Summary: Dr. John Watson resumes his medical career as the head of a clinic dedicated to treating rare disorders six months after the death of his friend and partner, Sherlock Holmes, at the hands of Moriarty.

The episode starts with us jetting off to the Reichenbach Falls in Switzerland. There, our titular character Dr. John Watson rushes through the trees where he finds Sherlock in a scuffle with Moriarty. Several gunshots go off, leading to the pair tumbling into the rushing water. Although Watson dives in to try and help his friend, he ends up tumbling over the edge, sporting a bloody head and a concussion.

Thankfully he's found and brought to the hospital, where he's looked over by a man called Shinwell Johnson. He reveals the bad news that Holmes has passed away and Moriarty is lost, presumably dead too. However, it turns out Holmes was actually loaded and had a fortune. He had a vision of Watson going back to medicine again and practicing.

Along with a brand new clinic, Watson is also given his own pick of medics to work alongside, and Johnson is being paid to be Watson's right-hand man and confidant through all of this. So I guess it's time to check in to the Holmes Clinic.

Fast forward six months and Holmes is running his clinic after recovering. Here, Watson is joined by his comrades, the nerdy Dr Sasha Lubbock, who was adopted after living in China and brought into a wealthy family before working her butt off to make it in medical school.

There's also computer whizz Dr Adam Croft and his brother, Stephens. They have identical DNA and the same background. Oh and Adam is also obsessed with eggs too.

There's also Dr Ingrid Derian, who's apparently the best neurologist in the state and works closely with Watson and the team.

Now, Watson is still suffering from amnesia and can't remember the weeks leading up to his accident in Switzerland. He is starting to remember more about Moriarty though, including that his two fingers have been fused into the M shape.

His latest patient happens to be someone called Erika Filipello, whose vision is obscured and she keeps seeing bizarre fragments in her mind's eye, as if she's dreaming while awake. Well, that may not be that far from the truth given there's a familial history of fatal insomnia and she hasn't been sleeping for a while now. In fact, since being admitted to hospital, she hasn't slept a wink.

Watson shows up to see Erika, who's erratic and convinced that she has FFI. Given she's also 23 weeks pregnant, she doesn't want her child to die, and pleads with Watson to keep her alive until she gives birth.

The gang get to work coming up with a proper diagnosis, with all the doctors gathered to discuss the symptoms. It would appear the family have a 50/50 chance of actually passing on FFI and along with doing some research on her father, Watson eventually discovers that Erika does not have FFI. So what's going on with her?

While he's talking to Erika, he explains the choice he made back in London and how he chose Sherlock over his partner, Dr. Mary Morstan. The thing is, she happens to be outside the door, having checked his office and seen the work they're currently doing. There's no getting back with Mary though, as she's moved on and is currently living with her new partner.

When Erika awakens the next morning, she finds that her vision has gone completely and she's blind. It would appear, given the sores around her mouth, that she may well have angular cheilitis. Dr Lubbock believes she needs a bone marrow transplant as a result. The only match though could well be his brother, Damon Filipello. The guy hasn't been seen for a while so Watson decides to get Gregson to help. For those unfamiliar with the Sherlock universe, this is an Inspector over at Scotland Yard.

Damon is brought in for a bone marrow transplant... but there's a problem. Turns out Autumn, Erika's cousin, is also sick. The rest of the gang bring her in but they treat this as a possible infection and take precautions accordingly.

It doesn't take long before they figure out that Autumn has something called Songbird Fever. Erika though? She doesn't. With Autumn struggling and becoming resistance to antibiotics, Watson realizes he needs to try and get to the bottom of this mystery.

Through all of this, Watson continues to suffer from flashes and struggles to keep it together. He's got a whole cocktail of pills he's taking to keep his symptoms under control. It does the trick and Watson eventually discusses their current case with the team to figure it all out.

It would appear that we're looking at two inherited diseases. One is called Two-three syndactyly and the other, orbital hypertelorism. These two traits have flowed down from Erika to her brother Damon and then eventually Autumn. The biggest revelation here though is that Erika and Autumn aren't just cousins... they're also half-sisters too.

This helps to find a solution and treatment is run on them both. However, Watson needs to figure out his own past and find a purpose going forward.

As the episode closes out, we learn that Moriarty is actually still alive, having survived the fall, and he speaks to Shinwell inside a cable car. Shinwell hands over a briefcase of samples the good doctor wants, and leaves him to it.

Guest Stars: Kacey Rohl (The Rep), Bethany Brown (Devin Chaplin), Hampton Fluker (Dr. Isaac Niles), Lauren Bradley (Karine Tanner), Damian O'Hare (Andrew Tanner), Jared Canfield (Dr. Brody Davis-Emerson), Riley Orr (Croft Twin), Andrew Dobbie (Croft Twin), Sofie Kane (Porsche), Arash Ghorbani (Square-Jawed Pharma Rep), Ciara Mandel (Liza Tanner), Ayami Kubo (Maddy Tanner), Janvier Katarbarwa (Third Rep), Autumn Mutis (Electrogirl)
Summary: Watson and the fellows investigate the perplexing case of a family man with a bullet lodged in his head who insists he is a Scottish soldier and seems to be hiding something nefarious; Watson looks for clues to whom his estranged wife Mary is dating.

The episode begins with a look at a man called Andrew Tanner, who returns to his house to find the door ajar. His partner, Karine, is gone and a gunman appears. He shoots, and as the gunshot echoes in the air, we ominously appear to have our patient this week.

Meanwhile, Watson and the gang discuss a patient with uncombable hair syndrome. Dr Derian is pretty standoffish though through all of this, especially as Watson appears to know she's holding back and lying. A lot of this stems from Watson's character analysis of her last week.

When she leaves, Shinwell arrives and expresses his concerns regarding Watson's mental state, especially given his brain injury. Our titular character shrugs it off, claiming that he's fine, but there are obviously doubts here.

Our new case this week falls into Watson's lap, where he heads to the hospital to examine Andrew Tanner. The man works as a re-enactment officer, playing the role of Patrick Ferguson, a captain in the Third Regiment. He's obviously survived a gunshot to the head, but when Watson first speaks to him, Tanner is convinced that he's never met his family. He appears to have shifted across to this Ferguson persona.

The most noticeable diagnosis that the gang come up with is that this is something relating to the nerves inside his brain. Watson though, thinks it goes deeper than that. The bullet is wedged inside his brain, so they need a very skilled surgeon to try and get it out. That falls to Dr Brody Davis-Emerson, or B.D.E as everybody seems to call him. However, he's not going to play ball.

Instead, it's time for round 2 with Tanner. Watson shows up with the gang to his bedside, but this time he comes armed with a document full of facts about Patrick Ferguson. In asking his questions, Tanner's eyes begin darting from side to side. His accent also wavers, seeming to indicate that he's lying. He may just be putting on an act.

Furthermore, Tanner also has the tremors in his right hand, which he's been disguising all this time. We soon learn that he's been holding a ball under the covers in the hospital. As we soon find out, this is because he has Huntington's Disease.

Meanwhile, Shinwell receives a visit from someone on behalf of Moriarty. He's got a task for Shinwell, and it involves switching out the pills Watson currently has for identical ones.

Shinwell wrestles with the morality of all this, while Watson and Dr Lubbock head to Andrew's place to look around. They notice that there were two shots fired, with the second occurring about an hour after the first. Furthermore, the liquor cabinet was opened and whiskey has been drunk.

Watson deduces that everything was staged as a way of getting his family some insurance money, rather than dying from Huntington's and leaving them with nothing. Watson calls Tanner out for this and manages to stop the man from jumping off the hospital roof too. While talking though, Tanner suddenly starts seizing. They have no choice but to operate.

The man for the job is Dr Niles, someone whom Dr Derian has had ties with in the past. It's been 7 years since these two have known one another, and apparently Derian is responsible for his exile. He agrees to operate but only if Derian admits the truth. While she initially says yes, when it comes crunch time, Derian maintains her innocence and betrays her old friend.

The surgery is a success but Dr Niles refuses to work with the gang again, pointing out that Dr Derian is dangerous and they need to be careful.

As the episode closes out, Watson appears to take these new pills — in a blue bottle I may add — which throws question marks over exactly what this may mean for him.

Guest Stars: Kacey Rohl (The Rep), Bethany Brown (Devin Chaplin), Tommy O'Brien (Zach), Djouliet Amara (Molly Jones), Lisa Arrindell Anderson (Felicia Mancini), Riley Orr (Croft Twin), Alan Ramon Ward (Nurse Jace), Kareem Malcolm (Dr. Marcus), Mas Morimoto (Conrad Tran), Carson Bokenfohr (Stagehand), Aman Mann (Bike Messenger)
Summary: Watson and the fellows treat a comic who collapsed at an open mic night; the team becomes concerned when Watson collapses and suffers another traumatic brain injury.

The episode begins with us in Bloomfield. A woman called Molly Jones steps up to do a comedy routine on stage. Midway through her routine, she starts to lose her hearing and she eventually blacks out.

Meanwhile, Watson starts to notice something is up with his pills. His TBS is getting worse and he's struggling to concentrate. He's got the gang off doing errands but Shinwell shows up. He realizes that Watson has been spying on Mary, who's off at a local coffee shop just down the road. He wants to catch a glimpse of her and her new fella but he hasn't, as of yet. Shinwell is also here to let him know he has a new case — the redhead, Molly.

Watson explains to Molly that he needs her to be part of the "Redheaded League", which is his own personal long-term study he's been doing. Molly has epilepsy but neither of her parents had it. However, mid-examination, Watson suddenly passes out on the floor.

Watson needs stitches as a result and despite not finishing the initial exam, he agrees to let the team take Molly on as their Case of the Week. He shrugs off the collapse as him just slipping and falling, and lets the team know of the news. Turns out Molly may have lied about the cause of her mother's death, and that could indicate something bigger going on here. First things first, they need an accurate family history.

Watson hasn't let any of his team know about his symptoms though, nor has he figured out that the pills are a problem. Shinwell is conflicted in all this and meets with Moriarty's associate that night. There's some cryptic chatter about following orders and quite what the villain is up to is being kept secret from us.

While this is going on, Dr. Derian is prepping to try and get into the Spinal Signal Project. Watson notices her and it doesn't take long for her broach the subject of his collapse. She knows he's lying but they're interrupted by the twins, who have big news.

Turns out Molly has duplicated records. One set belongs to Molly and the other to someone called Linda Mancini. It would appear that she changed her name. The reason being that her mum, Felicia, was actually sentenced to 60 years behind bars for drowning her twin toddlers. Molly was the only survivor of this horrific act.

When Watson speaks to Molly about this, she appears to have a seizure. Only, her brain scans don't show any activity linking to epilepsy, so there's clearly something else going on here.

The gang split up, with Watson taking the twins (who continue to engage in banter this episode about a double-date) to the State Correctional Facility in Titusville. This is where Felicia is currently being held.

Watson takes one look at Felicia and immediately susses that she didn't kill her kids. He also, quite noticeably, manages to deduce that she has long QT syndrome. This is the same man, I may add, that can figure out a diagnosis this fast but can't figure out that his pills have been tampered with.

Anyway, this long QT syndrome can cause the heart to play up and it would seem that the kids quite literally were "scared to death". However, it's now up to Watson and the team to treat her. They do so, installing an ICD in her heart and Molly is eventually stabilized. Furthermore, this new diagnosis also means that justice can be served for Felicia too.

Watson though, is far from okay. His recent outbursts, including confronting Mary at the coffee shop and spiralling out of control, is going down on his file. He hasn't told his team, of course, and he still hasn't figured out about the pills yet.

Speaking of which, Shinwell is given pills to switch for Watson, back to his proper medication as a way of evading suspicion. There's also an ongoing storyline here involving Dr Lubbock, who's been wearing an engagement ring. We find out at the end of the episode that she accidentally stumbled on the ring in a drawer, so it's hardly the romantic gesture she was expecting.

We then cut forward one week later. Watson speaks to Derian and he knows she was rejected from the Spinal Project. He offers to put in a good word for her but she sees through this and believes his actions are simply a way of silencing her from prying further into his erratic behaviour.

Patient Question Mark

Season 1
Episode Number: 4
Season Episode: 4

Originally aired: Sunday March 02, 2025
Writer: Teresa Tuan
Director: Ron Underwood
Guest Stars: Kacey Rohl (The Rep), Sprague Grayden (Rachel Smith), Karen Robinson (Brenda the Battle Axe), Michael Kostroff (William "Call Me Bill" Betancourt), Kelli Ogmundson (Trey Coblantz), Riley Orr (Croft Twin), Alan Ramon Ward (Nurse Jace), Cruze McKinnon (Amos Smith), Qado (Micah), Vincent Muller (Benjamin Burkholder)
Summary: When Sasha discovers a link between her current patient, who has advanced cancers and distinctive lesions on his tongue indicative of Cowden syndrome, and a cadaver she dissected during medical school, the team traces the case to Amish country.

The episode begins with Watson introducing the team to his Signal-to-noise exercise. There are three cases for the gang to potentially deal with here — Ellen Samuelson (who has no fingerprints), Vaughn Timms (who is susceptible to multiple fractures) and William Betancourt (who has an inflamed tongue). They need to figure out which is of diagnosis interest and which are just noise. Well, they pick Betancourt and off Ingrid and Adam go to diagnose and hopefully cure this.

Betancourt though is a rather annoying busybody, who's more preoccupied with his work than with his health. While Ingrid informs him that he needs to give them a few hours for screening given how susceptible he is to cancer, he shrugs them off. While he's on the phone, Adam is quick to point out to Ingrid that she's clearly Watson's favourite because she keeps him on his toes.

Preliminary checks ring alarm bells when they do check out Betancourt, given it confirms Watson's suspicions that he has Cowden Syndrome, so he's brought into the ER for an operation. Whilst there, Dr Lubbock watches on in concern. Flashbacks flesh out a little bit of why this case is so personal for her, and this stems from her own past. As a fresh-faced med student, she handled a case not dissimilar from this one.

Watson picks up on her apprehension and contemplates whether they could use this to do some real good. Specifically, in tracking the patient that Lubbock dealt with decades ago during med school. Given her demeanour and how meticulous she is, Watson knows she still has her notes from that time too, and has the twins check it out.

Together with Ingrid and Lubbock, Watson shows up at the lab to look for clues. There, they meet Brenda who apparently remembers absolutely everybody who's come into her lab, including the two ladies here. However, Watson would like to see the confidential ledger but when Brenda scoffs and laughs incredulously at that suggestion, our protagonist instead decides to sweeten the deal with a bribe.

Here we learn that the lab processes 80 bodies a year but they're looking for their cadaver within a two-year window, which narrows things down. Furthermore, Watson wants to rely on Lubbock's incredibly unreliable memory from the past and to pay attention to small details therein. Well, it works and they manage to use Lubbock's random memories from that time to narrow down their patient. Only, it turns out the entry in the ledger is accompanied by a coffee stain.

Lubbock's trip down memory lane continues as she winds up finding an old flame called Micah. He's got his own art gallery and along with numerous sketches of Lubbock herself, who is obviously his muse, he also has a few old drawings of their cadaver and it would appear that he has a tattoo.

This eventually brings them along to discover the man's name is Jacob Hochstetler. He's Amish and they need to find his immediate family — including his sister. She's recently got married and doing some searches online, Ingrid and Adam track down her address but it would appear that Rachel's son may be vulnerable so they need to run some tests.

On the way up to the lab, Rachel explains that she's a single mother as the father skipped out, but there's a bigger problem. Watson's marriage mediation with Mary is due to take place but Watson is obviously busy with the case. They have to rush though as Amos, Rachel's son, winds up with a respiratory issue. Thankfully, the gang know what to look for and they manage to heal him when he's rushed into the lab.

Meanwhile, Shinwell receives his next set of instructions by Moriarty's handler. He's given a phone which includes programming for the lab's robot. It'll upload samples and genomes for all of Watson's patients. Just before he heads back inside, Shinwell drops a tracker on her car. And not very subtly either. Anyway, he follows her out to a hospital where it would appear she has a son who has cancer.

Back at the lab, following all the drama, Adam speaks to Lubbock about the Cowden Syndrome. They've managed to track down 12 people from the community in total, who all know to get early screenings thanks to her quick thinking.

However, Ingrid is far more direct. She speaks to Lubbock at the gallery about the secrets she's keeping. She's figured out that Lubbock is not engaged, given her ring is bogus, and despite saving so many people in the past, she's having a hard time.

Given this Micah is obsessed and still drawing her after decades, these are genuine feelings of love rather than what Lubbock is experiencing with her current partner, who appears to be stringing her along.

Meanwhile, Watson heads over to Mary's place and informs her that he's not going to hire a divorce lawyer after all. He's not contesting the divorce as he wants her to be happy and have the life she wants.

The Man with the Glowing Chest

Season 1
Episode Number: 5
Season Episode: 5

Originally aired: Sunday March 09, 2025
Writer: Shardé Miller
Director: Tara Nicole Weyr
Guest Stars: Kiera Allen (Gigi Grigoryan), Nat Faxon (Hobie McSorley), Brittany Adebumola (Taryn Quintyne), Raymond Cham Jr. (George Carver), Riley Orr (Croft Twin), Louriza Tronco (Nurse Reyes), Alejandra Chavarria (Nurse Cassie), Ted Cole (E.R. Doctor), Shayn Walker (Doctor Martin), Keda Edwards Pierre (Anthea Hines)
Summary: Watson takes a major ethical risk when he decides to treat a sickle cell patient with an unorthodox surgery, and the team faces their own dilemma when they must decide whether to look the other way or help the young woman. Meanwhile, Ingrid struggles to get her sister admitted to her spinal project.

The episode starts in 2016 with Taryn Quintyne giving a speech for valedictorian. However, she suddenly starts coughing uncontrollably. This regime of heading to the doctors continues all the way through to 2024, where we see that Taryn has Sickle Cell Disease. Insurance doesn't cover it though, which is putting a strain on her finances, and it seems her condition is worsening every year.

At the lab, Lubbock questions Ingrid over her aggressive emails. She's working with the Spinal Signal Project and is Lead Neurologist. They're vetting candidates but the Chairman is rejecting her ideas surrounding adding young people into the trial. Step forward Lubbock, who manages to save the day with her passive-aggressive tone, much to the admiration of Ingrid.

Meanwhile, the titled "golden chest" is actually a surgeon by the name of Hobie who has experimented on himself to give him a glowing chest. The team don't believe Watson and think this is some sort of test until they receive a picture. Hobie is a pretty talented surgeon, and naturally, he wants the next step in this glowing project to be his genitals.

It doesn't take long for the team to get hold of Taryn's case though. Watson is confident that he can fix her but that's not what Mary Morstan is asking when she catches up to him. Instead, she brings up how she wants Watson's team to figure out why the Sickle Cell disease is worsening, fix her up as best they can and pass her back to Mary ready for a clinical trial to help her symptoms.

Watson speaks to Taryn, whose vision has gone blurry because her eyes are bleeding from the inside. Furthermore, she reinforces here that her attacks have been getting worse all year. Thankfully, Taryn has been writing everything down about her treatment and all the doctor visits over the years, which could be an invaluable tool.

Watson is determined to get Taryn this cure, despite the steep $3 million cost, and has the team on alternate paths to get this nailed. Lubbock is to check through her diary, while the twins are to supervise a liquid chromatography test. Taryn is in a lot of pain and Watson is a man on a mission to make her better, no matter what.

He speaks to Shinwell in the lab and reveals that he intends to bypass Mary and the FDA, wanting to cure Taryn outright. Part of that includes surgery, so Watson cycles through some names they can use to get this done. And guess who comes up? Yep, it's Hobie.

Part of the cure would include correcting the mutation causing the Sickle Cell disease in the first place. It's different to the current cures on the market right now but of course it would ruffle a good number of feathers in the medical department too. It's also never been tried before and isn't an approved procedure. Watson could lose his job.

The team are a little more cautious surrounding this move, and contemplate whether to report Watson outright. They're worried that this may jeopardize their own careers and the blowback could be massive. Watson is content that he's done the right thing for his patient, given how abhorrent it is that there's a cure easily obtained and Taryn can't get it. The others discuss it and eventually decide to trust their team captain.

The procedure is hidden under the guise of having a mole removed, and Watson shrugs off Mary's concerns when she questions this. After the procedure, Taryn is called back in again after another bad attack. Ingrid speaks up and decides they should use anti-clotting medication to cover their tracks but Watson shuts her down, deciding they need to figure out why she's got an embolism.

When Mary learns about this, she confronts Watson. She knows that he's cured her of the Sickle Cell and even has numerous vials of blood that will prove her right. Watson talks her around though, shrugging off any secret procedures and deciding they need to do what's right for their patient. Turns out Taryn is actually pregnant, explaining the embolism.

That night, Ingrid writes up a timeline of the base repair editing procedure, while Adam shows up at his AA meeting, where he celebrates 5 years sober. As the episode closes out, Mary decides to throw away the blood samples.

The Camgirl Inquiry

Season 1
Episode Number: 6
Season Episode: 6

Originally aired: Sunday March 16, 2025
Writer: Neal Dusedau
Director: Bille Woodruff
Guest Stars: Tommy O'Brien (Zach), Sofie Kane (Porsche), Amanda Crew (Lauren), Riley Orr (Croft Twin), Thomas Hum (EMT Tech), Oliver Zhao (Short Hairy Person), Cesare Scarpone (Nick)
Summary: Stephens musters the courage to ask Watson to help him when his camgirl suddenly collapses during a video call. He does not know anything about her real life, so the team must act quickly to locate her before it's too late. Meanwhile, Watson grapples with guilt over Sherlock's death and Sasha has doubts about her relationship.

The episode starts with Stephens back home talking to a camgirl, Porsche. He knows her interest in him is superficial but he clearly takes comfort in this. However, the girl is sweating badly and he deduces that she could well have a UTI that's getting worse. In fact, she winds up collapsing that night. He offers to help her but it's unclear if the clinic is going to take on more clients right now.

Back at the lab, Shinwell speaks to the team about how they're launching Project Zero, which means they need to whittle down their client list all the way to zero by the time the sun goes down. There's some banter while the group work here, mostly from Ingrid's snidey comments toward Lubbock who continues to prod her regarding her birthday.

Stephens comes to Watson with his concerns regarding Porsche, but he's also concerned that the rest of the team are going to rip into him for this. However, this is serious. They need to find her before she potentially dies but they need to go Sherlock Holmes on this one and track her down using what's in her cam picture.

The attention does turn to Ingrid's past in the middle of this, specifically how she's got back. As they track down the mailing address, Stephens, Adam and Watson head out to Lawrenceville. The real-time shots of Porsche are not encouraging. She appears to be getting worse and they figure out they only have 4 hours left before she could pass away. Time is of the essence.

Watson has some encouraging words for Stephens, who's obviously embarrassed about his whole camgirl affair, but they find Porsche's dog show up in the picture and manage to track down the name of her dog, which is Brutus. The dog knocks the camera slightly, allowing them to use the ol' "magnification" trick on some envelopes to figure out her new alias of Kathryn Patricio.

The group make it to Patricio's apartment just in time and rush her to the lab. They need to know more about her though and alongside her real name of Annie Wilson, and a farm over in New Mexico with rabbits, it's just enough to go on for now to find her.

While Stephens sits with Porsche, Watson points out his own guilt and struggles dealing with his mentor's death. Although it's not entirely the same, he uses this as a reminder that Stephens needs to stop blaming himself for what's happened.

As we soon learn, Annie was bitten by a rabbit while down in New Mexico that seems to have been carrying the Black Death. Or at least some mutant variant of it. With a treatment confirmed, Stephens works on administering a cure for her.

Meanwhile, Lubbock gets Ingrid a cake for her birthday, after asking her most of the episode what she wants. Ingrid immediately throws it back in her face (figuratively of course), pointing out that she's just trying to sweeten her up and eventually control her. She scathingly retorts that Lubbock needs to sort her own life out before attempting to fix Ingrid's. So she heads home and decides to break up with her partner.

Meanwhile, Shinwell speaks to Watson and explains that Sherlock killed himself thanks to his vanity, and Watson isn't responsible for that. However, it's unclear right now if he's switched over the pills as requested by Moriarty's goons.

Summary: While Watson and the team help a woman whose memory resets every three minutes, Watson struggles with auditory hallucinations and questions whether someone is behind his current decline. Also, Moriarty plots his next move.

The episode starts with Shinwell receiving some flowers at the office. There's a letter inside, reading "you haven't switched yet", along with threatening photos of someone breaking into his house while his family are sleeping. This is very obviously Moriarty's doing, and it's a pretty serious threat.

Speaking of serious, a woman called Ginny heads into ER, shocked and sporting a cut across her abdomen. However, she's also got short term memory issues and keeps forgetting the doctor who shows to see her. In fact, Ginny eventually just up and leaves, prompting a Code Green to be issued across the hospital. She winds up heading into Watson's office next, where Shinwell is switching the pills.

The team get on the case, where Lubbock times Ginny's memory losses. It would appear that it resets every 3 minutes and 8 seconds. She's self administering her own drugs, courtesy of clocks in her journal confirming the times, but Watson wants to get to the root cause of this.

Given her journal, it would appear that Ginny has had a number of different appointments, all of which have come to an abrupt end 4 weeks back. There's only one dentist appointment listed, but she's also lost her baby 4 weeks back too, which seems to explain the sudden drop-off of appointments.

The twins do some research online and notice that Ginny was in Machu Picchu on some sort of retreat a week back. There's also the subject of her break-up, along with a recurring psychotic episode where she believes something is eating away inside her. Could any of this hold a clue?

In the midst of the diagnosis, Watson starts to trip and hears violin music. He also hears Holmes' voice too. This appears to be a side effect to the pills Shinwell has switched over, and it affects his diagnosis and way of treating Ginny.

Watson susses there is something up with his pills and he speaks to Stephens about it outside. He knows that Shinwell is behind it, partly thanks to the logo actually reading "Shinwell". Yep, that'll do it!

The only solution here, as Shinwell realizes he's coming to an end of his tirade, is to try and take the full blame himself. If Watson learns about Moriarty, his family could die. Of course, the robot in the lab also has all the info on the different cases Watson and co have been working on, so even if Shinwell is outed, there's still the recorded audio.

As for Ginny, Watson does some tests and finds out that she has a tumor. Specifically, ovarian teratoma. Essentially this is a tumor "with teeth". This explains why she's been so erratic and he remembers Holmes' words in order to come up with this assessment.

While Ginny is worked on, Watson speaks to Morstan, who points out that she was initially pregnant with their child but when she lost the baby, she couldn't tell Watson about it.

That night, Shinwell looks set to tell the truth to Watson until a random pharmacist called Lloyd busts into the office and reveals that he's been switching the meds over. He doesn't elaborate too much further though as he winds up collapsing on the floor and then foaming from the mouth, dead.

Ginny is stabilized, while Watson realizes that Moriarty is still alive. Well, he reveals himself to Ingrid that afternoon, pointing out that he knows a lot about her, including something that happened down by a pond including a dead body.

Summary: Watson runs into brilliant con artist and an old friend of Sherlock Holmes, Irene Adler, when her son Angus is admitted to UHOP for temporary paralysis. The fellows help Watson after he grows fond of Angus and pursue various leads to find a cure to his illness.

The episode begins with our titular character taking out the team to look for medical cases at the nearby mall. However, they're interrupted by the arrival of Irene Adler. She and Watson go way back, to the days of Sherlock to be precise, but the real reason she's here is because her son, Angus, is sick.

Now, Irene used to be a scammer back in the day but she claims she's done with that line of work now. Back at the office, Shinwell gives a suitably frosty welcome to her, clearly distrusting that she's turned a new leaf.

Watson does agree to check Angus over but while he seems okay, he suddenly spaces out and struggles to stand up. As fate would have it, Angus is actually Sherlock's son! This explains why he's a little medical detective and why Watson warns to him so quickly.

With all this knowledge, Watson splits the team in half to search for more clues and figure out exactly what's wrong with Angus. Derian decides to grill Irene over Angus' symptoms, and apparently his first episode occurred while he was playing football. As we later find out, Angus also appears to be gasping in his sleep too.

While Angus helps out Watson in the lab, he helps deduce that the hair our titular character is trying to examine through a microscope... is actually a dog's hair. So they'll need to check again in the morning. Irene allows Angus to stay with Watson that night, given he has a spare room, but having spoken to the kid, he's more convinced than ever that this is definitely Sherlock's son.

Shinwell expresses his concerns about getting too close to Angus, while the team work on finding Sherlock's brother, Mycroft. Watson believes this is the best way of confirming the diagnosis and that stems from getting Sherlock's DNA to run a test.

Watson sends Shinwell to London, needing to talk to Mycroft. He also has no love lost for Irene, and he hands over a trinket of some description to Shinwell.

Elsewhere, Croft uses his "super secret" contacts to discover Irene has been linked recently to multiple cases of charity fraud. He deduces that she's using Angus' illness for profit. With this knowledge, the team confront Watson but apparently he already knew. Watson had sussed that Angus' symptoms were faked to gain Sherlock's DNA, which is what Shinwell picked up from London. And the very same DNA which Angus and Irene take off with that afternoon.

Irene designed all of this from the start in order to gain Sherlock's DNA, sending Watson on the run-around. However, they still have an opportunity to catch up, thanks to Shinwell leaving a tracking device on her. Watson catches up to her and Angus at the airport, where we learn that it's actually Irene that's sick, not Angus. She's got incurable cancer and intends to try and find a solution, regardless of how slim that may be. Irene thought that by selling Sherlock's DNA to a rich accomplice she could have made a pretty penny, with the true end-goal here being to guarantee Angus taken care of when she passes.

Despite the deception, Watson offers Irene a faint glimmer of hope. There's a treatment centre in Texas that might be able to cure her cancer. She accepts, with Watson also agreeing to take Angus under his wing should she pass away. Oh, and in the midst of this we also learn that Angus is not actually Sherlock's kid.

That trinket Shinwell picked up from Mycroft? Well, it turns out to be a ring; a family heirloom that Sherlock wore when he kicked his brother's ass. As Watson sits with Shinwell that afternoon, he drops it in his whiskey and the episode comes to an end.

Summary: Ingrid's lies come back to haunt her when her sister Gigi needs to be treated by the team after she develops side effects to the secret treatments Ingrid put her through. Also, Watson and Mary bond over a tragedy.

The episode starts in 2009 with a girl called Gigi brought into the ER after a nasty accident. Turns out this is Ingrid Derian's sister. Things are touch and go with Gigi and she could well be paralyzed for the rest of her life. Ingrid lashes out at the doctor for not doing enough, and eventually calls on Mary to help.

Turns out Gigi has been abused, as evidenced by bruises all up her arm and we also learn later on that her father pushed her off the stairs, through the banister, hence the injury.

Fast forward to the present and Ingrid receives a call from her sister, begging her to come home. The rest of the team are worried as Ingrid races out the building, where she finds Gigi is in a rough way. She's in pain but Ingrid is loathe to take her back to UHOP. She doesn't want anybody to know this is her sister but she eventually concedes when Gigi promises not to tell anybody about their connection.

Gigi is part of their Spinal Signal Project, but Ingrid lied to get her foot in the door. She pleads with her sister to keep up the façade, which includes reverting to her Gigi persona. It seems she changed it somewhere along the way and if the truth is unveiled here that Ingrid and Gigi are related, she could be kicked out the program and Ingrid will likely lose her job too.

Gigi doesn't get any better though and she continues to struggle. Given Ingrid is working with the top doctors who specialize in House MD cases, Gigi pleads with Ingrid to let her be seen by Watson so they can get to the bottom of this and find a proper cure.

While the rest of the group mess about with dogs and dating profiles, Mary shows up at the lab. She takes Watson out and explains that she's got a reservation for Valentine's Day. She could do with a friend and Watson is her back-up date. He eventually agrees and the pair have a good time.

Midway through the date though, Ingrid eventually concedes and agrees to let Watson help, calling him to confirm as much. As the group contemplate what may be up with Gigi, Ingrid keeps important details from the group regarding her sister's diagnosis.

Watson figures it out quite quickly and speaks to Dr Derian in the lab about it. In the past, Ingrid was specializing in neurology when she studied in Europe but knew that Ingrid would never get into the studies given it would be a conflict of interest, as we know. As a result, Ingrid created a brand new identity and then pushed through the application.

So who is Ingrid risking it all for? Well, it stems from what happened in the past with surgery. Mary was taking the lead on the surgery, agreed to by the family but not the head surgeon, intending to try and help her regardless of consequence.

Unfortunately, the lead surgeon, Moynihan, found out they were going to operate on Gigi and a big fight broke out between him and Mary. They had to stop the surgery, despite getting permission, and it left Gigi paralyzed. Now, Gigi had an incomplete spinal cord injury and while surgery would have helped her, Moynihan was determined to destroy Mary's career had she gone ahead and defied him.

Turns out Gigi actually has a mutation to her RYR1 receptor. When Ingrid initially administered succinylcholine to treat this, along with ECT after, she made Gigi vulnerable to malignant hyperthermia. Ingrid didn't make things better, she made her sister worse.

With dantrolene prescribed to make her better, Mary speaks to Ingrid and reinforces that she's dangerous. She also gives her several months to find another job otherwise she'll be fired. Watson knows Ingrid is good at her job but he's certainly not going to stand in the way of her consequences.

Speaking of consequences, in the past we see what happened to Ingrid's father in the aftermath of the surgery. She took him down to that spot by the lake (where we saw her contemplating and speaking to Moriarty last episode) and here we see why it's so significant. Ingrid stole fentanyl from the hospital and injects her father with it, leaving him in an open grave.

The Man with the Alien Hand

Summary: Watson is thrown into a detective case when he is unsure whether the patient he is treating for one of the most rare ailments in the world, alien hand syndrome, is guilty of pushing his brother in front of a bus to his death.

The episode begins with a man named Cameron Phipps showing up to see Watson with some weird symptoms. He's got an "alien left hand" which appears to have a mind of its own. Apparently there is a cure out there, and it comes from amputating his left hand.

Eight surgeons have turned him down so far and Watson reinforces gently that he's unlikely to find someone that will agree to this. As Shinwell shows him out, he crosses paths with Moriarty's agent. She takes one of Shinwell's hairs for a specimen but also wants him to collect DNA on the rest of the team too. Why? Well, that's a question for another time.

At the lab, Dr Derian is still trying to save her career but before he can press on with this any further, Cameron Phipps is rushed to the ER after burning himself with hydrochloric acid. Apparently he never wanted to do this but it's the hand that acted independently. This is enough to pique Watson's interest and he gets the team involved to find a solution.

Watson suggests a partial amputation to grant Cameron some mobility. Basically it would target and "deaden" the nerves in the hand, but of course it's touch and go because the disease is so rare.

After the injections though, it doesn't seem to make a difference as the hand starts choking himself once he mentions his father. Unfortunately, he pushes his brother in front of a bus.

Lubbock struggles to get through to Derian in the midst of this, reinforcing that they're friends and trying to get through to her but struggling. Derian isn't doing much better though, given she's being blackmailed.

Speaking of struggling, Cameron's case does not look good, but Watson is confident he can fix this before the trial, given they have a Dr Choi flying in for surgery. Choi intends to conduct something called Selective Peripheral Topographic Neurolysis. While this looks set to go ahead, Cameron's mum shows up and admits that his father has been admitted to the ICU with heart problems. However, he's also been through 4 versions of his lab-grown meat for his failed company, and he has problems with his father too.

Watson believes there may be more to this and checks over the traffic footage from Damian's death. There, he sees Cameron check to the left before pushing his brother, almost as if this was premeditated. But whether there is a part of Alien Hand Syndrome in this as well is still unclear.

While the gang work on various theories, Shinwell also struggles to try and understand his role to play here. Does he pass over the DNA to Moriarty? Well, he intends to try and dupe him by passing over fake DNA instead.

Speaking of DNA, Watson believes that what Cameron has is more like something called a 'Milkman Gene'. It's a genetic disorder that makes one more prone to impulsive behaviours. Now, if this was hereditary from his father, John, the man certainly "gets around". Turns out John has 36 kids out of wedlock.

Cameron was certainly not aware of this but for him, a lot of this stems from a massive financial mess he's in. He owes a ton of money and it seems the $300 million he'd get in inheritance from his father, split with his brother of course is just not enough.

So he used the Alien Hand Syndrome to try and make him the sole beneficiary. Great right? Well, that is before you count the 36 other kids and his great plan has completely gone to pot.

With the case solved, Derian eventually opens up to Lubbock and reveals that her father has gone. She does open up that they're friends and also that her father is never coming back given he's the one responsible for Gigi's accident. She's kept a lot of this a secret for 15 years and also tells her about the blackmail too.

Shinwell drops off the DNA that night to Moriarty's agent, leaving everything hanging in the balance.

Summary: Watson confronts a traumatic event from his Army days that still weighs heavily on him when his Army veteran friend's wife reaches out begging for help when her husband is seemingly having a psychotic break. Meanwhile, Shinwell is asked for one last favor by Moriarty.

The episode starts with a man named Dean Kett experiencing vivid hallucinations as he believes he's back on the battlefield again. In his hospital gown, he's flustered and looks set to strike out, relying on Dr Watson and his team to try and come up with a solution. So why Watson specifically? Well, it turns out Watson was actually there with him in the field, working as a doctor.

Watson feels responsible for Dean's accident, especially as Dean lost a leg in this Middle Eastern conflict. Unfortunately, soldiers died and Dean caught shrapnel in his leg, all thanks to a suicide bomber on a bicycle.

Meanwhile, Shinwell meets with Moriarty's agent. She knows that he handed over fake DNA samples but Shinwell has done his research. He knows her daughter, Ashleigh, is being used as a pawn to force her into doing Moriarty's doing. Shinwell pleads with her to get out while she can and he'll even help her.

As their conversation spills over into the main office, Adam happens to be there and he shows up round the corner. It's super awkward, but the pair manage to talk their way out of this by pretending they're lovers. On the way out the door, Moriarty's agent swipes a can from the desk, which appears to have the real DNA on. From here on out, she then spends the rest of the episode gaining DNA from the team.

Speaking of which, the team are briefed on Dean Kett but not only do they need to come up with a treatment plan, they also need to convince him to actually receive treatment. Beyond revealing to "Major Watson" that he has stomach pain, Dean is not in the sharing mood.

Instead, Watson decides to bring Lubbock in as the doctor, under the pretences that she's not on talking terms with him and doesn't like Watson. Of course, this is all a ploy so Watson can be in the background helping the guy's treatment plan. Well, it does not go well as Dean manages to slip away and out the hospital.

Lubbock and Derian are tasked with heading over to Dean's place while this is going on. Whilst there, Lubbock talks to her friend about the lack of agency she has, and how Derian needs to try and get that edge back into her work.

During their snooping, they find a trunk full of Army stuff, and it appears Dean has been keeping track of all his workouts. But why is all this hidden? Well, it turns out he's trying to pass the Army fitness test as he wants to re-enlist.

Back at the hospital, the one place Watson and co. never bothered to check was the roof. That's precisely where Dean is, stopping a helicopter from landing.

Watson gives an impassioned plea and manages to talk Dean down, but that's not the end of it. Turns out Dean is starting to suffer from Ascending Paralysis. It would appear the immune system is fighting against whatever is happening in his stomach, so time is very much of the essence.

Dean feels very guilty though, partly because back then he saw the bomb in the bicycle's basket and never fired or let the squad know. He's blamed Watson all this time when really he blames himself.

When Dean loses consciousness and is set up on intubation, Watson realizes what's going on. It would appear that Dean has Acute Intermittent Porphyria. It's a disorder where the body can't produce enough heme, which is a crucial component to the red blood cell. It's hard to diagnose because it largely stays dormant until something triggers an attack. That attack appears to be linked to Dean's extreme exercise regime.

The gang treat Dean with hemin and it seems to do the trick. When Dean regains consciousness, he decides not to re-enlist and try to discover who he is instead. Furthermore, he also has the contact details for the woman he helped in combat, Ramiza, and she appears to be nearby too, in Missouri.

Watson facetimes with her in the office and catches up, while Moriarty's agent meets with Shinwell and decides that he's not needed anymore.

Summary: When part of the team falls ill after becoming targets of a sinister plot, it becomes an all-hands-on-deck situation to save them before it's too late. Meanwhile, Watson announces a new ambitious project that he has been working on.

The episode starts with the group handling a new patient who happens to be suffering from side effects to a black mould infestation in the building. The pair are working through these cases methodically, and it leads into more interpersonal drama along the way. Specifically, in the double date that the twins head out on. Adam seems to be experiencing strange symptoms whilst there though, acting forgetful and not quite with it. Stephens is shocked as it would appear his brother could well be having a relapse.

Back at the lab, Watson has cause for celebration. Every patient that passes through their doors willingly donates a sample of DNA, and now, with the extensive amount of DNA they've collected, Watson has decided to begin the "Watson Database of Human Mutations". He's got a paper about to be dropped in a science magazine called New Scientist about it too, so he knows they're going to be very busy.

However, they're all thrown a curve-ball when Moriarty shows up in the office. Watson doesn't recognize him, so Derian decides to talk to him privately. Apparently, he's here to set her free. Specifically, with one final mission for him.

This mission includes sabotaging Watson's DNA gig by spiking the adeno-associated virus that he's using for experiments. Everything after this will be easy, and he continues to taunt her all the while, claiming that he's doing this to make her see the real version of herself.

Stephens is concerned as Adam admits that the results are going to come back positive for hydrocodone. He has been relapsing and right on the verge of being engaged and having a book come out too. He shrugs it off though, reinforcing that addiction has no logic or reason. However, there could be something else going on here, something under the veil of addiction that's causing his symptoms to worsen.

Adam shows up in the surgery room not long after and he seems completely delirious. He has a childlike wonder, and he also has insatiable hunger too. Watson deduces that he may have Kluver-Bucy Syndrome. It seems this has advanced from a simple Herpes diagnosis, so a couple of weeks on antibiotics and he should be good as new. Only... he's not. Not only does Stephens wind up infected in the process, but it seems the twins are also resistant to the antidotes too. Turns out whatever they have has been genetically modified.

Shinwell shows up and confirms as much, and having been absent for a few days in the lab, he arrives just in time for an exposition dump with Watson. Turns out Watson's research has made the Croft twins sick. Shinwell breaks down everything that's transpired over the last 12 episodes, including how Moriarty has been pulling the strings all along, and Shinwell has been doing his bidding all this time.

All that DNA that Watson is keeping downstairs has been used against those very people inside the lab. Watson is not happy but when he learns Shinwell has been blackmailed into submission along the way, he's not quite sure how to process this information.

The silence speaks volumes though and Shinwell eventually decides to leave. Outside in the parking lot, Shinwell suddenly sports a burn across his neck. Has he been infected too? This is a serious problem because Watson's DNA lab is, right now, a weapon that Moriarty could use at any time to kill anybody.

Watson explains all of this to the group, before they get down to brass tacks and figure out how to cure the twins. The others in the lab — including Mary, Derian and Lubbock — set out to find a cure for the twins before it's too late. They find a SNORA31 mutation which is essentially a needle in a haystack situation. This could be exactly what they're looking for. In order to sort this, Derian bargains her position back in the lab in exchange for continuing to find a solution. Mary doesn't have much of a choice and agrees.

Time is very much of the essence though, as Adams falls into a coma as his condition worsens. This is all very sketchy territory and Watson creates a new enzyme to target the virus. In order to administer it though, they need to drill into Adams' skull and things seem to be going well... until they're not. Turns out Derian sabotaged the cultures after all.

With weeks needed to grow more, the Croft twins will be dead by then. However, Watson manages to rustle up enough to create one vector. The trouble is, this single dose means they need to make a choice. Do they save Stephens or Adam? They need to make their choice and time is ticking.

Summary: Watson and the team are faced with an impossible choice when two lives hang in the balance, but they only have one vial of antidote available. Meanwhile, Shinwell races to help the team, and Watson goes head to head with Moriarty.

The episode begins with the Croft Twins' lives hanging in the balance. The group need to try and pick which one to save, but Lubbock is incredulous and isn't sure if they can do this. Watson has a coin though, which once belonged to Sherlock and decides to rest the fate of the brothers on the flip of a coin.

Under the knife, Adam is saved but unfortunately, Stephens is still in a rough way. Watson remains hopeful though, given they have two maybe three days to try and find a solution to his condition.

Time is very much of the essence though.

Shinwell returns to the hospital here and believes there's a play they can use. Moriarty's agent is the weak link, and Shinwell knows that her daughter, Ashleigh, isn't well. He approaches her and offers her a solution away from the slimy grip of Moriarty.

The play here is that in exchange for trying to cure Ashleigh's condition, The Rep is to hand over the location of Moriarty's lab so they can get hold of the adeno-associated virus, which happens to be the cure to Stephens' condition.

The Rep agrees to the terms, as Watson and the team work to try and find a solution for Ashleigh. She had brain tumours at the age of 9, and her symptoms are pretty aggressive. They need to target it with chemo but Ashleigh needs to put more weight on to administer it. The trouble is, Ashleigh isn't gaining weight and Watson isn't about to lie and sell false hope, shooting down Derian's suggestion here.

Outside, Ashleigh's oncologist, Laila Bynum, shows up. She's passionate about her work and reminds Watson that this is a critical time to get this done. Ashleigh winds up having a seizure though, right around the time that Stephens' condition starts to deteriorate. These seizures don't appear to be part of her cancer though, as she's never had anything like this before.

In the midst of all this drama, Dr Derian is approached by Moriarty who hands over his business card, confirming that they have a collaboration now. She's happy to join him, and implores Moriarty to work quickly and get the stuff he needs out the lab, given Watson and the team are closing in on the location.

Shinwell's condition is starting to worsen here, with nasty burns spreading all up his back. He continues to work with Watson though, but also knows that our titular character is going through a lot. With everything that's happening, The Rep and Shinwell stake out the lab, intending to sneak in and grab the cure. Just before The Rep heads in, we learn that her real name is Hannah.

Derian's tip-off prompts Moriarty's men to show up with armed guards, ready to stop Shinwell and Hannah from breaking in. Without much of a choice, they're forced to abandon their play.

Back at the lab, Watson believes that Ashleigh has a genetic condition called MCAD. Turns out the meal-replacement shakes they've been giving Ashleigh have included ingredients like coconut oil that she can't process. This explains her seizures at night so she needs to be given corn starch instead. Once she puts weight on, she can then be given chemo and hopefully be cured.

Watson confirms to the team here that Ingrid Derian has been working as a double-agent all this time and told Watson everything. She confirms that she ruined the vector and everything went to crap because of her. She's admitted to everything and together with Watson, they've worked to make Moriarty sick in the same way he did with the Croft twins.

Moriarty shows up at the clinic soon after, and Watson breaks down all the symptoms he's about to suffer from, starting with blindness and getting a whole lot worse. Watson wants the virus to cure Stephens in exchange for saving Moriarty's life, and he eventually caves.

Stephens is cured, Lubbock shows up and professes her love while Ashleigh gets better. Shinwell is also cured too, while Derian arrives to apologize to Stephens. He refuses to work with her though, which is understandable, and she leaves the office.

Moriarty is cured of his blindness, and Watson speaks to his rival about everything he did across the season, wanting an explanation. When he doesn't get one, Watson confirms that he hasn't fully cured Moriarty. Despite giving him his eyesight back, Watson hasn't fully got him out of the woods, and without any answers, he's prepared to let Moriarty die right there in his bed.

This is precisely what Watson does, letting the guy die, and leaving it up to Mary to sort out from here.

We then cut forward several weeks later and see that Watson is now dating Laila, Ashleigh's oncologist.

Summary: Watson and the fellows spring back into action when Mary's mother accidentally poisons herself while suffering from a rare form of dementia that is progressing with impossible speed. Meanwhile, Sherlock Holmes resurfaces after being presumed dead.

Dr. John Watson was dating again. It took him some time to get over his ex-wife. Only Mary still holds a place in his heart. Mary called him while he was out on a date with someone else and he dropped everything when he heard that her mother was sick. It wasn't a stroke.

She showed signs of respiratory distress. It just wasn't matching anything they've seen before. Watson called in everyone for this one. They even got help from Shinwell. Mary's mother is Elizabeth Morstan. Mary thought her mother was completely health before this and sadly that wasn't true. Her mom wasn't well. She hasn't been for a while.

Elizabeth was experiencing moderate to severe dementia. She was forgetting a lot. She forgot that she makes her own bitter almond extract or how much she puts in a secret family recipe.

She kept taking a taste test. She accidentally gave herself cyanide poisoning. She was treated for it once they found out what it was. It then left the question of what caused the dementia. The dementia was spreading quicker than it normally does. It wasn't even a slow progress because Mary sees her mother twice a week.

Elizabeth was fine a month ago. She began experiencing worsening symptoms in two weeks. In a few days, she forgot Watson. She eventually came to forget Mary was her daughter.

She thought she was twenty-five. She thought she was still pregnant with Mary. Her physical symptoms was motor dysfunction at first. Something Watson didn't notice at first until she wrote out baby names for the child she thought was still in her stomach. She genuinely thought it would be a boy. Mary couldn't be in the same room as her mom because it just made her too sad.

Watson took over her care. He also found himself handling Mary as well. His new girlfriend was very understanding. She told him that he always put others before himself and maybe he needs to figure out what's best for him. Watson couldn't give up on Elizabeth. He's known for a long time.

Elizabeth still considered him a son-in-law. She loves him. Or the part that remembers him loves him. His first priority was saving Elizabeth. The next part will be figuring out what he wants because even his doctors grow restless.

Watson wasn't just dating again. He turned down lectures. He turned down conferences. He even went as far as turning down grants. He's stopped the clinic. His doctors didn't want to be plain old doctors at a regional hospital. They wanted to be more. They also didn't want to go looking for a new neurologist. Yes, the last one walked the fine line between good and evil. She still left big shoes to fill and they weren't sure they could do it because Watson didn't just want brilliant. He wanted unusual. He wants mysteries.

His current doctors all still have them. Shinwell still has them. It's why they're all still there. Watson loved a mystery. It's what drew him to these people. It's what kept him interested. The team ran into Ingrid while they were interviewing her potential replacement. She got a job in the area. Her sister was still getting treatment at U Hop. Or at least that's what she told the team when she saw them. She seemed good. She seemed better. She was going to group therapy and she was finally getting treated for having anti-social personality disorder.

She couldn't get treatment at her own hospital. She was going to U Hop because it was nearby. She was working on herself and she was doing the best to stop her life from repeatedly blowing up. She just didn't tell anyone she's seeking treatment. They still thought she looked good. Shinwell has been given a third chance. Why couldn't she? There wasn't a single one that was without sin last year and so Watson's team put two files on his desk for Ingrid. One was a nice woman with no mystery. The other was Ingrid.

Watson might be curious to get Ingrid back. He loved a mystery and he ended up solving Elizabeth's. She didn't have dementia. She had a failing liver. She wasn't a drinker. It happened from her type two diabetes. It would take too long for her to be on the donor's list. Mary got herself tested to see if she could be a living donor. The results came back that it was too much of a risk. Mary wasn't particularly in the best health for it and Watson told her that he couldn't risk losing them both by forcing a procedure that might not work anyways.

Watson instead got creative. He remembered that Elizabeth thought she was pregnant at twenty-five. There was just one issue. She had Mary at twenty-nine. Elizabeth had gotten pregnant before she was married and neither she nor her future husband were in the best position to care for a child. They put him up for adoption. Elizabeth made sure he got the name she chose. She also kept a close eye on him. He owns a bakery nearby. Elizabeth visited it everyday just to see her son. She never told him who she was and so he was surprised when Watson brought Mary to his bakery.

Miles was the only one who could be a possible match for her mother. He simply never knew Elizabeth was his bio mother. This plus him having his own family made him not want to donate. It took him seeing Elizabeth for him to realize she was the uplifting regular. The one that convinced him to stay in business when he nearly gave up. She helped turn around his bakery. She also gave him life. He decided to replay that and he thankfully was a much better match than Mary was. After a successful surgery, Miles got to introduce his family to Elizabeth and Mary both.

And it showed Watson what he wants. Why he gave up all those things he used to chase? He wanted to focus on being happy and finding love again. He gave it up once for Holmes. Now, Holmes returned from the dead to steal food from his refrigerator tonight. Odds are he's going to mayhem like he always does.

Summary: When a microbiology university researcher returns from an expedition to Siberia, she and her team members fall ill from a possible revived pathogen or "zombie virus." Meanwhile, Watson catches up with his friend Sherlock Holmes after finding out he is alive, and Ingrid unexpectedly finds herself on the team's floor.

The great Sherlock Holmes's return came with consequences. It always does with this man. He was believed to be dead. Watson saw him go over the Waterfall with Moriarty. He assumed both were dead. Only Moriarty showed up again last year.

Sherlock was showing up this season. He broke up Watson's marriage last time and the poor man just got into a new relationship. He was finally prioritizing himself. He take breaks from work. People were wondering if he went soft and so naturally the juiciest case he caught happened right before Sherlock came.

Sherlock returned asking Watson how his day was. They were best friends. Sherlock disappeared on him for a year and Sherlock thought they should start rebuilding trust. So, he really wanted to know how Watson's day went. Watson explained it started when he sought out the advice of a psychiatrist.

He went to the professional to see if there was any hope for Ingrid. Ingrid was a brilliant doctor. She was also a sociopath if not borderline. She came clean with the team when she needed to and she was going to therapy now.

Watson wanted to know if he could trust her enough to rehire her. He needed a neurologist. Ingrid was the best. The team wanted her back. Shinwell wanted her back. Watson just wasn't sure if he could trust her again and so he got professional advice for people like Ingrid.

He demanded to know if they can be saved. He didn't get the answer when Mary saw him. Mary needed his help. She has a doctor that was suffering from what looked like the flu and the woman was demanding to see someone of Watson's renown because she didn't think it was the flu.

Dr. Amelia Woodward was in fear for her life. She made arrangements for her brother living in care. She asked Watson to make sure her directives get sent to her cousins. Watson had to ask her why she was so scared. Amelia revealed that she study the artic permafrost.

They were studying it because the icebergs were melting. When they melt, they release whatever viruses were locked into the ice. Amelia didn't even go on the journey for herself. Or the book she made on the topic. She needed money for her brother's extended care and that was quite expensive.

She kept digging out in Siberia. She found the woolly mammoth. They were bringing it state-side when they the expedition got sick. One man was being interviewed in Watson's office when he collapsed. Ingrid was nearby. She wanted to confront Watson on why he was contacting her therapist.

She saw the man on the ground. She rushed over to administer CPR. She believed it was a heart attack until he died and Watson connected him to the expedition. It also meant both Watson and Ingrid were exposed to the zombie virus.

They were sectioned off. The same with the expedition team. The symptoms weren't showed up anytime soon for Ingrid or Watson. It gave Watson an idea. He checked what they ate on this expedition. Someone brought a heavy bag of baking soda. They didn't have the zombie virus.

They were suffering from food poisoning. Typhoid was in the gumbo. It also showed that one member of the expedition team was a killer. They almost killed Amelia too because she developed an abscess in her stomach and had required surgery to fix her stomach.

Amelia didn't do this to herself. No matter how much money she wants to earn for her brother's care. Another member was dead. That left three. Sherlock helped Watson to determine it was the fan that did it. He was from New Orleans and they ate gumbo that night. He poisoned the food.

He gave them typhoid because he was a huge fan of Amelia. He loved her book. He now wants to do anything he can to get the word out. Sherlock helped Watson see that this mega fan was dangerous. Sherlock then told Watson how he survived the fall.

Sherlock was never there that day. He called two rivals to set up a meeting with him and they did what villains do. They tried to kill each other believing they were killing Sherlock. Sherlock was tired of being Sherlock Holmes — the world's greatest detective. He faked his death to get away from the persona. He wanted a new start. A new mystery. He was heading to Pittsburg because something there caught his eye.

He needed to borrow money from Watson as well. Sherlock was super rich. It's just he gave away that wealth when he chose to fake his death. He didn't want Watson losing his clinic. He also didn't want to stand in the way of Watson growing into himself. He wasn't a sidekick anymore.

Their poisoner was arrested and Ingrid was rehired as Watson's neurologist.

And Sasha met her biological uncle. She saw Mary reunite with her brother and his family. He made her question if her biological family ever wanted to contact her. She looked into it. Her uncle wanted to meet her. He was even willing to bombard her phone until she met with him. So, she did. She met him and she was finding out about her culture.

Summary: Watson and the team work alongside Laila to help a patient named Maxine, who is 30 years old but looks 10 years old. Meanwhile, Watson convinces Laila that he is serious about their relationship and Ingrid is struggling to ingratiate herself back at work as a hot newcomer joins her therapy group.

There was a patient that came into the hospital needing help. She needed surgery. Yet, the doctors were holding off on providing her one because she looked ten even as she claimed she's thirty. The hospital's lawyer wanted to speak with the woman's parents. They were in Maine. It's where they live. She was in Pittsburgh because she is an adult. She was traveling across country by herself. It's just that no one believes her. She didn't have her ID on her because she was t-boned in a car accident and the EMTs got her out of the car without it.

The patient's name is Maxine Bowers. Or Max as she prefers. Max has a condition that stopped her ageing at ten. She was always small for her age and then at ten she just stopped growing. Max has been through it all. She doesn't want to deal with it again. She just wanted to get treatment and be on her way. Max was done feeling like a sideshow. She asked for the best doctor available and Mary called in Watson. He took one look at her mouth. She has all of her molars. Her teeth have been in there for decades. She really was thirty. She just looks ten.

Max has such a potty mouth. She has a reason to be that way. It reminds her of her age. She can't live alone and so she lives with her parents. She has to work a remote job because no one wants to hire her when they get a good look at her. She was taking this road trip because she wanted to go swimming where her mom took her one and only vacation. There was just one issue. She needed more than one surgery. She needed treatment for Lymphoma. Mary found swollen lymph nodes in Max and Max knew about it.

Max didn't care. She has no reason to live. She will never date or get married or have kids. She grew up in rural Maine. She couldn't wait to swim in the lake like her mother did and then she didn't care what happened afterwards. She felt she had no reason to live. She was going to get the surgery to fix her arm and then she's back on the road. Watson had until the next morning to solve two problems. He has to give Max a reason to live and he has to get Max to accept treatment for lymphoma. Only it wasn't lymphoma as it happens.

Max was anemic. She's been coming in for treatment for the past eight months. She was complaining about hand tremors and she's had a high fever that she couldn't shake. She didn't have cancer. She had Lupus. They wanted to tell Max that and Max had already checked herself out of the hospital. Against the doctor's advice, Max spoke to Shinwell and she doesn't think there's anyone else like her. Watson believes there is. He said there's eight billion people in the world. There's bound to be someone like Max. Her condition doesn't even have a name yet.

Watson downloaded the police scanner app on his phone. He stayed up listening to it. Max didn't have money or her bag or a cell phone or her car. Watson was worried about what she might do and he had a right to that fear because Max tried to steal a car. The cops arrested her. They called in children Services. Watson has some friends on the police force. He was going to get Max released when she started to struggle to breathe. They called an ambulance for her. Max didn't want to get taken back to the hospital.

She thought she was dying. She wanted to just die there. Under the stars. Watson had to do a lot of fast talking to convince her to keep fighting. It was Ingrid's idea. Ingrid pointed out that there was fight in Max. Max was traveling around the country by herself. She advocates for herself. She was a fighter and she just needed to be reminded of it. That's what Watson did for her. Ingrid being back was awkward at first because they weren't sure if they could trust her again. Ingrid herself wasn't sure if she could be trustworthy.

Ingrid attends group therapy twice a week. There was a new attending meetings. He seemed a little too invested in Ingrid. He actually stopped by the clinic to "check it out". He heard such good things from her about it. She ended up telling him that the clinic wasn't a place to just drop by. The visitors have to call ahead. They would still get a no, but a call ahead showed manners. The guy was still interested. He said he was starting a tech company and he was interested in possibly working with her. She turned that down too. She didn't think wise to go into business with another sociopath.

Plus, if he kept taking her no's as a soft one then she was going to threaten him. She said she's killed before and she wasn't afraid to do so again. Ingrid and the others gave Max about her future. It was going to be a bright future because Watson did follow through on his promise. He met someone else with the same condition. The woman looks eleven when really she's forty-one. What Max needed was a community. Her mom died. The ashes were in the back of her car. Its why she to see the lake so badly. She wanted to honor her mother before what she thought was cancer killed her.

Luckily, she's not dying. Her condition is manageable. She now has a friend and she wasn't so alone. It was a good day's work for the team and they all got the chance to talk to Ingrid. Ingrid knew Stephens was battling depression. He dismissed it by trying to laugh it off and Ingrid reminded him that it was a serious condition. He shouldn't be using sex in leeway of actual therapy. Ingrid also got along with Sasha again. They both missed their friendship.

And Watson has made it known that he does wish to meet his girlfriend's son — just in case she was wondering.

Summary: Watson and the team jump into action when four new patients are brought to UHOP with wounds that appear to be infected with a flesh-eating bacterium following a tornado. Meanwhile, Shinwell searches for meaning as a nursing student and Adam's wedding to Lauren risks being halted.

There's a storm in the city. The whole place was given a warning that it might turn into a tornado. Watson was loving it and overworked nurses like Shinwell was being pushed to his limits. He was a trainee still. It meant that he was overworked as well as underpaid. Shinwell was quick on his feet. He did his best to keep up and he quickly noticed a trend. He noticed that everyone that had a cut had it turn black on them. It was also oozing puss. He tried to bring this to a supervisor when he noticed the trend. She told him that she didn't have time for theories. And so Shinwell went above her.

Shinwell went to Watson. He showed him pictures of two of the injuries. There were three patients only one patient had a cut on her thigh. She cut herself shaving. Watson and his team took one look at the photos and they quickly shut down the hospital because there was a chance it was flesh-eating bacteria outbreak at UHOP. They tested everyone. They first had to start with Shinwell because he treated three patients. There was soon a fourth patient. Then Watson checked at other hospitals. They had patients with the same thing.

They were all in one area. This was a fungal infection. The tornado released certain spores into the area and that's how they all got sick. One patient had already died from this. Another was going to lose his leg. Ben was sixteen and he had basketball scholarships to five places. It hurt him when he was told he was going to lose his leg. He had bonded with Shinwell and Shinwell was there to support him during surgery. Shinwell was also taking it hard. They found out what could help these patients. It just wasn't going to be enough to save Ben's leg.

Shinwell was having a moment of crisis afterwards. He asked Watson how did he do it? How did he keep going because there was a part of Shinwell that felt he could have saved that leg if he had come forward earlier. Ben was the first one he saw with the injury. He knew something wasn't right about it. He ignored that feeling until he came across two others with the same thing. He felt he wasted time looking for answers when he should have gone straight to Watson to begin with. This case was going to haunt Shinwell for a bit.

Frankie was another patient. She's the one that had a cut to her thigh. Her husband was out of town and so she asked for a deacon at the church be her medical sponsor. Everyone figured out the deacon and her were having an affair. Frankie was doing the worst out of all the patients because she was in contact with animal spores. Her lover had pet guinea pigs. It was making Frankie sicker. Her sexually transmitted flesh-eating fungus was made worse by flea bites. And so Watson had to warn the couple that the truth might get out if they both start taking the same medication.

The affair partner said it was no big deal. The husband knew about the relationship. They were all in a throuple. It was complicated and somewhat messy. It also gave them answers that were making Frankie sick. She got treatment. She was going to live thanks to this awkward situation to explain to anyone else. They also had to keep it from the church or it might cause a scandal. Adam also got some news. He wasn't sure if he should be happy or not about it. His fiancé was pregnant. They had discussed kids before.

They initially were going to wait a few years before they started trying. Now, that's no longer a problem. They were pregnant and Adam was just beginning to realize he might not want kids. He liked kids in an abstract way. He just couldn't handle them in a very real way. Or be a parent to one. Adam was freaking and so the only person he told was his twin. He told him all his fears. He even brought up that he thought he was a horrible person. Stephens assured him that he wasn't a bad guy. He was merely overwhelmed and needed time to think about all the changes coming.

The same goes for Watson. All episode long Watson has been happy about the storm outside. He loved the fact that it was turning into a tornado and he didn't tell anyone why he loved it. it turns out it reminded him of a happier time with Mary. They were once on that same roof twenty years ago dancing to that one song that Watson always plays during a storm and they kissed. They kept kissing because they were happily in love back then. And fast-forward twenty years, and Mary figured out why Watson still loves those storms.

It reminded him of their marriage.

The patients all got proper treatment and they were going to live, but Adam was sitting on the pregnancy until they passed the twelve week mark and Watson realized his fresh start with Laila might not be wanted he needs right now.

Summary: While visiting another hospital, Watson becomes convinced that a coma patient is suffering from locked-in syndrome and has been mistaken for a coma patient for over a decade. After the patient is transferred to UHOP for treatment, he shocks the team with chilling messages. Meanwhile, Sherlock is back in town and is staying with Watson.

Sherlock was back! He mentioned working a case nearby. Watson just never expected he'd suddenly showed up in the middle of the night or that he'd make toad in the hole for him for breakfast. Watson warned him against showing up suddenly in the night.

He won't hurt him. Others might. Watson and Sherlock were eating when they saw Sherlock's brother on the news. Mycroft was the CEO of Diogenes Technology. In other Sherlock lore, Mycroft has always worked for the government and so does he still work for the government? And is Diogenes Technology one of their companies?

Sherlock doesn't know because he barely talks to his brother. They haven't spoken in years. There's a chance that Mycroft may not even know he'd return from the dead again. Their brotherhood has been troublesome from the start.

It wasn't long since Sherlock popped up that Mycroft started calling Watson, but Watson didn't take his calls. He found a new mystery and he couldn't wait to unlock it. He was giving a speech at Van Kirk Memorial Hospital when a nurse asked for his help. Nurse Alicia Santos has a patient she believed is responding to her in the longterm unit.

The patient was Lewis "Lucky" Collier. He has a stroke sixteen years ago. His wife was on a trip and she didn't find him until a day later. By then, he was written off as comatose. He's been in the longterm unit for the past sixteen years. He hasn't had a visitor in ten.

His wife died not long after he was hospitalized. No one else had her commitment. It took Nurse Alicia for someone to finally start talking to him again. She quickly noticed that he was responding and she tried to tell the doctors at the hospital. She even told her fellow nurse on that floor.

They didn't believe her that Lucky was responding. So, she waited until the great Dr. Watson was visiting her hospital to ask him about it.

He at least took her seriously. He looked into the patient. He found out his nickname is Lucky. He also learned that he hasn't received EEG since he first came in. Watson believes that he had locked in syndrome and that he can respond. He can blink one eye. He sees everything. And he does mean everything.

Lucky has seen a killer nurse on his floor. He warned Alicia that the nurse was doing to kill someone on their floor. They weren't sure if they could believe him. Until someone mysteriously dies that same day. Lucky was then moved to UHOP for better treatment.

He was away from the danger. Or at least that was the plan and it's unfortunate that it didn't work out that way. The evil nurse found out about him communicating with people with doctors. She was a traveling nurse and so she merely worked at UHop just to get close enough to inject something into her next victim — Lucky!

Lucky really does have the worse luck ever. The evil nurse injected with a paralytic. She didn't kill him because that would alert everyone that he was telling the truth about a killer nurse. She gave him a paralytic to trap him in his body again.

Watson figured it out when Lucky wouldn't open his eye to talk to them. His vitals were good. He lost his sole ability communicate. They needed to get that back for him. Watson contacted his detective friend. Detective Lestrang was willing to make an arrest as long as they got their witness back.

The team worked together. They found a way to bring Lucky out of the paralytic. They didn't want to give the killer nurse a second chance.

She already showed her hand by targeting Lucky in the first place. They were able to get Lucky back with medical treatment, but he was going to need more to face trial. Ingrid said her mentor in medical school can put him in a clinical trial where his brain can be connected to an interface. The interface will allow Lucky to communicate just using his brain. There was just one problem.

Ingrid's mentor was kicked out of a company he created. He had sponsors to help him get so far. They wanted profit and so they kicked out Schiff. Now, Schiff was getting drunk at 11 in the morning. Adam wanted to help him. He offered to call him.

Ingrid was complaining about it in a meeting when Beck went at her. He doesn't believe she's happy. He also suspected that she was asking for help when she said she couldn't get Schiff interface and so Beck fixed it for her. He threatened the tech bros. And her mentor got back his life.

Lucky was soon approved for clinical trial. The deadly nurse tried flying to a country without extradition and so Sherlock called in a bomb threat.

There's no way she's getting to Vietnam now. Thank you Sherlock for getting justice. He hasn't always been a good boy and he screwed over Mycroft right before he left. He gave Mycroft technology he knew he'd publish before he found its longterm effects. Now he's going bankrupt.

And Mycroft wants take over the clinic.

Summary: Watson and the fellows race against time to save the life of Xavier, a 21-year-old athlete with a fast-growing, seemingly incurable cancer. Meanwhile, Mycroft Holmes lets Watson know his team's work at UHOP may no longer have funding available.

Sherlock's suppose final act towards his brother was to screw him out billions. Mycroft Holmes even lost his company. Now, Mycroft wants revenge. He couldn't take it out against Sherlock because Sherlock was still technically dead to a world. Mycroft decided to take out his anger on the next best thing.

He targeted Dr. John Watson. Holmes demanded that Watson pursue aggressive research. Watson told him no and so Mycroft pulled his funding. The Holmes Clinic was operated by the Holmes foundatation. Mycroft was the last living Holmes and the Holmes foundation answers only to him. And so now would be the perfect time for Sherlock to tell the world he's not really dead.

Until that happened, Watson was stuck with Mycroft. He refused to pursue "aggressive" research. He didn't want his research being used solely to make Mycroft richer because John believed in a higher calling.

He wanted to use his research to save lives. He didn't want it used by one company that would hold the patent to whatever he or his team found for the rest of time. Watson wanted to save millions. Not whoever can afford him. Its why he took on Casey Zink as a patient. He was referred to them by a friend.

Casey was complaining of pain. He's been in pain for the past two months. He doesn't have insurance. He kept going to the free clinic and they were not equipped to provide medical care.

Casey was just twenty-three. He could have played professional baseball only he chose college. He lost his scholarship after he got injured. He feared he only knew how to throw a ball. He couldn't afford any tests at a hospital. He agreed to go to the Holmes Clinic as long as he wasn't charged for the MRI.

They promised him that wasn't going to be an issue with them. They did the test and then Mary had bad news for them. One, their patient has a spinal tumor.

Two, the Holmes foundation was refusing to cover the costs or hospital stay for Casey. Watson tried calling Mycroft and Mycroft wanted to force him into working for him. Watson refused to budge. He even agreed to pay for Casey's care out of his own pocket. He got help with the funding though. He managed to find a sugar daddy. He went to go work for billionaire, Joseph Bell.

Bell started his own company called Anti-Ageing Generation. He wanted to be able to stop father time. He wanted people to live well past a hundred and he swears he was going to be the first. He wanted to climb a mountain at a hundred. He wanted to father a child at a hundred and fifteen. He was an egotistical man that proved to be more dangerous than Watson realized. Watson did what Bell wanted in exchange Bell covered Casey's medical bills for a month. They thought they could treat Casey's tumor like they did every other cancer.

Cut, poison, burn. Only it didn't work with Casey. Casey's situation was different. The surgery to remove the tumor failed because the tumor appeared to be fused to his spine. They couldn't treat with chemotherapy because a biopsy showed a full blast of the stuff wasn't enough to weaken it in the slightest. Casey's cancer wasn't natural. It was man-made. It was created in a lab to attack him and never stop. Casey said it best. He was given immortal cancer. He eventually lost his sight and he was unable to move.

This genetically created cancer was done by any of the case studies that Casey signed up for. He was broke. He was living out of his car. He kept signing on for many studies and one of them stuck out. He signed up for Primal Bio Tech's vitamin study. He was fine afterwards. He began feeling back pain months later and by then he thought it was a symptom of him living out of his car. It wasn't. It was the cancer. The immortal cancer that was created by Primal Bio Tech. It was actually a shell company for Bell's AAG.

Bell has been testing on young patients trying to buy them extra time. He thought if it worked for them that he could take some himself. He was a little too hasty because he injected himself with the same thing that Casey got. Casey got cancer. Bell now has cancer. Bell just didn't realize it in time because he thought the liver of a twenty-two year old was enough to give him an extra five to ten years. He had Watson working with him in taking his vitals. He works out. He eats right. He thought he was healthy until Watson made the connection between AAG and Primal Bio Tech.

Adam stole a sample of whatever they gave Casey from Bell's refrigerator. He then ran it against the DNA sample of both Casey as well as Bell. They both have the same type of cancer. It was in their spines. It wouldn't come up on a normal blood draw. They were both dying. The Holmes Clinic managed to find a way to convince the cancer to kill itself. Thus they can treat both men, but first Bell has to pay for what he put Casey through. It was Watson's one condition before he treated Bell for his cancer.

Not that it worked for Bell. His cancer mutated way too fast. Bell eventually died and Casey got to live. Casey got the money. He bought a car and he was finally decided what he wanted to do with the rest of his life. Watson later had another meeting with Mycroft. Mycroft figured out that his brother was alive. He demanded that Watson help him find his brother or he was going to keep up his tactics. Even threaten the clinic itself. Watson then had to decide where his loyalty lies. Was it with the people he treated or his best friend who came back from the dead?

Stephens also learned something about himself in a conversation with Ingrid. Ingrid pointed out that she thought he was depressed. He might be. He was also afraid to be. He'll never go to therapy to check for himself. His father was depressed after the divorce and he saw four psychiatrists before he found one he liked. He was attached to that last one. Yet, he still got into a car accident. Something Stephens never believed was an accident at all. He's never told anyone that. He only told Ingrid because he wanted someone to know why he would never go to therapy.

He literally would rather spend time with hospice patients than go.

Summary: Watson's father, Hamish, visits UHOP to introduce Watson and the fellows to his protégé, Annabelle, a saxophone prodigy with musically induced blackouts. As Annabelle's condition worsens, Watson must confront his long-standing tensions with his father in order to save her.

Watson's father was in town. Hamish Watson was there with his protégé. They were both jazz musicians. He wanted to help her sign a record deal and so he was taking her to meet a scout in his son's neck of the woods. Both men thought their relationship was fine. They failed to see it was actually strained.

They don't talk to each other. They talk to intermediaries about each other. It was usually Watson's mother who acted as the interpreter. Mary also did it back when she was married to Watson. Now that their divorce, she was claiming to be Switzerland. She takes no sides and this included on the woman that Hamish brought in.

Hamish's protégé was Annabelle Lee. She stumbled tonight onstage. She also passed out after their performance. Hamish thought it was dehydration. He was hoping she'd get better if she got fluids.

His son took one look at Annabelle and he knew that her condition was much more serious than that. Annabelle has been experiencing intermittent numbness. It's why she kept stumbling. It's now progressing to weakness as well. She was sick and getting sicker. She couldn't make her audition for the record label.

Hamish spoke to his guy. He was in town for several days. Hopefully, Annabelle will be ready by the end of it. That is if the doctors could diagnose her in time. They had a Cat scan done.

They had an MRI completed. They weren't seeing what was wrong and if they couldn't see it then they couldn't treat it. They tried diagnosing her some other way. Adam and Sasha went to Annabelle's apartment. They found several musical instruments. They found her music diary showing she practices everyday. Sometimes for eight hours straight.

They also found something Annabelle was hiding in an outlet. She was using drugs. They were all questioning how she dealt with the stress and the answer was cocaine.

Adam couldn't even touch the bag because he knew his limits. He was a recovering addict. He's been doing well and he couldn't afford to be tempted right as he was about to get married and become a father. Plus, the drugs could explain all the symptoms that Annabelle was experiencing. John got into it with Hamish about it and Mary broke it up. She reminded him that he needed to talk to Annabelle about her drug use.

Not Hamish. Hamish found out about the drugs. He made Annabelle stop and she listened. She only had her career thanks to Hamish. Hamish was a music teacher. He got into it after his son was born. He didn't want to be traveling while raising a kid. So, Hamish's father offered to let him take over their jazz club.

It runs in their family for several generations that jazz. John plays a little. Jazz just wasn't where his heart was. His heart was in medicine. His father soon found others to teach. There was a cleaner who cleaned up the music school as her second job. She brought along her daughter Annabelle because she couldn't afford a babysitter.

Annabelle fell in love with music there. She tried to sing all the highs and lows of Hamish's performance. He eventually noticed her one day. He offered to teach her for free.

It was thanks to him that she got a scholarship to college. She loves music. She was about to make it into a career when suddenly she got sick. It hadn't been the drugs to do it either. They ran a tox screen on her and she's clean. She hasn't touched anything in the past five days. She worships Hamish. She'd never disappoint him.

Watson later watched a recording of the last time she performed. He saw instantly what was wrong. He went to his father to confirm it and the way she's playing was causing her ministrokes.

She needed brain surgery. It would be on the left side of the brain. The right side of the brain was where the musicality mostly comes from. Annabella latched onto the word "mostly". She refused brain surgery. She didn't want it if it could cause her to lose her abilities. She was willing to risk a stroke just to perform.

That ended up happening when she started practicing for the talent scout. She started having a stroke. Watson was nearby and was able to treat it. Only it was going to get worse if she doesn't do something about it. She wouldn't listen to the doctors. Watson knew she'd listen to Hamish. Hamish tried to convince her to go ahead with the surgery. Sasha also learned that her new uncle was a fake. He was merely a lonely old man that wanted to spend time with someone or anyone in such a case.

The fake uncle was good for one thing because he gave Sasha a photo of her as a baby with her mom.

Hamish also finally got through to Annabelle. She had the surgery and she was back to playing music before long. She was a prodigy. She was bound for greatness and so was Watson.

Watson's friends upgraded his father's Wikipedia page to mention that Hamish was the father of world renowned geneticist John Watson. Watson was never good with music. He just didn't have it. He needed to let that go and realize his father's disappointment came and went a long time ago. Hamish was now very proud of his son. He sees medicine was his destiny.

Livvy Sees The Doctor

Summary: UHOP veers into terror when Watson and the fellows are taken hostage by a man with a bomb strapped to his chest who is desperate to find a cure for his 9-year-old daughter's illness.

The Holmes Clinic once rejected Olivia Fitzgerald's case as a patient because she was a child. They didn't have pediatricians in their clinic.

One of the twins sent her to a pediatrician. It took months and the man never found out what was wrong with Olivia. Her father went back to the clinic. He asked for help again.

Sasha agreed to look at the case and get back to them. She never did so. Sergeant William Fitzgerald came back to the clinic again. He finally got the chance to speak to Dr. Watson himself. He asked for help for his daughter and Watson agreed to look at the case the moment he was done with his current patient. And again it went nowhere.

Watson gave an assessment. He offered a referral in Wisconsin. The family couldn't afford to go there. Eventually, eleven months passed for Olivia without getting any kind of help because no one could find what was wrong with her.

Her father finally had enough. He wanted the very best for his daughter and so he strapped a bomb to himself to demand just that from the Holmes Clinic. He showed right as they were experiencing time off. Watson was told he works too much. He also pushes his team a little too far sometimes.

HR had a word with him. Watson then came up with the idea of Reflection, Recovery, and Renewal. It was supposed to be a day of relaxation with no cases. No patients. Ingrid's hookup/therapy partner was another sociopath like her. He doesn't take treatment seriously. Nor did he understand boundaries.

He told Ingrid he had an appointment with Watson and that's not true. He again wanted to sell something. He always wanted to sell something. He was there when Fitz came in with the bomb.

Beck had the chance to leave because he wasn't a doctor. He was just in the way. He didn't take the opportunity because he said he dealt with problems and was good there.

It seems Beck thought he could take out Fitz. He was wrong about that. Fitz was military trained. Beck merely has a personality disorder. It didn't suddenly give him powers and so he really was in the way. Fitz could probably see he was a troublemaker because he tied Beck to a chair. He then had the doctors treat his daughter.

Fitz raised Olivia. He loves Olivia. He was her father in every possible way. He simply wasn't her biological father. He served with her mother and her bio dad. Olivia came back from an affair.

Her bio dad was married at the time to someone else. Fitz also never dated Olivia's mother. He was the guy that took her in after her mom died. He was still her father. He just didn't know her medical history before the age of five. He also didn't know what type of cancer her mom had when she died. He had no clue about the medical history.

Olivia needed surgery right away because her spleen ruptured. Watson needed a surgical team. He talked to Fitz about it. Fitz allowed him to bring people in to go through with the surgery.

Mary made sure she was one of them. They performed surgery. They saved Olivia's life. They still didn't know what was wrong with her because they had an incomplete history. They checked. They found out her mother died from lymphoma after experiencing weird symptoms like Olivia did. Meaning this could be genetic.

There was simply one issue. They didn't have her mother's complete files. Also, her bio dad wasn't her dad at all. Fitz was actually the bio dad. His ex simply said it was the other guy to get the checks.

They only knew Fitz was the biological father because Beck did something stupid. He escaped his restraints. He attacked Fitz and Watson had to choke him out. Beck was quickly released to the police so that he didn't try anything stupid again. But he cut Fitz. Fitz's blood was tested. He was the father all along.

The team also found out what Olivia had. Olivia has a super rare disorder called X-Men disease. It was caused by a warped X-chromosome. It opened her up to a disease that could be found only in men.

It sucks that took an actual bomb to get the truth out. Fitz realizing that it was his blood that could save his daughter was what got him to let go of the bomb. The doctors deescalated the situation. They saved the day. Beck was outside in front of the cameras claiming he was the hero of the day. He was the worst.

Sasha tried to warn Ingrid off him. Ingrid pretended to listen when she always planned on ignoring that advice. She went straight to Beck once everything was over.

She didn't even notice that he began stalking Sasha. She got caught up in the adrenaline. The same for Beck. He loved that the media was calling him a hero. It was actually Watson who delivered Fitz outside to the police after both lives were saved. Olivia and her dad's. Beck seriously injured him when he stabbed like he did. He nearly killed him. Not that Ingrid was there for that.

And Shinwell blamed himself for what happened because he bumped into Fitz before this all began. He got a bad feeling off the guy and he didn't follow it up. He ignored it. He'll always regret that he did so. The same way Ingrid was going to regret continuing her relationship with Beck.

Shannon Says Bex Loves Micah

Dillon (Micah Bynum), Juliette Hawk (Bex Harper), Riley Orr (Croft Twin), Louriza Tronco (Nurse Reyes), Haley-Victoria Hunt (Caitlin), Chardonnay Hanna (Bloody Girlfriend), Devon Busswood (Kaitlin), Hailey Ocean (Bex's Friend), Shaughnessy Redden (Dr. Matthew Corwin), Chris Wood (Dr. Miike)
Summary: Watson and the fellows help Laila's son Micah, who was injured in a car accident while pursuing his crush, Bex, with the help of his AI chatbot.

Dr. Liala Bynum's son is Micah. He's obsessed with an AI Chatbot. Laila breaks down and finally tells John Watson about her son. She needs help. She's already taken his phone away, but knows he needs more help. He's on the spectrum. She's frightened and desperate. Watson meets Micah. Micah is brilliant and skilled at game design and tech. He knows why his Mom asked Watson to talk to him about Micah's chatbot. He's quite intelligent and very perceptive. What Laila doesn't realize is Micah's way ahead of her. He's got a secret stash of three more cell phones hidden in his backpack. Very alarming.

Nurse Carlin DaCosta wakes Shinwell from his break in the empty hospital lobby. She needs him back in the ER. These two are great together. They have their own way of communicating, not by whispering sweet nothings, but by using pertinent, snide bluntness that leads to joking and laughs. No, double entendres or hidden meaningless phrases. They have a cute rapport and friendship. Suddenly there's an alert over the hospital loudspeaker stating a Code D, five-car pileup in the Liberty Tubes. Break is over and everyone is needed in the ER immediately. The ER is in chaos, and Shinwell takes over chest compressions on a patient for Carlin as she's called away. He makes a mistake and is corrected on the spot by an ER attending physician. Shinwell keeps his composure and continues attempts at reviving the patient.

Later that night, Micah is outside Bex's house again. He's urged on by Shannon to do something big to impress Bex. Her Dad hears him going through their trash can and comes outside. Micah panics and runs down the street right into the path of an oncoming car. His AI Chatbot almost gets him killed. Micah goes into surgery, and Mary sets his broken ribs. She updates Laila on her son's condition, and is a little uncomfortable when John comes over and hugs Laila. She finishes telling Laila about Micah and rushes off.

Ivan Ferry, UHOP Psychiatrist, comes to the Holmes Clinic surprising Sasha in their office. He was invited by Dr. Watson to sit in on a case. Ingrid is not happy to see her therapist there and Adam sees Ingrid's annoyance as he enters the office. Silence is golden at this point. Intriguing scene, and amazing how much the actors convey by just looks and facial expressions. Another good scene.

Dr. John Watson briefs the Fellows on his latest case, Micah's unhealthy attachment to an AI Chatbot. He maps out the case and current findings on their whiteboard. The unidentified mystery is what is wrong with Micah, and they need to know what to do about it. Stephens knows exactly what's wrong, AI psychosis. Dr. Ferry adds that the term is new in the psychology field, but it is catching up. He tells them that it relates to relationships, and what occurs when not addressed. Adam states that it parallels addiction and starts voluntarily until it becomes compulsive. Ingrid adds it's a form of positivity, someone who never says "no", and that's an ultimate high. Sasha looks at the obsession logically and doesn't understand it, since the AI Chatbot is just an app. Watson clarifies and says it's true it is an app, but it scans the net for all information needed to feed it to the user in whatever 'spin' you want. This is incredible. He likens it to a loving critic in your life which creates your own reality.

Dr. Ferry asks to speak with the patient and Bex to understand their relationship. Watson assigns tasks—research treatment protocols, help Dr. Ferry meet with Bex and her family, and Watson will meet with Micah.

Nurse Carlin speaks with Shinwell about his ER mistake. The ER doctor, Dr. Mathew Corwin complained and Shinwell got a ding on his record. Carlin is stepping down as his nursing student perceptor, and he'll get a new one. She shares a little of her personal history, and reveals she was once married to Dr. Corwin. She believes her working with Shinwell is the reason the complaint was submitted. Things suddenly change between them.

Watson goes to see Micah. Micah bluntly asks John if he loves his mother. Watson avoids the question and asks about Bex. Micah thinks his Mom doesn't think Watson is that good of a person. He states exactly what he's thinking, no filter applied. He's a little different in behavior, and very direct. They agree to answer questions honestly. Micah tells Watson about Bex's difference in walking. He explains why he went through their trash. Watson looks at him, analyzing him in his unique way.

Dr. Ferry breaks up Stephens and Ingrid's argument about needing a psychiatrist. They go to see Bex and her father. Bex says she and Micah have chemistry together, and she's very aware of him being autistic. She likes him. Ingrid asks Bex about the change in her gait that Micah noticed. Bex says it's nothing. She says she hit her head during cheerleader practice. She later had a headache, but thought nothing of it. She suddenly throws up, collapses and convulses. They get her to the ER. Bex's Dad asks if Micah knew about Bex's head injury. He and Bex thank him.

Watson and Laila go to check on Micah and ask him what he knows, but he disappeared. He's off asking his AI about John Watson. The AI turns him against John. Shinwell walks by Micah outside the Holmes Clinic, but doesn't notice anything wrong.

Watson tried to explain the difference between the app and people. He says people can be wrong, anyone can. The app is actually feeding you information you already know, and can be wrong, too. He asks Micah to stay off the chatbot app for thirty days. He assures Micah he will always tell him the truth. Micah stumps him by bluntly asking who Sherlock Holmes is. He found a hidden letter Watson wrote to Sherlock. Watson lies about the letter and Sherlock, but later trusts Micah enough to tell him the truth.

Dr. Ferry is certain Micah's dopamine fast is working and is about to leave the clinic when Sasha stops him. He gives her some advice. Stephens later asks Ivan/Dr. Ferry for help with his depression, and he agrees.

Shinwell later meets Dr. Corwin outside a coffee shop. He set him up and warns him never to interfere with Nurse Carlin again.

Never Been CRISPR'd

Summary: Watson's biohacker friend Hobie (aka the man with the glowing chest) returns when he rushes his new girlfriend to the Holmes Clinic after they partake in a gene-editing experiment that goes wrong. Meanwhile, Watson becomes suspicious of Sherlock.

Watson was beginning to doubt the people closest to him. Sherlock has never been truthful to him. Neither has Shinwell. He also has to deal with Hobie McSorely. Hobie was a gene hacker. He did several body mods on himself and that included making his chest glow. Why? Its because he can.

The law hasn't caught up with the body mods that he does. He was therefore to keep doing them with no government oversight. It worked well on him and not so much on his new girlfriend named Wendy.

Hobie recently got divorced. He was a bit awkward. He thought he found his dream girl in Wendy. Wendy was into body mods as well. She had magnets put under the skin of her hand so that she could attract other metals with it. Wendy and Hobie met for the first time tonight. They went straight to the hotel.

They told exchanged "I love you". They were moving rather quickly before Hobie got to the good stuff of injecting her with the CRISPR Mod that he created. It wasn't just his chest that glows. He could make other parts glow and Wendy wanted the same.

Only Wendy had a bad reaction to whatever Hobie cooked up. She had a first dose. Hobie mailed it to her and what she got at the hotel was supposed to be a topper. The topper might kill her. She passed out. She had to be taken to the hospital. Wendy was in a coma. Watson became her doctor as a favor to Hobie.

He was trying to figure out what caused her coma-like state. It could have been any of the body mods she did. The magnetic fingers were cleared, but she also got something tied to her chest to send her body temperature to a thermostat.

There was also the problem of her relationship with Hobie. It moved way too fast. Watson thought so and he said to Hobie that it couldn't be love because they just met for the first time.

Hobie replied that he couldn't tell him who to love. He wasn't that good of a doctor. Hobie seemed to genuinely love Wendy. It was reciprocated because she woke up still in love with him too. She also felt bad because she was peeing blood. It turns out her kidneys were failing her. She might need dialysis. And she might lose her voice.

Wendy wanted it to be on record that she consented to being injected. She knew what she was doing. She took the risks and Hobie shouldn't get in trouble for it. She said all of this Watson in case she's intubated because she wanted him to tell authorities if they come knocking. Wendy seemed like a good person.

She didn't have anyone else in her life. She has a friend babysitting her cats. Hobie called her friend for her. Wendy was also vegan. She was eating fake chicken and she might have had food poisoning the morning of her date.

None of it solved what was really going on with her. Ingrid gave Watson the idea of testing her genomes. It showed that her x chromosomes were completely destroyed.

That night at the hotel wasn't the first time she tried CRISPR. It didn't work last time and she didn't think it would be a problem getting something a little different only still a mod. It also wasn't the mod's fault that she was deteriorating. It was because of the chicken with two k's. Wendy was vegan. She ate something fake chicken created out of fava beans.

Wendy has G6PD. She needed to be medication. She also had to stay away from fava beans in the future. They've been giving her antibiotics and its only made her sicker seeing as it's the wrong medication. Well, they stopped that. They gave her what she needed. She was doing better until she kissed Hobie.

She's become allergic to additional mods. She became allergic to Hobie himself. Hobie couldn't be around her and the doctors refused to reverse his mods out of fear of it killing him. And so he did it himself.

Hobie got rid of his glowing chest. He reversed his mods so that he could be with Wendy again. They were happy and in love. Hobie even gave Watson some dating advice as he continues to come in for checkups.

He told his friend to tell the woman he loves her now rather than wait around. He thought Watson would go to Laila and he went to Mary. He found Mary kissing someone else. She's moved again. Just like she did the last time and Watson was once again too late to recapture what he had, but its okay because he has bigger problems.

He ran into Holmes again. Holmes had been sleeping in the empty wing of the hospital. He suffers memory loss and Watson feared he was having seizures. He tried to get him tested only Holmes fled before he could be treated. Now, Watson was looking for him. He informed Shinwell that Holmes was still alive. He was getting to find Holmes before he hurts himself or gets any sicker. And so his love life can wait.

Ingrid's couldn't. She finally broke up with Beck. It was all good because he had an obsession. He was obsessed with Sasha after just meeting her the once and now he was pretending to be her biological mother to get details on her life.

It was being done over email. He even said Uncle Jun got things started because he worked for the Chinese government. Her fake uncle who was now dead. Did Beck kill him as a means of getting closer to Sasha?

Summary: Watson and the fellows race against the clock to save a man and his pregnant wife from a terrifying sinkhole. Meanwhile, Ingrid's future with her therapy group becomes unclear.

In Green Tree, Pennsylvania, Marnie Prisuta is on the phone with Darcy about signing divorce papers while finishing the baby crib. She's close to delivery. Keith, her husband, walks in, disappointed that she started without him. He was supposed to go away with his friend Peter, and there's obvious tension between them. Marnie urges him to go anyway, insisting her sister near UHOP will help when the baby comes.

Keith reassures her that he has his unlimited-range satellite phone and can get back within two hours. That detail lingers in the background as he loads the car and Marnie retrieves an envelope from the closet, divorce papers. Just as they prepare to leave, a low rumble begins. Keith dismisses it, earthquakes in Green Tree? Unlikely.

Within seconds, the road fractures. Their house collapses before their eyes. The ground opens into a massive sinkhole and swallows their car whole, leaving neighbors screaming and stunned in the street.

At UHOP, Shinwell Johnson shares a playful moment in the staff lounge with Nurse Carlin DaCosta, who teasingly questions whether he really "mans" a reception desk. Their flirtation is interrupted by breaking news alerts about the Green Tree sinkhole.

Dr. John Watson enters the ER to find staff watching coverage. Survivors are being transported to UHOP, and the hospital activates Code D, disaster protocol, initiating a Mass Casualty response. Mary Morstan immediately takes command, directing triage and mobilizing staff. Watson volunteers the Fellows to handle red-tag patients.

When Adam and Stephens comment that a sinkhole in Pennsylvania wasn't on their radar, Watson calmly reminds them that Pennsylvania is karst terrain. The region's porous limestone and abandoned mining tunnels make the ground unstable and prone to collapse. Even in crisis, his observational speed never falters. He identifies a pneumothorax before imaging confirms it and directs treatment before moving to the next patient.

Ingrid arrives with another complication. Beck Wythe is suing her, Watson, and the hospital for trauma related to the Fitz hostage incident. His version of events is wildly distorted. He chose to remain in the clinic and even escalated the situation, but now he claims psychological damage and lost income.

In the ER, a man calmly waits with a rebar rod through his neck. Shinwell assists DaCosta and quickly deduces details about the injury when he learns the patient was working with wet cement. His knowledge is too specific, and his expression shifts. He almost says more before being pulled away.

Meanwhile, Watson discovers an injured firefighter straining to hear a faint radio signal. After adjusting the static, they realize it's Keith calling from inside the sinkhole. Marnie isn't breathing. Watson and Mary talk Keith through CPR over the radio while coordinating rescue logistics. A probationary firefighter, a "probie" named Jim Thomasen, refuses treatment for his own injuries so he can assist.

Using signal repeaters and inventorying Keith's available supplies, the team narrows down their location. When Marnie regains consciousness, her water breaks. She and Keith escape their crushed car and move into an old mining tunnel for safety.

Back in the Holmes conference room, the Fellows map tunnel routes and structural possibilities. Adam identifies a crucial geological clue, and Probie Thomasen adds valuable insight into tunnel layout and collapse patterns that helps pinpoint their position. The rescue team follows Marnie's screams and digs toward them as Watson instructs Keith to keep her from pushing until they are clear of danger.

They reach the couple just in time.

Marnie, Keith, and their newborn daughter, Rose, make it safely to UHOP. Keith notices how quiet his daughter is and asks if that's normal. During her examination, Mary pauses and asks Watson to confirm what she's seeing. Rose is beautiful, and Black.

Neither parent reacts with anger. Instead, confusion and fear surface. Marnie insists she never cheated and offers to take a paternity test. Keith believes her, but Rose soon develops a fever of 38.3°C, and the focus shifts to her health.

The Fellows take the case. As they examine Rose, Watson notices distinctive flecks in her eyes similar to Keith's, a sign of segmental heterochromia. The genetic markers confirm Rose is Keith's biological daughter. The team traces her pigmentation and eye variation to ancestry several generations back.

The fever leads them to a more urgent discovery. Rose has Congenital Insensitivity to Pain (CIP), a rare genetic condition that prevents the ability to feel pain and can impair temperature regulation. Both parents unknowingly carried the recessive gene. Her rising temperature isn't due to infection but to her body's inability to regulate itself properly. With swift intervention, the Fellows stabilize her.

Shinwell finally confesses to Nurse DaCosta that he knows about cement burns because of his violent past. He admits he once helped burn a man with cement and tells her she can do whatever she wants with that information. DaCosta listens carefully but doesn't recoil. She reminds him they have patients to care for and returns to work. The future of their relationship remains uncertain, but her reaction suggests she sees the man he is now, not only the one he used to be.

Ingrid, meanwhile, faces professional fallout. Mary removes her from group therapy due to the conflict of interest involving Beck. Ingrid argues that this is exactly what Beck wants, to destabilize her progress. Dr. Ivan Ferry later visits and cautions the team that Beck's lawsuit is about narrative control, not trauma. He subtly challenges Ingrid to continue applying what she's learned rather than reverting to old patterns.

Summary: When a patient arrives at the Holmes Clinic plagued by a mysterious neurological disorder, Watson and the fellows discover they were forced to eat their parents amid a childhood survival incident. Meanwhile, Adam is struggling with how his future will change as a father.

Peter John came with a very embarrassing injury. He had a fracture down there. He was injured during foreplay with this drunk woman he met at a bar and it didn't go well. Well, Peter was concerned about fathering kids. His dad happens to be a lawyer so Mary gave him a healthy dose of morphine to knock him out. Watson also called in his team. He has the one percent rule. He wanted to show them rare cases and that led to him calling them in on their day off. They all got to watch Peter gets his johnson fixed.

Pretty much everyone paid attention. It was only Ingrid who was too busy reading the file. Ingrid read Peter's file in which he described his date from hell and she noticed symptoms that could lead to this Nicole from Tiner dying. She suspected she has a tumor. They just needed to find her. Her date that night didn't know her all that well. Nicole wasn't her real name. It's merely one she used for her Tinder profile. She did leave a hoodie behind with Peter. Watson saw the hoodie and he saw enough to identify her as welder of one company with one color they trademarked.

Ingrid and Shinwell later learned her name is Wren Booker. She rides a motorcycle. She works as a welder. She also thought she was fine before Shinwell bribed her with five hundred dollars to get tested. The eyes fluttering, the uncontrollable laughter, and the way she tilts her head all pointed to there being something seriously wrong with her. It was just Wren that refused to believe it. She said her parents died when she was twelve and that she has no siblings. She then couldn't breathe once she started laughing spontaneously again.

Something was clearly wrong. Watson studied her while they waited for genetic testing. He came to see that her nailbeds were ruined by frostbite so he knew right away who she saw.

She and her family were involved in an airplane crash. It killed their parents and three of their siblings. Wren took care of her younger brother. She built a shelter for them. She started a fire. She apparently hunted foxes so that they could have something to eat. Her brother later told them that as he explained his sister was never the same afterwards.

Wren went from a happy kid to becoming volatile. Her brother Robyn never knew why. He was quickly adopted after their family died. His sister was the one that stayed in the foster care system until she aged out. Robyn then got married. Wren never showed up for it. She did come for Christmas one year and she freaked out. That was six years ago. Robyn hasn't seen her since because he couldn't trust her around his young daughter. And he still helped because his story of back then gave Watson all the clues he needed.

It was the fox meat. Foxes are bright white in winter to make it harder to hunt them. The meat they were eating and that kept them alive had to have come from their family members. It was starvation or cannibalism. She chose the latter for her little brother. The one who didn't get all the trauma of what she had to choose because she was protecting him. Which makes what happens next so sad. Watson said she has KURU. It was a disease that first originated in a cannibalistic tribe. It could be dormant for up to fifty years.

It was a death sentence. It will ultimately lead to death if a cure wasn't found in the future. They needed to inform Robyn about in and Wren refused at first. She refused to let them share her diagnosis much less what caused it. She reacted violently against that idea. It was only later when she sent a note confirming they could tell her brother that Watson became worried for her. She quoted Emily Dickinson earlier. It gave Watson an idea of where she'd go to end it all. She went to the walk in freezer. She planned on freezing to death because she thought that's what she deserved.

It was Ingrid that talked her down. Ingrid reminded her that there was still a little girl that needed forgiving. They put Wren in contact with a good therapist. They called Robyn to come in and they told him about what happened. He felt so bad with how harsh he's been with his sister. She did everything for him. She kept him alive. And now he wants to take care of her — The rest didn't matter to him.

Watson has Shinwell looking into Sherlock's whereabouts so he took a flight to London tonight.

Adam also agreed to hawk a few protein powders now that he knows he's having triplets. Yes, his fiancé was pregnant with triplets. She was also going to leave her job so that she could be there for the babies when they're born. Adam was going to be the sole breadwinner and he needed to make a quick buck. Stephens just hopes that quick buck doesn't destroy his credibility or livelihood.

Summary: Watson and the fellows fight to revive a 30-year-old woman, Audrey, after her heart inexplicably stops repeatedly until they discover she has a rare phenomenon called Lazarus syndrome. As these revivals continue, she uses the short window of time available to right her greatest wrong.

Sasha was at church when she spotted someone in trouble. Her name is Aubrey. Aubrey was hungover from the night before and it was already three in the afternoon.

She puked into a bag. Sasha felt for her. She introduced herself. She found out her name is Aubrey. She also allowed Aubrey to go into confession before her. Aubrey wasn't in there long when she lost consciousness. Sasha suspected it was an overdose. She did CPR until the ambulance came. They gave Aubrey Narcan.

Nothing fixed what was wrong. Aubrey was pronounced dead at the hospital. Sasha stayed with the body. Stephens stopped by to offer support and they were together when suddenly Aubrey came back to life. It was the Lazarus Syndrome. It was named after the biblical figure who rose from the dead.

There was often no explanation for it. Aubrey thought it was a miracle. Her doctors wanted to know what killed her. Aubrey couldn't tell them what she was on. She didn't know herself. She said the guy called it 80s.

Aubrey didn't even recall that conversation when she came back to life. She was dead set on making her second chance of life worth it. Her biggest regret was stealing money out of a joint account with her ex-fiancé. It was one hundred-eighty-five thousand dollars. It was his dream to open a fancy pierogi place.

Aubrey always felt bad about taking it from him. She went through the money and now she was going to do everything possible to raise it so that she could pay him back. She didn't want to waste her second chance by sticking around the hospital.

Aubrey stayed long enough for the tests to be done then she split. Watson's team was looking for her. They got back her results and she was due for another cardiac event.

She has a lot of blockage around her heart. They needed to bring her back in before she dies again because the next time might be permanent. Sasha went to go look for her at the church. She found her making an appeal to the congregation. She was asking for their help in raising money for her ex. Someone recorded it. They helped her get viral.

Aubrey then passed out in church. She was taken back to the hospital where she had a rare cardiac event that miraculously healed itself. She was getting better and then her ex ruined it. He accused her of fraud. He called her a cheat. Her online fundraising got taken down. The money was returned to the donors.

Aubrey's condition got worse out of nowhere. She was on the brink of another cardiac event and so they needed to know her past. They went to go speak to the ex. He was still so angry that he refused to address Aubrey.

Beanie said she was his past. Well, his mom felt differently. She talked to Watson and Sasha. She said the couple was so in love. She didn't know what went wrong and neither did her son. Things were great then Aubrey just left with the money. She took everything he had saved. She took away his dream.

Watson was at a loss on what happened until he saw the last photo of the couple together. He helped him develop a theory. The theory if proven right could better Aubrey's odds. She was sinking by that point. Watson got her back up to 50/50.

Watson determined that Aubrey was once pregnant. She sorta mentioned it at the start. They just didn't put it together until they saw the photo and realized why she wasn't drinking at her thirty-fifth birthday. She was pregnant. She miscarried. Her body absorbed some of the fetus's cells.

They needed a way to remove those cells before it kills her. Now, it was going to be hard because it all depends on if the fetus had been a boy or a girl. They could find the cells with the Y chromosome if the fetus had been a boy. And if it was a girl, it was going to be much harder extracting from Aubrey.

The procedure worked. Aubrey was going to make a full recovery. She even received a letter from her ex-fiancé. He said he forgives her. He wants her to live a long and healthy life.

He also added that he accepts Zelle and Venmo. It made Aubrey laugh. She hasn't done that in a while. She was finally overcoming her biggest mistake. It had made the others think of their own mistake. Ingrid regrets not killing her father sooner. Adam for trying lacrosse. There were simple things and bad things. And they regretted them all.

Watson also found out Mary was dating someone new and he made sure the guy got tested because he found a white light in his eye in a photo they took together.

No worries, it proved to be easily treatable.

Summary: Watson is sued for Wrongful Life by a long-term patient suffering from VACTERL association, after undergoing multiple painful surgeries.

Dr. John Watson helped a couple get pregnant in 2007. The woman and her husband had been struggling for years to start a family. Yet Watson gave them their hope back. He was the doctor that performed in-vitro on them. Watson has therefore been their son's doctor since before Kyren Gardner was born.

They knew he would have a heart defect from in utero. They didn't know he had VACTERL until his birth. VACTERL was an amalgamation of several disorders and conditions. Kyren has had so many surgeries that he grew up at the hospital. His father thought it was too much. He left. It was now just Kyren and his mother.

Kyren had what was supposed to be his final surgery in 2024. It was also the first case that Watson worked on with his fellows at the Holmes Clinic. Back then, there was another member of the team. Her name was Paola Barajas. She was the surgeon that performed on Kyren. It had looked successful.

Kyren was finally supposed to be starting college on tonight's all new episode when a few sneezes displaced the rod holding up his spine. He had to be rushed into surgery. He was so angry.

Kyren had spinal fusion. Only his spine wasn't fused together. Mary opened him up and she told Watson that the surgery didn't take. They needed to know why it failed before they could try it again.

Watson ordered his fellows to find what went wrong. He struggled with talking to Kyren and his mother in the meantime. They both blamed him for what happened. Kyren was so angry. He said he should never have been born. He asked his mother if she knew he would go through so much pain. And she admitted she knew about the heart defect.

There was a small chance that it could've resolved itself on its own. Watson also told her at the time that there were plenty of means of becoming a mother. Kyren was her last chance at a biological child. She had had eight miscarriages before him. With Watson's help, Kyren was the child that took.

She found out about the heart issue when she was five months along and she didn't have any more eggs to use. She knew that her husband was worried about having a sick child. She went ahead with the pregnancy in spite of being given the option of an egg donor or adoption.

Marlise chose to go ahead with the pregnancy. Something Kyren was angry about. Kyren sued Watson and UHOP for wrongful life. He doesn't believe he should've been born. He said his mother wouldn't have gone through the pregnancy if she knew he'd be in pain for all of his life.

Kyren also felt his father wouldn't have left his mother if it hadn't been for Watson. He sued. The hospital wanted to settle and the only thing Kyren wanted in return was an apology. He fired Watson as his doctor. He moved to a different hospital.

He didn't want Watson treating him. Or trying to help him anymore. The next time that Watson saw him was at the deposition. It was in a lawyer's office and Kyren wasn't doing too well. Watson finally figured out what was wrong with him. He asked Kyren to let him treat him and Kyren was turning him down when he passed out.

Kyren had an infection in his spine. There was nothing that Paola did that caused this. Nor could Watson have known about it before he figured out that Kyren getting treated for UTIs wasn't that at all.

Kyren was rushed back to UHOP. His mother gave them her consent to treat him. They came up with a new plan of fixing his back. It was going to be a joint taskforce with Paolo at the other hospital. They were all going to be working together. Paola was actually surprised that UHOP doesn't have the same tech as she does at her current hospital.

She annoyed Mary with that comment, but she got some alone time with Sasha. Sasha filled Paola in on the latest gossip. Yes, Ingrid apologizes now and sometimes she even means it. And Sasha ended things with Zach so that she could pursue new things with Stephens.

The same Stephens that told Watson he wasn't listening to the patient. Kyren didn't want to be told to live. He wanted to be supported through whatever decision he makes about his own life. Watson stopped being his doctor long enough to be his friend. Kyren agreed to go ahead with one more surgery.

Both of his parents watched on from the viewing den. The same for the fellows at the clinic. Ingrid's story with Paola wasn't as simple as she let Sasha believe. There wasn't animosity. It instead felt like attraction.

And Mary was going to start a 3D Ortho program right there at the hospital. They won't be needing Beechview Hospital after this and Mary wanted to keep pushing that field ahead with innovation.

Summary: Watson and the fellows race to save the life of a young woman who needs a lifesaving kidney donation. Meanwhile, Sherlock returns to help crack unsolved cases in Pittsburgh.

Holmes was back! Holmes's health had taken a turn for the supposed better. He had a brain tumor and he claimed to have seen a doctor overseas to get it treated.

He also said he's good as new. Holmes returned to Pittsburg because he wanted to see Watson. Holmes believed they should work together again now that he's back to "normal".

The last time Watson did that he blew up his life. He lost his marriage and it turns out Holmes was only pretending to be dead. He kinda left Watson with a lot of mess to clean up.

Moriarty nearly destroyed the clinic. He almost killed more people that Watson cares about. Watson was frankly too forgiving because he never brought any of this up to Holmes when the man suddenly decided to return from the dead. He instead was just happy to see his old friend.

Not that he was buying the overseas story. He was just happy to see Holmes doing what he did best. He solved several murder cases in a day and Watson passed on the information to the detective he knew. Watson also helped a woman that Stephens brought in.

Stephens has been sitting with terminally ill patients. He's with them in their final moments. He finds it a good experience to help people that way and a patient's daughter had needed his help. He saw her at the patient's funeral. Hollis Pitter was coughing a lot. She had swollen ankles.

She had puffy eyes. Taken all together he feared she had something medically wrong with her. He asked her to stop by the clinic free of charge. She didn't have insurance so she happily took up the offer. She later learned that her kidneys were failing.

Hollis needed a new kidney. Only she didn't have family. Her mother used a sperm donor to conceive her and her maternal grandparents had passed away. Her mother feared she'd be alone so she actually sent Hollis's DNA into one of those ancestry sites.

It came back that Hollis has forty-two half-siblings. On the site that is. There could be more who didn't use that specific site. Watson worked in the field so he knew they shouldn't be using a donor more than twenty-five times. He contacted the clinic where Hollis was conceived and he knew right away her father was Dr. Oliver Day.

Dr. Day was the fertility doctor. He made up the sperm donor. He just used his own material for impregnating women. Watson could tell just by looking at his fellow doctor.

It was the heterochromatic eyes that clued him in. Watson then contacted Detective Lestrade again. He told her what he suspected.

She said there's been several cases like this before. The doctors with a God complex. They spread around their seed thinking only their genetic material was worthy. There was also a cluster in Detroit that Lestrade found out about.

She went with Watson to confront the fertility doctor. They said they'd compel him to hand over his DNA. They'd prove what he did and it would open him up to several lawsuits. How is that going to look to his wife or the three kids he has on record? Dr. Day kicked them out of his office.

He then went home and committed suicide. He did in such a way to keep his kidneys viable for Hollis. He didn't want his daughter to die. He should've gotten himself tested first because his drinking habit ruined those kidneys. He had cirrhosis he didn't know about.

They couldn't use his kidneys to save Hollis. They even attended the doctor's funeral hoping to meet more of Hollis's half-siblings. The ones they called on the ancestry site all turned them down.

They were ones that gave a flat out no. The others heard that Hollis has a genetic disorder known as Alport Syndrome and they needed to keep their kidneys to potentially donate to their own children. None of them knew Hollis. The doctors therefore attended Dr. Day's funeral to see if his children of record would show.

They ended up learning that Dr. Oliver Day has an identical twin brother named Harrison Day. Harrison was another fertility doctor. He worked out of Detroit. He and his brother were guilty of the same crime. They used their own sperm to impregnate their patients. It was a contest between them.

Harrison also knew about Hollis. He agreed to donate his kidney in return for full immunity for his crimes in Detroit. He'd have to give up his medical license, but he didn't want to get arrested for fraud.

Watson tried to use Harrison's son kidney only he had cancer once. He would never be approved for the surgery. Thus Harrison was given his deal and Hollis got a kidney.

This case brought up a lot. Adam was having triplets and they found out it was two girls and a boy. He was thinking of naming his son Stephens Croft VI. He asked his brother Stephens if he could use or if he wanted to hold onto it for his own kids. Stephens decided to hold onto it. Which doesn't mean he's in a place to use it anytime soon and so Sasha froze her eggs.

And unfortunately Watson realized there was a problem with Holmes. Holmes wasn't real. Watson was hallucinating him and having conversations with himself.

Now that could mean he's the one with the neurological problem. Not Holmes. Holmes might not have been real at all. He might possibly be dead this time and Watson brought him back to life in his grief.

Summary: Watson investigates a case involving a mentally unstable mother, with the woman's delusions serving as a mirror to his own newly discovered hallucinations.

Dr. John Watson realized he has been hallucinating Sherlock Holmes all along. He even knew why he was seeing him again. He earned himself a traumatic brain injury when he went over that waterfall. He's been lowering his meds lately and his imagination created Holmes as a means of telling him no.

He needs those meds. He was going back on them when his girlfriend called. She needed his help with a patient. Laila said a desperate mom came to her with a very sick daughter. First, Shelly said Cora has cancer. She later admitted she doesn't know what Cora has. She just knows that Cora is sick.

They didn't have an appointment. Laila still saw them. She felt bad for a nine year old little girl with cancer. She ran some tests and both she and Watson looked them over.

Cora doesn't have cancer. She's never been treated for cancer. She does have a fever as well as some pain on her left side. Laila had Watson check her over. The pain was real. The fever was real. They began asking Cora some questions and those questions didn't sit right with her mother. Shelly tried to answer for Cora. And under the slightest push back from the doctors, she ran off.

Shelly left Cora in the hospital. She claimed she was going to the bathroom and headed straight for the exits. Laila had followed her. Cora had mentioned she liked hanging out with her sister, Abby. She and Abby were homeschooled. They didn't go outside. Cora's mom made her lie about going on vacations.

Shelly might even have been lying about Cora's father. He allegedly left years ago. She did say his name was Jack Davis. Shelly kept the name and gave it to Cora. She also never mentioned where was Abby when her only caregiver was at the hospital.

The doctors knew from Cora that Abby does exist. They didn't just know where she was. Cora has never been outside before. It was revealed to them when they found out she burns quite heavily in the sun. They kept Cora in the hospital as they called CPS. Detective Lestrade agreed to go look for Shelly and Abby.

They found a real address. Shelly had lied on the file she gave them. By time cops showed up, Shelly was gone with Abby. Sasha and Stephens checked out the house. There was no electricity. No running water. Shelly grew her own food. This wasn't abuse

This was extreme, yes. It was also something that Cora missed. She burned in the sun and she said her mommy was right that the outside world was dangerous. She no longer believed the doctors. Cora didn't understand she was sick because she's never been exposed to the outside world

. She wasn't sure about doctors or tests. The tests couldn't find what was wrong with her so Watson decided to channel Holmes again. He didn't go off his meds. He just reached out to his own detective instinct.

It's what Holmes taught him all those years ago. It's how Watson has been solving cases that he thought Holmes solved. He was a detective himself and he didn't even need the skills to find Shelly because she came to them. She disguised herself as a nurse. She tried to get Cora back. Watson stopped her.

He's been staying in Cora's room trying to find out how he can help her when the whole thing kicked off. He got Shelly away from Watson. She brought out a scalpel. He talked her down. Shelly has been hearing voices that said everything was dangerous.

No one would believe her. She then took her kids off the grid and hasn't looked back. Now, Watson knows she's sick. He promised to help her and her daughters. He got her to reveal that Abby was hidden in a secret room at their house. The police didn't know about their condition.

One that even Shelly shared because she hasn't been out in the sun either. It's how Watson identified her in spite of her mask. Her skin had burned in the sun. The police brought Abby out into the sun and Watson made sure he was on the scene to stop them before Abby got seriously hurt.

Once the sun went down, Abby was brought to the hospital. She was reunited with Cora. Watson still doesn't know why all three burned in the sun. Its one thing that the kids had never been exposed to it. There's no reasoning for why Shelly reacted to it as well. Shelly was diagnosed with paranoid schizophrenic delusions.

She wants to take care of her children and she can't. She instead gave Watson a name on who can. She told them about her ex's sister. Elena agreed to watch the girls until Shelly gets better.

With proper supervision, Shelly can still be a part of her children's lives. Watson also found out what was wrong. They were eating too much celery. It was poisoning them. They needed to stop eating it and in time they can go back out into the sun. Watson later went with Laila to grab the kids' stuffed toys from their house.

They missed their comfort toys. They didn't sleep properly without it so they were driving back with the toys when Watson heard Holmes again. It freaked him out. He didn't see the deer in the road. And the car flipped before crashing into a ravine.

Summary: After a key player disappears, the team rushes to find them before it's too late.

Watson got into a car accident with Laila. He's been having problems with his brain. He thought he was seeing Sherlock Holmes and the answer was revealed to be a hallucination. Watson thought Sherlock must really be dead this time, but is he?

One can never tell with a man like Sherlock Holmes. Watson was badly injured from that car accident. The same goes for Laila.

They were knocked unconscious for hours and Watson's mind tried to solve the mystery of Mr. A. Mr. A was Malcom Anson. He was Watson's first mentor. The teacher that convinced him to go into medicine and changed the trajectory of his life.

He affectionately known as Mr. A because of it. The man was his best man at his wedding. Mr. A was more than usual. Something that Watson thought was done for the wedding. It wasn't until his friend collapsed at the rehearsal dinner that he realized the man might've been a symptom.

Watson began hallucinating again. Or was he? Watson was still in the car that was on fire while the seemingly alive Holmes went to the clinic to speak to his fellows. He told them about the case that Watson never solved.

What happened to Mr. A? Holmes was as ever a storyteller. He set the mood and talked to them about all the events leading up to why Mr. A's daughter was now sick. Her name is Reagan Anson. She was suffering from the same thing as her dad.

Watson didn't care about the wedding or going ahead without Mr. A. Mr. A wanted to leave the hospital and continue his duties as best man. Only Watson wouldn't let him. He kept looking into what made his friend sick and there were so many things wrong that it was hard to determine what came first.

Mr. A's heart was enlarged. He was diabetic. He was coming off an infection that his daughter gave to him. He became healthier in his forties. He then lost so much weight that it became concerning. Watson thought he diagnosed what was wrong. He thought it was a viral infection.

He let Mr. A convince him to go ahead with the wedding. He left to go to the ceremony. He married Mary and they stopped by the hospital before heading to the reception to check on Mr. A only to learn he had passed away. Watson's diagnosis had been wrong.

Watson normally wasn't wrong. He was then and it cost a man his life. It left him without a mentor. It left Reagan without a father. Reagan blamed herself for what happened to her dad. Watson had reassured her at the time that the problem was never her.

There had been something wrong. Watson promised to find out what it was and he never stopped looking for answers. Not in all the years it took for Reagan to grow up. Watson couldn't solve it so it either happened or was hallucinated that Holmes helped his fellows find out what killed Mr. A.

The doctors figured out what killed him. They figured out how to save Reagan before it was too late. Ingrid also ended up with a CT Scan of someone's head. It showed a mass on a temporal lobe. Ingrid felt that person was truly sick. She kept trying to tell Holmes about it.

He claimed to have no clue who put in on her desk or why it was moved all throughout the day. Holmes stayed until the case of Mr. A was solved and then he left. Ingrid found a post-it with the number 606 on the CT scan when it came back to her.

Ingrid went to room 606. She found Watson. Watson's accident left him in a bad way. Yes, it was all a hallucination with Holmes returning from the dead. Watson was bad off only there was still hope. Laila was worse because she hadn't regained consciousness.

She had to be rushed into surgery. Watson may now know what killed his friend, but he won't survive the guilt if he learned he may have killed Laila. Watson had been having hallucinations right before the accident. He will always worry he caused it.

Mary soon performed surgery on Laila herself. She saved Laila's life. She fixed the laceration on Laila's liver and now the two might break up because Laila doesn't see a future for them. Not when she wasn't in the hallucination. Mary was in it. She wasn't.

Watson also warned Adam about his pregnant girlfriend. She was at risk for preterm labor so Adam took it seriously. He took his fiancé to see the doctor and she was at risk. She's been put on bedrest thanks to Watson saving her children. Watson did more than diagnose Reagan in his dream.

He fixed her when he woke up because she was real. He also learned she became a chemistry teacher like her dad. He apologized for taking so long to solve what happened to her father and now Reagan can be given medication so she doesn't end up like him.

Watson also diagnosed himself because the CT scan in the dream was real. It was his. Watson has a brain tumor and its why Holmes returned in his mind. Holmes has been trying to warn him. Who better than his best friend.

Summary: Following his brain tumor diagnosis, Watson goes on medical leave to seek treatment, leaving Mary in charge of The Holmes Clinic as a notorious South American dictator demands Watson see to his mysterious autoimmune condition personally. Meanwhile, Ingrid grows more concerned about Beck's obsession with Sasha.

Watson was dealing with his diagnosis. He stepped back from the clinic. He left Mary to run it. She was also dealing with his fellows and Ingrid was being particularly difficult. She's always difficult, but Watson as well as his team knew how to handle her.

Mary doesn't. Ingrid knew that Watson had a tumor and she knew its location. She said the chances weren't high for him. Nor was she going to fall for a thing unvariable as hope. She needed concrete data that said he was going to survive. Ingrid being herself actually came in handy later on.

Watson was interviewing doctors. He was looking for the best person to treat him when he noticed he was being followed. He had Detective Lestrade with him.

She told him that those men weren't an illusion. They were being watched. The men along with Miguel Alvarado worked for Rodrigo Freitas. Freitas was a dictator of a South American country. His people haven't had elections in years. He was considered a monster. He was a monster that was now calling in a favor with the American government.

Freitas had the State Department pressure Watson into working for him. Watson was still out on leave. He needed someone to babysit him and run the clinic. It couldn't be Mary.

He therefore named Ingrid as his fill-in. She was running point and it scared everyone. It even scared Freitas. His sociopathic self met another one of his kind in Ingrid. She ordered a whole bunch of tests. She wanted to get to the bottom of what was making him sick. Freitas didn't actually come to the United States for that. He came for Watson.

Freitas wanted the genius Watson's opinion on choosing his successor. He didn't think they could save his life. He's seen some of the best doctors all over the world. No one could find what was wrong with him.

He didn't have much hope either. He couldn't leave his country to face a crisis so he wanted help in naming a successor. It doesn't matter if he recovers. He would still look weak and he couldn't afford to remain in his position while looking weak. He gave Watson a bunch of files to look through. And Ingrid handled everything else.

The team found out that someone was drugging Freitas using his hand moisturizer.

Freitas was very self-conscious about his dry skin. He used moisturizer by the bucket load. He thought rough hands were the signs of being low-class and that meant someone knew about his habit. Like his inner circle. The same people he's picking to nominate his successor from.

Once they found out he had been poisoned in an attempted coup, they then had a new dilemma. They couldn't tell Freitas the truth. He would kill everyone in his inner circle. This included his doctors if it meant he'd catch the one guy trying to kill him.

They didn't want him killing people. Yet, they also knew his inner circle was full of people just like him. Its why Watson couldn't name a successor.

They were all as bad as each other. It was Ingrid who came up with the idea to keep Freitas's doctor away from him and withhold the truth. It would save more lives that way. It wasn't long before Freitas began feeling better away from the poison. He was fighting shape. He even considered staying on if he could live longer. Perhaps twenty years or more.

Watson couldn't let that happen. He had to find out who poisoned him. It became simple. He asked Freitas who recommended he come to the Holmes Clinic. It wasn't his doctor.

His doctor got offended that he needed a second opinion. It had been his trusted Assistant, Miguel Alvarado. Alvarado allowed him to be poisoned. He convinced him to go to Watson for treatment. He had hoped that the illness would make Freitas a better man and all it did was make him worse. He leaned into his worse impulses once he felt he had nothing to lose.

Now, Alvarado is scared. He knows what will happen to him if Freitas finds out. Watson agreed to set him up with the State Department. Alvarado was talking to them about Freitas's regime when Freitas figured out Alvarado was the reason he was getting sick. He was getting much better without him there.

It just won't be enough to save him. Freitas lung cancer. It's from smoking all those cigars. He was at end stage so he needed stay in a clinic of the best cancer doctors and that would leave his country without a landlord. Hopefully, someone better than Freitas will rise up to the challenge.

Freitas also noticed that Ingrid was a sociopath. He told her to embrace it and she needed to do it fast because Sasha wanted to travel to China to meet her birth mother. Ingrid couldn't let that happened. Not now when she knows Sasha's mother wasn't contacting Sasha. It was Beck.

He's killed two people already and he wanted Sasha to be the third. Ingrid went over to his place. She lured into sleep using lots of sex and she tried to get his laptop. He figured out what she was doing. He was going to kill her to keep her quiet and so Ingrid held her own. She sprayed him with bear mace, kicked him in the nuts, got the knife away from him, and then let him choke.

She waited until he was really choking before she stabbed him to death. Freitas told her to embrace who she was and who she was is Sasha's friend. She wasn't going to let Beck hurt Sasha.

Still, she might get in trouble if they brought the old lawsuit or why she was his apartment. And why she spat on his body once he was dead.

Summary: As Adam's wife goes in for a C-section to deliver triplets, chaos ensues when their OB-GYN passes out in the operating room. Meanwhile, a severe storm detours Watson and Mary's trip to find a renowned doctor to remove Watson's brain tumor.

Ingrid was getting away with murder. She killed Beck. She claimed it was in self-defense when it wasn't. She found out he had murdered people and that he was gearing up to murder Sasha. She killed him before he could kill her friend. She just couldn't claim that to the cops.

It's hard enough to prove self-defense nowadays that anything outside of the purview could lead to a first degree murder charge. They'll say she went over there to deliberately gather evidence out of revenge. Not concern. Ingrid knew the system and she knew that men like Beck would've gotten off without much evidence. And so she didn't leave things to chance — she killed him.

Ingrid was interrogated three times over ten hours by cops. They were looking for a hole in her story. She made sure not to give them one. Sasha was more worried about her situation than Ingrid was. She refused to discuss what happened and she kept claiming self-defense.

It might even work out for her. It still hasn't cured her beside manner though. Ingrid was called in because Adam and Lauren's OBGYN suffered a neurological event while she was performing Lauren's C-section. The triplets were supposed to be delivered that day.

Dr. Malena had already cut into Lauren when she experienced the neurological event. Neither Mary nor Watson were around. Mary had finally convinced Watson to get his own neurosurgeon so that he could have the tumor removed. She was taking him to see Dr. Isaac Niles out of state.

He knew that Watson would keep putting it off if she didn't personally deliver him there. They were on the road when Watson suddenly realized that Malena had a condition that would affect surgery. Sometimes his brain waves don't happen on time.

They stopped at a diner. They borrowed the diner's landline because their cell phones were out of signal. They got in touch with the team. It's a good thing too because they have two patients.

There was Dr. Malena the OBGYN. There was also Lauren. Lauren still needed a surgeon to deliver her babies.

The other OBGYN was taking too long so Mary talked the intern into starting some of the surgery. They couldn't wait longer because the baby's heartbeats were dropping the longer it takes. And Dr. Malena was heavily disappointed to have missed a triplet's birth.

Those happen once every seven years in her field. Ingrid likened it to get sick right before doing the routine for a gold medal. Sasha explained to the doctor that Ingrid has the bedside manner of a neurologist. It wasn't her fault. They worked together to treat Malena.

They had several scans done. They believe they can save her life. What they couldn't figure out was what went wrong with the surgery. Dr. Fiori showed up in time. He delivered all three babies. They've been named Olivia, Isabella, and Hamish.

Guess Adam went with the family name after all. Dr. John Hamish Watson has been more of a father to him than his actual father was. The problem laid with Lauren. Lauren kept losing a lot of blood. Dr. Fiori did his best to save her in surgery. It just didn't stop the bleeding.

Adam called Watson in a panic. Watson and Mary heard about Lauren's condition. They finally figured out that that she suffered a placenta abrasion before surgery. It wasn't spotted in time and it used up all of her clotting that her body naturally does.

They have her medicine. Her blood remembered what it was supposed to do. She later woke up and Adam told her that everyone was fine.

The babies were all delivered safely. They got to live out their dream of everything being alright. Adam had been worried before about being like his biological father, but Lauren reassured him that she knew that would never happen.

Adam feels everything whether its good or bad. He doesn't close him off like his dad did. He and Lauren spent bonding time with the babies then they allowed everyone else to meet them.

Sasha also thanked Ingrid in her own way for protecting her. Ingrid still had to face a few more questions from Detective Lestrade.

Only she doesn't regret what she did. She fought to preserve Sasha's smile and she would never regret that in any way. It's a bit like what Shinwell did with his new girlfriend.

She got pricked by a drug addict's needle. The patient was HIV+. Shinwell stayed by herself until she showed up negative. And he might've accepted her marriage proposal.

It happened right before he ran into Sherlock Holmes who is still alive and who lost his memory.

Summary:	A seemingly random murder outside of UHOP sets the stage for the arrival of someone from Watson and Sherlock Holmes' past.

Watson believed that seeing Sherlock Holmes was merely a result of a traumatic brain injury. He was a hallucination. Watson often spoke to him and he soon realized he was speaking to himself. However, Sherlock wasn't as dead as Watson feared. He was admitted into UHOP.

He doesn't know his name or how he got there, He was feverish. He was stumbling. He didn't recognize anyone. He looked Shinwell in the eye and didn't know that one of his closest friends. Things were bad. Shinwell knew they were bad so he texted Watson.

Watson was the one man that Sherlock will always trust. No matter what state he's in. It was just really great to know that it wasn't all a hallucination because Sherlock was alive and so Watson put him first. He did what he always does with Sherlock. He put him first by checking out of the hospital.

Watson still had a tumor in his brain. He was supposed to get treatment for it. Its why Mary drove him all the way to Baltimore. She wanted him to get treated and instead Watson left the hospital in the middle of the night with no warning.

He didn't even tell his doctor. He wrote a note saying sorry on the whiteboard before heading back to UHOP. Mary was left behind and she cleared things up. She spoke to Dr. Niles.

She got him to come to their hospital for Watson's surgery. Watson hadn't bother to ask how she did it. He was more focused on the why. Mary was leaving Pittsburgh. She was moving because of her boyfriend's job. She was leaving the hospital. She wanted to make sure that Watson was settled before she left. And she couldn't do that if he didn't stay still.

Sherlock coming back proved to be an ill omen. Sure, it was great to see his best friend again but the threats and the deaths that followed weren't worth it.

There was an oncology nurse killed the morning after Sherlock showed up. Sherlock didn't do it. It was a sniper that killed her right in front of the hospital. The sniper soon revealed himself to Watson.

His name is Sebastian Moran. He was trying to take over after Professor Moriarty's death. He's been using Sherlock as the brains of his operation since he took control of him after the fall. Now, he wants Watson to fix Sherlock because Sherlock was really sick.

Moran seemed to have used Sherlock's illness to his advantage. He maintained control. He got Sherlock to work in his operation and then Sherlock kept getting sicker. Moran didn't know what it was. He needed to find out. Then he needed Sherlock returned to him like a broken accessory he had fixed.

Moran was cruel. He showed Watson surveillance photos of Mary. He demanded that Watson stay on the case to fix Sherlock or he was going to kill more people. Watson had no choice in the matter.

Watson informed Shinwell. He also talked to Sherlock. After a few hours in the hospital, Sherlock was looking better. He still wasn't diagnosed with the proper condition only he now knows who Watson is. Who Shinwell is. Sherlock has several episodes. Then again so did Watson.

Watson began having seizures. They were both studied. They were both trying to figure out how bad things are. Watson was able to get back on his feet after his first seizure. He had to find out what was wrong with Sherlock before he could get treated.

Watson did some tests. It showed amazing things. He was about to share it with the team when he had another seizure. Luckily, the text he sent still got out. The team arrived to find him on the floor. They intubated him. He was under for a while before waking up. He woke up to see Sherlock there.

They took his clues and found out what was wrong with Sherlock. He has CTX. It was a late in life condition that Sherlock was deemed a mutant for. They removed the tube from Watson's throat. He was able to talk so he promised to fight for them.

He had the surgery to remove the tumor. He also had Shinwell take care of Moran. Shinwell found out about this missing couple he was looking for from Moran.

He did it by punching out teeth and once he got his answer — he called for Detective Lestrade. The same detective that pretty much figured out that Ingrid killed Beck in cold blood. She just can't prove it. Not even with Beck's hidden cameras.

And after Watson's surgery — he saw himself going home to 221 Baker Street to Mary. Was it hallucination or their future? One can never tell with Watson much less a recently sick Watson.
