Summary: Sam Wilson and Bucky Barnes realize that their futures are anything but normal.

As Sam Wilson examines Captain America's shield before placing it in a circular bag, he recalls the last conversation he had with Steve Rogers: he felt the shield belonged to someone else.

Six months after the Battle of Earth, in the skies above Tunisia, the U.S. Air Force sends Wilson to rescue Captain Vassant after his abduction by the terrorist organization LAF, with First Lieutenant Joaquín Torres providing ground assistance. Wilson intercepts a plane hijacked by Georges Batroc and his forces.

While attempting to retrieve Vassant inside, the resulting firefight ends up killing LAF's sole pilot, dooming the aircraft. Batroc's troops retain hold on Vassant as they all disembark the plane, with Wilson following them. Batroc's aerial reinforcements arrive in an attempt to disrupt Wilson, damaging his Falcon suit. Batroc's forces board their exfil with Vassant, aiming to reach the Libya border to prevent the U.S. Military from legally continuing their assault. As Torres prepares to fall back, Wilson successfully rescues Vassant and forces Batroc to the ground. While in a Tunisian city, Wilson repairs his suit as Torres debriefs him about LAF: a group of anarchists calling themselves the "Flag Smashers," looking to revert the world to its inter-Blip state.

Returning to Washington, D.C., Wilson retires the late Rogers' shield to the Smithsonian, wanting to preserve and celebrate his legacy. He meets with fellow Avenger James Rhodes as the two ponder about the Blip's effect on the world: alliances broken, with nobody remaining "stable."

In a nightmare, Bucky Barnes revisits his days as the Winter Soldier, single-handedly ambushing a group of men. A young, innocent bystander nearby fails to escape and pleads for his life to the Winter Soldier before being shot dead. In the present, while in pardon-mandated therapy, Barnes is reluctant to confess to Dr. Raynor about his recurring nightmares. When Raynor threatens to report Barnes' behavior, Barnes reveals that as part of his process of "making amends," he was able to track down and detain a HYDRA member whom the Winter Soldier helped get elected to Congress. Inspecting his phone, Raynor discovers that Barnes has minimal contacts and has been ignoring texts from Wilson. Barnes confesses that after 90 years of constant combats, he seeks a life of peace, but Raynor urges him to reject isolation. In the streets of Brooklyn, Barnes breaks up a fight involving Yori Nakajima and his neighbor. While having lunch, Nakajima goads Barnes into dating Leah, a waitress working at the restaurant. Observing the red bean mochi, Nakajima soon breaks down in memory of his late son, noting that it was his favorite food. He reveals to Barnes that his son was murdered while working abroad, which troubles him.

Sam Wilson drives down to Delacroix, Louisiana to meet up with his sister Sarah, a survivor of the Blip who has maintained her struggling seafood business. As Sarah prepares to sell the family boat, Sam urges her to take out a loan to repair it and turn their financial situation around. Meanwhile, Barnes meets up with Leah in the evening for their date. The two share details about their lives, although Barnes dodges the questions that cover his past. It was not until Leah began bringing up Nakajima's son to Barnes that he abruptly left the eatery and attended to Nakajima at his apartment. There, he noticed a photograph of a young man on Nakajima's shrine: the young bystander whom the Winter Soldier had shot dead in the past. Barnes flees.

In Switzerland, Torres continues to track down the Flag Smashers when he finds a group sliding on masks. Confused, Torres puts one on, but it soon became apparent that he has wandered into the middle of a robbery led by the same terrorist organization he was searching for. A local cop attempts to arrest the masked Torres, but he is able to escape. A Flag Smasher is shown knocking away a cop with superhuman force. When Torres attempts to confront the terrorist, he is knocked unconscious.

At the bank, Sam and Sarah Wilson are denied a loan, forcing Sam to fix the boat himself, although his efforts prove fruitless. A recovered Torres sends him footage of the Switzerland incident. As Sam observes the video, Sarah alerts him to the television for a WHiH World News breaking report: the U.S. Government has appointed a new Captain America, one who "embodies America's greatest values". Sam watches in anger as he sees an unknown white man brandish Rogers' shield.

Summary: John Walker is named Captain America, and Sam Wilson and Bucky Barnes team up against the rebel group, the Flag Smashers.

Captain John Walker is in his old high school's locker room, reeling from his appointment as the next Captain America. His friend Lemar Hoskins arrives to help him prepare for his interview in front of the stadium audience and on national television. On TV, Walker, despite being a highly-decorated soldier, admits that it would be a tough job filling in the shoes of his idol and predecessor, Steve Rogers.

Among those watching the interview is Bucky Barnes, who angrily confronts Sam Wilson about giving up Rogers' shield to the U.S. Government. Wilson's drone Redwing is able to track the Flag Smashers down to Munich; Barnes tags alongside Wilson for the mission despite the latter's wishes. In the middle of a forest stood a ruined warehouse, where they find the Flag Smashers transporting vaccines to trucks. The two attempt to stealthily ambush the group, but Redwing's heat vision discovers an apparent hostage in a truck, prompting them to chase the transports.

Barnes breaches one truck and finds a young woman inside, but quickly realizes that she is not a hostage when she attacks with super strength. While the Flag Smashers pin down Barnes, the woman destroys Redwing and fends off Wilson. Walker and Hoskins arrive via helicopter to aid the two Avengers, having used Redwing to track their location. Barnes is left hanging from the transport's chassis, and while Wilson rescues him, Walker and Hoskins are overpowered and forced off the vehicle.

As Barnes deduces that the eight Flag Smashers are enhanced by a super-soldier serum, Walker offers him and Wilson a ride to the airport, which they reluctantly accept. Walker explains that while the Global Repatriation Council manages resources for the blipped refugees, he and Hoskins are assigned to maintain order throughout the world. He also unsuccessfully tries to recruit the two to his cause, while attempting to assure Wilson that he is not trying to mimic Rogers' persona, but rather trying to become the best Captain America he can be. Meanwhile, the Flag Smashers take refuge inside the home of a supporter. Their leader receives a threatening text from an unknown number, and the group quickly discovers that Interpol had issued arrest warrants for all of them, prompting them to purge all traces of their identity.

Arriving in Baltimore, Barnes brings Wilson to the home of Isaiah Bradley, a super-soldier whom Barnes fought during the Korean War as the Winter Soldier, to recruit him against the Flag Smashers. At the mention of the appearance of more super soldiers globally, however, Isaiah quickly breaks down, recalling his 30-year imprisonment as an experiment following the War, before forcing them out of the house. Wilson is infuriated at Barnes for not informing him and Rogers about the existence of an African-American super-soldier. Their heated argument attracts the attention of the police, who attempt to racially profile Wilson. After discovering their identities, the police instead arrest Barnes for missing his pardon-mandated therapy session.

Walker arrives at the detention facility to release Barnes, while Dr. Christina Raynor forces him and Wilson into a therapy session as part of their release. As Raynor uses a couples-related exercise to get the two to talk to each other, Barnes tells Wilson that by giving up the shield, he is essentially throwing away Rogers' legacy and all that he stood for, as well as his trust. Impatient, the two abandon therapy to find Walker outside, who informs them that the identity of the Flag Smashers' leader is named Karli Morgenthau, and that the group has been spotted in Central Europe.

As they are free agents, Barnes and Wilson decide to separate from Walker to confront the Flag Smashers. Meanwhile, at an airport, the group is loading their boxes of stolen vaccines in an airplane as authorities close in. However, a Flag Smasher sacrifices himself to buy enough time for the plane to take off. Taking Isaiah's word to heart, Barnes gets the idea to visit Helmut Zemo in prison, seeking to extract all of HYDRA's secrets from him.

Summary: To find the source of the Super Soldier Serum, Sam and Bucky must scale a ladder of low-lives starting in Madripoor with Zemo.

In a campaign to track down the Flag Smashers and any civilian allied with them, GRC forces led by John Walker infiltrate a hideout in Munich that had harbored the anarchists. As the men inside speak German, Lemar Hoskins is brought in as a translator, but the two deduce that the group had already ran elsewhere. Despite multiple unproductive rounds, Walker decides to continue finding civilians.

In Berlin, Bucky Barnes decides to visit Helmut Zemo in his cell alone, due to their histories with HYDRA and Sam Wilson's status as an Avenger. Knowing that super soldiers go entirely against Zemo's beliefs, Barnes reveals to him about the existence of multiple super soldiers running rogue throughout the world, later helping him to break out of prison by initiating an inmate brawl to create a distraction. Wilson is reluctant to accept Zemo as an ally, but relents on the condition that the Sokovian would be under their supervision.

Zemo informs the two he spent years hunting down HYDRA affiliates who worked on the serums, and has no intention with leaving his mission incomplete. He then leads them to Madripoor, a criminal sanctuary located in the Indonesian archipelago, where the three assume the identities of the local criminals for a disguise. Meanwhile, Karli Morgenthau is at a GRC camp in Riga, Latvia, comforting and mourning her dying mother.

At a bar, Zemo uses a Russian trigger phrase making it appear to activate the Winter Soldier within Barnes, causing a ruckus that earns them a meeting with Selby. Upon offering Barnes as a bargaining tool, Zemo learns from Selby that Dr. Wilfred Nagel is the one responsible for the recreation of the serum, having been hired by the Power Broker. Before Selby can offer Nagel's location for a fee, Sam Wilson receives a call from Sarah, and is forced by Selby to put it on speaker. The call blows Sam's identity, forcing Selby to be killed, and the three to flee the premises.

The entirety of Madripoor is alerted to Selby's death, with a bounty placed on Zemo, Barnes, and Wilson. A mysterious figure guns down several bounty hunters, later revealing herself as Sharon Carter. Having stolen Steve Rogers' shield, she is now a fugitive living off the grid on the archipelago. Wilson offers to obtain a pardon for Carter in exchange for her help in tracking Nagel's location, to which she accepts. At a shipyard, Carter brings them to Nagel's laboratory, hidden inside several shipping containers.

While Carter remains outside to fend the lab against the remaining bounty hunters, Nagel is interrogated at gunpoint about the serum; revealing that he was recruited into HYDRA's Winter Soldier program after Zemo had killed them in Siberia, only to be brought into the CIA once HYDRA collapsed. Using blood samples from an American super soldier, Nagel was able to isolate the stable particles which comprised the serum. Upon blipping five years later, he took his work to the Power Broker, who eagerly hired him. Nagel later revealed that he was able to produce 20 vials of the serum, which were stolen by Morgenthau.

As more bounty hunters close in on the lab, Carter storms in to alert the men, only for Zemo to suddenly shoot Nagel dead. The lab is destroyed by an RPG, and a firefight erupts at the shipyard. Zemo, slipping on his purple mask, defeats multiple bounty hunters before stealing a getaway vehicle from inside a shipping container. While Barnes and Wilson rejoin the Sokovian, Carter remains behind, as she is a fugitive of the United States.

In Lithuania, Morgenthau mourns her mother's death while she reminisces with fellow Flag Smasher Dovich about what their lives were like before the Blip caused their displacement. The Flag Smashers later raid a GRC facility for their materials, aiming to deliver it to the displaced children sitting in the camps. The facility is then set ablaze with people still inside. Meanwhile, Walker and Hoskins arrive in Berlin only to find out Zemo had escaped, knowing Barnes and Wilson were involved.

Looking forward to meeting with Morgenthau, Zemo redirects them to Riga. There, Barnes separates from the two to investigate mysterious beads littered on the street. He comes face-to-face with Ayo, who demands Zemo's location.

Summary: John Walker loses patience with Sam and Bucky as they learn more about Karli Morgenthau.

During Bucky Barnes' stay in Wakanda, Dora Milaje member Ayo was assigned to free him from HYDRA's mental programming of the Winter Soldier. After his treatment, Ayo took him to a remote location where she recited HYDRA's activation words. However, it does not trigger the Winter Soldier, much to their combined elation.

In the present day, Ayo berates Barnes for freeing Helmut Zemo, King T'Chaka's killer, from his incarceration. She gives him eight hours before the Dora Milaje move to capture Zemo. Barnes reunites with Sam Wilson and Zemo, where he informs the two of the Wakandans' involvement. He also briefs them on the fatalities from the Flag Smashers' bombing of the GRC Supply Depot. While Zemo remarks that the heightened "supremacist" mindset embedded within Karli Morgenthau would make it useless to approach her passively, Wilson insists that they can redeem her. Noting that Morgenthau's adoptive mother, Donya Madani, was a well-known member of her community, the three head toward the GRC camp to find information about her.

Unbeknownst to them, the refugees in the camp are Flag Smasher sympathizers, and openly refuse Barnes and Wilson's requests about Donya Madani. Zemo approaches a group of children and learns about Madani's upcoming memorial later in the afternoon from a girl. While briefing Wilson and Barnes, Zemo intentionally withholds intel to gain leverage over them, knowing that his two "allies" will turn on him once they reach Morgenthau. Wilson calls Sharon Carter in Madriport, who has access to satellites. As Carter is recruited for recon duty, she shares that the Power Broker has become frenzied after Wilfred Nagel's death, and the group cannot afford to lose Morgenthau.

At a graveyard, Morgenthau and fellow Flag Smasher Nico retrieve their vials of the super-soldier serum before heading to Madani's memorial. Barnes, Wilson, and Zemo run into John Walker and Lemar Hoskins on their way back to the camp. Walker wants to take Morgenthau into immediate custody, but Wilson pushes to see her alone, noting her vulnerability from losing a loved one. The rest remain behind, and Walker handcuffs Zemo to a furnace.

While eulogizing her adoptive mother, Morgenthau sees Wilson at the memorial; they meet after the gathering's conclusion to talk. She declares her intentions to abolish the oppressive system to Wilson. He notes that his sister Sarah had also suffered from their injustices, and that while he supports Morgenthau's cause, he cannot support her tactics. Suddenly, a patience-expired Walker storms the room, leading Morgenthau to believe that Wilson is trying to subdue her for Walker. Meanwhile, Zemo frees himself from his handcuffs before confronting and repeatedly shooting Morgenthau. This causes her to drop the vials of serum, which Zemo promptly destroys.

As Morgenthau and Nico flee, Walker knocks out the Sokovian with the shield and recovers the only surviving vial. The Power Broker sends more texts to Morgenthau regarding the serum she stole from Nagel, threatening to kill her if she did not produce said serum. Wilson tells Carter to keep tabs on Walker, just as he and Hoskins arrive to apprehend Zemo. The Dora Milaje appear shortly after for the same man, leading to a fight between Walker, Hoskins, and the Wakandans. As Wilson and Barnes join in to break up the fight, Zemo slinks away into the sewers from the bathroom.

The Dora Milaje leave for Zemo once Walker is left pinned to a table and Barnes cannot fight (Ayo momentarily removes his vibranium arm). Walker, humiliated at the prospect of being defeated by a non-super soldier, leaves with Hoskins for a cafe where they fantasize about the superheroics that come from the serum's power. Morgenthau calls Sarah Wilson and threatens her and her family if Sam does not arrive for another meeting alone. However, Barnes insists on coming along with him. While attempting to reason with Morgenthau, Carter informs Wilson and Barnes about Walker's arrival, prompting the Flag Smashers to attack them both.

While infiltrating the camp, Hoskins is abducted and tied up, leaving Walker alone. As Barnes and Wilson arrive, Walker begins displaying superhuman force as he fights Dovich. As a horde of Flag Smashers attacks the three, Hoskins frees himself from his restraints and rejoins his allies, only to be accidentally killed when Morgenthau violently caves his chest inward with her fist, sending him flying into a pillar. Attempting to flee with his fellow teammates, Nico is hunted down by a vengeful Walker, who brutally murders him with the shield, to the horror of onlookers. A sea of recording phones surrounds a now-mad Walker with the bloody shield as he attempts to scout out Morgenthau.

Summary: Sam Wilson, Bucky Barnes, Baron Zemo, John Walker, and Karli Morgenthau must all deal with the fall out from their actions.

Having just publicly executed Nico, John Walker runs away into an abandoned facility. With the death of Lemar Hoskins and Nico's murder still fresh in his mind, he is confronted by Sam Wilson and Bucky Barnes, who demand he give up the shield. Walker retaliates by fighting them both, momentarily incapacitating Barnes and severely damaging Wilson's EXO-7 Falcon by destroying the wings. As he proclaims that he is Captain America, Walker attempts to kill Wilson, but is stopped when Barnes pins Walker down. Wilson uses his remaining thrusters to take Walker's shield away, breaking one of his arms.

In Riga, the GRC raids the camp in an attempt to find Karli Morgenthau, but can only subdue her followers. Reuniting with Joaquín Torres there, Wilson is informed that government officials are taking over and investigating Walker's actions. Morgenthau is also revealed to be laying low after Nico's murder, with Wilson and Torres believing she will be rebuilding her forces and cover during this time. As Wilson leaves the camp with the shield in tow, Torres is told to keep the damaged EXO-7.

Walker is summoned to a council of government officials in Washington, D.C. who strip him of the Captain America mantle, OTH-discharge him from the military, and revoke all of his benefits in retirement, leaving him frustrated and manic. As his wife Olivia suggests seeing Hoskins' parents to cope with the loss, the couple is visited by a woman named Valentina Allegra de Fontaine, who voices her support with Walker's actions, including taking the Super Soldier Serum. She informs him about the legal gray area surrounding ownership of the shield before leaving behind a mysterious contact.

While wandering the abandoned GRC camp, Morgenthau— furious about the deaths of her fellow Flag Smashers and Donya Madani— rallies her remaining teammates and plans to ramp up their mobilization. At a memorial in Sokovia, Barnes confronts Helmut Zemo with a cocked firearm. Zemo reiterates his belief that Morgenthau cannot be redeemed from her radicalization, and because her influence stretches across the globe, the only reasonable solution is to kill her. Barnes decides to disregard his advice. He aims the gun toward Zemo, only for him to reveal that it is unloaded. The Dora Milaje arrive to detain Zemo for imprisonment in the Raft; he bids his well-wishes toward Barnes before leaving. Ayo advises Barnes to distance himself from Wakanda for the time being due to his role in Zemo's escape.

Wilson returns to Baltimore to visit Isaiah Bradley, wanting to know from his past. Bradley informs Wilson that, along with him, a number of additional black soldiers were taken in to be unknowingly injected with different versions of the serum. Despite the serum being unstable within a vast majority of the recipients, they were all sent out on missions. While some began dying off, some became prisoners-of-war. After overhearing an officer's desire to destroy the POW camp to eradicate the evidence, Bradley infiltrated the camp alone and liberated his comrades. Due to being the eventual sole survivor of the serum, Bradley himself was captured and experimented on for the next 30 years. During this time, letters written to Bradley from his wife before her death were not allowed to reach him.

It was only until a nurse helped falsely declare Bradley dead that he was able to escape. A distraught Wilson insists on sharing his story with the world. However, Bradley is adamant on keeping his name buried in history, fearing the people who erased him from society would come for him if news of his survival broke. He tells Wilson that America would not allow a black man to be Captain America, nor would a conscious black man want to be. Wilson glances at the shield before eventually leaving the house with it, calling his sister Sarah to inform her he would be coming home.

Sam learns from his nephews that Sarah could not sell the family boat, as it was a total loss. He gets the idea to call the Delacroix community to come together to fix the boat, as they are indebted to the Wilson family from years past. Barnes arrives with a case Ayo delivered to him as a favor, and stays to help with the fix-up. During this, the two brief each other about Morgenthau; while Torres would be drafting a plan to defeat her, Barnes mentions Zemo's beliefs about her. Wilson also convinces Barnes to stay in Louisiana despite the latter's scheduled flight out the following day.

Elsewhere, Walker is with Hoskins' family, hoping to bring them solace, "knowing" that he had brought Lemar's killer to justice. While walking out on the street, he encounters his promotional poster on a wall. In Madripoor, Sharon Carter contacts Georges Batroc hoping to offer him a job. Before Sam and Barnes could complete their boat repair, Sarah relieves them of their work. As Sam begins to practice throwing the shield between trees, Barnes apologizes to him regarding his previous frustrations about his decision to retire it, noting that its symbolism was the closest thing he has left to a family.

Wilson urges Barnes to stop apologizing to the people he had affected as the Winter Soldier and start building meaningful closures with them, one-by-one. Before leaving, Barnes tells him to give a call once he has a lead on Morgenthau. Motivated by Bradley, Sam insists unto Sarah that they cannot afford to lose their boat, their totem of African-American history. With the belief that Bradley's pain and sacrifice would be for naught if no one continued to fight, he continues to train with the shield that once belonged to his friend, improving his accuracy to near-perfection.

Meanwhile, Morgenthau reveals to the rest of her teammates that she has hired Batroc: he gets his chance to enact payback on Wilson, while the Flag Smashers gain the armed strength of his forces, the LAF. As the GRC prepares to debate on the highly-controversial Patch Act, which would force relocations of millions back to their home states, the Flag Smashers rally their supporters all across Europe. A few supporters infiltrate the GRC building in New York City, enabling a mass-hacking that disrupts the debate. Before the assault, Torres passes a lead to Wilson about the locations of Flag Smasher incidents. Wilson then opens the case, marveling at the sight of the gift from the Wakandans.

In a mid-credits scene, Walker melts his military decorations to weld a personalized replica of the shield.

Summary: As The Flag Smashers escalate their actions, Sam and Bucky take action.

As the GRC Meeting Hall is placed under lockdown due to a Flag Smasher assault, Sam Wilson— donning the shield and a new Falcon suit with the image of Captain America— flies into New York City as Bucky Barnes approaches the building on the ground. A pedestrian interrupts Barnes and reveals herself as a disguised Sharon Carter, who had arrived despite her fugitive status.

Seeing Wilson's arrival, Karli Morgenthau signals her allies to begin rounding up the GRC senators via evacuation. As Wilson infiltrates the building to stop the evacuation, he is attacked by Georges Batroc.

A GRC senator hands Barnes a phone on the line with Morgenthau, who boasts that the anti-resettlement movement is large enough to continue after her death. Barnes warns her that she will remember the lives of the innocent killed in her campaign and urges her to abandon her campaign, only for her to terminate the call.

In the garage, the GRC senators file into armored trucks, where Flag Smasher Lennox uses clamps to unknowingly lock them inside. Barnes hijacks a motorcycle and uses it to pursue the transports, while Carter remains to kill Lennox using mercury vapor. Meanwhile, more senators board a helicopter piloted by Diego, another Flag Smasher. Wilson abandons his fight with Batroc to stop it from escaping.

As Diego is armed, Wilson uses a restored Redwing to find that Ayla Perez, a GRC member on-board the helicopter, has flight experience. He is momentarily diverted when Diego disables a helicopter piloted by the NYPD, forcing him to rescue the pilots. Wilson then establishes a contact with the senator, coordinating an attack: he pushes Diego out of the aircraft and into the Hudson River while Perez takes over the controls, saving the bird. Elsewhere, Morgenthau announces to her remaining Flag Smashers she plans on killing the hostages if their situation goes south, which they reluctantly go along with.

The Flag Smashers place blockades to stop the transports, but Barnes arrives to stop them from hijacking. To cause a diversion, one truck is set on fire, forcing Barnes to rescue the senators. John Walker arrives with his crude homemade shield and fights the Flag Smashers, intending to kill Morgenthau. Barnes is thrown into the Hudson, and Walker is pushed aside by Morgenthau, who attempts to drive the remaining transport into the Hudson. Walker attempts to pull the vehicle back, ignoring his opportunity to kill Morgenthau and discarding his shield, but is knocked down as well.

Wilson arrives in time to bring the truck back to the street and free the senators, to the cheers of onlooking civilians. As he regroups with Barnes and Walker, Batroc fires smoke bombs to cover the Flag Smashers' escape underground, but Wilson uses heat vision to pursue them. Carter lures Morgenthau and confronts her, offering her a chance to work with her again. Batroc deduces Carter as the Power Broker, Morgenthau realizing he was hired as a means for her to be spied upon. Batroc attempts to blackmail Carter with her identity for increased pay; she shoots him dead but is wounded in the process.

Outside, Walker and Barnes lure Dovich, DeeDee, and Gigi into the hands of authorities. Wilson arrives in a final attempt to negotiate with Morgenthau and refuses to fight her even as she furiously attempts to kill him. As she raises a firearm at Wilson, Carter fatally shoots Morgenthau, who dies in Wilson's arms. Wilson brings Morgenthau's corpse to a medical team outside and chastises the GRC senators regarding their plan to forcefully relocate millions, along with their labeling of her supporters as "terrorists." Recognizing himself as a controversial bearer of the stars and stripes, he urges them to consider the displaced's view of the world, warning them that the next Karli Morgenthau will rise should they fail to represent the people they are dealing with. Among those viewing Wilson on live television include Joaquín Torres, Sarah Wilson, Isaiah Bradley, and Eli Bradley.

While Walker walks away from the scene, Carter apologizes to Wilson for killing Morgenthau, who retains his promise to get her pardoned. At the behest of a GRC senator, he rescues Diego from the Hudson to be apprehended alongside his comrades. However, as they are taken to the Raft, they are killed when their transport explodes. Helmut Zemo's butler Oeznik, watching from a distance, secretly planted the explosive. At the Raft, the imprisoned Zemo delights in with the news of the Flag Smashers' demises. In the meanwhile, the GRC formally announces they are leaving their plans of forced resettlement behind.

Although no one is suspected, Valentina Allegra de Fontaine recognizes the scheme as Zemo's doing. Walker, with a modified suit sans the Captain America branding, is recruited by Fontaine as a U.S. Agent. Back in New York, Barnes visits Yori Nakajima and reveals the truth behind his son's death. He sees Leah the next day while also leaving Dr. Christina Raynor his completed list. Wilson visits the Bradley family in Baltimore, affirming to Isaiah that although those who came before him bled for the country, it doesn't mean he won't stop fighting for it. Taking them to the Smithsonian, he reveals he set up an exhibit to immortalize the Bradley story, bringing Isaiah to tears.

Wilson and Barnes return to Delacroix, where Sarah and the locals hold a celebratory cookout. Watching the sun set on the horizon, the two brothers-in-arms carry on as Captain America and The Winter Soldier.

In a mid-credits scene, Carter receives an official pardon from the U.S. Government and regains her former CIA position. Leaving the Capitol, she calls one of her contacts in Madripoor, telling them she now has direct access to government resources that they can sell to the highest bidder.
