Summary: A murder near Camp Pendleton leads Gibbs and the team to a suburban mall in San Diego, where Gibbs takes matters into his own hands. Jackson Gibbs pays Franks an unexpected visit.

NCIS Special Agent Leroy Jethro Gibbs didn't always have it together. He once failed his psyche eval. He had just lost his wife and daughter.

He wasn't in a good place mentally. He was struggling with everyday life and so he was lucky that Franks took him on. Franks saw something in him. He saw his potential. He also knew that the job was all Gibbs had. He knew that the young Marine was never going to go back to civilian life after everything he suffered. He gave him a purpose and it helped Gibbs heal.

Franks could be a great boss at times. He was even willing to apologize to Lala for his earlier comments. He should never have suggested she sleep with Gibbs to get over her issues with him. It was out of line. Franks came to see that with the help of a good woman and he apologized to Lala tonight.

It wasn't a great apology, but she still accepted it. They had bigger things to worry about. The body of Emmett Sawyer was found on base. It looked like he was dumped there after he was murdered.

Emmett was a civilian. He was dragged then dumped. There were traces of drugs found near the body. NCIS took on the case because there was a chance that a serviceman or woman killed him.

Yet, Dr. Tango took forever to get to the scene. He went out surfing earlier that day. This was before cell phones and so Tango will get to them when he gets to them. Franks in the meantime had to deal with Gibb's dad. Jackson was back in town. He was worried about his son. He didn't think Gibbs should be NCIS.

Jackson was also still upset that Franks let his granddaughter's killer get away. The guy escaped to Mexico. They couldn't get him back or take him to trial for the murders. Jackson blamed Franks for that.

He warned Franks that giving Gibbs a job doesn't change what happened. Nor does it fix his son. His son has a death wish. Him working in NCIS was just going to give him more opportunities to hurt himself. Jackson begged Franks to fire Gibbs. He begged him. He said his son needed to heal and Franks took time to think about that.

Franks didn't fire Gibbs. He instead had him and the rest of the unit look into drugs on the base. Several Petty Officers were arrested the other day because they were caught with drugs. They would buy up the empty toy eggshells. They would fill them with drugs and sell them on base.

They did it at the local mall. NCIS found a drug dealer getting his cash and he chased him before arresting him. His name was Dougie. Dougie worked with Emmett. They sold to military personnel. Dougie was also the last person to officially have seen Emmett alive.

Dougie said that he saw Emmett's killer. He said it was the mothman. The mothman was allegedly an omen for evil. Whenever you see it, people in your life will start dying.

Dougie claimed he was so afraid of his mythical creature that he ran off leaving Emmett alone to face it. The creature had wings. It had red eyes. It was a huge shadow figure. Dougie wasn't making much sense. Franks actually laughed at the description of the mothman. He came to believe that Dougie was covering up for his boss. He thought the boss operated within the mall.

Their assumptions weren't that far off because several stores in the mall got robbed. The chief suspect was head of security. NCIS didn't have enough evidence to arrest the guy. They were told to let him walk when Gibbs disobeyed the order. Franks talked to Gibbs. He told him he had him in the field too soon.

He was going to bench Gibbs. Gibbs didn't like that. He lashed out at his father. He also trapped himself in the elevator with the head of mall security. The guy's name was Prado. Gibbs had nothing to lose at that point and so he threatened to keep imprisoning Prado until he confessed.

It somewhat worked. Prado had nothing to do with Emmett's death. He was nowhere near the area. Gibbs was trying to figure out who was involved when Franks shows up at the mall.

The others tried to buy him time. They sent Franks on a wild goose chase. The guy realized what they were doing and went to the mall. He then threw a rock at the elevator. Forcing Gibbs to get it working again. Prado could have walked and he didn't because the rest of NCIS connected him to a gun smuggling ring while he was in the elevator.

Prado and his friends were hiding real guns inside of toy guys. Its why they kept stealing from the toy store in the mall. Only Gibbs felt for sure that Prado wasn't involved in Emmett's death.

He got a good read of him in the elevator. Gibbs was still in trouble, but he did convince Franks that Emmett's killer was still out there. Prado wasn't even that bad of a guy. He was smuggling guns into third world countries that were going through a civil war. He knew that the American government would be focusing on giving a dictator power. And no one thought about the dissidents.

Emmett was killed by accident. One of the guys doing good accidentally hit him with the car. They then tried to cover it up and so Gibbs's instincts were right. It also showed Franks that Gibbs was needed out in the field.

Gibbs told his father to go home and Jackson left after working out the insurance policy for his son.

Summary: Still grieving the loss of his wife and daughter, Gibbs helps the team work a case involving a missing girl; the moment that irrevocably changed Gibbs' life is revealed.

Gibbs's deployments weren't always easy, but it helped that he used to receive messages from his family. Shannon and Kelly used to write him every week when he was deployed. Some letters offered details while others were written just to tell him how much they love him.

Those letters stopped after their death. Gibbs gave up his career in the Marines. He went back stateside and he was still getting used to the silence when he caught a rough case. It was the first of its kind for him as an NCIS Agent. His team were brought in because Staff Sergeant Derek Jones's girlfriend was murdered. And the killer kidnapped the marine's daughter, Mildred Jones.

The girlfriend was a schoolteacher. She didn't have a record. She didn't even seem to have enemies. Brianna Davis was a good person and she became collateral damage when a kidnapper took Mildred.

There was evidence Mildred was the real target all along. The little girl tried to hide during the initial break-in. She hid in a lower cabinet when she was found and taken. She wasn't killed right away. She was instead spotted in the backseat of a car driving out of the neighborhood. Or at least that's what the neighbor Jim claimed.

Everyone believed Jim. They tracked down the car matching his description. It was heading towards the Mexican's border. It made everyone panic until they realized that Jim's story kept changing throughout the whole day. The whole neighborhood came out to assist with finding Mildred.

This included Jim. Jim kept making himself out to be more important than he was to anyone willing to listen. Franks eventually threatened him with violence and that's when Jim said he never saw a car or Mildred that night. He just wanted to be a part of the moment.

Franks had to go back to the neighborhood. This time he brought hunting dogs. They gave the dogs something of Mildred to sniff and the dogs led them to Mildred. Mildred was hiding in the woods.

She was hiding from Briana's killer. She wasn't really talking. Franks didn't want to push her at first. Nor did he want to immediately alert Children Protective Service. They didn't want Briana's killer to know that they found Mildred alive and so they went ahead with putting her face on a milk carton to buy Mildred some time.

They couldn't get into contact with her father. He still doesn't know what happened. The team in the meantime didn't want the little girl to get lost in the system. They kept her at the office until she felt comfortable enough to open up to Lala. Mildred saw the man that killed Briana. Briana was in fact the actual target. They saw the evidence through the lens of a missing child and that's why they failed to see that Briana was the target all along. Mildred was supposed to have gone to school. She was feeling tired that day. Briana allowed her to sleep in because she herself had the day off.

When the killer went to that house, he thought Briana was home alone. He didn't know that Mildred saw him or that she witnessed the murder. Mildred ran off to hide in the woods because that's what her father told her to do. He told her to run if she was in danger. She ran off and that probably saved her life. She started opening up the longer she was with NCIS. She still wouldn't describe the man she saw and Gibbs decided to talk to her himself. Franks was worried this case could traumatize Gibbs all over again. He had him running around the city only Gibbs knows how to relate to little girls.

Gibbs knows the comic books that Mildred talks about. He can sing her favorite Whitney Houston song. He sang it with her while she came up with a description of what the killer looked like. Gibbs was really good with her and he needed to go home early after talking to her. It did traumatize him. He tried to pretend it didn't when it did. Franks allowed him to leave early. Mildred was going home with Mary Jo for the night. Mildred's father had finally been contacted and he was flying home on the first flight back.

NCIS now had a description of the killer. They also matched their murder weapon to a second crime scene. Someone used that gun to carry out a hit on a guy involved in organized crime. Franks contacted a criminal informant known as Black Kenny because that's his guy for that kind of stuff. He tracked down the CI at an underground gambling ring. Black Kenny saw the photo of the killer. He gave Franks a name. He said the guy they were looking for goes by the name "Hatcher". Hatcher was known for being a fixer.

NCIS went to Hatcher's home. They ran into his father. His father said that Hatcher knows Mildred was still alive and that she saw his face. He went to go kill her. NCIS was too late to warn Mary Jo. Thankfully, Gibbs had stopped by her house. His daughter owned a rare toy that was hard to track down. He brought the toy to Mary Jo's because he figured Mildred would like it. Gibbs was about to leave when he heard screams. Mary Jo had stabbed the assailant and still the guy didn't stay down. Gibbs had to fight him and he soon killed Hatcher.

It happened in front of Mildred, but she was going to be fine. She later got to go home with her dad. The bigger concern for everyone was how Hatcher knew they found Mildred. Hatcher's father was questioned and he didn't know how his son got the information. What he did know was why he killed Briana. Briana was teaching science. She took samples from a nearby lake and she noticed it was contaminated. The dairy company was dumping chemicals into the lake because it would have been too expensive to get rid of it safely. And so that's why Briana had to die.

The woman that operated the company was also a part of the search party looking for Briana. She knew when Briana was found and she passed it along to the hitman. The company will now face charges for the dumping. The owner will now face first degree murder charges for the hit she put out on Briana.

And once Gibbs saw Mildred safely in her father's arms, he decided to finally take up Franks's offer of dinner at his place.

Summary: With the countdown on to an execution, Franks races to extricate the location of a missing body from a death row inmate and honor a promise he made to the victim's sister before time runs out.

Jethro Gibbs had a death wish for a while. It started the moment he heard about his family. He was told his wife and daughter had been killed. He was deployed at the time. No one expected him to be battle ready anytime soon, but Gibbs ran into the action.

He didn't try to save anyone. He didn't try to keep himself alive. He ran into the action because he wanted to be killed. He got pretty banged up after doing that. He had to rehabilitate back stateside where his father took over his care. His dad did everything to keep him alive. The one thing he couldn't do was give Gibbs a reason to live. And so the job offer from NCIS did what Jackson couldn't do, it gave Gibbs a reason to fight.

Gibbs was now helping people. NCIS gave people justice. Its why this latest case meant so much. NCIS were brought in on an old murder investigation. The killer was Albert Hope. He was a professor of Theology. He killed his wife and her lover when he returned home early one day.

Franks worked this case alone at the time. He managed to get a confession out of Hope. Hope even gave Franks the location of one of the graves. His wife's lover was Captain Jonathan Rice. His remains were left in a wooded area. He was later buried with respect.

The one thing Hope wouldn't give was the location of his wife's body. Ana Larsen was dead. Hope said as much. He just wouldn't allow anyone to see her or bury her.

Franks believed that Hope loved holding onto that information because he has a god complex. He likes being in control. It's been years since Franks worked the case and he never got Hope to give so much as a hint on where Ana's body was located. It haunts Franks that he couldn't give the family closure. He's been drinking a lot the closer they get to Hope's execution.

The state was going to execute Hope for the double homicide. If he dies before he revealing where Ana's body was, the truth dies with him. They all knew that they were running out of time. Hope used that against them. He toyed with them. He reached out to Ana's sister. He claimed that he wanted to talk and heal.

Franks knew that was a load of crap. He advised Julie not to meet Hope. Hope couldn't be trusted. He was only dangling information now to buy himself time. Franks knew that and he still had to play Hope's game.

Franks's usual means of doing things didn't work before. He wasn't even allowed to be with Hope unsupervised because he once tried to beat the information out of the man. Anyways, things were different now. Franks has his own team. They were all willing to look through the case files with him.

Gibbs looked at everything trying to help. Rando read Hope's books. It was giving them nothing new to work with and so Franks made a deal with the devil. Franks got Hope to tell them where Ana's body was in exchange for him getting forgiveness from Julie the sister.

Hope led NCIS into the desert. Their radios didn't work out there. Gibbs got sidetracked when two Latinos drove close to the scene and he racially profiled them.

He drew a gun on them when they tried to get their license from the glove compartment. Lala stopped Gibbs for shooting two unarmed men. The guys drove off. Gibbs and Lala went back to securing the scene. Hope came through. He led them to Ana's body. He waited to speak to Julie and that's when Franks double-crossed him. Franks was never going to give Hope the opportunity to talk to Julie.

Franks knows that Hope doesn't deserve forgiveness. He wrote a book asking for it and yet he must have known he didn't deserve it. He only wanted to talk to Julie because she and Ana were twins. He wanted to treat himself to her pain just a little longer. Franks denied him that. Lala also spoke to Gibbs.

She couldn't keep covering for him. This goes double after his last eval. She had the situation handled. He shouldn't have overreacted. She now has to report him to Franks and Franks wasn't in the mood to hear it.

Hope played him. The body they found wasn't Ana's. It belonged to a good Samaritan. The guy was on a road trip when he saw Hope's car on the side of the road and he offered to help him with his car. Hope stopped there because he was getting rid of the body. He was afraid the other guy would see too much.

He killed him and no one connected him to the man's disappearance until now. Ana's remains were still out there. Franks was tired of the back and forth. He finally let Julie speak to Hope. And Hope proved once again to be a horrible person.

It was Julie that drove Ana to the bar where she met her lover. Hope asked to meet Julie not because he wanted absolution. He wanted her to seek absolution from him. He said she's the reason her sister is dead. Franks tried to attack him after that. The bars on Hope's cell worked against him.

Hope was left in a position of power and he wanted everyone to beg him for information on Ana. He was loving all the attention he was getting. Franks was right when he said Hope had a god complex. He just didn't know how to combat it.

Lala meanwhile had a break in the case. She found out that Hope buried his victims according to their religion. Rice was buried under a cactus that looked like a cross. He was a catholic and so that fits.

The good Samaritan was buried honoring Muslim customs. They just needed to know what Ana's faith was. They called around. They heard that Ana didn't worship any one faith. Hope wrote about that in his book and so right before he was executed by the state — Franks visited him. He finally figured out where Ana was buried.

Hope buried Ana in a vineyard because wine was her god. Hope's final moments on earth was him realizing he didn't win. Ana was found and her sister later buried her with respect. Franks was able to close a case that's been haunting him for six years. Tish had even thought he had an affair with Julie because they were that close.

Franks had to reassure her. He also had to rectify things with Vera Strickland. He cut into her interview with the big boss. It's like he didn't see her. And she said that's why she couldn't work with him anymore.

And so Franks made up to everyone in his life. He let Tish know she's the one. He got approval for Strickland's program. He also never heard about the incident involving Gibbs. Lala chose to cover it up.

Summary: Gibbs goes undercover for the first time with Lala as NIS works the case of a dead Navy seaman who may have been sharing top-secret intel that poses a threat to national security. Also, Lala struggles with her place on the team and an unexpected development in her personal life.

The one thing Franks hated was workplace distractions. He called Lala that once. She was upset by that. She hadn't told anyone when it first happened, but much later on she talked about it with Gibbs.

It could have been months or it could have been years later. She was still upset by it. She told Gibbs that it felt like she had been put in a box and that box was constantly getting smaller.

She was so upset that she started lashing out. She was late to a scene. She had just come back from a bar and Franks gave her lip about wearing lipstick.

Lala had gone out to celebrate Vera's profiling program that night. She also met a guy. They made out. She was enjoying herself and that's why she was late to the scene.

When she did show up, Franks gave her a hard time for being late. Then the lipstick thing. There was also a problem when Lala dropped a tissue on the ground.

The local cop thought that was evidence. He got into a screaming match with Lala about her picking it up and Franks had to break it up. Lala was not herself that night. Frank even asked her what's wrong.

She wouldn't say. She acted like nothing happened. Only she was getting tired of the way she's treated. She felt singled out. They were called to the home of Petty Officer Second Class Greg Piccolo because his neighbors complained about the noise.

The cops showed up and they found Greg's body. It looked like he committed suicide. The medical examiner later determined that it was actually homicide. It was now a murder investigation and still Randy took time to read some of the love letters that the victim got.

They were laughing about what was in those letters when Lala entered the room. Suddenly, they didn't feel comfortable discussing the letters and they didn't want to show them to Lala. She had to wait to read them. She got copies of them the next day.

She also learned that they believe the love letters were written by a man. This theory was backed up when someone called the office. Mary Jo was told by an anonymous male caller that Greg did bad deeds and they should look at where he worked.

Greg was a fire controlman. He controlled a secure room with classified files. No one got passed him without the proper clearance and, while highly respected, he also kept to himself. Lala began looking into Greg. She used to do that from the start.

She was starting slow with this case and that could be because of her guilt. Lala cheated on the man she loves. The guy at the bar was a fling. She never got his name. She never wanted to. What gutted her was when she returned home to find a great guy that made her breakfast. And she remembers she betrayed his trust.

It was the others that found out that Greg had a leak in his office. There was a file about a tomahawk. It was in the wind and NCIS needed to know who wanted to buy the information. SAC Wheeler got them information on the buyer. The buyer was Sam Rhodes.

He buys information on the black market and it would suck if his name and face was all over the news talking about him betraying his country. So, Rhodes assisted NCIS with the case. He told them where the deal was happening.

It was going to be at an underground gambling den. Gibbs was to go undercover. Lala was told to go with him as his arm candy. Lala was insulted by that. Gibbs tried to tell her that he could talk to Franks for her, but she didn't want his help.

Gibbs may think he was different only he was just like the other guys in underestimating her. Its why he pulled his weapon on unarmed civilians when she told him she could handle the situation. She still went as his arm candy. She helped Gibbs become Sam Rhodes.

Lala also later saved Gibbs from breaking cover. His dentist was at the secret club. She kept him hidden from the guy long enough to save his cover. They were then approached by the seller. Lala pretended to be drunk to make herself seem less like a threat.

She identified the four men in the room. She was buying them time without them knowing how much they needed it. They didn't have the fully agreed amount. The FBI left them short by thirty grand. The FBI also had a case in the area and them making such noise might spoke the seller. Luckily, Lala managed to get the upper hand in that room.

She gave Gibbs a knife. She stole a gun. She took out one of the bad guy and Gibbs took the seller prisoner. That's when backup arrived.

They arrested the men. Gibbs showed he could be trusted with a job like that while Lala had to hear in the dressing room all the men that really loved her undercover dress. She and Vera talked about it. She has to be strong. Just not too strong or she'll be labeled a b*tch. She can't wear her tightest pair of pants. She has to make crass jokes when they talk about her. To show that she's one of the guys.

Lala faced constant micro-aggressions and so the least she could do was come clean about making out with a rando.

Summary: NCIS investigates the murder of a dementia-afflicted Jane Doe. Also, flashbacks reveal the first time Gibbs met Franks.

The worst part about losing his family was when he went home to silence. His wife wasn't listening to his music. His daughter wasn't watching her favorite show. It was just complete silence.

Gibbs couldn't go home to face that by himself and so he got a new place. He'd rather rent a hole in the wall rather than return home to an empty house.

He eventually found a place he could afford. He wasn't there for long when Franks came knocking. Franks saw how defeated Gibbs appeared. He helped him get a job with NCIS because he knew Gibbs needed something to fight for. And he wasn't wrong.

The job was the only thing Gibbs had. It would go on to define him. Back in the early days though, he was still figuring it out. NCIS received a call from a corporal about a bag at the side of the road.

The bag was a lady's purse. There was blood on it. The corporal was concerned a woman could be in danger. He reported what he found and NCIS followed a trail of blood from the road. They soon found the body of an elderly woman. The coyotes were already sniffing around. Franks had to scare them off with his gun and NCIS took over the scene.

The victim was called Jane Doe at first. She was found in her nightgown. Even her purse was full of pictures instead of anything useful. The medical examiner determined that she was in her early eighties.

There was no missing person matching the victim's description. It was hours before someone realized she was missing and came forward. The victim was identified as Alice Glenn.

Her son was in the military. She was living on base with his family. Alice suffered from dementia. She was living by herself until she couldn't anymore. And she occasionally wanders off on her own.

Alice does that every once in a while. Her family didn't like to report it because her staying with them was an infraction, but she would always take her wallet with her purse.

Her son's address was in the wallet. It would help her return home. This wallet wasn't found on the victim. She also suffered injuries.

It seems she was killed during a robbery and her body was thrown off the side of the road after death. If they hadn't forgotten the purse, there's no telling if Alice would have ever been found. The coyotes would have destroyed the evidence.

NCIS investigated the homicide. They checked a local drug den. They figured only someone desperate would so heinously kill a defenseless grandmother and they weren't wrong.

The addicts down there said a guy named "Lefty" came covered in blood the other day. He also had enough to buy more than he normally would. He became their chief suspect. No one knew Lefty's real name. Or address. They did know that he was arrested by an MP because he stole batteries out of cars. NCIS found the officer that arrested him and who let him go with a warning.

The guy has Lefty's address.

Franks had Lefty brought in. He questioned him privately. He did so in a room without cameras and Lefty claimed the blood on him was his own. He said he suffered nosebleeds. He also said he saw something that night. He swears he saw a big black man that night. Only Franks didn't believe him.

He was used to hearing about a supposed big black guy did it and so he wrote it off until a blood test showed that the blood on Lefty really was his. Franks was so angry at himself for questioning Lefty without cameras. The case would have been ruined if he never told anyone what Lefty said.

Not that Lefty was telling him everything. He really did make up the black guy only he did witness the murder. He said he saw a blond woman and he identified her car. It turns out it was Alice's daughter-in-law. Alice started getting violent lately. It happens with people suffering from dementia.

Alice wasn't remembering her family. She lashed out at them. She was hitting her daughter-in-law when they got into a fight. Alice was pushed. She fell backwards and she hit her head. It was an accident. The part about dumping her body and getting rid of her wallet to make it look like a robbery was not in fact an accident.

NCIS found their killer. It was up to the jury to decide what happens to her. Other than that, the case was officially closed. Gibbs used his free time to help a bird.

The bird flew in the wall in Gibb's apartment and Gibbs nursed it back to health. He built a bird house for it. He got it bird food. He needed to heal someone and he got to do that with the bird. The bird eventually flew off on his own. And for a short time at least, it reminded Gibbs that he was still needed.

Franks however went home to an angry Tish. Tish found out that Franks was investigating her sexual assault from years ago. She told him to drop it because she wanted to move on and he refused to do that. He claimed he was getting her justice when really he was looking for revenge.

He was even using Vera's new profiling program to try and find the man. And so Tish had to issue him an ultimatum tonight that he either respects her wishes or he gets out.

Summary: Gibbs and the team investigate the case of a Navy priest who was killed in the confessional booth; Randy shows Gibbs the ropes of working a protective detail.

Special Agent Bernard Randolph suffered from PTSD. He would smoke to calm down. Or at least he used to do until he had a new baby at home. His new baby had colic.

Randy didn't want to make it worse by bringing in cigarette smoke and so he was going without cigarettes. He had nothing else to calm him down. He was going around by pretending to be cheerful and he knew it wasn't going to last. He was going to snap. One way or another. It probably didn't help that they caught a murder case. NCIS was informed that Father John Larkin had been murdered at his church.

The father was a Navy Chaplain. NCIS had to investigate his case like any other soldier. They learned that the father was giving confessional when he was killed and that there was a missing priest.

The other priest was Father Bobby. Father Bobby was hiding in the private office saying his "hail Mary" over and over again. The man also had blood on him. He seemed pretty shaken and NCIS had to question him in case he saw something or was their culprit. They took Father Bobby back to their office.

The father calmed down when he away from the crime scene. He apologized for his earlier behavior. He said he was shaken when he saw Father John in such a condition.

He was also freaking out because he was worried that the killer might have made a mistake. It was Father Bobby's turn to be in the box this week. He traded with Father John. The other priest was also shot first in the confessional. He tried crawling away when he got shot the second time and it was the second bullet that killed him.

Meaning the killer never got a good look at Father John's face. They could have thought they were aiming at Father Bobby. Which of course worried Father Bobby. NCIS had to give him protection detail.

Randy signed up for it. He's been signing up for these kinds of jobs for the past few weeks. Mary Jo suspected he didn't want to go home. Franks thought that Randy wanted to be away from a baby with colic. He assigned Gibbs to go with Randy in case Randy fell asleep on the job. And assigning Gibbs might have been a mistake.

Gibbs was already all over the place. When he joined Randy in covering for Father Bobby, he saw Randy go through every scenario and he questioned out loud if Agent Mitchell had done the same.

Mitchell was the man guarding Gibb's family when they were all killed. Randy didn't know Mitchell for long, but he did see the crime scene. He saw the blood everywhere. It stayed with him. He blamed himself for what happened and that's when he first began to spiral. Randy puts on a good show in front of his coworkers. His wife was the only one that knew he was suffering.

Father Bobby also proved to be right. He was the target all along. The gun used to murder Father John was used in a convenience store robbery and the clerk was killed. The killer has now killed two people.

Father Bobby knows who he is and he can't say. The killer confessed to him during confession. Father Bobby was tied by the sacramental seal. He couldn't reveal this man's name. The killer was coming after him and he couldn't even give the feds any information to protect himself. He either survives or he dies with the secret.

Someone tripped the fire alarm at the motel where NCIS was staying with Father Bobby. Randy went out to go check. He found someone running away and identified himself as a federal agent.

The two men got into a scuffle. Randy nearly killed the guy in a chokehold. He finally put the guy to sleep when Gibbs radio in that someone was trying to break into the priest's room. Gibbs arrested the other guy. He and Randy later questioned both men. They saw the feds unloading stuff and they wanted to rob them. They didn't know they were feds or that they were guarding a priest.

They did see the priest though. Father Bobby came out of the room to look at them. He assured Randy that neither of them was his killer and the two men weren't armed.

The thieves were transported to the local jail. Franks decided to let the priest stay at the motel. He sent Randy some backup. Randy needed it after Gibbs left. Gibbs had to leave to put the thieves in lockup. With Gibbs gone, Randy made a confession to Father Bobby. He admitted he was assigned protection detail over Gibbs's family.

Randy ended up passing on it because his son really did have colic at the time. The baby was keeping them awake at all hours of the day and they were worried that there might be something seriously wrong with him. Randy had to stay to be with his family. He gave Mitchell his assignment. Now Mitchell is dead. Gibbs's family is dead.

Randy has been blaming himself for what happened and its why he takes so many assignments away from home. He couldn't stand to look at his son. His boy reminded him of everything he wanted to forget.

Randy struggling to connect with his son had touched Father Bobby. Father Bobby traded with Father John because he was having an emotional affair with one of his parishioners. He now blames himself for his fellow priest's death. He failed that vow and he didn't want to fail any others. Only he got a sign from someone in the NCIS office.

It helped make things clear for Father Bobby. He gave up the killer's name. His name was Joshua Adams. He was the son of the congregation secretary. Joshua struggles with drugs and alcohol. And he used his grandfather's service weapon to rob the convenience store.

Joshua killed two people to get a fix. NCIS even found him in the underground tunnels doing drugs. There was no saving him. The only good thing that came out of it was Lala got an answer.

She approached Franks earlier. She was hoping to get recommendation letter from Franks. Lala wants to move up through the ranks of NCIS's command and leadership. And Franks refused to sign that letter because he thought Lala was better off in the field than in an office like Vera.

The same Vera that was questioning Jamison in prison. He goes by Bugs now and he was a bad guy. He was so bad that Vera shouldn't have kept their interview a secret.

Summary: As Leroy Jethro Gibbs prepares for his first Christmas without his wife and daughter, flashbacks reveal the unlikely journey that led to his first day on the job as a special agent.

Gibbs killed someone in cold blood. Yeah, his walk down memory lane got really dark tonight. He fell apart after his family was murdered and the only way he could heal was killing the man that took his family away from him. Gibbs hunted down this killer. He killed him in Mexico.

There was no evidence of his involvement in the crime only the odds were pretty low that Pedro Hernandez managed to tick off two snipers. Lala knew instantly when she heard that a sniper killed Hernandez that Gibbs did it. She knew it. She also didn't want to be around Gibbs or Franks anymore. She doesn't trust them when they're together and she didn't want to be dragged down with them.

Lala was going to put in for a transfer. She told Gibbs about it. He tried to talk her out of it. The two of them have become friends and he said he couldn't tell her about what he did.

He didn't want to put that burden on her, but Lala felt like she couldn't trust him after learning the truth. She thought the best thing she could do was put some distance between them. She was going to do just that when they all came back from their time off. It was the Christmas holiday season after all. Gibbs didn't have anywhere else to go. He signed up for night duty at the office.

Gibbs needed to keep busy. Just six months ago, he was tearing up his apartment to the point that his landlord kicked him out. He was calling his father when he was sure his father wouldn't answer.

Gibbs was just being self-destructive. Gibbs was even sleeping in his truck bed when it started to rain. His former landlord saw him and she felt so bad for him that she agreed he could move back into the apartment. He was never going to get his deposit back. She was going to use that to fix up the holes he punched in the walls.

Somehow Gibbs ended up befriending his landlord. Her name is Ruth. They did puzzles together. It kept Gibbs from wallowing until his new friend fed him some tough love.

She knew she was helping him hide from the world and so she cut the strings. She forced him to go back outside. She made him get a job. He worked as a cashier at the supermarket. He would come home cranky only it didn't stop him from putting puzzles together with Ruth. Gibbs also tried to reach out to Franks. Franks was avoiding him for a while.

Franks was afraid of what Gibbs had to say. Gibbs saw him come into the supermarket with Tish. He tried to talk to him and that's when Franks laid out the truth.

He knew Gibbs was contacting him to either push for more information or to confess to what he did. Franks didn't want to know either way. He knew ignorance was better off than knowing the truth. Gibbs still needed someone to talk to. He eventually told Ruth everything. Someone had robbed Ruth. They got the kids' license plate and had some beers afterwards.

Ruth didn't judge Gibbs for killing that man. She helped him see that he could be a great cop. He has the makings for it and Gibbs realized that as well. Ruth confided in him that she has a son.

She wasn't a very good mother to him growing up. Her son now lives in New Orleans. He doesn't want anything to do with her. It makes her sad because she's dying. She waited until Gibbs came back after graduating from NCIS to tell him. She didn't want to ruin his chances at everything and she wanted to wait to tell him until after he had his psych eval.

The last plan got interrupted because Gibbs figured something was wrong. He grilled Ruth. She told him she was dying and Gibbs went on to fail his psych eval.

He was going to drink his problems away after that when Franks reentered the picture. Franks was going to get Gibbs out of jail for getting into a fight with two marines. Only Franks didn't have to worry. Ruth was there. She bailed out Gibbs. She talked to Franks. She told him that Gibbs failed the test because of her and that Gibbs needed a second chance.

Ruth was Gibbs's only friend. She was dying. She didn't want to leave Gibbs alone in the world and so she appealed to Franks better nature. It worked. Franks hired Gibbs.

He ignored the psych eval. He ignored the many red flags about Gibbs and that included him still getting into fights at the bar. Gibbs became an agent. He helped Ruth get back into contact with her son. She later died that holiday season with her son at her side and Gibbs got that phone call right after Lala said she was transferring out.

Lala saw that Gibbs was hurting. She put aside her anger with him to be his friend. She asked him about the phone call and he told her the long story about Ruth.

By the end of the story, Lala changed her mind about transferring somewhere else. She was going to stick with Franks. She was also going to keep being there for Gibbs while he struggles with finding himself.

One of the last things Ruth told him was that she was glad to help him find his calling and he did that when he joined NCIS.
