted answers, they had to go directly to Christina. They asked Christina about the meet. She said she was trying to sell the painting to a Chinese tycoon by the name of Oliver Yang and that his men turned on her because she lost the painting. The painting was supposed to be at the house. She doesn't know where it went and so the team asked her who had it last.

Christina told them the last owners were the Ajams. The Ajams were a family from Saudi Arabia and they wanted to use the painting to receive a cache of explosives. As the team would later learn, the Ajams stole back the painting in order to get the weapons they wanted. They were even in the middle of a deal with a South American team when NCIS busted it up and arrested everyone.

They even got back the stupid painting.

The painting was returned to Jean and it had been Jean that revealed Katherine wasn't exactly an insurance investigator. She technically owned the insurance company. So, she went out into the field tonight because she had been looking for some adventure.

Summary: The NCIS team reluctantly aligns with two former criminals from England, Ricky Dorsey, and Frankie Bolton, after a powerful arms dealer kidnaps Ricky's daughter in an attempt to obtain a dangerous weapons system.

A heist in the UK was soon a problem for NCIS. The guys that pulled off this heist were all British and there had several contacts in the states. They were in league with someone named Andy Green. Green was an arms dealer and the guys needed him to sell a weapons system. The system could supposedly destroy an armored truck at distance. NCIS was given a hint this deal was going down so they moved in to arrest Ricky and Frankie and it turns out they made a mistake. The boys may have pulled off the heist and gotten in bed with an arms dealer, but it was all for a good reason.

Ricky's daughter was kidnapped. She was taken and whoever has her had demanded that the guys get Green to sell the weapons system in exchange for the girl. But to do that, the guys had to pay off Andy and so that where the heist came in. Ricky and Frankie robbed a mobster in the UK. They stole the money they needed to bribe Andy and no sooner did they do that they got a message about Ricky's daughter. The guys were supposed to go pick her up and that's when they were arrested. They were arrested right before they could collect the girl.

The people that had her had probably seen them getting arrested as well. Therefore, Ricky's daughter could be anywhere now. The guys didn't know what to do so they asked for help from the team. It seems they've been out of the game for a while now and so this recent heist/rescue had pulled them back into life. The team could see that they were desperate and it didn't hurt that that times have changed. The team decided to help because they truly did care about getting the girl back, but they also wanted to get the weapons system back as well.

The same terrorist now has both. They have the weapons system and the girl. So, to find him they first had to track down the middleman. Steve McMillian was his name. The guys didn't know how to find him now with their arrest probably being out there and so the next best thing was to track him down using his weakness. Like his favorite gambling den. They went to a secret gambling den that was run by and for Brits. You had to be one to get in and so the team worked on their fake accents. They also received some help from Ricky and Frankie.

Both of whom went along for this little joyride. They were after all the only real Brits there and Frankie used to be a card cheat. The team tasked Frankie with looking for other cheats. They also tried getting information on McMillian, but what they later found was upsetting. The guy was apparently dead. He was killed the second he became expendable and Frankie ruined their cover when he began cheating on cards. The mission there was ruined and so the team went back to their old methods.

They brought targets to the boat shed. They questioned them and were getting nowhere when Ricky barged into almost strangling a guy. Ricky had thought the Americans were too soft, but his methods did get answers. He found out his daughter was kidnapped by the North Koreans. He even learned the name of the man in charge and so his brutish ways came in handy. The team now had a name. They ran that name passed their old contacts and sadly they learned the man they were looking for had a sadistic side.

Their contact also gave them an image to work with. Fatima ran the image search and it became two passports. One for Michael Lee and the other for Michael Park. They were the same man and with help from their contact the team learned that "Michael" was probably working on the weapons system as they speak. Fatima tried tracking them down and she located them at a warehouse, but by the time the team found them, the guys were gone and it seems they had been tipped off. Fatima traced the phone call and it led directly back to Ricky.

Ricky had stolen the phone off of Super Fat at the gambling den. He said that he couldn't trust the team to find his daughter and that's why he came up with his own plan. He contacted the North Koreans. He tipped them off about the raid because he had made his own deal with them. He offered them their traitor Jennifer Kim back if they give him his daughter. Ricky was willing to give up the team's North Korean contact because he only cared about getting his daughter back. He didn't care about the weapons system while the team did.

They were very angry with Ricky when they learned what he did, but they were still willing to help him and so they took their own twist on his plan. They pretended to hand over Jennifer and the truth was they had surrounded the North Koreans. They waited until they saw Ricky's daughter Angela and that's when they made their move. They attacked the North Koreans and killed them all. And the only one that was injured, Ricky.

But he was fine. He got his daughter back and that's all he wanted.

And the team did recover the weapons systems, so they were willing to forgive Ricky for him going behind their back.

Production Code: 1105
Summary: The NCIS team links the theft of an undersea drone prototype to a video game streamer's elaborate party; Callen and Sam cross paths again with insurance broker Katherine Casillas, who insures the gamer's property.

A man was shot at a house party. He was later identified as Andre Vizquel and he wasn't even invited to the party. He was a Naval Researcher. His current project is an underwater drone and it means great things for the Navy. Especially, once it was up and running. It would be linked with several submarines and used by them to release these drones into waters around the world so this made the project a very big deal. The Department of Defense wanted everything that was happening with it as well as with the people building. And Vizquel has shown some worrying signs.

Before he was shot, Vizquel went to his lab. He removed something from there and he had it on him when he was targeted. It also wasn't on his person when he was later found bleeding from a gunshot wound. Vizquel's health was still precarious when the team got the case and so they weren't able to ask what he removed. They just knew it was out there. They had to find this object they didn't understand and protect their Naval position in the Gulf. The team also had to figure out why Vizquel went to the party.

Vizquel didn't know anyone there. It didn't seem like his scene because the party was thrown by a social media influencer and he was actually supposed to meet his boyfriend for dinner. His boyfriend Franklyn Shapiro had had a whole night planned for Vizquel. He was going to propose and now he says he's not sure if he even knew his boyfriend because a lot was coming out of this investigation. Like that party that no one can explain. Vizquel wasn't seen indoors and the car that sped out of there right afterward hadn't seemed like anything the influencer's friends might have driven.

The influencer was Zane Von Bohlen. He made eight figures by playing video games and his party that night had been in celebration of becoming the fact of a hot watch band. Said contract was removed following the shooting. They thought he was unreliable and so he wanted to find the shooter more than NCIS. Zane was so upset he called in Katherine. The same Katherine was the insurer for his Ferraris. Katherine went to the house to check on the cars and she got to say hi to Sam and Callen while she was at it.

There was no correlation between the Ferraris and the case, so Katherine wasn't interested in what the guys were doing. She merely said her hellos in passing. She went back to her business and they did with theirs. They had gotten security footage from the lab and it wasn't Vizquel that stole the technology. It turns out it was some guy named Nick Moore. Moore used to work at the labs and he was fired for drinking on the job. The team later found and arrested Moore for the break-in. They even asked about Vizquel.

Moore wasn't scared as it was. He was honest with them about how it been hard to get a job and that he went into adult videos because he was desperate. He was doing fine there when he was approached about the labs. The people that wanted access to the labs had known his real name and they threatened to reveal it if Moore didn't play their game. They were also willing to throw in some money as well. So, Moore took their offer. He met with Vizquel for lunch and he used that to steal the man's badge off of him.

He then broke into the labs where he stole the drone component. Moore said he was directed to a car in Brentwood and that he was told to leave the component under a Ferrari. Sounds familiar. Moore, as it happened, had left this incredible piece to an underwater drone under one of Zane's Ferraris. He did this because the thieves knew that one the Ferraris were going on sale and figured they could buy the car there. And so this whole scheme was very elaborate and it would have worked if Vizquel hadn't figured out his keycard was stolen.

Vizquel confronted Moore when he realized his key card was gone. He wanted to know why Moore took it off him and Moore ended up telling him everything. The guy was not strong in the slightest. He told Vizquel what he took and where he hid it. Hence Vizquel went to the party looking for the Ferrari. It's also where he ran into someone that was watching the car and was in turn shot for trying to steal the component back. Vizquel was now fighting for his life and the Ferrari had been taken to an auction house.

The team needed an invitation to the auction. They, therefore, called upon Katherine to provide them one and she was only able to do it by putting Sam's car for sale. As long as his car wasn't sold from out under him, Sam was willing to go with the ruse. He, Callen, and Fatima went to the auction and they watched as the car was bought by Tarpena Joyce. Joyce was a cover. She was a hacker for hire and she had been bought by Russia. She tried to hack the drone and when she couldn't turn to Moore.

Tarpena also received help from her watcher friend. She had him keep an eye on the car and he tried to when Vizquel got in the way. Her friend shot Viquel, but then he was later killed and so it looks like the Russians double-crossed Tarpena. The FSB team had killed her guy and she was their link to their crime. They went to auction and kidnapped Tarpena by gunpoint. The team was under heavy fire and so it took them some time to get free much less follow Tarpena. She was carrying the component with her and that meant finding her was important to National Security.

And so the team split up. Callen and Fatima dealt with the FSB agents and meanwhile, Sam went with Katherine to go after the component. They were able to track it down as well as save Tarpena's life. So, the team did go to work on this case. They saved the tech and they cleared Vizquel's name. His boyfriend still had several questions, but that's up to him and Vizquel to figure out.

And this was going to be the last the team sees Fatima for a while because she was talked into a trip with Hetty and that could literally mean anything.

Summary: After a Navy lieutenant disappears from the scene of a car accident, the NCIS team processes the crime scene and discovers his laptop is missing along with recently accessed confidential information for retired Navy SEALs.

Nell had a case for the team. She was alerted when Lieutenant Paul Tatum had failed to make his destination. The lieutenant was known to be driving up from San Diego and he was in town for a meeting at the VA. Tatum happens to be an administrator. He was supposed to be at the meeting to handle any in-house affairs and unfortunately, he never made it because he was involved in a car accident. Tatum was found at the side of the road by a fitness instructor. The instructor tried to find out if Tatum was okay and as he was checking on the passed out man — he was attacked.

Someone used a stun gun on the only witness to the car accident. It was also the last time anyone had seen Tatum and it is believed that he either wondered or worst he was kidnapped. Kensi and Deeks went to the scene. They read from the police report that the instructor was doing a fitness video when everything happened. The guy was recording it all with his cell phone and he even had it posed. It wasn't on him when he was attacked. He didn't even realize it was gone until he came to and tried calling 911.

The instructor thought his phone was stolen by a homeless guy he ran into earlier. Deeks and Kensi then tracked down Isaac and they found out he hadn't taken the phone. He did, however, take down the license plate of the car that drove off from the scene. Nell used that to trace the car and she found footage of a passed out Tatum in the passenger seat of said car. She and therefore the team now know that Tatum was kidnapped. Making it a National Security issue. Tatum as it turns out used to be a Nuclear Engineer.

Tatum has inside knowledge of the US Nuclear System. He only retired from the job because he developed diabetes and that's when he was forced to take a desk job. He could have resented it.

Only he never did and his coworker said he was just as committed to his job as an administrator as he was to being an engineer. Tatum it seems was one of those people happy to serve. He was deeply involved with his current position and his job there could also be a security issue because someone like Tatum has access to thousands of files on sailors.

He knew their locations as well that of their families. Someone could have kidnapped for that information and so the VA locked him out of the system. It had taken hem about an hour to do so. Which was apparently all the kidnapper needed because they gained access to his files and they went digging. Nell was looking into what they went digging for. The team meanwhile was looking for Tatum. They traced the car to a shady rental lot and they got the dealer to give them as much as possible.

They also tracked down the car where they found a very confused Tatum. He was left out on the open and his blood sugar was low. The guys gave him a candy bar that seems to do the trick. Tatum was soon back to his old self and he had no memory of the past five hours. The guys tried to tell him that he needed to go to the hospital and he swore he didn't because he stays on top of his diabetes. He has an app to manage his blood sugar. He logged into his system and he found it had been wiped clean.

He had no idea how that was possible. He explained that the app was connected via Bluetooth to his laptop and the guys figured out pretty easily that he had been hacked. They then had Nell check it. She later found evidence of his phone being hacked from a library and the images of the guy doing it happened to match the identification of the car renter. His name is Zachary Vale. He was a loner who couldn't hold down a job and he had a message from the Koran found on his fridge. This message just happened to be something heavily borrowed by a jihadist.

His extremist views would also explain why a Naval Officer's car was bombed. Nell had followed Vale's digital footprint and she found out that he was targeting members of the Special Forces in revenge for Osama Bin-Laden's death. Vale was also going it alone. He refused help from everyone on the dark web and committing these murders happened to profitable for him. He was earning fifty thousand for each officer he kills. The team then theorized that he could be faking his ideology for the money.

A guy like Vale doesn't just join a jihad out of the blue. He was either looking for deeper meaning in all the wrong places or he was looking for a payday. Ultimately, it just didn't matter in the scheme of thing. The team needed to find Vale and to do it they used security footage of when he tried to plant that bomb. They saw for themselves that he was using a smart bike. A smart bike he bought by stealing the credit card information of his nice neighbor and so they tracked down the bike to an abandoned school building.

Vale had been using the seclusion of the building to create his own bombs. So, the team armored up and they moved on the building. Kensi and Deeks went after Vale's helpers because he apparently was working with two others and in the meantime, Sam and Callen went after Vale. Vale had holed himself up in a room with bomb parts. The guys distracted him by flying a drone into the room and when he tried to shoot the drone down — the guys used that opportunity to take him out. Vale was now dead and luckily the team killed him before he could target anyone else on the hit list.

The scene was lockdown. The team even got a few laughs out of it and more than one person decided to borrow Deeks's new motto of never complaining.

Summary: Callen and Sam travel to San Francisco to search for Beale after he's kidnapped during a clandestine mission for Hetty.

Eric was the victim of a home invasion. An armed group showed up at Eric's door and he was lucky because he was able to get away by outsmarting them. Eric set off his alarm system. The sound alone annoyed Eric's attacker and it distracted them which gave him the chance to make an escape through the window. Eric did end up getting grazed by a bullet. It was nothing major and he was otherwise ok. No, the hard part wasn't in the escape. It was when he was getting help. Eric tried to flag down a police car.

Eric threw something at their window because he thought that would grab their attention. He instead broke the window and the police later arrested him for vandalism because of it. Thankfully, Eric was given the chance to explain himself. He told them what happened back at his apartment and they checked out for themselves. They went to his apartment. They saw the destruction and they knew Eric was telling the truth. They simply didn't know what to do with the information. SFPD handled typical crimes. Not potential espionage or anything involving the federal level.

Eric wasn't just Eric after all. He was NCIS and the police were later happy to sign him over to a couple claiming to be NCIS Agents. The police thought NCIS was handling their own problems, but they, unfortunately, Eric over to his kidnappers. The people that broke into his apartment had tried to kidnap him back then and when that failed they then pretended to be NCIS to kidnap him that way. Meanwhile, the NCIS Agents were trying to track down Eric. Sam and Callen showed up in San Francisco.

They were the ones supposed to be picking him up. When they heard he had already been picked up, they quickly realized their friend had been kidnapped and they began to investigate his case. They went to his apartment. They found shell casing and realized they were normal bullets. They were actually tranquilizers. Eric was grazed by one and it could explain why Eric was struggling to stay awake back when he was at the police station. There was also an added bonus to Eric being hit. It meant his kidnappers were, in fact, trying to fix his drowsy problem when they later gave him coffee and put in a pick me up.

The boost was drugs. It was supposed to lower Eric's inhibitions and luckily it wasn't enough to leave him too exposed. Eric was still somewhat self-aware. He realized what was happening and he escaped his kidnappers for a second time. He was even on the run when he began hearing voices. It left him dazed and confused to the point where he didn't know where he was or what happening and so Eric made sure to hide while he still had the chance. He was in hiding while his friends were still trying to figure out who would want to kidnap him.

Eric had left NCIS for a sabbatical. He received a job offer from a startup called Logic Wide and the offer was too good to pass up. Eric got Hetty to sign off on it and he went to San Francisco. Sam and Callen checked out this company. They tried to get someone to talk to them and it seems the company was going to put up a fight. They all signed strict NDAs and no one was going to talk to someone outside the company. If the team wanted answers out of them, they were going to have to steal them.

No one on the team knows what Eric was doing at the company. Not even his own girlfriend knew and yet she thinks it has something to do with Hetty. Hetty was very mysterious. She must have given her permission for a reason and so Nell tried to find out what it was. She asked Hetty what Eric was really doing in San Francisco and Hetty refused to say. Hetty believes that Eric can handle himself no matter what happened and Nell disagrees. She thinks Eric wasn't a field agent and that he should have been protected. And she wasn't wrong.

Eric got involved in something he couldn't handle. The company he works for had set up his alarm system and it seems that the same system was being used to spy on him as well as several other employees. Kensi figured that out when she talked with the man that owns the company and someone used the exact same device to spy on him. Whoever was watching him had sent a couple of armed guys to his place. So, Kensi was forced to hide in a panic room with a billionaire. She was off doing that while Eric was coming too in a garbage can.

That's where he hid. Eric stayed there until the drugs left his system and he left when he started to feel better. Eric then tried to find help afterward. He spotted a surveillance camera and made sure he could be seen because he knew Nell was monitoring everything. And it worked too because Nell spotted him, and she sent his coordinates to Sam and Callen.

The boys showed up right as the fake agents did and so Sam and Callen were able to arrest the fakes. They also got the real story from Eric. Eric found Shaun Reynolds owned the company, but that it was being operated by the Chinese who were going to build the company up and then sell it to the US military with a backdoor sown in.

And even though he wasn't a field agent, Eric proved that he could handle himself and that he could take down a company used as a front for Chinese Intelligence.

So, Hetty wasn't wrong in choosing him for the job and she wasn't wrong in wanting Callen to eventually take over for her.

Summary: Akhos Laos, a former black ops agent originally recruited and trained by Hetty Lange, returns to seek revenge on Hetty for the life she introduced him to.

The team faced a possible security breach. They were called in because a strange young woman came to their office and she was holding a box. The box was suspicious because it could be a bomb. It also said "Hello NCIS" on it. Therefore, this woman knew where she was and that she wasn't supposed to be there. NCIS's building was off the grid for a reason. They didn't want their many enemies finding them so easily and so this woman came out of her way to find them. Her face, however, wasn't recognizable.

At least not to the team. They had never met her and the woman wasn't showing up on any of their databases. It was like she was a ghost. The team would have liked to have questioned her except she wasn't talking and the only thing she seems to care about was the box. The box meanwhile wasn't a bomb. It was simply a box with two items inside. There a letter that quoted "Dante's Inferno" and there was also a hand. The hand belonged to a former CIA Operative. The guy retired several years ago to go into private consulting and there was admittedly a chance one of his enemies caught up to him.

Barrett Fimmel trained assassins. He was technically responsible for each person those operatives went on to kill and so someone could have taken his hand to prove a point. It could be a message about how he was the one truly guilty, but it didn't make sense why the culprit would then send it to NCIS. NCIS was still figuring that out when they went to Barrett's home and found the rest of him. His blood was found in teacups and the upper half of his body was staged to stand upright in his bed. It was one of the oddest scenes the team has ever come across.

They thought that would be the end of it until suddenly their culprit called them. He had called himself "the fallen son" and he asked them to tell his mother he was coming home. The team hadn't known what he meant by that. Then they talked to Hetty. Hetty said she was "mother".

She also said they were looking for Akhos Laos who had been a young boy that was abandoned by his family because they thought he was devil-born and so Hetty took over his care. She trained him. She would have liked to have finished his training and unfortunately, Fimmel took the boy away from her.

Fimmel trained Akhos into becoming a killer. Akhos did as he was told for a while and then he supposedly died a couple of years ago. At the time, everyone thought he was dead. There was no deeper investigation into it and Hetty had never even mentioned him to the team. His survival now is what's forcing her to tell her friends what happened. She told them that Akhos was like Callen and it made Callen's friends feel for him. They all knew that Callen had been pushed into this life. There was never a moment where he chose it and Sam for one thought Akhos was justified in being angry.

Akhos was robbed of a childhood. He never received a chance to choose what he believed in or what he should fight for and so Sam touched base with Callen because he wanted to know if Callen ever felt that way as well. Only Callen didn't feel like opening up. He shut down the conversation and tried to ignore the similarities between him and their killer. Sam and Callen tried to go after Akhos. They used Hetty as bait and they waited for Akhos to collect her. No sooner did a henchman pick her up that the comms room went dark.

Nell and Eric were left blind. They didn't know how to track Hetty and so Sam and Callen were derailed for quite some time. Nell and Eric had to work to get comms back under their control and by the time they did that — their locator was saying Hetty was in the middle of a lake at Echo Park. It also didn't help that a body was supposedly found in the lake. The boys raced to the park to see if it was Hetty and thankfully wasn't. Her other locator pin said she was in Downton and so the techies slowly tried to find her even as the rest of their team was put in danger.

Kensi and Deeks went to a location they thought held Akhos. They went there and then they were separated. It turns out they walked right into a trap. Deeks was locked in a room with a bomb and there was nothing Kensi could do. She tried breaking down the door. She kept calling the bomb squad. She even tried getting Sam on the phone because he was their resident bomb expert, but nothing seemed to work and Deeks was telling her to give up. Deeks didn't want his wife dying too. He told her she should clear the area and she was going to do it before she saw that there was one more option left.

Kensi tied a rope to the door and she then tied the other half to the back of a car. She then used the car to rip off the door thereby freeing her man and the two escaped the building without getting hurt. Luckily, the rest of the team were also making head waves. Sam and Callen track down Hetty. Sam took care of the men outside and Callen was going to face off with Akhos. And while he thought it would be easy, Callen was losing the fight when Hetty appeared and she killed Akhos to protect him.

Hetty stayed with Akhos until the very end. She had loved him once upon a time and she didn't want him to die alone.

Akhos's allies including the mystery woman all fell after he did.

The mystery woman was identified and she gave Special Prosecutor Rogers information he needed.

Not that it mattered wot Callen when he finally decided to ask Hetty about the other young men she "mothered" over the years.

Summary: While the team investigates the theft of a computer virus, Callen and Sam consider their future at the agency, Kensi and Deeks discuss having children, and Eric and Nell analyze the impact of Eric's undercover assignment on their relationship. Also, the team tracks Mara, a crooked upscale banker.

The team busts crooked banker Mara at a Christmas party. Then Deeks and Kensi serve their new loco moco to Sam and Callen at their bar. They debate whether Hetty is thinking about retiring. Kensi asks Sam and Callen if one of them would take over after Hetty leaves, but they both beg off.

Army CID Special Agent Steve Evans asks Eric and Nell to gather the team because he believes L.A. will be the target of a terrorist attack. Evans thinks that Ethan Peretz will download a computer virus in L.A. or Chicago. Sam encourages Callen to take over for Hetty when she retires.

Eric admits to Nell that he enjoyed being a civilian. Sam tells Callen that he would like to mentor a young agent.

Kensi and Deeks talk about having children. Eric and Nell dissect their relationship as he prepares to move out so Nell's sister Sidney can move in.

Sam had considered moving to the Department of Justice to be partnered with Lance Hamilton.

Nell tells Eric that her mother isn't getting any better.

Czech mercenaries are working with Peretz.

Sam tells Callen he's moved past the dark place he was in after Michelle died.

Sam explains his plan for improving the team after Hetty leaves to Callen.

Kensi tells Deeks that she's ready to have a baby.

Nell and Eric locate Peretz and call the team. Peretz is targeting LAX. The team and Evans confront Peretz and his shooters. They stop Peretz before he can upload the virus.

Nell tells Eric that she doesn't want to analyze their relationship but to keep it as it is.

Callen tells Sam that he's going to look for Anna. They have no ride back after the shootout and have to call an Uber.

Summary: CIA Officer Veronica Stephens asks the NCIS team for help when an agricultural engineer Hetty asked her to bring to the United States disappears.

CIA Officer Veronica Stephens was attacked before her morning workout. She had gotten out of her car and was putting herself together when a guy came at her with a syringe. Veronica fought him off before she got back into her car and drove away, but she later ended up going to NCIS. It seems she had told Hetty that she thinks this attack had something to do with a favor the CIA did for her. Hetty had wanted something in exchange for helping them out in Cuba and she asked that the CIA take in a doctor that was in trouble.

The doctor's name is Dr. Joseph Olongo. He was a Nigerian Agriculture Engineer and Veronica had helped him to get to the states, but then Olonga disappeared. He vanished into thin air and Veronica has been looking for him ever since. She was still looking for him when someone attacked. She thought those two things were connected so she went to Hetty and Hetty turned her over to Sam and Callen. The boys weren't happy with seeing Veronica again. They thought the CIA has enough problems as it is with that mole they never uncovered and so the boys thought this attack was personal.

They think whoever outed Veronica as CIA last year were the same people that attacked her now. They also told Veronica to stay at the boat shed because the bad guys knew her routine and as far as they knew she might have brought them straight to boat shed. The boys told Veronica to stay put while they investigate what's really going on. They tried to reach out to Hetty. She was gone and she wasn't answering her phone. Hetty had apparently collected Ahkos's remains and went to Greece so that she could put him to rest. And with Hetty out of the way, the team was left floundering.

Sam and Callen couldn't find the doctor. Neither could Nell and Kensi and Deeks couldn't find any evidence of the attack on Veronica. The same Veronica that left the boat shed at the first opportunity. There's no telling where she went. Which wasn't fair on the team because they were helping her and now she was just getting in the way. Veronica had at least left the boat shed of her volition. She wasn't forced out and so Sam questioned whether or not they were being played. This wouldn't be the first time someone used NCIS for their own purposes.

Sam could think of several women who've duped Callen. Callen was also quick to believe Veronica's story and so that was Sam's first warning that this case might be iffy. The second was the lack of evidence Kensi and Deeks found. They went to the parking lot where this attack took place and they found nothing there proving Veronica's story. They didn't even come across the things she supposedly left behind in her panic to drive away. The team had nothing with Veronica and yet they found evidence of the doctor being snuck out of his hotel.

The doctor disappeared the same time a waiter was moving his cart. The doctor could have easily been hidden or stashed under that cart and the boys were going through security footage when surprisingly Veronica showed up on the live feed. She came to the hotel looking for the doctor and the boys were able to detain her. They later brought her back to the boatshed for questioning. They needed answers and she was the only one available with Hetty out of town. Callen tried to crack her and unfortunately, he fell into a game of chicken with Veronica.

Neither of them was willing to crack or reveal their sources. They tried to ask her about the man that Olonga was supposedly meeting with at the hotel and she claimed not to know who they were talking about. She denied all knowledge of Peter Sanders even if he did belong to the Department of Agriculture and used to work with Olonga in Nigeria. Veronica had claimed she didn't know much about farmers and so the team left her handcuffed at the boat shed as they searched for answers elsewhere.

They found the waiter. They went to his house to question him and he snuck out the back, but he didn't make it far because he was turned into a road bump by a garbage truck. Thereby making their one lead very dead. The team was left without options afterward and so they tried searching through the dead man's things. They searched his home before they searched his van. It was in the van they found Sanders. He had been dismembered and it seems whatever killed him had first been injected into his system.

Sort of like how Veronica claimed her attacker came at her with a syringe. She was alive while Olonga was missing and Sanders was found murdered. The team told Veronica that she was free to go if she wanted to take her chances by herself, but she chose to stay and work with NCIS. Veronica could be the last person alive that was involved in whatever and so she knew she needed help. She was also willing to tell them the truth in exchange for said help. Veronica later brought Sam and Callen to a warehouse

This warehouse used to hold automotive farming equipment. Things that could basically be making farming better and so Veronica didn't think it was worth much. However, the warehouse had been emptied out. There was nothing there left and the team now believes the thieves gain access when they kidnapped Sanders. They must have gone after Sanders when they failed to grab Veronica. Veronica wanted to do something only there wasn't much they could do with an empty warehouse. They had to check other avenues and luckily their dead hitman had left behind a laptop.

It was heavily encrypted, but Eric was able to crack it and it led them to an office building that should be empty. The team soon figured out their bad guys were using the building to house the machinery as well as the good doctor and so they smoke out their baddies. They got someone on the roof and he used released a smoke bomb into their ventilation system. They then waited as the smoke drove someone out of the building and they knocked him out before they infiltrated the building.

The team went in to go find the doctor and they later found him all tied up. His kidnappers tried to flee, but the team was able to get them all and they recovered the stolen machinery as well as saved the doctor's life.

Veronica later thanked the team for their help but she's not ready to be anyone's best bud just yet.

Summary: After a rise in deaths caused by black market opioid use, the NCIS team links the street drug to funding for terrorist activities.

Roberta Deeks is training for a 5K. Deeks's mom made a New Year Resolution in which she said she was giving up shame and embracing the fear. She was going to put herself out there. She was so hyped that she was sharing whatever came into her mind with her son. Deeks pretended to mind, but he was glad his mom was happy and he was also glad to have a moment to relax. The team finished wrapping up a case. They were now free as a bird and so each member was doing their own thing.

All that it is except for Sam and Kensi. The two of them were the ones that took down Lt. Commander Daniel Palmer and they thought it was odd how their suspect jumped back on his feet after falling through a skylight, but they didn't know how odd until they talked to the Medical Examiner. The ME said Palmer was on Veridol. Veridol was a new black market opiate and it seems to have killed a bunch of people in the past three weeks. It was as if someone had dumped a large supply in the city and it was just getting around to killing people.

Kensi and Deeks thought that warranted an investigation, So, they brought this case to the team and suddenly their time for relaxation was over. Not that everyone was happy with it. Deeks had tried complaining and he even tried to give this case to the DEA, but the team said the drugs could be funding terrorism and so they stuck with the case. Deeks later interrogated a drug kingpin with Callen and Sam went with Kensi to chase down their one VIC without a name. The body of John Doe was lying in the morgue unclaimed.

No one was asking around for him nor did he fit the type like all the other victims. John Doe was Asian and the black market drugs could have been shipped from that region. They usually were. Sam and Deeks found where the body had been found and they used security footage to find the moment he had been left on the sidewalk because that's what happened. John Doe didn't die where he was found. He was left there and the duo found the exact moment when a car pulled up to throw his body out of the car.

The only thing found on the victim was cigarettes. Foreign cigarettes that Nell traced back to Vietnam and so they at least knew where he was from, but Eric also found footage of their victim while he was alive and visiting a business. The business owner was overextended and he might have turned to drugs for the consistent cash flow. But neither Kensi nor Sam were going to get answers from him because he quickly lawyered up and so Deeks and Sam had to push a little harder on their lead.

Deeks and Callen found a drug dealer that was pushing Veridol. Their guy was a middleman with no info on his bosses and so all he did give them was that the drugs were being pushed fast. They were coming into the city fast and they leaving at the speed. Kensi and Sam meanwhile got a tip from Nell. Nell traced the car that dropped off the body. It led back to a group of Asians and yet they didn't have any drugs. They had a bunch of weapons and no one was saying what they needed those weapons for.

They were, however, repeating old Indonesian Nationalism. They gave that to Nell and she found out their suspect was Indonesian. He recently came into the city with wanted criminal Oscar Suhin. Suhin also seemed to be the one running things. The middlemen that Kensi and Deeks were dealing with were all drugs and the drugs were probably how Suhin controls his men. Well, that and fear. Their suspect hadn't wanted to say anything because he had been afraid of Suhin and what Suhin might do to his family. And so they only got him to talk by telling him that Suhin was going to kill a whole bunch of people if he didn't help.

So, they got the story. Suhin came to the country because he was trying to stop Dev Jabar. Jabar was the businessman that was overextended and the reason for that was because he was giving a lot of money to the country of Bangladesh. Suhin was hoping organized crime could gain a footing in the same country, but Jabar was slowly lifting the economy and no one was going to buy what Suhin was selling if Jabar remained alive. And so Suhin came out of hiding because he was going to kill Jabar himself.

Jabar was at a charity fashion show. The team stationed themselves all around him and the moment Suhin made his move — they made theirs. They took down Suhin and his men. They also got the chance to say hello to an old friend at the show while they were at it.

All in all, not a bad day and Deeks went back to his bar where he found out his mom had given up on running a marathon. She had overextended herself as well.

The only one that didn't go home was Callen and that's because he's been looking for Anna during his off-hours.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates the murder of a Naval warfare engineer at a spoken poetry event. Also, Callen asks Nell to assist him in a worldwide search for Anna's whereabouts.

Callen asked for a favor. He wanted Nell to help him find his ex-girlfriend Anna. He believes Anna was involved in a homicide in Barcelona and he wanted Nell to uncover her involvement. Callen also wanted this to be done off the books. He didn't want anyone else on the team to know that he was looking for Anna and so Nell promised to help. She said she would look for Anna. She had to hide it as she was working on a new case for the team and so not even Eric knew what Nell was secretly doing.

Eric only knew about the case. A former serviceman had left the Navy to join the private sector as a software engineer and he was later killed at spoken word poetry reading. Kensi and Deeks went to the venue for the event. They were there asking around to see if anyone recognized Michael Carpenter or if there was anyone else stood out and unfortunately they got nowhere. Neither did the other team. Sam and Callen went to the tech company where Carpenter worked and they learned he was building a search engine.

The company was called "Go Go Go". It received backing from the same Chinese shell company that tried to kidnap Eric and so he was a little touchy about it. He mostly left it to Nell. Nell was the one that found the connection and she believes the tech company was more than just a search matter. No matter what they may claim. The guys spoke to Carpenter's coworker and, while they didn't get much from him, they received more information from Special Agent Deschamps. Deschamps was involved with this case and she said the "search engine" got Carpenter killed.

Carpenter and his friend Miguel were working on Project Dragonfly. It was a project in which Google created a search engine for Chinese that directly reports to the government and well news got. A bunch of human rights groups protested the project until Google dropped it. But the Chinese just found another company. They went to Miguel who agreed to take on the project and so Carpenter was working on a search engine that could lead to mass arrests and human rights violations.

Deschamps has been working on disentangling the dark Chinese money angle. She knew about the project and the group that was protesting against it. The agent gave the guys important information. She also decided to stay working this case with them and so they went back to the office to see what the other team found. Kensi and Deeks found surveillance of Carpenter with a woman. This woman was identified as Daisy Patel and she was an activist. She was big on the environment and so Kensi and Deeks later asked her about it.

They asked Daisy if she knew what Carpenter was working on. She said she didn't. She said her boyfriend never told her what he was doing and both Kensi and Deeks figured she was telling the truth. There was no way a huge activist like Daisy would be dating Carpenter if she knew what he was doing. Carpenter and even Miguel had kept this project Top Secret. Not many people knew about it and so Nell tried to find out who did. She later found that the company has an advisory board and she recognized one of the names.

One of the names was Katherine Casillas. The team have worked with Katherine in the past and so they thought she would be honest with them now. They went to go see her at a restaurant. They asked her about what the company doing and she knew. She knew and she didn't care. Katherine surprised them all with how callous she was being. She didn't care that the Chinese were going to use this search engine to spy on their own people. She was all about what she could get out of it and so Sam had been thrown. He had thought better of her until then.

The team eventually received a call from Go Go Go. The company called the police because their office had been ransacked and someone had kidnapped their CEO. Miguel was gone. A man and woman grabbed him and then stole whatever they could find at the office. So, Deschamps suggested they go back to Katherine. They brought her to the boat shed and they asked her about the company. They tried to get a straight answer out of her but no go. She wouldn't tell them why the engineers had all taken pay cuts to work at the company and where the money was coming from.

All the team knew was that it seemingly came from China. They also figured it was a child's play because no one is concerned that Miguel is missing and so Nell and Eric found out information on the kidnappers. They identified the man as a Saudi national. They then brought their information to Katherine and that's when she finally told them the truth. Katherine said that the Chinese backers had shared with the Saudis what Go Go Go was building for them. The Saudis then became jealous. They wanted a search engine for themselves and Miguel as the CEO had turned them down.

The Saudis most likely killed Carpenter as a way to frighten the company into sharing their information. When that failed to work, the Saudis broke in and stole whatever they could find as well as the CEO to help them make sense of it all. The team soon found the Saudis and that led them to Miguel. The team rescued him. They confirmed with him what he was doing and he said that he had gotten together a group of friends because they were secretly working to make sure the code never works.

China was never going to get a search engine to turn on its own people. Go Go Go was working against them and it had all been Katherine's idea. Katherine wasn't as cold as she pretended to be. And so things with Sam went back to their version of normal.

Nell meanwhile had information for Callen. She told him that the person involved in the homicide was connected to several other crimes across Europe and so Anna may have gotten herself into some trouble.

Summary: Anna Kolcheck returns to warn Callen that he is in danger and he must now work with an archenemy to stop an underground trafficking ring.

Callen and Sam were considering new recruits. They each were looking for something different and this meant they kept butting heads. They couldn't agree on what's best for the team. They both decided to table this discussion for another time and they split up. Sam went on a date with Katherine. Callen went to hang out at the bar. Callen lived above the bar and he promised to lock up after he left. He was just settling in for a long night by him when the unexpected happened. Callen was playing pool and then someone said his name.

It turns out it was Anna. Anna came out of hiding. She's been doing work for the CIA and she wanted Callen's assistance with the Cosmescus. She was looking for Darius Reznikov. He somehow survived the bunker and Anna said he was spotted at LAX airport. She wanted NCIS to help her locate him in the city. She also needed their help in staying under the radar because she still wanted for arrest in the US and not many people knew she was in town. The CIA may or may not know for instance. They know Anna's mission. They just don't know the lengths she's willing to go.

Anna went to Callen. Callen went to Hetty and Hetty agreed to assist in any way she could. She knew hearing about the Cosmescus wasn't great for Callen. Those people killed his mother and he was naturally going to be carrying a grudge. He also wanted to know how Darius was mixed up with them. Callen and his team tracked Darius from the airport. He was on the plane with a few other notable Russians and that didn't seem like a coincidence. The team would have explored it further, but they got a lead on Darius.

They tracked him down a park. They ambushed him and they forced him to hand himself over. They then brought them to the boatshed where Anna wanted to question the suspect. Anna wanted to see if she could turn him. She thought if she talked to Darius that she could make him give up his cohorts and change sides. Anna also wanted to do this alone. Callen didn't approve and so he brought up the fact the CIA wasn't allowed to work on US soil. He told her she couldn't question Darius and instead he did so.

Callen and the team found something. They found out Darius was working with Navarros and that the group was collecting women. Women who have gone missing all throughout Europe. It was clear the Navarros were kidnapping and even trafficking the women. They even stole women from a Cosemescus held area and that's why Darius was in LA. Darius came to town looking for a woman that was kidnapped. It was his fiancé, Mina. Mina was kidnapped and she was going to be sold during an online auction.

Darius wanted to stop that. He got close enough to his enemies that he was on her trail and he learned about the auction. Darius even took on the name Cosemescu because he knew the name would strike fear to anyone who ever heard it. It also helped get Darius places where he wouldn't normally go. Darius knew about the bad blood that came with the name and he was aware between his and Callen's families. He just didn't care. He wanted to find Mina and he was willing to accept help from NCIS.

Darius wanted to go with them to the auction. Callen didn't trust him and so he turned it down. Only Hetty overruled him. Hetty agreed to front them the money they needed to get to the auction and in exchange, she demanded that Darius go with Callen and Sam. The boys were forced to take him along. They went to a party where the buyers were all lining up to view the women and they had to go in blind. Their signal was blocked. Eric and Nell could not see or hear anything in the building. They had to hack the signal that was being sent to the building.

He then crowd-sourced the signal. He used his friends from San Francisco to help find where the majority of the women were being held and then the boys meanwhile held a distraction at the party. They had Darius create a scene. They followed this up by attacking guards and freeing the women that were in the building. The boys were doing a great job until Callen was knocked out. He began hallucinating and it was lucky for him that one of the women revived him with smelling salts. And by the time he came to, most of the action was over at the house.

Mina had run like Darius like told her to. Darius was looking for her when the rest of the team cleared the building and Callen later came across Darius in which he saved the other man's life. Darius was now a free man. He later agreed to defect and he was going to be resettled here in the states with Mina. And so Anna got what she wanted after all.

Kensi and Deeks had rescued the women at the warehouse and so the team saved everyone.

Callen also hid the fact that Anna stayed behind to spend time with him and for now that will be their little secret.

He touches base with Nate. He thinks she knows where Fatima will go if she's on the ground. Nate isn't so sure but he's going to follow Hen's lead.

Kensie and Marty meet up with Callen and Sam. They get briefed and head out. Callen and Sam pay a visit to a soldier who knows about the raid. He isn't optimistic and hopes Fatima is tough.

Fatima is brought to a leader for the man. His name is Cobra as in G.I. Joe versus Cobra. She pretends to be a reporter who lost her way. When they begin to let their guard down she goes on the attack but loses out against them as there are too many.

Nell picks up on a broadcast via a radio station and determines Fatima is alive.

Sam and Callen bring their soldier buddy with them on the ground to come through the area where they believe Fatima is.

The team is contacted by Fatima's kidnappers and they want to ransom. They decide if they want to pay and how they should react well Sam and Callen are also add an impasse as to how to find her that is until their soldier friend shares that he has a secret informant.

Kensie and Marty assist Fatima's parents in making a ransom video. They promise to get her home safe.

Sam, Callen has to and their friend meets up with the source who tells them all about a man named Cobra. Callen offers himself as bait to get to Fatima. Their source who knows about Cobra will deliver him for a fee and then he will help Fatima and get free. The plan goes well with Sam moving in after to get them to safety. The blow the place up as they make their exit.

Fatima calls home, happy to tell her parents she is alive!

Production Code: 1117
Summary: While NCIS investigates the disappearance of a department of defense officer who was looking into a recent UFO sighting, Anna makes a bold decision about her future.

Two pilots are up in the air and their fighter jets when they come across some trouble. Callen meets with Anna for dinner. Anna talks about her situation and how it is going to take a long time to see her name and her records. He canceled her, telling her that he stands by her. He offers her help but she doesn't want him to stick his neck out for her.

Marty reads a review for his restaurant. He needs to write a comment that matches such a glowing review. Kenzie gets involved but throws the simplest comment in there, working Marty up. Fatima interrupts them to tell them they have a case. They ask about her and she tells them she's living with her family now. They didn't have the best relationship before so it's still stressful.

Nell updates the team on a case from the Pentagon. They have a missing male. The team thinks it's weird, he has only been missing 3 hours. Nate heads over to the agency to find out what the missing man was working on but they won't talk to him. Callen and Sam show up. The special agent lets them in.

When they enter the office they see nobody else there. The agent reveals that it is just her and the missing man Walter who works there. They are working on a special case involving UFOs and recent sightings. Eric is mesmerized.

They sit down with the agent and talk to her. She reveals that recently Walter has been hiding things from her and they had an argument. She shares that Walter is a firm believer in UFOs and he seemed to believe that she was there to cover it up.

Marty and Kenzie go through Walters's homes, learning that he is a true believer with all of his books and maps. They see a camera outside and check his entertainment system. They may be able to pull video and find out what happened to Walter.

Sam and Callen find their first person of interest, a friend of Walters. They pull him in to talk to him. He talks about his and Walter's meeting. Meanwhile, Marty and Kenzie realize the clocks are all off in Walter's home.

Sam continues to question Walters's friend who shares that there was a break-in at his home. Callen checks in on Anna. She plays it off that she isn't up to much but she's wearing a disguise and headed somewhere. She has two local café and set her sights in a Russian man who's getting a drink at the bar.

Now and Fatima ends up getting into video footage that shows a suspicious fan and they might have Walter. The whole team heads there to scope the place out. Sam and Callen follow two guys to jump in an SUV. They head to an abandoned restaurant. Sam and Callen go in to find out what's going on with their guns at the ready. Through a cracked door, they see Walter tied to a chair. Someone spots them and it begins in an altercation between all of them. They take out the bad guys and call for an ambulance.

Back at headquarters, the team talks to one of the captors. He appears to be Chinese intelligence who is trying to get information from Walter.

It appears the man that Anna has been tracking as her dad. She calls him on the phone while I'm watching him from a distance. He tells her how distraught he's been. She tells him there's something she has to do. Somebody beeps a car horn and he becomes aware that she's near him.

Eric begins to freak out to the special agent who works with Walter. Walters other captors who are free are headed their way and he needs the team but they're not responding fast enough. Walter's colleague pulls a gun on Eric. She is extracting files of things that she wants to hide from the Pentagon. It appears those files show specs for all of the aircraft and she plans to sell it. Moments later, the team arrives to find Eric on the ground. Apparently she knocked him out and ran. Callen gets a call from Anna's dad that she's in trouble. Down the street, Anna is trying to turn her self into the authorities.

Stuck, the team makes a deal with the captor they have in custody. They'll keep his fiancée safe if he gives them the location of the agent and his fellow associates. He gives up the address and Marty and Kensie make the arrest.

Callen visits Anna in lock up. He doesn't care anymore and he's going to help her. An agent comes in and tells them that there is no warrant out for Anna's arrest and he has no idea what's going on.

Nell comforts Eric back at the office. She has a surprise for him, a picture of Area 51. The team goes to Marty's bar after to hang out and enjoy a beer. Marty finds out that Anna was the one behind the beautiful review of his restaurant. Seconds later her dad comes in and the two are reunited.

Production Code: 1118
Summary: Sam investigates the murder of an Iranian exile working to overthrow the current regime, and he must also try to save Agent Roundtree, a new agent who's having an unexpectedly adventurous first day on the job when he accidentally triggers a bomb. Also, Nell makes a decision about her future with NCIS.x

A man on a beach with his metal detector thinks he struck gold. It's just a penny. But seconds later the detector goes off again. He begins to dig and pulls out a severed hand with a watch on it.

Callen is supposed to be getting ready to leave on a trip with Anna. Sam tells him to get going. He needs to stop working. Callen comes to see Hetty. She also tells him to get moving she doesn't wanna see him for two weeks. Before he leaves, she says something strange but she won't explain what she meant. He runs to Sam who tells him not to worry and just get out of town.

A new associate by the last name of Roundtree arrives. He is thinking of joining NCIS. Fatima shows him around. Meanwhile, now tells Kensi it doesn't feel right coming to work anymore. Sometime she doesn't even wanna get out of bed in the morning. She doesn't know what she wants to do.

Eric calls the team together. They have a new case. There's a gentleman who is missing and his hand was found on a beach. The man has been identified with the last name of Larian. He apparently learned something that he was going to alert the authorities to but before he could he went missing.

Marty brings Roundtree to go see Hetty. She's busy with her paperwork and not up much to talk. She tells Roundtree a few words of wisdom, don't get yourself or anyone else killed.

Fatima and Kensi go to see Larian's daughter. Marty and Roundtree go to scope out the area where the victim's last GPS location registered. They find the victim's car. Roundtree sits on the driver's side to pop the trunk when Marty quickly learns that there's a bomb in the glove box. Roundtree cannot move unless he wants to be blown up.

Help arrives. They've never seen anything like this type of bomb. Roundtree is sweating heavily will Sam makes a joke about sitting tight. After working on the situation they come up with a game plan. Using the above bridge is a pulley and some liquid nitrogen, they save the day. Roundtree thinks they are crazy!

Eric keeps searching for Nell but she hasn't been seen all day. He runs into a quick but she runs in the opposite direction. He is picking up on her avoiding him. She talks to him through updates on the case really fast before taking off again.

Kensie comes to see Marty who is sitting off to the side looking sad. He tells her that he almost got Roundtree killed. She gives him a pep talk with love before telling him to shake it off. The team meets up. They're trying to figure out why anybody would booby trap the car if they already have the victim.

The team splits up to get to work. Sam tells them all to be careful, whoever is behind this is very serious and skilled. Roundtree goes with Sam this time.

Fatima and Kensie talk. They wonder if Roundtree will stick with them after this. The days have been rough so far. While sitting in their car they see the victim's daughter. She gets nervous throws something in a bush and runs for it. They take her down and realize that she threw files in a bush and also has a gun on her. Sam and round tree arrive shortly after. They have a doctor in custody who they are going to speak with. Apparently the daughter was going to bring her some files so now she is a person of interest. In the other room, Fatima talks to the daughter who acknowledges her father knew about the rising tensions between his homeland of Iran and the US. She doesn't give much up. They decide to let her go but she doesn't know is that Marty has put a tracker on her vehicle.

While trailing the daughter, Marty sees several men in a car following her. When she pulls over they go after her. He intervenes. Gunshots are fired.

The team arrives. They get them into custody and go through their cell phones. They find a video of the victim being tortured and killed. Sam since the video to Eric and he wants him to determine where their victim has been. He gives him a location and they all head to a nearby home. Sam comes across a man in the home and has to take him out. He blows out the picture window. The bomb squad takes over from there. They have their men.

Nell sits to talk with Hetty. She asked Mel when she is going to tell her about her decision to resign. Nell doesn't know how she knew. Hetty tells her it is her decision. She has to talk to Eric.

The team has to have some drinks and unwind after their case. They all make jokes about Roundtree's day.

Summary: The team assists the DOJ in the investigation of an arsonist who targets an FBI agent house that's protecting a political activist seeking asylum; Eric deals with the aftermath of Nell leaving the team.

Callen is back. He's back from vacation and it doesn't seem to have fazed his partner. Sam acted like Callen's first day back was nothing new. He didn't pester Callen with questions about Anna or ask how she's doing. Sam was fine with not knowing. It was Callen that felt the need to talk and it was a new occurrence for him. He usually talking about his private life. This time was different though because he wanted someone to tell and so he really wanted Sam to care about what he had to say. Only Sam was giving him the attention he wanted. He told Callen he was fine with not knowing and so Callen had to keep his news to himself.

They didn't talk about what happened. They just fell back into work and they quickly caught a new case. NCIS was asked to investigate a potential arson case. It didn't have any connection with NCIS and so it was the DOJ that asked the DOD for a favor. It turns out the house was an FBI safe house. Two FBI agents had been at the house at the time of the fire and they were there protecting Patricia Ruiz. She was a Venezuelan political activist. She couldn't return home in fear of being made an example of and so she was being protected by the Americans. They even protected her when the fire broke out. They had moved her to the second location.

The agent sent to work with NCIS was keeping mum about where Patricia is. FBI Special Agent Audrey Rush wasn't in a hurry to say this was arson or that her asset was compromised and if anything she was downplaying what happened. Rush was fresh off of having a baby. She was pumping her breast milk at the office and making both Kensi and Fatima very uncomfortable, but it all could be a ruse to get them to drop the real issue. The women couldn't talk about Patricia or why she was being protected. They couldn't help her by keeping an eye on her and so NCIS had to work around Agent Rush.

They asked to see her baby pictures. They used that ruse to keep her busy and all the while Kensi put a tracking device under Rush's car. They wanted to use the device to track down Patricia. She had been very vocal against the corrupt government of Venezuela and there's no telling who from the regime may have found her and made a move against her. Sam and Callen went to the location they later got from the tracker. They sat on a house in which they believed Patricia was being held and they were there when Rush spotted them. Rush figured out what they were doing. She accused them of putting Patricia at risk and she also guessed correctly how they found her.

She called the whole tracker thing cruel. She couldn't believe they used pictures of her baby to get to her and she was telling the guys off when they heard shouts from inside the house. All three rushed to Patricia's defense. They spotted her as she was being attacked and they managed to frighten off the men that were hurting her. Sam and Callen had tried to follow the men except the perps got away. Sam and Callen went back to the house and they found Patricia safe and well. She hadn't been too hurt. Patricia was well enough to be transported again and this time it was the team that was calling the shots.

They tried to let the FBI handle it. Patricia was almost killed on their watch and so NCIS took control. They had Patricia taken to the boat shed. They also looked into how her safety was compromised because the perps managed to track her down to at least two safe houses and that was way too lucky on their part. Kensi and Fatima talked to Rush about what she knew. She broke the train of command in order to give them answers and she was doing that while Sam and Callen discussed the case. They questioned if the guys that recently attacked Patricia were the same men as before. It did seem odd to them that someone would start a fire first time and tried to kill her personally the second.

The guys were in the middle of their conversation when they heard about a second fire. The fire seems to have been started by the same man as before and yet Patricia was nowhere near it. It also wasn't an FBI safe house. This second fire had nothing to do with the FBI nor has it ever involved someone from the FBI and so the team was looking for an arsonist. Someone who likes to set fires. This arsonist also called 911 almost right away as the fire started and so this person was a conscientious arsonist. This arsonist has been distracting the team with fires. The team pushed that to the side to focus on Patricia and so they later searched nearby faces and they ran them past Patricia.

They had her identify anyone who looked familiar. She later identified Miguel Perez as someone she saw while she was being transported and he turns out to be someone from the Venezuelan Armed Forces. He arrived several army buddies from Venezuela a couple of days ago. They've been looking for Patricia and it's really easy because over two hundred people from the FBI knew where she was at any given time. Rush told Kensi and Fatima how the FBI has been tied up in bureaucracy. She gave a list of names who knew about Patricia and it was three pages long. And to make things worse, Rush's boss FBI Special Agent Munger had found out NCIS was trying to take on the case.

He became upset because he said this was FBI business. He didn't care what the DOJ or the DOD said about it and so he took Patricia. He took her to a place the team didn't know about and so they couldn't track him, but they did track Miguel and his people. They found them and they approached. They claimed to be friends of the cause. They got Miguel to meet with them and they used that opportunity to arrest him as well as his friends. As it happens, Miguel and his people have nothing to do with the fires. The fires were set by a firefighter with a hero complex and so it had nothing to do with Patricia.

Patricia was later granted asylum to the United States. She's safe and the FBI will probably reconsider how many people they tell about her.

And someone finally got around to asking Callen about his vacation but it was Kensi not Sam and Sam left the party early go hang out with his new girlfriend.

Summary:	The team helps a former NCIS tech operator search for her missing ex-partner, whom they fear might be working with the gun runners they failed to take down years ago; Deeks reels when his bar gets a negative review.

A young woman is doing stand up on stage at a club. She sees a face in the crowd and suddenly tells the audience her time is up. She leaves the stage, the man comes near her in the to get into a fight. She breaks a chair over his head before escaping.

Deeks is upset because his bar has been given a bad review. Eric tries to talk him down. Deeks wants Eric to hack the reviewer. Meanwhile, Hanna and Callen talk about how Callen is looking for a new place to live. Fatima and Kenzie are working out. Kenzie tells Fatima that she really needs to do other things besides work or she's going to burn her self out. They get a call for a case.

Eric updates Kenzie and Fatima about an agent by the last name of Forbes, who is missing that is working in Los Angeles on a top-secret case. He is either on the run after selling information or he's been kidnapped.

Meanwhile, Hannah and Callen arrive at the rental property for the agent. They see a young girl making her way out of the side of the house with the alarm going off. She tells them that she is also an agent. The agent Moretti tells them how she was almost killed last night by one of their enemies and came by to see if Forbes was OK. They tell her that he is missing.

Fatima and Kenzie head to a nearby church after catching a lead. They speak to one of the employees outside who tells them that Forbes comes to the church every Saturday for AA meetings.

Moretti is brought to Deeks who questioned her about forms and anything else she might know.

After some more digging Hannah and Callen think maybe Forbes went on a trip by his own will.

Deeks continues to question Moretti who tells him that Forbes is a standup guy. He always helped her out and she feels bad that he was going through a divorce because he has enough stress. Deeks tells her that Forbes was never married. He's been lying to her.

Hannah and Callen check in with Eric who tells them that he got a license plate from the scene where Moretti was attacked. They head out to try and locate the person of interest who is a plumber. Meanwhile, Kenzie and Fatima track down a woman who is also of interest. They take her down to headquarters. Hannah and Callen get their plumber who attempted to run.

After checking with one another the team determines that Forbes has stolen something from somebody dangerous. Eric manages to get footage of areas near Forbes' rental. The woman Fatima and Kenzie previously interviewed as seen on video. After they talk to her they realize that she helps women in dangerous situations, and that's why Forbes reached out to her because he had an informant that needed to disappear.

Fatima and Kenzie arrive at the address that the woman gave them where the female is being hidden. After the female lets them in a mail comes barreling through the door, Fatima takes him out but Hannah arrives just in time. While Kenzie tries to get the female out of the back another male comes out of nowhere. The rest of the team takes him out too.

Fatima surprises Kenzie with tickets to the Eagles. Kenzie's been trying to get her to go out. Eric heads to Deeks bar. They talk about that review. Deeks feeling better.

Hanna tells Callen that even though he's been giving him a hard time about buying a house he's just glad that he is planning his future.

Production Code: 1121
Summary: Sam, Callen and Rountree travel to Afghanistan to help with a sensitive case after two SEALs claim their chief murdered an unarmed prisoner.

An incident took place in Afghanistan. The troops were checking on the aftermath of a drone strike when they found a body in a rumble and someone came up with the bright idea of posing with the body. The men took a picture with the corpse. It was disturbing and the incidents didn't stop there. The man with the idea was now being accused of murder. Special Warfare Chief Petty Officer Thomas Argento was being accused of murder by two of his fellow Navy SEALs. It was his own team that turned against them and this struck a chord with Sam. He wanted to find the truth no matter what. He went to question the officers that made the accusation and unfortunately one of the men backed off.

After the one guy backed off, the second one was quick to follow. No one wanted to be alone as they made an accusation against Argento. Argento was well-connected in Washington. His wife was a senator's cousin and his career had been helped by it. Argento also found out what his team members were doing behind his back. He found out about the investigation. He started texting them threatening messages and he even said he was going to send a kill squad. This was why the first guy backed out. Kensi and Deeks went to Kendricks's apartment and the man had been so paranoid about the death squad that he pulled a gun on Deeks.

Deeks and Kensi had to talk him down. They calmed him and they found out why he pulled out of making an accusation. He was afraid for his life. He also did things with Argento in Afghanistan and so he was immunity from prosecution before he talked. Kendricks demanded immunity and so did the second guy Barr. Barr came back on when he saw Kendricks was willing to talk. Both men wanted immunity. They also said the information they had on Argento was huge. They apparently have evidence of him murdering civilians and so the team had to report this to Lt. Colonel MacKenzie.

MacKenzie had assigned them this case. She asked them to handle it with tact and that sort of blew up when Sam and Callen flew to Afghanistan in search of Argento. They had wanted information on Argento. They were going to ask witnesses but bringing Roundtree with them had been a mistake because he leaped before he looked and he got them all in trouble. The guys were forced to surrender their weapons. Sam and Callen were dealing with this problem as Kensi and Deeks spoke with MacKenzie. MacKenzie is refusing to offer the officers immunity. She didn't want to hand that over until she got something credible from them.

Kensi and Deeks were also warned about their teammate's decision to lose their tracker. Sam and Callen hadn't wanted to be found by Argento and his men. Argento was supposed to check in with his team and he refused to do so because he's hiding from the investigation. He knows that NCIS was in the area. He was hiding from them with what few men that are loyal to him and so that's how Sam and Callen got in trouble. They were trying to stand under the radar. They went too far down in their search for finding a witness and they were almost handed over to the Taliban. They thankfully convinced their captors not to trade them.

They also finally spoke to the witness. Sam and Callen spoke to a young man named Jawan. Jawan had watched as Argento pulled out a knife and stabbed a sedated and unarmed man. Argento had done it for the story. He told his team that he couldn't wait to tell everyone how he took down a guy with a hunting knife and so he made it sound like it had been a genuine fight when it wasn't. It was murder. Argento went on to murder several people like that. He was a serial killer posing as a soldier and he needed to be stopped. Kensi and Deeks believed they have enough evidence to put him behind bars and so it was MacKenzie that told them about the issue.

There was an issue with the senator's cousin. Argento's cousin-in-law wants to protect him from the fallout of the investigation. The man was most likely worried about his own career and so he didn't want to be connected to mass murder. Only Argento needed to be stopped. They tried to track him in Afghanistan after his team went dark and they soon found them moving on a building. It turns out Argento had found Sam and Callen. He wanted to kill them and anyone who may have found out the truth. He had hidden that from his team. His team didn't know that they were Americans in the building they were attacking and so Sam and Callen had to think of a plan.

Sam managed to talk one of the Afghans into allowing him to talk to the Americans. He identified himself and he revealed there were more Americans in the building. Sam got through to Argento's team, but Argento himself had still wanted a bloodbath. He ordered his team to shoot up the building and his team was forced to turn against him. They didn't want to be responsible for dead Americans. It seems that was their line in the sand and so the team sided with Sam. They saw to it that all the Americans were freed and safe. They also stayed quiet as Sam later put Argento under arrest.

Argento's team had all turned against him. They would later give evidence of his misdeeds and so there was no burying what he did. Argento was a serial killer. He killed people for fun and he was finally going to be punished for it.

Although, Argento still believes that he'll never be convicted.

Summary: When a Russian bomber goes missing while flying over U.S. soil, Callen and Sam must track it down in the desert and secure its weapons and intel before the Russians on board destroy the plane. Also, Hetty gives Nell a cryptic assignment.

Hetty calls Nell into the office but is nowhere to be seen ... except on a video call after the analyst doesn't answer the phone ringing on her (former) boss' desk. The operations manager is in the middle of what appears to be a war zone ("nowhere I want to be" is the only information she offers) and after a Russian aircraft disappears off the coast of California, she needs Nell to essentially be her for this case (as she'd hoped would happen once she eventually retires). Exactly what Hetty's doing is going to remain a mystery for now.

As we learn through Nell's talk with Hetty, the analyst's mother passed away. (Nell had taken time off to take care of her.) "She fought a good fight," she tells Kensi Blye when the agent checks on her. But now Nell has to figure out what she wants to do with the rest of her life. Will this time filling in for Hetty lead to her deciding to stay with NCIS and eventually taking on the job permanently?

Tech operator Eric Beale is MIA, and it all goes back to his undercover gig last season. He's "officially" on vacation, Kensi and Deeks inform Nell. Unofficially, he's at the Tokyo Trade Show because while the company he'd been working for in San Francisco was bogus, the tech he was developing was real.

Furthermore, "he has become far more eccentric since you've been gone," Kensi informs his sort of ex-girlfriend? Eric and Nell do need to define their relationship.

Sam and Callen take a helicopter (courtesy of Nell "Don't leave me the keys if you don't want me driving" Jones) to scout out a possible location for the Russian strategic bomber, known as the Bear, which can hold 33,000 pounds of missiles, including nukes. They'd want to secure those and get any intel that may be on board. And the fallout of any potential attacks would be catastrophic.

Meanwhile, Nell has Rountree stake out the Russian consulate (the poor guy doesn't believe there's one in Los Angeles), with (former newbie) Fatima Namazi offering him tips (he is being watched as he watches everyone go in and out, and yes, he should follow a person of interest in the surveillance food truck unless he wants to call an Uber).

And Kensi and Deeks are the ones to meet with Arkady in hopes that the man can get them the names of the men onboard the plane. Arkady is training for a triathlon, he shares. "What are your events, drinking, gambling, and smoking?" Kensi asks. While the bar may be closed given the hour (Russia calls people who don't drink this early "underachievers," Arkady says), he's more than happy to drink three-quarters of a bottle of vodka to help him think (instead of the whole bottle because he's going to work out after).

He can't call up "Spies 'R' Us," as he informs them, but after a few calls, he does pass along the name of the woman who can help them — if they're willing to pay for her shopping addiction.

And so Deeks pulls out his homeless man undercover clothes and approaches Zasha Gagrin with the offer of a backpack of cash for the names. Then he messes with Rountree, seated a few tables away. Though it takes Zasha a bit to bite, she does bring Deeks the names of the crew members.

And that comes in handy when Sam and Callen do find the plane and end up having to split up: the former to track four men whose footprints lead away and the latter to try to get the two men inside to talk to him and not blow up the plane using its self-destruct mechanism.

Sam finds signs that the men on foot are shooting at one another (if one is trying to defect), while Callen uses the names they hope are legit (if they're not, Nell's worried Hetty will kill her for how much they cost) to try to open a line of communication with the other two. By bringing up one of their sons, Callen is able to at least get through the hatch without coming under fire (as he did previously). They can all leave together and live, Callen insists.

Kensi, Deeks, Fatima, and Rountree, meanwhile, hit the ground and head to help Sam, just as he finds the men he was tracking. They're able to disarm three, with the fourth who does appear to want to defect, making a run for it. Rountree stops him, but Fatima steps in to help, knocking out the Russian. "Don't mess with the new guy," she says. Who else is liking the dynamic between Fatima and Rountree so far? It's great to see her helping him learn the ropes.

But what about the plane? To their surprise, there's an explosion from that direction. Fortunately, everyone's OK. Sure, the plane is in pieces, but that was part of the compromise, Callen explains to Sam. And it was a training machine anyway, with no weapons other than the tail gun.

With that, they've saved the day again and all that's left to do is make plans to get fish tacos.

Summary: As the trial begins of a Chief Petty Officer who Callen and Sam arrested for war crimes last year, the NCIS team is called to help find the missing star witness.

Former Chief Petty Officer Thomas Argento is to have his day in court. He used to be a naval officer. Then he killed an innocent and unarmed man while he was deployed. He even tried to cover up his crime. He lied and he forced his whole unit to lie about it as well. Argento did whatever he wanted in the Middle East. He was flying high until one day he was found out. He was arrested and now it's time for his trial. It's been a long time coming. Sam and Callen brought him down months ago and they couldn't wait to testify against him now. It was not every day they got to be at a war criminal's trial. They were going to give testimony alongside Argento's former unit and the whole nation is watching.

Argento's trial has caught media attention. The president was texting about it and everyone wanted to know what was going to happen to this man. This monster. Argento killed an unarmed man who was not an enemy combatant and afterward he forced his unit to pose with him in a photo with the body. Argento instructed his men to turn off their body cams. The only evidence they have of this encounter was the photo itself and the testimony of four of the soldiers. Petty Officer Malcolm Kendricks was the first to give testimony. He was asked to recall the exact moment he witnessed Argento stabbed an unarmed man and instead he changed his testimony.

He changed his testimony while he was on the stand. Kendricks claimed that he killed the unarmed man. He said it wasn't Argento and that he lied earlier when he claimed differently.

His new allegations had shocked the prosecution. The prosecutor was so stunned that she had genuinely needed a moment to recollect herself and even Sam and Callen didn't know what happened. The guys, like everyone else, wanted to know what was really going on. They were the first to question Argento's unit and the unit had all said the same thing. They all said it was Argento. Sam and Callen had spoken with Kendricks and he didn't tell them anything different.

Therefore, this new claim needed time to be investigated. The prosecutor asked the judge for that time and he gave her less than a day. She couldn't argue against it. She had to make do with what she was given and so she turned to Sam and Callen for help. They believe that someone got to Kendricks. Kendricks's family must have been threatened somehow by someone close to Argento and so NCIS went to work investigating this new angle. Fatima looked into everyone who visited Argento in prison. His wife, his siblings, and also his parents had never visited him. They were all in the media about how Argento was the victim of a witch hunt and weirdly none of them visited him.

It didn't make sense. No one related to Argento visited him while he was in the brig and so it was just strangers. Random strangers. Fatima was looking into everyone under Nelle's watchful eye and both Kensi and Deeks went to Kendricks's home. They wanted to check on his family to see everything was okay. His wife Monica was fine and so were their two children. Monica didn't even know that her husband was planning on changing his testimony much less claim it was him that killed the Taliban cleric and so she had no idea what was going on. Her husband hadn't talked to her about it.

Kendricks also wasn't speaking to NCIS. He fobbed off every opportunity to speak to Sam and so the team still didn't know what was going on. They also were missing a second witness. Moffet had disappeared and his friends didn't know where he was. They suspected he might have been shackled up an ex. They went looking for him and in the meantime, Fatima told the team what she found. She found that every person who visited Argento in prison was a courier in the city. They were literally messengers and so that begs the question who was sending him messages. Kensi and Deeks went to the courier office. They got a name and it turned out to be fake.

The name/person didn't exist. The law firm they claimed to work at also didn't exist and so their best bet in finding out what's going on was Moffet. Agent Rountree tracked him back to his ex-wife's place. He knocked on the door and the moment Moffet saw it was him — he tried to run. He ran out of the backyard and jumped the fence right into the pool. Rountree was able to catch up to him after that. He stopped Moffet and he questioned him. He wanted to know why Moffet didn't show up at court. Is Moffet scared? Was he threatened or told about a threat? Moffet was the only one who could give them clarity.

Moffet told Rountree the truth. He said he received pictures of his son from outside of the house and these pictures go back months. It was just pictured at first. Then a night before the trial he was told not to show his face or else something was going to happen to his son. Moffet was so scared that he told Kendricks. Kendricks changed his story not to protect his own family, but to protect Moffet's family and so the team finally figured out what was going on. Their next step was finding the person making the threats. Odds are it's the same person paying for the courier service and so the team went back to the office base for the service.

They met a druggie by the name of Martin. Martin was so confused that they had to ask the same question repeatedly before it sank in and so Martin eventually told them that he had footage of this man. He was Former Naval Captain Parker Cole. He was the father of Michael Cole and the younger man was once on Argento's team. It makes no sense why Parker who goes to such lengths to get Argento off. The team couldn't understand it and at the same time, they had to protect the case. Kendricks almost destroyed everything with that stunt of his. The team needed Moffet and their third soldier to be perfect if they meant to keep Argento imprisoned.

The team had evidence enough to witness tampering. They were going to arrest Parker Cole and they were going to get Moffet to court. They were transporting Moffet when Michael Cole appeared with a gun. Michael thought he had to kill Moffet to stop him and thankfully it was Sam who stopped him. Sam understood what it was like to deal with pressure from his father. He knows that Michael didn't mean to hurt anyone. He had the younger man arrested and then he got Moffet to court. Moffet later gave telling testimony against Argento. This plus Kendricks's testimony being thrown out had helped the prosecution.

There is now little chance that Argento will be getting off.

The team did their job and they were feeling quite proud of the work they did.

Summary: When Nell sends Sam to meet an informant who plans to blow the whistle on a military secret, Hanna's life is in danger when the man tries to run him down and kill him. Also, Kensi and Deeks debate whether or not to buy their first house.

Nell is in charge. She's been taking Hetty's place because Hetty isn't around. The older woman was off doing her own thing. It's become a habit of hers to disappear every few years and it's usually always justified. She was an important person. She was most likely doing important things and it's not like her seat is vacant. Hetty left Nell in charge of the team. Nell was running point for everyone and she seemed to do great as the boss.

She resolved that war crime case without anyone getting hurt. She also followed up on one of Hetty's leads by sending Sam to meet with a potential whistleblower who was harboring a military secret and unfortunately that was the first true test of her new leadership because her whistleblower almost killed one of her agents.

The potential whistleblower is Donald Harris. He called their tip line claiming he had access to military secrets and that he would only tell them about it if he gets to meet an agent in person. Harris isn't in the military. He's a CPA. He works for an accounting firm and his firm doesn't seem to have business dealings with the military either. Harris's claim seemed unfounded.

Nell wouldn't have thought a man like him was telling the truth or even knew what he was talking about if it hadn't been for Hetty. Hetty vetted Harris. She believed he was a credible source and so now it's up to the team to try and figure out why. They would have liked to have asked Harris. Only he was in bad shape after he tried to run Same off the road.

Sam was okay. Harris was not. He was in the hospital and Rountree had been sent to question the moment he woke up. There were still several questions the team needed an answer to. The team did their research on Harris. They couldn't find anything at first glance and so they carried a deeper dive. Kensi went to Harris's office. She tried to get some answers and she was met with a stone wall.

Harris's boss asked for an attorney. He didn't want to speak to a federal agent without one and that's odd. People tend to be cooperative once they hear a federal agent is interrogating one of their own. Harris's boss clamming up as he did had made the team believe he knew something and was afraid to say it.

Sam interrogated Harris's roommate. She had no clue why Harris would turn to NCIS for help and she knew about his work because she said Harris was a firm rule-follower. He didn't speak about his clients. He didn't help them cheat on their taxes and rumor has it he can get a little spicy with people who don't follow the rules.

According to his roommate, Harris tends to take all the breakage of the rules as a personal violation. He could even be dramatic at times. Sam heard the roommate out and he initially assumed that Harris might have overly dramatized the information he has on the military however that didn't explain the device he found. He found a surveillance device hidden inside of Harris's smoke detector.

Sam showed the device to the roommate. He followed it up with questions about whose been in the house. He asked about cleaners or friends and the roommate couldn't remember anyone who came by recently. Harris wasn't dating. He was interested in his very good friend Keilani who was another accountant and he thought something might have happened if she hadn't have moved away.

Sam asked about this Keilani. He figured she would be the best on Harris's motives and so he asked where she moved. It turns out she's working on a naval base. Keilani was working right up until she disappeared a few days ago and no one has heard from her since. And another thing the team found was that Harris's car had been hacked.

Harris hadn't tried to drive Sam off the road. Whoever hacked his car was doing their best to stop Harris from spilling secrets and they might have stopped him for good because the doctors said Harris's coma might be permanent. Harris couldn't speak for himself. He could be lost forever and so could Keilani.

It was up to the team to get justice for them. They knew that whoever was watching Harris at his home had probably followed him to the meeting with Sam and hacked the car as a means of killing both parties. This person wasn't done because Rountree stopped another assailant from kidnapping Harris. He stopped him and interrogated him. Rountree was still working towards answers while Callen went to the naval base.

Callen was asking people about Keilani and what she could be working on. He especially wanted to know if she had any connection to Cryton Avionics. It was important because Rountree's prisoner turned out to be an engineer from Cryton Avionics and the team looked the company up. On paper, it was the next new thing in aviation defense. It was however a little different in person.

The company had a nice building with a pretty lobby and it was completely empty. It was an empty warehouse with just the lobby there for coloring. The company didn't exist in person and it couldn't have been closed down because of the pandemic because people weren't building rockets at home. Not the rockets that actually go into space, anyway.

Callen didn't immediately find a connection between his missing accountant and this company. Only he did find out that Keilani often played the ditzzy card and it was working until someone spotted her making copies of secret files. She had claimed at the time that she wanted to take it home with her because she wanted to continue working on it. Keilani was also very attractive and so she got away with such a lie.

She either went looking for something or found it by accident only she came across information that frightened her. It's the only thing that would explain why she told Harris and if she told him then she probably told the third member of their trio. The team tracked down her good friend Logan and Logan wouldn't say where she was.

Logan was just prepared to tell them what she found. He showed the file that claimed the navy ordered a weapon from Cryton Avionics and, by doing that, he told them about the fraud. There was no true weapon. Cryton Avionics didn't have it in them to build one and so they were charging the US Navy for a weapon they weren't building and that SECNav didn't even know about. It turned out to be a fraud.

Keilani's boss at the base was stealing billions from the defense fund in order to buy a weapon he knew didn't exist. And a billion-dollar fraud was worth killing over.

Harris later woke up in spite of the team's worst fears and so he was reunited with Keilani who was also fine.

Keilani's boss was arrested for trying to defraud the Navy.

Nell was able to wrap this case up. She did a great job and the only one who didn't see it was her. Nell was still growing into the job. She knows she needs to relax a bit, but it's hard and so it's a good thing the team is also her family and they'll help her when needed.

Only Deeks didn't get to work the case because LAPD is ending all liaisons for now and so there's no telling when he gets to return.

Summary: The body of a murdered Navy reservist is found by thieves in the midst of a robbery, and NCIS must work with the burglars to find the killer; Kensi and Deeks struggle to decide if they are ready to make the leap and buy a house.

A female burglar discovers a body in the midst of a robbery.

Sam leads the team on a Zoom workout. Anna is visiting Callen.

Deeks and Kensi put a bid on a house.

The body was Navy Reservist Terry Coleman. DeChamps is being brought in to partner with Kensi.

Anna has stopped by en route to rebuild homes in distressed neighborhoods.

Sam and Callen are trying to find the burglars. The merchandise Sam finds was all stolen. Callen locates video of the van which was at the crime scene.

Kensi and DeChamps investigate Coleman. Fatima and Roundtree pick up Rachelle Chung, the burglar who found Coleman's body. Coleman's ex tells Kensi and DeChamps that he was moonlighting at a bar. Rochelle, who gives Fatima grief for being her elder, says she was told to break in by JoJo Ballard and her boyfriend Marcus Babu. JoJo and Marcus claim Rachelle was behind the robbery. They say Rochelle found out about the stolen merchandise from a rich boyfriend.

Rochelle gives up the man's Instagram handle, Blood Lime. His real name is Donny Mason, a part-owner of the bar where Coleman worked. The DEA investigated him for money laundering. Callen suggests that Mason is sitting on a lot of money because of the pandemic.

Nell locates Mason's current residence, where Sam and Callen find him dead. Sam finds fingerprints outside Mason's gate. They're from Lincoln Benavidez, who owns the bar to which both Coleman and Mason were both connected. Sam and Callen cut off Benavidez's van, then he rams Roundtree and Fatima's SUV. His van is full of money.

Coleman had recorded Benavidez making him an offer to kill Mason and turned it over to LAPD.

When Callen gets home, Anna tells him she has gotten the call to leave.

Summary: In order to get intel on a matter of national security, Kensi must come face-to-face with a sociopath who has been obsessed with her since she put him in jail years ago. Also, though Eric is desperate to keep Kensi safe, he is forced to leave NCIS.

The Deeks Household is growing. Kensi and her husband Martin Deeks are seriously considering having a baby and they were willing to all methods. They discussed IVF. Kensi thinks they should put money they would have spent on a house into a wonderful opportunity like this and so she was optimistic. She believes they will get pregnant fairly fast. She wasn't like Deeks who was worried about the money and possibly going into debt. Deeks tends to be a pessimist. He calls it their journey of infertility. He also thinks there should be a cap on how much they were willing to spend and the couple were going back and forth on this when they heard that an old case of Kensi's was rearing its ugly head.

Back in 2008, Kensi took down David Kessler. Kessler had his hands in everything at the time and that even included human trafficking. He was a bad dude. Kensi was glad when she took him down because she put a horrible human being in prison and the arrest gained the attention of NCIS. Hetty hired Kensi because of this arrest. It was her introduction to the team.

Kensi has come a long way since then and in the past twelve years she's just confirmed how much of a badass she really is. Kensi never thought to hear about Kessler again or to have anything to do with him. She's moved on and it turns out he never did. Kessler grew to be obsessed with the woman who sent him to prison. He remembered Kensi in spite of the years and he came up with a plan to help him get out.

Kessler befriended a man named Randy Sinclair. Sinclair was a former CIA officer who was fired once the CIA realized how unstable he was. He was deemed a sociopath who loved killing and so he was let go and his time there was erased. The CIA acted like they never heard of Sinclair. They pretended he didn't exist and they continued to do so after Sinclair went to prison for attempting to assassinate the president. Only Sinclair was sent to the same federal prison as Kessler and the two became friends. They plotted their escape together. Sinclair managed to flee and there's been no sign of him. He wasn't like Kessler. Kessler made sure he was caught because he wanted to flip on Sinclair and he was only willing to do so as long as he gets to talk to Kensi.

Kessler wasn't just obsessed with her. He wants to rape her and murder her. He's also not sure which one he wants to do first. Kessler seems to think he's important to Kensi and that she's remembered him all this time and it's just not true. Kensi forgot all about him. She's met other bad guys. She's taken out other bad guys and so she's moved on. Kessler was just a case to her.

He was no one important and so she had no problem with speaking to him now. Kensi went to the federal prison. She found out about his time there. He was a horrible person until one day he supposedly found God and he went ultra-Christian on everyone. He even had the prison convinced him that he turned over a new leaf. It's why they weren't worried when he befriends Sinclair.

Kessler now wants to trade information. He's willing to tell them about Sinclair and the man's movements as well as motivations if it gets him in front of Kensi. Kensi did come to see him. She did come to ask him about Sinclair. She asked him what Sinclair was up to? Does he still want to kill the president? Kessler refused to give her information. He just toyed with her at first and he even told her that they'll have sex one day.

Like Kensi will suddenly leave her husband to have sex with a criminal. Kessler was delusional and he was especially delusional about Kensi. Kessler did however admit that Sinclair does plan on still murdering the president. He said that to keep Kensi interested and it worked. Kensi had to hear him out. She asked him about Sinclair over and over and she got nowhere because Kessler didn't want their time to come to a close.

Kensi tried pressuring him. She and her team dug into his life again and the only person he seemed to be close to was his former girlfriend Michelle Boucher. She had been addicted to cocaine when they met. She was willing to do anything if she got to keep getting drugs from him and so Kessler took advantage of that. He broke Michelle. She was still terrified of him and she didn't want to talk about him or risk angering him.

It had been Callen who convinced her differently. He told Michelle that she stood by while Kessler did horrible things to other women and to children. She had to speak up now else she was continuing his evil. Michelle therefore chose to talk. She told Callen that Kessler once told her that he had been physically and sexually abused by his mother who sold him to her clients.

Michelle also said Kessler was intelligent, but he didn't know how to read or write and so the team used that. They used that to undermine Kessler. They reminded him that they were still things they can do for him like confront his mother for him. Or even get his mother to apologize. Kessler said his mother would never apologize and so he didn't fall for that one.

The team next suggested they put him on the phone with Michelle. He agreed to it and unfortunately Michelle couldn't go through with it. She pulled out at the last minute. She was still too terrified of Kessler to speak to him and so once again they couldn't give Kessler what he wanted. Kessler wanted at least one thing before he gave up his information on Sinclair.

Kessler himself suggested that he speak to the president. He said the president was an old friend of his and that the man would be willing to speak with him. The team thought Kessler was crazy. Only the president agreed to it. The president had been informed that the man that tried to kill him has escaped and so he's willing to do anything if it meant this man was captured.

The one thing the president demanded was that this conversation was classified. He didn't want anyone finding out about it and so Kensi wasn't even in the same room as Kessler when the phone call happened. She just knows the call happened. Kessler was a happy man afterwards and he showed Kensi where Sinclair was on a map.

The team moved on the location. They found Sinclair and they arrested him. But Kessler was later released from federal prison thanks to an executive order from the president. His threats to now rape and murder Kensi were considered genuine threats. Michelle is now missing. She turned out to be working with Kessler and so now the two are reunited like nothing has happened and she wasn't even jealous about his obsession with Kensi. And it seems that Kessler helped Sinclair break out just to get in touch with the president himself.

The same president he claimed was an old friend of his.

Summary: Before Christmas, Hetty assigns Callen the case of his former foster brother and his wife, who, upon reentry into the U.S., are framed for smuggling drugs across the border; Deeks is struggling with losing his job at NCIS.

LAPD canceled all liaisons with other departments. It seems like a random decision because there was no forewarning whatsoever and it left Deeks in the cold. Deeks can no longer work with NCIS. He couldn't even join NCIS. He was far too old to be considered for a federal position and so there was no chance for him in starting over. He was either a liaison or he was nothing. He was currently nothing right now because Nell tried to keep him on the team and nothing she said nor did could change the outcome. Deeks is out.

He's having a hard time dealing with the fact he's out and his wife couldn't cheer him up. There was someone hunting Kensi. She was in danger and that was a focus for the team, but Deeks couldn't do anything about it.

The most he could do was keep an eye on her when she was with him. Deeks and Kensi were going back and forth over whether to put their money into infertility treatments or to buy a house and they're both leaning towards a house. It wasn't the right time to bring a child into the world. 2020 was a dumpster fire of a year and there was also that guy that was hunting Kensi. Kensi was at first leaning towards infertility treatments until her life was threatened. She now realizes that she wants to make her husband happy and so she agreed to look at houses. They even found a place that was within price range. Kensi was happy with it and she thought Deeks would be too. Only Deeks was still obsessing about no longer being a part of the team.

Deeks could barely look at their dream home because he was in such a runt. He also couldn't stop mentioning the person that was threatening his wife because he felt he could do more to protect her if he was still working at NCIS and, once Kensi realized there was nothing she could do to help Deeks get pass this, she went in to work. Kensi needed to take her mind off her troubles. If her husband couldn't help her, then she at least knew that Nell would. Nell did have a case. She was given this case by Hetty and initially she didn't know why she was given this. It was a drug bust. Raymond Lewis and his wife were found with over thirty pounds of crystal meth by a border patrol guard. This guard pulled over this black couple because he was totally racially profiling them.

It was only by luck that it turned into something else. It also didn't look good for Raymond because he has a history and this history involves Callen. Callen used to be Raymond's foster brother. He spotted Raymond breaking the law one day and he turned him in. Raymond went to prison where he was in and out for a while before he got himself straight. He later met Paula. Paula became sick with COPD and their insurance wasn't covering all the expenses. The couple ended up going to Mexico for cheaper treatment. She was given oxygen tanks while they were there and these oxygen tanks were later proven to be filled with crystal meth. Paula was so depleted of oxygen that she had to be rushed to the hospital while her husband was being arrested.

However, both Paula and Raymond said they had nothing to do with the crystal meth. They have no idea how it got there and so Hetty put Callen on the case. Callen was reunited with his old foster brother. He didn't tell Raymond who he was because over thirty years has passed and they've both moved on, but for some reason, Callen believed Raymond's story. Raymond hasn't been in trouble in twenty years. It seems illogical that he would suddenly fall back on crime now and so he and the team were going to help Raymond. Callen also came clean. He revealed he was his old foster brother and the two of them caught up. Raymond told Callen that he changed his life after he started going to church because that's where he met Paula. She sang at the choir and he fell in love with her.

Raymond and Paula now need help. They talked to the team about their last visit to the hospital in Mexico and Raymond said that he recognized a nurse there. He said he saw that nurse doctor at a hospital in LA. Raymond told the team which hospital in LA. Callen stayed with Raymond while Kensi and Sam went to the hospital. Sam stayed outside. Kensi went in pretending to be a patient and she was about to talk to a doctor when Sam alerted her. He spotted a nurse going into the hospital with a gun. This nurse didn't take long before he pulled out that gun and tried to shoot Dr. Soto. Kensi had been forced to protect her. She got the doctor out of sight and together the team tried to figure out what was going on. And it was hard to do because ops was down.

Eric had come back to town. He came back after working with Department of Defense on a multibillionaire contact and it was supposed to upgrade NCIS's computer system. Only Eric ended up shutting the whole thing down. He was back less than a hour when he inadvertently caused everything to collapse and started to freak out about it. He even tried to blame Fatima. He wondered what she's been doing to Ops that the computer system couldn't handle the upgrade and so Nell had to keep the two from fighting. She also worked with them to help put Ops to right. Eric later realized that the safety measures that the computer system had in place was why it resisted the upgrade at first and so he course corrected.

Ops was soon back online. It found out who the nurse with the gun was and why he was after Dr. Soto. Soto had been helping the smuggling ring. She didn't know why the nurse turned on and so Ops could answer that. It turns out the nurse was Diego Huerta. He accidentally lost sight of the drugs because they had been given to Paula by accident and so he tried following the couple from Mexico. He saw them get pulled over Border Patrol. He also saw that they had been released and were speaking to federal agents. The nurse, or truly the person he works for, decided that too had been exposed and was now killing people to keep them quiet. Huerta tried to kill the doctor. He missed and so now he has to kill the Lewis couple.

Callen was still with his foster brother. He was alerted that Huerta was on his way and so he did his best to protect his brother and his wife. Callen doesn't like speaking about the past, but he had cared for Raymond who had been a big brother to him and now he doesn't want to lose him again after they've been reunited. Callen took out the men that came with Huerta. He then found Huerta thanks to new computer system at Ops and he came just in time to watch Raymond knock out Huerta. He knocked him out with an oxygen tank. A real one this time and so he and Callen laughed about it.

Callen then remembered what really happened all those years ago. He hadn't called the cops on anyone. His foster brother had beaten up Callen's old bully and the cops got called on him. Callen always blamed himself for what happened because Raymond got sent to juvie. He then went from juvie to jail as he got into even more trouble and so Callen apologized to Ray for setting things in motion. Only Raymond said there was nothing to apologize for. He made his own decisions and here he is married to an angel after everything.

Callen was glad for Raymond. He was also glad to spent time with his team who became his new family and that family was at different places in their lives. Deeks was thinking of selling his bar to get the dream home for him and Kensi. The two were in the building when Hetty called. Hetty wanted to congratulate them because Deeks has been accepted into the NCIS Academy. She may have pulled some strings to get him that only now Deeks gets to be an agent and the team gets to stay together.

Summary: The NCIS team's murder investigation of a man who sold military information leads to the abduction of a doctor whose cutting edge neurotechnology could be developed into advanced weaponry.

A woman witnessed a shooting. She was just leaving work one night when she came out and heard gunshots. This woman chose to hide, which was very wise of her. Her hiding is what saved her life. She ran behind a car as a security guard was chased and killed by a man wearing a black ball cap. The killer didn't see the witness else he might have killed her as well and he ran off into a van that was waiting for him along with an accomplice that was driving. The two fled the scene, but the woman was there and she called the authorities. She had been a witness to the crime. She therefore knows the two men that were responsible could have gotten away without having to kill the security guard and that their sole focus seemed to be the security guard and not what the man was protecting.

This crime didn't seem federal or federally connected at first. It was passed to LAPD and the team in the meanwhile were all focusing on Deeks. Deeks received special permission to enter the program to become a federal agent. He has to become one if he wants to stay on the team because LAPD ended all liaison positions and now he has to go through a process like everyone else. He applied for the program. He was being considered for it in spite of his age because he had friends who pulled strings for him and so now he just has to pass the interview. He has to be interviewed. Those with whom worked with also had to be interviewed. There was still some questions about his time in the LAPD because back then he had been watched closely by Internal Affairs.

Eric was one of the first to be interviewed. He was back now after having made billions through government contracts and he has a new lease on life. He was now more new age. He wanted to use his money to combat homelessness and he was going to start by building low-income housing. Eric also liked to talk about his zen disposition and what teas he's been drinking. He sorta annoyed the interviewer. Agent Martinez couldn't wait to be done with him and then it was onto Sam. It was right around his interview that the team received their notification. LAPD was handing over the case of the murdered security guard because he was a Navy reservist and so that makes the team's problem.

The team sent Callen out into the field. He questioned the witness and the only thing she could tell him about the getaway vehicle is that it had a special license plate that said "Don't Take It Personal". Other than that, she was pretty useless with information. She didn't see the killer's face and she admitted that it all happened very fast. The witness did tell Callen he could try the fast food truck behind the building. The truck tends to stay there overnight and luckily they have security cameras. The cameras showed that Bellamy was targeted. He hold an unique position in the reservist because he had access to other servicemen and women's files and so the team came to question if maybe that's why the killer targeted Bellamy.

Personnelmen First Class Joe Bellamy was a security guard at a library. The library didn't hold anything special as far as the team knew and so killing Bellamy to gain access to the library seemed flawed but killing him to gain access to files on the men and women in the Navy Reserve truly did sound like something worth killing for. The team chose to go with that last theory. They looked into Bellamy's life and they found out he had a gambling problem. He was heavily in debt. He also offered to sell names from the Navy Reserve to interested parties for a fee. Bellamy was taking dangerous risks and he wasn't being careful. He lived in an RV. The RV didn't have security nor was it locked and a file was literally hiding behind one of the wheels.

The file was on a woman by the name of Natalie Chan. She was researching something for the Department of Defense and it seems Bellamy was looking into her because he wanted to sell information she had. It could even be the reason why he was killed. The team didn't know what this information was and so they went to Dr. Chan's home hoping she might provide the answers and, while they were there, they ran into men who appeared to be breaking in. Sam and Rountree were able to take both men down. They checked them for weapons and they found a pair of house keys on one of them. Which would explain how they got in. It also solved the question of where was the missing doctor. She wasn't at home and no one has seen her in a day. Chan was clearly kidnapped. The team had her kidnappers and unfortunately the men weren't talking.

The elusive information was also still a mystery. The team tried speaking to Chan's coworkers and all they got was that she was working on emerging therapy for soldiers with PTSD. She had developed a program designed for spotting. It could also work in spotting human behavior and it seems that someone thinks it can be turned into a weapon. The men that broke into her home were Chinese nationals. Jimmy Fang and David Lao came into the country not long after Bellamy made his posts willing to sell information and so they weren't acting alone. There was a group of them. They were all acting under orders from the Chinese government. The two men also couldn't go back without the information because it might mean death for them and so the team became their best bet at surviving this.

The team soon found out that Chan was being moved. It seems the plan was to fly her to China if they couldn't get their hands on her research and so the team had to stop this before she was taken off of U.S. soil. The team was given location to an airfield. They moved on the building and were able to disarm the guards as well as rescue the doctor.

Deeks also made it through his interview in one piece and he thankfully made a good impression on his interviewer.

Callen also got into contact with Arkady because he wanted the older man's blessing for proposing to Anna, but at the last minute he chose to change his mind because he got cold feet.

Summary: When NCIS investigates the murder of a man about to reveal the source of a massive counterfeiting operation, an old acquaintance becomes their prime suspect and reveals the true reason for her return. Also, Deeks struggles during training to become an official NCIS agent.

Naima was working on her street game. She wasn't really one for tough guy talk, but she's been around the team for a while now and she noticed how well they all seemed to be good at it and so that encouraged her. She wants to be like them. She wants to be able to know what to say at any given moment. She talked about it with Roundtree and he didn't agree with her on upping her street game.

He thought that they as law enforcement should be above such things. He came to this realization after he took his sister and her friends out to dinner. The conversation soon turned to racial injustice and Roundtree was quickly filled in on how he was on the wrong side of that argument. And so now he's being more aware of what more he could do to get the community to trust him as well as his friends.

Therefore, the smart quips or anything that wasn't strictly professional was out. Roundtree explained how he felt to Naima and she understood where he was coming from. It's just that she grew up watching tough guys with her dad. She watched as Walker Texas Ranger always knew what to say and so she's taking inspiration from him rather than Roundtree. Which is okay because they can agree to disagree. The two were later wrapped up in a case and so any other conversation was about that.

The team had been sought by their old friend Sabatino. Sabatino left the Middle East because he was asked to explain why terrorism was better funded now than it used to be and at first he was stumped. He said the kidnappings hadn't gone up. The oil prices remained low. The terrorist just weren't being their usual selves.

Then Sabatino came across six million dollars in counterfeit cash. The fakes were so good that Sabatino and his team hadn't known they were fakes until they ran the serial numbers. Sabatino explained to the team that the terrorist were better funded because they were printing their own money nowadays. The super bills were mostly coming from Peru and a source on the income was a man named Michael Galeano.

Galeano used to work for the Acostas and then he got swept up in a raid. He was found by the Department of Justice. They held him in a secure house and were keeping tabs on him until one day someone found him dead at the house. Sabatino was notified by someone within the DOJ and it was clear they wanted his help in taking down the person responsible.

It turns out the DOJ knows who killed Galeano. It was Pietra Rey and the team recognized her name because they've had dealings with her. She's tried to kill them. Callen and Sam were asked to become a part of Sabatino's investigation into Rey and so they brought along their team. The whole unit investigated Rey. They found out she came into a country a few days ago and that she disappeared.

She wasn't at the location given on her visa. She wasn't even seen nearby and so she was in the wind. The team went looking for her, but they met with some resistance from the DOJ. It seems just one person from there had reached out to Sabatino. It wasn't an authorized thing and so DOJ Deputy Chief Effie Carlson who was in charge of Organized Crime was leading the investigation.

Carlson didn't want to work with NCIS. She threatened to pull their clearance if they interfered in her investigation and so the team was working behind her back to find Rey. Kensi even had a theory. Kensi knew Rey and she knew that she hates the Acostas for what happened to her family. There was no way Rey would be working for the Acostas now.

It also didn't make sense why she would kill Galeano when he could inform on the Acosta family and help bring them down through legal means. Kensi brought up some good points about Rey. Only her friends chose to ignore it because it seemed too coincidental that Rey would enter a country less than a day before Galeano was assassinated. Sabatino wanted to continue their search of Rey and so they kept looking for her.

They eventually found her hiding out. Rey got the drop on them and she demanded why they were looking for her, but Callen and Sam were able to flip things and they arrested her. They brought her back to the boat shed. She questioned her on why she killed Galeano and she said it wasn't her. She was actually in town because she was helping Galeano take down the Acostas.

She still hates the family. She wants to take them down more than anything and she has an alibi. She was with her DOJ boyfriend. She was also hiding at a DOJ house and right as the team were going to question the person who owns the house — the man was gunned down. The assassin was still in town and he or she was killing anyone connected to this case. And so the team went from arrest Rey to protecting her.

She could be the next person on the list after all. The team wanted to keep her safe and they didn't tell Carlson where she was either. They instead told Carlson that she could question Rey if she was a little more open towards them about her investigation so far. The team was off doing that while Sabatino was guarding Rey and he used that chance to get her intel on the counterfeit money. Rey did know something. She said it wasn't coming from Brazil and then she pretended to choke on her food. She wanted Sabatino to perform the Heimlich on her, but when he did, she knocked him out and tried to escape. Luckily, Sabatino knew she was going to do that. He warned Callen and so Callen stopped Rey from escaping.

Callen also informed her that her boyfriend was dead. Rey was shocked when she was told and that shock wore off really quick when she chose to escape. The team watched it happened. They let her escape because they figured she would find the Acostas' death squad or the death squad would find her. They hid a tracker on her and this meant they didn't live up to their deal with Carlson.

Then again neither did Carlson. She gave them footage from Agent Garcia's murder and it was basically useless. It showed a white van. There were so many white vans in LA that Naima told Rountree that the piece of evidence was useless.

And Sabatino and Kensi followed what little information they did have into a seemingly abandoned building.

Summary: While NCIS must track down an organized crime leader who is trying to buy stolen defense technology, Callen goes to Anna to ask the ultimate question, and Deeks is kicked out of NCIS training, Hetty has a life-changing surprise for him.

Sabatino and Kensi broke into a warehouse that they believed had been abandoned, but which was being used to carry out nefarious business deals and so they people they ran into weren't the welcoming kind. They fired at the agents. They tried to kill them and they weren't able to do so because the two had backup. Roundtree and Fatima showed.

Their additional fire power help to prevent the loss of life and unfortunately the bad guys still got away. They ran off in a dark van. It will be impossible to trace and the team had to try to find them with what little information they had. They believe the person that shot at them was Jimmy Fang. He's a Chinese National who entered the country recently to steal classified technology and now he's mixed up with the people pushing counterfeit "superbills".

There's no telling what Jimmy Fang could be up to now. His presence alone was enough for Washington to send retired Admiral Kilbride back to LA and he quickly began interrogating the team about what happened. He first questioned Sam. Sam mentioned that they got a tip off about the superbills and he tried to kill Sabatino's name out of it, but Kilbride correctly guessed it was him and he wanted to know what the team was doing to track down Jimmy Fang. Fang made it out of there in a van.

Only he seems to have been doing business with a man named Musa Okoye and Okoye hadn't played things smart. He took a car that could be traced back to him to the warehouse. The team spotted the car in security footage and they sent a couple of them to go collect him.

Roundtree and Fatima went to the man's home. The two were talking about Fatima's old acting days because she only told Roundtree about that time and that was before she began wearing a hijab. Her hair was out. She wore more makeup and she played a really interesting character on a nighttime soap series. She played a bitch.

She was so good at it that Roundtree cheered on her character and so the two were still laughing about it when they went to Okoye's home only to find the door ajar. The man's car was still in the drive, but he wasn't home and someone had done a great job of tearing the place apart. The two of them called it in and the rest of the team continued with their other leads.

A necklace had been found at the warehouse. Kensi had recognized it as coming from this edgy jewelry store in LA and so she went with Sabatino to see if the jeweler remembered the person who bought the piece. Except she was no help. The agents were later told that she couldn't remember the many pieces she sold over the past few months and so that was a dead end.

The team were investigating a shadowy criminal organization that did not want to be found. Their best bet in finding this organization was finding Okoye and Okoye didn't seem like a terrorist or anyone who could possibly be involved with shady characters. He worked in aerospace. He didn't reach out to fringe elements or even talk to his fellow Nigerians with records. He mostly kept his head down.

Summary: When Sam's daughter, Kam, is kidnapped after leading citywide protests, he will stop at nothing to find her. Also, Deeks rejoins NCIS and Callen searches for answers about Anna.

Sam's daughter Kamran otherwise known as Kam was in town. She came to visit her father because she wanted to tell him something and she never got a chance to say it. Kam was taken. She was kidnapped by a man wearing a mask. Which isn't unusual in this day and age and this man threw her in a cell. She was being kept in an old fashion prison cell. She also wasn't there by herself. The other cells were also occupied by other young adults and the others started to demand their phone call. They thought they were in a regular prison where they have rights. Like being able to call their parents or at least a lawyer and unfortunately they were "told" very early on that this prison cell isn't official. The kids were kidnapped by a group of masked men who drugged and kidnapped them for a purpose that Kam didn't know just yet. She just knew she was being held against her will.

Kam being kidnapped also forced her to miss her usual check-ins with her father. Sam has this rule where his kids have to call or contact him after a certain set of hours once he called them and Kam missed that deadline. She wasn't anywhere near a cell phone. Her father grew concerned when he hadn't heard back from her nor was she replying to his text messages and so he started looking for her. He called her school. He asked around with her friends. Sam got nowhere with either of them and so he turned to his own tech team. He wanted Eric to use federal technology to check up on his daughter. This was technically illegal because it wasn't involved with a case and Eric knew this. Eric tried to deny Sam's request.

Eric and Sam were arguing about it when Roundtree came in. Roundtree was told what was happening and that Sam's daughter Kam wasn't replying to texts and so he sided with Sam.

He helped convince Eric to check on her. They weren't going to track her down. They were just going to check on her cell service to see if she had a problem with returning calls. Eric looked the information up and he found out that Kam's phone is offline. There was no reason for a young woman's phone to be offline. Kids these days were basically attached to their phones and so that scared Sam. Sam's fatherly instincts were telling him that his daughter was in danger. He wanted to drive to San Francisco and investigate what happened to his daughter, but again Roundtree was the voice of reason.

Roundtree reminded Sam that it's better to do these things with help. The men turned again to Eric and Eric went digging into Kam's life. He found out Kam was in LA. He had her friends checked out. The only person in her life that had a record was this cute boy that she seemed to be interested in and so Sam dragged Roundtree to this poor boy's house. The kid did try to run when Sam announced he was a federal agent. Only he didn't make it very far and he knew who Sam was immediately after he heard Kam's name. The young man was Kam's boyfriend. Logan and Kam have been seeing each other and she probably didn't tell her dad about it because Logan does have a record.

Sam didn't like finding out his daughter had a boyfriend. He felt it was Logan's fault that his daughter was keeping secrets from him and so he did try to frighten the kid. He brought him to the boatshed. He questioned him about Kam's whereabouts and he refused to listen to Logan. Roundtree had to step in. He understands why Sam was scared and was taking it out on the kid, but it wasn't the kid's fault and so Roundtree took over. He questioned Logan. He found out that Logan got his record because he was arrested at a police protest and that Kam was in town because the kids were going to another protest. They took Kam's car to come to LA. She told him that she was going to see her father and so she dropped him off before continuing on her way.

The protest they wanted to join was being organized by a group called Students for Humanity. Kam was a part of this group and she butts heads with another member. This other member was named Zee. Zee and Kam got into an argument when they last saw each other and it did not end well. Other members of the group think that he may have thrown a brick through their window to scare off people who didn't agree with him. Zee was also one of three people who knew where the petty cash box for the organization was at Students for Humanity and he grabbed the gun while he was at it. Zee was a radical. He thinks they should get violent to make an impact and he didn't want to be respectful like Kam suggested. Kam wasn't a hardcore radical. She just wanted to protest for change.

Yet, Kam was kidnapped for her beliefs. The people that took her kept saying she didn't deserve rights because of all of the protests she does and they tortured her as well as the kids that were locked up. Kam had been taken by counter-protesters. Meaning Zee wasn't guilty and so Sam was wasting time tracking him down. Callen even returned from his trip early to help. The two of them found Zee making bombs and they arrested him before he could actually use those weapons on people. They later questioned Zee about Kam. He was also shown footage of her kidnapping because they got security footage of it and he told them he had nothing to do with it. The last time he saw Kam was when they were arguing over peaceful protest.

The team checked. They couldn't find a link between Zee and the kidnapers and so they chose to believe he had nothing to do with what happened. Only, they weren't in the blind either. They later learned that two other members of the protest group had been reported missing. The team quickly remember everyone who had a problem with the protesters and so their chief suspects became police officers plus anyone else who would have a grudge and that's when they found out about the Sandmen. It turns out there used to be a gang within the sheriff's department called the Sandmen. The Sandmen operated like any other gang as in they did a bunch of illegal crap on the side and so the only difference was that they were protected from consequences.

They also would be the most ticked off group about the protests. The Sandmen didn't like people fighting against police misconduct because they thrived on that and so the team tracked down two of its members. It led them back to a warehouse where they found Kam. Kam was fighting back in a bid to escape and so Sam came at the right time. He rescued his daughter and the two other kids. He also took the time to chastise Kam for breaking the rules. She got a car without telling him and she started to date someone without telling him. Kam apologized for breaking the rules but she wasn't sorry and she still wanted to go to the protest and she even asked her father to come with her.

Summary: When Callen goes to the National Counterterrorism Center to interrogate a Russian asset from the crashed plane case he investigated months earlier, the tables are turned and he is detained, accused of being a Russian agent.

Callen's girlfriend disappeared. Anna is nowhere to be found. She wasn't at the location she claimed to be because Callen checked and the house was deserted. Her cell phone was also offline. It worked for a few days and then it was later disconnected. It was as if someone didn't even want to bother to pretend Anna was close by. Anna is gone and Callen now has no way of contacting her.

He doesn't know if she's okay or missing or on the job. He's completely in the dark. He's worried and he didn't say anything to his team because he didn't want to tell them that he went to go propose to this woman and she's ignoring him. Callen instead kept the information to himself. He worked the cases like normal and he was doing his job when he got called to the NCC.

Callen went to the National Counterterrorism Center because he was told there was a connection to an old case of his. However, Callen spoke to the witness and nothing had changed. He wasn't given any new information. Callen had just wondered why he wasted his time going down there when out of nowhere he was interrogated himself. He was questioned about how long he's been a Russian agent.

It turns out some people distrusts him because he was Russian and his father was former KGB. It also didn't help that he often speaks to Arkady Kolcheck who was also KGB or that he was dating the man's daughter Anna who was also Russian. Callen was asked about Anna. He told the investigators that he didn't know where she was and that was the truth.

Only no one wanted to believe him. They believed that Callen was a Russian agent and that he blew up a plane that might have given the Americans crucial intel. They tricked him into coming to the NCC where they made him give up both his cell phone and gun. He thought he was doing it to interrogate someone else, but secretly they were getting him to do that so that he wouldn't struggle when they interrogated him and it worked.

He was offline. He couldn't reach out to his team or even a lawyer. He did have one thing going in his favor. He told Fatima before he left that he felt he was being followed and so she investigated. She proved that he was being followed. She also heard from Admiral Kilbride who confirmed that Callen was being interrogated for his supposed Russian connections.

The admiral said that he reached out to SECNAV. His bosses will make a call to the Department of Justice and they in turn will make a call to Agent Carlson. She was the one in charge of this witch hunt. She was interrogating Callen and she refused to believe him when he said he was innocent. She was just so sure that it irked Callen.

He realized that someone made the claim that he was a Russian agent and now it was being followed up. Someone from the team was able to check on Callen. Deeks used some lawyer credentials to see Callen for himself and they were talking when Agent Carlson interrupted them to tell them to get out. She got the call from her boss to release Callen.

Carlson wasn't happy about it. She still believes Callen is a spy and she believes it because there has always been a rumor of a Russian Intelligence Officer hidden in their ranks. Hetty was even trying to find this person. She disappeared to Syria because she released several special agents and they were all supposed to tell a different story about troop movements.

She was hoping to use one of them to weed out the spy, but something happened. Her spies were all arrested and detained by Assad. He thought the spies were journalists. He didn't know that he was ruining an operation and so Hetty was slowly working towards getting her people released. In the meantime, rumors of the spy reached the DOJ and that's why Carlson went after Callen.

Callen isn't angry with Carlson. He later offered his services in helping her find the real double agent and his team was helping them as well. They all wanted to finish what Hetty started. They also talked the admiral into following along as well and so the one thing the team lacked was a Russian they could turn to. The team went through a list of Russians they've dealt with.

They ruled them out one by one until they were left with Kirkin. Kirkin still has strong international ties and most importantly he was still in love with Deeks. Deeks hated dealing with Kirkin. Yet, he did so again for the team and to find this spy. He found Kirkin at a studio where it turns out Kirkin has become a fashion designer and luckily for them Kirkin was in a mood to help.

The team along with Carlson arranged for Captain Gonchgarov to be questioned. The captain was a real Russian agent and so Callen pretended to really be a Russian secret agent as well with him. He "broke" the captain out of custody. He brought him to the boat shed and there he demanded to know why the captain sold him out.

Callen said that someone had sold him out else how did the US Government know that he was a double agent. He sold his story really well and he found out that the captain didn't know who the double agent was. The only information he had was a phone number. He was supposed to use the phone number if he ever got in trouble and so that's what he did. He use the phone number.

Whoever was at the other end had agreed to meet with the captain. The captain was supposed to meet him at a boardwalk and instead he was poisoned. The woman behind the poisoning also managed to disappear before the team could catch her.

But the team did recognize her. They paid her thirty-eight thousand dollars in the past for the name of Russian agents on a plane and the only person from that plane who was willing to cooperate is now wavering between life and death. The team suffered a loss this time. They don't usually lose when it comes to dealing with criminals and yet they lost this time and now Carlson is more sure than ever that Callen is a Russian agent.

And unfortunately Deeks still needed to return that favor from Kirkin, so he ended up becoming a model for him.

And why was Callen later meeting with the Zasha the poisoner alone? Could he really be a Russian agent?

Summary: After Callen receives a cryptic message from Hetty, he tracks down the person tailing him, bringing him to a remote location teeming with Russians — and face to face with Anna.

The team has a problem. Their problem was Callen and whoever was following. It was one thing that Callen has been acting out of character lately, but he made his problem the team's problem when he brought a Russian back to the boatshed and did his best to interrogate him. Callen, it seems had found out who was following him. He got the jump on him during breakfast one day and he brought the guy he captured back to the boatshed.

Callen later tried getting answers out of the guy. He tried to frighten him on his own and he couldn't because the guy knew a little thing about his rights. He knew Callen couldn't keep him cooped-up there forever. He also knew that if he stuck to his story that there was little Callen could do that could change that. Callen, therefore, needed help and so he turned to his team.

Callen asked Fatima to do a background search on the man he captured. She did look Mishkin up and his backstory was verified. He works for an oil extraction company called Cherneft. There was history on the company. There was history on Mishkin or whatever his real name is. The team had nothing on this man and so that stumped Callen. However, the team also received a warning from Hetty.

Hetty sends a coded email from Syria that there was an imminent threat and so Nell looked into it. She wanted to see if it was connected to Callen's thing. She decoded the message and it was telling her to look into Doby Distribution. Deeks and Kensi were asked to go check out the company and there was a minor issue when Kensi began feeling side-effects.

Kensi was taking drugs to help her conceive. She and Deeks wanted to start trying to have a baby and they haven't told the team yet. Kensi's pregnancy journey is currently a secret. So, too are the side-effects. Kensi was feeling dizzy and so they told the rest of the team that she was having problems with her back. She stayed behind and Deeks went with Sam to check out the company.

The "company" was a deserted building. It didn't seem like it was connected to Callen's case and so most of the team leaned towards dismissing a connection. Callen also had to release his prisoner. He released Mishkin and then had Roundtree follow him. Callen was hoping to get answers on his own case and he helped out with the team's other case in following Hetty's clues.

This wasn't the first time that Hetty has given them random information that she expects them to investigate. This has happened so many times before that the team wasn't scared and, like always, Hetty was shown to be right because something was off with Doby Distribution. The building looked deserted. Both Sam and Deeks heard gunshots coming from inside and so they went running inside just to find no one.

There was no one inside. There were some empty shells on the floor and that proved what they heard was true. There was a shooting. It just took place so fast that the perpetrators managed to escape before the guys could run inside and so they had to widen their search to see if anyone showed up at a hospital with gunshot wounds.

A dead body showed up. Fatima tried to investigate it from her end and unfortunately, the CIA flagged it as belonging to their case. There was also an issue with Callen's case. Callen had Roundtree follow Mishkin back to a house and Anna had been inside. Anna was Callen's girlfriend. His missing Russian girlfriend lied to him about working with a rebuilding project and who just showed up at this house after Callen did everything he could to find her.

Callen was notified about the house. He went there and he saw Anna with his own two eyes. Callen told Roundtree that he had no idea what was going on, but that he was going to find out and so the next thing Roundtree knew, Callen went right up to the house. He wanted to find out what was going on and Anna told her friends that it was okay if he came inside.

Callen of course demanded to know what was going on. He asked Anna what she was doing there and she told him that she was in hiding because Katya was back. Katya has been threatening Anna. She's been threatening Callen's life and even Arkady's life. She scared Anna into hiding and Anna was a private citizen now. She knew she couldn't turn to her old bosses.

She also didn't want to risk Callen because she still cares for him and so she put a team together. One that would watch over him. Mishkin whose first name of Maksim was at least real was an old boyfriend of Anna's and she turned to him for help. He was the one who put a team together. He was going to help Anna to stop Katya and the objective was to keep everyone in Anna's life safe.

Only Mishkin didn't seem to like Callen. He stopped Callen from coming with them when they left the house and, while Anna didn't see it, Roundtree did witness the moment Mishkin knocked out Callen. Callen was tied up. He was left at the house as Anna supposedly went to meet with Katya and so his team rescued him while still keeping eyes on Anna. The team on Anna stopped Mishkin from betraying.

It turns out Mishkin was using Anna to get close to Katya. Russia wants Katya dead. They would rather she be dead than alive because alive she could hand over vital information to the CIA. And she has access to the CIA because she has Jorelle in her custody and she was threatening to kill her if Anna didn't hand herself over.

Anna wanted to save Jorelle's life. Russia wanted to prevent Katya was taken alive and so this case and their Doby Distribution case were connected.

The imminent threat was Katya and unfortunately, she didn't show up at the meeting like she promised to do. She instead sent an Uber. The Russians didn't get what they wanted and so they were taken out by the team, but Anna was unharmed and she now has to answer questions from the CIA and the DOJ.

Katya still wants Anna.

Anna wants to save Jorelle.

Jorell's finger was mailed to Callen.

Production Code: 1213
Summary: To rescue Joelle from further torture by the Russians, Callen and NCIS must offer up Anna as bait to Katya. Callen finally discovers who accused him of being Russian spy.

Katya Miranova is back in the picture. The woman was obsessed with Callen's girlfriend Anna Kolcheck and she was both willing and later did kidnap a friend of Anna's in the hopes of luring Anna into a trap. Katya knew that Anna and Joelle worked together. They developed a bond and a psycho like Katya may have even been jealous of such a bond. She was obsessed after all and she was prepared to do anything to get her hands on Anna.

Anna has known about Katya for some time. She was warned by Joelle when Katya became active again and Joelle had asked for Anna's assistance in reaching out to Katya, but Anna turned down the offer. She explained how Katya couldn't be trusted and that all she would want is revenge for Anna's undercover opp. The same opp that got Katya burned by the Russians.

This in part explains the obsession. Katya wanted Anna and she kidnapped Joelle because she thought Anna would agree to an exchange. Anna for Joelle. Only Anna knows better than to trust any exchange that Katya set up. Katya would most likely grab Anna and still go through with killing Joelle and so Anna tried to capture Katya. She tried but there was always an issue. Katya seemed to remain one step ahead of her and Anna didn't know why that was.

Katya didn't have any backing from Russia. It wasn't until Anna talked to Callen that they both realized what happened and that's when they explained for everyone else. The Russians were helping Katya in spite of burning her. The Russians wouldn't want a former operative of theirs falling into enemy hands.

They would want her out in the world so that they could kill her themselves. Anna's friend Maksim was working with the Russians and he tried to kill Katya. There was also an issue with why Katya kidnapped Joelle. Joelle was a friend and Anna wouldn't want her to be hurt but Anna's father Arkady was a much easier target.

He was also family. NCIS visited Arkady's home to warn him about the threat and it turned out that they were almost too late in their warning. Katya did go after Arkady. She took out his security system and she killed his men. Arkady was hiding in his panic room when the team found him. They convinced him to leave the room by putting on the phone with his daughter and so Anna had to tell him it was okay before he left.

Arkady is now safe. He's being protected and Katya couldn't get to him but her partner might. Katya couldn't have done so much damage on her own. She had to be working with someone and that someone could be the mole at the DOJ. Agent Carlson works directly at the DOJ. She was a part of the mission with Joelle in bringing Katya in and their plan worked.

They thought they turned Katya. She gave them information that proved viable and so they thought they could trust her. Carlson trusted Katya when Katya told her that the mole they were all looking for Callen. She did this because she wanted them to separate Callen from Anna and she wanted to catch Anna unaware. And so the plan failed because of Joelle.

Joelle didn't trust Katya. She didn't believe her when she said that Callen was a mole and so she told the agency that she was going to prove he was innocent. Only she was captured before she could do so. Katya kidnapped Joelle to stop her from talking and the plan didn't work anyway. Callen was able to skate the charges.

He continues to be free and now he's now helping Anna in stopping Katya. Katya sent Callen Joelle's finger. The team ran a DNA test on it and it led to them getting a warning from the CIA to stop testing their data. Which was basically a confirmation. Katya really does have Joelle and she's torturing her. She cut off her finger. She also sent a cell phone along with the finger to Callen and she later called him.

Katya demanded that the phone be handed to Anna. She was using a device to distort her voice and she claimed she was doing so because Anna stole her voice. She betrayed her and Russia threw her away. Katya was demanding that Anna show herself at a park in an hour. Katya swore she would do the exchange for Joelle and the team was forced into believing her because they had no other choice. They talked to Anna.

She was up for the exchange and so they fit her with everything possible. They placed a tracker, video, and listening devices on her. They then had her meet Katya in the park and Katya did live up to her bargain. She brought Joelle. She fitted Joelle with a bomb and she threatened to blow her up if Anna didn't get into the van with her.

Anna did so. Joelle was then thrown out of the van and the van took off. The team followed the van. They later pulled it over and they demanded that Katya come out with her hands up, but she instead blew up the van. Callen watched as it exploded. He hadn't known what happened and so his first reaction was to panic. He believed Katya got her ultimate revenge by killing Anna and herself. The only person she hadn't killed was the driver.

The driver ran off once Callen identified himself as a federal agent and so Callen questioned him after the van blew up. The driver revealed he was just a delivery man. He had been hired to drive the vehicle and he didn't know what was going on. The team still took him into custody.

The timer on Joelle's bomb in the meanwhile had started. Sam stayed with her trying to deactivate it and, when that didn't work, he had to dislocate her arm to get the bomb off of Joelle. It saved Joelle's life. The bomb did go off and it hurt no one. There was also more good news. Anna was still alive. She hadn't been killed in the other bombing. She had been taken by Katya and the two can be anywhere right now and so that's where the good news ends.

Katya was very smart in the way she managed to escape. The team hadn't been able to use their usual methods in finding her or Anna and so it looks like the two were gone. They were off someplace where the team couldn't find them. The team didn't even have leads on where they could be and that meant, for now, the search needed to be called off.

And Callen later learned that Joelle's leg wound was so bad that they had to cut her leg off. She had been shot in her leg and the doctors tried to save it by putting her on medication to keep sepsis away, but it hadn't been enough and so they had to remove it, and now Joelle has lost below her knee.

Production Code: 1214
Summary: The team discovers that Anna is being held by a group with ties to Anna's up bring and must rescue her before she is forcibly returned to Russia. Also, Admiral Kilbride makes Nell a serious offer.

Anna was being held captive. She believed she had been taken by a lone wolf. By Katya. Katya was an occasional sociopath/psychopath who has this sick obsession with Anna and who wants to ruin Anna's life. Katya said it was revenge for what Anna did to her.

Anna was the reason Katya was no longer working for the Russians. The Russians cut her loose after they came to believe she failed them and so Anna assumed that Katya was out for revenge by herself. However, Katya still has friends.

Her friends were the ones holding Anna captive while Katya was off doing god knows what and Anna even recognized them. Anna came up through a program back in Russia with the two women helping Katya.

The three women were all trained together when they were young. They were all made into assets for Russia and that's where they plan on returning. Katya and her friends were all planning on returning to Russia with Anna. Anna betrayed the country of her birth to work with the Americans. She would be considered a traitor back home and they might even kill her if she returns. Hence Anna needed to be found before she could be transported.

Her boyfriend Callen was looking for her and he was doing so with NCIS at his back. The whole team was looking for both Anna and Katya. Callen was so desperate to find Anna that he used a contact his team didn't know about. He turned to Zasha Gagarin.

Zasha is a Russian asset. She kills for them and she would know about any plans on transporting someone. Callen, therefore, needed her to find Katya for him. Callen was willing to threaten Zasha and so she couldn't tell him "no". She had to give him the answer he wants.

Callen wants to know where Katya is and he was prepared to do anything to get that information.

He had Zasha reach out to her friends. Zasha found out that Katya is still in Russia and so that confused Callen. He thought Katya was personally in the United States for Anna. He couldn't quite grasp that she might have been working with someone else or possibly two someone else. And so Callen decided to talk to Joelle.

Joelle had been taken hostage herself. She was a CIA Officer and her office was contacted by an intermediary who claimed there was a former Russian operative willing to defect. Katya! Joelle hadn't truly trusted this information and so she went looking into Katya, but then she had been taken hostage and she was slowly tortured. She was even shot in her leg. The wound festered while she was kidnapped and she later had to get removed once she was freed.

Joelle now wants revenge for that. She wants to kill Katya and she said she's going to do it the second she's released from the hospital. Only Joelle never saw Katya's face while she was being held, hostage. She saw a woman wearing a mask and other than that the only thing she has is a partial number she read one day as well as the fact she was being held in a shipping container.

Joelle only gave that information because she wanted Anna to be found. She still plans on going after Katya and so she told Callen that he better find Anna fast. And Callen was trying to do just that. Callen called in after several hours of going rouge and Nell told him to come in. She said that Admiral Kilbride was at the office. The admiral was angry that the team has become involved in another international incident and he wanted them to fix the mess they created.

He was especially on Nell to lead the team. She was the one in charge and so it was up to her to fix it. Nell told Callen to come in and he ignored her. She told Sam that they had to work as a team and he too ignored her. She called Eric in to help and he actually did what she wanted.

Eric was assisting them in running the information that Joelle gave them. The rest of the team meanwhile was trying to get information on Anna and Callen had to break the news to Arkady. Arkady was told his daughter was taken. He was also told by whom and that rang some alarm bells for Arkady. It turns out he sent his daughter to a spy training center when she was five.

It was a brutal regime that trained these girls to be the best of the best and Arkady had tried to take Anna out of the program only she had liked it too much. Anna had found herself there at the "school". She and Katya were trained there. Arkady also spent a lot of money to get this part of Anna's past to be scrubbed from history so that she could come to the United States and so that could explain why Anna never mentioned it to Callen.

Callen and Sam both realized that Katya would turn to someone she went to school with for help in capturing Anna. The Institute of Noble Maidens is where all the female spies were trained and so Zasha was trained there. Callen told Sam about Zasha secretly working for them. He also contacted Zasha in front of Sam and together they asked her if anyone from the Institute was in the country. Zasha said at least two of the former students were nearby.

Eric identified the students. He traced them back to a shipping container that they rented, and the container has since been moved. Katya's friends were bringing Anna to her in Russia. The team was in a race to find Anna and they couldn't agree where they should start looking.

There were several ports out of LA. The Russians could be using any of them and so Nell made a decision. Nell was told earlier that Hetty wouldn't be returning to NCIS. With Hetty out of the way, Nell could fully step into the job and so that's what she's doing now. She was stepping up. Her decisions led to the team finding their two Russians and they also ran into Arkady and Kirkin. The last two were working together to find Anna.

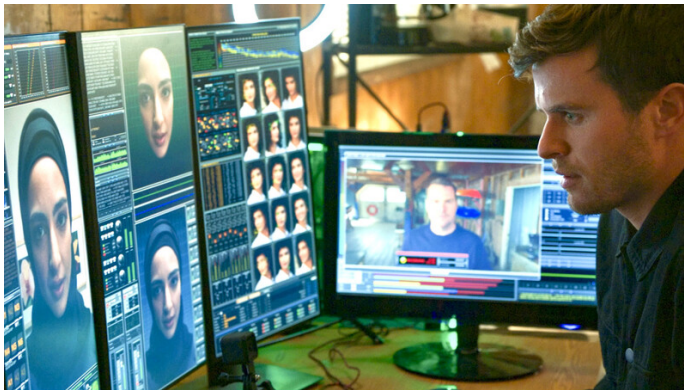

Arkady no longer trusted the team to protect his daughter and so he wanted to do it himself, but he and his friend walked into a situation they didn't know about and Kirkin was shot. Deeks found Kirkin. He called for an ambulance while Kensi got Arkady out of the way.

And so it was Sam and Callen that took on the Russians. And once they got them out of the way, they found Anna. Anna was okay. She was glad to be found and she wanted to go home with Callen. Callen was just so happy to have her back that he agreed with it. He was no longer angry with her. But sadly Kirkin died and he died after pushing Deeks out of the way of danger. And so Deeks was going to mourn his friend after all of this.

Summary: NCIS obtains a hard drive containing a realistic deep fake video of a deceased terrorist and must retrieve the dangerous technology behind it. However, when the team's comms are highjacked during their mission, they find that one of their own has been a victim of its potential.

The team recently arrested Derek Rashed. It was a group effort. The team worked great together and afterward Fatima chose to hit the gym. She likes to hit the gym on a Friday night. She said she likes having the whole place to herself and that's why she goes when it's normally empty, but tonight she ran into someone. This someone likes listening to his music on the sound system.

He even likes singing to it out loud and so Fatima wasn't getting her normally quiet gym. She asked the guy to turn the music down. She also asked him to stop singing once he started to do that without the music and that leads to a challenge because the guy asked her what type of music does she listen to? Fatima loves Arabic techno. It was the techno part that had the guy calling her taste into question and so Fatima agreed to box with her new friend.

The winner gets to choose the music. Fatima went boxing and she later won. She got to choose her techno music. She also made a new friend. She agreed to meet with her new friend next Friday as well and the two agreed to have dinner as well. Fatima had believed her new friend was a great guy, but it turns out he was monitoring her. He reported to someone the second her back was turned and he told whoever he works for that it was "done".

Which could mean anything. Fatima and the guy just boxed and he didn't ask her any questions about herself or her team and so it seems odd that he managed to get information on her. It's just he wasn't as innocent as Fatima would like to believe. Fatima was unaware as the rest of her team were finishing up the case with Rashed.

Rashed was found with DVDS on him at the time of his arrest. The DVDs were Al-Qaeda propaganda films and one video had the known terrorist Umar Hamid on it. There was simply a few problems with this video. It was current and that too didn't make sense because Hamid allegedly died a while back. It was a bit fuzzy at the time, but everyone thought he was dead, and yet there he was alive. He was filmed with a recent newspaper and a car that was just released this year.

This means the video couldn't be fake. It was real and Hamid was alive. The team wanted more information on it and so they turned to the only asset they had. They turned to Rashed. They asked him why an American-born citizen would be helping terrorists. And he said he didn't know what he was delivering.

Rashed was merely the middleman. He was hired to deliver something and he never questioned what it was or who he was delivering it to. Rashed was almost blasé about it. Like he wasn't upset in the slightest that he got involved in terrorism. The team had to instill fear by saying what would happen if the buyer blames him and the team was going to make sure he was blamed. They would put the word out there.

The only way to stop them was to work with them and that's how they forced Rashed into working with them. Rashed didn't want to be an enemy of Al-Qaeda without American protection. He agreed to tell the team everything he knew and they meanwhile were still working on the video.

Nell reached out to her sources. She learned that Hamid had truly been killed by a drone attack years ago and that the video was the best deep fake video she has ever seen. She ran several tests on it. Everything came back listing the video as real and that was scary. That meant the terrorism had access to technology outside of her capacity. Nell was down one person because Fatima's mother suddenly suffered an accident. She fell down the stairs and possibly broke her hip.

Her daughter has chosen to be with her while she was at the hospital, but Nell understood. She had Callen stay with Rashed and she ordered Sam to go with Kensi and Deeks to check out a building. All three agents were at the building when someone began firing at them and it turned into a shootout.

The suspects appeared to be Middle Eastern. Kensi and Deeks caught the man that was shooting at them, but they were getting different reports from different people, and all it was a fake. Nell had lost contact with everyone. She had been approached by someone on the listening devices and this person was using the team's voices as well as her own to send her a message. They can be anyone at any time. They could risk her agents.

They could even kill them and there's nothing Nell could do about it. The terrorist wanted something from her. They wanted the hard drive with the deep fake video about Hamid and Nell couldn't hand it over. She couldn't risk handing over something she doesn't know the risks about.

Nell instead sent a message to her team. She told them not to use their comms or trust any voice on it even if it sounded like it came from someone they trust. Nell couldn't risk handing over the DVDs. They were apparently proof of concept. Someone was creating deep fakes of Hamid because that way they could pretend he was still alive and it would be digital immortality. The next Bin Laden, with this concept, would be impossible to kill.

His message and his imagery would continue to live on and that's what guys like Rashed were counting on. He wasn't just some middleman. He was an up-and-coming terrorist himself. He wants the "message" to live on in spite of the countless billions that Americans will spend to just kill just one terrorist. And he believed the message so deeply that nothing Callen said could dissuade him.

Nell reached out to her team using cell phones now that she couldn't use comms. Only that too proved to be a problem because she and the team thought they were speaking with Fatima because they saw footage of her talking to them in real-time, but Fatima's image had been stolen. Her new "friend" had stolen her image during the boxing match and he was able to create a deep fake of it. He asked Callen to move Rashed to a separate location.

He also asked Roundtree to deliver something to him. The guys did it because they thought Fatima was telling them to and all along it was part of their plan. They guys knew they were dealing with a fake Fatima. Callen brought back up when he transferred Rashed to a new location. And so Rashed didn't escape custody.

Roundtree and Nell also pinged their deep faker's location when they supposedly delivered information to him. So, Noel was screwed. The real Fatima and Sam were later able to arrest their culprit and someone blew up his offices minutes later. And so, once he saw that his partners were eventually going to kill him anyway, Noel offered up information.

But the potential of the deep fake was still out there and it remains a threat.

Not that the team was going to let that affect them as they all moved on with their lives. In Kensi and Deek's case, they painted the extra bedroom in the hopes of one day having a child.

Summary: When military grade technology is stolen, a deaf engineer, Sienna Marchione, who always wanted to serve her country, and the only member of her team to survive the theft, helps Kensi and NCIS track down the tech before it's taken out of the country.

A deaf engineer walked into her office one day to find hackers stealing secret technology. Sienna Marchione single handily took down two of the men while a third man got away with the technology and so she was quick to call 911 once she saw the hack had gone through. While this was happening, the NCIS team was going about their everyday lives. Kensi and Deeks were talking about their future baby.

They weren't pregnant yet. They were still trying and so Deeks wanted them to have a plan for when the baby does around and his wife didn't think they needed a plan. Kensi said they should wait until the baby does arrive. It was too early to be going over maternity leave and/or nannies. She thinks they should focus on their jobs at NCIS and they even have a new case.

NCIS was alerted to the technology that was stolen. The engineers on the project we're working with the Department of the Defense to create technology that would make people invisible and everyone thought it was suspicious that the whole team on the project was murdered. However, only Sienna survived. Kensi and Deeks were dispatched. They went to go talk to Sienna and at first, they didn't know she was deaf. There was initially a misunderstanding.

They came up behind her asking questions and she didn't have her earpiece in. It wasn't until they drew guns on her that she explained the situation. Sienna is deaf and she's also a bada. She blames herself for her team's death because she believes she could have saved them if she had been there and so that gave Kensi and Deeks an opening.

They asked her about the timing. It was uncanny how she chose to get coffee at the most perfect time and so Sienna had to explain how she wasn't a traitor. Sienna would have served in the Navy if she had been allowed to. Her disability stopped her from being accepted and so Sienna did everything possible to serve her country while being a civilian. She comes from a proud Navy family. She would never betray them or her country for monetary gains.

Sienna's story was so moving that Kensi decided to let her help them with the investigation. Sienna did have the background knowledge that they didn't have and she knew all the characters. She knew that her boss Brandon was going through a very messy and expensive divorce.

Sienna also knew that her fellow engineer Owen Winnick called out sick on the night of the break-in. Besides Sienna, Owen is the only one from the project to survive and he could be behind the hack. Kensi thought Sienna helping was a great idea and she didn't understand why Deeks was against it. Deeks didn't think they could get approval for something like that. Kensi disagreed with him and she thought Nell would agree.

Only Nell didn't agree. Nell was turning down the offer when Admiral Killbride overheard her and he okayed the deal. He thought they should let Sienna work the case. Killbride and Kensi were the only ones who didn't see a problem with it. They figured if Sienna wanted to help, she should be allowed to help.

Sienna herself was happy. She knew all about NCIS and she was happy to be shown around the boat shed. She also got to be there when they questioned Owen. Owen called in sick from Heptagon and it turns out he was telling the truth. He was suffering from food poisoning. He was vomiting during the interview.

It was also pretty clear he had a crush on Sienna. Owen talked about how nice she was and how glad he was that she survived. He also tried to be important, but he didn't really know much about who their boss was speaking with and so the team had to do their own research. Nell looked into the big tech companies that were at the same conference as Heptagon. She was doing it on her own because she sent Fatima out to be with Kensi and Sienna and Deeks was no help.

Sam and Callen were also following up leads. They ran into some trouble when someone began firing at them and so they had questions. They returned to Ops where they asked Killbride about what he knew. Killbride has been talking to SECNAV. He said that the technology the company created it would not only make people invisible but they would be invisible to radar and all other countersurveillance devices.

Everyone would want technology like that. Which is what Owen said. Owen's house also smelled of a syrup Sienna was forced to drink as a child to make her throw up and so she suspected Owen wasn't really sick. He was making himself sick. The women left Fatima to sit on the house and they continued to investigate who would steal the technology. The one guy who got away was identified as Steve Tricks.

The team needed to know who Steve was working for. They suspected he might be connected to Ehsan Raman who was a billionaire with Saudi Arabia connections and he recently bought a property near Heptagon. The team's suspicions were confirmed when Owen later met with Ehsan. Owen met with him to hand him the encryption key to opening the files he stole and so Fatima tried and ultimately failed to stop Owen from running off after the meeting while Sam and Callen were called in to deal with Ehsan.

The two men were chasing the billionaire in their car. Nell was helping them by tracking Ehsan. Kensi was also called in. She and the guys were able to corner Ehsan before he could reach his private jet. They arrested him for the murders at Heptagon. And both men were later able to take a private jet themselves to Kam's graduation ceremony.

The guys closed their case. They recovered the stolen technology and Sienna was grateful to be a part of it while she could. She even hugged Kensi in gratitude. The two women were talking while Nell and Killbride were discussing the end of the case and Killbride explained to her why he let Sienna assist with the case. It was a decision he didn't regret.

Kensi and Deeks later talked had another baby talk and they realized they didn't need to talk logistics for now. That conversation can wait until they get there.

Production Code: 1217
Summary: When a Naval Intelligence Officer is tortured and murdered, NCIS must work with Joelle, who informs them that other CIA operatives are being killed in the same way. Also, Kensi receives a threatening postcard from David Kessler, the sociopath who is obsessed with her.

A woman was found dead in her hotel room. The woman was later identified as Lt. Commander Susan Sorensen of the Office of Naval Intelligence and she was brutally murdered. The team was asked to investigate her death, but before they did, Fatima informed the team that David Kessler was back in California. He was pardoned by the former president and so he was a free man.

He could do what he likes. He can go where he likes. His sending a postcard to Kensi with a veiled threat wasn't enough to arrest him and so the team had to bench all discussions of him as they continued to investigate what happened to Sorensen. Sorensen's death has captured a lot of attention. The SECNAV has brought in the CIA and so Joelle was assigned this case. She was the liaison. She was also running point on the case and that meant she was in charge.

Joelle requested the team specifically. She needed someone who could investigate to her liking and she thought of the team because they've worked together in the past. Joelle was especially concerned about Sorensen's method of death. She was tortured before she was killed and everyone feared she may have given up pivotal information.

Sorensen's fingers were burned. She couldn't and neither could anyone else withstand such torture and so Sam and Callen went poking around. They found out Sorensen was gagged before she was murdered. There also was no footage of the hotel corridors because they had been erased and so whoever killed her was a professional. They thought they had covered every angle and it turns out they were wrong. The bartender saw the guy.

The bartender also claims he remembers what the guy looks like. He was working with a sketch artist drawing up a description while Joelle and the guys found out that someone used the same MO to murder CIA Officer John Bradbury. He was even tortured the same. Someone was out there killing highly trained officers and it was up to the team to find this person or persons. Kensi and Deeks questioned Sorenson's boss Officer Behr.

He was asked if Sorenson was seeing anyone and he said that she was. It started about three months ago. Sorenson told him that the guy was presenting as someone who could be CIA. The guy never claimed he was CIA but Sorenson's spidey senses were telling her he was and she was out of town at the same time as Bradbury.

The team suspected the two might have worked together on the same task force. Sorenson worked in cyber-attacks and countermeasures and so she could have worked with someone in the CIA. Joelle was looking into it. Admiral Killbride was also looking into it and he found out there was a joint task force. There were also two other people working with the two murdered individuals.

Their names were former CIA Officers Paul Winters and Steven Erdnase. The two split up to track down both men and Sam and Roundtree found one man dead but the body and all the evidence when someone set off a remotely detonated bomb. The killer must have been watching the scene in order to detonate the bomb when they did.

The body they found was Winters. Whoever killed him had been hoping to murder either NCIS or CIA as well with that bomb and so Joelle agreed to stop sending reports to her bosses. Just in case there was a leak somewhere in the chain. The team also had to find Erdnase in case he was already targeting or if the bad guys were having the same problems as the team in locating him. He wasn't at his house.

They couldn't find him at a hotel and it was bugging everyone that each member of a task force had been hunted down. It made them wonder what really happened with the task force. They had been told it was cybersecurity and the truth proved to be something completely different.

The task force had hunted down a man named Aleksi Zhirkov. They kidnapped him and brought him to Poland where they tortured him for information before murdering him. Only they didn't know that Zhirkov was the illegitimate son of Yuri Kirilenko. Kirilenko saw through their lies that his son wanted to defect from Russia and he realized what really happened to his son. His son was murdered by Americans in a gruesome fashion.

It was so gruesomeness that Kirilenko was now tracking down each member of the team to murder them the same way they killed his son and the only one left was Erdnase. Erdnase bought up a bunch of land with an LLC. He didn't build a structure there. He has a mobile home instead. The team was asked to travel to the mobile home and to save the last member of the task force.

Callen and Joelle made it to Erdnase. They had him surrounded by their own people and so they questioned him about Zhirkov. Erdnase first told them it needed to know. It wasn't until he was pushed that Erdnase revealed Zhirkov was alive. His death was faked so that he could escape from under his father's thumb in Russia and the task force did such a swell job that they were being hunted for something they didn't do. Or at least that's what the team thought.

They thought this right up until Officer Behr came and he wasn't alone. He traveled with the bartender who turned out to be CIA and they were traveling with both Sorenson, Bradbury, and even Winters. The task force knew they were being targeted for murder and so they all faked their deaths and had NCIS investigate their deaths just to throw off suspicion.

And so no one was hurt over their mission with Zhirkov. Everyone was fine and the task force was running everything. NCIS being there was just dressing. The team left the Intelligence officers to themselves and Kensi and Deeks spoke about their situation. They were trying for a baby and borderline stuff wasn't helping. And so Kensi suggested adoption because they were plenty of kids out there who need parents.

And later Callen found out Joelle knew the truth about the task force the whole time but she kept it from him as she helped one of her own reached the high echelons of Russian Intelligence.

Production Code: 1218
Summary: Deeks is kidnapped by an associate of Kirkin's in need of his help and NCIS investigates the shooting of a militarized dolphin equipped with a Russian microchip. Also, Beale makes Nell an interesting offer, and Hetty returns.

Kirkin's men kidnapped Deeks. Deeks was at the beach. He was surfing and having a great time when Kirkin's men literally showed up to kidnap him. Deeks didn't think they would do that on a public beach yet that's what happened and no one cared. Kirkin's men announced they were kidnapping him for everyone to care and no one stepped up or even uttered a protest.

No one cared what happened to Deeks. Deeks was kidnapped and his team didn't know. They were back at the office cataloging Hetty's office. Hetty's former position of Operations Manager has been officially given to Nell and now Nell has to decide whether or not she wants it. She wanted to first run it by Hetty. She felt Hetty would contact her if she wanted her to take that job and so she didn't feel comfortable with accepting the promotion until after she spoke with Hetty.

This did not go over well with Admiral Killbride. He told Nell to either accept the promotion or to resign and so Nell still needed time to think. She complained about it with Callen. Callen offered to speak with Killbride and Nell turned down the offer. She didn't want Callen handling her battles.

She just wanted to voice her concerns to someone else out loud and so Callen told her the job is hers. She's been acting Operations Manager for six months. After six months, she's already the Operations Manager. Everyone feels comfortable with her in that position and no one was expecting Hetty back. Hetty was off doing her thing. She didn't get any details or forewarning. Hetty was out and Nell was in.

Nell was still contemplating what's next for herself while Deeks finally found out why he was kidnapped. It turns out Kirkin left his whole operation to Deeks and that includes the fashion thing as well as the gambling thing and the smuggling thing and money laundering thing.

Kirkin had two assistants. One wished to live up to Kirkin's dream of giving everything to Deeks and the other wished to take over the operations himself. Deeks saw the problem. He contacted Kensi and he informed both her and Nell that he had been left in charge of Kirkin's criminal enterprise in his will. The two women were doing their best to help while Sam was dealing with an issue. Sam found out that a dolphin that had been chipped by the Russians had been found dead at the beach.

Sam asked Callen if he wanted to check it out, but Callen told Sam to take Roundtree instead. Callen had talked to the admiral in spite of Nell telling him not to and he found out that people in power don't trust him. They consider him too close to the Russians. The investigation into him by the DOD had brought up a lot of bad stuff and there was still a feeling of unease regardless of him being cleared by said department.

Callen, therefore, didn't want to touch another Russian case. He passed on it and Sam and Roundtree were investigating the dolphin. They found out the dolphin had been shot. He had been murdered and they were just wondering who would kill a Russian dolphin when they heard from the Coast Guard that a Russian sailor was found adrift.

Roundtree and Sam collected this sailor. They brought him back to the boathouse to be questioned and they were going over him what he was doing out in the ocean when the team found out the second part to Deeks's news. Deeks said Kirkin had a weapons shipment that Igor One stole. Igor Two told Deeks about it and he wants Deeks to steal back the shipment and to kill Igor One.

Only Deeks is a federal agent. He couldn't take over a criminal enterprise and he was concerned about the weapons shipment. He and his team were going to find where the weapons were. They also had Fatima looking into Igor one and she had an attitude today. She wouldn't say why she had an attitude. She refused to talk about it and so no one knew her former coworker died.

Fatima kept that to herself. She also lashed out at people and so she was downright unpleasant during this time. She did however identified the two Igors. Deeks later heard from Igor Two and he informed the team and also Eric (who was back in town to speak with Nell) and Admiral Killbride. Killbride was upset with all these Russian connections. He asked if there was anyone who wasn't contacted by the Russians and only Eric raised his hand.

Which doesn't count. Eric no longer works for NCIS and he was only back in town because he received a job offer in Tokyo and he wanted Nell to go with him. She could accept the job offer of being Operations Manager for the NCIS team over there. Nell couldn't make up her mind and so she still needed time to think. And while she was thinking, Sam found out about the Russian dolphin.

The Russian dolphin was a part of a group of seven. The Russian sailor had trained the dolphins and he couldn't kill them after the program was terminated. He instead brought the dolphins to the US. Kirkin paid for the Russian military dolphins. It was his secret weapons and that's what Igor stole. Igor stole the other dolphins. Deeks's and Sam's cases were connected. They were both looking for Igor One.

Igor One stopped by the aquarium. He was probably looking for supplies because dolphin chow isn't sold in stores and thankfully was closed down for renovations and so the team didn't have to worry about civilians. And they moved to the aquarium where they found both Igors. Both Igors were detained and it turns out they released the dolphins back into the wild as Kirkin wanted all along.

As for the man who shot one of the dolphins, he did it by accident. He meant to shoot the trainer and the boat was bobbing. The shooter was pushed into the sea turtles aquarium. He thought it was sharks and so he was properly punished.

Nell later told Admiral Killbride that she didn't want Hetty's job. She realized she'd been working for NCIS for most of her adult life and she couldn't keep being in charge of the team's lives. Not when she loves them like family. Nell was going to go with Eric and she shaved his mustache.

Fatima also came clean to Roundtree that her former coworker who died had died years ago. It was the anniversary of her death and she died in a car accident that Fatima had also been in. And after that accident, Fatima gave up acting as well as everything else she deemed replaceable.

And Hetty showed up. She spoke with Nell and she gave Nell her blessing to leave the post in LA. But she also had an important conversation with Admiral Killbride.

Summary: While Callen suspects Hetty of keeping secrets about his past and Joelle surfaces in her quest to capture Katya, NCIS must track down an informant whose life is in danger. Also, Kensi and Deeks work to expand their family.

Callen broke into a locked cabinet in the archive room. It had been Hetty's and Callen had been too curious to ignore it. He turned off security cameras. He broke into the cabinet and he found something. He found a file on foster kids. The kids were put through profiling experiments and they had cognitive tests run on them.

But the most important bit was the fact Callen found a file on himself. He found out he was listed as Subject 17 and that he had been one of the kids experimented on. Callen later called Sam. He told him what he found and Sam was worried. Not about the file. He was more worried about what Callen did to get the file than he was about what's in the file and so Callen told him that he found himself listed alongside the other children. They were run through more severe cognitive tests than the admittance to the Navy. And that reminded Callen of Killbride.

Admiral Killbride once told Callen that Hetty hired Sam but she created Callen. It was the word "created" that was now sticking out to Callen and so Callen suspected he knew Hetty longer than he thought. He thought she should take an interest in him as a troubled teenager. He's now learning that she might have been spying and experimenting on him since he was seven.

Callen believes he's Subject 17. Sam however thinks it's a coincidence. He told Callen that Killbride could have simply been talking about the major role that Hetty took in Callen's life and that Subject 17 could be someone else. Sam didn't want to jump on any conspiracy. He said half the country was already doing that and that they were too smart to let it happen to them.

Anyways, a case came up. The Russian spy known as Zasha Gargarin was seen getting into a fight in a public place and in the nearby vicinity there was Joelle. Joelle was following Zasha. She had probably already collected her and was getting as much information as she could from her, but Callen knew things wouldn't end there because this was Joelle and Joelle wanted something.

She wanted revenge. Joelle was kidnapped, tortured, and permanently disfigured by former Russian spy Katya. Katya is still at large. Joelle wants revenge and the best person that could help her is now Zasha. The team wanted to find Zasha before Joelle because there's no telling what Joelle would do to her.

But as they were investigating the case, Callen kept talking to Sam. He confessed to Sam that he had to do several tests as a kid that his teacher explained was for his dyslexia and that he now remembers involved assembling a fake gun. Callen hadn't thought much of it at the time. It was only looking back as an adult that he realized how disturbed it was and so he sought out Killbride.

He showed Killbride the file on the kids. He demanded answers to his question and he wasn't going to get it. Not from Killbride. Killbride said he gave orders. He doesn't answer to them and not from Callen anyways. Killbride told Callen to go to the source. Callen went looking for Hetty and he found her burning files because she was about to go undercover again and she couldn't afford to leave certain information out.

Callen added his file to the burn stash. He had already made a copy and so he told Hetty she better get rid of every bit of evidence. Callen also demanded to know if he was Subject 17. He pushed and pushed until Hetty admitted that "yes" he was in fact the child in the file. He had been experimented on. He had been run through the tests to see if he would make a credible agent and he passed.

There's no telling what would happen if he failed. There were also no answers as to why. Callen's case took precedence and he managed to get Joelle to come to him. He threatened to talk to her family. Joelle came to the boat shed and it was confirmed that she found Zasha and kidnapped her. She was recently torturing Zasha for information on Katya when Callen called.

Joelle came to the boat shed. She demanded that Callen back off and he told her he couldn't because Zasha is their informant. He told her that she needed to hand over Zasha to them. She refused and so Callen brought out the big guns. He threatened to tell Joelle's family that she's still alive if she didn't back down. She tried to pull a gun on him.

Both Callen and Sam pulled guns on her and they reminded her that she was drawing down on federal agents. Joelle couldn't depend on the CIA. They would disavow her. She couldn't risk going to jail because then her family would find out she was alive and so the two sides were at an impasse when the internal alarms went off. Joelle had been followed. The guys grabbed Joelle's gun from her during the confusion and they fled the building by swimming out through the hatch.

Joelle never noticed the guys following her. She was too set on kidnapping Zasha and creating an international incident. The guys made her give up the location where she took Zasha. They went to the scene where they found the Russians kidnapping Zasha. They called in reinforcements and they were told by Killbride to use non-lethal measures.

So, Fatima used to shock and awe by driving Sam's car through the building and they drew their weapons on anyone left standing. Joelle was also shocked when she couldn't get away. She was captured. Callen warned her away from Zasha and he said he'd help her find Katya but not like this and he really would tell her family she's alive if she crosses the line again.

Zasha was freed. She was also burned and so now she'll be hunted for the rest of her life. Joelle got to walk away with charges. Kensi and Deeks also got a laugh before they had another conversation about adopting a child and they realized Hetty hadn't been trying to hurt them when she suggested someone else sponsor their adoption application. Hetty suggested it because she had to go.

She went to Syria on a classified mission and Callen wasn't going to let that stand. He still needed answers. He asked Zasha to go to Syria to spy on Hetty for him. He told her he would get her papers if she does this for him and ultimately she had no other option because now the Russians wanted her and they would either kill her or wait until she was back in Russia to kill her.

Summary: NCIS takes the case personally when an LAPD officer's father, a beloved elderly Japanese American veteran, is the victim of a vicious hate crime.

An Asian-American serviceman was brutally assaulted. He was at the beach minding his own business when two men in masks came up to him and started beating him up for no reason. They didn't say anything. They just started to beat him up. Lieutenant Junior Grade Craig Tanaka was hospitalized after the beat-down and his case was naturally assigned to NCIS because of Tanaka's war record.

He served in the Vietnam War. He also has a son in the police department and his training came in handy when Tanaka was being attacked because he managed to stab one of the men. He got DNA. Tanaka's case was assumed to be a hate crime because of his ethnicity and the recent increase in violent crimes against the Asian community. And so that left everyone on the team angry.

They asked themselves how could something like this happen in America. A man was fighting for his life after being assaulted for no other reason than his race and this time it was personal to the team because the man served his country. He gave the country his everything and now that country was letting him down. The team began their case by speaking with Tanaka's son. His son was a police detective and he's been on the force for fifteen years.

He knows he can't go after the men who did this to his father. The only thing he can do is give his thoughts on the matter. He thinks the attack on his father was racially-motivated. He said there was no other reason to attack his father and so the team looked for evidence of this.

They found out that Tanaka has been dedicating his time by volunteering. He volunteers at old WWII naval ships and his CO said Tanaka was a great guy. He was a wealth of knowledge about the era. Tanaka was also working as a carpenter with a construction company. They said that lately he has been working at one place and that the place was attacked last week when someone threw a brick through the window.

It was a restaurant. Tanaka has been working there for two weeks building cabinetry and both Callen and Sam noticed that someone tried painting a wall over. They figured whoever broke in might have also vandalized the place. They did a deep search to see what was under the paint and under it were the words "Go Home Japs". Tanaka apparently never reported it to the restaurant owners.

Tanaka hadn't wanted to hurt them. He just painted over it and was going to ignore it when the assault happened. The team figured the assault might have been an escalation when Tanaka ignored them. The spray paint used in the vandalism was picked up by a local homeless man and he happily gave it to NCIS after he heard about what happened to Tanaka. The team ran prints on the spray can. It led back to Jason Quinn.

Quinn was roommates to a guy named Strauss and Strauss's family owned the diner that Tanaka is helping to renovate. The Strauss family lost their property. It was sold to the family that hired Tanaka and so they saw Tanaka renovating the place and assumed he was the new buyer. And not just some guy doing a job.

Strauss and his buddy Quinn probably followed Tanaka from the restaurant in order for the police not to connect them to the crime. Or at least that's what the team was thinking. They looked for Quinn and he tried to run but they captured him. He denied the attack on Tanaka. He also said he wasn't there during the beatdown. It was all Strauss and Strauss bragged about beating up the old man.

Quinn also tried to claim it was just Strauss who wrote the racial slurs only that one was iffy. Quinn didn't know it was two people that beat up Tanaka and he denied any part in it. The team looked for Strauss and they couldn't find him. He had been grabbed a police officer. He had been on the phone with Quinn when a police detective came in and started to beat him.

Everyone knew the detective was Tanaka's son Detective Jack Tanaka. Tanaka made it through his surgery and still hasn't woken up and there's a chance he might never wake up again. His son must have gotten angry about it. He must have checked in on NCIS's investigation and beat them to Strauss. The team even knows how he did it. They know he checked on the results of their fingerprint search on spray can and that he accessed those files using a detective friend. Jack has probably already lost his career. The team didn't want him doing something he couldn't walk back and so they asked the other detective who helped him and they tracked down Jack to an auto body shop.

The team arrested Jack. They also rescued Strauss and his father. Both father and son were racists. They attacked Tanaka together and so they got arrested together.

Later, it was revealed that Jack uploaded video of the beatdown he gave the two racists and so he hoped it served as a warning to anyone willing to take another Asian in the country. He wanted to tell those people thinking about it that there would be consequences for them.

Production Code: 1303
Summary: Sam and Kilbride clash when a case involving an arms dealer responsible for the slaughter of ATF agents leads them to a well-connected General and friend of Kilbride, accused of supplying militia groups with guns. Also, Kensi and Fatima go undercover at a rehab facility to question the arms dealer's girlfriend.

A group of federal agents were killed. The group were a bunch ATF Special Agents investigating German arms dealers and they had an agent on the inside when something went wrong. The inside agent was tortured to death. The agents listening in went running to the rescue and they were all killed. The only ones to survive were both Sam and Callen. They were helping with the case because the ATF agents involved had been friends and so their deaths were personal for the team. They wanted revenge yet they called it justice. The arms dealer they had been investigating was named Lukas Meyer. His girlfriend was Mia Han and another associate was a man in the military who was known to Killbride.

The man was General Collins. He was a friend of Admiral Killbride and there were political repercussions to talking to him. Collins has important friends. His friend the Governor of Arizona had called Killbride when he heard he was going to speak to Collins and he informed Killbride that Collins planned on running for a senate seat.

The governor didn't want the team ruining the general's chances at a senate seat. Admiral Killbride had promised to tread with care, but he couldn't say the same for Sam. Sam wanted justice for his friends and so he didn't care about politics. He just wanted the guilty to be punished. He also didn't care about Collin's rank. He saw him as instantly guilty the moment he heard that Collins was buying illegal guns from Meyer.

Collins had purchased over two hundred semi-automatics for "patriots". Those same patriots were guarding the border out of their own pockets and now Collins wanted to give them weapons.

They were a militia. A potentially dangerous militia. What's to stop them from killing immigrants in the name of "patriotism" and so Sam wanted to arrest the general. The guy could be arming people for another attack on the capital for all they knew.

Sam wanted to do something and it was Killbride who talked him down. Killbride said they had to handle the case with care. Sam suspected he wouldn't be feeling that way if Collins hadn't been a friend and so he decided to test Killbride. He wanted to see what lengths Killbride would go to protect his friend.

Sam spoke to Deeks about it. They agreed to push Killbride into a corner to see how he responds and in the meantime they kept tabs on the general. Collins later met with Devon Walker. He's a leader of a local militia group and it hadn't looked like Collins was giving him bad news.

If anything, Walker was smiling and the two of them were laughing together. Like Walker suspected he was still going to get the guns. The team began believing that Collins was still going to try to illegally purchase the weapons and the best person to know about it would be the girlfriend. Han was more prisoner than girlfriend. She was in a rehabilitation center trying to get clean and she opened up to Kensi who also posed as an addict.

Kensi offered to be a friend. She found out that Han originally wanted to be a model and that her boyfriend branded her with a scar to keep her from pursuing her dream. He then forced her into becoming his accountant. He made her use her qualifications to do his books and so she knows where the bodies are buried. He was never going to allow her to walk away with that information.

Kensi got close to her by "rescuing" her from Fatima who also posed as an addict. Kensi then offered to kill Meyer for Han. Han agreed to it. She gave Kensi the address to find Meyer. She also said when Meyer was going to pass out drunk that night. Han gave Kensi money to carry out the job and she also ran off to make sure she was as far away as possible when the time was supposed to come.

Han and Kensi had really bonded. Kensi had truly been sad when she said goodbye to Han and she wanted to deliver on her promise. She wanted to free Han of Meyer. Only she went to the address and it had been the wrong one. Meyer hadn't been there. Han had no reason to lie to Kensi and so they didn't know how Meyer escaped the noose. Or at least that's what they thought at first.

Meyer was later found dead of an oxy overdose and Kensi knew it was Han. Han killed her boyfriend herself. Kensi gave the idea and she followed through on it. Han has also since disappeared. She was in the wind and the team didn't want to look for her. They understood why she killed Meyer. They also couldn't prove for sure that she had murdered him and so she gets to walk away scott free. And the good news kept coming.

Collins had lied to the team. He had already purchased the illegal weapons and he was trying to hand it over to the militia when he was arrested. He was arrested by Killbride. Killbride suspected Collins had been lying about the buy. He had him followed the same time that Sam and the others were following him. And so ATF were later able to arrest both him and the militia he was working with.

This was the end of Collins's career and it could also mean the end of Killbride's time at NCIS.

Callen and Kensi are in a high speed chase in a hearse when they are forced to stop. Several men with guns get out, circling around the hearse.

8 Hours Earlier — Sam works out before heading to meet Callen in D.C. Meanwhile, Callen tracks down a woman named Angela. He needs to know about an ex of her's, Kate Miller. Kensi and Deeks squabble over him butting into other people's business.

Angela finally stops and talks to Callan. Her ex was toxic and she finally got free. Callan tells her that Kate is not who she says. She is a Russian National named Katya who did time in prison. Callan needs to find her. Angela doesn't want to help.

Kilbride finds Fatima calling about apartments at work. He needs her to focus on their new case involving missing weapons they have taken over from the ATF. A prime suspect was located by the ATF but he has since been found dead. They video with Sam and Devin. They need to locate their new target after a man named Sivac was found dead prior to getting the truck.

Deeks locates the target's step mother. She was estranged from him, she shares. Meanwhile, Callen and Kensi head to the morgue and take a look at what was left behind by the dead involved in the case. One of their victims has ink on their wrist. They need to figure out what it is to figure out what lead to his death.

Sam and Devin visit a man who drove the weapons truck. He tries to run. He tells them he has PTSD. After they cuff him he admits to turning a blind eye to a man taking the weapons after their initial thief didn't call. Fatima locates a stamp that matches their vic's. He was at a night club before his death. Soon enough they have camera footage from the club. They see his step mom was their. She tells Deeks she was trying to talk him out of the weapons sale.

Sam and Devin track down the man who called their trucker after Sivac died. Meanwhile, Callen speaks with Sivac's step mom. She brings him to Sivac's funeral. Deeks and Kensi are working undercover their. They learn Sivac has a step brother and he most likely killed him for the guns. He sees Deeks and Kensi and knows. It seems his step mom tipped him off. He runs.

Callen and Kensi end up on a high speed chase in a hearse. Sam and Devin locate the warehouse with the guns. They fight two men guarding them. Meanwhile, Deeks pops up in the back of the hearse. They didn't know he was there. He jokes he was trying to mind his own business.

The trio take out the bad guys. They take out the bad guys. The case is closed. Back at the office, Kilbride helps Fatima get an apartment. Just before they call it a day, Fatima finds some bank account evidence.

The step mom appears to have had Sivac murdered. They pull her in. Deeks questions it. She doesn't feel bad. She wanted her money. Later, Callen sees Angela again. She wants to help. She gives him a key to a safe deposit box belonging to Katya.

Production Code: 1305
Summary: When an NCIS mission to protect a compromised undercover agent goes completely sideways, the agents are individually interrogated to find out what really happened. Also, Kilbride must make a difficult decision.

An undercover agent was compromised. Her cover was blown. Laura Song has spent years gathering information on the Chinese Navy and she was a great agent. But someone somehow blew her cover. The Chinese now knew she was spying on them this whole time and they were going to want revenge.

NCIS was being asked to step in to protect her. Her and her family. Song has a teenage daughter in high school and so some of the agents went to pick her up while others secured Song. She was taken to a safehouse. The safehouse was secured by every mean necessary. The team even went above and beyond to protect her and so it was a shock when the Chinese managed to kill her.

Song was taken to an undisclosed safehouse. It was a penthouse apartment in Downtown LA. NCIS ran ops from that building so they didn't have to use their regular computers and the agents did everything. They safeguarded the building before she arrived. They did so when she arrived.

They also repeated it a third time after her daughter was safely guarded. Song also felt comfortable at the penthouse and she began drinking. She told them that she was born in China. Her father is Chinese and her mother is American. Her mother moved the family back to the US after the father died and Song hated it at first. The only thing she likes was watching the ships come in. Its what interested her in the Navy.

Song wanted to be on a ship. But Killbride had other ideas. He used her history to help enlist her in spying on the Chinese and she happily did so to serve her country. Killbride and Song are friends. She calls him by his first name. She also seemed to know Hetty. She was able to determine that Hetty had something to do with the safehouse by just looking at it and so that too spoke of a history.

Not that Sam or Callen knew what that history was. They just knew they were supposed to protect her and they failed at that job. They were ambushed. Song kept asking for a weapon that they didn't give her and she refused to follow orders. She wouldn't stay put. She wouldn't go into the saferoom. Song was unpredictable.

The Chinese were able to knock out Callen with a grenade. They were able to make it pass Sam and neither Roundtree or Fatima were in sight. They made it into the penthouse. Song was killed. Only the saga didn't end there. The team later had to answer the tough questions when they were asked about how a protected agent died in their custody and so they were all interrogated.

They were all asked how Song died on their watch. Several members of the team suffered from injuries and the full story came out during their interviews. Callen was the first to fall. Then Sam. Fatima and Roundtree made it to Song and Fatima was shot in the leg. They tried escaping through an elevator shaft when Song chose to sacrifice herself.

The team doesn't know why she did that. She could have done it to save everyone. She might have figured that if she handed herself over that the others would survive and they did. But Song died on their watch. The team was going to catch flak from that and even Kensi and Deeks had to answer questions and they weren't even there. They were with Song's daughter Lily. Lily spoke with her mother on the phone and she started to cry.

Lily was crying because she hadn't wanted to lose her mother, too. Her father died when she was eleven and she didn't want to lose her sole parent. Lily mentioned how Song took the death of her husband and how she was able to find solace in going back to work.

Deeks didn't think he could do it. He didn't think he could remain operational if something happened to Kensi and he was alone with a child. Deeks actually gained a newfound respect for Sam and he was calling him to tell him that when he lost contact. It was this loss of contact that first alerted them to the problems occurring with Song's detail. Kensi went over there to check if everything was alright and she found Song dead on the floor.

She called it in. It was reported and agents came in to check everyone out. But Killbride arrived before Kensi did and he quickly left. He hadn't wanted to be at the scene when agents swooped in and so he admitted to the interrogator in charge of his interview that he did stop by. He claimed he shot Song.

Killbride told the interrogator that Song had turned. She was working for the Chinese and he found out. He showed up at the safehouse to check on her. He spotted her leaving with the Chinese and even berating them for not being able to kill four agents. Killbride killed her and her remaining men.

He reported it to his bosses. They were the ones who decided to cover up what happened and so the real story was being hidden. The cover story was being sold. The whole world believes Song died a hero. They didn't know she was a traitor or that she had been killed for treason.

Killbride could only tell people in the know and so the team all believed that Song died on their watch. They beat themselves up over it. And Killbride just watched it happen.

Summary: Sam negotiates and Rountree goes undercover, when a man takes a busload of hostages and threatens to blow it up unless his daughter's war crimes are posthumously cleared.

A grieving father took several hostages on a bus. He threatened to kill them all with a hidden explosive device if the federal government didn't open an investigation into his daughter's death and his reasoning is that someone killed his daughter. His daughter was Marine Corporal Kiera DeMayo. She died a few weeks ago. It was suspected suicide and everyone believed the reason she did it was because she was dishonorably discharged from the Marines.

She supposedly fell asleep while on duty. She and several others were injured when the Taliban attacked their base. They later tested Kiera. They found narcotics in her system and so she was kicked out of the military. But Kiera told her father that someone set her up. She was apparently looking into it when she died from alleged suicide and now her father wants justice.

Or what he believes is justice. Gary DeMayo wanted them to open an investigation into his daughter's death as well as whoever framed her for what happened overseas. His daughter had no history of drug use. She was also forbidden from handling any firearms when she came back and so that's why her father was stumped. His daughter couldn't get a weapon legally. How then did she shoot herself with a gun?

DeMayo was demanding justice and NCIS were called. No one wanted the hostage situation to get out of control and there was already one injured party on the bus. DeMayo shot an off-duty cop who tried to take his gun and so he's proven he's willing to be violent. And no one wanted him to hurt anyone else.

DeMayo's demands also never wavered. Kiera was his only child and he was separated from his wife. They got a separation after their daughter died because they just couldn't handle it together as a couple. But his wife did mention that their daughter doesn't remember what happened before she fell asleep. She was seeing a therapist before she died and she was told to write down everything she remembers in a journal.

Her mother still has that journal. She hasn't read it. She was afraid of what it may say because she thought it would prove Kiera really did take drugs and so NCIS collected it. They also spoke with DeMayo. Sam tried to reach him as someone who's also lost a loved one and it wasn't working because DeMayo wanted to get his daughter's story out there.

So, Sam came up with an idea. Sam told Roundtree that he was sending him in a false journalist and that he was going to pretend to interview DeMayo about his daughter and Fatima had even planted fake stories to let DeMayo think Roundtree was legit.

The team was doing this as they actually looked into DeMayo's claims. They found out that his daughter Kiera was in contact with someone named Lawrence Kerr and that Kerr was overseas serving as a private contractor the same time as she was. This proved that Kiera was investigating what happened during her last deployment. The team continued to look into this and Roundtree tried to get close enough to the bomb to disarm it, but DeMayo saw that the cops were getting too close and turned around fast enough to catch Roundtree in the act.

DeMayo asked Roundtree to explain himself. He claimed that he just wanted to verify there was a bomb for his story and so DeMayo told him to sit back down. He then told the cops to back away. He didn't want them getting any closer and Roundtree wrote in the window what kind of bomb it was. Sam therefore found out the bomb is very real.

It's also really dangerous because it's the reason why airplanes don't allow liquids onboard anymore and unfortunately they had bad news for DeMayo. The team found out that Kiera really did buy the gun from a pawn shop. They had evidence and so that confirmed she killed herself. Sam told DeMayo. He didn't take it well. He ordered everyone off the bus and Roundtree refused to leave without him.

Roundtree knew DeMayo wanted to kill himself. He stayed behind to convince him differently when someone began taking sniper shots at them and it wasn't LAPD. It was actually someone who worked with Kiera. It turns out that DeMayo was right about his daughter.

She doesn't take drugs. She was drugged because some of the private contractors wanted to steal weapons and pretend it was the insurgents. The guy who drugged Kiera must not have done a great job because she woke up. She woke up and saw them trying to steal the weapons and she began firing. Kiera tried to do her job in spite of the state she was in. And so when she began remembering, she went looking for answers and she was stonewalled.

Kiera tried to get justice for herself. But she failed and so she killed herself. Meanwhile the person responsible for her death saw the news about her father. He saw that DeMayo was bringing attention to what happened to Kiera. He then went to the hostage scene and tried to shoot DeMayo. But Sam and Roundtree got him safely off the bus. Callen also went on to arrest their sniper. They proved that Kiera was drugged and framed. Sam gave the news to DeMayo and it was a consolation. He now knows that his daughter was pushed into killing herself by others.

Kensi and Deeks in the meantime began attending a seminar for adoptive parents and it was hard, but it made them realize they were open to fostering a child.

Production Code: 1307
Summary: NCIS investigates the apparent suicide of a Navy intelligence officer who leapt to his death after taking LSD. Also, while Kensi is away, Deeks makes plans to redo the backyard without her input.

Kensi is away. She's in Mexico. She needed the time away and so she warned her husband not to change a single thing while she was gone. He promised her he wouldn't. He then literally started making plans to break that promise right after speaking to her on the phone. Deeks wants to redecorate the backyard and his team warned him that his wife would kill him if she found he renovated without her. But Deeks was saved from poor decision-making when the team caught a case. They were investigating the apparent suicide of Naval Intelligence Officer Adrian Vargas. He jumped off the balcony of his high rise after taking LSD and the reason it's a case is because of the drugs.

NCIS had another case involving a high-ranking naval officer taking drugs. They arrested him but he never gave up his supplier and that's who the team wanted. They wanted to arrest the drug dealer to military officials. They were so many in the military that was struggling as it is and they couldn't be on drugs as well. It was a threat to national security. Vargas's former bunkmate got arrested for drugs. He wasn't talking about his supplier to anyone and so Sam and Callen decided to give it a shot themselves. They brought in Petty Officer Renfro. They leaned on him and he spilled.

Renfro admitted to micro-dosing. He and a couple of others were taking LSD to help them focus on the job and stay awake. They weren't just using to get high. Renfro said it was suggested to him to try LSD. He doesn't remember who said it. It could have come from anywhere. The same could be said about the drugs itself. Renfro doesn't know where the drugs came from because he didn't reach out to any single person for the drugs. Neither Sam nor Callen understood at first, but luckily that's where Deeks and Roundtree come through.

Deeks and Roundtree checked out Vargas's apartment. They found his laptop and his gaming system. He was a serious gamer. It seems he was using that along with message boards to try and get help for PTSD. Vargas wasn't a known drug user. He didn't seek out drugs or visited any of the local dealers. The agents met with Vargas's boyfriend. He lived in the same building and he said that Vargas was struggling. He suffered PTSD after he was onboard of a ship that caught fire. Several naval officers were killed in the fire and Vargas never truly recovered.

The Navy also didn't take his concerns seriously. They merely transferred to a new ship. Vargas struggled for years and it was only recently that his bosses finally acknowledged the problem. Deeks and Roundtree figured that's why Vargas took the drugs. But the boyfriend said Vargas never touched drugs. Vargas grew up with a drug addict for a father and he would never touch drugs. He didn't even drink. Renfro confirmed this. He said Vargas didn't try to contact him for drugs and technically he was a source on the ship. Renfro received a mysterious package one day that held drugs.

There were even notes inside on how to take just enough of it to stay in the zone. Renfro later told people about it and they gave him money for drugs. Money that he put under his pillow and would later find gone but with drugs there instead. Renfro never made a profit for helping anyone with the drugs. He never knew who he was dealing with. He just knew one day the drugs were just there. Renfro was no help on figuring out the supplier. Vargas's boyfriend blames the Navy for Vargas's death and so the team turned to a person that Vargas used for spiritual enlightenment. They turned to his guru.

The guru wasn't much help. He had an alibi for the time of death. He also doesn't know where to score drugs much less supply them and the team weren't getting anywhere else with people that knew Vargas. They spoke to his therapist. She had two sessions with Vargas. She said she had never seen anyone that troubled in fifty years of doing this and so Dr. Bernhard did tell Vargas about an experimental therapy involving LSD. There was a waiting list for this particular therapy and she didn't think that Vargas would then try to circumvent the long line by buying the drugs himself and taking it in an uncontrolled environment.

The team later looked into everyone with access to the ship that had increased in funding. They found Randall Davis. He's runs a printer repair shop and it was a front. He was secretly cooking the LSD right in the shop. He was also selling it. Davis tried to fight back when they arrested him but they got him in the end and he was brought in. Along with his records. He never sold to Vargas. He sold to Bernhard. The therapist was the one who gave Vargas the drugs and she later admitted it. She also confessed that she thought it would help him with his symptoms. And now he's dead.

Bernhard was arrested for the part she played in that death.

Deeks soon realized that he shouldn't surprise his wife and so he told her about it and she made suggestions.

And later Admiral Kilbride talked to Fatima about her own PTSD since she was injured on the job.

Summary: The NCIS team scrambles to find Kensi, when she is attacked and kidnapped by a mysterious militia group while helping a group of migrants cross the border.

Kensi was in trouble. She failed to check in with her husband Deeks. She has to check in with him on a set time or else it meant she was in trouble. It also meant her case took a turn. Kensi was investigating a serviceman. His name and rank is Marine Lance Corporal Benjamin Gomez. It was suspected that he was helping his cousin Raul Fuentes in a human smuggling operation and Kensi went looking for evidence and she disappeared around the same time that Fuentes's signature was used to kill a bunch of migrants crossing over into the United States. Admiral Kilbride was alerted once Fuentes's signature was spotted. He knew that it might affect Kensi and he reached out to her, but failed to make contact and so he spoke to Deeks. And Deeks also mentioned the missing check-in.

One of those things by themselves could be ignored. Both of those things together spelled out trouble for Kensi and so the team was brought into the investigation. Kilbride added Special Agent Aliyah DeLeon to the mix. They were short-handed with Kensi being gone, Callen off on his own, and Roundtree being off-screen. Aliyah turned out to be an old friend of Sam's. He vouched for her with the team. It also didn't hurt that Aliyah knew how to handle herself. She and Fatima went to question Gomez. They got a warrant to search his house and everything. Gomez tried to run when the feds knocked at his door and the ladies pursued him.

They were able to bring him down by working together. They detained him as they waited for backup to help secure the scene and they were actually on a phone call with the admiral to update him when they heard a sound from the shed. They asked Gomez what the sound was from. He claimed to have no knowledge of a sound much less know what it is and so the agents went there by announcing themselves as federal agents. They ended up finding a bunch of undocumented people who had been locked in the shed. It was clear they were being held against their will and still those people refused to talk.

They didn't want to get sent back. But there was one woman. She recognized the photo of Kensi that was being showed around and she said that she was more afraid of the Americans than she was of the cartel. This woman apparently mentioned that they were "hunting" parties. A group of American soldiers will kill migrants rather than turn over to authorities and deport them. This woman told Fatima everything. She then passed on the message to both Deeks and Sam. They were using air support to look for Kensi and they were told about the hunting parties. It could be rednecks looking to fake authority they don't have.

It could be rogue border agents. It also could also be Gomez's fellow marines and so the agents questioned him. They even offered him a deal in exchange for ratting on his cousin. Gomez admitted to everything and he mentioned the group that Kensi was traveling with hadn't showed up. When the migrants don't do that, they were either taken or killed. This was passed onto Deeks and Sam and thankfully found a message left by Kensi. She left a small fire with her knife by it. She also wrote "11 Militia". It was a rogue band of pretend servicemen and women. They thought they were saving the country by keeping out the drug smugglers and they failed to realize the people weren't smugglers.

Most of the people they killed were innocent in all but one regard. They were crossing into the country because they were more terrified by what they were fleeing than they were by what they were facing in America and so this militia did nothing to solve the epidemic. They just killed people for some jumped up excuse. These people managed to find Kensi. She was trying to run away from them with an injured migrant teenager and so the teenager was the reason why she was caught by the militia. They also didn't believe Kensi after she identified herself as a federal agent. They said she was helping people cross over and that she was guilty of treason.

The punishment for treason was death. The person leading the militia wanted to kill both women and one guy spoke against it and was killed by the others. But they were just about to kill Kensi and Rosa when Sam and Deeks came in. They identified themselves as federal agents. The militia tried shooting at them in order to avoid the arrest. Sam and Deeks got the better of them and were able to overpower them. They got the bad guys. They also rescued Kensi and Rosa. The team did good in spite of being short-staffed and Fatima had proved she could still do her job, but later she had needed time to herself because she wasn't quite over being shot on the job.

Kilbride spoke with Fatima. He reassured her that needing more time doesn't mean she's any less of an agent than the others and that she didn't need to rush back into things. She can take time off from being in the field.

Kensi meanwhile went home and she didn't give up on Rosa. The authorities were going to look for Rosa's family and, if no one could be found, she'd go into foster care.

Production Code: 1309
Summary: The NCIS team helps a U.S. ambassador search for her missing daughter, Gia, a popular social media influencer. Also, Agent Aliyah De León returns to support the team with the case.

A social media influencer was abducted in broad daylight. The influencer's name is Gia Michele. She was the daughter of Linda Burke and Burke was the American ambassador to Lebanon. Her mother set up the red flag when her daughter failed to appear or post anything in hours. The State Department got involved. They turned to Kilbride's team to locate her. At the time, no one knew about the kidnapping. They just knew she was missing. The team checked her last post that seemed like she had gotten into an accident and so they checked the hospitals. They also talked to people who worked for her. They found out Gia doesn't have a driver's license. She has a driver for that and she poses with cars just for the photo. And not because she's going to use them.

They also learned that Gia recently got a scooter. She was driving that around when she got into her accident and the "accident" was in fact the kidnapping. The team hadn't known anything until someone posted on Gia's social media a ransom demand. It was a video of Gia saying that she had been kidnapped and that her kidnappers were demanding ten million dollars in bitcoin for her safe release. Of course, some thought it could be a hoax. It would be damaging to Gia's mother if it was and at the same time they had to operate as if it wasn't. They had to find Gia. There were several problems with doing that.

One of the problems is that Gia has a lot of enemies. There were plenty of people who hated her online because of who she is and the fact that she's making millions. There were some who claimed that Gia was stealing content from them. Thereby implying that any endorsements she gets should have been rightfully theirs. They were also people that were just sick enough to start an online campaign the moment they saw the ransom video to raise enough money to convince her captors to kill her. The team found out about it after it happened and they couldn't technically stop it. If they did, others would crop up in place.

The campaign in favor of Gia's execution was quickly gaining steam. It was getting more money faster than the one to save her. It was started on the dark web by a bunch of incels and those are the guys who felt women weren't having sex with them because there's something wrong with beautiful women and not with them. Their online campaign was also in bitcoin. Bitcoin is hard to track until someone tries to convert it into real money. By then, however, it would be too late to save Gia. There's no telling if her kidnapper will release her the moment they get the money. They could always kill her anyways and so finding her was important.

Sam and Callen looked at Gia's biggest "fan" because trolls are sometimes the biggest fans than actual fans. They found Jaxon King and he tried to run when they confronted him. They had to chase after him and they brought Jaxon in for questioning. Jaxon claimed to have no part in Gia's kidnapping. He was just a hater. He was fine with doing it online as long as he could keep it online. He was an incel. They questioned him about another incel that popped up in the investigation. Someone by the name of Last Gentleman. He was another man who felt rejected by women and he's been stalking several female celebrities.

His real name is Curtis Jenkins. Kensi and Deeks went home because the paparazzi's last photos of Gia had him in them and so they hoped to find her stashed at his house. Only he wasn't there. Jenkins lives with his mother. His mother found a note in his room addressed to her in which he says goodbye and admits he kidnapped Gia. The two agents found the note around the same time that the campaign to kill her more than the ten million to save her. It was actually going over the limit as they were talking to his mom, but they got enough information from her to locate Curtis and they later got to Gia before she could be killed.

They prevented Curtis from killing her by taking away his internet. He didn't want to kill her without an audience and so that forced him outside to try and get reception and that's when the team made their move. They got Gia away from him. They even talked Curtis down before he could kill himself as he wanted.

But the theory is that it won't take Gia long before she returns to the internet.

Production Code: 1310
Summary: When a civilian scientist working with the marines is killed and her advanced radar technology stolen, the team must scramble to find the missing technology and the culprit.

The episode begins with Deeks who was selling his bar. It was a decision he made with his wife. It had been a cash drain. It went under the pandemic and the only reason it didn't wipe out their savings is the fact they both have second jobs. The couple also needed the resources if they were going to become parents. They couldn't keep wasting it on a cash drain and so Deeks has to tell Callen about the sale. Callen lives in the apartment above the bar. Once Deeks sold the place, Callen will have to move. Callen should start looking for new places now rather than later and that meant Deeks has to tell him his news. He couldn't leave it to the last minute. He also couldn't let someone buy a bar when there's already a tenant.

It's not like Callen is paying a lot of rent. The new owner could raise the rent on him for the fair value of the property and anyways Callen will still have to look for a new place if he doesn't like the rent hike or if he doesn't even like the new buyer. Either way, Deeks needed to man up to tell Callen about the sale. His wife was putting pressure on him to do it and he was grateful when they caught a case because it helped put off the inevitable. The case they were working on was a murder investigation. The murder of Dr. Laura Nash was considered high security because she was leading a team of engineers to develop short-range radar for the Navy.

Nash was murdered at the warehouse where she worked. The technology which she was working on was also missing and it could lead to something quite dangerous in the wrong hands. Nash technically could have handed it over to the proper authorities weeks ago, but she was so focused on working out all the bugs that she held onto it a little too long and someone capitalized on it by stealing it from her. Nash was a perfectionist. The group of Marines she worked with had all respected her. They just didn't like her. The more liked her right-hand man Petty Officer Kevin Tyler.

Tyler went missing a day after the murder. He even missed work and that was the first time he missed it in five years. His behavior was highly suspicious. The team went to his home to find out what happened and they found it ransacked. There was no sign of Tyler. It was believed at first that maybe he was kidnapped. Only kidnappers don't usually allow people to pack up their clothes. Tyler had packed before he left and he had a gang-affiliated tattoo in a picture frame at his home. The tattoo could be traced back to White Knights. They were the gang in Tyler's hometown in Venice.

The team thought at first maybe Tyler killed his mentor to steal the tech to get it back to the White Knights, but then they questioned why any low-level gang would risk so much. The tech that was stolen was one of one. It was going to be flagged for potential terrorism if it went missing and so the team came up with a different theory. They came to suspect that a foreign spy could have stolen the tech. Either Russia or China could have stolen it or paid Tyler to get it for them. Fatima was asked to track the spies with flights out of town. She found one woman who's been to several cities in a matter of months and so the suspected spy was brought to the boat shed.

She was questioned. She gave them a false story about being a supposed librarian at first. She also refuses to turn her back on China, but she was willing to admit that she bought the radar tech from Tyler and another man. She gave them two million dollars for the tech. She also had to give them some Devil's wraith. Which is an untraceable explosive that China developed. It turns out Tyler really was working with the White Knights and they planned on committing terrorism. The team later learned they planned on bombing a scholarship ceremony at the local community center. The scholarships were going to smart kids from immigrant families and it was happening in the White Knights' backyard in Venice.

The whole team drove out there. Sam and Callen were looking for their terrorists in the nearby area. Someplace that was close enough to detonate the stuff and far away enough to be safe. Sam and Callen found their culprits. It led to a shootout. They were forced to kill members of the White Knights. Not that it was much hardship and so they stopped the bombing from ever happening. Deeks and Kensi had evacuated everyone from the community center while the shootout happened and they met some good people while doing their jobs.

And after surviving another day on the job, Deeks came clean to Callen and Callen wasn't upset. Callen was actually glad that Deeks and Kensi weren't wasting money on that drain.

But Callen's voice and face have been stolen by someone operating a computer program that allows them to impersonate him to the point they met with his doctor on a video call.

Production Code: 1311
Summary: When a newborn child is found abandoned on a Navy ship, Kensi and Deeks search for the mother on board before she dies of complications. Also, Nate meets with Admiral Kilbride and learns about the CIA project from the '70s and '80s involving children.

A newborn was found upon an aircraft carrier. The baby had been abandoned. Its mother was unknown. The poor baby was found swaddled in a Navy uniform and while the umbilical cord had been cleanly cut as well as tied — there was no placenta.

There's a chance the placenta could have been disposed of or thrown overboard. But there was also a chance that the mother retained the placenta. She would be at risk of hemorrhaging and sepsis if she did. It was imperative that the mother was found. The onboard doctors had checked out the baby. The baby was a premie. It had to be conceived after they left the port because they been at sea for almost a year. And whoever the mother is, she tried to hide the labor.

The baby was abandoned in a holding area that isn't used. It was more or less abandoned. The mother probably gave birth there and no placenta or signs of it were found in the area. NCIS were called in to help find the mother before it was too late. They had twenty-four hours to do so or there was a chance that a woman will die.

But finding the mother was difficult. Kensi and Deeks were sent to the ship and that's where they learned how the Chief Officer wanted this kept on the quiet. The people that found the baby were told to keep it quiet. They were given direct orders not to talk and them being good soldiers meant that it never got out. And there was no rumor mill.

There were no chances of finding the baby's mother through a dead rumor mill. They instead had to find other means. They talked to the owner of the uniform used to swaddle the baby. Petty Officer Forest claimed to have no knowledge of the baby. He said he didn't lend his uniform out to anyone.

He doesn't know how it became involved and he has a girlfriend back home. The team wasn't sure to believe him or not, but they found all that he could from him and the baby was no lead on its own. The baby appeared to be white or at least light-skinned. This could mean anything with the mother because some babies don't take after the mother.

Only Kensi realized that the mother wanted the baby to be found. The only reason the baby was found at all is because someone left the lights on in the holding area and that got the security team to check it out on their rounds. The baby also wasn't smothered or thrown overboard.

The umbilical cord was handled nicely. It's clear that the mother seemed to care about her baby and that she just wanted to hide her part. The team learned that the mother was A positive. It meant she could be one of over a hundred women onboard. Kensi and Deeks kept looking for the mother, but they weren't getting much help.

The most the ship's chief could do was order that everyone woman matching the criteria come in to have their temperatures read. If the mother hadn't gotten rid of the placenta, she would be running a temperature. Which is why the Chief asked the women to come in group to get their read.

It was a long process that Deeks and Kensi didn't have time for and so they went to search their "crime scene" of any possible clues. They were just saying to themselves that down there was so dark and quiet that it was easy to hide a labor down there when they came across a woman passed out. They picked her. They brought her to the ship's doctor. And she was the mother.

The mother's name is Petty Officer Sofia Addison. She needed medical attention. She was being treated as Kensi and Deeks continued to look for the baby's father. Back home, Callen wasn't working the case. He was doing something else. He was trying to track down Hetty and his informant Zasha wasn't much help in that regard. It was her job to follow Hetty. She even flew to Syria where Hetty held a meeting with a known terrorist group for the Americans. But a drone strike killed the people she was talking to. It also resulted in Hetty going to ground. Her people didn't know where she was and Callen actually managed to get into contact with them.

Callen spoke to Keane. Keane was in charge of Hetty's security overseas and he said that Hetty was meeting with the terrorists in order to gain the release of two American journalists. The journalists were actually NCIS Agents. Keane doesn't know what happened after the drone strike because he almost got caught up in the blast, but Hetty was still out there and the woman was indeed hard to kill. Callen kept looking for her. He has questions about the program he was in. The one that Hetty put him in as a child. Callen was still looking when he got pulled into the baby's case. He and Roundtree who recently came back had gone to arrest the baby's father.

The father was identified as Gary Drummond. He was a private contractor who visited the boat and he raped Addison. The baby was evidence of this. The team later arrested him for rape and both mother and baby were transported to a hospital. Addison was going to keep her baby. She does love her. And that's in spite of everything.

Callen's search into Hetty meanwhile hadn't gone unnoticed. Admiral Killbride was also looking for Hetty and he was worried about Callen's knowledge of the program he was in.

And once again, someone managed to impersonate Callen.

Bauersfeld (NRO Agent Mark Rexingham), Duncan Campbell (NCIS Special Agent Castor)
Production Code: 1312
Summary: The NCIS team investigates an unidentified aircraft that flies into U.S. airspace and crashes into a Navy plane. Also, Deeks and Kensi begin to prepare for their foster inspection.

Kensi and Deeks were preparing for an inspection from a social worker and the inspection will determine if their home is safe for future foster children. But Deeks too it to mean if their house was fun. He got a bunch of games he played as a kid. Games that were woefully out of date for modern kids.

It was a waste of money and it got them overly familiar with their delivery-man. Kensi tried telling Deeks as much when Roundtree came in. Roundtree was supposed to have deliver news about the case only he saw the toys first and he started playing with them.

Sam and Callen were also busy. They were training for a triathlon. Sam signed up for it because he loves these types of things and he somehow managed to talk Callen into it as well. Callen tried to back up, but Sam wasn't having it and they were interrupted by once again this case. An unidentified aircraft was spotted in US airspace and it threatened US Navy vessel.

It even managed to take out a pilot. The pilot survived the ordeal. He discharged himself early and he went to the boatshed to answer questions because he wanted to know what hit him. And he wasn't buying the official theory that it might be birds.

There was footage of this unidentified aircraft. It was all over social media and everyone was saying it was aliens. Even Navy Lieutenant Landry Joseph didn't have anything better than aliens. The pilot had said that he was directed by the USS Allegiance of something on the radar and that he tried to spot the item. He never saw it. He bumped into something while up in the air.

It could have been attack. It wasn't missile or anything that was fired at him or at least what his own radar could detect. Whatever it was, it was destructive. Something that managed to take out one of his engines and almost caused him to crash.

Which is where the team came in. They were asked to investigate the unidentified aircraft and they spoke to the pilot. He said Navy Intelligence were refusing to tell him anything. The team also spoke to the XO on the USS Allegiance. He was doing his best to deter the investigation and so something was going on. The team only knew what Admiral Killbride told them.

He said that they had to find an unidentified aircraft and that was that. The team didn't stop for a moment to consider they should be told more. It wasn't until later that the questions started mounting. The team looked into the pilot. He graduated at the top of his class. He would know if he was hit by a missile.

The team looked into social media footage. They saw the aircraft crash somewhere in the Santa Monica mountains. Kensi and Deeks went to the location. They found an item missing. There was an item that crashed and it was no longer. But what they did find was a podcaster. The podcaster said the drone was gone by time he got there. The podcaster believed in the theory that the unidentified aircraft was in fact a drone swarm. The podcaster also added that the swarm was seen at least once everyday for the past week. The team took the drone theory to their boss and the USS Allegiance didn't think it was a drone swarm because their systems would have told them so.

The team therefore had to speak to an expert about a drone swarm fooling frequency channels. Their expert said that this drone swarm was learning with its every mistake and that's she developed this and sold it to the United States. It was now and operated by the DOD. It didn't make sense why it would now be target an American vessel. The team kept digging and they were later able to determine why the ship hadn't picked up on any frequencies. There was no frequency. There was no one on the other this of this drone talking to it or giving it orders. It was operating all on its own.

Their expert who turned out to be the maker had said she designed the AI to think for itself. To adapt. The only way to take it down is to attack it from angles and leave not a single one around or else pieces of the AI will leave on and rebuild. But just as the team was getting somewhere, that's when Killbride pulled the plug. He said he knew it was a UAV swarm. It was being operated by Americans to spy on Americans as a way of teaching it how to spy on their enemies. And the Americans are going to cover it up by claiming it was a flight exercise.

Only the team knew better.

Production Code: 1313
Summary: When DOJ Agent Lance Hamilton's partner is killed, Sam dons his previous undercover persona of "Switch" to find the culprit. Also Kensi, Deeks, Roundtree and Kilbride work to catch an aerospace engineer who stole classified Navy schematics.

Callen was using his time off to continue his investigation into Hetty. He wanted to know why Hetty chose him. Why did she gather a bunch of foster kids for testing? Who ordered it? Where are the kids involved now? Callen has a bunch of questions. Which is why he sent someone after Hetty.

He wanted to know her movements and, while he may have lost sight of her, he was still following other people connected to his youth. Callen was doing that as his team had caught a new case.

The rest of the team were investigating a low level federal crime. And they weren't helping Sam who had his own case.

Sam had to use his undercover persona as Switch to check out a suspect in a murder. The murder of undercover ATF Agent Scott Reid of all things. Reid was shot twice in the chest in a parking lot and he lived just long enough to tell his friend Lance a name. The name was Vander.

Vander was a suspect in a dirty agents ring involving federal officers. Reid was investigating him when it seems his cover was blown and he was murdered for it. But Vander has a history with the Switch persona. This therefore made Sam the perfect to go in undercover and to bring this Vander to justice. And so that's what Sam did.

First, Sam reached out to some of his cold contacts to see if his cover had been blown the last time he used it. It thankfully was still good. Sam then reintroduced himself to the underworld by robbing some Korean bikers gang and soon word got out that Switch was back. Switch may not have wanted to say it out loud.

Only he enjoyed himself. He had fun robbing the bankers and being a bad guy. He and Lance were up to all sorts of shenanigans as the rest of the team continued looking into the theft of classified naval schematics. It turns out an engineer was involved in the theft. She was trying to sell it for a price.

The team went all around looking for this woman. They even ran into a millionaire real estate agent who tried to sell Kensi and Deeks a property for three point one million dollars. But of course that was way out of their budget. The team later caught up to their engineer. Ryan Louge tried to deny the charges at first and so Killbride let her stew for a bit. He gave her time. Time to think. Time to question if she covered herself properly. She hadn't and, by time she realized that, she was ready to talk. She told the team about stealing the schematics. She said she did it because some Eastern European criminal had threatened her father.

The team looked into it. They got a hold of the arms dealers that supposedly made a threat and he claimed Louge was lying. He said he never threatened anyone. He wasn't some level crook, either. He was an arms dealer and he told them that he was a big deal. He also mentioned a website on the dark web that should visit. He said that would explain everything. The team first had to hack their way onto the dark web and once there they looked up the address given to them. But as Fatima was doing her work, Sam was doing his. He got close to Vander. They talked about the old days and Sam even asked Vander about the book with the list of dirty cops.

Unfortunately, when he did so, he blew his cover. Vander knew that only the cops knew about the list and so he became aware that Switch was really a cop. Vander's security guard went after Sam. Vander tried to escape in the chaos. Sam caught up to him. Sam even tried to convince Vander to turn himself in and Vander refused. He went out into the open in spite of Sam telling him a sniper was waiting for him. Vander's last words was that he didn't want to go out like some "b*tch". His later death plagued Sam because Sam did love him. Vander taught him everything he knew as Switch. Vander loved him as a son and Sam loved him as a father.

Sam hated the way things ended between them. He didn't even care that his cover was still safe. He lost a friend and he grieved. Lance for his part had understood Sam's grief. He gave Sam his condolences and he did the paperwork for this one. The other part of the team closed their case as well. They found out that Louge was selling her service on the dark web. She hadn't been coerced like she claimed. She stole those classified documents because she wanted to sell them to the highest bidder and now she faces life in prison for this federal crime. But as for Callen, the woman he was spying on had nothing to do with Hetty as it happens.

The woman was one of his former foster moms. She was really good to him. He had wanted to stay with her until Hetty pulled him out of there and he never looked back. Not until now.

Summary: NCIS investigates the robbery of a high-end arts storage by going undercover as potential buyers on the black market, to find who is behind the stolen items.

A trio of armed thieves robbed a high-end art storage facility. They snuck in by hiding in one of the shipments and they grabbed all that they could. They manage to escape in under five minutes. They also shot someone as they were escaping. Now, this normally wouldn't be a case for NCIS, but it was this time because this facility was used by Katya Miranova and the heist happened right before their warrant to search the place went through. It couldn't be a coincidence that this happened. Everyone believed that Kaya was somehow involved and so they took this case and they ran with it. They looked at security footage of the facility.

They found out how the thieves got in. Someone was only shot because it was highly suspicious of boxes going out of the facility. The security guard asked to read the manifest and a trigger happy thief got scared. The team looked into it. They first started by looking into the judge who delayed the warrant and that's where when Reserve Agent Shyla Dahr came in. She was Killbride's assistant. She came all the way from D.C. and she has enough clout for Killbride to use her in a case. Dahr was a good addition to the team. She understood Killbride better than anyone. She even jokes with him and so he finally had an equal there.

Killbride tends to look at the rest of the team as misbehaving children. He admires their work. He just doesn't seem to respect them. But he respects Dahr. Dahr found out that someone used a deep fake of Callen's face to talk the judge into sitting on the warrant. The fake Callen had told the poor woman that they were on a different case that took precedent and so the judge waited on the warrant because she thought an old friend was asking her for a favor. Only Callen never made the call. Dahr who had found out about the deep fakes had put the pieces together. She told the rest of the team.

They didn't have time to worry about it because they later realized the heist was an inside job. The curator had helped the thieves plan the job and she did so because she was paid fifteen grand by a charming French guy. Kensi and Deeks passed this on to their contact. She told them about Gerard Dupont. He's an old-school legend. He supposedly retired and he was living in LA. The team checked it out. They found out that Dupont's daughter and her husband moved to LA during his stint in prison. He followed them out there once he was released so that he could be closer to his grandchild. And he quickly became a suspect in several high-profile robberies.

The team later ran into Dupont as they were tracking down the getaway car used in the heist. But the team's evidence was all circumstantial. They couldn't technically arrest Dupont for anything at the time and so they tried to needle him instead. They asked him what went wrong with this heist in particular. He's never used guns before. Dupont replied that he never will use a gun. The shooter had to be someone else. The team went searching around his place and they later found a statue that he had stolen from an art gallery. This was enough to arrest Dupont for theft. They put him in material he couldn't escape from and they questioned him.

Dupont eventually admitted he was hired to rob the facility. He never met the woman who hired him and so all he could give was a name. The name was an alias used by Katya. But there was a problem. Dupont had double-crossed Katya. He was supposed to drop off her items to her and instead he robbed the gallery for what its worth and sold it to a black market dealer. Dupont made a grave mistake by crossing Katya, but he was far from over because he went on to sell a forgery of a stolen painting to the dealer and so he risked Callen's cover when Callen went to collect Katya's things.

But Callen arrested the dealer. Dupont escaped and is now on the run from the feds as well as from Katya only Callen got what he wanted. He found Katya's things. She had a film of her time in the Noble Maidens back in Russia and it was basically a video of young her being tortured by the program.

A program was similar to what Callen experienced as a child.

Production Code: 1315
Summary: Rountree and his younger sister are pulled over by police and treated harshly in a clear case of racial profiling. Also, NCIS investigates the death of a Navy photographer who was assigned to document the building of a new weapons station.

NCIS Special Agent Roundtree was driving his sister back to school when they got pulled over. They got pulled over by two white cops. The cops barely waited a minute before they went there. They dragged Roundtree out of his car in spite of him complying with everything and they even maced him. But here's the thing, Roundtree did identify himself as a federal agent at the start. One of the white cops hadn't wanted to believe him. Hence the aggression. The uncalled-for aggression is simply because Roundtree was carrying out around his badge as he drops off his sister. He didn't think he needed to.

Yet, these cops didn't just stop at the aggression towards Roundtree. They also turned on his sister for getting out of the car. That was it. That's all she did and she got arrested too. The two of them were just fortunate that got pulled over in an area with pedestrians because who knows what else would have happened to them. The cops were later able to prove Roundtree was in fact a federal agent. They released him and his sister. They asked why they were stopped and the cops said that there was an armed burglary in the area. The truth was Roundtree was black somewhere near a crime.

Things weren't illegal until white cops began believing all black men look alike. Also, that black man couldn't drive nice cars. Roundtree was supposed to interview someone connected to the latest case only he never showed up because of what happened with the cops and so his team began worrying about him. They even tried to locate him. Fatima was looking for him while at the same time assisting the rest of the team in hunting the murderer of Naval Communications Officer Andrea Bishop. Andrea was murdered in her apartment. She worked as a photographer and journalist in her off times.

Andrea's laptop and camera were missing. They were most likely stolen by her killer who wanted something she photographed and so the team went asking around the people Andrea worked with. It turns out Andrea was photographing a weapons artillery of the Navy. Someone could have killed her to get their hands on what the weapons were. Only, the team learned that there was a missing cache of weapons. The resident NCIS Agent opened a file on it and the team later found out that Andrea left behind a USB drive that could be connected to the missing items. Andrea had apparently caught a mysterious van leaving the base at the same time that the weapons went missing.

The team figured she might have caught the culprit. The guy knew she caught him and he returned to finish her off. But the team was still putting the pieces together when Roundtree showed up. He hadn't even needed to tell them what happened because by then they had already seen the video. Some pedestrian had caught the whole thing on tape. It angered the team watching that video and Sam asked when will be enough. Roundtree on the other hand got the answer to that question. He spoke to a detective from Internal Affairs and he demanded real change after what happened to him. And the detective basically told him that was too big of an ask.

So, the answer is never. The LAPD claims to be making strides and somehow that never resulted in any real punishment. Roundtree also refused to sit down with the men that attacked him. He didn't think a talk was going to be enough. Roundtree went to help Fatima after that and he chose to focus on the case. The team tracked down the man driving the getaway car during the naval theft. He told them where he took his partner, but he didn't know the guy's name and he only suspected the man he was helping was somehow employed at the base because they let him through at security. The team went to the drop-off place.

They found out what was stolen. The guy that stole a war dog. There were electric dogs that were much more dangerous than real dogs because of their other capabilities. But the warehouse and the legitimate business that runs within was being carried out by someone Andrea worked with at the base. It was the second-in-command. She probably went to him with photos of the van she saw leaving the day of the theft and he used that information to instead kill her and attempt to steal the footage. Although once he was captured, he tried to claim he was only trying to steal from her when she walked in.

But the truth is that he intentionally went to her apartment with a gun.

On the Roundtree thing though, there was apparently no description of the burglary suspect. The cops just picked on Roundtree because was black and so Roundtree found out the truth from Sam who got it from his contact. Sam knew it didn't make it better. He tried suggesting going through the proper channels as IA and Roundtree shot it down. Roundtree thought he would make more of a difference from a podium than from being in the field.

Summary:	NCIS investigates the kidnapping of Master Sergeant Boomer, a military working dog. Also, Sam looks to sell his boat so he can take care of his father who is suffering from Alzheimer's.

Roundtree wasn't back to being his old self. He was kind of acting out of character lately. He wasn't really talking much. This is reasonable because he did go through something traumatic. His dealings with the police were traumatic and if he doesn't want to go around telling jokes or laughing with Fatima? It makes sense. He was going to need time to heal and no one can rush him. Not even Fatima.

Fatima tried talking to Roundtree about what happened and he didn't want to talk. He just wanted to keep his head.

Do his job and keep his head down. Roundtree didn't take time off of work. He reported in like everyone else and so the only significant change has been the attitude as well as him using all his spare time at the shooting range.

Roundtree's recent incident with the police along with Callen's issues with Katya is why the admiral brought in an operational psychologist to talk to everyone. The psychologist was read in all the reports. He's someone that has the clearance and so they could tell him anything and everything. They could talk about their feelings. Or talk about their time on a case. Nate Getz was just there to help.

It was probably one of the admiral's best ideas so far and so up first was Callen. One of the first things that Callen noticed about the place was that the psychologist's office looks like a spa. Getz said he wanted people to feel comfortable. And like they could relax there.

Callen hadn't necessarily wanted to talk to anyone. He only agreed to do so because the admiral said Getz had information on what went down overseas and with Hetty and so that's why Callen showed. He wanted information. Not to talk. Callen was busy there while Sam and the others were working an abduction case. Recently Retired Marine Master Sergeant Boomer Hayes was missing.

But he wasn't a man. He was a dog. The dog has been working as a "consultant" for local police operations or military missions stateside and he was a good dog. His owner Mary wants him back. She came home one day to find her house broken into and her dog missing.

Mary reported it to the police. Only, they weren't taking it seriously while NCIS has to because Boomer was technically a vet. Boomer was a military dog before he retired. He still works to sniff out drugs and he's even helped put people behind bars. Sam thought Boomer's enemies could be behind his kidnapping.

The team looked into that angle and they found out that Boomer was one of the best drug-sniffing dogs in the area except it doesn't make sense why he was taken. Some angry drug dealer could have easily poisoned him at his house. He or she didn't need to break into the house or grab the dog.

Kensi suspects that the dog was taken because it was an expensive breed. The dog was purebred. He was well-trained and so there was a chance someone saw it and thought it was cute enough to take home. They were considering that idea when the techies found out that the dog had a bounty on its head. It was fifteen grand if the dog was killed and twenty if the dog was captured alive. The team looked into the person who posted that bounty. They couldn't find the person and so the next best thing was to recheck the neighbor's surveillance cameras. They hadn't found anything the first time they checked.

A second try yielded more results. One camera managed to pick up someone hauling what looks like the dog into the back of his truck. They traced the truck back to Joseph Jones. He even looks like a bad guy. He's someone that would do anything for money and so he only took the dog due to the bounty. The team moved on Jones. They arrested him at his place of work. They searched his car and the dog wasn't there. The dog was still missing. They think Jones was the one who grabbed the dog and that he gave it to whoever put out the bounty. What the team couldn't do was prove their theory.

Jones denied everything. They searched his workplace and even his home. They couldn't find a single thing. What they did find was a lot of mysterious money. Money that Jones couldn't have made in one sitting if he had nothing to do with the dog. But the team checked the money. They found fingerprints on them and it led back to a guy who runs a dog fighting ring. He runs it as a money laundering place for a drugs operation. The guy in charge was someone that got sent to jail by Boomer's drug sniffing nose. And so that's why they wanted Boomer.

Boomer was taken in revenge and he was thankfully found at the second guy's house which NCIS raided. This thankfully happened before he could be put in a ring with another dog and so Boomer was saved from that fate. He was later returned to his owner. His kidnapers were arrested for the meth they were cooking up and so that will put them in jail longer than the dognapping.

And in the end, Callen spoke to Getz. He realized he was being assessed at the same time and he didn't fight it. And so that's where Fatima got the bright idea to suggest Roundtree speak to Getz as well. She made it seem like it would help his sister and there's nothing Roundtree wouldn't do for his sister.

Summary: NCIS helps Naval intelligence officer Akhil Ali locate a fellow officer who went missing while recruiting foreign assets as sources of intelligence. Callen and Nate Getz track down a man Callen believes was present for his training.

Callen was still pursuing his past. He found out he was a part of a secret program that used children in the foster care system and tested them for the potential for spy work. Callen hadn't realized it at the time. He hadn't even figured out years later, but he knows now that he was a part of this program and he wants answers.

Hetty was one of the few people that could give him answers. She ran the program. She knows what kind of tests were done on the kids involved. Hetty could explain why Callen was taken from one of the best foster moms he could have wished for and so Callen has to know her reasoning. He has to know why his life was the way it is.

Callen was so obsessed with knowing that truth that he pushed away Anna. Anna told him she needed a break from him and that she didn't want to move to the new apartment with him. She was going to stay with her father. Callen also was having trouble at work.

Katya, using those deep fakes of Callen's face and voice, had sent out hundreds of inappropriate as well as outright sexual harassment messages to every federal law official in the United States. It got so bad that Admiral Kilbride was ordered to remove Callen from the field. They wanted Callen to take time off. It was one thing when Katya was working alone and now that she was deploying bots it had gotten out of hand.

This wasn't Callen's fault. But he was surely being punished as if it was. Callen had needed the time off anyway because he was still looking into the program and he was even following one of the kids that had also been in it. He wasn't just following her, either. He had even approached this woman.

He pretended to bump into her. He then flirted with her. He was doing everything possible to get close to her and so maybe it's a good thing that Anna needs a break. She thought Callen became obsessed with Katya. He was constantly watching old footage of Katya being tortured when she was being trained as a spy during Russia's very own program for vulnerable kids.

Callen was spinning out. The Admiral knew that and that's why he had the resident therapist come in to check on Callen. Callen didn't feel like talking. Not at first. Nathan had thankfully been very patient and he was soon able to get Callen talking.

Callen believes that the same agent that tortured Katya in the video was the man who also taught him while he was going through the program. He wanted to find the guy. He wanted answers about the program. About Katya. Nathan accidentally revealed that the Admiral knew more about the matter than he was saying and that the Drona Program was based on a Russian program.

But while Callen was confronting the Admiral, the rest of the team was tracking down a missing professor that had been helping the Department of Naval Intelligence. The professor's name was Maria Varza. She worked with some of the best universities that the country has to offer. She was good at her job and her job was working them unravel a mystery. She was looking into a genetic weapon that the Iranians were building. She was friends with an Irani scientist. She actually went out to eat with this friend the night she disappeared. And while Varza was eating, someone accessed her car.

The team looked into it. They found out that two men were following Varza and her friend. Also, one of the men had left surveilling them around the same time the car was accessed. The team came to suspect the friend. They started following her and Fatima even approached by pretending to be interested in her work as a scientist. Fatima, unfortunately, lost Jaharri's trust by pushing too hard. The scientist left and that's when Fatima noticed the two men following her. It was the same two men that were following Varza. They followed Fatima and she got the better of them with Sam's help.

They also detained the scientist's friend. Jaharri admitted that Varza approached her by offering her a job with Naval Intelligence and that she turned it down. She hadn't even believed Varza when she made the offer. She thought she was making it up. She only knows now that the woman was telling the truth. But Jaharri was questioned about her connection to Iran as well as about Iran's genetic weapon.

She had no clue what they were talking about. She didn't even know the two men that were following her and their involvement in Varza's disappearance. Those men were trained agents. They wouldn't be broken. And Jaharri wasn't much help because she completely denied working with the Iranians or knowing their plans.

Only Varza was later found. She was in the hospital being treated for her wounds. Varza had no memory of the time since she was taken and when she was found. She couldn't be of any help to the investigation. And the investigation was officially over now that the professor had been found.

Everyone just believes she was taken and interrogated over what she knew. There's no telling if she broke. Callen meanwhile found the man that tested him while he was in the program. He even got this man's name and what he looks like now. He also believes this man was the same man that tortured Katya during her own program. And so he tried to convince Nate of it, but Nate said he would need more evidence and so Callen tried to get evidence on his own.

Callen broke into the man's place of business looking for evidence, but he was caught by a surveillance camera and now the man knows Callen is after him.

Production Code: 1318
Summary: NCIS investigates the murder of a woman employed in the Navy's missile defense program and its connection to stolen Navy missile technology. Also, a strict social worker stresses out Deeks, and Sam debates selling his boat.

A homeless man found a body at the beach. The body was identified as Petty Officer Third Class Nikki Lee. Lee appeared to be strangled and so her death was sent to NCIS. Hetty's team caught it. But once again, Callen has to sit this one out. Callen wasn't allowed back out into the field until his situation with deep fakes of himself had been cleared and that was only going to happen if Katya was killed or captured. With her still being out there, Callen was forced to watch the investigation from the sidelines. He even had to watch as Admiral Kilbride brought in Sabatino of all people. Sabatino had left the CIA. He was now the Special Deputy U.S. Marshall. And he was going to be paired up with Sam for this investigation.

Sabatino said Lee was a research project. She was helping to build a new missile system. It was considered that she was targeted because some foreign country wanted to use her to steal information about that new missile system. Sabatino also mentioned that he happens to be a part of a joint task force looking into Libya. Libya had been accused of stealing American naval tech in the past and so he was there to see if they had anything do with Lee's death. Sabatino was paired up with Sam. Something that both Sam and Callen resented. But they were forced to go along with it because Sabatino now gets to openly carry a gun in the United States. And they needed the backup.

Kensi also couldn't work the case. She was giving a deposition. She was going to be away for a while and her husband Deeks was overseeing construction at their house so the team needed as many hands as they could. Sabatino was in. Callen was out. Callen was even advised to take a few days off to get his head right. As ordered by the Admiral. The Admiral had everyone else looking into Lee and they realized she might not have been killed over espionage. Lee has had domestic issues with a past boyfriend. It got so bad that the police were called. Afterward, Lee found out she was pregnant. The boyfriend wanted nothing to do with the baby.

The now ex-boyfriend even moved away. Lee had to go after him for child support. She also moved on with her life and everything was going normal until the boyfriend moved back into the area. He sorta had to because he got in trouble with the law. He needed to stay close to his probation officer. But he didn't kill Lee. He had an alibi for the time of the murder. He was with his P.O. volunteering at a rehab. He couldn't be the killer and he seemed to be angrier about the continuing child support than he was about Lee's death. The ex-boyfriend was out. He was fully out once the team realized that Lee went to the Sky West Beach Club on the night she died.

Something must have happened. Either in the club or right outside because that's where Lee left her car. The team later spoke to the guy who ran the club. Someone known as Big Wes. Wes was involved in a fake island festival scam and he was also suspected of being involved in numerous other scams all targeting rich people. Big Wes has managed to escape from several charges of everything from Fraud to Rico. Nothing sticks when law enforcement comes after him. Which posed a problem for the team because both Sam and Sabatino believed Big Wes had something to do with Lee's murder.

Big Wes wasn't cooperating. He didn't want to give them footage from his surveillance cameras inside of the club and he didn't even want to hand over a client list of everyone who was there that night. But they got some footage of outside the club. They found Lee in one of them. She was arguing with a man in a giant cowboy hat. She was in his face when a car pulled up alongside her and pushed her into the back of the car. The team didn't know who she was arguing with or why that person didn't call 911 when someone was literally abducted right in front of them, but they kept digging and they later found some promotional photos of an event at the club that night. And they found the person in the giant cowboy hat.

That person was Navy Petty Officer Gary Hudson. Hudson was Lee's boss on the missile project. They found him as he was trying to flee town and so they brought him to the boatshed. It didn't take long for Hudson to crack. He said that he went to the club. He has a problem and he always liked how willing the women there were. But it became expensive. He ran up a debt by putting everything on his tab and that's when Big Wes approached him with an offer. The guy had been prodding Hudson for his stories in the Navy. He was looking for information. Something that Hudson provided as long as he kept being allowed to come to the club.

Hudson was more afraid of Big Wes than he was of NCIS. Even after he was busted, Hudson hadn't wanted to talk against Big Wes and only did so because he wanted to avoid a murder charge. Hudson told them that Big Wes convinced him to steal the schematics to the new missile system. Big Wes was going to sell it to someone overseas and whoever it was — Big Wes was afraid of them. Hudson said that was the only time he saw Big Wes afraid. He stole the information from work and he gave it to Big Wes that night. Lee found out about it. She confronted him. And the next thing he knew she had been grabbed by Big Wes's people.

Hudson didn't know when the sale was going to happen. The team looked into Big Wes and they noticed he turned off his cell phone. A sure sign that he was trying to hide something. They tracked his movements and they later were able to prevent the sale of their new missile system to a private contractor. The contractor got arrested. And so did Big Wes.

Big Wes was facing a murder charge as well as treason charges. Sabatino and Sam did great work. They made a good team. They might even become friends now.

As for Deeks, he had a run-in with a social worker. It left him so depressed that he visited the office and he had an honest conversation with Admiral Kilbride. He might have convinced the Admiral to reach out to his son.

And Callen's few days out of the office were used to track down Katya.

Summary: NCIS team works with DEA Agent Talia Del Campo to find a missing whistleblower set to testify against gun manufacturers marketing to drug cartels.

Eric Beale sent the team handwritten letters. It turns out he gave them each ten thousand dollars. He also donated the same amount to their favorite charities and so his one request is that they use the money for something they've always wanted. Everyone started considering the possibilities. Even Admiral Kilbride was looking at noise-canceling headphones. Callen was still out of the office because he was taking some time off and that meant no one knew what he would do with his check. Though odds are he would spend it on his bid to look for Katya. Callen became obsessed with hunting Katya down and there's no way he would take time off to just enjoy himself as long as she was out there.

But the rest of the team were all in a pretty good mood about the money. They were talking about it and getting excited. They were some that started shopping literally moments after looking online. The only thing that could have pulled their attention away from the money was the new case they caught. They were assisting the DEA with tracking down a whistleblower. The whistleblower was supposed to testify in front of a congressional hearing about guns that were being purchased legally in the United States and taken down to Mexico. The guns were getting into the hands of the cartel. The Mexican government wanted the Americans to put a stop it.

Hence this hearing. The Mexican government got the idea from the Sandy Hook lawsuit about going after the manufacturers and that's what they're trying to do. But the Americans also wanted this problem to stop. The one thing that both sides could agree on is that they didn't want American guns getting in the hands of foreign nationals. Which is why they agreed to the hearing. They wanted to work with the Mexican government. The whistleblower was the only one who had inside information on what was going on and finding him was very important. It especially became important after the whistleblower's DEA handler was murdered.

The poor guy had his head chopped off before being thrown off a building. The whistleblower went into hiding after that and no one can trace him. The whistleblower's name is Marin Henderson. He was a former Navy. He worked for the Plutus company which was an American gun manufacturer. The team spoke to the head of the company and he denied knowing where Martin was. He also claimed that he had no idea how his guns were making it to Mexico. Admiral Killbride had to personally twist this guy's arm to get him to talk. He gave up a name. The name was Miguel Flores. Flores grew up in a hotbed of cartel country before he joined the American navy and eventually became a citizen.

Flores has since then been buying up guns to sneak them down into Mexico. He was doing so under the guise of selling hand-painted tile down there. He made trips to Mexico everyday. The team went to go talk to Flores and he tried to run. They were forced to throw him into the ocean to get him to give up. But once they did arrest him, Flores said he couldn't help them. Flores's whole family is still in Mexico and if the cartel heard he cooperated then they would kill his family and Flores couldn't risk that. He wasn't talking. He didn't care what happened. He just wasn't going to talk.

In spite of him not talking, Flores still know there was a risk the cartels would have him killed. Flores was connected to a house and he denied knowing what was inside. What was inside was a bunch of bodies. The bodies were hidden inside of the wall along with other things. Deeks and Kensi has to bring it down to the studs to reveal everything hidden inside. Admiral Killbride meanwhile worked with the gun manufacturer. He knew Carlyle knew more about this than he claimed. He, therefore, got the man so upset that he started spouting off information until his lawyer eventually killed him with a poisoned pen.

The lawyer had been someone the cartel sent to keep watch. But before she managed to kill Carlyle, he got upset. He said in frustration that this thing goes all the way up to dirty politicians as well as judges. It apparently couldn't be stopped. No matter what the team did or what one whistleblower said. The team thought they were facing a losing battle when Sam managed to get through to Flores and tell them what he knew. He mentioned where the whistleblower was. They later went to go find him and unfortunately it was too late. They never got the whistleblower. Several men died and none it will help because Congress called off the hearing when the whistleblower failed to arrive.

But the whistleblower made a video before he died. He made a video detailing how gun manufacturers target the cartel. They did so in an effort to sell guns and it's an epidemic. And so maybe the video will do what the others could not.

Summary: NCIS investigates after two men are blown up by their own explosives while attempting to break into a military base. Also, Callen wants to take the next step with Anna, and Sam moves in with his father, Raymond.

NCIS Special Agent Sam Hanna was taking on a nearly impossible task. He was moving in with his elderly father. His father has been getting confused lately and he keeps getting lost. It just wasn't safe anymore for him to live alone. But getting him to move in was an uphill battle. The Major was a stern man. He was used to giving orders, not accepting them. Sam was able to convince his father and for that, he deserves a medal. Sam also arranged to sell his father's house. It was too much house anyways for simply one person. They sold the house to a young couple who planned on having kids and so the house was going to a family. And that's what put the Major's heart at ease.

Sam was moving the boxes alone because his best friend wasn't there to help. Callen was actually busy doing something else. He finally took a break from hunting Katya and his break made him realize that he wants to propose to Ana. They've been together for a while. They were even living together and they recently got over a rough patch. Callen thought now was the perfect time to propose. He went to Ana's father Arkady for his blessing. He later found Arkady drinking vodka in the morning. That should have been his first sign to back off yet he persisted. Callen asked Arkady for his blessing and Arkady's initial response was to laugh.

Arkady thought it was a joke. He stopped laughing once he realized it wasn't. Arkady refuses to give this union his blessing. He said they shouldn't get married. He said marriages never work out. He also said that Ana would never marry Callen without his blessing. Callen doesn't believe that bit. He didn't understand why Arkady was refusing his permission because he thought it was a simple gesture and so Arkady went an extra step. He said he's forbidden the marriage. He also doesn't want them to have kids because that would be a problem too. Arkady was forbidding everything. And Callen couldn't understand why.

Callen later got called into work. He and Sam were asked to check out a scene after two armed men tried to break into a naval facility and so they went to the scene. This was Callen's first case in a while. He got put on suspension once Katya's deep fakes went out. But things are different now. People are starting to forget being sent videos of Callen sexually harassing them. Callen was allowed to join Sam in the field and so that's when he told his friend about what happened with Arkady. Sam hadn't seen that one coming. Sam also didn't believe it would be bad luck if Callen and Ana got married without Arkady's blessing.

Arkady had actually been very offensive when he implied that as a Gypsy, Callen should know all about curses. Other than that though Callen hadn't wanted to talk about it. He was still in his feelings about being told "no". They also had a case to focus on. The two-armed man that cut a link in the fence on a naval base had sent off a bomb. The bomb killed one and put the other in the hospital with severe burns. The team wanted to talk to the lone survivor. To get his name if nothing else. But they were stopped by the man's lawyer. His lawyer was Jeremy Chambers. Chambers was also representing the father of the man who died.

Chambers was questioned. He didn't know John Doe's name. He also said he was hired by someone who wanted to remain anonymous. The team looked into him and it turns out that Chambers was the lawyer for an insurrection group. They were basically domestic terrorists. The leader named James Miller had even started a GoFundMe for the guy in the hospital. He claimed his friend got injured during a "military" training op. Never mind those people were breaking into a federal facility or that they tried to kill themselves rather than be captured. These terrorists thought they were the heroes of the story. And that's what the team found once they started digging into the lawyer.

Fatima and Roundtree had gotten injured when they went to go check out the trailer of the dead man. It blew upon them and they got injured. They were sitting out the rest of the case. Shyla saw how short-staffed the team was and so she volunteered to go into the field. She just had to clear it past the Admiral. Admiral Kilbride liked her idea so much that he decided to go into the field as well. With backup and the surprise arrival of both Fatima and Roundtree who both refused to sit this one out, the team was able to overwhelm the insurrectionists at their compound. They killed and or arrested everyone they could. And Deeks and Kensi got some time to talk.

They found out that Rosa's case for asylum had been rejected. They, therefore, came to the conclusion that they wanted to adopt Rosa and, while they were at it, they were also going to adopt her friend Pilar as well. Pilar was another teenage girl in the foster care system. She and Rosa both come from the same town in Guatemala. And splitting was just something neither Kensi nor Deeks was willing to do.

Callen meanwhile learned of a way to handle Arkady. If Ana does say yes, they'll threaten not to invite Arkady to the wedding and that alone would guarantee he gives his blessing.

And Sam got to return to his new house to be welcomed by his dad. His dad didn't go outside alone. But he did order in beer and that was even better than life on the boat.

Summary:	The NCIS team must quickly find Callen after he falls for Katya's trap using Sam's deepfake to coordinate a weapons deal.

Katya was a great supervillain. She came up with great deepfakes of everyone. She even tried to use them to force Callen's hand in the matter and the plan failed because the team came up with secret codes for whenever they talk on the phone. When Callen didn't hear the clue word from the fake Sam, he realized it was fake. He called the real Sam on a burner phone. They figured out that Katya has been spying on them so well that she even knew about their cases. The two men agreed to meet somewhere off the books and Sam later showed. Callen never did. Callen disappeared. The team looked into it and they found footage of Sam going into a different building.

The team mobilized. Save for Deeks who was doing some paperwork for their adoption, the rest of them found no trace of Callen and so they went inside. They found the building empty. Fatima was only able to access their cameras after the rest of the team turned back on the power and by then she found out that Katya has Callen. Katya was working with her own team. They grabbed Callen. They beat him up. They also took him to a different location. It turns out Katya wanted revenge for Callen taking the only person she's ever loved and so Callen was busy explaining to her how she wasn't a creature built for love. She was built for revenge.

Revenge was something he could help her with. Callen told her that he knew where Howard Pembroke is. Pembroke was a man who tortured them both as kids as part of a special program in creating the perfect soldier. Pembroke ran this type of program both in Russia and the U.S. He was a horrible man. He truly did torture the children in his care and so Callen wanted to take him down. Katya on the other hand wasn't convinced. She thought Callen would never let her get away after killing Pembroke. Callen had to tell her that not only would he help her in killing Pembroke, but he would even facilitate her escape. He wanted Pembroke dead that bad.

Only Katya still wouldn't trust him. She also realized that Pembroke had to be in the city if Callen found him and so she wanted to find him on her own. Katya doesn't look like her old self. She's had plastic surgery. She has a team that kept their identities as well as their location secret. The team tried to find them and they went down a rabbit hole they couldn't dig themselves out of. They kept finding fakes. They kept getting led to the wrong locations. It was impossible to track them and so Callen had all the time in the world to make his case. He proved to Katya that he knew Pembroke so well that he recognized his cologne as the one that Katya now uses.

Katya started wearing it as a means for her to finally stop remembering the smell. There was also another way that Callen was able to prove his claims. He used a saying that Pembroke used on them. He said it to Katya and that convinced her he was telling the truth. It just didn't manipulate her into freeing him. Katya was still angry about the whole taking Ana away from her. Katya kidnapped Ana. She showed Callen footage of her being tied to a chair and in that footage, Katya shot and killed her because Ana refused to tell the crazy woman that she loves her. Ana tried to do that when she saw that Katya had kidnapped Callen as well. And by that point, Katya no longer believed her.

Callen was shown footage of this. He came to believe Ana was dead. Ana wasn't dead. Ana later joined up with the team and they did their best to try and track down Callen. Each time they got close, they found another deep fake. They had to watch Callen die several times. It got to Ana. Sam had to tell her over and over again that Callen was still out there. Which he was. Callen watched as his team kept finding deep fakes of him dying. He watched as this tortured his loved ones. Callen never had a family. The team was his family. Ana was his family. And so watching them in pain was the worse torture he could ever experience.

Katya knew that the container where she was holding Callen will eventually be found. Hence she rigged it with explosives. She also left an outside camera on so that Callen could watch as his family reaches him and possibly watch as they all die. But Sam was smart. He realized the container could be rigged and so he stopped it from going off. Sam diffused the bomb. This allowed them to get inside and they rescued Callen. Callen and Ana were reunited. And Katya didn't get away.

Katya was found shot down in an area nearby. Callen had no idea who was behind. It could have been Pembroke. It could have even been Joelle because she was in town. And so there's no telling who killed Katya Miranova.

Production Code: 1322
Summary: The NCIS team hunts for a heist crew that robs a Los Angeles casino with military-grade power. Also, Kensi and Deeks hear exciting news regarding the adoption and Callen takes a big step in his relationship with Anna.

Someone robbed a casino. They used a vehicle that was modified to carry weapons. It could shoot bullets and even grenades. It took out a car as it was making its escape from the scene of the crime. But the person who robbed the place wasn't in the vehicle. He or she controlled it from a remote destination while they spoke through this new vehicle through a speaker. It was therefore going to be complicated to track this person down because that vehicle managed to escape with bags of money and there was no telling in which direction it went or who was operating it at the time of the crime. It could be owned by one person while used by another to rob that casino. There's just no telling and unfortunately, that was up to NCIS to figure out.

NCIS had to investigate this one because the ammo, as well as grenades used, were military weapons. They shouldn't have been on the streets much less used by their thief or thieves. But it took a minute before the team got the call about work. Prior to getting that call, the team was all enjoying some much-needed time off. Deeks and Kensi learned they were approved to be Rosa's foster parents. They couldn't wait to take the teenager into their home and so the only worrying thing about it was the timing. The couple found out that morning they've been approved. They also learned that Rosa will get to come home with them that same night.

The couple was in no way prepared for the responsibility of a teenager in such a short time. Not that they said so to their caseworker. They simply told the woman they were ready and then they made themselves ready. Sam meanwhile was with his dad. His dad has been forgetting stuff. He gets confused sometimes. He thought a woman on the street was his dead wife and he grabbed her. Sam had to call the woman down by telling her that his dad was just confused. He then had to remind that his mother was dead and that part was never going to get easier. But his best friend Callen heard back from Arkady.

Arkady missed out on Callen's kidnapping because he was on a bender with a woman he just met. It took him three days before he checked his messages and he saw that Callen was in danger and that he had been rescued. He told Callen that he was glad he was okay. He also brought flavored vodka for them to celebrate. Which was typical Arkady. Arkady didn't say so in front of Ana, but he might have changed his mind about giving Callen his blessing to propose and so Callen just had to get him alone to see if that was the case. The trio was drinking vodka when the call came in. Callen was on leave because he went through something radical.

But everyone else came in. Fatima was helping Roundtree with his dating profile when the call came in and she continued to help him even as they started investigating. It turns out their remote-operated vehicle was either supplied by someone stealing military weapons or an arms dealer was backing this heist. Admiral Kilbride gave the team the name of the local arms dealer in LA. Her name was Nina Barnes. She owns a bakery and she does cake decorating classes. One of which Deeks and Kensi interrupted to get her help on who carried out the heist. And Nina was in fact quite scary.

She knew her business well. She had contacts all across the globe. She even spoke several languages and was able to handle everyone in their native tongue. Nina told the team that she'd find out who brought the grenade launcher into LA very soon. She was doing her thing while Sam brought out his old persona of Switch. He was also joined by Callen who apparently had enough of his break. He came in against advisement and he joined Sam as Switch's life coach. They forced a rival gang leader to help them. The guy gave them answers. He said that the remote-operated UTV was being hidden on public streets by hiding in a much larger carry-on vehicle. And so the team got a name.

The name was Faria. Faria had something to do with Jacob Griffiths and Gordon Casella. The last two were both engineers who traded another UTV for a grenade launcher and so the team found out that they bought a building together. Kensi and Deeks went to the building. They found Griffiths dead with no sign of Casella. As it happens, Casella had been abducted by Faria. Faria saw the potential in the UTVs. He traded one for a grenade launcher and he started robbing casinos with his one left UTV by making Casella operate it. And Faria refused to surrender when surrounded, which forced Sam to kill him before Faria could reach his gun.

But once they rescued Casella, the team then threw a beach BBQ for Rosa. It was a nice way to welcome her into the NCIS family and even Arkady showed. And it's good that everyone was there because Callen later proposed to Ana... and she said "yes".

Production Code: 1403
Summary: The NCIS team searches for a suspect and their motive following the bombing of a large facility where military combat drones are assembled. Callen and Kilbride get troubling news about a body found in Syria.

Kensi and Deeks are foster parents. They took in a teenager named Rosa. She was a good kid. She didn't mind how super vigilant they were about her safety. She just memorized their contact information and she assured them she'd be fine on her first day at school. Rosa had never attended an American school prior to now. She was from South America. She immigrated by herself and even came close to dying just to make it to LA. But she's here now. She was close to being deported when Kensi and Deeks stepped up to adopt her and gain custody of her. Their doing that helped ensure Rosa gets to stay in the U.S.

But besides the fact that they were now finally parents, the two of them still had cases to work on. There was also some sad news at the office. It seems that one of Hetty's aliases was found dead in Syria. Admiral Kilbride was told about the alias's death alongside Callen. They both wondered if Hetty really was dead. She's been "dead" before. It's normally just a ruse and she returns to the living right when she's needed the most. There's also no telling who they found in Syria. It could be Hetty. It also could be a decoy that Hetty set up so that she could escape a bad situation. And there's also a possibility that Hetty really is dead this time.

There's no way clear way of knowing. The authorities on the ground in Syria were waiting on some dental records to properly identify the body and it didn't make sense to worry about it until it was proven one way or another. Callen still told members of the team. He also made them focus on their current case instead of what might be going down in Syria. The team was investigating the death of a janitor. The janitor's name was Luis Estevez. Estevez died in a factory fire that was naval property and the team wanted to know if it was an accident or not. They ran tests on Estevez's body. They were later able to determine that Estevez had been murdered before the fire.

Which begged the question of why? Why was Estevez murdered? What happened in that factory? The team knew that military drones were stored there, but how would the potential thieves know about it? The team had to investigate Estevez. They had to see if he maybe told someone about the factory. They got Estevez's daughter to give them permission to go digging through her father's life. She had been her father's power of attorney. With her permission, they got to look at Estevez's bank accounts as well as his phone records. It turns out it was just the daughter and her family. Estevez's wife died of covid two years ago. And so the remaining family wants to know more than anything why he died.

The janitor Luis Estevez didn't seem complicit in the fire at the factory. If anything, it seems like he had been stalked. Estevez led a very routine life. He worked two jobs and only rested on Sundays. He had dinner with his family every Sunday. He also used most of his free time doing carpeting work. Estevez was a very boring man. It was easy to spy on him. The team had traced a hack on one of the drones that were taken and it led back to Beirut. As for a Lebanon connection to Estevez, there was none. There was however a car that was surveilling him for hours on end and the truck they used was the Bunny Vale Laundry's truck.

Only the company's owners weren't from Lebanon. They were Persian. The real-life Bunny Vale was a first-generation American and he used his vans to spy on a janitor because his family in Iran had been threatened. The poor guy didn't want anyone to die, but the Iranians have wanted revenge ever since one of them was assassinated by Team America and so Team Iran wanted a win. Something they got by getting their hands on the drone. They then needed to just move it back to their shores and that's where the team stopped them. The team found the Iranian spies operating on American soil.

They used deadly force, but they stopped pertinent information from leaking out and they stole back a win from the other side. They got back the drone. They arrested people they need to arrest and they still didn't get answers from Syria. Callen was so fed up with this back and forth with Hetty that he wanted to jump on the next plane to Syria. He wanted to go look for Hetty himself. Killbride talked him out of it. He warned Callen that going after his foster mom would do no one any good. Callen hadn't liked hearing that but the advice wasn't wrong.

The team still stopped the Iranians and Sam returned home to find out his elderly father had more of a love life than he did.

Production Code: 1401
Summary: After an architect duo who specializes in designing secure buildings is kidnapped, the NCIS team mounts a search to bring them home. Also, Deeks and Kensi realize they may need to get Rosa some help with her schoolwork.

Callen hasn't been the same since he met his childhood tormentor. Callen was part of a secret program in the United States that trained foster kids or tortured these children to see if they have "potential". Callen was more or less tortured. He wanted answers about that program. But he couldn't get any. The program was top secret and only Hetty knew everything. The same Hetty that went missing. The same Hetty that could be dead and so Callen had employed a former Russian spy to help him track her down. Callen was still waiting on answers from that. He was also driving himself crazy by trying to force himself to remember everything from his past.

Callen even ran into someone who looked like the doctor that experimented on him. It was enough to scare Callen and he refuses to discuss what happened with his fiancé, Anna. Anna was very attuned to his feelings. She knew that Callen was struggling. But she also knew he would come to her if he needs to. Anna didn't confront Callen and Callen went to work like any other day. Callen checked in with his friends. He was asking Fatima about her mother when a case came in. NCIS has been asked to find a couple that was abducted from their home. The couple was Emmet and Lindsey Sandhagens. They have two kids, eight and ten, and thankfully the kids didn't witness the abduction.

It was actually a neighbor who saw it all. She called it in and it was given to NCIS because the missing couple was Department Of Defense contractors. They have access to a lot of secret intel. Whoever took the couple most likely grabbed them in order to gain access to certain files or weapons prototypes. Thereby making it imperative that the couple is found. The team split up on this one to get more done. Kensi and Fatima drove to the facility where the couple worked. They talked to some of Sandhagens's work colleagues. The coworkers mentioned that the couple was working on a command center that only they knew the location of and that can carry out a missile strike with over 300 missiles in stock.

Everyone was worried about that command center. They didn't know if that was why the couple had been taken and so they suspected they were taken by terrorists set on committing an attack on US soil. The team began looking for the terrorists. They could find no trace of them. They next tried following the couple's work when they spotted a discrepancy. It seems that someone has been accessing the Sandhagens' computer while they were both away. The only person that could be was the nanny. The same nanny that witnessed the kidnapping. They looked into her. They determined that she was heavily in debt a few months ago and that that's no longer the case.

The team brought the nanny to the boatshed for questioning. They interrogated her about college debt and they knew her mother was currently sick and so who helped pay off the student debt? The nanny told them how she met a guy at a bar. They got to talking and he offered to help her. All she had to do was get addresses from the Sandhagens' computer. She didn't know that they would abduct her employers or force them to gain access to the command center. But she gave Deeks and Callen what little information she had on the guy she spoke with. The name he gave her was Josh McCall. McCall's place was deserted when they got there.

But that's because he was at the command center. Kensi and Fatima went to the command center and they spotted Josh and his friend holding the couple hostage. The women were able to get the better of the two men. They brought them down and they freed the couple. The couple was later reunited with their children although now they have to look for a new nanny. Their old one got arrested for espionage. And while they may have closed their case, not everyone was happy about it being over.

Callen uses his time at work to forget about the unpleasant things from his childhood. But nothing could stop the nightmares or that it was causing to slowly create distance between himself and Anna.

Summary: NCIS team join forces with the FBI when a group of grisly murderers known as "The Body Stitchers" returns after evading capture by NCIS years ago. Sam's dad makes a new friend in Arkady.

There was a case some years ago that involved a group of killers known as "The Body Stitchers". This group would go around abducting people and killing them as part of a live show. But they got their name because their audience especially enjoyed when they stitched up their victims with various body parts. Its like they were Dr. Frankenstein. They wanted to recreate his monster and their audience loved watching. It definitely seems to be paying well because the group has been on the run for years. They would pop up in various countries for a few weeks. They managed to enter and leave without going through the normal points of entry. And they continuously buy aliases off the dark web.

Anyways, the Body Stitchers disappeared when NCIS came close to arresting them. The group vanished into thin air and it was up to the FBI to finish what the NCISA team started. The FBI has been looking for the group for a couple of years. They failed to capture them or get any kind of intel. They also failed to realize when the Body Stitchers returned to LA. Senior Special Agent Rand has been pursuing the group for years and she didn't even know that the killers were back on her home turf. Rand contacted NCIS when she found that out. She wanted their help in finding this group. The team was prepared to help and it was just Admiral Killbride who had reservations.

Kilbride reminded Rand that this was no longer an NCIS case. They stepped in when a decorated naval officer was killed and that's how they came close to arresting the Body Stitchers.

Killbride felt that naval cases had to taken priority with NCIS. He told Rand that if another job called that the team had to be redeployed on their actual jobs rather than helping the FBI. Rand understood. She was willing to accept whatever help that the team could provide and so the team went looking for the Body Stitchers. They found out how the group was paying for their lavish lifestyle of travel. The group was selling online memberships to their little club.

These memberships came with a password to an online feed showing a live viewing. There were people out there that were so obsessed with the morbid part of the internet that they were willing to pay for anything. Even help fund murder. The team later caught up with one of those members. They questioned him about the group. They told him he would be held responsible for the murders seeing as he watched it them stitching up body parts and so the guy talked. He didn't want to go to prison. He told the team everything he knew about the group. He told them how to access their page.

The guy also said he was scared of the group. He said he had no idea that they were killing all those people they stitched up and that he was scared for his life. The team hadn't believed him until they found the guy's mother. She had been put in a bathtub and someone poured acid all over her. But her hand was missing. The hand was what alerted them to the Body Stitchers being behind it. The team notified their suspect that his mother had been murdered and he stopped talking because he was worried about what else the group would do to him now that he talked. Fatima and Roundtree meanwhile were hacking the group's web page when a terrorist alert came in.

Like Killbride mentioned at the start, NCIS cases take priority. He sent some of his agents to deal with the crisis and the rest of the team continued with the Body Stitchers. The team was able to get an address from where the videos were being streamed. They went there with the FBI. They were there when someone shot one of the Body Stitchers. No one on the team knew who killed the guy. They all moved in after the shots rang out and they were able to arrest the chief Body Stitchers. They just didn't catch the ringleader. The ringleader was named Vincent. Vincent was more than just a leader. He ran this cult.

After one guy was caught by Roundtree, he demanded to talk to Vincent. The team told him that he could call them at prison and so the guy pretended to turn himself in and really he was making a last stand. He refused to drop his weapon. Or talk about Vincent. Roundtree was forced to shoot him and he was rushed to the hospital. But the team never arrested this Vincent. They had no idea what he looked like. The man they saved from the Body Stitchers only knew what he sounded like, but the team eventually learned a critical piece of information. The guy they arrested because they thought he was just a witness — he wasn't just a witness. He killed his mother. He's been working with the Body Stitchers all along.

He was protected by FBI Special Agent Collins. Collins was the person who shot one of the Body Stitchers during the live show. He was also the guy that helped one of the Body Stitchers escape the theatre. The agent didn't just help. He's Vincent. His nickname is short for Vincent Van Gough. He started a cult and he's been protecting his true people the whole time. Its why the FBI never got anywhere in their case. Its because Collins was a spy on the inside.

Norris (Patrick), Brittany Freeth (Navy Air Controller)
Production Code: 1404
Summary: Aiden Hanna's plane crashes and he is accused of being at fault for the accident, the NCIS team must investigate to clear his name. Roundtree considers how he wants to handle the aftermath of the incident with the LAPD and Sam finds a new caretaker for his father.

Sam's son Aiden was involved in a plane crash. He was forced to abort before it crashed and so he wasn't physically injured. But he at least was much better off than the plane. The plane was ruined. It went down in a blaze of glory. There went millions of dollars wasted. The Navy wanted someone to blame for their destroyed plane and naturally they thought the black guy seemed the perfect culprit. It didn't matter that he almost lost his life. Or that Aiden was way too skilled a pilot to have put his aircraft in jeopardy.

The Navy wanted to tick that boss and they only opened an investigation into what happened to protect themselves.

Everyone knew who Aiden was. Who his father was. The Navy demanded that Sam not be a part of the investigation into the crash and Lt. Commander Hirsch had said she would interview Aiden. She questioned about what he was doing before the crash. She seemed to imply that he was showboating again. Aiden was known as Sonic because he broke the sound barrier over the United States. He did that during a moment of showing off. He's also done a lot of stuff that would fall under the same umbrella as the sound barrier stuff. He was considered problematic by his bosses. It was Hirsch's opinion that he was doing something again when a 94 million dollar plane crashed.

Hirsch was questioning Aiden when Sam intervened. Sam and his father the Major were both at the hospital to see Aiden. They believed him when he said he couldn't remember. Sam also tried to defend his son against Hirsch's idea that the crash was a pilot error. Hirsch ultimately told both men to wait outside while she interviewed Aiden. Hirsch tried to get his answer on why the plane was taken off autopilot, but Aiden didn't remember doing so and the few things he can remember is that that the plane was in trouble. He felt he would have radio that in. Hirsch said they never got that distress signal.

The plane seemed fine until Aiden took it off of autopilot. She wanted to know why he did it. He couldn't remember and so his career as a pilot was at risk. He could potentially never fly again. Something he didn't even want to think about. Aiden was out of it because of his concussion and all signs of the plane indicated everything was fine until it went crashing over the city. It was lucky it didn't hit an apartment building. Or else Aiden might be under arrest. Aiden was able to piece together a few things after he followed his grandpa's advice and worked backwards. He remembered the engine going out. And how that knocked out the autopilot.

Aiden told his father what he felt happened. Sam told the rest of the team and they were able to confirm with an eye-witness that the engine went out and it came back on right before it crashed. Aiden began remembering more stuff when another pilot got into trouble. This other person was named Kegger. Kegger's plane got taken off of autopilot. He also wasn't responding as the plane was crashing and so Aiden's memories came back when he was told. He was able to talk Kegger through rebooting the system. And he saved Kegger's life with what he did, which proved his own crash wasn't pilot error.

Someone deliberately hacked both planes. There was a flaw in the system. The manufacturers knew about it and they tried to fix it. But anyone with the know how could overrule their safeguards. The manufacturer told the team all about it. The team went looking into anyone who could have been bought off by a foreign power. They didn't find anyone like that in the manufactures company, Starling. Only they did find someone in the Navy who matches that description. His name was Frazier. Frazier was later cornered by Sam, Callen, and Shyra. They asked him why he did it. He said he only did it to show the Navy that there was a flaw in the system.

No one was supposed to get hurt. Or at least that's what he's claiming. Frazier just wanted to stop the manufacturer. Frazier pretended like it did all of this for a noble reason and the real reason was money. Frazier was paid off by the manufacturer's biggest rival. They wanted to tank Starling. Then take over the contract. Frazier only did what he did for the money. He eventually turned himself in. He was going to be facing prison for a long time and the company that paid him now weren't going to get a contract despite the Navy never trusting Starling again. And so it was all for nothing.

The only thing the incident did was bring the Hanna men closer together. The Major talked to his grandson about all the head injuries he received back in the day and Sam talked about his own. Things were different in the past. They were told to walk off their injuries, but Aiden was getting help for his. And that thankfully showed overall improvement in the military.

Guest Stars: Bar Paly (Anastasia Kolcheck), Kavi Ramachandran Ladnier (NCIS Reserve Agent Shyla Dahr), Natalia del Riego (Rosa Reyes), Marnee Carpenter (Alice Morgan), Rif Hutton (Commander Albert Burns), Lauren 'Lolo' Spencer (Ella), Pamela Reed (Roberta Deeks)
Production Code: 1405
Summary: NCIS is called to investigate when a woman is seen fleeing the scene of her husband's murder. Roberta Deeks comes into town to meet Rosa, and Sam looks for another aide for his father.

NCIS was brought in on a manhunt. Or in this case a "woman hunt". They were looking for Alice Morgan. She was the wife of the late Naval Lieutenant Jeff Morgan. Morgan was brutally murdered at his home and his wife was seen fleeing from the crime scene. Now, there could be any number of reasons why she ran. She could have run because she murdered her husband. She also could have run because she was in fear for her life. The team had to find her either way and they had to investigate Morgan's death as well. Morgan wasn't just any naval officer. He was on a DOD task force that was working on a highly classified mission that aimed to network the entire US military. And so he could have been killed by a rival government.

Everyone was a suspect. Russia, Iran, and China were leading the queue. The team had plenty of suspects and they felt splitting up would help them get a grip on the many angles of the case. Sam took Callen to go talk to Morgan's Commanding Officer. Commander Burns didn't seem fazed by Morgan's murder. He tried to tell the guys he was too busy to be wasting time by coming to the boat shed. But they insisted. He ended up meeting with them and he was still feeling a type of way. He also had no clue who killed Morgan. He was asked about Alice. Burns said she wasn't very friendly and that she seemed standoffish.

Deeks and Roundtree went to the victim's home. They went searching for evidence of who could have killed Morgan and all they found was that the couple lived above their means. They used the money on expensive vacations, and watches and they were basically broke. Shyra was later able to determine that Alice booked a luxury rental house literally an hour after her husband was murdered. Alice was definitely on the run. She rented a house a couple of counties away. Even if it was just her now. And Deeks and Callen went to the rental and they picked up Alice before she could run again.

Alice refused to talk to them at the time. She claimed that she talked and talked and no one was listening when it mattered. She then claimed she no longer wants to talk. Roundtree wanted to push her. He wanted to keep questioning her and Deeks came up with another tactic. Deeks noticed that Alice was favoring one side. She also did her best to cover up some bruises on her arm. Deeks noticed this and it reminded him of when he and his mother were abused. Deeks recognized the signs in Alice. He opened up to her about when he was abused as a kid. It helped her to identify with him and she realized it was safe to talk to him.

Alice admitted she was a battered wife. She reported her husband twice. Both times to the naval authority and nothing was ever done about him. She was made aware very early on that Morgan meant something to the Navy while she does not. No one believed her. No one helped her. Morgan forced her to push everyone away and so she had no one to turn to when she came home to find him dead. Alice even tried to save him. She knew that her reports against him might make her look guilty and that's why she ran. Alice didn't kill her husband. Her husband was up to some shady stuff. She said he would often come home late and smell of oil.

It turns out the Navy not only protected an abuser, but they also overlooked he was a possible terrorist. Morgan used his contact with the Navy to get his hands on enough C4 to create a bomb. Morgan has been using his position to get everything he could to make a terrorist-level bomb. His boss didn't notice any of the stuff was missing until NCIS called him to tell him about it. Burns was the same guy that didn't follow up on any of Alice's outcries. He said he didn't have enough evidence to pursue a case against Morgan much less bench him. And yet Morgan was secretly making a bomb behind his back that he planned on selling to Ivan Parsons.

Parsons was officially in Import/Export. He claimed on paper that he just helps people with fancy food and wine and the truth is that he has ties with many extremist groups all around the world. He was an arms dealer. He approached Morgan. Morgan was living above his means and was heavily in debt. His wife didn't have access to any of the bank accounts. She didn't know that her husband had three bank accounts and that Parsons was making payments to all of them. Parsons must have killed Morgan the moment he got the bombs. The team then went looking for Parsons. They found him at the warehouse for his legitimate business. And while he did set off a bomb, they were able to arrest him without anyone getting seriously hurt.

Kensi stayed home during this case because she was introducing her mother-in-law to Rosa. But Bertie being back in town helped Deeks with talking about his dad. And that man abusing them.

And Callen went home to Anna where he told her he needed to look for Hetty. He needed answers. He couldn't move on without them or plan a wedding without them and so Callen was going to be the one person who will talk. He's going after Hetty.

Summary: NCIS is called to investigate after Rear Admiral Ted Gordon is abducted from his home. Kensi struggles with being the fun parent while Deeks is apartment hunting with his mom.

Kensi doesn't think she has a chance to become the fun parent. Not as long as she was co-parenting with Deeks anyways. Deeks was a fun guy. He has the cool surfer vibe down. Deeks also took a personal day to help his mother look for a new apartment nearby them and so Kensi was admitting her fears to Fatima when a new case came in. The team was brought in on an abduction. They had to find Rear Admiral Ted Gordon. Gordon was seen by his neighbors as well as his own security cameras being abducted from his home by two masked men. The team first wondered if he had been taken for ransom and yet they quickly realized Gordon wouldn't have been the best bet for that.

Gordon doesn't have a family. He never married or had children. He doesn't even have any close family friends. It seems he lived for his job. Gordon was an engineer on a maritime project. He and his own team were building underwater robots. These same robots have been accused of infiltrating foreign waters, but it has never been proven and Gordon's project wasn't a secret from the American public. He actually did a public interview about it. He went on the Marcus Moore's show. Moore was a techno-social media influencer and Gordon received approval to do the interview beforehand. As for the interview itself, it was harmless.

Gordon never revealed any serious intel. He gave basic answers that didn't reveal much. Gordon had made it seem like he was the brains and the only man who could operate the underwater gliders. Only that had been a lie. Gordon had a whole team to help him navigate the grinders. He couldn't operate it on his own and NCIS were worried he would be killed by his abductors once they found that out. It was imperative that they find Gordon fast. They went to his home to search for clues. They found that it had been ransacked. Gordon's abductors had been looking for something and they didn't find it.

But Sam and Callen did. Callen didn't go disappear after Hetty just yet. He stayed behind long enough to be there when this case came in and it's a good thing too. He and Sam figured out Gordon's clues. Gordon had hidden his journal inside a boat model. The boat's sails had the words "inside" written in morse code. The two agents broke open the model and they found the journal. Callen soon began to read the journal when it became clear that Gordon's true passion was treasure hunting. Gordon was looking into a Spanish Galleon that sunk back in 1602. The ship was apparently carrying treasure onboard when it sunk.

One of the things that Gordon admitted in his interview was that his glinders could find a sunken ship. Gordon also admitted in his journal that he has a treasure map. The only person that Gordon told about the map was Meredith Huxley. She was a librarian. Gordon turned to her to validate his map as being from the seventeenth century and he got angry with her for holding onto his map. The team asked Meredith about it. She said she had to go out of town because her daughter just had a baby and she wanted to see her grandchild. She gave Gordon back the map the moment she returned to LA. And she wished him the best of luck on his treasure hunt.

Meredith didn't seem to believe there was an actual treasure. Gordon had told her they found the ship debris with the glinder one day and she thought he was making it bigger than it was. But the team remembered that Gordon couldn't operate the glinder on his own. He had to have had help. They turned back to Gordon's coworker. They had spoken with Jesse Fiore early in the investigation. He was the one who called Gordon pompous. He also mentioned Gordon couldn't use the glinder without him and so they went looking for him. They eventually found Jesse looking for Gordon's map. Jesse had been in on the kidnapping.

Jesse wasn't intentionally in on the kidnapping. He and Gordon found the missing ship. They found the map together. Gordon said he would get the gold by himself and that he would split with Jesse. Jesse hadn't trusted Gordon. He, therefore, went online and started a treasure-hunting group with two sketchy guys he didn't really know. Those guys kidnapped Gordon. They were all looking for a map because the treasure had been removed from the ship. Plus, there was a map that confirmed the treasure exists. It was Gordon who was holding onto the map. Jesse was trying to find it with help of his friends when NCIS caught up to them and manage to arrest Jesse. Now, Jesse didn't know where his friends took Gordon, but the team continued their search.

They had all of Gordon's notes. They were able to decipher all the clues and they figured out where the treasure was. It was located on a little island off the coast of California. It was also dangerous because the island has been used as a weapons testing sight and it was crawling with unexploded landmines. Sam and Callen went after Gordon. They were able to deal with the two men guarding him and they rescued Gordon. They didn't bring him back to the mainland with them because Gordon decided to continue looking for the treasure. And he had his own boat

Gordon doesn't have much. The team let him keep up his search. They only found out much later that was in fact treasure and that Gordon had claimed it.

As for Kensi, Fatima figured out a treasure hunt taking Rose all around the city would be a perfect way for Kensi to become the fun parent.

Production Code: 1407
Summary: When a Marine falls ill during a training mission due to an attack by a genetic weapon, the NCIS must track down the person responsible for unleashing it. Also, Deeks struggles with balancing work and home life when Rosa comes down with the flu.

Roberta Deeks moved into her son's neighborhood. She now eighty-four seconds away. She tends to take that as an open invitation to come by Deeks's home whenever she wishes and lately she's been trying to turn the whole family vegan. Roberta was vegan. She now thinks the whole family should be vegan too. She shows up with vegan donuts and Rosa couldn't eat it because she was sick. Rosa had the flu. It's been going around at her high school. Deeks found out when he called to excuse Rosa from school and he wanted to do more, but he got called into work. Deeks left Rosa in the care of his mother. And then he went into work.

He and the others were brought in to investigate the impending death of Marine Private First Class Edward Hanson. Hanson suffered a massive seizure during a friendly match against his fellow officer. He wasn't hit in the head or anything like that. He's also never had a history of seizures. He went from not having any to suddenly have his organs shut down on while he's in a coma. Hanson's illness was brought on too quickly. Too unnaturally to be dismissed. It was investigated and the doctors believe they found something. They believe his impending death was first attack using a genetic weapon. The Department of the Defense brought in NCIS to investigate. They wanted them to start at the army base where Hanson had the seizure.

Hanson has been struggling since joining the military. He wasn't fast, he wasn't strong, and he sure wasn't smart. Him winning that friendly bout was the first sign of improvement since he joined up. Then he quickly had that seizure. His training officer had thought he pushed Hanson too hard. But NCIS later came around. They had everyone in contact with Hanson to do a blood test. The only one they couldn't reach was Hanson best friend as well as roommate, PFC James Williams. Williams was missing. The team tried to find him. They were able to figure out where he was going. Williams was going to LA.

Williams recently opened a joint cryptocurrency account with Hanson. They haven't been collecting money. They've been giving it away. They were paying some guy named Xander Yost thousands of dollars. Deeks and Roundtree went to the Yost's house. They quickly found Williams. Williams said he didn't kill him. Roundtree said Hanson wasn't dead, but that wasn't who Williams was talking about. Williams was talking about Yost. Yost was dead. He was killed and stuffed in a freezer. Williams was claiming he found Yost that way. Yost was a former med student whose specialty was gene therapy. And that's why both Hanson and Williams turned to him.

They were the bottom of their group. They thought gene therapy would help them with strength and speed. Which was happened the first few times they were taking their orders. But something changed when Hanson had his seizure. Williams tried to get in touch with Yost. Yost wasn't answering him. This is what compelled Williams to seek out Yost. He found him dead and the lab was missing. It was no longer at Yost's place. It was all gone. Williams thought Yost's assistant might know what's going on. He gave them the assistant's information. They traced him back to a crowd-funded lab.

Fatima pretended to be someone interested in joining. She wore a wire and she pretended to be someone else, but her cover was blown because one guy had a frequency transmitter attached to his skull and he was able to put together that Fatima was wearing a wire. That she was a fed. He then announced it to everyone. Only Fatima was quick on her feet. She pretended her wire was just something she wears to help with her condition. Her quick thinking got everyone to back down and she got to see more of Opensource Bio. She found out that Yost's assistant was Nicholas Embry. And that he was no longer at Opensource because he demanded to use CRSPR. And they told him no.

But before he left, he stole several pieces of equipment. Embry did the same with Yost. It turns out Embry wanted to kill as much as he could using Yost's gene therapy. He killed Yost when the other man found out what he was doing and tried to stop him. Embry wanted to eliminate everyone that has a genetic defect. Embry himself was diabetic. He was also suicidal. He felt he was never meant to live and so he wanted to contaminate insulin to kill off the other people he felt were "defective". The team caught up with him and they were able to take him down before he hurt anyone else. And the team were still talking about it when Callen realized he lost his nephew's pet snake at the warehouse.

The snake was named Houdini because he liked to escape his cage.

And Deeks returned home after a day of worrying for Rosa. It had even affected work and the Admiral took him task before he was told about Rosa's condition. Admiral Killbride went on to apologize once he knew the truth. He said all fathers worry about their children. And he knew tht there was nothing Deeks wanted more than to be with his daughter when she was sick.

Production Code: 1408
Summary: NCIS investigates an arson attack at Global West Ventures Corp, a naval defense contractor. Rountree connects with an ex and Kilbride gives Callen files on Pembroke.

An arsonist has graduated to murder on tonight's episode. The man he killed was identified as Michael Duncan. He was the foreman at a construction site. Global West Ventures Corp wanted to expand their buildings and so they hired Michael and Michael was supposed to lead the team to that expansion. But Michael ran into someone setting fires in the building. He tried to stop them. He got into a fight with this other man and the other guy knocked out Michael before dragging him into the center of the fire. The arsonist who did this was very familiar face to the federal government. He was Randall Perez. Perez leaves a signature burn mark at every fire he starts. And he was on several watchlists because of his crimes.

Perez was an ecoterrorist. He was wanted by one of the NCIS teams for torching the building of a navy contractor. But the team got help from the FBI with this investigation. The FBI has been pursuing Perez for years over his ecoterrorism. He loves to destroy buildings to make a political statement. The guy was so focused on his agenda that he didn't even raise his own daughter. He ditched his daughter. He gave her to his sister and the sister hasn't seen him since then. The daughter however has been in contact with them. Crystal just graduated high school, she has a job, and she's ready to go to college.

But Crystal put that all at risk because she was in contact with her father. Her mom died not long after she was born and her aunt wasn't really someone to go to for hugs. Crystal said she's been talking to her dad. He told her why he went on the run. He explained his reasonings and he also said that was behind him now. Perez claimed he retired. His daughter wants to believe he retired. The federal agents on the case though came to suspect that there was a copycat arsonist.

It would be the only way for Perez to be innocent. And if Perez was telling his family he was guilty of the other fires just not this one — he might be telling the truth.

The feds still tracked down Perez's burner phone. Perez was wanted for other crimes. The team was able to connect his burner phone to his sister's phone because he called her and so they followed the sister to her meet with her brother. The feds wanted to arrest both, but Perez somehow escaped again and so all they could arrest was the sister. The same sister that had lied earlier to NCIS. She told them she didn't know where her brother was and that if she did she'd tell them. Only the truth was that Perez told her he didn't set the latest fire. And she believed him because it was her brother and she still loves him.

The rest of the team however found Perez's lab. They tested it. It showed the same material used in the fire that killed Michael and there was another piece of evidence. The arsonist that set that fire had caught a ride with someone. Meaning there was two people involved in Michael's death. The team couldn't figure out who the other person until they found the lab and they collected evidence from it. They were looking for Marco Navarro. The team initially thought he was in it with Perez and yet they had been wrong. They later found Perez hiding in one of his hiding places. They asked him about the fire and that's when he confessed he hadn't set that one.

Perez said a man named Marco Navarro was the one who set the fire. The two men had been friends and then Perez had to go on the run and so he left Navarro in charge of his lab. He didn't want anyone coming across some of his stuff much less endangering themselves. But Navarro decided to pursue his own agenda with Perez's lab. He was another ecoterrorist and he didn't care who died. Navarro also roped in Perez's daughter Crystal into his mess. Crystal thought she was fulfilling her father's dream and she went on to cross lines he never did. They wanted to kill people. They weren't done with killing people.

From that same lab, they got evidence that Navarro and Crystal wanted to kill a senator for shooting down a prominent green bill. One that would have generated a lot of jobs well as safeguarding the country from global warming. But the senator didn't care about all of that. He didn't care about the planet and that's why Navarro and Crystal wanted him dead, but it was the team that stopped them. They warned the senator's people. They went to his location. They saved the senator and they arrested the remaining ecoterrorists. Both Navarro and Crystal are going away for life and soon everyone will forget what their mission was about. And so all of this had been for nothing because all anyone will remember is that they killed people.

Admiral Kilbride later gave Callen a file about his youth. The admiral also tried to say that anything Hetty did hadn't come from a bad place. Sure, she made mistakes, but she always worked for the betterment of good. And the Admiral wanted Callen to think about that before he makes anymore rash decisions.

Summary: When NCIS investigates a shootout on a boat in which a rare cultural artifact is stolen, they're shocked to learn who owns the boat.

Fatima was out of the office. She normally leaves behind an excuse list for Roundtree. That way Roundtree knows what to say when Admiral Killbride asks, but he lost the list and so he had to come up with a story on the fly and the real reason Fatima wasn't in the office because she was getting coffee with a new friend.

Roundtree meanwhile was walking on thin ice with the admiral. He told the Admiral that Fatima wasn't there because her dog got hit by a car. He said this after claiming she had a car appointment.

He said that also after saying she had a medical emergency. And so a case helped to take the pressure off of Roundtree.

NCIS was informed when two Russian Nationals were killed on a yacht in Arkady Kolcheck's name. Arkady was supposedly out of the espionage business, but why would his boat be the crime scene of two murders. Roundtree had suggested they call in Callen for this one. Only Admiral Killbride said not to. He said he'd talk to Arkady.

Killbride later found Arkady at a bar and he tried to talk to him. He really did. It just didn't work out because Arkady was that drunk. He also denies having any yachts and so Killbride grew tired of having to deal with him and he called in Callen. Callen got Arkady clean. And he stashed him at the boat shed.

Kensi and Deeks went to the crime scene. They searched it for evidence and they found a hidden camera. The camera also showed that there was one survivor from that blood bath. Her name was Mira. Mira was Arkady's ex-girlfriend. He recognized her from the footage. They haven't seen each other in forty years.

It was long before Arkady met Ana's mother. Arkady said she was spy when he last knew her. He had no clue she was in the United States or why someone would want her dead. It turns out Mira was acting as an antiques dealer and she got robbed. Some people she was trying to make a deal with had thought it best to skip the deal part and just shoot their way into getting a Fabergé egg.

Those eggs were specifically crafted for the Russian Imperial Family. They were worth millions and Mira only trusted that deal with them because they had been cleared by the auction house. Or at least that's what Mira told them when they were finally able to track her down. They tracked her down and reintroduced her to Arkady.

She beat Arkady up when she saw him. They ended on bad terms. So bad in fact that Mira uses the name Arkady Kolcheck as an alias. If anyone wanted to look into her money or her businesses, it would all lead right back to Arkady himself. And so Mira got Arkady into serious trouble.

According to Mira, she started to help clients liquidate their assets. She did so after a number of Russian oligarchs were being killed before they could escape with their billions. Mira stepped in. She took advantage of the situation. Now people want her and her silent "partner" dead. And this is all because of Ukraine.

Russia was losing the war in Ukraine and they were killing people off with the hopes of stealing their valuables and put that towards the war effort. And so not only is the enemy unstable, but they also have access to some of Mira's hideaways and she needed to clear out some boxes before they could be found.

Mira couldn't go herself. She therefore sent Arkady to act like he was her partner all along. But trusting Mira proved to be a mistake. It wasn't until Arkady got all dressed up and even went with Deeks who was pretending to be a Swedish prince that everything went wrong. They got to Mira's storage facility. They tried to get the items she asked them to get and unfortunately the same people that wanted Mira dead earlier had showed up then. They showed up with Mira. Mira planned on betraying Arkady and getting away with the goods. But first thing first — she turned on her captors and she helped Kensi arrest them before she too ultimately got arrested.

And through all of that, Arkady still wanted to give her a chance to run and she turned him down. But she did give him an expensive necklace. A necklace that can fund his dream of a bar.

Summary: While Agent Rountree and Fatima are searching for Kilbride, who has been MIA, they are ambushed and learn that every member of the team has a $200,000 bounty on their head via the dark web. The NCIS team must save Agent Rountree and find Kilbride while every cartel, hit man, gang and psychopath hunts them down.

Callen had learned that Admiral Killbride was part of a secret CIA assassin program known as "Simon Williams". But someone restarted the program. They did so unsanctioned by the government. They started using it for personal gain and they even have rouge CIA contractors acting as their personal kill team. These people were after Admiral Killbride.

The admiral's life was endangered because one of the few that can be called to testify against the program and his team wanted to at least talk to him about it and they couldn't because he disappeared. Killbride simply vanished. The cameras at the Los Angeles office didn't even pick up when he left the building.

Killbride had vanished into thin air. There was no sign of him. He wasn't answering phone nor could it be located. Even his house was empty. The house hadn't looked like anyone actually lived there because there were no photos or books or anything personal in the whole place.

So, Fatima was questioning if the house was a cover when suddenly someone barged into the house shooting at everything that moved before escaping. Fatima was miraculously alright. Roundtree on the other hand was abducted. This was the fourth abduction connected to Simon Williams. There's no telling what those people want with Roundtree, but people can make a guess.

Roundtree was taken because Morgan Miller wanted to know where Admiral Killbride was. Only he didn't know where Killbride was. Morgan asked and each and every time Roundtree would reply with a smart remark. Its why he's getting tortured while everyone else was still looking for Killbride.

Killbride's own people didn't really know him all that well. They knew he was a Republic. They knew he has a son that he seemed estranged from. They didn't know he was former CIA or that he was part of an assassination program of all things. But the person running the Simon Williams program had put out a hit on several NCIS Agents.

Special Agent Afloat Lucy Tara had found a kill list on the dark web. It was basically a craigslist for killers. It was a two hundred thousand bitcoin reward for anyone willing to kill the agents from the Virginia office, Los Angeles Office, and the Hawaii Office.

This proved a problem because random people began firing at them all throughout the day while they look for the admiral as well as for Roundtree. The agents also got a sound message that came to their office through an encrypted device. The message was about reaching out to Gwen Jones and Jimmy McCain. And the message itself seemed to be from Hetty.

Hetty has fingers in a lot of a pies. She probably knew about the Simon Williams program. Gwen Jones was a costume designer. Jimmy McCain was someone who has a striking resemblance to the admiral. It was clear that Hetty wanted them to use Jimmy McCain as a lure for the rogue CIA officers.

They thought Morgan Miller would be one of them. Only she wasn't. The assassins came for the fake admiral and they were either killed off or arrested and none of them was Morgan Miller. She had stayed behind with Roundtree. She probably did so because she plans on killing Roundtree once he's no longer useful.

Morgan has Roundtree convinced that she has Fatima as well. But she doesn't. Fatima escaped her and she's looking for her in order to get back Roundtree. Everyone was looking for Morgan Miller. They eventually tracked her down thanks to the people they arrested and they were later able to free Roundtree.

He was going to need medical attention as well as a psych evaluation. But Morgan Miller is dead. She was shot by Admiral Killbride. He was following the team and thanks to them he knew how to get close enough to Morgan Miller to shoot and kill her.

And Admiral Killbride later returned to the office like nothing happened. Like he wasn't hunted. The Admiral was in such a good mood that he tried to convince Special Agent Parker to trade with him. Parker stays in LA and Killbride goes back to D. C.

But Parker chose to pass on the offer because he was happy where he was.

Production Code: 1411
Summary: When Sam's friend Tom Olsen finds himself being hunted down by enemies from his past, the NCIS team must find out who is after him.

A hunter went off seeking game in the woods when he was targeted. He was hunting with a literal bow and arrow when gunmen showed up. He killed two of them, but they just kept coming. The hunter went on the run trying to lose the rest of the guys with guns and the men he killed were later found by a park ranger. It was the park ranger that called the authorities.

The authorities then notified NCIS because they knew what those men were in the park for. They knew they were hunting Tom Olson. Tom was a former Navy SEAL. He eventually retired. He's since written books about his time undercover and someone was trying to kill him.

Olson dropped his ID behind as he fled from the men with guns. The cops ended up fighting it and that coupled with the fact the two murder victims were found with semi-automatics and everyone realize what had happened. But the chief concern was not finding who was behind the hit. It was protecting Tom. The Department of Justice sent Agent Hamilton to assist with the case. Hamilton was a longtime friend of NCIS. Kensi was happy to be working with him and together it was their job to find Tom.

It was everyone's first priority to bring Tom home alive. But the rest of the team were still looking into who would want Tom dead. Fatima was joined by Sabatino to question Tom's wife. Lauren Olsen didn't seem concerned about her husband. She said he knew the Utah wild life like the back of his hand.

He wouldn't be found until he wanted to be found. Lauren also added that Tom started writing books to help with the cash flow and that he wasn't worried about the blowback to himself. He was more worried about what it could do to his family. He didn't want his wife or his son to face punishment for what he did.

There was one guy who was getting loud at Tom's latest book signing. Except that person was removed before Tom came onto the scene and so Tom was never told about this troublemaker. The person that caused the ruckus was identified as Luke Austin. Fatima and Sabatino went looking for Luke.

They found him at his job. Luke told them how he was a fan of Tom's books until Tom killed off his favorite character. Luke now thinks all the books are garbage and he went to the book signing to tell Tom so. And he bought up a couple of guns because he likes gun. He hasn't actually used them on people.

Meanwhile Kensi was using the main character from Tom's books to get a profile on Tom. Tom basically wrote the main character as himself and so Kensi realized he would do what the character does. He would walk back into his tracks in order not to make any new ones. Kensi found his real tracks. She also was able to determine that he was injured. There was some blood found on a rock and the blood was B-. Tom's blood type. It was a rare blood type. And so everyone was worried about Tom's losing blood.

They thought that would slow him down. But they were wrong. Kensi and Hamilton found Tom. Tom's injury was to his arm. He was still in fighting shape and he was given a bottle of water to help with dehydration. He took down five men. They were told that there was still five more out there. Which was a problem because the bad guys have a drone. They bought the drone around the same time that they bought their ghost guns and they were using the drone to carry C4. It was basically a flying bomb at this point.

Whoever wanted Tom dead was willing to do anything to get it done. Fatima and Sabatino were following up with an arms dealer who sold the weapons to the bad guys. It turns out the bad guys were Brazilian. They spoke Portuguese with a Brazilian accent. Fatima managed to get control of the drone. She used it to take down the men that were after Tom and that got Tom to safety. He made it to the helicopter and that was followed by a ride on the private plane. He was coming back to LA.

It turns out Tom had killed a gun dealer back in the day who had ties to terrorism. But the dead dude's brother paid good money to find out who killed his brother and then sought out revenge. He wanted to kill Tom any way he could. But NCIS stopped him. They rescued Tom. They arrested the attempted killers. They even arrested the arms dealer that sold them that gun. And so hopefully this will be the last for it because people weren't sure on how much longer they were going to use Nina Barnes as a source.

Production Code: 1412
Summary: The NCIS team must quickly find Kensi and Fatima after they are kidnapped and drugged while searching for a missing Navy lieutenant who they learn has ties to a dangerous Islamic militia.

Fatima has been doing really great with her self-defense classes. She was even joined by her new "friend" during these classes and they would use the opportunity to flirt. They were transitioning from their safe date to one on one date stage when Fatima got called into work.

There was a missing Navy Nuclear Weapons Specialist. Her name was Lieutenant Zahra Mahmad. She's been missing for several hours and that along was concerning because Zahra was involved in a top secret recon mission in hostile territory. She wouldn't have disappeared during such a mission unless something happened to her.

Admiral Kilbride spoke to Zahra Commanding Officer. Captain Alonzo couldn't give the Admiral any word on where this mission was or what it entails. He just said that they have a day to find Zahra or this mission would get turned into a suicide mission in enemy territory. NCIS then split up to find Zahra.

They thought they would cover more ground that way, but it was hard to find a woman who might have walked away on her own accord. Callen and Sam had gone to Zahra's house. They found the place untouched. It hadn't been ransacked. There were no clear signs of a struggle. And this was on top of Zahra getting twenty thousand out of her account.

There was also Zahra's family. They claimed to have no idea where Zahra was or if she was in trouble. Only Zahra's mother pretended not to know English. It was a lie and she might have been hiding the fact she knew English because she was scared of authority though it was still odd. The mother got caught when Fatima noticed she's been following along in the conversation. It was therefore especially concerning when the woman broke down in tears when they mentioned Zahra's brother. Zahra's family hadn't wanted to tell them anything about her brother.

They also didn't want to talk about Zahra's boyfriend. The boyfriend was trouble. It had taken Roundtree looking into him for the team to learn that Ted has a juvenile record and was heavily in debt. Ted did a lot of high risk loans when he was in school. His girlfriend may have been trying to help him pay those off and that's why she took out twenty grand. The team figured that Ted would know about it if that was the case. Kensi and Deeks went to the boyfriend's home and they found him tortured and left for dead.

They had to call an ambulance for him. They also spoke to his neighbors. One neighbor remembered a black SVU blocking her driveway the day before Ted was found. She had called it in and so there was a record of it with LAPD. The SVU was a rental. The guy who rented it had paid in cash and was therefore hard to trace. But NCIS did get into contact with Zahra's brother, Omar. Omar said he stepped away from his family because they disagreed on religion. His family was traditionalists. They even beat him as a child for being too westernized.

Omar hasn't spoken to his family in years because he moved away from their ideology. Zahra must have done the same because she was after all in a relationship with a non-Muslim and that man was tortured to almost the brink of death. It was only after they spoke to Omar that the pieces started to all fit. They found out Zahra had been taken by her family. They connected the rented SVU to Zahra's cousin by the name of Muhammed Hassan. Hassan was part of an extremist group in Pakistan.

He boarded a flight to the States with two others under false pretenses. They pretended to be tourists when they were in fact there to collect Zahra. Her family had arranged a marriage for her. Its why they tried getting the boyfriend out of the way. They were going to marry Zahra to a businessman back in Pakistan. But Zahra hadn't wanted to go. Zahra took out the money because she was trying to bribe the businessman to leave her alone and the plan didn't work. Her cousin got to her first.

They abducted Zahra. Zahra's parents then tried to intervene and the cousin beat up the father. Kensi and Fatima had stopped by the parents' restaurant when the cousin snuck up on them. They got taken hostage. Deeks started freaking out. It was Roundtree that came through. Roundtree found out that Zahra's uncle had bought up property in Long Beach. The team went there. By the time they arrived, Kensi and Fatima had escaped a burning car. They managed to sneak up behind the cousin and knock him out.

They also saved Zahra. It seems the plan was to honor kill Zahra for not doing as they demanded. NCIS was able to put a stop to that and they rescued her in time for that top secret mission not to go sideways. Zahra was later reunited with her boyfriend who was going to make a full recovery. Her parents were also doing alright. And they finally realized that they couldn't force their American children into following their ideologies.

And Zahra's uncle was in trouble overseas because he orchestrated this whole thing.

Production Code: 1413
Summary: When a mystery woman attacks the founder of an AI company, the NCIS team must identify the woman before the next major global conflict ensues. Also, Kilbride's ex-wife, Elizabeth, comes to visit and asks him to think about reconnecting with their son.

Admiral Killbride was out of the office when the latest case came in. He was busy with his ex-wife. Her name is Elizabeth. She asked to meet up for drinks and that eventually turned into something more because they ended up going back to his place together. It was now the morning after. Killbride has a case. He knew he should be in the office and instead he wanted to know Elizabeth's real reason for seeking him out. She wouldn't have done so without a reason. Killbride knows her too well to fall for how she just wanted to catch up. And so he asked her why she was in LA?

Killbride has been located in LA for a couple of years now. It was only now that Elizabeth wanted to see him? He knew when she was withholding something. He also knew that she hadn't missed him as much as she claims and so he wanted answers. Answers she wasn't prepared to give him at first. She delayed for as long as possibly until she broke and said that she wanted him to get back into contact with their son. Killbride and their son had a falling out. They currently weren't a part of each other's lives and Killbride was fine with that.

Killbride didn't want to argue with Elizabeth. He decided to leave her at his place while he went in to work. Killbride was hoping to get back to what he's good at, but everyone there checked up on him. They were worried when he didn't come in earlier. They knew that wasn't like him. Only Killbride again complained about wasting his golden years in LA and then he went back to focusing on work. The team was investigating the attempted murder of Sean Baker. Sean was the founder of a tech company that has a lot of DOJ contracts.

It turns out Sean was building robots. These were supposed to be capable of everything. They would be used to find Americans out in a battlefield. So that no man was left behind. These robots would also offer medical aide and so someone stole that technology as well as thrown Sean over a second story banister. Sean was in surgery. There thankfully a lot of evidence because this happened in a hotel. Sean had been staying there. He had taken his technology with him to the hotel and the technology was in his suitcase.

The team had thought it was odd that Sean would use a hotel. He was from LA after all. His business was run out of LA and so there was a reason for him being at the hotel. The team looked into it. They found out that Sean had made several robotic chips lately. Like he made more than what the military was testing. It seems Sean was getting too tired of the exclusivity contract that the Navy made him sign. He wanted to make more money. He basically wrote up an add online saying that he's willing to sell the technology. And so he was committing treason when he was almost killed.

Sean had never met the buyer until that day. Which was why he didn't recognize the person he was meeting up was in fact a woman. She flirted with him a bit and then she grabbed his bag by "accident". She was walking off when Sean tried to stop her. She throws him over the balcony and then escaped with the suitcase through the backdoor. This woman was so good that they didn't have a record for her. They had to go their favorite baker to identify her and it turns out she was an arms dealer.

Colleen has never been caught. She left the game a couple of years ago and it kinda of surprising to see her back in it now. She must have come out of retirement because robots were the way of the future. Colleen was making a deal to sell the robots to a couple of Russians by time NCIS tracked her down. They had to hit the building. They worked their way up to arrest everyone they came across and they did their best to ensure that the robots mircochips never got away. Or at least they did until they realized the mircochips they have were all fakes.

Colleen has gotten rid of the real ones. She found a conscience after her peaceful home on the border to the Ukraine was flooded with refugees and she could no longer ignore the real cost of these arms deals. But she was going to sell the fake ones because as she says "a girl's gotta eat". Colleen was arrested for the attempted murder.

And Admiral Killbride found out that his son Alexander was in an outpatient at a treatment center. It seems their son was fighting back against the addiction that caused the rift in the relationship with his dad and Elizabeth thought it would do their son some good to see his father there at a meeting. And so Killbride agreed to go to one.

Summary:	When a petty officer is found dead with an apparent suicide note, the NCIS team must investigate the mystery surrounding his death. Also, Callen and Anna begin wedding planning and Sam has a heart to heart with his daughter.

The episode begins with Sam who was taking the day off. His daughter was in town. He wanted to catch up with her. He wanted to spend time with her and he couldn't do that all that much because Kam had to study for a big test. Kam was also talking to someone named Riley while she was supposed to be studying. Sam became curious of this Riley. Not that he asked Kam if it was a guy or a girl. He just remained nearby to be there if Kam needs him. Sam may have taken the day off, but the rest of NCIS were dealing with their own problems.

Fatima, Kensi, Roundtree, and Deeks were working a case.

There was a suicide onboard a navy ship. The victim's name was Petty Officer Eli Wassner. He killed himself recently and he was the third suicide in the past three months. There was no agent afloat to investigate because Lucy left the ship earlier than scheduled. So, it was up to the LA arm to pick up the slack. They were told to investigate what was causing all these suicides and put a stop to it. Something they tried to do. They sent agents to go board the ship and they questioned Eli's CO. Everyone was saying that they didn't see this coming.

Eli's own wife didn't see it coming. She was questioned back on land and she said that Eli was in a great place lately. They talked about having kids. They agreed to try once Eli left the ship and so to hear he killed himself just didn't sit right. Eli used to write his wife a bunch of love letters. Yet, there were no letters indicating that something got to him or that he wanted out or was even suicidal. He talked about everything else with his wife. He just didn't discuss anything about what lead up to his death.

The agents took a look at some of Eli's letters. They were hoping to find a clue in there for their investigation and they learned that Eli hadn't written his suicide note. The note was written by someone else. With that now becoming a fact, the team had to rule Eli's death as a possible homicide. NCIS looked into who would want him dead. It wouldn't be any visitors or guests because they haven't had one of those in the past forty-eight. And so Eli's killer was still on the ship with both Kensi and Fatima.

The ladies had to question everyone they talked to, again. They brought in Eli's CO. Chief Petty Officer Kemi Adebayo couldn't understand Eli's suicide and now she was at a loss over his murder. She was Eli's direct boss. She went to the bat for him to get home to his wife after they suffered a miscarriage and so she was one of the good ones. She genuinely cared about people. She had no idea why someone would kill Eli. She however have suspects. She checked to see who was around that area where Eli's body was found and she got a name.

His name is Petty Officer Bradshaw. Bradshaw was seen in that area. Bradshaw has also been acting oddly. He went on a home visit only to ignore his wife and meet up with other people. He was also hiding money in an offshore account. One his wife didn't know about. Bradshaw seemed to be using money to spend a lot of time at a bar. NCIS thought he must be selling Navy secrets, but they had been wrong. Bradshaw wasn't a traitor to his country. He was keeping secrets because he was gay. He was gay and he lived in fear of the "Don't Ask Don't Tell" policy coming back.

Bradshaw's buddy Rondel operates a secret gay bar. One that a lot of military men and women could visit without having to worry about being outed. Bradshaw went disappearing onboard. He met up with his lover and he tried to stop Command Master Chief Petty Officer Jalen Hughes from killing himself. It was Hughes who murder Eli. Eli had seen them kiss. They became afraid he would tell someone and so Hughes tried to bribe him, but Eli was by the book and he was going to report the bribe when he was killed.

Now, Hughes goes away from murder. Bradshaw was outed as gay and that might doom his marriage to his woman. But as it happens, Sam's daughter came out as bisexual tonight. She was currently dating a young woman and Sam had to find that out on his own. He then told his daughter that he was her ride or die. He was never going to turn his back on her. He just wants his daughter to be happy. And right now she was.

Callen meanwhile had taken the day to help pick a theme for his wedding to Anna, but they quickly fought about everything involving this wedding.

Summary: Sam Hanna must go undercover as a fighter to catch the leader of a gang dealing drugs on the streets.

Detective Ellen Whiting showed up on Deeks's doorstep needing help. She was disheveled. She had blood on her and she didn't ask for help. She told Deeks he owes her help. She was calling on the many favors he owes her for her helping him out and so it was only fair that he return the favor.

Whiting was in trouble. She started investigating a possible connection between dirty cops and the fentanyl drug trade when suddenly she had to run for her life. She was being framed for the death of her informant. They were people shooting at her. She couldn't use her cell phone or her credit cards. She didn't know who to trust and she turned to Deeks because she knew he wouldn't turn her away.

Deeks could have said this whole situation was too much for him. Only he didn't. He chose to help Whiting because he does owe her. She wasn't everyone's cup of tea only that didn't stop her from being a good cop. She does good work. Deeks didn't even need to think about it before he was agreeing to help her and he got everyone else onboard too. He brought in Admiral Killbride. He had Whiting tell her story to the admiral herself so that none of the information gets lost in a game of telephone. And Whiting's story went beyond what happened to her.

Whiting said that everything began after she warned Roundtree about Officer McNeil's punishment. McNeil had been the one to mace Roundtree during a traffic stop and the brass had wanted to put him on paid administration leave. Whiting hadn't thought that was enough. She told Roundtree about it and he decided to pursue his official complaint against the officer. Well, someone didn't like that. They told Whiting to pressure him into dropping the complaint. They even threatened her job and so Whiting decided not to play ball.

Whiting instead chose to look in why McNeal was so important. McNeal was very connected within the department and it seems that he and some officers were stealing fentanyl from drug dealers to then sell it back on the street. Whiting tried to make a case of it. She was contacted by Sean Turner.

Turner asked her to meet with him so that they could discuss it. But she goes to the meeting place to find Sean dead on the floor. And she was forced to fight for her life as she was being attacked by the killer.

Whiting claims to have lost her gun during the struggle. She went on the run and that's everything so far. This all started because of what happened to Roundtree. Now, Roundtree could have been happy to help Whiting take down some rogue dirty cops but he wasn't happy at all to be helping her. He just saw her as a cop.

He thought she was no better than the cops that maced him. He didn't think they should help her because he painted all cops as the same. And Deeks had to remind him that she was one of the good ones.

Whiting once saved Hetty's life. She's even got a scar to prove it. She was good people and she was only after dirty cops. She was IAB. She wasn't actively after anyone else and so Roundtree did come around in the end. He agreed to work with her. He also allowed her to leave the boatshed. She wanted to follow Detective Andy Price.

She knew Price was dirty. She suspected he was involved in the drug trade and so she had Roundtree follow him in their car. They followed Price to a meet up with a known felon. The felon's name was Scot Upson. He was a part of a gang known as "the Wanted".

The gang was heavily in drug trade. They also ran a side business. They have bare knuckle fighting and Roundtree thinks one of them should go in the ring. He suggested Sam. Sam was big. He was a great boxer. He also had a deep underworld cover in case anyone recognizes him. Sam was the perfect guy to go undercover. He got dressed for the job and he later infiltrated the secret fight club that the Unwanted were running. He got in thanks to Upson. Upson was willing to work with authorities in return for protection and a deal with the District Attorney.

They roped in the DEA as well. They went to the club. They got Sam close enough to the gang leader named Odin. Once Odin was identified, Sam dealt with him. The DEA moved in to arrest everyone and a bunch of drugs got collected before it could be sold. They also arrested the dirty cops that attacked Whiting and tried to pin a murder on her. The cops said this was far from over. They said they would keep coming after them and so Roundtree reminded them that have a right to remain silent. Maybe they should use it.

Whiting was cleared of her informant's death. She was free to be a cop again. She didn't have to hide anymore and she and Roundtree have both developed some respect for the other's profession.

And who knows? Whiting teenage son might be dating Deeks and Kensi's teenage daughter.

Production Code: 1416
Summary: When the NCIS team receives a cryptic, urgent message, Fatima and Roundtree must work together to solve the case. Also, Kilbride plans to visit his son, and Callen asks Sam to be his best man.

Special Agent Roundtree was catching up his loved ones when work intruded. Only it wasn't his job this time that was intruding. He was at lunch with his girlfriend, sister, and best friend. They were all chatting. His girlfriend was even about to tell Fatima a juicy start about him and that's when she got the text from work.

She's an FBI Agent. She couldn't ignore the call and Roundtree's sister also needed to study. They all said goodbye at the table. They agreed to meet up later and it wasn't long before a text did come in for both Roundtree and Fatima. They got called in to work. And their case actually involved his girlfriend.

NCIS received a classified file on two individuals. One of them was John Jenkins. Jenkins was the CEO of a tech company. He was murdered while taking his dog out on a walk and his death was apparently connected to the murder of FBI Special Agent Patrick Hertel. Hertel was the other individual.

He was murdered the exact same way as Jenkins within an hour of each other. They were both killed in LA. The classified file indicated that they knew each other. NCIS just didn't know how or who sent them the file. They suspected Hetty was behind it, but they haven't seen her in years and there's no telling what she's up to nowadays.

They also had no idea how these cases were connected. Sure, they were killed the same way. It also was suspicious that it happened within an hour of each other only it was LA. There were plenty of murders in LA. They wouldn't even be looking at these murders if Hetty hadn't sent them a cryptic message. Hetty was involving them in the matter because apparently this case was personal. It involved the message. The victims each got a cryptic message that said "8.22.11". The team thought it was a date and they had been wrong.

It wasn't until Roundtree went with Fatima to Hertel's crime scene that things started to make sense. Roundtree had to practically beg Summer to let them in on the investigation. She wanted to Hertel's murder in house because he was one of them. He was FBI. But they were able to convince Summer to let them see the body. They found out that both Hertel and Jenkins were orphans. They were in foster care in LA. Hertel also had a birthmark that told Admiral Killbride how these two cases were connected.

Admiral Killbride recognized the birth mark because both victims were a part of the Drona Project. Callen's alma mater. The Drona Project took several kids in the foster care system and ran them through tests to determine their worthiness in future federal agencies. 8,22, and 11 wasn't a date. It was their code name in the program. The men were 8 and 22. 11 was Leah Novak. Callen has already met her and she claimed not to remember the program at all. She told Callen to leave her alone and so she hadn't wanted to take his warning when he called her again to tell her about a killer being after her.

Leah was going to dismiss him until she saw a black ops team coming for her. She got out her gun. She started fire back and she was still on the phone with Callen at the time. He overheard the gunshots. He got her location from her cell phone and he went to her. Leah was badly injured albeit still alive. She was shot several times. They got an ambulance for her. She was saved, but she was in a coma. Her last words to Callen before she slipped into the coma was "14". Callen had his people tracked down 14 from the Drona Project.

14 was Anthony Beltran. Callen and Sam went to his house to check on him when he started firing at them. They only got him to desist by telling them Leah sent them. Callen also mentioned that he was 17. Anthony was more willing to trust him after that. They later took Anthony to the boat shed. They asked him why he was running and he said Pembroke was after him. He claimed that he and the others were a part of a lawsuit against Pembroke. They wanted to take him down and Leah didn't want to include Callen because he lied to her and she hadn't trusted him after that.

According to Anthony, they were finally going to stop Pembroke from hurting anyone else. Anthony also said that Leah meant a lot to him. He asked to see her and it was at the hospital that Callen figured out Anthony has been lying to him. Anthony wasn't warned. His number wasn't included in the message they all got. He therefore never got a message himself. He was their killer He wanted to see Leah because he thought she was still alive and wanted her dead. Anthony revealed his true colors when he saw Leah in the hospital bed. He said she's no longer a threat and he told Callen that he didn't have to kill her. He also wasn't going to kill Callen.

Anthony has been working with former Drona kids to take down everyone that continues to see Pembroke. Leah had lied to Callen when she said that she doesn't remember Pembroke. She actually worked for him as an adult. Jenkins and Hertel too. They did whatever Pembroke asked them to do on black ops mission and Anthony had finally had enough. He was killing off Pembroke's foot soldiers. And his next stop was Pembroke himself.

Anthony didn't kill Callen when he had the chance because Callen wanted the same thing he did. He wanted Pembroke dead. And so Anthony had Callen drugged at the hospital while he made his escape.

And this case was far from over.

Summary: NCIS OSP is tasked with assisting NCIS' cold case homicide unit with a case from 2003 and a missing Navy petty officer. Kilbride and his son, Alex, work to rebuild their relationship.

It's the year 2003. A woman runs on foot at night with a NAVY sweatshirt on. She attempts to run from her captor who is driving after her.

Its present day and the NCIS crew has been called in to solve a murder after an officer pulls a car out of a pond at the location where the woman in a NAVY sweatshirt was running. The woman has been identified as Brittany Perez and there is now new evidence in her case. They have yet to find her body.

Hollace pays a visit to his son. It looks like him and his wife are having trouble. He is staying in a new apartment. Callan and Hanna arrive to the scene of their new case. They meet the lead investigators Daisy. She has a strong presence, welcoming them to cold cases. They check the trunk and find Brittany. Daisy tells them the original investigators were sloppy and have retired or died.

Deeks and Kensi talk with Brittany's mom. She is devastated. She cannot tell them much but she new back then her daughter was having issues with her roommate. Meanwhile, Hanna and Callan pay a visit to a suspect in the case. They meet his dad who used to serve. He explains his son Aaron has been through a lot. His son argued with Brittany before she disappeared but he is innocent.

Aaron returns home and reluctantly talks to Hanna and Callan. Its been 20 years he tells them. He doesn't remember much. They think her is lying. They managed to get his DNA. They will know soon enough. At headquarters, Daisy sends files to the cold case and there are a lot of boxes.

Hollace tries to talk to his son about his drinking and changing his life. The two goes into an argument about life and how hard it can be.

The team learns Brittany had issues with Aaron and even went to her commanding officer for help but he didn't take her seriously. Deeks and Kensi pays Brittany's old roommate a visit. Jen finally sits and talks to them.

She confesses to Kensi that Aaron assaulted her. That's why she left the Navy. Brittany knew. She reported it and then went missing. Jen was so scared she didn't talk to her again.

Hanna and Callan question Aaron's old roommate. They want to know if he helped. He denies he and Aaron had anything to do with Brittany. Across the city, the team realizes it might be Aaron's dad they are after.

Aaron's best friend gave them a lot to go off of. Deeks steals the dad's DNA from the trash from a pair of gloves. They learn he is a match — he is the killer.

Fatima tells the team they are trying to track down the dad and it appears he might know that as he has gone to a storage facility to get his rifle. The team gets ahead of him and stops him at the facility. He yells her just wanted to stop Brittany from ruining his son's life. He doesn't want to spend his life behind bars. They take him in.

Hollace manages to try and get along with his son. He spends the night instead of flying home. meanwhile, the team says their goodbyes to Daisy who is on to her next cold case.

Production Code: 1418
Summary: The NCIS team must investigate when a Navy reservist is stabbed and his lab full of pesticides and insects is ransacked; Kilbride offers Sam the interim operations manager position.

Callen was sent to assist with a gun smuggler's case. The job was in San Diego. Callen was going to be away for a while. It's while he's away that Admiral Killbride thought it was time to finally address something. He wanted to promote Sam to interim Operations Manager.

He's been watching Sam for weeks and he thought Sam would do well in a leadership role. But Sam wasn't really a desk guy. He hated paperwork. He hated missing the action and so he liked his current job just as it is. He wasn't looking for anything else. He tried to tell the Admiral that and the Admiral mentioned that the role has to go to someone. It could be Sam or it could be some newbie that won't give them the free reign they're used to.

It was after he heard the last part that Sam agreed to think the job over. He wasn't going to turn it down right off. He was going to think about it for now and he doesn't have much time to do so because they caught a case. Naval Reservist Darryl Howard was almost killed at his laboratory.

He was a professor at a university in the city. He was what some might call a bug scientist. He studies bugs and the harmful effect that pesticides have on wildlife as well on humans. Someone broke into his lab. They stabbed Darryl. They left him for dead and they took something.

They took his pesticides. The ones he was using to test on animals. Everyone figured that the person responsible wanted to use the pesticides to make a bomb. This current situation was very similar to another robbery at another university lab. This other lab was robbed of its pesticides and then they were used to kill six people in a bombing. Only Darryl's hard drive was also taken.

Darryl was in no position to talk to anyone because he hasn't woken from his coma and so they asked his former girlfriend, Layla.

They figured she would know him best. Layla and Darryl had a commitment ceremony twenty years ago. They stopped being together five years ago. Only they continue to talk every once in a while. Layla said Darryl was consumed by his work and so they asked her about his research.

She said Darryl was studying the harmful effects that pesticides have on other life uniforms. She also said that Darryl had become paranoid lately. He said someone keeps following him from lecture to lecture. He said he was being followed. He thought someone was trying to kill him and the best suspect for that was someone from these pesticide companies.

Darryl recently published a paper that said pesticides from a certain company was changing the lizards on a cellular level. As in it could potentially carry harmful effects on adults. Darryl went ahead with this theory. He printed it in several academic journals. He also got a lot of flak because of it. There were a pesticide company that had lost a lot of money after Darryl said what he did. One woman from the company had to be dragged out of Darryl's lecture because she kept yelling at him "CHECK YOUR FACTS"

NCIS track down this woman. They questioned her. She claimed that Darryl was paid to say her pesticides could be harmful on humans and she had an alibi for when he was attacked. Except the same people that tried to kill Darryl would go on to abduct Claire Winchester. She was working with Darryl on a secret project for the DOD. They were working on genetically modified moths. One that could potentially replace all pesticides. It can also be created to poison live stock and every food source America has.

Someone could start a plague. Only how did they know about the research. They would have needed an inside man to tell them about the DOD project. They abducted Claire for reason. They knew she could recreate what they wanted and they were going to try and use her to their ends. Who are these evil people? Well, their spies from China. They only found out about the research because Darryl's research assistant sold the information to them. His name is Arjun. Arjun was arrested by NCIS. He was questioned. He said things were spinning out of control. No one was supposed to die or get kidnapped.

Arjun was approached by the Chinese. They offered him a lot of money to turn over the research, but Darryl was standing in the way of that. Darryl refused to take the money when his new research could save lives. The Chinese then fell back on their spy days. They attacked Darryl and stole his hard drive. They abducted Claire to bring the research to life. And they were transporting her to a secret airport when NCIS stopped them.

They saved Claire from them and they arrested every spy involved in this.

Kensi and Deeks later had a date night, but Sam was beginning to reevaluate his goals and where does he want his career to go.

Production Code: 1419
Summary: When four people, including a CIA officer, are shot and killed in broad daylight, the NCIS team suspects the attacks have something to do with DRONA. Also, Pembroke meets with Callen and gives more insight into his past.

Leah Novak was transferred to a rehabilitation center. She's been showing signs of being aware and the doctors believe that meant she'll be coming out of her coma soon. Leah was one of the victims of the Drona program. It's a program that tortured children to determine their potential in the governmental jobs.

Like the CIA, the FBI, and even NCIS. Callen was one of the victims as well. The kids from this program are all grown up now and they wanted to come together to bring a lawsuit against the man that tortured them. They wanted to take down Pembroke. And one of the victims didn't want to be beaten to the punch.

Anthony Beltran started targeting people in the lawsuit. He wanted to have Pembroke all to himself and so he killed people. He also shot Leah. He just didn't kill Callen when he had the chance. Callen was right in front of him. He could easily have killed him. He chose not to because Callen was never a part of the lawsuit and because Callen understood the need to kill Pembroke. Most of Pembroke's children wanted to kill him. He had a program in Russia doing the same thing for them that he did in the United States.

Pembroke was the psychopath that created Katya. Katya was now dead. She was killed by Joelle only Katya tried to get to Pembroke first. She tried to kill him. She was killed right outside of his hiding spot. Pembroke went into hiding right after that. No one could find him because he was a well-trained spy himself.

He went into hiding. The investigation into him stalled and then Leah was transferred. She was being transferred by the CIA when her ambulance escort took a detour. They stopped to meet up with a group of allies and someone began picking them off one by one.

Four people were killed. There was just one person that got away and he drove Leah away from the scene. The people that died were all CIA Officers. Pembroke had trained them too. The CIA sent one of their own to deal with the fallout. CIA Officer Raphael Cortez came in to oversee the investigation. CIA also wanted NCIS to get involved, but Cortez personally didn't want Callen anywhere near the case. He thought he'd be compromised. He tried to order Admiral Killbride into recalling Callen back to the office and he refused to do so. He knew Callen had to see through this to the end.

Callen went to the scene with Kensi. They determined that someone had shot the four people from the rooftop. They somehow found out that this group were meeting up and they tried to kill all of them. Beltran was also back in the country. Cortez mentioned he was seen reentering the country with several Russian operatives. These operatives held no ties to FSB. Cortez didn't think that was going to be a problem. He still thought Callen was the problem. He especially felt that way after Pembroke contacted Callen.

Pembroke led Callen all around the city to the point he lost comms with his team. He then abducted Callen by gunpoint to finally explain. Pembroke was genuinely sorry for what the program did to Callen as a young boy. Back then, he thought he was helping. He thought he was creating the perfect spy. It wasn't until he put together a team of his "kids" that he realized he made a mistake. He created violent psychos. Beltran only wanted to kill him now because he had joined Pembroke's team as an adult. And he quickly took over the team.

The psychos were taking money for hire. They killed a candidate along with his whole family to throw an election. They have no morals. No conscience. They were monsters. Pembroke had turned them into monsters and he tried to stop it. He tried to stop Beltran. Beltran then tried to kill him and a lawsuit with Pembroke would have brought his own crap to the light. And he was getting help from inside the house. Fatima found proof that Cortez lied to them. Beltran didn't come with Russians. He came with Americans that were all a part of the Drona program.

Cortez knew that because he was secretly another victim of the Drona program. He was running Black Ops with Pembroke until Beltran went rouge and everyone decided to turn on Pembroke. Cortez tried pulling a gun on the Admiral. Fatima stopped him by alerting the rest of NCIS and Cortez was killed. He had the chance to give himself up only he preferred death. Either way they still got his phone. They found out he was messaging Beltran. He was keeping tabs on the investigation to pass to his friend.

Callen meanwhile was getting answers from Pembroke. Pembroke regrets what he did. He's secretly tries to help the kids he tortured and he was so ingrained into the system that long after Callen killed Beltran and one of his men — the story about Drona was going back to being buried. Pembroke was getting off with no charges. He also revealed to Callen that Hetty pulled him from the program. She regretted ever putting Callen in the program in the first place. She loves Callen as a son. And that's why she's been trying to protect him all these years.

Pembroke also gave a file he collected on Callen to Callen. It was Pembroke's idea to pair him with Sam. He thought Sam would make a great friend and he wanted to show Callen that he could open himself up to others. Pembroke was trying to repair some of the damage he caused.

Production Code: 1420
Summary: When an ATF agent goes missing, the bureau seeks help from the NCIS team to investigate stolen military-grade weapons and locate the agent. Also, Callen and Anna continue to plan their wedding, Roundtree's sister interviews for medical school and Sam encourages his father to take part in the drug trial.

Callen was struggling to put together the seating chart for his wedding. His fiancé was no help. He wanted to limit his future father-in-law to just one plus one. Only Anna said that Arkady wanted to double his odds. He was a gambler. He was also a great admirer of the late Hugh Hefner.

They were once friends before Arkady was kicked out of the Playboy mansion for what he did in the grotto. Callen hadn't wanted to hear the story and sadly there was no stopping Anna. She told him about the Britney Spears costume that came with a live boa constructor. And she would have said more if their band hadn't cancelled on them at the last minute.

Two of the band members were involved in an accident. They wouldn't be able to make the wedding and that was an issue because that band was the only one that the couple could agree on.

They still were struggling to put their wedding together when Admiral Killbride came calling. The Admiral called in everyone to assist the ATF. ATF SAC Kerry Adams has lost contact with one of her agents during the search for missing military grade weapons. The weapons were stolen. This missing agent had claimed he was getting close to finding them when suddenly he went dark.

The agent's name is William Newsome. He's gone dark before only he always pops up after a while. Adams was hoping he would do that again and at the same time she had NCIS assisting her people.

She needed to know if something happened to Newsome or if he switched sides. The latter seemed plausible after Newsome did his reappearance act. He popped up and said that his investigation might have gotten blown. He thought the thieves had undercover his true identity. He said he went dark to protect himself and that put NCIS in an uncomfortable position.

They wanted to find those weapons. The weapons were stolen from a military base in the first place that meant it was in their jurisdiction no matter what ATF thought, but they had to work with Newsome on top of investigating him. They had Newsome at the boat shed while Fatima and Roundtree were investigating him at headquarters.

Those two found out that Newsome had put his daughter into a private school. It was an expensive school. His daughter wasn't there on scholarship nor did she receive any financial aide from either state or federal government to attend.

Newsome's ex-wife also wasn't working. She's living on the support payments she gets from Newsome and somehow that was enough to afford a swanky school for their daughter. It was beginning to look like Newsome was dirty. That he got tired of watching people get rich from crime while he was working off a government salary. What they found wasn't enough to prove he was taking the bribes. They had to keep digging even as the others were working with Newsome to recover the missing weapons.

Newsome told them that he had gotten close. He mentioned he came close to infiltrating the den of thieves and that he was caught before he could get proof that the weapons were even there. He told them about where the weapons were being moved. He arranged for Kensi and Deeks to take a bird's eye approach to seeing the weapon from the hillside. The couple began worrying if they should move if they find any other evidence indicating he was dirty, but they got lucky. Newsome wasn't paying for his daughter expensive school.

The daughter had a grandfather who put together a college fund for her when she was little. There was now enough money in there to see her all throughout her schooling. She didn't even need to take out loans. Newsome's ex wife wasn't living outrageously. She was living a quiet life and so no one in his family were flushed with case. There was no evidence to indicate Newsome was dirty. Kensi and Deeks didn't have to worry about their position or if Newsome will out them for a payday. Newsome was clean.

It was Adams that was dirty. Newsome's boss was taking so much money for looking the other way that she no longer cares about that line the sand. She was the one that blew Newsome's cover. She did it for a payday. Sam and Callen went to go arrest her. She was with another agent at the time and unfortunately he was also dirty. They began using all of their firepower to pin NCIS down in a position where they couldn't fight back. And who knows what will happen next!

Summary: The NCIS team continues the case with ATF and the stolen military-grade weapons. Also, Callen and Anna decide on an impromptu wedding.

NCIS recently learned that ATF SAC Kerry Adams was dirty. They suspected her whole team might be dirty as well. It was rather unfortunate for the team because they didn't start to put the pieces together until after they left themselves exposed. They told Adams all about their plans. They told her where they were going to be. They also tried to arrest Adams and she didn't want to go down without a fight. She pulled a gun on them. Both her and her driver were armed. They started to fire before Sam and Callen could draw their weapons. And they could have died if they had been anyone else.

Luckily, they weren't anyone else. They were highly skilled field agents for a reason. They immediately clocked Adam's weapon. They knew when she would run out of juice and they used that time wisely. They got to their guns. They quickly neutralized the pair shooting at them. Then they tried figuring out what was going on. It was Adams who came to them to investigate one of her people. She told them some story about how she wasn't sure if one of her own men was dirty or not. They agreed to assist her and that's how they came to learn she was dirty.

It didn't make sense why she would involve them if she was a part of the con. Callen believes it was because she wanted to look for a scapegoat if everything fell through. She could have been planning on blaming ATF Agent William Newsome for her own crimes or they were in it together and she was betraying him to get a bigger payday. They couldn't really ask Adams herself because she was no longer going to be a problem. Which left them to worry about Newsome. Was he clean or was he dirty? The team didn't know and they needed to find out fast because two of their own could be in jeopardy.

Kensi and Deeks were assigned to babysit Newsome. They were assigned before they found out about Adams. They knew that there was a chance that Newsome could be untrustworthy and they told him that they would be watching over him from a cliffside. After the thing with Adams happened, Kensi and Deeks had to wonder if they were safe. They decided to move from their position to stage some cameras at the scene. They wanted to maintain a closer eye on Newsome. Admiral Killbride found out they came up with their plan and he ordered them back into position.

The Admiral was strict on following the rules. He wasn't like the others that have tried to lead this team. He was by the book because that was the only way to keep everyone safe. Admiral Killbride didn't like that they came up with their own plan, but he was willing to work with them to form a new plan. One that wouldn't leave them exposed. The Admiral had them breach the house to check on Newsome. Newsome could have walked into a trap for all they know and so it was perfectly alright that they perform search and rescue.

It ended up blowing Newsome's cover. He was one of the good guys. He actually was investigating a group for the illegal smuggling of American missiles. The missiles were being stolen from a base in Argentina. Newsome was supposed to find the weapons. The problem was that he was a bit of a lone wolf. He didn't want to wear an earpiece or any kind of device that would tell them what's going on inside of the house. Kensi and Deeks going in was pretty reasonable in such a case because they truly had no idea what was going on. And the team got lucky again when Newsome turned out to be one of the good guys.

Newsome assisted NCIS in taking down these people that stole the weapons. He later told them that he didn't need help or a team and so he was back to being a lone wolf. It was a good thing because everyone he works for or with had needed to be investigated. Also, Callen and Sam got help from Nina Barnes to find out how the weapons were getting stateside. They got their information and the whole thing made Callen realize that he doesn't want a big wedding. Or the headache that comes with it. He wants to marry Ana as fast as possible and so he later asked her to elope.

Ana was being driven crazy by their wedding band cancelling on top of the caterers ghosting her. Her dad and his plus two invite were impossible to seat on a sitting chart and so eloping sounded like a great idea. It's not like the team had great track records with weddings. Kensi and Deeks's wedding being the last for a reason. Those two were getting dressed for the elopement when they found out that Kensi was pregnant. They were having a baby and the whole family was happy. It was a miracle because Kensi was told she would never have a baby naturally and yet that's what happened.

They just have to keep the news a secret until Kensi passes the first trimester. They were sitting on this explosive news when they went down to City Hall and supported Callen on his big day. Only they weren't the only ones with news. Roundtree found out that the LAPD were willing to pay him a settlement for macing him while he was unarmed and in handcuffs. This settlement would pay for the rest of his sister's schooling. It would also mean they have a nest egg to fall back on in case anything were to happen. Roundtree was thinking of taking them up on the offer.

Callen and Ana were later married in front of their loved ones. Hetty missed it, but she sent him a letter telling him how she much she loves him and congratulating him on his wedding day. She also invited both him and Sam to Morocco where they ran into Nell. Sabatino was there. Neil was there. There was a new guy and so whatever Nell had planned or trouble Hetty was in — it was going to be a wild ride.
