Summary: The team reels from the disaster of losing Alfred to the Nazis. Making matters worse, Aurora, Neil, Tom and Harry have been cut off from all communications with Camp X.

The team reels from the disaster of losing Alfred to the Nazis. Sinclair's "calculated risk" has backfired and he knows even the strongest of agents last less than 24 hours under interrogation before they break.

In a new safe house, Aurora, Neil, Tom and Harry have been cut off from communications with Camp X. Tom's gunshot wound is infected and he'll be dead within days if they can't airlift him to an Allied infirmary. Neil is furious about Alfred's capture, demanding to know how the Germans knew about Alfred's memory. Harry admits that under the influence of morphine, he shared details about the team with the Nazi-collaborating nurse who saved his life. And Aurora lies, claiming she wasn't able to shoot Alfred when he was being taken.

Meanwhile, Mayhew has taken over Sinclair's duties at Camp X, and his whereabouts are need-to-know... leaving Krystina desperate to find out what's become of him.

Alfred endures a savage beating at the hands of the Gestapo, bringing him to the point of breaking.

Franz Faber is willing to do anything to get to the intel that could not only cripple the Resistance but also bring down Camp X itself.

Guest Stars: Julian Michael Deuster (Viktor Forst), Karen Gagnon (Alice), Livia Matthes (Sabine)
Summary: The question of Alfred's fate is answered and the Faber/Forst saga comes to a shocking conclusion.

Sinclair is on the ground in France and his first questions are for Aurora: how was Alfred taken alive? She holds to her story: she didn't have a clear line of sight to take the shot. Sinclair, desperate to rescue his most prized asset, calls on an old friend who's now a high-ranking Nazi, and coerces him into helping tear Alfred out of enemy hands.

Meanwhile, Franz Faber finds other ways to weaken Alfred's resolve, forcing him to watch the terrifying torture of a fellow prisoner and friend. Then, intel lands in the hands of the Gestapo informing them of an imminent Resistance attack on their headquarters. The Germans are forced to move Alfred and four other high-value prisoners safely to Berlin, or risk losing them. Is there an attack on the way? Or is this part of a complex deception operation? Back at Camp X, Krystina hears that Tom is on his way home.

Summary: Alfred stuns his teammates when he puts his life on the line to help free the British POWs who can help rebuild their resistance networks.

With only weeks to go before an Allied attack, and their resistance network shattered, the team targets a POW camp. The British prisoners inside can help them rebuild and train new recruits. The question is — how to get the men out? The prisoners are weak and malnourished and the camp is all but impenetrable. On the edge of giving up hope, Alfred makes an impulsive decision, breaking rank and finding a way inside. Aurora is furious. They've broken Alfred out of one prison only to have him fall straight into another. Alfred makes contact with the men inside and Neil and Harry put together a bold escape plan. Aurora recruits Sister Marie, a secretive young Novice from a nearby Abbey. None of it is enough — until a stunning sacrifice offers hope.

Summary: The team searches for a doctor who may be helping Jews escape France; Aurora and Franz's wife grow closer.

Tom rejoins his team in France, with a new mission in hand. He's confirmed the rumours of a French doctor with clever methods for smuggling Jewish families over the Swiss border to safety. Harry's galvanized. He and Alfred re-connect with a Jewish family of refugees, while Tom tracks down the doctor. The escape plan goes flawlessly, until a grisly discovery shatters Harry's faith in human decency and pushes him over the edge. Meanwhile, Neil gets closer to the mysterious new recruit Miri (aka Sister Marie), as they attempt to steal weapons and ammunition to supply their growing band of rebels. Aurora, still struggling with the death of René, finds a new safe house for her team and goes undercover to get closer to Franz Faber's wife, Sabine. She's surprised to discover there's more to this Nazi wife than she thought.

Summary: Tension within the team explodes when Harry defies Aurora's orders and sets a plan in motion to assassinate a high-ranking German general.

Harry, shaken by the near death of the Jewish family entrusted to their care, wants to kill every Nazi he can get his hands on — including Wehrmacht General Dieter Brandt. Brandt is tasked with fortifying the northern coast and is due to arrive in Paris any day. It's a golden opportunity to strike a massive blow at a time when the coast is about to be invaded by the Allies. But Aurora shuts Harry down. Brandt's execution could spark reprisals that will cost civilian lives. They need to stick to the mission at hand.

When Harry goes over her head and gets approval from Sinclair, Aurora is furious. Alfred helps devise an ingenious plan to ensure that the resistance is not blamed for the assassination. But the Gestapo have ideas of their own and Harry learns a painful lesson.

Summary: Aurora tries to maintain her leadership; an attack by German commandos threatens the team.

The team is shaken by the Nazis' savage reprisals on the town of Terre-du-Fils, triggered by their assassination of a Wehrmacht General.

Aurora struggles to maintain her leadership as divisions within the team grow deeper. She and Alfred leave for Paris, hoping to break into Franz Faber's safe, while the rest prepare to attack a German munitions factory.

Aurora meets with Sabine in a church, leaving the Faber apartment empty... but their conversation unexpectedly brings them closer than ever, confessing dark secrets they can share with no one else.

Meanwhile in the woods, the team's camp suffers a brutal attack by a German commando squad. The slaughter leaves their fledgling guerrilla army decimated, and Tom, Neil and Harry reeling with shock and betrayal. Alfred breaks into Faber's safe, and is stunned to learn that Faber not only has inside knowledge about Camp X — he's planning an attack within the next 24 hours.

Summary: The team is forced to mobilize to Dieppe without Aurora, unaware she's caught in a dramatic showdown with Franz Faber on a train.

It's the eve of the raid on Dieppe and the team is forced to mobilize without Aurora, who's nowhere to be found. They head toward the coast, desperately trying to find a way to fix Harry's shattered radio and relay the devastating intel discovered in Franz Faber's safe — Camp X faces an imminent attack. Meanwhile, Aurora is with Sabine, on a train heading north. She's seized a chance to capitalize on her bonds with this woman and tell her exactly what it is her husband does for the Gestapo. But just as the train pulls into a suburban station, the cabin door slides open, and it's Franz Faber himself... ready to confront Aurora in a chilling battle of wits. Back at Camp X, Sinclair's friendship with Klaus comes terrifyingly close to costing him his life.

Aurora fights to regain her team's faith as Alfred finally reveals their Dieppe objectives: a raid on a German radar station in the midst of the Allied attack, and a daring attempt to steal the secrets of the Enigma machine. Alfred dons a Gestapo uniform for a solo incursion into the German Naval HQ where the Enigma is held. If he can imprint the machine's secrets into his photographic memory, he'll travel straight to England, to deliver the game-changing intel to the British. He and Aurora share a bittersweet goodbye as she heads off to lead the rest of the team, along with the remains of their guerrilla army to the radar station. They're shocked to find the station massively fortified and defended by a German tank. Cornered and cut off, all seems lost for Aurora and the team. But a brave sacrifice and the appearance of unexpected Allies offer a second chance to pull off their most daunting mission yet.

Summary: Spymasters Sinclair and Faber face off: two world-class poker players gambling with human lives. Neil and Harry face a harrowing road trip to find Miri.

After the sobering losses at Dieppe, Sinclair joins the team in Paris, galvanized by the possibility of cultivating Franz Faber as a double agent. But is Faber's wife onside?

An unwitting traitor by association, Sabine is a risk to herself and the entire team if she makes one wrong move — and she's nowhere to be found. The two spymasters face off, world-class poker players gambling with human lives. Is the Brigadeführer really willing to help the Allies, or is it just the first move in a long con? When Sabine surfaces, Faber and the team are shocked to learn she's with her father, Obergruppenführer Ulrich Schmidt, Minister of Natural Resources and one of Himmler's inner circle. Would Sabine seek the solace of the only other man she's loved to betray her husband and the team?

Meanwhile, Neil learns where Miri might be imprisoned, and against Sinclair's orders, races to her rescue. Back at Camp X, Krystina goes undercover to ruthlessly hunt down Faber's Canadian agent.

Summary: The team uncovers “Operation Marigold”, a top-secret Nazi operation that could propel the Germans to victory.

Sinclair and Faber agree on a direction — save lives and end the war early by targeting the German oil supply. Faber reluctantly allows Alfred and Aurora to go undercover at his lavish promotion party. Sabine’s father, Obergruppenführer Schmidt, oversees the German oil supply and Sinclair wants Aurora to get closer to him.

As Aurora cozies up to Schmidt, Alfred breaks into his hotel room and discovers a top-secret file: Operation Marigold. Details are scarce, but it’s clear the classified operation could lead to a massive surge in oil production, paving the way to a Nazi victory.

Sabine arrives late at her husband’s party, disheveled, tipsy... and ready to expose them all. Meanwhile, outside Paris, Neil and Harry are desperate to save Miri from a public execution. The Nazis are killing prisoners one by one, trying to intimidate an entire village into giving up Jacques Rigaud, one of France’s most famous resistance fighters. Back at Camp X, Krystina is locked in a battle of wits with Faber’s captured spy Schroeder. A successful interrogation could prove she’s ready for the field.

Guest Stars: Ben Caplan (Alex), Basil Eidenbenz (Edsel), Dániel Fehér (Radio Station Police), Madeleine Knight (Heidi Adler), Thorston Manderlay (Guest Star), Livia Matthes (Sabine), Attila Menyhart (Mattieu), Ákos Orosz (Gestapo Agent #1), Olivier Raynal (Pascal), Zoltán Simon (DF Officer), Morten Suurballe (Obergruppenführer Ulrich Schmidt), Milo Twomey (Rigaud)
Summary: With all of France about to be occupied by the Nazis, the team tries to rally a nation. Meanwhile, Faber's transfer to Poland could cost them their most prized asset.

The team gathers Resistance leaders to meet with exiled hero Jacques Rigaud. Days before the Nazis seize control of unoccupied France, Rigaud has returned to French soil to send a message to its citizens: stand up and fight. When he's captured by the Gestapo, Harry and Neil put their lives on the line to make sure Rigaud's inspiring words are heard by a nation.

Meanwhile, Sabine's father, Obergruppenführer Schmidt, pulls strings to get Faber reassigned to Poland. Schmidt wants his daughter close, and Faber by his side to protect top-secret Operation Marigold. As Faber tries to cut ties with the team, Sinclair resorts to desperate measures to keep him inside.

Summary: Sinclair orders his team to follow Faber to Poland and zero in on Operation Marigold. But the road to get there proves to be deadly.

Sabine's hopes for a fresh start are shattered when Faber reveals they've been blackmailed into bringing the Allied spies with them to Poland. Knowing the alternative is being hanged for treason, Sabine reluctantly agrees to allow Aurora to travel with her as friend of the family, Helene Bauer.

Once aboard the luxury train, Aurora connects with Heidi Adler, a vivacious, independent German woman who works alongside Schmidt in Poland. Aurora senses an opportunity to get closer to Operation Marigold — but the train is hijacked by a fierce group of Polish resistance fighters, and all lives are suddenly on the line as Franz Faber is taken hostage.

Meanwhile, Alfred, Neil and Harry's journey is no easier. Without proper papers they're forced to travel through Germany on a train bound for Poland's concentration camps.

Summary: The team must free Faber from the Polish resistance as Aurora goes undercover to take on a new and disturbing job.

Sheltered at a Polish resistance camp, Alfred and Neil meet with leader Janowski, who's holding Faber hostage, and has no idea they're working together. Neil teeters on the edge of violence, blaming Faber for the comrades they've lost. Alfred struggles to keep Neil in line and work on a rescue plan — getting Faber out of the camp alive is the only way they can get close to Operation Marigold.

Meanwhile, Aurora finds herself cut off from the others, alone and undercover as Helene Bauer. She's sickened to learn what her new job entails at the Race and Resettlement office in Pruszkó, Poland.

Back at Camp X, Krystina demands an explanation: why is Sinclair sending two young trainees into the field in Poland instead of her? Sinclair refuses to give a straight answer.

Summary: Aurora struggles to keep her cover as Helene Bauer as the Nazis hunt for spies among the Polish resistance.

Edsel brings Faber alarming news: a captured Polish fighter has revealed there's a mole working among them at the Nazi HQ in Pruszkó, and two Allied agents working with the local Resistance. Schmidt urgently needs Faber to capture the two agents: it's critical to know whether or not the Allies are aware of his top-secret project, Operation Marigold. Aurora survives the Nazi investigation into the leaked intelligence. But when the Jewish office workers are blamed, Aurora must walk the terrible line between keeping her own cover and keeping them safe.

Meanwhile, Faber brings Neil, Alfred and two new recruits closer to the heart of Operation Marigold, only, it seems, to betray them. The new recruits are captured and Neil is furious when Camp X orders him to stand down from rescuing them. Alfred discovers that Operation Marigold isn't about a refinery — it's about a scientist who holds the key to Nazi victory.

Sinclair has his hands full managing secret communications with Faber while coping with the loss of two new agents, a mutinous team and Krystina's request for a transfer.

Summary: Aurora discovers a plan to attack the Polish village of Nadzieja. The Resistance fighters join Neil and Alfred in a fierce battle.

The team now knows Operation Marigold is the brainchild of Professor Voigt, a reclusive scientist working on a secret formula for synthetic oil production that will propel the Nazis to victory. Their new goal is clear: assassinate Voigt.

Aurora realizes the only way she can get close to their target is to get Schmidt to invite her to Berlin for the Reich's 10th Anniversary, where the professor will be receiving an award. To earn the exclusive invitation, she must prove she is a committed Nazi — which corners her into a shocking and unspeakable act.

Meanwhile, German troops are descending on the Polish town of Nadzieja, aiming to "purge" it to make room for incoming German settlers. Alfred and Neil join forces with the Resistance guerrillas and stage a fierce battle in the streets. Alfred is deeply shaken by the random, senseless death of innocents and his memory begins to overwhelm him. Aurora can't shrug off the horror of living in Helene Bauer's world and finds herself drawn closer to Faber. Schmidt presents Sabine with an unsettling gift.
