At the scene, the fast food workers are bound and dead inside. They found Victor's wallet and car. And a gun next to the car.

Ducky arrives, sleep deprived. He hasn't been sleeping well since dating a serial killer. They're greeted by Thomas Pierce with Homeland Security. He doesn't think Victor was worth kidnapping.

Gibbs visits Abby in the lab. She only wants to talk about Diane and Fornell. She found the gun at the scene was registered to Victor and was recently fired for the first time. Victor's prints were on the gun. She found a card missing from Victor's wallet.

Back at the office, Fornell vents about Diane, how she emptied his and Gibbs' bank accounts and even took the pocketwatch that belonged to Gibbs' grandfather. Fornell confirms one of the dead burger workers was a naval reservist, so it's officially their case. The other was a divorced male model.

Victor has been with Homeland Security for five years, but he has tons of money in offshore bank accounts.

Fornell and Gibbs talk to Vance. He gives the kidnapping case to Fornell, which Gibbs is fine with. Diane busts in, angry to have learned about the $2 million. She knows which card is missing. It had an Iron Crypt logo on it.

Ziva and Tony go to Iron Crypt, where they're greeted by a nerd on a Segway. He says Victor is there once a month to inspect their data storage systems. He checks to see if Victor used his access card while he comes on to Ziva. The card was used last night around midnight.

He shows them security footage of a man using the card. It's Victor. He downloaded one file and erased the traces.

Back at the office, they think it was a budget because it had a bunch of numbers.

Down in the morgue, Duckie waxes on about divorce to the corpses. Fornell and Gibbs join him. He reports the victim's wrists were tied but they didn't struggle. Duckie wonders if the crime scene was faked. The bullets were fired from Victor's gun.

Tony talks to Diane, to trying to figure out if Victor has been in contact with her. She calls Gibbs "Leroy". He also tries to find out why Gibbs married her. Gibbs comes in and tells her Victor is a suspect. Abby arrives, announcing that Victor downloaded a recipe for a very contagious virus.

Abby brought in Carol, an infectious disease expert who flirts shamelessly with Fornell. "I'm old enough to be your father!" They say the virus is only spread through touch and people die too quickly to spread it very far. There were much more deadly viruses to steal, but this one would make a great weapon. They think he's trying to sell it. Carol points them to the lab that could create it, winking at Fornell as they leave.

Fornell, Ziva and Gibbs go to the lab and find dead bodies on the floor. There are three dead men trapped in a lab who tried to shoot their way out. The vials of the virus are gone.

Back at the office, they ID two of the dead as ex-special forces who have been working for mercenary groups.

McGee arrives with restored security footage from the burger joint. The dead men from the lab are on it. It shows them dragging passed out Victor around. They still wonder if he masterminded it.

McGee has found that Diane went to the Cayman Islands in 2004 and 2006. Gibbs cites Rule 69: Never trust a woman who doesn't trust her man.

Diane pays an angry visit to Gibbs late at night in his basement. He offers her bourbon, but she thinks he's taunting her. She accuses him of marrying her to get over Shannon, but she apologizes and admits she's scared.

She says she met someone in 2004 who had a place in the Caymans, while she was already married. It was Victor, they got married six months ago. Gibbs sent a waffle iron. She's sure they're wrong about Victor.

She leaves and Fornell steps out from the shadows. He and Diane were still married in 2004. He didn't know she cheated.

McGee calls with a location from the last call the dead gunman made.

They head to the giant warehouse and find Victor toiling over something at a workbench. He's alone and happy to see them. He's caged in and chained up. They free him, but Gibbs dodges the hug.

In NCIS interrogation, he says they said if he didn't help them, they'd kill Diane. He says he was being set up. Fornell confronts Victor about the hidden money and the vacations to the Caymans "with other people's wives!".

Diane listens in interrogation then busts in. He says he inherited the money years ago, invested it and forgot about it. He planned to tell her when he retired. She yells at him for not trusting her, but he settles her down and they hug and make up.

He tells everyone the bad guys are planning to use the virus.

They all meet with Vance. Victor MacGuyvered an old phone to tap into the intercom and listen to the terrorists.

Abby has recovered some of conversation and heard "tomorrow", which would be today and the word "game." The Armed Forces football game is today and they found equipment that would turn the virus into a powder.

They arrive at the game three minutes before kickoff and can't evacuate because the terrorists would release the virus. We see two men carrying around canisters of it.

Abby calls to report there's only enough virus to hit a few dozen people. They check the VIP list full of top brass from all five military services. They see a man go into the luxury box.

They head up and pass a gunned down security guard. There are two men hooking the canister up to the air system on the roof. Gibbs and Fornell creep up and announce themselves. The men fire back. One of them is the Homeland Security suit, Pierce. They shoot both men down before they can release the virus.

Fornell and Gibbs stand over Pierce as he takes his last breaths and says they don't know what they're fighting for.

Gibbs and Fornell report to Vance, that the VIPs were in town for a draw down of military forces. They think one of the VIPs was pulling the strings because he didn't want to lose funding. Vance and Gibbs happily pass that part of the investigation off to Fornell.

Back at his house, Diane visits Gibbs in his basement. She thanks him for finding Victor. Gibbs calls him a good man. She tells him she never should have married Fornell; she didn't love him, but she did like him. Gibbs admits he felt the same about her. She thinks Shannon was the only woman he'll ever love. She gives him his grandfather's pocket watch back. "You were my 'Shannon', Leroy," she tells him.

Ellison), Jaime Ray Newman (Navy Lieutenant Commander Melanie Burke)
Production Code:	194
Summary:	While investigating a crash of a military plane that was transporting caskets, the NCIS team comes upon a discrepancy with the DNA remains.

A cargo plane brings the coffins of fallen soldiers back. Suddenly, sparks fly in the cargo hold. The plane starts to shimmy and shake and plummet from the sky. "We're going down!" the soldiers shout.

Gibbs wakes up in bed with Shannon, his long dead wife. He basks in being near her and tries to think of a reason to stay in bed all day. She stops and looks at him and asks how he's ever going to get what he needs if he doesn't let her go.

Gibbs wakes up alone on the couch to the phone ringing. It's Vance, calling about multiple Marine fatalities.

Gibbs and the team drive to the plane wreckage site. There were five crew and six caskets coming from Kandahar. The Air Force is handling the site. NCIS is there to look into criminal aspects.

They arrive to a field full of charred wreckage. There's one survivor. NCIS begins going over the evidence.

Witnesses saw an explosion. The scene is making Tony contemplative. The Marines' bodies were heading for final DNA identification before being returned to their loved ones. Duckie anticipates a big process identifying all the body parts.

24 Hours later Palmer forges on in the morgue.

Tony is feeling fatalistic back in the office. Chaplain Melanie Burke checks in. She was sent to talk to the victim's families. McGee reports the black box is pointing to a flock of birds hitting the plane. Just bad luck, not an attack.

The chaplain goes to see a grieving father, Joseph Flores, who's sure his daughter's body was on the plane. They found only her dog tags after an explosion at a school in Afghanistan. Her name was Gabriela. He's impatient and wants to bury her. The chaplain stays to talk with him.

Gibbs is summoned to see Vance and Secretary of the Navy Jarvis. Jarvis wants the DNA matches to confirm the bodies on the plane. He gives NCIS 24 hours to release the bodies.

Down in the lab, Abby is deep into Caf Pow and even more amped than usual. Abby says Gabriela Flores is listed as a possible KIA, only burnt remains were found near her dog tags and Abby ID'd them as two other men. Her body wasn't on the plane.

McGee catches Tony making a bucket list. Among the items: Discover the meaning of life, ride a Ferris Wheel naked. He remembers he's done the latter and crosses it off.

Gibbs arrives for the rundown on Gabriela Flores. She got a degree in journalism before going overseas. She worked with Chuck Ellison as a public affairs officer in DC. He's now the Commandant of the Marine Corps. She was part of the female counter-insurgency team.

She was blind-sided in an RPG attack on a girls' school.

Gibbs, Tony and Ziva go talk to Flores' CO Quincy in MTAC. He says they shipped back everything from the scene.

The attack was at night. He saw her on the comm five minutes before the attack. He describes her as a dedicated Marine who was liked by everyone. He vows to keep looking for her.

Down in his basement, Gibbs goes through a box of Gabriela's things. He listens to a recording she made describing girls joining their school building after they lost their families.

He flashes back to boot camp and a woman named Joan Matteson practicing on the obstacle course, trying to beat his course time. He chats her up but she brushes him off for messing up her time.

He's brought back when his phone rings. He's called to see Ellison bright and early.

The next day, Gibbs goes to see the Commandant of the Marine Corps Ellison, who promises to do what it takes to find Flores.

Gibbs joins the chaplain for coffee. Gabriela sent her dad a personal check from Justin Fanniker and wrote "Love you, Dad" in the memo. Joseph Flores signed it over to the chapel.

In the office, we learn Fanniker construction is a big contracting company that has made a lot of money in Afghanistan. McGee finds personal emails between Gabriela and Justin. Three days before the attack, he told her he loved her and would give her dad anything he needed if she would leave with him. She never responded.

There's a record that Justin left Afghanistan on a private plane. His phone puts him in the middle of George Washington National Forrest. Burke offers to go with Gibbs.

At a cabin in the woods, they find Justin outside with a shotgun. He says Gabriela is dead. He saw the wreckage at the school. He left because he was grieving.

McGee shows Gibbs satellite footage from the attack on the school, but it's not clear. Gibbs tells McGee to get better resolution by invoking the name of the Commandant of the Marine Corps.

Ziva reports Gabriela's CO in Afghanistan still has found nothing.

Gibbs suggests everyone go home for the night. But first, he visits the bodies in the morgue. Duckie suggests he ask the living for answers.

Gibbs calls Burke for names of other women who did what Gabriela did. He visits Emily, who tells him about the death threats teachers got for teaching girls and how one student had acid thrown in her face. She says the insurgents saw the girls school as a threat.

Back in the lab, Gibbs plays Gabriela's recording for Abby. Ziva listens to the background voices and translates. The men are discussing the destruction of the school. They were the same men helping build it.

Gibbs reports their findings to her CO Quincy, who isn't surprised. Locals play both sides. They haven't been able to find the builders since the attack. He says he'll keep looking.

Gibbs visits the tomb of the Unknown Soldier.

He remembers boot camp again. Joan visits him working on a bird house for his dad. She says her father is difficult, but there's no point holding it against him.

He snaps back and sees Joseph Flores at the tomb. Gibbs tells him her body wasn't on the plane and hasn't been found. He says they're putting everything they have into finding her. Joseph gives Gibbs a photo of Gabriela, a teacher and one of the students.

Gibbs takes the photo to Burke, then Abby. There's a tattoo under the woman's wedding ring. Abby finds two would be suicide bombers in the system with the same tattoo, both linked to the "Army of Believers" insurgent group. The design symbolizes entrance into martyrdom.

McGee reports one of their tactics is using women for attacks. Gibbs makes McGee widen the satellite footage and they find one adult figure leading two children away from the attack site and intercepted by a truck.

They think they've found Flores.

Gibbs reports to the Commandant Ellison and Jarvis. They're sending people to look for her. They promise the rescue team won't leave until they find her.

Production Code: 195
Summary: The search into the disappearance of a Marine Lieutenant continues as the NCIS team tracks them down to Afghanistan. Meanwhile, Tony's deepest fear resurfaces and Gibbs has to go through memories of his past again.

Navy Lieutenant Commander Melanie Burke, the chaplain, tries to comfort Joseph Flores, whose daughter Gabriela is missing in Afghanistan. She suggests maybe Gabriela was answering God's call when she didn't run for safety that night, instead rescuing two girls. They're joined by Tony, who looks like he has news. Cut to Gibbs riding on military transport with a flag-draped coffin.

In Helmand, Province, Afghanistan, 48 Hours earlier

Gibbs and Ziva are welcomed to the base by Marine Captain Quincy. The two girls Gabriela saved were just found.

They'd been tortured, but they're alive. Gibbs talks to Marine Staff Sergeant Catherine Littleton, who was there the night of the attack. She's not very forthcoming. She evacuated before the attack and thought Gabriela was with her group. She feels guilty for leaving.

Gibbs shows Littleton the photo of the woman in a burka with a finger tattoo that indicates she's part of a terrorist group. Littleton knows her as Soraya. She was visiting her family out of town the day of the attack and hasn't been back since.

Back at NCIS, Duckie waxes on about the historical battles over what children should be taught. Tony is still distracted by his bucket list. He lets on that there's a fear he hasn't conquered yet.

Vance and Sec-Nav Jarvis talk to Gibbs in MTAC with the team. Soraya's parents were killed by Russians when she was a teenager. She had an older brother named Osman, who died in an IED explosion two years ago and a younger brother, Asa, who's going to law school in DC.

Tony and McGee go talk to him. They run into him on campus, but he runs as soon as they identify themselves. They tackle him and take him in.

Tony suggests he might end up in prison and Asa says his group is small but strong.

Gibbs remembers back to boot camp and his crush Marine Private Joan Matteson. She fixes a truck and earns his respect. He's shipping to Pendleton soon and she's off to Okinawa. She tells him to stay in touch. (Young Gibbs is played by Mark Harmon's son, Sean.)

Back in Afghanistan, Gibbs and Ziva see the girls Gabriela saved. One was blinded with hot grease. The other is covered in cigarette burns. They're 10 and 13. Ziva talks to Kinah and Lala. They tell them the kidnappers are "not done yet" with Gabriela.

They remember it smelled like cars where they were and there was oil on the ground. Gibbs suggests a sample.

Back in the lab, Abby runs a breakdown. The oil is from outside Kabul, from the Afghan pipeline.

Tony visits the chapel and talks to God, reminding Him of their bargain. He asks for a sign if He remembers it. When Burke arrives, Tony tells her to tell Joseph they think they might know where Gabriela is.

In MTAC they prepare to watch the operation to rescue Gabriela.

On the ground, Gibbs and Ziva are part of the mission to rescue her. The heat sensors show five people inside. As they're approaching, Quincy is hit in the neck. They shoot their way in and find Gabriela alive, but being held with a gun to her head by Soraya.

Gibbs asks her if she wants to spend the rest of her life in Guantanamo or just get shot right there. She lets Gabriela go.

Back outside, Ziva tries to comfort Quincy as he fights to live. He tells Ziva to tell his parents that he loves them. They watch as he takes his last breath.

Ziva promises to get him home. Back to the beginning. Tony gives Joseph Flores the news that his daughter is alive.

Gibbs talks to Gabriela, who is upset over Quincy's death. She says he disobeyed an order that night to save the girls. She wants Soraya held accountable for her crimes, but mostly she wants her to watch the two girls grow up and change the world. Punishment is knowing she could have done the same.

At NCIS in the elevator, Burke tells Tony she's intrigued by him. She offers him spiritual guidance when he's ready for it.

Gibbs, Gabriela, Ziva and others fly home with Quincy's body.

Gibbs remembers boot camp, learning the news that a helicopter went down in Okinawa. Matteson was on it.

Back on US soil, Quincy's casket is given a soldier's welcome.

At NCIS, Gibbs talks to Soraya and Asa in interrogation. They think Americans college kids are rich spoiled brats. The defend hurting children as a way to protect their way of life.

Soraya lets slip that their older brother is there. Asa tells Gibbs the fight has just begun.

Gibbs thinks Osman is in DC. They check Asa's cell records and alert local law enforcement. Gibbs searches his desk for a special knife.

He brings a rolls of torture tools to interrogation with just Asa and lays out the photos of the tortured girls. He turns off the cameras and offers Asa a cigarette. After he lights up, he mentions the burns on the girls. Then he grabs the cigarette out of his hands and holds Asa around the neck, threatening to burn him.

Vance busts in telling Gibbs not to bother. The FBI killed Osman 20 minutes ago and Soraya killed herself in her cell.

Asa says they had a bomb they planned to electronically detonate. He's about to tell them where when he realizes Vance was lying.

In the office, they find Osman was an automechanic. They look for local field trips. Ziva finds the National Consortium for Independent Girls Schools, a group that includes 300 girls at the science museum. They're there now.

They gear up and head out.

Osman hooks a bomb up under the bus as the girls board. He dials a cell phone to detonate it but is stopped by a gun in his face. Gibbs tells him to drop it. Ziva goes to unload the bus. Gibbs checks that McGee has things handled. Osman yells and pushes the last button.

Nothing happens. McGee reveals his signal jammer. Osman calls Gibbs weak for not killing him. Gibbs punches him in the face.

Back at NCIS, Vance takes a call from the commandant thanking Gibbs. Vance tries to get Gibbs to take some time off, but Gibbs asks why he'd take a vacation when he's having plenty of fun.

Burke tries to help Tony work through his fears. As she leads him somewhere, he develops a flop sweat and shakes. He says he doesn't get scared, noting he's had the plague, kissed a transvestite and been tortured by the best the Middle East has to offer. It's time for Tony to face his fears.

Burke opens the door and Tony walks into a preschool. He's immediately hugged by a cherub and sits down for snack time.

Gibbs visits the tomb of the unknown soldier at Arlington. He brings flowers to put on Matton's grave.

Production Code: 196
Summary: When Tony's father is found inside a car with a dead body in the trunk, the NCIS team has to find out if he is indeed guilty of murder, while the man himself has no memory of the night, and Tony is removed from the investigation but attempts to help prove that his father is innocent.

Open with local police finding a Rolls Royce near the docks. They find a drunk man passed out inside and a body in a Naval uniform stashed in the trunk. The man is Tony's father, DiNozzo Sr.

Since she's newer, Ziva has been given a huge stack of cold cases. She's not happy about it. Tony tells the others about his father standing him the night before for dinner. He's not surprised. Gibbs comes in and tells them they have a dead Naval lieutenant to investigate.

At the scene Tony is stunned to see his father there. Gibbs quickly tells Tony he can't be involved with the case.

The dead man is a millionaire real estate developer named Dean Massey. He's retired, but remains in the reserves so he can fly jets. He is divorced.

Gibbs interviews DiNozzo. He tells him he's in town to close a huge real estate development deal. DiNozzo found funding for the project and was due to receive a huge check. Massey was working on the deal with him and had threatened to screw DiNozzo out of his sizable finder's fee. He admits to Gibbs that he threatened to kill Massey. After leaving Massey's office last night he went to his hotel to do some drinking, meaning he has no alibi.

Ducky pulls some glass out of Massey's head. He tells Gibbs that Massey was killed between midnight and 2am, died elsewhere and was moved to the trunk. COD was blunt force trauma to the back of the head with a cylindrical object. Based on the blood test they know DiNozzo was very drunk at 2am last night and Ducky thinks it makes sense he'd have no memory of the evening.

Tony is able to talk his way past Dorneget, who is watching his father's door. His father tells him he honestly doesn't know if he killed Massey. DiNozzo said this was the "big one," a deal that could have provided for both of them. He had rented the Rolls to help seal the deal. Tony doesn't want his father to talk to anybody.

A JAG commander named Mosner stops by and tells the team she is prosecuting a case that may concern them. A pilot named Dennis was flying in formation with Massey. Dennis got into an accident and his radio officer died. The night before Massey told Mosner he had information Dennis's story about his plane having electrical issues was bogus.

Vance tells Gibbs he's leaning towards turning DiNozzo over to the FBI. Tony pops into the room and tells them about Mosner. Vance gives them 24 hours, but instructs Tony to stay away from the investigation.

Ziva and McGee are sent to Massey's office. There they speak with his company's lawyer, Hunt. He tells them that a strict interpretation of the contract with DiNozzo gave them the right to freeze-out him out, even though Hunt didn't want to do it. He shows them footage of the meeting, which ends with DiNozzo grabbing Massey by the throat.

Gibbs tells DiNozzo he's probably going to be transferred to a rough-looking detention center.

Gibbs meets with Dennis. Once they tell him about Massey going to Mosner he lawyers up.

Ziva meets with Massey's ex-wife. They weren't in contact any more, primarily because they didn't have kids. She made out well in the divorce and doesn't have any legal claim to his estate. She suggest Ziva go to his lawyer, Hunt, to find out who gets his money.

Abby and McGee sit in the Rolls. She's discovered that the car was driven far too many miles for DiNozzo's story that he went to the meeting and then straight to his hotel. Based on evidence she thinks Massey was killed with a bottle of vintage wine.

Hunt tells Ziva that all of Massey's money was in a trust that benefited the Navy and its charities.

Tony tries to wrestle a file away from McGee and get some information about his father's case. McGee tells him his father's room was clear. DiNozzo is going to stay at Gibbs' place to avoid a prison.

That night DiNozzo talks to Gibbs about his real estate deal. DiNozzo says he's surprised he doesn't remember anything, since he usually holds his liquor well. He was excited about finally being able to provide for Tony. Gibbs doesn't think Tony wants his money. Tony just wants his father.

DiNozzo provides Ducky with a urine sample for more testing.

Mosner stops by and says Dennis wants to make a deal about the plane crash. He was hot-dogging. Massey's Porsche has been found on a back road of the development he was working on with DiNozzo.

Tony tries to get information about his father from Abby. He asks about the wine bottle.

McGee and Ziva find car tracks and a broken wine bottle near Massey's car.

Dorneget and DiNozzo talk about father-son relationships. Tony stops by and asks whether he brought the "family bottle of wine" with him to D.C. It's an expensive bottle he purchased the year Tony was born and he'd planned to drink it with him to celebrate the deal. He tells Tony where he was going to take him, but isn't sure if he made it there or not.

Gibbs and Abby lay out the evidence to Vance, which includes Rolls tire tracks at the scene and DiNozzo's fingerprints on a piece of the bottle. Vance tells Gibbs to "book him."

Gibbs tells DiNozzo the FBI is on the way. Tony is nowhere to be found.

We see that Tony is at the pub where his father had planned to take him. The bartender remembers seeing his father the night before him. He had planned to get DiNozzo a cab but an attractive woman he picked up took him home. Tony asks for his surveillance footage.

Just as DiNozzo is being led away Abby comes running. She's found that DiNozzo's fingerprints were only on the barrel of the wine bottle and the neck was wiped clean. Also evidence of the date rape drug was in his system. Tony calls in and emails them a photo of the woman his father left the bar with. McGee recognizes her from Massey's office.

It turns out to be Hunt's assistant Linda. She tells Gibbs that she'd been seeing Hunt and had talked about marriage. Hunt told her that Massey was going to try and shaft him as well, and asked her to erase the video of their conversation. Hunt sees this happening and tries to run, but Gibbs grabs him.

Massey had found another lawyer to be the executor of his estate. This meant Hunt was going to lose seven figures in annual billing.

Tony stops by Gibbs' place and says his father stood him up again. He says that despite the way his father acts he really loves the guy, though he's never been able to tell him. DiNozzo pops his head out from the kitchen. He's going to stay in town for the Thanksgiving holiday to be with his son.

Production Code: 197
Summary: After a Navy Captain is murdered in his hotel room, the NCIS team has to find his pregnant companion and protect her from unknown assailants. Meanwhile, Jimmy brings his future father-in-law to work.

A man tries to check in to a hotel but the premiere suite is the only thing available. He doesn't care how much it is, he takes it. He goes upstairs in a rush and locks all the doors. He makes a call, telling someone he thinks they're clear and he's on his way down to get them. He opens the suite door and is met by two guns with silencers. He's shot repeatedly.

It's Christmas Eve at the office. Ziva and McGee are enjoying the Christmas card Tony got from Wendy, his former fiancée.

Palmer is anxiously awaiting the arrival of his soon to be father-in-law Ed, to whom he's giving a tour of NCIS. Brina thinks her father isn't a fan of his job.

McGee comes in with the festive body of the week. Navy Captain Jake Marsden was stationed in Charleston. The guns were different calibers and there's no fingerprint evidence.

Outside the hotel, Tony and McGee go over his car and find a Marine duffel bag with a bra inside. The room phone rings with a northern Maryland number. A woman answers, asking what happened. A woman asks if Gibbs killed him, but he says he's NCIS.

Back at the office, McGee sees that Marsden's outgoing call was his own cell phone. Palmer arrives with Ed (Larry Miller) and makes introductions. Gibbs talks Palmer up. Ed gives Gibbs a hard time about being a government worker and making his team work Christmas Eve.

The phone call to the hotel came from an outlet mall two hours away.

In the morgue, Ed shuts Palmer up to talk to Duckie. Duckie kicks them out. He shows Gibbs dried blood he found on Marsden's pants.

Gibbs finds Abby hiding from Ed in her lab. Abby goes over the outlet mall footage and finds a blonde woman on the phone. As she hung up, she told Gibbs if he was who he says, he'll find her. She flashed her shopping bag to the camera as she said it.

Gibbs, Ziva and Tony go to the outlet mall and meet up with a county deputy. Ziva and Gibbs check the dressing rooms and find their mystery woman. She's eight and a half weeks pregnant. She tells them that Jake wasn't the target, she is.

She's Marine Lt. Emma Reynolds. She doesn't know who's after her. She was stationed outside Kabul and met a nice local man named Amir and got pregnant. She forfeited two months pay and they sent her home. Then last week she noticed she was being followed by three separate SUVs, registered to the Department of Defense.

Jake Marsden was an old friend who was going to drive her to her parent's place in Ohio. The SUVs ran her and Jake off the road and she cut her hand in the crash. They went to the hotel and she waited in the car while he checked in. She doesn't know who she can trust.

Back in MTAC, McGee talks to the DOD and learns that Amir was killed in an IED explosion months ago. The guy denies the DOD is involved, but says he couldn't tell them if they were.

The snow is really coming down at the outlet mall. Abby finds that Amir was the sole male heir to an extremely land wealthy family in Afghanistan. McGee finds the DOD is trying to build a road through that land in Afghanistan and the baby could give them access to it.

McGee hears knocking from the other side of the lab and finds Ed and Palmer locked in Abby's office. She put them in timeout after Ed said girls with tattoos are easy. Ed checks again that Palmer knows there are jobs in the private sector where he could make twice as much and have better hours.

Tony reports the roads are closed. They notice no one has seen the deputy for a while. The head outside to the car, where a tough looking man comes around the corner holding a gun on the deputy. He demands Reynolds, but Gibbs, with gun drawn, says no way. Ziva sneaks up behind the man and he drops his gun. As Tony cuffs him he notices he's missing the tips of a few fingers. It's part of a Russian prison gang initiation.

Back at NCIS, Duckie finds Palmer sulking in the hallway. Palmer's bothered because Ed offered him a job at the funeral home, working with Brina, but he doesn't want to take it.

On a snowy road, Reynolds tries to process her situation. "Russian mercenaries want to take my unborn child because they believe he's the heir to land in Afghanistan?" she says.

As they're driving out in the middle of nowhere, the car sputters to a stall. Gibbs realizes the engine was sabotaged. They roll into a gas station.

Back in the office, McGee is irritated by Ed munching loudly. Tony has made it back alone, but they can't reach Gibbs. The fingerless man is wanted by Interpol. The cookies Ed is inhaling give Tony an idea.

Ziva and Gibbs look under the hood and see they have to do some wiring. They're taking shelter in a convenience store. Gibbs assures Reynolds it's OK if she's scared about being a mom.

Tony and the Russian hitman munch down on cookies. McGee asks questions and they say they see hesitation when they ask if he's following Reynolds. When they ask if he's working for Amir's tribe in Afghanistan he chokes on his cookie.

The only number stored on his prepaid cell phone was six digits long. McGee guesses it's a radio frequency.

Reynolds comes out of the bathroom in the garage and announces her water just broke.

Back in MTAC, Tony asks the DOD guy for help tracking the Russian hitmen. He says no.

McGee tracks the gunmen's radio frequency and hear them mention a gas station. They find one in the area of the radio signal and think Gibbs is holed up there in trouble.

When Tony and McGee leave to go find Gibbs, Ed mocks their efforts and earns a chewing out from Palmer who tells him he has to at least respect that NCIS agents put their lives on the line. He puts him in his place, telling him to sit down and shut up until he figures that out.

Back at the gas station, Reynolds's contractions are two minutes apart when Ziva looks out the window and sees two black SUVs pulling up.

Gibbs tells Ziva to handle the birth, but Reynolds wants his Marine support. Ziva takes her gun outside and stalks the Russians' car. She pulls one guy out of the driver side and whacks him in the face, knocking him out. The second SUV is empty.

She hears a noise. The second gunman pries open the convenience store door and sneaks in.

Gibbs is telling Reynolds to push when Ziva opens fire on the gunman.

Gibbs concentrates on delivering the baby in the back seat of the car while Ziva uses two guns to shoot at the gunman. They both run out of ammo and she charges him. He tosses her around the convenience store and gets him in a chokehold, as the sounds of crying come from the back seat of the car. It's a girl.

The next morning, Brina comes looking for her dad and Palmer, who have fallen asleep in a cubicle. They wake up and Ed is pleasantly surprised to hear everything worked out with the baby.

He understands now why NCIS agents put in the long hours and says he understands if Palmer doesn't want to leave.

Tony finds Gibbs in his basement working on a pink bike for Mike Franks's granddaughter. Tony went to Wendy's and sat outside for 20 minutes, but didn't go in. Gibbs thinks he made a mistake. Tony points out NCIS doesn't leave much room for family. He urges Tony not to be like him, to learn from it.

Gibbs invites Tony to Christmas dinner at Mike Frank's daughter-in-law's house. He told her last week that Tony would be coming.

Production Code: 198
Summary: The investigation into the murder of a Navy Commander leads the NCIS team to E.J. Barrett's whereabouts.

Open with two kids hearing a car accident. A man is dead at the wheel and has a bullet wound in his neck.

Around the office McGee comments about how "surly" Tony and Ziva have sounded recently. He thinks they have the holiday blues and both Tony and Ziva admit to having issues with their romantic lives. Ziva has been waiting seven weeks for a man to call her. Gibbs walks in to tell them a Naval officer is dead.

At the scene Commander James Barnsway's body is examined. He was shot twice, once in the neck and once in the chest. The shots appear to have been fired from a second vehicle.

The neighbor who called the police says she saw an SUV speeding away from the scene. She said a woman that wasn't Barnsway's wife got out of his vehicle and fled into the woods.

Barnsway's wife Cara is questioned. She tells them a female Navy connection of his recently called looking for help.

The phone that called Barnsway was an untraceable cell phone. Tony's ears perk up when Gibbs mentioned that Barnsway had been stationed in Naples.

Abby tells Gibbs that Barnsway's killer left no trace. But using the GPS in Barnsway's vehicle she traced him back to a motor lodge just outside of town.

The motor lodge manager admits that the woman who got the room paid cash and he didn't ask for ID. She signed in as "Belva Lockwood," which also interests Tony.

They use the motor lodge's security camera but can't find anything clear. They are able to find that the woman who left with Barnsway returned to the lodge just a half hour ago and then left again five minutes later. They guess she may have tried to find a ride from a trucker across the street. While Abby works on the image from the video, Gibbs & Co. learn that a woman in red just got a ride. They pull the rig over and see the passenger is (gasp!) E.J.

Tony is pretty angry that E.J. left. She says she didn't have any answers about Cade's killing and wasn't sure who to trust or who she might put in danger. She called Barnsway because she "needed a friend." They show her a picture of Stratton, the guy who killed Cade, but she says that's not who shot at her and Barnsway that morning.

E.J. gives Abby a description of the man who shot at her and Barnsway. While they wait to see if there is a hit Tony tells E.J. he doesn't understand why she didn't reach out. She says she was scared.

E.J.'s description connects them to former Navy SEAL Marcellus Dane. He faced court martial because of accepting bribes and was known to carry the same weapon that killed Barnsway. Gibbs orders Tony and E.J. to a safe house.

Gibbs finds Dane has been stabbed and thrown from a window. Gibbs says he has a good idea who would want them to see this just as we see Stratton lingering near the crime scene.

Gibbs asks Secretary Jarvis for a favor. He has a bead on Stratton and wants Jarvis to talk to Latham. He tells him about Stratton's attempts to kill his staff and says Latham needs to bring him in.

E.J. and Tony get settled in their safe house. She feels guilty about Barnsway's wife.

Jarvis and Gibbs meet with Latham. Gibbs shows Latham a picture of him with his team that includes Stratton. Latham says the man Gibbs is pointing to is actually called Cole, a Green Beret that he recruited into the Phantom program. Gibbs says it's the right guy, even if the name is different. Jarvis tells Latham to contact Stratton/Cole and tells him he'd like to speak with him. Gibbs mentions the safe house and leaves the room.

Ziva tells E.J. she won't be leaving anytime soon. She gives her some old emails from her mother after she disappeared. The two women discuss their future.

Latham meets with Stratton and tells him he's being asked to set him up. Latham tells him the location of where A.J. is being held, saying he wants him to clean up the loose end and leave. Stratton responds by stabbing him and sticking him on a bench "No loose ends. We gotta finish what we started."

Mallard tells Gibbs that Latham was killed the same way (and with the same knife) as Dane. Mallard says it will be difficult to locate a guy like Stratton.

While Tony puts together an assault rifle inside the safe house, we see Stratton loading a RPG. He fires it at an industrial gas tank destroying the building. Gibbs, Ziva and McGee spot Stratton and flush him into a huge FBI ambush. Stratton apologizes to Gibbs for his loss, telling him, "wrong place, wrong time." Gibbs says "got that right" and calls Tony to tell him it's over. Jarvis intentionally gave Latham the wrong safe house info, which he passed along to Stratton.

E.J. thanks Tony and leaves.

Gibbs sits with Stratton in the interrogation room. He shows him pictures of some of the terrorists he's killed and says "you're no better than them right now." Stratton asks Gibbs about killing innocent people and sings about Mexico.

Tony tells Ziva that the two of them have a lot in common with regard to having issues with the opposite sex. They look almost ready to kiss when her phone rings with a call from the guy who hasn't called her for weeks. He tells her to "say hello" and watches and she takes the call.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates the murder of a Navy lieutenant commander while dealing with her distraught husband. Meanwhile, Ziva ponders the future when Ray returns.

A couple checks out a loft apartment. The wife is skeptical, the husband loves it. The realtor shows them around and right to the dead woman lying on the floor. At the office, Tony pesters McGee to tell him the last time he had sex (Maxine, ten months ago). McGee surmises Tony's having the same issue. Ziva comes in angry, asking McGee to block a secure government number. She's dodging Ray's calls. Tony gets a calls, then McGee. Gibbs comes in to announce the body of the week – and that Ray already called him.

There are nine shell casings, but bullets were dug from the walls. She was hit three times. The victim is Lt. Commander Maya Burris, married with no children. Jimmy gets distracted talking to the realtor, Sandy, who he went to high school with. She died six or seven hours ago. Her ring finger is mangled and bloody.

A man comes in angry and screaming. He's Metro Detective Nick Burris, her husband.

At the office, his partner Detective Flowers says the Burris' had a good marriage. Maya was a naval attaché at various posts around the world. She came back to DC five days ago to see her husband. Her last mission in Egypt ended a month ago and they try to figure out what she's been working on.

Burris stumbles into the office drunk, demanding answers as Flowers tries to rein him in. Tony and Gibbs sit down with Flowers, who says he talked to his wife last yesterday afternoon. They were supposed to have dinner, but she didn't show. He tells Gibbs if they don't find the killer, he will.

In the morgue, Duckie reports there was no blood or fiber and they found traces of bleach. She also has wounds on her wrist, like a bracelet was yanked off after she died. Duckie thinks it was someone with knowledge of police procedures.

Tony tells McGee it's been two weeks. He's getting tired of the string of one night stands.

Gibbs arrives for Big Screen time. Burris's husband was the beneficiary of her life insurance. He recently spent $100,000 on a speed boat.

Burris's called her husband three hours before she died.

In the last month she made multiple flights from Egypt to Islamabad.

Gibbs visits Abby in the garage, where she's recreated the crime scene. The shots that went into the body don't match up with any of the holes on the wall from where the victim was lying. She found the killer was by the window and the body was moved. The killer was on a rooftop across the street from the loft.

Tony and Ziva check out the roof. Tony confesses he's spoken to Ray and asks what happened. She says he doesn't appreciate her, he stood her up for dinner. His excuse was that he got caught up with work. It reminded her of her father. Ziva looks across the street and sees someone in the crime scene.

They go to the apartment and find a hooded figure leaning over the spot where the body was found. The person runs and they give chase down a stairwell. Ziva tackles him. It's Detective Burris.

Back in NCIS interrogation, he says he was working the case. Gibbs asks about the speed boat. He says Maya bought it a month ago. He says they spent so much time apart that they cherished the time they had together. Ziva listens.

The team confirms Maya bought the boat.

They meet with her supervisor, U.S. Ambassador Ealy in MTAC. He says she went to Islamabad for briefings.

McGee finds photos from outside the U.S. Embassy in Islamabad of Maya arguing with a man. He's wearing a blue tooth and McGee traces the signal.

Nick Burris calls Tony for the third time. Tony tells Gibbs he'll handle him.

Tony goes to Nick's house and tries to reassure him they're working Maya's case. He turns over a piece of paper he found. It says Ray Cruz, DC office. Tony calls Ziva. She wants to talk to Ray alone.

Ziva meets Ray in the park. He says he worked with her on his last assignment. Ziva asks if Ray knows who Maya was traveling with.

Ray tries to apologize and begs for another chance. Ziva says it's too late and walks away. Ray says he loves her and drops to one knee. He takes out a ring and proposes.

Ziva looks around uncomfortably at the people staring, waiting for her response. She tells him to get up. He says he was going to propose at dinner. He put in for a desk job and wants to stay in town and have kids with her.

Back at the office, Tony asks how it went. He asks if Ray dropped to one knee. He knew. Ziva told him she had to think about it. Tony urges her to take a leap of faith.

Tony breaks the news to Gibbs, but Ziva says it's not official yet. It will be if it's right, Gibbs says.

Abby comes up to announce that she and McGee ID'd the phone ear piece as a unique for high security government lines. There are only 400 in the world, most in the Middle East. Maya's browser history showed searches for Saleh Revelutionary Corps, a paramilitary group.

The team heads to search Maya's boat. They find a small tackle box full of news clippings about the SRC. They think she was tracking them.

Back in Abby's lab, Maya's journals show she was working with a former colleague to take down the SRC. One entry says she shouldn't have gotten involved and things could turn ugly. She was threatened by a former colleague.

Abby was able to narrow down the cell signal to Barry Norton, a liaison to the Cairo Embassy, who was fired for associating with the SRC. He sold them government secrets.

They put out an alert for Norton's car.

Ziva gets off the phone with Ray. He wants to rent a jet and fly to Miami to tell his parents and she's seriously thinking about it. She tells Tony she saw how much Nick loves his wife and doesn't want to live with regrets.

They get word that Norton was killed in a car accident last night. They bring his car into the garage.

Abby finds Norton's breaks were tampered with. They confirm the SRC put a fatwah on Norton two weeks ago over an argument over money. They think Maya was collateral damage from the first failed hit on him.

They pull up the list of Norton's calls from Islamabad. Ziva recognizes a number. Gibbs follows but she says she has something to do.

Ziva goes to Abby and asks her to access her voice mails and texts from a month or two ago. She highlights a number and tells her to cross-reference with Norton's calls. Both calls came from Islamabad.

Ziva goes to meet Ray on the tarmac. She decks him in the face and says he has her answer.

He admits he accidentally killed Maya while aiming for Norton. Norton represented a serious security breach and Ray was supposed to get him in Islamabad but missed him. He resolved not to let him get away again. He just wants to move on from everything and go back to being the man Ziva fell in love with. Ziva tells him that man is gone. She leaves.

Gibbs picks her up. The CIA confirmed Ray violated orders by taking out Norton on US soil, his career is over.

Back at the office late at night, Ziva gets frustrated with her cel phone. Tony tells her it's OK to ask for help. He tells her not to blame herself, no one could have seen that coming. Ziva says she's content with her life. Tony asks if she's happy.

Nick joins them, asking who killed his wife. They tell him. Nick asks how long they've been a couple. He urges them to cherish each other.

Summary: While stopping by his usual diner for coffee, Gibbs finds himself in grave danger, prompting him to think about his past and the choices he made in his life.

Gibbs pulls up to his regular diner to get coffee. He knows the names of an elderly couple leaving the diner, and is very friendly to the waitress - seems he's a regular. A man, whose face we don't see, gets up from the counter and walks toward Gibbs, putting his hand in his pocket. He pulls out a gun.

Gibbs sees him and draws his own, telling him to put down the gun. Gibbs' life flashes in front of his eyes. In a flash of light, he sees the bullet suspended in mid-air. Mike Franks, his late mentor, walks up and flicks the bullet away. Gibbs father and the team are seated at a couple of booths. He also sees his old friend, Private Joan Matteson (deceased), who calls out joyfully to him. As Gibbs replies, a young version of himself passes by and goes to Matteson.

Franks tells Gibbs he shouldn't have hesitated and people want to show him what he's accomplished. "Jethro, this is your life we're talking about," Franks says.

Former NCIS Director Jenny Shepherd (Lauren Holly) is there. They give each other a poignant look. Gibbs picks up the menu, which only has steak, coffee, whiskey listed on it.

Franks tells Gibbs "people" want to give him closure, show him all the good he did. Ziva's dead terrorist brother Ari strolls by.

24 Hours Earlier At the office, Tony and Ziva are obsessing over the fact McGee switched his computer monitors. Gibbs arrives with the body of the week: a dead petty officer on the USS Gentry. It's been dry docked for weeks for repair.

Onboard, they check out the body in the control room. She has a gun in her hand. Ziva follows a blood trail to a nearby cargo bay. They find a man who has been shot. He's still alive, but out cold.

Back in the ethereal diner, Franks tells Gibbs he "earned" the playback. Gibbs protests that he was just doing his job. Ari is playing chess with Leon Vance at the counter. FBI Agent Farnell is there, too, he lifts his cup to acknowledge Gibbs.

Franks takes Gibbs back to the office, telling him one decision can change everything. Ducky walks by nodding to Gibbs with a muttered, "Jethro". At the office they talk about Kate. There's a picture of Tony with Kate (Sasha Alexander) on a desk.

Gibbs' flashes back to the day Ari shot Kate on a roof. Franks says "this time" Gibbs saw Ari and stopped him. If Kate hadn't died, things would be different. We see the scene, but this time Gibbs is able to call in air support and scare Ari off.

Tony comes to the hospital frantic from being undercover, worried he missed it. Abby and McGee, obviously a couple, calm him down before he takes off down the hall. The doctor shows him to a room where an exasperated Kate is waiting in a hospital bed. Tony says something about her looking "less fat" and then says "Oh, boy" to which the doctor replies, "Yes" and introduced Tony to his son. If Kate had lived, Ziva would have stayed Mossad.

Flash to Tony interrogating Ziva.

Franks tells Gibbs that there was more to the case yesterday than Gibbs saw coming.

In the office, they learn Petty Officer Janet McCaffrey had a spotless record but made two deposits over $30,000 in the last week.

The civilian is Peter Germaine and he's still in the ICU. He works for a ship building company that was just bought by a Hong Kong company. There are some security concerns about a foreign country doing work on US ships.

In the lab, Gibbs finds a shirtless Jimmy Palmer laying on a table and Abby is massaging his abs. Jimmy tells Gibbs that he pulled a muscle and that Abby was "Rolfing" him. He quickly leaves as Gibbs gives him The Stare. Abby tells Gibbs the two bullets in McCaffrey and one in Germaine came from the gun left in Germaine's hand. There was a partial print belonging to Michael Rose, a freelance systems analyst who does work with Navy intel. All three had clearance to be on board. Gibbs says, "Who knew Palmer had abs like that?" as he wanders out and Abby grins.

At the diner, a waitress serves Gibbs pie with chocolate sauce, just like his mom used to. He recognizes his mom Anne. She tells him she's proud of him. She says he gets to go home eventually. She tells him he could have been easier on his dad, it's hard raising a son. "Just ask Michael Rose," she says.

Back at the office, McGee says Michael Rose is a 42 year old divorced systems analyst facing foreclosure on his home. He has a 17 year old son named Stephen. Rose deposited $20,000 48 hours ago, his coworkers haven't seen him.

He made two calls to secure diplomatic lines in DC. Gibbs thinks he was calling the Chinese Embassy.

Back on the ship, Tony needles McGee until he tells him Vance offered him the head of the cyber crimes unit in Okinawa. Tony already knew, and says it's too good an opportunity to pass up. McGee finds his sincerity disconcerting. Tony tells him to trust his gut.

Ziva waits for Stephen Rose to get home. He swings his lacrosse stick at her, then explains his dad says he has to protect himself from the Chinese and they might have trouble.

Back at the diner, his mom tells Gibbs he hasn't made his mind up yet. The headline of a newspaper reads "NCIS Agent kills suspect". Gibbs hasn't pulled the trigger yet.

Dead NCIS Agent Riley McAlister joins Gibbs in a booth. He's there because Gibbs needs him, but Gibbs just thinks of him as a crook and a murderer. He calls Gibbs the same and reminds Gibbs of Mexico and Pedro Hernandez, the man Gibbs killed to avenge the deaths of his wife and daughter.

Gibbs imagines what would have happened if he hadn't killed Hernandez, but says he had to. If he hadn't, Abby wouldn't be carrying around the huge secret she has. He asks what would have happened to him if he hadn't.

24 Hours earlier Gibbs sits down with Stephen Rose, a nice honest kid. Gibbs tells him his dad is selling secrets to the Chinese, but Stephen says he just got pulled in with some bad people. His dad called last night and sounded scared.

Gibbs sees Pedro Hernandez sitting down the diner counter and fixates on him. Franks says if Gibbs hadn't shot him, it would have eaten Gibbs up.

Cut to fat out of shape Gibbs in his basement, swilling from a bottle. The team comes to check on him, they haven't seen him in months. He hasn't been the NCIS boss in years. The boat is back in the basement. He just wants to be left alone. He's surly. Abby tells him Kate had her baby (this time a girl) and named her Kelly, Gibbs' dead daughter's name. He doesn't want them to stay. Abby and McGee are together (sensing a pattern here ;)).

Duckie tells him to stop thinking about himself and think about the ones who love him. He kicks them out, saying he doesn't want their pity. Duckie asks, "Then what do you want?"

Back in the diner, Franks tells him folks do the wrong things for the right reasons and maybe Gibbs isn't so different from Michael Rose.

Back on the ship, Gibbs, McGee, Tony and Stephen Rose look for Michael. A search dog barks at a storage room door. Stephan talks to his dad, saying they just want to help.

Michael comes out with his hands up.

Gibbs picks a bullet up off the diner floor. He sees his daughter Kelly, she takes him to his late wife. She tells him they've been waiting for him. Kelly is drawing a picture of the three of them.

Back in interrogation, Gibbs tells Rose that Germaine just died in ICU. Rose says he thought it would be easy, they had a plan. Germaine had the connection with the Chinese and Rose was supposed to do the download, but he changed his mind, worrying about his honor and the lives he'd be putting at risk. He says he tried to call the Chinese embassy to back out, but when he went to the ship that night to erase the hard drive, they were already there. He claims he killed them in self-defense. He needed the money to save his family.

Back in the diner, Gibbs tells his wife he shouldn't have let her testify and he should have known better. Kelly tells him it wasn't his decision and his wife says if they hadn't died, he wouldn't have joined NIS. If they hadn't died, he would have stayed a Marine and they would have been on the other side of the situation.

At the Gibbs' house, he's overseas and there's a knock at the door. His wife and daughter see Marines in dress uniforms.

In the diner, his wife tells him he doesn't get it both ways.

Back at NCIS, Gibbs tells Stephen to head home. Stephen asks him for help, saying his dad is just trying to do what's right. Gibbs says killing two people wasn't right. Stephen sees he's not going to help him.

At the diner, from the moment Gibbs first walks in. He sits down for coffee.

The gunman gets up and walks toward him. He pulls the gun and Gibbs draws his, but he pauses. Stephen is the shooter. He fires, grazing Gibbs in the shoulder. Gibbs puts his gun down and Stephen lowers his. Two men from the diner tackle Stephen. Stephen is weeping and telling Gibbs that he's so sorry.

Gibbs hears Mike Franks voice, saying that apparently Gibbs isn't finished yet. He looks over to a booth and sees what looks like the back of Mike Franks, when he looks again - no one is there.

Back at the office, McGee announces he's not talking the job in Okinawa, he thinks he has more to do here. Tony and Ziva are pleased that he is staying.

Gibbs comes in announcing a dead Marine in DC. He's all healed and ready to head out. As the team members try to get him to take it easy after the previous days shooting, Gibbs tells them, "My choice, I wouldn't have it any other way" He pauses and looks back at the office for a long moment, then smiles and fade to black.

Summary: When a Navy captain is found dead and dressed in a weird costume under his uniform, the NCIS team comes upon a secret society consisting of real-life superheroes, and they have to track down the villain in the story with the help of Tony's ex-fiance.

A man in a flower shop, takes flower orders from voice mail messages. A marine comes in wanting to place an order, but waits for the man behind the counter, Dexter Murphy, to listen to the last one. It's a Hispanic voice ordering flowers for a funeral and asking Murphy if he thought he'd get away with it. "I told you I'd get you when you least expect it," the message says. Two shots ring out, one hits the Marine, the other takes out Murphy.

At the office, Ziva comes in to work cheesed off that she got a speeding ticket – going 80 in a 40 mph. Gibbs comes in with the body of the week: a dead Navy captain.

At the flower shop, the safe is picked. There are chewed fingernails on the floor. Palmer isn't there because Brina called, their wedding caterer went out of business. Murphy and Capt. Jack Wallace are the victims. Duckie unbuttons the captain's shirt and finds faux chain mail with an emblem of a protractor and a mallet. Tony recognizes it.

Back at the office, McGee says Wallace was a "Real Life Superhero", they do neighborhood watches and fundraising. Wallace went by "Captain Code" and his specialty was building code violations. Murphy was another member, known by "Solanum".

Leon Vance meets with a Miss Miller, a reporter. She and Gibbs go way back. Wallace called her two days ago, he ran a classified program out of the Department of Energy, securing rogue nuclear materials. There's big demand for old Soviet uranium. She's agreed to hold off on her story as long as Gibbs keeps her in the loop.

Down in Abby's lab, she tells Tony that Wallace's insignia was also in a video online six months ago, in which masked Wallace and Murphy broke up a bar fight. She hasn't been able to ID the person who shot the video.

Tony runs into Miller in the hall, Gibbs assigned her to Tony. He knows her. She's Wendy his ex-fiancee, the one who invited him to the Christmas brunch he bailed on.

Tony meets with her in a conference room, she claims not to know why Wallace was calling. She was a teacher when he knew her. They agree it's nice to see each other. Tony finds Ziva and McGee listening at the door. Wendy knows a trust fund baby named Clarence Tobett shot the fight video.

Tony and Ziva visit the Tobett mansion, where he's boxing with his butler, a former army man. Clarence is "ICU". He was on "bait patrol" when he shot the video, waiting in a bad area for trouble to start.

Clarence's dad Wayne (Ray Wise) comes in and chews out his son for being useless. Clarence has the partial license plate of the guy in the bar fight. "Captain Code" told him he was on to something.

In the morgue, Duckie finds Wallace had lots of healed wounds from street fighting. His wife died in childbirth and his daughter died when a balcony collapsed on her (thus the building code violation specialty).

Duckie wonders why Gibbs would pair Tony with Wendy.

Abby interrupts, reporting she has DNA from the fingernails. It belongs to Felix Quintero, a smalltime hood who's now a locksmith. His license plate matches the partial from the bar fight video.

Tony drives angry with Ziva. He notices they're being followed. He and Ziva get out and confront Wendy. She gets out of her car to talk to them and her hood politely belches fire. Later, they find a rudimentary bomb under her hood.

In the car back in the lab, they find past references to Captain Wallace in her notes. She lied to them.

Vance, Gibbs and Tony confront her. He was a source for her expose on wasteful military spending. She still claims she doesn't know why Wallace called this time.

Tony escorts her to her house. He's angry because he found out from her notes that she was working on a story about the Navy when she invited him to Christmas brunch. They hadn't spoken in nine years, since their engagement ended. She admits she wanted to pump him for information.

They size each other up. She used to be sweet and innocent and he used to be a hopeless romantic. They jump on each other and start making out, but are quickly interrupted by her young son, Fred, coming home with his nanny.

Wendy goes to pack and Tony tries to make conversation with Fred, asking him about Harry Potter. His favorite is the one where "Harry wasn't kissing my mom." Fred tells Tony not to let it happen again.

Tony meets McGee on a stakeout for Quintero. Tony says he and Wendy had a bad break up. They notice a woman standing in front of the building they're watching. Tony goes to talk to her and she runs away, into an alley. She ducks and throws off her trench coat, revealing a superhero unitard. She maces them as three other Real Life Superheroes come out, including Felix Quintero.

Tony and McGee impound the van and bring the RLS back to NCIS. The woman is calling herself "Spandaxia" and she's there with "Whip Cord" and "Bolt Cutter". Abby comes, wanting a picture with them.

Tony finds Wendy up in the observation room with Ziva, swapping stories.

Gibbs sits down with Felix, who left the threatening voice mail. He says Captain Code hired him to fake the attack and not even ICU, the camera man, knew it. They wanted publicity. He left the message because he never got paid for faking the attack and broke into the safe after they were dead to get his payment.

They confirm Felix's alibi.

Gibbs wants to focus on Wendy and why Wallace wanted to talk to her.

Tony visits Duckie in the lab and gets some psychoanalysis about how he keeps chasing the wrong woman because he never put everything with Wendy behind him.

Wendy broke off the engagement the night before the wedding and he didn't take it well. They haven't spoken since that night. Tony knows Gibbs set him up to try to deal with it. Duckie heard from other coroners who also had recent murders of Real Life Superheros.

There are four victims in three crime scenes. Lord of Karma was shot trying to stop a burglary and Fever Blister was killed trying to stop a carjacking.

The same cell phone shows up in each neighborhood where the murder took place. It belongs to Clarence Tobett. But Gibbs doesn't think he's guilty.

Gibbs, Ziva and Tony go to the Tobett's and find Clarence's dad yelling at him for wanting to go out dressed up like a super hero as he practices his moves. They tell the Tobetts and Tom, the butler, that they found the murderer's cell phone was at the crime scenes. Ziva dials it and Tom's phone rings. It's a company phone from Clarence's dad. Tom starts to run, but Clarence knocks him out cold.

Back at NCIS, they tell Vance that Wayne Tobett was a slum lord who bought properties in crime ridden areas. The super heroes drove down crime and property values rose, which was the last thing he wanted. They tried to kill the superheroes so crime would go back up and they could buy cheap.

Wendy wrote a story about DC real estate in high crime areas and Wayne worried she'd connect the super hero dots. Vance says good job, calling Gibbs "Cupid".

Tony finds Wendy. She tells him she invited him to Christmas brunch not for information but because she wanted to see him. He wants to know why she broke it off at the last minute. She thinks he's sad and lonely. She urges him to tell "her" how he feels, "whoever she is." He says that's not going to happen and reiterates. She left because she wasn't ready to meet the one and he was it. She sent him the invitation because she wasn't ready before, but she is now.

Summary: When a Navy reservist is found dead, the NCIS team has to find out if it is a suicide case, as Gibbs goes head to head with Dr. Samantha Ryan of the PSyOps Division. Meanwhile, Tony fights with accounting after learning about McGee's paycheck.

A two-man team breaks into a house. They cut the phone line so the alarm won't work. They creep through the house and hear someone upstairs. The intruders have guns. They're creeping up the stairs when all of a sudden a body comes over the railing. It's a dead man, strung up by his neck. One intruder is so startled he fires into the body.

At the office, Tony is excited it's payday. He realizes he has McGee's statement and McGee makes $253 a week more than him. McGee says it's all about withholding.

Gibbs comes in with the body of the week: a reservist in Arlington. At the scene, the intruders are in cuffs for breaking and entering. They didn't steal anything. The victim is Dr. Robert Banks, a psychologist with high level clearance at the Pentagon. Dr. Rachel Cranston (Kate's sister) comes to the scene, she was the victim's doctor.

She tells Gibbs she's sure he didn't kill himself.

She spoke to the victim several times last night. He was consulting on a special project for the Pentagon, in the PsyOps division.

She thinks they fabricated prescriptions in his name to make him look bad. He lived for his daughter and wouldn't have killed himself because of her.

Back at NCIS, his teenage daughter Amber blames her mom because they got divorced.

He had an additional life insurance policy for $4 million that goes to his wife and daughter. It had an exclusion clause for suicide. It appears to be news to the ex-wife.

A woman (Jamie Lee Curtis) comes to see Tony and he assumes she's there about the paycheck. She thinks there are underlying feelings of inadequacies between him and McGee. He figures out she's not from accounting. She's Dr. Samantha Ryan from the Department of Defense, head of PsyOps.

Vance joins them, Ryan knows him and flirts a little.

Vance talks to Gibbs, he got a call from Sec Nav wanting to know why NCIS is working a PsyOps case. Gibbs says it's theirs because the victim was a reservist.

He asks how Vance knows Dr. Ryan and he plays coy, saying they "spent time together" at the war college. He warns Gibbs that she's inquisitive.

Gibbs joins Drs. Ryan and Cranston staring each other down. They went to school together and both slept with Dr. Banks. Cranston tells Ryan "they" think Banks was killed because of a PsyOps mission.

Ryan refuses to answer any questions with Cranston there, but tells Gibbs that Banks was working on a PsyOps assignment with a man named Brian Mitchell.

Ziva and Tony visit Mitchell, who can't believe he wasn't informed about Banks's death. Mitchell is freaked out by the PsyOps work and has asked to be reassigned. He says Banks was going through a rough divorce and ugly custody battle.

Tony shows him a court order allowing Mitchell to talk about what they were working on. They were looking into former Marine Sgt. Kyle Baxter, who received a negative discharge two months ago because of a negative psych eval written by Dr. Banks.

In the morgue, Duckie is trying to figure out whether Banks died from hanging or the bullet. He says it's was definitely a suicide, but Duckie says he only had about six months to live because of a kidney and liver condition.

In the lab, Abby tells Gibbs that someone switched out Banks's prescriptions for dangerous psychotropic drugs that were wrecking his kidneys and liver.

Gibbs pays Dr. Ryan a visit and they instantly start sizing each other up. Ross her assistant joins them with the personnel list for the ops Banks was working on. He hands Gibbs a flash drive, but Gibbs prefers paper.

Back at the office, McGee scans electromagnetic field emitters they found in Banks' house, which can cause interference with sleep and cause migraines.

Gibbs brings in personnel files. He's suspicious of them, but wants McGee to go through them anyway.

They found a mission file in Banks's safe. Gibbs looks at it and tears out a page. He wants McGee to track the gizmos back to PsyOps. He unplugs their computers and insists on paper from here on.

Ziva and McGee hit the archives.

Gibbs goes to a psychology ball and interrupts Dr. Ryan. As Gibbs is pulling her aside, her assistant Ross checks that everything is OK. Dr. Ryan leads Gibbs into the women's room to talk.

He reads from the page he tore out, which suggests "removal of threats using drugs and alternative methods". He mentions driving a sane person to suicide using pills and sleep deprivation. She cautions him to be careful with what he's suggesting. She claims to know nothing about Banks' death.

Rachel Cranston rinds Gibbs working on a rocking chair in his basement. She confesses she left a few details out. Banks mentioned a sensitive national security issue, an operation. She got the sense someone wanted to keep him from talking.

McGee calls to report they've found nothing in the personnel files Ryan gave them. Gibbs suggests they find Kyle Baxter, but he's missing. Gibbs' phone fuzzes out and he gets suspicious. He cranks up a handheld radio and uses it to sweep the room for bugs. He finds one in his woodworking tools. He opens it up and speaks into it: "Good night, Ryan, sleep tight." He smashes it.

At the archives, they tell Gibbs that Baxter was handpicked by Banks for PsyOps then kicked out by him. Gibbs wants info on the bug he found, but without using the computer. McGee's cell phone beeps, signaling that Baxter is getting a call.

Tony and Ziva head to the location, but find assistant Ross waiting for them. He claims Baxter was just there and left his phone to see if NCIS was tracking him. He puts a matchbook on the table and walks away. It has the name James Drenden written in it.

Gibbs rattles Dr. Ryan by showing up where her son goes to school. He points out it's PsyOps 101 to approach people at their most vulnerable.

Cut to Dr. Ryan yelling at Vance in his office as Gibbs listens, bemused. He says it's fairplay given that she bugged his house. She doesn't deny it. They want to know about the operation Banks mentioned to Dr. Cranston. It was to use PsyOps techniques to destabilize Iranian nuclear scientists before they could build a bomb.

It's possible the Iranians got wind of it and got Dr. Banks back. She offers to do whatever she can to help.

In the lab, Abby cracks Dr. Banks' laptop and finds someone hacked it before she did, buying stocks in his name, draining his bank account, buying things online, hacking his email. If he Googled something, he got misinformation. His entire reality was being manipulated by someone in Mexico, a resort in Cancun – where the matchbook was from. They have surveillance showing Baxter.

McGee pulls up James Drenden, Baxter's alias. He came back from Mexico two months ago. He's still using the same alias as a bartender in town.

Cut to Gibbs talking to Baxter, who is charming and aloof. He says he's being framed by PsyOps as the fall guy. He says he never left his phone or the matchbook. He gives Gibbs a number to call and ask for Simon.

Cut to Vance and Gibbs in MTAC talking to a man on a beach in a cowboy hat, who says Baxter was the best CI they ever had. He's been undercover with the DEA for the past 12 months.

Ryan shows up at Gibbs door with tapes of Dr. Cranston's sessions with Banks. In a round about way she says she had to mislead him about Baxter to protect her mission, just following rules.

Gibbs sites his own: "Rule 42: Don't ever accept an apology from someone who just sucker punched you." "I didn't apologize," she says.

She makes a choked up plea to Gibbs to leave her son out of it. He says OK. He asks her who with her knowledge could have killed Banks. She says whoever did it lost sight of who they are and what they do. She doesn't have a name, but wishes him luck. She walks out, but leaves her cell phone.

In the office the next day, he gives it to McGee to work on. He locates the calls from PsyOps and crosses them against calls to Banks from the past month. There's just one: Brian Mitchell, the PsyOps liason. All the texts have been erased.

Gibbs tells Tony to dial both numbers three times and hang up. Gibbs leaves and Vance explains it's an old spycraft trick to signal someone to show up at a predetermined location, so novice it might work.

Cut to Brian Mitchell meeting Dr. Banks' daughter Amanda in the park. She says she'll never take the fall for him killing her dad, but he did it like she said, so they could be together. She wants just her dad's life insurance policy.

Gibbs comes out and arrests them.

Back at NCIS, Dr. Cranston blames herself for not seeing it was his daughter. She thought Amanda was another broken teenager caught up in an ugly divorce.

Tony finally gets a visit from accounts payable. Due to a clerical error, McGee was getting overpaid. But unfortunately, they screwed up Tony's withholdings and he owes more than $2,000.

Home asleep on the couch late at night, Gibbs is woken up by Dr. Ryan. It's 4 a.m. She thanks Gibbs for figuring out what happened to Dr. Banks. She says he has a gift for making people feel safe. She wants breakfast now. He knows a diner that's open 24 hours. He asks if she's asking him out on a date. "It's the middle of the night, Agent Gibbs – you tell me," she says.

Summary: When a Chief Petty Officer with top-secret clearance to a Naval research laboratory is murdered, the investigation leads the NCIS team to an international arms dealer. Meanwhile, a probationary agent tries to impress Gibbs hoping to join his team.

Alan Katzenbach, a lawyer, waits for Gibbs with his client, a chief petty officer named Leland Wiley. Wiley was busted for drugs and wants to trade his info – which he says is about national security. It concerns Agah Bayar, the arms dealer. Gibbs is interested. Wiley comes over to talk, but grabs his heart and drops to the ground.

Back at work, in the morgue, Palmer is missing because Breena summoned him to pick a wedding font for the invites. Wiley died of a heart attack from a rapid heartbeat. He had a pacemaker to correct his slow heartbeat. Duckie wonders if the pacemaker malfunctioned.

Tony comes to work and notices Ziva pacing. She's memorizing a speech for a high school career day she's speaking at. Probationary Agent Ned Dorneget comes up from evidence to get Tony's signature for their files. Tony hems and haws so McGee intercedes and artfully forges Tony's signature, which he's apparently been doing for years.

Gibbs comes for the update on the body of the week. Wiley had top security clearance and his workstation is now locked down. They haven't been able to connect him to Bayar yet.

Abby calls Gibbs to the lab. She tells him Wiley's pacemaker was linked into a computer to monitor it. Someone hacked in and jacked his heart rate up to 400 beats per minute. "Somebody murdered Wiley by remote control," she says.

Back in the office, Ziva recaps that Wiley used to be stationed on a nuclear submarine before he got his pacemaker and desk job. Tony comes from Wiley's cardiologist, who saw Wiley two weeks ago and said everything was fine. The monitor logs were normal.

Gibbs visits Vance. Vance checked with other agencies to see if they were looking into Bayar and got stonewalled. He mentions his wife is trying to get him to take a vacation, and Gibbs urges him to do it.

Abby and McGee track the hack in her lab. Dorneget drops by to pick up the gloves he left at Abby's house last night. She calls him "Dorny" and makes McGee jealous. Dorneget wants advice for getting on Gibbs' good side. McGee urges him to be a step ahead.

Tony and Ziva search Wiley's apartment and amid all the junk and trash they find a fancy watch. They also find an envelope full of cash.

Gibbs brings Wiley's lawyer Katzenbach up to Vance's office to try to get him to talk. Katzenbach claims not to know what info Wiley had. He met Wiley yesterday.

Dorneget brings a cup of coffee for Gibbs and signs for the 40 grand in cash in Wiley's apartment. Gibbs trashes the coffee when he sees it's not from the coffee cart. McGee pulls up footage of Agah Bayar passing through customs at Dulles three days ago from Zurich.

Vance reports that Wiley's team found that he'd accessed top secret stealth communications – not something he was working on. He transferred it to a flash drive. In enemy hands, it would make all US stealth inventory worthless.

Ziva finds footage of Bayar checking into a hotel and leaving with a hot red head. Ziva is sure she's a call girl.

McGee reports the signal that screwed with Wiley's pacemaker was routed through a TV satellite and NASA ground antenna in the Mojave Desert. Ziva has a NASA friend tracking it.

They get surveillance footage of Bayar recently going to the Turkish embassy.

Gibbs heads to tech services.

Cut to Gibbs waiting for Bayar outside of the embassy. Bayar assures Gibbs he's just a businessman, but Gibbs isn't buying it. He lets Bayar know they're watching him and are going to "take him down". They face off, squinty-eyed guy-style. Bayar gets into his Astin Martin and drives off.

Gibbs calls McGee, who watches the progress of the tracking device he just put on Bayar's car.

Abby finds the super hot girl is Ava Baransky, a fashion model who flew in from London two hours before Bayar. They're staying at the same hotel.

Dorneget runs into Gibbs in the elevator and forgets to push his floor button. Gibbs also points out his fly is open.

McGee shows Gibbs footage of Bayar leaving a restaurant recently with Ava, followed a short time later by Wiley.

Ziva reports Ava Baransky checked out of the hotel early. Tony fights for the chance to go through her left behind luggage.

Gibbs and McGee head to the tracking location for Bayar's car and are walking toward the restaurant when Defense Intelligence Agency George Roca intercepts them. Roca saw Gibbs talk to Bayar earlier. The DIA has him under surveillance and they tell Gibbs to back off, saying Gibbs doesn't have the need to know what they're working on.

Back in the office, Ziva reports Ava Baransky has been stopped at the Philly airport. Tony offers to go get her, but Gibbs tells Ziva to go. She tells him about her high school speaking engagement. Gibbs looks around and calls for Dorneget. He sends him with McGee.

Vance comes from speaking with Sec-Nav, who reports NCIS won't be let into the DIA operation.

On the ride, McGee tells Dorneget that Gibbs is testing him. He tells him about Gibbs' many rules. He tells Dorneget just to back him up when they get there. Dorneget realizes he forgot his gun.

Abby hears from her NASA friend, a 16 year old genius she met at a Mensa retreat last summer. Colin followed the signal that hacked Wiley's pacemaker and found it originated from a smart phone in DC belonging to Michael Reardon, a high school dropout who enlisted in the army, then got booted and went to work for a private military company, from which he got fired.

At the Philly airport, Dorneget flashes his badge upside down. Ava joins them. She tells them Bayar woke her up this morning and told her a business deal he'd been working on had gone bad and suggested she leave the country.

McGee signs for her stuff, including passport and wallet.

Gibbs, Ziva and Tony go to Reardon's house. Ziva says her speaking engagement went great. Reardon runs out the back door and Tony chases him, but Reardon is really fast. He hurdles construction blockades and does some almost parkour running away, until he runs into Gibbs' Chevy.

McGee and Dorneget drive back to DC. Dorneget asks how she met Bayar, she says it was on a photo shoot in Vienna. When she got back to London he'd sent flowers and a ticket to DC. Dorneget asks if she knows what Bayar does for a living. McGee cuts her off, saying they'll get into it back at NCIS.

Ava flirts with Dorneget in the rearview mirror.

Back in the morgue, Duckie examines Reardon and announces he has a broken collar bone. Gibbs drags him over to see Wiley's dead body. Reardon claims he doesn't know who Agah Bayar is. Gibbs and Tony threaten him with morgue implements. He says some Russian chick hired him.

Baransky is a Russian name.

Dorneget stops at a gas station. They let Ava out and let her take her purse to the bathroom. Dorneget goes with her to check the bathroom.

In MTAC, Gibbs talks to Inspector Challis from MI5. They've been watching Ava for years. Her mother was English, her father was Russian and she visited him recently. Gibbs and Vance are surprised to hear that the DIA asked MI5 to unflag her passport and let her into the US. Challis warns them she's skilled in martial arts.

Agah Bayar is the middleman, Baranksy is the client.

Tony calls Gibbs and tells him Baransky is now the suspect and should be considered dangerous. McGee goes to look for Dorneget and finds him handcuffed in the women's room. Baranksy is gone. McGee blames Dorneget for being distracted by Baranksy's beauty, but Dorneget protests that he's gay.

Gibbs calls for McGee, who steels himself to fess up. But Gibbs tells McGee to apologize to her and let her go. McGee and Dorneget are off the hook.

Vance fills Gibbs in: the stealth technology stolen by Wiley and sold through Bayar was all part of a DIA sting of dis-information for the Russians. Baransky has the info on a flash drive disguised as a lipstick.

The DIA used Wiley because they knew about his habit and figured he'd bite on Bayar for the money, they didn't figure Wiley would get busted and cough up Bayar to NCIS, or that Baransky would have Reardon kill him.

Vance tells Gibbs he can't tell his team. It's still need to know. Vance wants to know how Wiley and Agah Bayar know each other.

McGee and Dorneget drive back to NCIS, feeling like they dodged a bullet. McGee says he won't tell anyone, but won't lie if he's asked.

Back in the office, Tony is bothered that they let Ava Baranksy go without him getting to meet her.

When Dorneget comes back, Tony peppers him for information on Ava. Tony is tantalized.

Later that night, Bayar is out to dinner by himself, finishing his wine when Gibbs joins him. Gibbs asks how Bayar knew Wiley could be bought. Bayar says he got lucky, he got paid from both sides. The Russians wanted the info and the US wanted to give them bad info so they needed Bayar to make it seem legit. "So we're playing for the same time," Bayar says. "This time," Gibbs says.

Summary: Following a leak of classified information, the Secretary of the Navy partners NCIS with PsyOps to solve the mysterious case.

Around a conference table at a steel company, the suits are nervous about losing a Naval contract. The president and CEO of Wickes Steel and Shipbuilding goes to give a speech about the company's role in building ships for the Navy.

He rehearses and is joined by Sec-Nav Clayton Jarvis, an old school buddy. Tony and Gibbs are there doing security. They notice too late a man carrying tablecloths in front of his face. He pulls out a gun and shoots Jarvis in the chest. The shooter runs out the door.

At NCIS, Ziva is suspicious that Vance, Gibbs and Tony are all gone. She doesn't believe Tony's story about being on personal security for Jarvis.

Back at the ballroom, Tony explains to Wickes that they're trying to keep the investigation closed, telling everyone who was there not to say anything. Vance joins and reports Jarvis doesn't look good. Gibbs orders Wickes brought back to HQ.

Gibbs and Vance go to the hospital, where the head of Psyops Samantha Ryan (Jamie Lee Curtis), is cheerfully waiting for them with the shooter, her lead investigator Tyler Elliot (Sean Astin). It's a sting. Jarvis is fine.

Back at NCIS, Ziva and McGee stalk Tony for information. In MTAC, Jarvis explains the sting on Phillips Wickes, a close personal friend.

A week ago, a page from a classified file appeared online. The same day, Jarvis got a demand for a halt to the Navy's green initiative to build all new subs and ships with new lighter materials. If Jarvis refuses to go along, the person has threatened to release more pages.

The file was lifted from the Atlantic Undersea Test and Evaluation Center, where military technology is tested. The file could show the weaknesses of every port on the eastern seaboard.

The backmail message was sent from Wickes Steel, which lost a big contract. Samantha Ryan explains that seeing his personal friend shot will make him ask his people why they shot Jarvis.

Ryan wants to prompt Gibbs with what to say in interrogation. She convinces him by reminding him about how she guessed he likes powdered sugar instead of syrup on his pancakes at their recent breakfast.

In interrogation, Gibbs follows her prompts, asking Wickes how many people in his company knew about the speech. She specifically wants to see how Wickes reacts to mention of AUTEK. Gibbs goes along, but gets frustrated, taking out his earpiece. He blocks the camera as he asks about AUTEK.

Wickes tells him about a former employee named Lawrence Ridgeway who Wickes recently had to let go. He lost thousands in company stock and will lose his pension if Wickes goes under. Ridgeway doesn't have the computer skills to pull off the hack.

Ziva sees Gibbs smile at Ryan and thinks he seems happy.

Elliot and Ziva go to Ridgeway's house and see him dead inside. He's been dead a few days.

Back in the morgue, Duckie tells Gibbs and Ryan that Ridgeway died about 72 hours ago, before they started the Wickes operation.

Ryan starts talking to Ridgeway's corpse, asking why he was about to paint his living room. She deduces he wasn't involved, but knew something.

In Abby's lab, she shows she mapped the bullet back to the shooter.

On the way out of the lab, Ryan tells Gibbs he's grumpy because he needs more sex.

In the office, they report Wickes has contacted three people. Ronald Ostrowski and VP Frank Stratner and another guy.

Gibbs wants access to Ridgeway's redacted Wickes report.

At the Pentagon, Ryan thinks he eliminated the last connection between his company and AUTEK. Gibbs asks about her son and she shows him a drawing he did years ago of he and his mom on a boat.

McGee calls, he traced the hack back to a government encryption specialist named Amanda Baylor. She works in the Iron Crypt, a locked down facility where she's not supposed to leave for 72 hours. Ryan flirts her way in and they find the room empty. The computers are being run remotely. Gibbs looks into the webcam. "Amanda Baylor, are you there?" The system shuts down.

Back at the office, Abby shows Ryan and Gibbs a map of AUTEK in the Bermuda Triangle. They think they're running cables down thousands of feet. She traced the bullet back to a rare hunting rifle.

Ryan and Gibbs go talk to Wickes at his mansion, with Ryan posing as the Secretary's public affairs officer. Gibbs takes a call, relaying that Jarvis isn't going to make it. Wickes takes in the news, glancing at a photo on his desk.

Back at the office, the second page of the file has been leaked, with a list of all the ports in the file. Ryan shows Jarvis the photo of him and Wickes that Wickes had on his desk. She noticed him look at it when Wickes heard about the hunting rifle. The picture was taken on a hunting trip. Ryan thinks the glance at the photo was a tell.

They bring Wickes into interrogation. Jarvis walks in and tells Wickes his people think he's blackmailing Jarvis. Watching from the observation room, Ryan believes Wickes.

Back in Ryan's office, Gibbs tells her Wickes signed a non-disclosure agreement. She thinks Gibbs wants to gloat because he thought Wickes was innocent from the get go. Ryan is rattled that she was wrong.

They get Ridgeway's AUTEK reports without the redactions. In the late 70s he was paid to keep quiet about a classified technology he accidentally saw at AUTEK. He was paid $500,000, but the money came from a pool that's been accruing interest. There's now $327 million in it.

Upstairs, McGee finds multiple hacks into the back account in recent weeks. They think the blackmail was a distraction. McGee sees Baylor attempting a hack and tracks her location.

Ziva and Tony head there, a van on the side of the road. She's unshowered and stinky. She says someone hired her through Wickes, but she doesn't know who.

Down in the garage, McGee brings Abby Baylor's computer. Gibbs comes down and gets a brainstorm.

He takes the photo to Jarvis, asking who took the picture. That was the tell. Carl Dalton, Wickes' half brother, in house counsel for Wickes Steel took it.

Back at Wickes' mansion, Carl arrives. Gibbs asks him if he killed Lawrence Ridgeway. Carl apologizes to Wickes, saying it's his job to look out for the family. Ridgeway told him about the account and he wanted it to save the company.

In Gibbs' living room, he and Ryan share a beer after steaks. He tells her to relax and stop running. She kisses him, then says she has to go. Gibbs tells her he can help her with her ex.

She's still doubting herself after being wrong about Wickes. He reminds her she was right about the tell. She tells him she wants to slow down and see people around her, but she's not sure if she can. "I'm here, doc," Gibbs says. "I know," she says. Gibbs cleans up after she leaves and finds she's drawn him a boat.

Summary: Director Vance's brother-in-law is the lead suspect when Gibbs and the NCIS team investigate the murder of a petty officer.

A petty officer leads his very drunk fellow officer to the car and they notice their shipmate lying in the street. They turn him over and see he's dead.

In the office, Tony is being silent, claiming he's finding "deep calm." McGee and Ziva assume he's sick. But he's pouring his over last year's performance appraisal review. Gibbs said DiNozzo displays "exemplary skills but can be a bit too talkative in the field".

"Coming from a functional mute, that's rich," Tony says. Nevertheless he resolves to cut the chit chat.

Gibbs interrupts with the dead body of

At the crime scene, Tony tells Ziva he and his ex-fiancee Wendy are letting things cool for a while.

The victim is Caleb Adams, 23, petty officer second class on a destroyer docked for liberty.

The victim was stabbed.

Baltimore PD has a suspect in custody. They got a call from an auto repair shop two blocks away with an auto mechanic trying to wash blood off his hands and jacket.

They check out the clean cut suspect, who immediately says he's being railroaded. His name is Michael Thomas.

In the office, Vance says he's his wife's kid brother. Vance refuses to butt out. He wants five minutes with Michael before Gibbs talks to him.

Michael says he'd never met the victim before and was just trying to help him. Vance believes him, but tells Michael to convince Gibbs.

Gibbs talks to Michael, who's never been arrested before. He says the cops wouldn't listen and assumed he was lying. Gibbs listens.

Michael took the 5 a.m. bus in to town and was walking down the street when he heard noises. He saw the victim lying in the street bleeding, just after 5:30 a.m. He tried to apply pressure to the wound. He called 911 at 5:45 a.m. and left for work because his boss gets mad if he's late. He gave the location and his name and address. He's bothered over seeing someone die.

Vance listens and he and Gibbs can both seem to think Michael is telling the truth.

Later, they listen to Michael's 911 call. He sounds upset. There's no connection between Michael and the victim.

Caleb Adams had two overseas deployments and was one of 215 sailors off the ship for liberty last night. He called someone named Meredith Bilson five times in five hours, including right before he died.

McGee gets a call from the ship's commander. Brian Smith, a 21 year old petty officer, didn't return to the ship.

Ziva and Tony visit a restaurant where Caleb got pizza at 3 a.m. The owner Marty isn't much help. Another sailor named Robert introduces himself and says he saw Caleb at 11 p.m. last night. Caleb was on his way to see his girlfriend and was saying she was "the one".

Down in the morgue, Gibbs tells Duckie that Vance is being more than protective of a family member. Vance joins them. Duckie says Caleb was stabbed from the front. Caleb was badly beaten, like he'd been in a fight several hours before his death.

In the elevator, Vance stops it and tells Gibbs that Michael didn't do it. Gibbs doesn't think he did. Vance gets a call from his wife, but doesn't mention what's going on with Michael.

Tony and Ziva visit Caleb's girlfriend and Tony babbles about being insecure about his chattiness. Meredith opens the door, but says she can't talk. A shirtless man comes down the stairs – it's Brian Wilson. He runs. Tony chases him and tackles him. Brian is scraped and bruised, just like Caleb.

Back in NCIS interrogation, Tony shows Brian pictures of Caleb's body.

Meredith tells Ziva she woke up at 6 a.m. and Brian was pounding on her door, he said he and Caleb got into a fight. Caleb called at 11:30p.m. and wanted to come over, but she broke up with him for Brian.

Brian says Caleb jumped him and he ran. He says he went to "clear his head", but Tony points out that's a seven hour gap. Brian and Caleb grew up together.

Meredith said Caleb called late, slurring his words even though he wasn't a big drinker, saying he was going to win her back.

She doesn't think Brian killed Caleb, but she washed a lot of blood out of his shirt.

Back at the office, McGee reports he found Michael Thomas had a juvy record for assault with a deadly weapon.

Gibbs confronts Michael with it. He was 14 and said he made a mistake. Gibbs starts yelling and Vance interrupts.

Out in the hall, Vance tells Gibbs to direct his energy toward Brian Smith. Gibbs asks Vance what's going on. Michael was eight when Vance met his wife, both his parents were dead. Vance helped raise him, got him in to private school and counseling.

Vance and Gibbs visit Abby in the lab. The only prints on the body belong to Brian Smith. Vance thinks he's the killer.

Gibbs tells DiNozzo to search Brian's belongings for a fishing knife. Vance announces he's taking Michael home tonight.

Vance brings Michael home to a very pissed off wife, Jackie, who wants him out of the house. Vance tells her Michael was trying to do the right thing and he ended up a murder suspect. She thinks it's another case of Leon bailing him out. Michael hears her reaming him out. She wants him to let Michael succeed or fail on his own. She relents, agreeing to let Michael stay the night.

Gibbs wakes Abby up in her lab. She found a fish knife in Brian Smith's bag, but with fish blood on it, not Caleb Adam's. He had pills in his system that someone slipped to him.

In the morning, at the Vance house, Leon reminds Michael he's released in his custody. Leon lent Michael money to open a new repair shop.

In the office, Gibbs worries Michael is a flight risk. They video conference with Abby and McGee on the ship. Three of the sailors tested positive for a drug.

McGee interviews a sailor who says he ended up playing blackjack and losing all his money. The night was a blur. The game was in the back of a pizza place.

Gibbs and Tony revisit the pizza place and bust in on a card game in back.

At the office, Gibbs confronts Marty the pizza guy with a baggie of pills they found in his cupboard. He says the pills just make you woozy.

That night, Caleb was going on about his girlfriend dumping him. He says Caleb flipped the table and ran out. They're interrupted when Marty's lawyer arrives.

Out in the hallway, Gibbs realizes drugged Caleb could have picked a fight with anyone. Gibbs asks Tony for his thoughts. He says it'll take some more talking.

Abby examines the cards from the game.

Upstairs, they have grainy footage from across the street into the card game. They see a civilian and remember a sailor saying someone bragged about winning a ton of money, which would mean they were in on the card game. Abby comes up to report a hit on the prints. They belong to Michael Thomas.

Vance stalks out.

Back home, Vance confronts Michael about the card game.

Michael says he was trying win back the money Leon lent him for the garage after he lost it all. They told him he could earn it back by recruiting people to the game. Michael felt bad watching Caleb lose his money and after he bailed, Caleb confronted him, blaming him.

"Next thing I know, he's face down and the knife's in my hand," Michael says. He asks Vance for help and promises he'll make up for it.

"I will help you, Michael, more than I've ever helped you before," Vance says. He opens his front door and lets Tony and Gibbs in. They take Michael away.

Gibbs assures Vance he didn't fail Michael.

Vance hugs his wife and tells his son Uncle Michael won't be coming back for awhile. Vance sit son the couch and invites his son to show him how to play a video game.

Production Code: 206
Summary: Tony and Ziva travel to Columbia, where they are joined by Ziva's long-time mentor in the search for a missing Marine Lieutenant and Navy Chaplain.

A couple tries for their third picnic spot, but the woman's not happy. She relocates to under a tree. As she does, the spot they just left becomes the landing pad for a body falling from the sky.

Jimmy comes in to work in a trench-coat and flashes his wedding duds. A powder blue tuxedo with frilly pink shirt. They've decided to go "kitsch". They're all in the wedding, but he hasn't picked a best man yet.

Gibbs calls in with the body of the week. They find his absence suspicious.

At his house, he says good-bye to Samantha (Jaime Lee Curtis). She stayed over. They're all glowy.

At the scene, Gibbs is running late. The victim could have fallen anywhere between 400 and several thousand feet. He's First Lt. Walter Larabee. He looks stabbed or shot in addition to his broken bones from the fall. They find a challenge coin from the chaplain corps in his pocket. It's caked with dried blood.

At the office, Gibbs meets with Navy Commander Maria Castro, a chaplain. She doesn't know Larabee, but knows Navy Commander Theresa Wade, the woman the blood on the coin was traced to.

Chaplain Wade has served multiple missions in Iraq and Afghanistan, about a month ago she went on a relief mission to Cartagena, Colombia. They haven't been able to reach her for a week. Castro is really worried about her.

In the morgue, Duckie pre-emptively rejects the best man honor – mentors make terrible wingmen. But he's psyched about the tux. Gibbs joins them. "Allow me to make my way from the horrific to the curious," Duckie says.

Larabee was beaten, stabbed and shot. He was alive when he was thrown from the aircraft. There were bullets in his vest and tiny fungi crammed in his taped shut mouth.

Time for the victim rundown. Larabee was 32 and just finished his second tour in Afghanistan. He just accepted a tour to the embassy in Colombia. His wife is pregnant with their first child.

There were three planes in the airspace over the park when Larabee was dropped: a medical transport chopper, retired air force pilot and his family and a single engine Cessna registered to Alfred Holbrook, who was busted 30 years for possession with intent to sell.

Tony and McGee inspect Holbrook's plane. He's been in a wheelchair for a year and two months since getting hit by a drunk driver. He suggests his license was stolen and his plane hasn't left the ground.

Down in the lab, Abby reports the bullets came from a Russian AK 47. The mushroom is an herbicide for cocoa plants, used only in Noreno, Colombia. Cartel country.

Upstairs, Palmer asks Ziva for advice on who to pick as his best man. She tells him to go with his gut. Ziva is waiting for a call and it comes through in MTAC. Ziva talks to her old friend Monique, who says she might know how to find Wade.

Monique is working on a school construction project. She heard the cartel is taking Americans. She's Retired Interpol Agent Monique Lisson. She has footage from the Cartagena police showing chaplain Wade and Larabee getting into a Courage Mission International van. They provide vaccines and antibiotics to villagers.

Gibbs suggests Ziva join Lisson in Colombia.

Ziva says Lisson is like a sister. She doesn't want Tony going with her, but Gibbs insists. Castro insists on going as well.

Gibbs runs into Samantha in the elevator. She says DOD knows he's on top of it. She gives him a pizza box. Inside says: "Carter's Nursery, Fairfax. See Manny."

In Colombia, Ziva, Tony and Maria check in to their hotel – they're stuck sharing a room. Monique meets them and says they have to wait until dark to travel to the village.

McGee pays Manny a visit at the nursery. He flashes his badge and Manny runs. Gibbs stops him with a trash can lid. Manny is a drug smuggler set up by the government after flipping. He says a drug run from Cartagena would be $50,000.

Then he says he's doing flights for the CIA. He flew down empty and flew back with medical canister filled with vials of blood. But he says he can prove he didn't fly yesterday.

In Colombia, Monique tells Ziva stories at a sidewalk restaurant. They are interrupted by a drive by shooter. They take cover and are unharmed.

They talk to Gibbs in MTAC, Monique insists she wasn't followed. Tony is suspicious of her.

Later at night, Tony talks to Maria. He asks her why she insisted on coming with them. Chaplain Wade's assignment to bring immunizations to the local villagers was supposed to be hers. She feels responsible.

Back in NCIS, McGee confirms Manny the mule's alibi on a school trip with his son. Gibbs wonders why Samantha gave him his name.

Gibbs pays her a visit, saying her tip got them nowhere. She swears she didn't know about Colombia until he got involved. She says she can't help it, she hears things and starts digging. She thinks it's possible Wade and Larabee stumbled on to something. She suggests he bring his team home. She says she doesn't know what happened to the missionaries they were traveling with.

McGee called their number and got a recording.

Gibbs wants answers. McGee runs two names from Wade's emails: Stephen Wheeler and Constance Mazney. He runs them and finds they both have blocked government files.

Palmer visits Abby in the lab and asks her to be his Best Woman. She's thrilled.

Gibbs joins them. The AK 47 that killed Larabee is the weapon of choice of the Lazaro cartel which operates where the missionaries were heading with vaccines.

Monique and Ziva talk a walk. Monique confesses she's involved with something she can't get out of and she wants to protect Ziva. She tells Ziva to go home and accept they can't solve the case. Monique warns her she could end up dead if she doesn't.

In the office, McGee breaks through the files on Wheeler and Mazney, the people who guided Larabee and Wade into the mountains. They're not missionaries; they're CIA.

Gibbs takes their names to Samantha, who says the vaccinations are a ruse to take blood samples of the cartel to connect the families by DNA. There really are vaccines, but Wade and Larabee didn't know what they were up to.

Gibbs tells her to just tell him up front next time.

Ziva tells Monique about the CIA. She says she doesn't know any more than that.

Tony and Ziva resolve to find the CIA.

Two people race into their van, on the run. Ziva and Monique pop out of the back. The CIA people say the chaplains were there as cover. The cartel made an example out of Larabee. They assume Wade is dead, but Ziva isn't ready to give up. "What do you guys have in mind?" Mazney asks. "Bang," says Ziva.

Cut to news footage of a cartel warehouse fire in Cartagena. They video conference with Tony and Ziva in a van – they have Wade and are on their way to the airfield with Monique.

At the airfield, Monique says she's staying behind. She still won't tell Ziva what she's up to.

Gibbs answers his front door. He invites Samantha in for a beer. He's still a little bitter she kept things from him. Samantha says Lisson has information she needs and has screwed her over the years. Samantha knew Lisson was involved from day one.

He asks her if she's staying. She doesn't have a sitter. They cuddle on the couch.

Production Code: 207
Summary: Tony faces a boy from his past when missing classified Navy documents are found after a warehouse fire, prompting the NCIS team to join the Baltimore police department investigation.

A fire rages in a warehouse and crews manage to get it under control. With the fire finally out, they find a body. They call for the arson unit and then notice a classified file.

Ziva and McGee report to the scene. The warehouse is owned by United Equinox, an electronics company that makes modems and toaster ovens. The company also worked on top secret weapons systems.

Jason King of the Baltimore PD arson unit recognizes Tony, he just switched from homicide. They don't seem friendly.

Duckie examines the charred victim. Jason thinks the fire was started near the victim with a flare. He corrects Tony at every chance and directs them to an empty fire drawer with a busted lock.

Security shows the last person to enter the premises did so at 4:03 a.m. – 40 minutes before the fire was reported. Carter Plimpton was a civilian but Gibbs calls it an NCIS case.

Back at the lab, they confirm the victim was Plimpton, a product systems analyst. Tony explains he met Jason once 20 years ago when Jason was nine years old.

Gibbs comes in and posts a picture of the Phantom 8, part of the Navy's Watcher group – including the guy who shot Tony and was hunting EJ. Two of them were murdered in the last nine months – make that three, Plimpton was part of the black ops group.

In the morgue, Jason King snaps photo while Duckie dissects. Duckie finds the whole thing unusual. Plimpton's skin was doubly burned – he was tortured with the road flare on one side of his body, which means the killer got what he wanted.

McGee and Ziva visit the United Equinox factory where the supervisor says Carter did product testing. He says the warehouse didn't have anything top secret in it. He hasn't heard of Watcher Fleet.

Gibbs joins Abby in the lab where she's watching "Myth Busters" play with thermite reaction. She found some on the victim. It burns through metal, but had an added component to slow the burn.

Tony walks Jason to the elevator, but he doesn't want to talk. "This means you haven't forgiven me about your sister?" Tony says. "That's exactly what it means," Jason says.

McGee tells Gibbs he hacked the Naval Intelligence Database and found a Watcher file for a project called Aquamarine. There was a file with the same name in the warehouse. The project was initiated four years ago, when Carter was with Watcher Fleet.

He left in 2008 to work at United Equinox.

Back at the big screen, McGee gets a hit on arsonist Billy Wayne, who used termite in his crimes. He's in prison. They bring him to interview.

He says you don't need termite to burn paper, it was used to send a message or for fun. He thinks someone was practicing for a bigger event.

He developed a recipe for slow-burning thermite and told Janice, who's writing a book about him. She visited him last week.

Down in the lab, Abby shows Jason her termite tests. He tells her he got into arson because he was in a fire as a kid and they never caught the guy.

McGee gets an alert about a suspicious blaze on a cargo ship less than a mile from the warehouse.

At the scene, there are no injuries but tarps on top of a cargo hold burned. The hold was empty. The solid steel deck showed signs of heat fatigue – termite.

Jason follows his nose down into the hold, following the ship's wiring. He follows it to the fuse box. When he checks it, sparks and a fire quickly spreads along the wiring. Jason shoves Tony out of the room and seals the airlock door. The fire quickly burns out. Jason says it was a trap and now they're even.

Back in the lab, Abby tells Gibbs the source of the flash fire wasn't a bomb. Someone set a small termite charge in the junction box, causing the insulation in the wires to carbonize. That's not supposed to happen, the wiring is flawed. It could have spread to the whole ship if Jason hadn't sealed it in. Whoever set the fire knew the wiring was flawed. It was made by United Equinox.

McGee and Gibbs meet with the United Equinox boss Jack Murdoch. They have hacked memos from Plimpton to the boss requesting an inquiry. Murdoch says the chance of something going wrong was very low. He says there weren't enough proven cases of "flash over" to legally warrant a warning or recall.

They explain the arsonist knew about it. He says they installed it in civilian uses only four years ago. He says again he's never heard of Watcher Fleet.

Ziva and McGee notice Tony acting strangely. They show him a picture from the paper of him carrying young Jason out of a fire.

Tony explains he was in Baltimore for the Final Four and was out for a walk at night and saw smoke and heard a scream coming out of a townhouse. He went in. They think he should be proud.

He says it was more complicated than that.

Flash back to Tony going into a townhouse in flames and following cries for help. He found Jason in the closet and started to carry him out. They were in the hallway when Jason heard his sister and yelled for Tony to help her, but the ceiling collapsed. Tony had to choose to save Jason or risk all of them dying trying to save his four-year-old sister.

Gibbs interrupts for a report.

They have a phone record of a call Billy the firebug made from prison to Mary Gardocki aka "Janice".

Gibbs sees the news clipping and tells Tony that he helped when others didn't.

Gibbs meets with Mary in interview. She's a sales rep for a chemical company and sells napalm, which is legal. Gibbs shows her a photo of the Watcher Fleet. She's heard of them but never met them.

Gibbs examines her closely and then removes her scarf. She's burned. She says she's using Billy to develop a slower burning thermite to make money. She says she didn't kill anyone and has been in a burn center for the last three days.

They confirm her alibi.

Ziva checked the civilian ships with the faulty wiring and found there were no reported problems.

They're stumped. Abby calls.

In the lab, Jason and Abby tell Gibbs they found ammonium phosphate is the secret ingredient. The brand of retardant the arsonist used is sold only to the forest service. They're checking the buyers against known arsonists and get a hit. Jason recognizes him as the fire department site inspector from both scenes.

Gibbs is irritated Jason didn't realize sooner the man was an impostor.

They race up to Bruce Johnson's house and stop him in his car. He immediately says he wants a deal. He says the guy who hired him wanted Plimpton's information on bad wiring. He claims he didn't mean to kill him but Carter wouldn't talk.

Gibbs barks at Bruce to turn off his car. He assesses the situation and asks again for a deal. He turns the car off and the car explodes. Jason wants to help him, but the car is engulfed in flames and Tony holds him back.

Ziva found the missing file in his house. It's a list of every navy warship that contains the faulty wiring. They did sell it to the Navy.

The current Watcher Fleet has been working to retrofit the ships but only a third have been fixed.

Back at the office, they hit the phones to notify everyone and bolster security. "Aquamarine" was top secret to protect the Navy, so who knew?

Tony goes to talk to Jason, who accuses him of giving up on saving Bruce Johnson. Tony gets in the elevator and tells Jason he has learned you can't save everyone. Tony became a cop because he saved Jason and liked making a difference. He tells Jason to focus on the ones he can still save.

Gibbs wonders if the Watcher Fleet microchips could have had info on the wiring flaws. McGee says it's possible, but they think they're all accounted for.

At sea on the USS Brewer A sailor sees lights from inside the Machine Room and goes to investigate. He doesn't get far before the door explodes.

Production Code: 208
Summary: The NCIS team investigates a fire on a U.S. Navy ship which leads them to a revelation that threatens the security of all U.S. Navy facilities worldwide. Meanwhile, Tony and Ziva travel to Italy to investigate an explosive device that was found on a Navy ship.

U.S.S. Brewer at sea A sailor checks his phone, looking at family photos. He drops it under the stairs. Meanwhile, a man rigs an electrical box with a small charge.

The sailor gets his phone and the man lights his charge. The wires ignite, but the man can't get out of the room because the sailor is blocking his exit. He goes for an escape hatch, but the room blows.

In MTAC, Admiral Theodore Tully briefs everyone on the threat to the ships. He's glad the casualties weren't worse; but Gibbs doesn't think it's over. Vance is away at a NATO conference until the end of the week.

McGee preps to hop a flight to the Brewer, which will be back in Norfolk tomorrow.

They have no leads on their dead arsonist Bruce Johnson.

In the morgue, Duckie has a personal matter but tells Gibbs it can wait. Duckie doesn't have much from Johnson's body.

Gibbs visits Abby in the garage with Johnson's car. She went through Johnson's cross cut shredder and found a document with Korean characters. She can't reconstruct the document, but wonders if it means N. Korea was behind the attacks.

Ziva promises someone they'll reschedule and they can try to get their deposit back.

NCIS Analyst Emma Park drops by and reports no N. Korean chatter. She knows about Ziva's weekend plans.

Gibbs and Tony talk to McGee aboard the Brewer in MTAC. The victims were Erik Ramsey, the sailor, and Tobey Abbott, a civilian with Norton Turbine following up repairs to the ship's power plant. McGee suggests they have to consider Abbott a suspect. McGee pauses to hurl, wracked with sea sickness.

Tony and Ziva visit the arsonist's widow, who scoffs at the idea he knew Korean. They were getting divorced.

They talk to the postman, who says Johnson was getting mail from Switzerland.

Duckie drops by Gibbs' house. Duckie confesses he's come in to a lot of money from his mother's passing. Duckie's redoing his will and wants Gibbs to be his executor. Gibbs would be honored.

U.S.S. Brewer Gibbs and Duckie board the Brewer in port. McGee joins Tony and Ziva in Abbott's quarters. They find an envelope from Switzerland with a letter in Korean inside. Even McGee knows Ziva's weekend plans.

Back in the office, Emma Park tells Admiral Tully and Gibbs the Korean is jibberish. She's checking to see if it's a code.

In the office, Tony finds Abbott wanted to join the Navy but got rejected twice.

In Abby's lab, she knows Tony is going nuts not knowing about Ziva's weekend. It's just Pilates weekend with her landlord. Abby finds the residue from the Brewer fire was the same as in the other fires.

The magazine locker was right below where the fire ignited. If the room had gone, it could have sunk the whole ship. Instead the tanks in the machine room ignited and the explosion created a vacuum.

She checked the Swiss-Korean envelope for DNA but doesn't have results yet.

Ziva talks to Abbott's boss, who says Abbott lobbied for the assignment.

Duckie gets choked up thinking about Ramsey's family.

In MTAC, Gibbs and Tony talk to NCIS Special Agent Stan Burley, who's in Naples, Italy and just got the faulty wiring alert. The Benjamin Franklin is coming in to port. He found a thermite device in the warehouse that would resupply the Franklin – a nuclear aircraft carrier.

Tony and Ziva head to Italy.

Gibbs wakes Abby up in the lab, where she slept on the floor and McGee sleep on the computer. They broke the code on the Korean message – which was a simple code, typed on an English keyboard but printed in Korean. It gave Abbot instructions on when, where and how to attack the Brewer.

Naples, Italy Burley greets them. The Benjamin Franklin is in port. They swapped the thermite out of the device and the three of them are going undercover on board to wait to see who comes to arm it. There are 32 civilians onboard.

Duckie brings Gibbs his will. Most of his estate is going to the Marine Corps Scholarship Foundation.

On the Franklin, Burley and Tony stake out the room with the bomb. Ziva brings food, but Tony's feeling seasick. They see someone approach. A man goes into the room they're guarding and checks his instructions.

Burley waits as the man cuts into a sealed palette, going for the bait. But the man hears something and picks up his knife and hurls it. Burley makes a noise like he's hit. Tony and Ziva go in. They find burley down, but still breathing. His weapon is gone.

The suspect creeps around with Burley's gun. Tony and Ziva close in on him and Tony clocks him with a chain.

In MTAC, Gibbs sees that Burley is OK.

The suspect is Andre Fullerton, a tech rep with an Avionics Communications firm. Gibbs tells Fullerton he has no rights and they're invoking the Patriot Act to fly him to Guantanamo as a terrorist.

Gibbs asks who hired him.

Fullerton says the man's name is Harper Dearing, but Fullerton never met him in person. All he knows is he had a slight Southern drawl. He did it for the money. Gibbs orders Fullerton brought back for trial.

McGee checks Southern Harper Dearings and finds one (Richard Schiff) born in Georgia who is the CEO of Dorado Hills Investments, a venture capital group, and lives in Virginia.

Gibbs sets Abby on comparing his DNA to the code envelope.

Abby finds Gibbs cleaning his weapon in her lab, waiting for her. Dearing had a son in the Navy, she had his DNA compared to the envelope. There's a familial match. Gibbs takes off.

Gibbs and a team head to Dorado Hills Investments to arrest Dearing. Vincent Maple, the company president, greets them. He doesn't know where Dearing is – he hasn't seen or heard from him in over a year.

In the office, Gibbs calls everyone to attention and puts Harper Dearing on their Most Wanted wall.

Palmer comes up looking for intel on his bachelor party Abby planned. McGee tells him to be up on his hepatitis vaccinations and get a good helmet. Tony suggests kneepads. They don't actually have any idea what she's up to.

Dorneget comes in with his tooth. Abby examines it. Dorneget says it was there for years, but a couple of weeks ago he got a call from a dentist, not his usual one, saying there was a recall on his implant. When he got a popcorn kernel stuck it recently he went to a new guy to have it dealt with.

The tooth bug had a short range, but used the pressure of his chewing to stay charged. It's fancy tech and Abby checks for a patent. She finds ones from 18 months ago filed by Harper Dearing.

They're after Dearing for the arsons exploiting bad ship wiring. Samantha Ryan (Jamie Lee Curtis) shows up with NSA intercepts of Dearing's last communications with the venture capital firm President Vincent Maple.

Tony and Ziva visit Vincent Maple and show him his email from Dearing in which Dearing mentions surfing somewhere he once went with Maple. Maple says it never happened and he's on their side, he suggests Dearing is losing it.

Sam and Gibbs talk to the dentist who put in Dorneget's new implant, Dr. Berman. He says he didn't know there was a bug in the tooth and he doesn't know Dearing, but Sam says he's lying about both things. McGee interrupts, saying Dearing is on the phone for Berman.

They take him to MTAC. Dearing gives Berman permission to answer their questions, but says he's calling to speak to Gibbs. Dearing says "this is all his fault."

Tony and Ziva come in to see agents sweeping the whole building for bugs. They want to know how he knew Berman was there and how he broke through MTAC's firewall. Sam thinks he's a sociopathic paranoid narcissist.

Palmer walks by on the phone with Brinna, telling her he doesn't know why Abby asked him what kind of tattoo he wants to get.

McGee reports Berman says he was threatened to implant the bug and got $10,000 for it. He has a description of the man who approached him.

Sam checks that Gibbs knows it's not really his fault, although it seems clear Dearing believes it.

Palmer goes to Abby, trying to convince her to postpone his bachelor party. She says she already put down a non-refundable deposit on 50 gallons of scented body lotion.

She runs Dearing's face through facial recognition and gets a live hit. He's in a Navy yard sitting openly on a park bench. NCIS locks it down but doesn't find him. He came in with only a briefcase.

They see he left a flower on the bench. Gibbs sees it came from a nearby bush and walks over. He finds a model of his boat, down to the name and rudder.

Later that night, Sam admits she likes Dearing's style. "Of course you do, it's yours," Gibbs says.

Gibbs and Ryan try to suss out his motivation. She mentions that Dearing's son was killed in a suicide attack on a Navy ship. There was an early warning system that could have stopped it, but it hadn't been replaced yet on his ship.

Sam thinks Dearing is trying to teach the Navy a lesson. She thinks Dearing has more plans for Gibbs.

Gibbs asks Sam how long she's known about Dearing's son. He's frustrated again about her keeping secrets. "You want me to let you in, then let me in," she says.

Tony calls with a report that they found the car of the guy who bullied Berman. It's registered to Frederick Fountain, a former cop who served time for taking bribes. Tony thinks he interrupted Gibbs with Sam.

Gibbs pops in the back seat.

They see Fountain and chase him. They catch him quickly and he says he'll tell them anything, even about the next attack, if they get him out of there. But then two shots ring out and Fountain is shot dead.

Down in the morgue, Duckie tells Palmer that Abby asked to borrow the rotary saw for his bachelor party.

Abby found traces of RDX explosive from under Fountain's fingernails. The bullets shattered on impact. Duckie shows Gibbs a Watcher Fleet microchip he found in Fountain's arm that was recently put in.

The microchip is the same one that was in Agent Leven's arm last year. The info on it is in code. It shows balance sheets from Dearing's company showing purchase of building materials.

Gibbs and Ryan bring a hard copy of it to Maple. He says they have no record of the purchases. He looks at the items and suggests Dearing is either building something for the spaceship or Naval artillery shells.

Ryan thinks of something. One of the weaknesses the Watcher fleet found was that some guns that used RDX could explode if the right artillery wasn't used. They could take out half of their fleet just during exercises.

Back in the lab, Abby runs simulations that show how bad the explosions could be. Dorneget tells Gibbs he found an encryption key while doing data entry on his tooth bug. The key is how Dearing hacked MTAC. They traced it to a cell phone.

Gibbs dials the number and Dearing answers, knowing it's Gibbs. Gibbs asks Dearing what his son would think of what he's doing. Abby runs a trace. Dorneget recognizes the address from the shipping manifest. They think they've found his warehouse.

The team heads there, guns drawn, but finds an empty warehouse with just a security guard inside. He's pushing a briefcase full of cash.

Back at the office, they send out alerts about the defective artillery. The security guard has no record, but he had $1 million in cash.

In interrogation, he insists he had no idea what was in it. He got a small case once a month and a truck would come pick it up. He got a text to deliver the case to an address tonight.

They check the guard's cell and finds it's registered to a Dearing holding company. They want to use the guard for a sting and have him deliver the case as planned.

Abby comes in in a circus master of ceremonies sequined outfit and mustache, ready for the bachelor party. They think it's canceled, but Gibbs says it's not.

Cut to the team doing shots in a bar and playing quarters. Gibbs is winning, naturally. Ziva watches over the guard out on the street as the guys drink it up inside.

Jimmy makes a toast. "As Nathaniel Hawthorne once said: 'Let man tremble at the hand of woman....' Blah, blah, blah – alcohol is fun."

Tony checks with Dorneget; they're drinking apple juice. Palmer stumbles. The limo pulls up outside and they converge on it. They find Vincent Maple inside.

Back at interrogation. They found him with no bags, a fake ID and a one-way ticket to Morocco. He insists he doesn't know where Dearing is.

He confesses there was no equipment, he set up a dummy account to siphon money out of Dearing's company. "I was embezzling, that's it," he says. He reminds them the faulty artillery was Ryan's idea and he just went with it.

"The real question you should be asking is how'd you get a copy of my books?" he asks.

Back in the office, they go back over Fountain. They found his car thanks to a tip, which they traced to Dearing. He wanted them to find Fountain and the chip. They think Dearing knew Maple was embezzling and used it to send them on a wild goose chase.

Gibbs goes to Sam with a stern face. He wonders if her defective artillery theory was really a mistake. She asks him what he's insinuating. He gets frustrated that he can read everyone but her. For such an intuitive introvert, she knows it drives him nuts.

Gibbs gets a text from Dearing saying "Check." He calls Tony. Director Vance has disappeared.

Summary: Terrorism threatens to shake the foundations of the Navy and NCIS, when the team continues to be eluded by the newest member of the NCIS Most Wanted Wall. Meanwhile, Jimmy Palmer's destination wedding is impacted by the case.

Teams go over Director Vance's abandoned car. They're nowhere near his house and his phone is in the car.

His security man Wallace tells Gibbs that Vance insisted on driving himself home but he seemed fine.

Leon wakes up in an open casket in a tomb, lying next to a desiccated corpse with a note pinned to it: "Your king is vulnerable."

Gibbs checks in with Sec-Nav. McGee checks all street cameras.

Sam Ryan (Jamie Lee Curtis) drops by. "Are you just visiting or do you already know something I don't?" Gibbs asks. She's just there to offer her help.

Vance calls Gibbs.

They go pick him up. He remembers leaving the Navy yard and being flagged down by three people claiming car trouble. He was injected with something.

The land belongs to the Whitting family, the body belonged to a man who died on the same ship as Dearing's son 10 years ago.

There was a giant jawbone from the equine family in the tomb. Sam recognizes it as Biblical. Sampson in Judges 15. "And he finds a new jawbone of an ass, put forth his hand.... slew a thousand men."

Duckie and Palmer go over the well-preserved remains of Whitting. He and Evan died in a terrorist attack against a weak section of the hull. Whitting was on the same deck where the bomb hit.

Duckie suggests if Whitting was the first to suffer, Dearing might be pointing at who will suffer next: NCIS.

Upstairs, Tony wonders about the chances of them making it to Palmer's wedding. Gibbs wants an old case file from 12 years ago involving a prank.

Gibbs drops by Sam's office and finds her son Parker there alone. Parker immediately grills him on how much Gibbs likes his mom, on a scale of 1 to 10. Parker knows about Gibbs' wood working. Sam comes in.

Gibbs wants more on Evan Dearing, Harper's son. He wants to try to exploit Harper's weaknesses.

In the lab, Abby is overcome by the idea that they might all miss Palmer's wedding. She got DNA from the horse jawbone and narrowed it to two thoroughbred breeds.

McGee and Tony pour through old case files for the prank. It involved a "steamy liaison" between a male and female officer, someone taped it and played it for the whole crew. The guy who filmed it was discharged, but the others were reassigned. One was Evan Dearing.

Harper pulled strings to have his record expunged. After the prank, Evan was reassigned to the ship where he was killed. They think Dearing is targeting NCIS now in retaliation.

The case agent, Larson, is retired now and lives on a horse farm.

Gibbs and the team reach the farm and Gibbs notices the horses are spooked. There are groceries in the truck and the engine is warm. Gibbs calls out to Larson.

His house explodes.

Later, with crews on the site, Larson's body is taken from the smoldering house. They find a video camera nearby. It filmed them arriving and looking around and then Harper Dearing turned it on himself and says that some people need to learn from their mistakes.

He claims that by pointing out the wiring flaws and "sacrificing" a few he has saved thousands of lives. But now that he's done that, it's about payback for his son.

Gibbs watches the tape with Vance. The Navy is on red alert. Gibbs plans to talk to Dearing's ex-wife.

Vance is burning from Dearing grabbing him. Gibbs urges him to hit back hard.

Downstairs, they learn that after Evan died Victoria Dearing sought counseling and Harper started drinking and became violent. They divorced two years later.

Abby politely interrupts and asks for everyone if there's any chance they'll make it for Jimmy's wedding. Gibbs' silence is their answer.

Down in the morgue, Jimmy asks Duckie if he should cancel the wedding. Duckie essentially tells him that would be letting the terrorists win. Duckie promises to be there.

Gibbs talks to Victoria Dearing. She remembers Harper was angry at the Navy and thinks he believes someone has to pay for taking away their son.

Gibbs visits Sam again. She shows him her super fancy computer, programmed for getting in people's heads. She's working up Dearing, including finding people he might trust or distrust.

One suggested ally is Jonathan Cole (Scott Wolf) from the Phantom Eight. He must have sold Dearing the microchip. She knows Dearing tried to hire Cole at one point, she suggests setting Cole up to get freed from prison and work for Dearing now.

Dearing calls Sam. He knows about her ex-husband "where he is and how he got there."

We see he's outside a boy's prep school as he starts talking to her about her son Parker.

Later, cops surround Parker's school. Dearing didn't go near him and that concerns Sam; he's finding their vulnerabilities.

At the office, Palmer worked through the night with Duckie and they're getting on a plane in two hours.

Ziva got him fine Israeli cotton sheets, McGee got him a long range video camera for when he's stuck at work and Tony gives him a re-gifted DVD.

Cole is brought in. Gibbs and Sam sit with him in interrogation as he enjoys freedom potato chips. They show him photos of the wiring fires and point out he made Dearing's acts possible by selling him the microchip. He claims to know things about Dearing, but Sam can tell he's lying.

They tell him they want him to go work for Dearing. He jumps at the chance to be free for awhile, saying the fact he could die isn't the catch, it's the fun.

They arrange to make it look like Cole escaped. Tony also told Victoria about him, thinking she knows more than she's saying and might contact Harper.

Abby reports that the accelerant at Larson's house doesn't match any of the other fires. Gibbs gets an urgent text from Sam and goes to her office.

Her ex was released from prison today on a bogus technicality. She says he was in prison for a good reason, "he hurts people."

She's afraid he'll come after her. She thinks Dearing bought the judge and played her. She fights back tears as she tells Gibbs she's taking her son and leaving. He tells her leaving isn't the answer, but she goes.

At night in the office, Tony and Ziva try to convince themselves they're not sorry to miss Palmer's wedding. Tony doesn't know what he'd do if he had to face all the trappings of a wedding. "Elope?" Ziva asks.

Dearing just emailed Cole. "Where Golden Eagle's rest tomorrow at 8 a.m." Golden Eagles are retired Navy pilots, they're talking about a coffee shop where they go.

Jimmy drops by Breena's room on the morning of their wedding. He tells her he feels like he should be back at NCIS helping them. He suggests they get married now and then he'll go back and after they'll have a big party and go on a honeymoon. She agrees.

NCIS stakes out the coffee shop. Cole sits down for coffee and the waitress gives him something from a messenger. It's a cell phone. It rings.

Dearing tells Cole to tell Gibbs that he was never really interested in Director Vance. He was interested in justice.

Back in the office, they try to figure out Dearing's next move. They figure he drove Sam away so she couldn't guess. Vance is on his way to meet with Sec-Nav.

They replay the background audio from Dearing's call to Cole and hear bells from the Navy chapel and other noises outside their own building. He's nearby.

Gibbs recaps what was found in Vance's car. Nothing. But they didn't strip it down. Dearing was after Vance's car, not Vance. It's parked right outside NCIS.

Gibbs calls for evacuation and the bomb squad. Cole reminds him he worked bomb disposal. Gibbs takes a minute to decide if he can trust Cole and decides he can.

Outside, people run in all directions. Gibbs undoes Cole's cuffs. They open the car.

Inside, McGee downloads his computer on a flash drive and Vance barks at him to get out.

Cole and Gibbs tear the car apart.

Ziva and Tony clear the building inside.

Outside, Gibbs sees a small red wire under the upholstery. They slice it open and find tons of C4. Cole tells Gibbs to get clear. "It's not the danger, it's the fun," Cole tells him.

Gibbs sees Abby inside nearby in her lab and goes inside.

Cole doesn't have a chance to get started before the phone rings with the message "For Evan." The car explodes.

Gibbs throws himself over Abby in the lab, McGee is totally exposed upstairs as the windows blast in and Tony and Ziva are thrown to the floor together in the elevator.

Walking along the beach alone, Duckie gets a call.

"Dear God, how many?" He says he'll be there right away. He starts to have trouble speaking, he falls to his knees, clearly having a heart attack or stroke. He falls, not breathing, in the surf.

Summary: Harper Dearing's latest act of terrorism ripped through NCIS headquarters in last season's cliffhanger finale, sparking a cross-agency manhunt for the criminal mastermind.

May 15, 2012 Duckie gets checked out in the hospital. He had a heart attack. Palmer found him on the beach and is still there. Duckie asks about NCIS, but Palmer hasn't been able to reach anyone.

Outside NCIS at the scene of the bomb blast, crews go over the wreckage and tend to the wounded and dead. Abby is OK, so is Gibbs. Vance, too.

The Secretary of the Navy is there. He wants a plan of action. The FBI will be assisting in the search of Dearing. Gibbs goes to find the rest of his team.

Ziva and Tony are stuck in the elevator. Ziva sits on Tony's shoulders and bangs on the ceiling, but it's jammed shut. The elevator slips. Tony's sweating, it's hot in there. Ziva gets a call from her father, offering to help find Harper Dearing.

Gibbs checks out the office, with papers everywhere and the ceiling dropped in places. There's dust everywhere and McGee is in a daze. He mentions he's hot and Gibbs notices there's a giant piece of glass sticking out of McGee's side.

In his hospital bed, Duckie insists on getting back to DC. He tries to say he's capable of assisting, but realizes he's not. He tells Palmer to go back and help. "They need you more," Duckie says.

Agent Fornell joins Vance, Gibbs and Sec-Nav, on the phone with the president. McGee is fine with a few stitches.

Sec-Nav explains they've been instructed to locate Harper Dearing and pursue him with "extreme prejudice." Failure is not an option.

Still stuck in the elevator, Ziva and Tony think of worse cowkers they could be stuck with. Then Ziva realizes one of them could be dead. Finally, rescuers pry the doors open.

At Gibbs' house, he and Fornell share beers. Gibbs thinks Dearing hurt his "family." Luckily, Fornell brought cannoli. Gibbs worries about what they do if Dearing just disappears, but Fornell is determined to go after him.

Meanwhile, on a street somewhere, Dearing watches news footage of his attack on TV screens in an electronic store. A woman walks up to him and says the attack makes her feel lucky. She introduces herself as Lorraine and asks if he wants to go somewhere. She takes him home, climbs onto her bed and turns on slow jams. He excuses himself to the restroom.

Then she takes the gun out from under her covers and lets the FBI SWAT team in the front door. They open fire on the bathroom, but it's empty.

She sees a ringing phone in a bag on the floor, counting down and saying "you're dead in..." The room explodes.

The next morning, Fornell is wounded over the loss of his team. Ziva points out Dearing is no longer taunting them, they're taunting him. Gibbs gets a look "Uh, I know that look. That's the stay-up-all-night-take-one-for-the-team-I-got-a-plan look," Tony says to Gibbs. Gibbs wants to take the fight to Dearing and make him keep playing.

The news says the FBI arrested Victoria Dearing, Harper's ex-wife. Gibbs tells Vance that they have her under protection out of state.

Vance is worried. He feels guilty that he drove the car with the bomb into the NCIS yard. Gibbs notes that Dearing wants Vance to be wracked with just that guilt and he has to be stronger than that.

Abby sweeps up angrily in her lab. She's upset and a little freaked out.

In the office, Tony asks Gibbs if he's talked to Samantha Ryan since the attack.

Vance summons Gibbs into MTAC. McGee is there. Harper is on the monitor and angry about them accusing his wife. He thinks he's a whistleblower, exposing flaws.

McGee traces his signal as Dearing tells them there's no better player than a man who has nothing to lose. Dearing is parked in an abandoned parking lot off Route 9. They check with Sec-Nav and send the coordinates to a team. They check satellite imagery and see the car is hot with one person in it. They watch and listen as the team surrounds the car. It explodes before they reach it. They think Dearing just blew himself up.

In the morgue, Palmer goes over the remains from the car, freaking out from lack of sleep and no Duckie. Abby lurks. Gibbs, Vance and Fornell come in for an update. He gave a tissue sample and Abby is lurking outside awaiting DNA results. She reports it's a 50% match. They think they have him.

July 10, 2012 Duckie comes back to NCIS, which is still being cleaned up. He hears the doubt in Gibbs' voice when he mentions Dearing's death.

Inside, Joann Dearing, Harper's sister-in-law, drops by. She's been traveling in Europe as a personal assistant. Gibbs talks to her. No one claimed Harper's body. Her husband Lawrence was Harper's brother, he died four months ago of a heart attack. He was buried in the private family ceremony. "So Harper had access to his brother's remains?" Gibbs asks.

Down in the morgue, Duckie notices tiny fractures in the victim's ribs, evidence of CPR, like what would be performed on a heart attack victim. The body is Lawrence Dearing. Harper Dearing is still alive.

Upstairs, Abby explains that Dearing rigged the car so the body would be warm and look alive. They put out BOLOs on Harper.

Tony looks into Joann Dearing's finances. She has a new $250,000 in her bank account. Days after the car exploded her cell phone made calls in rural West Virginia, where she also purchased gas.

Gibbs has her brought back in. She plays dumb but Gibbs yells. She tells him that after Harper was reported dead, she came from work to find him in her living room. Gibbs asks where Dearing is.

Cut to teams storming a cabin in the woods. There are barrels of thermite, photos of Gibbs and his team and plans for all his bombs. Gibbs thinks Dearing wanted them to know he was finished.

Tony notices a trap door in the floor, it's how he got out.

Down in his empty basement, Gibbs takes measurements. Vance drops by. Forensics linked everything in the tunnel to Dearing. Gibbs has an idea, but he knows Vance won't like it. He offers to go after Dearing alone.

Gibbs explains that it's not about bombs and ships anymore, Dearing knows what he did and he knows what has to happen next. He's waiting for Gibbs in the house where he and Victoria raised Evan, where his important memories are. He wants them to be his last. Vance agrees to let Gibbs go. "For the record, if anything should happen?" Vance asks. "Kill him," Gibbs says. "Glad to."

Back at NCIS, Gibbs packs up. Ziva is infuriated that Gibbs is going alone. He tells them to watch out for each other.

Gibbs drives up to Dearing's house in his pick-up. He goes inside and hears Dearing's son's voice coming from the cassette player.

Dearing casually brews coffee for Gibbs as he arrives. He offers him Scotch.

"I'm glad you came, Gibbs. I was hoping you'd figure it out, eventually," Dearing says. He compares his feelings to Gibbs' for his late daughter.

Dearing thinks he and Gibbs are a lot like. He knows what Gibbs did for his family and that Gibbs has a job to do. Dearing turns his back on Gibbs and stands by a window sill with a gun on it. "Do I have regrets? Yea, some. But maybe things happen for a reason," Dearing says.

Gibbs takes out a knife, Dearing goes for the gun. He turns on Gibbs and Gibbs stabs him through the gut.

September 25, 2012 Back in the NCIS yard, Gibbs checks out the new memorial to the May attacks. We hear Evan and Harper on a tape, Evan talking about wanting to protect the country. "I'm really proud I'm doing this, dad," Evan says. "Yea, so am I," says Harper.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates the cause of a mysterious death involving a NCIS facilities manager that was found four months after the Navy Yard bombings. Meanwhile, the team has to undergo mandatory psych evaluations, causing Gibbs to worry about Abby.

Abby looks around the empty morgue late at night, trying to convince herself not to be freaked out. Then she steps through the door and freaks out. She wakes up on the slab, about to be cut open.

Then she actually wakes up at her desk. It's 3 a.m., she calls Gibbs. "It happened again," she tells him.

Tony flirts with the Navy's facilities manager, Judy. She's overseeing the remodel and he thinks she smells fantastic. He's about to ask her out when Ziva interrupts, asking if they can get some new improvements. Judy agrees to look into a new paint color.

Miles Wolf, crisis counselor, interlopes. He's there for mandatory psych evaluations. The team decides they're fine.

Upstairs, Wolf tells Vance and Gibbs that everybody in NCIS seems to be doing well, except the armory. They're mourning "Midge" who evacuated the day of the bombing and hasn't been seen for four months. Gibbs tells Wolf to start with Abby and her nightmares.

Gibbs gets a call, they found Midge's car.

The team goes to the car recovery site, she was in her car submerged in a pond. Duckie shows up, off work. He doesn't have medical clearance to be back at work yet.

They confirm it's Midge with her photo ID. They wonder if she sped into the lake on her way from NCIS, but the missing person's report says she made it home. Palmer finds a bullet wound in her stomach.

Back at NCIS, Tony reviews paint samples. Midge Watkins was a retired Marine captain serving as an NCIS administrator. She has a daughter, Grace, stationed in San Diego, who's flying in.

Wolf tries to talk to Abby in the lab, but she can't even say the word "bombing." She refuses to talk about her nightmares.

Gibbs goes to the morgue and finds Duckie there. Palmer reports a lot of defensive wounds on the body. Gibbs tells Duckie to go home.

Ziva and Tony talk to Phyllis and Jon in the armory about the last day they saw Midge. The armory walls are still riddled with bullet holes from the munitions that exploded after the bomb. Jon has a scar from where he was hit by shrapnel.

They wonder if Midge was hit and didn't know it. Gibbs suggests getting a list of armory supplies and comparing the bullets to what hit Midge.

Gibbs checks on Abby in the garage, he asks about the shrink. She doesn't want to talk to a stranger. Gibbs is willing to listen as long as it's "short" and "nothing too deep." Abby remembers worrying after the bombing that she'd lost some friends. Lying on the autopsy table in her dream makes her feel alone, like she has no family. Gibbs asks about her family, including her biological brother, Kyle, who doesn't know about her. Abby finds a bullet in the car, Midge was shot at point blank range in the car.

Ziva talks to Midge's daughter, Grace. Midge texted from home after the bombing, and said she'd call and didn't. Grace says everyone loved her mom, she was especially supportive of women in the workplace. That led to some "typical male grumbling about playing favorites."

Back at NCIS, Ziva tells Tony that Midge thought he was occasionally annoying.

Judy comes back, Vance rejected the paint change request. Tony asks her out and she tells him she's taken, she thought they were "sport flirting."

Wolf comes through making small talk about the evaluations. Vance loudly objects and tells the team to get to work on Midge.

Ziva finds that a job applicant named Craig Wilson filed a grievance against Midge after she hired Phyllis instead, but it was thrown out five months ago, around the time of the bombing. Wilson was discharged for bad conduct five years ago and is unemployed.

Wolf intercepts Gibbs for his eval. Gibbs asks if he thinks family might help Abby. He says it could. Abby calls Gibbs away.

Down in the lab, Abby tells Gibbs the bullet that killed Midge is "nasty," it's covered in 60 year old mold. Gibbs encourages Abby to seek out Kyle.

Tony thinks he's unfocused since the bombing, like half of him is still "stuck in that elevator." Ziva and Tony pay a visit to Craig Wilson, who runs when they introduce themselves. Ziva tackles him and he drops a box full of guns.

Tony and Ziva talk to Craig in interrogation. He calls Ziva a "Feminazi." He calls Tony her "lovesick boyfriend" and compares it to his interview with Midge and someone else in the interview. Ziva rules out all of Craig's weapons as the murder weapon.

In the morgue, Palmer tells Gibbs that he found an allergic reaction in Midge's lungs but can't make sense of it. Gibbs calls Duckie.

Back in the armory, Jon admits he and Midge had a fling a few years back after she lost her husband. He and Phyllis look at the photos of the old guns that could be the murder weapon. They both offer to look into people who might know more about them.

Ziva goes to visit her biological brother Kyle at the pet adoption agency where he works. He's not there and she turns to leave. He finds her on the street. He remembers meeting her a year ago and thinks they had a connection.

McGee gets a call from a gun dealer in Philly who sold a similar gun six months ago. A few hours ago, the dealer got a call from the buyer begging him not to give out his name. McGee got his address, it's near the pond where Midge was found.

They head to the apartment and find Jon, the armory employee. He admits to having an old gun but says he still has it. He opens up his case but it's not there.

Duckie and Palmer call Gibbs to report she had a severe allergic reaction to a chemical that's used in soaps, detergents and colognes. Jon says he couldn't have done it because he was getting his shrapnel wound stitched up.

They notice a smell in the air, not cologne, but fancy perfume. Tony recognizes it. Jon says it's his girlfriend's, she saw his gun in the box a few hours ago. He says she was with the hospital all night, except two hours when she went to get him a clean shirt.

Jon remembers he said some things that night about how the bombing made him realize how much Midge meant to him.

Tony finds Judy throwing Jon's gun into the pond. He cuffs her and listens to make jealous excuses.

Back in the morgue, Duckie busts Palmer. He knows Palmer didn't need his help and tells him he doesn't need his charity.

Wolf turns his report over to Vance, pointing out that Vance didn't have his eval. Vance wishes he could turn time back to before, which explains refusal to change the paint color. Vance is still feeling guilty for driving his car with a bomb in it to the yard, and driving his kids around that morning. Wolf assures him everyone is safe and no one is blaming him.

Gibbs opens a beer at home and Abby busts in with Kyle. Kyle hugs Gibbs, thanking him. Gibbs opens beers for everyone, but they find Abby asleep on the couch.

Ducky Mallard), Sean Murray (I) (Special Agent Tim McGee), Cote de Pablo (Special Agent Ziva David), Rocky Carroll (Director Leon Vance), Brian Dietzen (Asst. M.E. Jimmy Palmer)
Guest Stars: Rene Auberjonois (Dr. Felix Blackwell), Michael Des Barres (Del Finney), Amanda Walsh (Ellen Roberts), Shelley Robertson (Navy Captain Beverly Sharp), Jim Hoffmaster (Administrator)
Production Code: 213
Summary: While on medical leave, Ducky decides to reopen a 12-year-old case by ordering the exhumation of a Navy commander's body. Meanwhile, the team also investigates a recent death of a Marine that may be tied to Ducky's old case.

Crews dig up the grave of Bruce Roberts in Arlington cemetery. Duckie presides, signing for the body. He conspicuously leaves the case number blank, blaming Palmer for not having one. But he's relieved when he's allowed to take the coffin.

At NCIS, McGee is lusting after a "life recorder" that you wear like a necklace and allow it to take photos every few moments. DiNozzo thinks some moments are better left unrecorded. McGee has been chosen as a Beta tester.

Gibbs comes in with the body of the week, a dead sergeant in Brooklyn.

Down in the morgue, Palmer freaks out that Duckie exhumed a body without the proper paperwork. Gibbs joins them. Duckie explains the body is Commander Bruce Roberts, whose autopsy 12 years ago didn't sit well with Duckie. He wanted to take a second look and now seemed like a good time. Gibbs reminds him he's not technically the ME at the moment. Duckie pouts about them moving on without him.

Duckie ruled the death accidental, Roberts drank himself to death, but then he recently read an obit for Landon Roberts – the commander's father – who died of a rare genetic liver disorder. Bruce would have had the same thing and there's a class of poisons that would mimic fatal alcohol intoxication in people with that condition. Duckie thinks it might have been murder.

On the current crime scene, the team find the dead sergeant was about to fly to Malta.

He died around midnight last night. His skin is pink, indicating possible carbon monoxide poisoning. They also found $50,000 cash on him.

Back at NCIS, they find Sgt. Hill was assigned to the Marine Corps Security Force regiment, providing security to high value targets. He wasn't authorized for travel. He has no record of trouble.

Down in the lab, Abby thinks Gibbs retroactively approving Duckie's exhumation was kind. And the test results show Roberts was poisoned with something that has to be synthesized, he was murdered. Coincidentally, the laptop of recent dead guy Sgt. Hill has a copy of Duckie's exhumation order on it.

Gibbs and McGee talk to Duckie, wanting to know who he talked to the exhumation about and they need his files. But Gibbs cites rule 38: Your case, your lead.

Up in NCIS, Gibbs gives Duckie point on the case. Roberts was an avionics instructor in Annapolis, but couldn't get into NASA's flight training program. Roberts was a widower who came from money. His daughter is on the way in.

Duckie sends the team to look through his old files.

Duckie and Ziva talk to his daughter, who opens with: "He's dead because I killed him."

She was supposed to stop over the night he died, but got stuck at work. He wasn't a big drinker, he just had a bad day: he'd just been rejected again by NASA. They tell her he was murdered and show her a picture of Sgt. Hill. She doesn't recognize him.

Duckie promises her they'll find out what happened. After she leaves, Ziva points out she inherited $14 million from her father and might actually be the killer.

Down in the morgue, Palmer briefs Gibbs and Duckie about the old chemical burns he found on Sgt. Hill's hands, from the poison that killed Bruce Roberts. He's now the prime suspect in Roberts' death, they think that's why he was running. The radiation alarm goes off in Abby's lab.

Gibbs goes there, it's a false alarm. She found dust on Roberts' jacket, from fake moon rocks. It set off her alarm. She gives Gibbs the name of a guy who would know about it.

Tony and Tony visit a NASA geek, Dr. Felix Blackwell, who recognizes the fake as one from Johnson Space Center, used in lunar engineering studies. But the irradiated stuff was supposed to be disposed of since it could be used to make a dirty bomb.

Back at NCIS, Duckie recaps that they think Hill killed Roberts. They wonder why Roberts would have wanted a fake moon rock.

McGee and Tony go talk to Roberts' old CO, who doesn't want to trash Roberts. She calls him her finest officer, but he didn't take rejection well. He made veiled threats against the DOD after he continued to get rejected for flight school and NASA. She still has them.

In the lab, Abby explains that Hill's carbon monoxide detectors were disabled after the system was infected with a virus. She also found something on Roberts' old computer, arranging a meet with Hill to buy something. Roberts was really paranoid about the police.

But in a later email, Roberts threatened to turn Hill into the Feds. They wonder if they were part of a WMD smuggling ring.

Palmer comes to Gibbs' house late at night complaining about Duckie. Then he notices Duckie sitting in the corner. Duckie frets about the way things are going.

Abby calls Gibbs to report she found another buyer. Gibbs arrives and finds Tony laughing that McGee got passed over for his life recorder. They traced the email from a "DF" to a PO Box then to the apartment that they're standing outside of.

They head inside and find music blaring and an aged British rocker inside. He has posters of himself on the walls. He's Del Finney, a one hit wonder from the 80s. Now he's a maintenance man for the building they found him in.

They take him back to interrogation, where Duckie joins Gibbs.

They show him Hill's photo and he denies knowing him. Duckie points out he owes a lot of people money and asks what happened. Finney bought a zoo and a lighthouse and some other stuff. He asks for a lawyer. Duckie sings "stand up Johnny, time to be a man", from Finney's song. He talks.

Back in NCIS, Tony reports Hill was selling moon rocks, but it's illegal to buy them. Twelve years ago there was a break in at a museum that had one of the rocks, but it was quietly recovered two years later from a janitor. Abby confirms that Finney bought a knock off.

Sgt. Hill was running a con. He gave Finney a sample to send to NASA's lab for testing. Abby points out there's no way any NASA scientist would have mistaken the knock off for the real thing.

Gibbs and Tony go back to Dr. Felix Blackwell, who comes from racketball but picks up a cane when he sees them. "Did you Keyser Soze us? I can't believe I fell for that," Tony says. Gibbs shows Blackwell Hill's photo. Hill worked security at the NASA rock verification lab when Blackwell ran it. Blackwell asks for his lawyer.

Back at NCIS, Duckie gloats over his win. Roberts' daughter comes back and thanks Duckie, giving him a hug. Gibbs comes to send Duckie back to autopsy, he's been cleared for duty.

Back in the morgue, Duckie sees Palmer come in all flustered on the phone. He's misplaced a liver among other problems. Duckie tells him he's back, Palmer is relieved.

There's a body on the slab from another coroner. They want a second opinion. Duckie fires up the bone saw.

Summary: The NCIS team has to find out the cause of the helicopter crash that was found on shore and locate the missing pilot. Meawhile, Ziva issues a dare to Tony and McGee.

A couple does inventory in their sea-side convenience store. The man sees the cooler to the water open and thinks it's kids stealing. He goes over and finds a severely dehydrated Marine guzzling water.

At NCIS, Tony tries to keep the details of his double date with McGee a secret, but he agrees to go out with the girls again. Gibbs comes in with the bodies of the week, the crew of Ghost Runner 12, a helicopter that went down four days ago.

On the scene, three of the four crew survived. Happ, the pilot, is still missing. Gibbs talks to the store owner and learns another agent was there before him.

Ziva is annoyed McGee and Tony went out without her and, after see Agent Borin (Diane Neal) behind him, dares him to pick up the next women he sees.

Borin was running the search and rescue. In the ambulance, one of the crew says the helicopter was hit by a second aircraft.

Back at the office, they run down the crew: pilot Oliver Happ, Chief petty officer Josie Sparks, Copilot Lt. Hank Joplin and rescue swimmer Adam Portis.

In MTAC, Gibbs and Borin listen to the helicopter's last transmission with Navy Captain Logan Doyle (Rick Worthy) and Navy Lieutenant Commander David Hernandez (Derek Ray) . The radar says it went down off the coast of Delaware, but they now know that can't be right since it washed up off the coast of Maryland. Borin wants to talk to the crew, but Doyle says they're not allowed until the crew is recovered.

Gibbs meets Duckie at Walter Reed Medical Center. Portis is in a coma, and Sparks and Joplin are recovering from acute dehydration, but don't have any significant injuries.

Duckie gives Gibbs a master key to access the crew's rooms.

Gibbs goes to talk to Joplin, who says they were flying low and next thing he knew they were bottom up scrambling for the raft. He's worried about his pilot. He now says the only thing they hit was water.

Tony and McGee dare each other to ask Borin out to settle their bet with Ziva, as they pick up debris on the beach. A scavenger pulls a knife on them, angry that they're taking his scrap. Borin pulls her gun on him and calmly talks him down, explaining why they need the debris. Seamus Quinn asks Borin out and she agrees.

Tony and McGee head to the water's edge to pick up more junk and find Happ's lifeless body washed ashore – with a bullet wound in his head.

Back at NCIS, Tony jokes that he should have asked Ziva out since she said the first woman he saw. "Cute, but you did have your chance," she says.

Joplin and Sparks have been discharged from the hospital. Happ has a great service record and a wife and six year old kid with a medical condition. Mrs. Happ visits NCIS with her son.

Down in the morgue, Duckie concludes Happ survived the crash. Gibbs wants to know if Happ shot himself, but based on the condition of the body, Duckie can't say for sure.

Borin visits Abby in the garage as she goes through the debris. She hasn't found any helicopter pieces, but the bullet that killed Happ was a .22, not Navy issued. Josie Sparks had one registered to her.

Tony sets McGee up to ask Borin out by getting her tickets to an 80s cover band concert. He fumbles his way through it and is interrupted by Gibbs.

Gibbs goes to interrogation and meets JAG Officer Nora Patel, representing Sparks. Sparks was disciplined last month for her .22. When Gibbs accuses her of killing Happ, she says Happ was the one trying to kill them.

Happ just found out his son has an incurable disease. He got in a fist fight with a superior officer and she found him drinking on the job another time. On the flight they found him messing with the radar system. He said he couldn't handle going back, facing that his kid was going to die. He put them into a dive. She pulled her gun, but they crashed before she could use it. She calls Happ a coward.

Gibbs meets with Mrs. Happ, who says her husband was fine. He confronts her with bottles of booze they found around her house and tells her he tried to commit suicide. She thinks he wouldn't give up on their son.

At the ocean, Borin calls in to get water samples tested. Quinn drives up. Borin tells Tony she's not going out with him, she only agreed because Ziva told her about the bet. She thinks it sounds like Tony has better people to ask out.

At sea, Doyle says he was friends with Happ and would have known if something was wrong. But he doesn't know about the fight Happ started with Hernandez. Hernandez says it was just over training times and wasn't a big deal.

In Abby's lab, she tells Borin there's nothing indicative of a crash in the water samples.

The Pentagon is about to announce Happ caused the crash. They get a call that Portis is awake in the hospital.

McGee and Tony go talk to him. He's still hooked to a ventilator and might have brain damage. But when they ask if Happ tried to commit suicide, he shakes his head no.

Back at NCIS, they've been running background on the squadron and found four of them applied for stamps needed to open an offshore account. Happ was the only one of the crew who hadn't applied, the fourth was Hernandez, who was originally scheduled to fly that night.

Gibbs and McGee talk to Hernandez, who immediately gets caught in an alibi lie. He says they were going to sell the helicopter, but Hernandez bailed and called in sick. Sparks and Joplin watch his confession from the other side of the glass, but still insist they didn't kill Happ.

Gibbs talks to Joplin. Sparks tells Ziva they faked the crash. They flew south and landed on a ship waiting to meet them. They were selling the helicopter for $300,000. They told Happ once they were in the air and Sparks says he went along with it, until they landed and then he pulled his weapon on them. The boat captain shot him, but they took the money.

They captain was supposed to take them back to the "crash" site but after the murder he disabled the raft transponder and dumped them. Sparks says they deserved it. The captain's name was Seamus Quinn, the beach scavenger.

The team heads to his warehouse and he immediately opens fire. Tony and McGee tackle him and find he has a .22 like Sparks, the murder weapon.

Back at NCIS, Borin asks Tony and McGee out for a congratulatory drink. Ziva busts them for their double date, they stayed in and played video games. Borin asks Ziva instead, who is glad someone finally asked her. Tony and McGee rush to join them.

Gibbs looks on the news and sees Mrs. Happ and her son. He remembers her asking for her husband's flight helmet for her son. Gibbs has it.

Summary: A petty officer is gunned down in a billionaire's Ferrari and the investigation leads the NCIS team to discover a link to a man Gibbs was named after.

A sailor races way too fast down the highway in a Ferrari hitting speeds above 100 mph. He speeds up when he sees a motorcycle on his tail, trying to lose them. He hits a dead end and stops the car. The motorcycle pulls up, but it's not a cop. The rider pulls out a gun and shoots the reckless driver dead.

The next day, Duckie concludes the man was shot around 1:30 a.m. Tony thinks the fact the shooter left the gun is a sign of a mob hit, or someone watching a lot of movies. ("Leave the gun, take the cannoli.") The victim is Petty Officer First Class Colin Boxer, 26. The car is worth $300K and registered to a corporation.

Back at the office, they find the car is registered to Vijay Chaya, a 27-year-old billionaire in town from California. Abby reports the shooter was a novice, not realizing they needed to file off both sets of the serial number. It's registered to a Maryland pawn shop.

At the pawn shop, the owner says she sold the gun to Kim Taylor.

Tony notices a WWII Congressional Medal of Honor in the case. It's illegal to sell them, but the owner says she happily lent the veteran who brought it in $3,000, not expecting to ever get it back, because he needed money. His name was Leroy Jethro Moore, Gibbs' dad's best friend.

At the office, Ziva reports Boxer had a night job parking cars at the Adams House. Tony and McGee go to talk to his boss.

Meanwhile, Gibbs and Ziva talk to Kim Taylor, a preschool teacher. Taylor recognizes a picture of the gun as hers. She gave it to her brother Kris last week.

At the Adams House, Tony and McGee talk to Boxer's coworker Bodie. He says Boxer took the Ferrari for a joyride. He says Boxer had a bookie named "the Gimp" who he owed a lot.

McGee and Tony find Chaya, the car's owner.

In the morgue, Duckie finds the slugs are .22s. Duckie asks Gibbs about his namesake. The last time Gibbs saw him was his sophomore year. He hasn't seen him since. He wrote Moore to congratulate him when he received the medal in 1996, but never heard back.

Ziva and McGee go to Kris Taylor's dorm room but find his roommate Alec Dell instead. He doesn't know about the gun, but says Kris was upset about failing a midterm.

Down in his basement at night, Gibbs call his dad, Jackson (Ralph Waite). He tells him LJ tried to pawn his Medal of Honor. When Gibbs asks what happened between them, his dad tells Gibbs to never bring up his name, and hangs up on him.

Back at NCIS, McGee reports Kris hasn't been seen in 24 hours. Ziva finds Boxer's bookie Joey Zambrano was busted by Metro police this morning. They get a call that Kris is back in his dorm. Gibbs asks McGee to locate LJ Moore.

Down in the garage, Abby has finished going over Chaya's car and has found nothing.

Ziva and Tony visit Kris in his dorm room. He's anxious talking to them and says the gun was stolen from his car. They see he's packing to leave and arrest him.

Gibbs leaves his dad a message reminding him that he once taught Gibbs a man does not hang up on someone and they need to talk.

In interrogation, Kris says he doesn't know Boxer. He says he was hiking alone when Boxer was shot. But his cell phone was turned off. Kris says he doesn't know Joey Zambrano, but is anxious and asks to talk to his dad, a lawyer.

Gibbs goes to visit his namesake Leroy Jethro Moore (Billy Dee Williams), who is happy to see him. After small talk, Gibbs asks why he pawned the medal, which get got for bravery in Iwo Jima as a member of the Montford Marines. LJ he needed the money to pay for a new wheelchair lift at his retirement home.

Gibbs says his father won't talk about why LJ left their hometown and LJ doesn't give details. Gibbs gives him his card.

Vijay Chaya comes to pick up his car and hits on Abby shamelessly. He offers her a vague job and invites her to dinner in St. Croix. She's skeeved out.

Gibbs comes home to find his dad waiting for him. Gibbs pushes for an explanation on his dad's feud with LJ. "He killed your mother," Jackson says.

Gibbs mother had cancer, but he knows that's not what killed her. She took her own life. Jackson didn't know Gibbs knew, but explains that she confided her plans in LJ and he didn't talk her out of it. Jackson blames LJ for robbing them of time they could have had with her. Jackson throws his coffee mug and shuffles off to bed.

In the morning at work, Gibbs is late. Ziva says Zambrano the bookie was under surveillance by police for a week and has an alibi for the murder.

They have traffic cam footage of the motorcycle following Boxer. Gibbs confronts Kris with the fact he has a motorcycle license. Kris looks at the picture and identifies it as his roommate, Alec.

LJ drops by to see Gibbs. He doesn't deny Jackson's version of events and says Gibbs' mom didn't want her husband and son to see her die slowly. LJ admitted he knew of Ann's plans when Jackson confronted him.

LJ admits he was in love with Gibbs' mom for years and had a special relationship with her until she died. After she died, and with Jackson mad at him, LJ didn't have a reason to stay in Stillwater.

Late at night, the team eats take-out Chinese and waits for news on missing Alec. Ziva finds he's in Mensa and two years ago he interned at Vijay Chiya's computer company.

Gibbs brings LJ home to talk to his dad, who he finds in the basement gluing the mug he broke. Gibbs says it's time to end the feud.

LJ says Ann wouldn't appreciate the way they've been behaving. Gibbs leaves them alone and goes to make dinner. "My god, you've gotten old," Jackson tells LJ.

The next morning, the team tells Gibbs they think Alec meant to kill Chaya. While he was an intern he suggested a file sharing program, which Chiya later patented and could make hundreds of millions from. Lawyers wouldn't take Alec's case because he signed a contract saying anything he developed as an intern belonged to Chaya's company.

Gibbs, McGee and Duckie explain to Chaya that Dell is after him and why. They suggest he email Alec and offer to buy him off and deposit $1 million in his account to draw him out. Cut to Alec checking his balance in West Virginia.

The team tracks him there and finds him camping in the woods.

Jackson goes to LJ's retirement home to say good-bye. He brings LJ his Medal back. He repaid the $3,000. Jackson invites LJ to visit Stillwater.

In his basement, Gibbs admires the new table saw he got from the pawn shop and uses the repaired coffee mug to drink his bourbon.

Season 10
Episode Number: 216
Season Episode: 6

Originally aired: Tuesday November 13, 2012
Writer: Nicole Mirante
Director: Leslie Libman
Show Stars: Mark Harmon (Special Agent Leroy Jethro Gibbs), Cote de Pablo (Special Agent Ziva David), Michael Weatherly (Special Agent Tony DiNozzo), Sean Murray (I) (Special Agent Tim McGee), Pauley Perrette (Forensics Specialist Abby Sciuto), Rocky Carroll (Director Leon Vance), David McCallum (Chief M.E. Ducky Mallard), Brian Dietzen (Asst. M.E. Jimmy Palmer)
Guest Stars: Brad Beyer (Marine Captain Joe Westcott), Mark Rolston (George Westcott), Glen Powell (Marine Sergeant Evan Westcott), David Hoflin (Randall J. Kersey), Chris McGarry (Lieutenant Commander/Doctor Peter Sanger), Vinicius Machado (Sam Mathis), Doris Morgado (Andrea Aldridge), Hector Atreyu Ruiz (Marine First Lieutenant Michael Torres)
Summary: When a Navy Lieutenant who recently returned home from the Middle East is found dead from a brutal attack, the NCIS team questions the victim's friend, Marine Captain Joe Westcott. Gibbs realizes the Captain is suffering from post-traumatic stress disorder, but knows his experience overseas may also provide a key link to the crime.

Two men run from five or six hooded men. The men catch up to both of them and, after being beaten, Joe watches as his friend Torres is dragged away into the night.

Tony comes in, delirious from his loud neighbors, who kept him up until 5 a.m. He accidentally took McGee's bag home last night and vice versa. He found his old Instamatic camera and is hoping Abby can develop the film. McGee also found Tony's old shag haircut boarding school picture.

Gibbs comes in with the body of the week, a dead Marine downtown. The scene is under a freeway overpass, he's

First Lt. Michael Torres. Duckie says it looks like he was beaten to death around 2 to 3 a.m.

They get a call of a young white male with blood on his clothes breaking into Torres' apartment.

They go there and find Captain Joe Westcott going through Torres' things, hoping to get him back. They break the news to him and take him back to interrogation.

Torres and Westcott have known each other since they were kids and served together in Afghanistan for several tours. Westcott was discharged for medical reasons, nerve damage from an explosion that killed four Marines, eight months ago. They wonder why he didn't call 911.

Westcott tells Gibbs there were five or six attackers that followed them from a convenience store. He confesses to Gibbs that he ran when he saw Torres being dragged away. He saw one of the attackers. Westcott seems to zone out for a minute and Gibbs snaps him out of it.

In the morgue, Duckie explains they found no evidence Torres fought back. He died from his head hitting concrete. They have DNA from one of the attackers.

Upstairs, credit card receipts confirm Westcott's story. There's bad surveillance footage of the alley with "ghosts" on the tape from it being re-recorded over many times.

Tony comes in, they ID'd a man who left the convenience store after them, Joe Mathis. He was at the convenience store last night and has a record. Westcott doesn't recognize him, but has a finished sketch from the artist of another attacker.

Gibbs meets with Torres' fiancée Andrea. She mentions how excited he was that Westcott was in town visiting, he was worried about him.

Tony and Ziva go to Joe Mathis' house. He has scratches on his face. When Tony tells him to come with them, he sucker punches Tony. Tony slugs him and draws his gun.

In the interview room, Mathis admits he left the convenience store right after Torres and Westcott, but didn't follow them. He says he was at High Points, a strip club, all night. His girlfriend scratched him.

Tony calls the club and confirms Mathis was there from 2 to 6 a.m. His DNA doesn't match the sample they have.

Gibbs wants them to look into the Marines Torres served with. Gibbs surprises Tony by suggesting they don't need to take another look at Westcott.

Joe Westcott's brother Sgt. Evan Westcott comes to NCIS to see his brother. Joe said Evan was overseas, but he's on leave. Evan thinks his brother was just confused. He doesn't want to give Gibbs much information and leaves after Gibbs asks about their dad. Gibbs tells Evan what hotel Joe is at.

Down in the lab, Abby has recreated the attack based on multiple attackers and the 10 distinct wounds they found. But based on her measurements she only found two types of impressions, front and back. Two attackers. McGee hasn't been able to find multiple attackers on the tape. They wonder if Joe was lying.

Gibbs goes to talk to Joe and finds Evan waiting outside. Joe won't let him in, but he opens the door for Gibbs. Joe's room is a mess and he's been smoking, to the surprise of his brother. Joe asks what Evan is doing there, even though Joe's the one who called him. He covers up his notes when Gibbs tries to look at them. He's written "I J I" several times.

Gibbs tells him the evidence says there were two attackers. Joe gets defensive and starts yelling about his "friends" being dead. He throws Gibbs and Evan out, insisting that he knows what he saw.

Out in the hall, Evan doesn't understand what's wrong with his brother. Gibbs says Joe is confused, but Evan insists he's fine.

Duckie finds Gibbs down in the morgue with Torres' body. He thinks Joe is struggling with the truth. "I suspect that you know all too well the mask that the captain is wearing," Duckie says.

Gibbs wonders what Joe's notes with "I J I" could mean. He's worried this attack is bringing back memories of the past one where Westcott was wounded.

In the morning, Gibbs tells Tony and Ziva to find out what I-J-I means and to look into the original ambush. They can tell by his clothes that Gibbs never went home last night. They think he's getting too attached to the case because he sees something they don't.

Down in the lab, Abby also pulled an all-nighter and they have clear footage of the attack – there was just one attacker and he matches Westcott's sketch. He's Randall Kersey, he has no military background.

Surveillance shows Torres and Westcott following Kersey. They also ID'd a substance from under Torres' fingernails: leather, like the jacket Westcott was wearing. They think Torres was holding him back.

Gibbs interview Kersey, a mild-mannered phone company worker. He ID's Westcott as the man who came after him, but says he didn't mean to hurt Torres. They followed him out of a convenience store and Westcott was yelling things that didn't make sense. Westcott attacked him as Torres tried to hold Westcott back. Torres was between them and getting punched from both sides.

Kersey says he pushed as hard as he could to get away and Torres hit the ground. Kersey says he panicked and ran.

He says Westcott came after him first and was crazy.

Back in the office, Ziva can't find Joe Westcott. Evan hasn't seen him. They get a call from the police that Westcott was spotted near the scene of Torres' death.

Gibbs and Tony head there and find Westcott carving "I J I" into a wooden door. He doesn't seem to hear them until Gibbs tells him his men need him. "You're not alone," Gibbs says.

Westcott drops his knife. "I think I need help," he says.

Gibbs shows Westcott the surveillance footage of him attacking Kersey. Gibbs is understanding and sympathetic, saying he had his "head scrambled" once. Westcott says he got confused and thought Kersey was part of the ambush that killed his friends in Afghanistan. He says he didn't know what was real and what wasn't and he was back in the ambush all over again, watching his friend get dragged away. Gibbs encourages him to face his fear.

Gibbs sits with Westcott and his brother as he meets with Dr. Pete to talk about PTSD. He's been having nightmares, insomnia and panic attacks for eight months. The doctor assures Joe he's not a burden. Evan apologizes for not helping him sooner. Their dad George joins them.

Ziva finds Tony being furtive in the break room. He got his camera developed and it has pictures of him as a young boy with his mom. He doesn't like to talk about her because it's too painful. She introduced him to movies. One picture is outside the last movie she ever took him to, "The Little Prince."

"That which is essential is invisible to the eye," Ziva says. "Ziva David, did you just quote a movie?" "No. I quoted a book that was made into a movie."

Back with the psychiatrist, George is not handling things well. He storms out. Dr. Pete encourages Westcott to call anytime. Westcott thanks Gibbs.

McGee makes plans for dinner later with Abby, passing on the all-dog talent show.

Tony gets the after action report on the ambush, the group responsible was the Ijia rebels, with strong ties to Hamas and Hezbollah. They pull up the surveillance footage of the group from satellite and zoom in on a group of men, including Randall Kersey.

Ziva, Gibbs and Tony head to his address on file. It's totally empty. In his storage shed, they find a piece of a building blueprint and equipment to build a bomb. They think he's planning something big.

Kersey), Chris McGarry (Lieutenant Commander/Doctor Peter Sanger), Matt Caplan (Marine Private Paul "McCartney" Patterson), Alexandra Holden (Brooke Fenten), Vinicius Machado (Sam Mathis), Marc Anthony Samuel (Marine Private First Class James Hall), Tyler Ross (Adam Horne), Minni Jo Mazzola (Jessie Cantrell), Hector Atreyu Ruiz (Marine First Lieutenant Michael Torres)
Production Code: 217
Summary: Gibbs continues to help the survivor of an attack remember what happened. The search leads to terrorists. Meanwhile Abby is making plans for the NCIS team to attend her Thanksgiving dinner. Ziva has plans to go to the opera.

Flashback as Captain Joe Westcott comes to get his men before their patrol the night of the ambush. Private Hall talks about how excited he is that his wife is pregnant back home.

Later that night during the ambush, Westcott watched helplessly as Hall was dragged away by militants, including Randall Kersey.

Back in the present in DC, Gibbs wakes Westcott and his brother and father up in the middle of the night to tell him Joe was right about Kersey. NCIS needs his help. Joe remembers that night at the convenience store, Kersey didn't look like he was there to buy anything. The after action report on the ambush says that Westcott and Torres were inside enemy HQ during the ambush, but Westcott doesn't remember it. Torres told him that's what happened. He remembers Kersey attempting to capture PFC Hall. Paul "McCartney" Patterson was nearby but Westcott doesn't know what he saw. Westcott agrees to go talk to McCartney with Gibbs tomorrow. Westcott's dad George clearly doesn't want to be there and says he has to get back to work in Ohio. Joe's brother Evan volunteers to stay with Joe.

At NCIS, they find Kersey grew up in LA and studied philosophy but after study abroad in India, he hooked up with terrorists. His girlfriend's name is Brooke Fenton, she's a caterer. Based on the remnants NCIS found in his apartment, Abby thinks Kersey has two IEDs.

Gibbs and the Westcott brothers visit McCartney. He isn't happy to see Westcott and says he needed him "before" but not now.

Flashback to the ambush, Westcott remembers McCartney went after Hall to get him from Kersey. He starts running away as he remembers being in enemy HQ, but Gibbs tackles him.

In the garage, Abby has created a virtual reality recreation of the ambush. She outfits Joe Westcott with a VR helmet and gun to help him remember. Meanwhile, the computer has linked the blueprint scrap in Kersey's apartment to the historic register and is searching.

Abby walks Westcott through the VR scene. Inside the HQ he describes a computer and satellite modem and wall covered with documents and maps. He saw Ijil written on one and a clean cut picture of Kersey. Westcott walks outside to the ambush, but the firing is overwhelming. He takes the VR helmet off and leaves.

Upstairs, Tony meets with Brooke Fenton, who is unnerved she can't reach him. She says he's always on chat, even at her apartment on her laptop. He came over to say good-bye before a business trip in India today. But later, they find he didn't fly out today.

Gibbs visits Duckie in the morgue for a profile. Randall's parents were killed when he was five and he was raised in foster care, but always ran away. Duckie thinks being part of a terrorist group makes him finally feel like he belongs. Gibbs says he pushed Westcott too hard and Duckie encourages him to reach out.

Gibbs finds him in a bar with Evan. Evan just got back from Iraq and says he can understand what Joe is going through. Joe disagrees and they end up in a fist fight. Joe says it's not the same because Evan came back OK.

Back at NCIS, McGee has spent the night going through Kersey's chats on Brooke's laptop. He finds a photo of Kersey and Brooke in front of his car and they finally have his license plate.

Gibbs checks in with Dr. Dan, who says Westcott needs to redevelop a sense of purpose and rebuild trust.

Gibbs visits Westcott, who's ready to leave town. Gibbs invites him to stay at his place. Evan apologizes to Gibbs for letting Joe drink, but says it was nice to have his old brother back for a minute. "Try to love the one you've got," Gibbs says.

Gibbs takes Westcott to the convenience store where he and Torres ran into Kersey. He remembers Kersey standing in the corner looking shifty and someone coming in the door. He passed a note to a girl with blue hair.

Later, they have Westcott's sketch artist description of the girl. They get a call about Kersey's car and head there. They find a terrified teenager who says Kersey paid him $200 to take the car and keep driving.

Back at NCIS, Gibbs thinks Kersey hasn't left town yet and is following his plan. The convenience store manager said the girl with blue hair was a regular so Gibbs sends Tony and Ziva to stake it out.

Back at Gibbs' house, Westcott can't sleep. He's wracked with guilt for letting Hall get killed. Gibbs tells him he has to keep fighting and accept help.

In the morning of the stakeout, Tony tries to get info out of Ziva about her opera date. There's no guy, she goes to the opera every year on her late sister Tali's birthday. But it's sold out this year and she feels like she's letting her down.

They spot blue hair and ask her about Kersey. She says he brought homeless kids like her food and odd jobs. The last note told her to meet him at a coffee shop today at 10. He was going to give her a box to drop off at union station, but she says it was "nothing bad."

The girl waits for Kersey in the coffee shop. He comes in with a small package and sits down. "You know where this is going, but I'd like to know when it's done," he says. Tony and Ziva pop out with guns on him.

Back at interrogation, they open the package and find a bomb. Gibbs asks him questions, but Kersey stays silent. Tony and Westcott watch from observation.

Gibbs shows him a photo of Private Christopher Gomez, who left behind two little brothers. He was KIA by Ijil rebels. Gibbs tries to appeal to his orphan side as he asks for info on the other bomb. Westcott gets angry that Kersey won't even look at photos of his men, including Private Hall, who left a pregnant wife. Gibbs gets in Kersey's face demanding info about the bomb. He cries and gives his Arabic name, then says he's glad he killed Hall. When he spits on Hall's photo, Westcott charges out of observation and into interrogation and attacks Kersey. As Gibbs pulls him off, Westcott remembers more about inside HQ, including that Brooke Fenton's photo was also on the wall.

Back in the office, Brooke's laptop schedule shows she's working a catering event, but they don't know where. Abby comes in to report she got a name to match the blueprint, a home belonging to Senator Geoffrey Roberts. He's hosting Thanksgiving for a Senate committee tonight at his house.

At the senator's house, they find the bomb in the kitchen, but Brooke has disappeared. They find her chef's whites and know with the roadblock, she might still be there. Gibbs sees her telltale ponytail. She's in a cop's uniform getting into a cruiser. As she looks for the keys, they surround her.

With Gibbs, Joe Westcott goes back to talk to McCartney again. He tells McCartney his head is messed up and maybe McCartney should talk to somebody, too. When McCartney isn't sure he's up to it, Gibbs references the fact he charged after Hall and got his body back. McCartney tells him he didn't do it, it was Westcott. Westcott remembers the ambush again, this time firing at Kersey and driving him away, then going to get Hall and dragging him out of the line of fire. Westcott is relieved to know he didn't run away. "You didn't run, forgive yourself for the rest," Gibbs says. "I just wish it would have mattered," Westcott says. "It mattered to us," McCartney tells him. He and Westcott share a hug.

At the office, they're getting ready to head to Gibbs' for Thanksgiving. But first Tony has a surprise for Ziva. He tells her McGee installed surround sound in the office. He presses play on opera and leaves her alone with her sister's memory.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates a teenage girl's abduction while Ziva and Abby team up to protect her friend who witnessed the kidnapping while Gibbs seeks information from a past connection.

A dad waits to pick up his daughter and her friend from work at a theater after a midnight movie. The other daughter's dad, Scott Martin, calls as the girls come out.

Just then, a black van pulls up and masked men try to grab the girls. Wade comes to their rescue and bravely fights the abductors off as his daughter runs for help. But the attackers get the upper hand and grab Rosie, shooting Wade in the process.

At work, it's the middle of the night but Ziva is in a great mood because her friend Shmeil called from Israel and she's going to get to see him on his layover. Tony pouts when she won't give him details.

Gibbs announces the body of the week, a dead Navy officer and child abduction.

At the scene, the victim is Navy Captain David Wade. Rosie Martin is missing.

David's daughter Lydia is waiting nearby with Rosie's mom, Connie. Lydia's mom is in the Navy, and on an aircraft carrier in the middle of the Arabian Sea.

Scott Martin shows up, he's also in the Navy. He heard the abduction on the phone and they raced over. When Gibbs asks Lydia if she can ID the attackers, Scott gets in her face and pressures her. She yells that her dad tried to stop the men.

Back at the office, they watch the theater surveillance. Gibbs addresses the whole NCIS office, which is on the case, along with the FBI. The men wore stocking masks and obscured the van's plate.

In MTAC, Lydia talks to her mom, Jennifer Wade, at sea. She's been given a transfer but bad weather is keeping her stuck on the ship. Jennifer suggests Lydia stay with the Martins, but Gibbs advises against it. Ziva offers to host her.

In the morgue, Duckie has ID'd black primer from the van. It washed off, meaning the paint job was temporary. Duckie advises Gibbs to take things slowly and not rush anything.

Ziva takes Lydia down to Abby's lab. She turns over the shirt she was wearing during the attack. Abby's analyzing the bullet that killed Lydia's dad and offers to try facial reconstruction if Lydia can remember anything.

McGee and Tony meet with Connie and Scott Martin, who have turned over Rosie's computer. McGee finds a chat log with "Diesel" who asked if she was working the midnight show and said he might see her there.

Gibbs goes to check him out, he's pervily selling pumpkins. He hocks a loogie on Gibbs' shoes, so Gibbs cold cocks him.

Back at NCIS, McGee and Gibbs talk to Diesel, a registered sex offender – for peeing on a Dumpster next to a middle school. He was posing as a college freshman, but he's 30. He said hi to her at the movies, but then says he went straight to work breaking down his boss' pumpkin stands. He says he doesn't know anything else.

Ziva talks to Lydia, who knows him as "Diesel the Weasel." Lydia feels bad she can't be of more help. Ziva tells her dealing with loss is very personal.

Abby brings Lydia her phone back. She sees that her friends are planning a rally at the bowling alley where her dad and Scott were in a league. She wants to go.

At the alley, Lydia is greeted by her friends and Ginny, who runs the place. Another employee, Fred, also says hi. Connie and Scott Martin show up and Scott immediately starts haranguing Gibbs for not being out searching for Rosie. Then he yells at Lydia about a description of the attackers, saying she saw them and must be able to give one. NCIS whisks her out of there.

Back in Abby's lab, she shows Lydia face samples for face types. Lydia gets a text that says "Help lyds, they hav-" She thinks it's from Rosie. They trace it to a burn phone in a trailer. There's a man's warm dead body in the trailer and signs Rosie was there, including the phone she sent the help text from. They're thinking the man was shot by his accomplices for letting her send the text.

McGee ID's the dead man as Sean Oakby, a petty criminal with no sex crime record. He's sent messages to multiple burn phones in the past few days, including photos of Rosie in a party dress. Gibbs tells McGee to have Agent Fornell find Miranda Pennebaker.

Lydia confirms Oakby was one of the men who tried to grab her. Gibbs comes down to the lab and tells Abby and Ziva the attackers are trying to sell Rosie. He asks Ziva and Abby to stay with Lydia and make her feel safe.

Fornell calls Gibbs and he asks about Pennebaker.

Cut to Gibbs finding Pennebaker (Alex Kingston), who owes Gibbs and can sell anything. She is offended at the idea she'd be involved in human trafficking. Gibbs knows, but thought it was worth a shot. She knows someone who might know someone.

Ziva, Abby and Lydia make themselves at home at Gibbs' house.

Miranda takes Gibbs to see Edgar Hayes, who works at the State Department and has some sordid interests. Gibbs asks him who might in the market for a kidnapped girl. He agrees to make some calls.

Duckie calls Gibbs to report Oakby had rosin used by athletes on his hands. Gibbs thinks of the bowling alley.

Ziva and Abby enjoy a frittata and a few beers. Lydia comes down from her shower. She remembered the other guy from the van was kind of pudgy with a beard.

The power goes out. They think it's an outage, but Ziva sees other house's lights are on. She leads them upstairs and draws her gun.

A man jumps on her in the kitchen and pulls a gun, asking where Lydia is. Abby sneaks up behind him and cracks him on the head with a frying pan. Lydia looks at him: it's Fred from the bowling alley.

In interrogation, Ziva and Gibbs talk to Fred, who says he drove the van but doesn't know where Rosie is. His ex-con buddy Merle and his cousin Sean came to him asking for girls, two for $500,000 to sell to a man who likes virgins.

Abby keeps Lydia company in the lab. Gibbs brings Abby Caf-pow and she reports she found motion sickness medicine in Sean Oakby's lab results, meaning a flight or deep sea trip.

Miranda Pennebaker waits for Gibbs, to report Edgar found their buyer is Claude Damien LeMonde, drug smuggler and perv who lives at sea. They know his helicopter will be landing at a field in Reston, VA in the morning.

Merle brings Rosie to the helicopter to sell her, but finds NCIS waiting for him instead. Rosie is reunited with her parents.

Lydia is reunited with her mom Jennifer at NCIS.

Miranda Pennebaker visits Gibbs in his basement for a bourbon. She tells him she's thinking of retiring.

Tony comes back to the office to find Ziva all dressed up to go out with her friend Shmeil. When he comes out of the restroom, Tony is surprised to see he's an elderly man, whom Ziva introduces as a poet and philosopher. Shmeil remembers meeting Tony's dad at a bar in Geneva. He invites Tony to join them.

Summary: Gibbs teams up with Fornell on a joint investigation after Fornell becomes the target of a shooting, but they face an unexpected twist in the case when their mutual ex-wife, Diane Sterling, gets involved. Meanwhile, rumors run wild among the group after Diane stays overnight at McGee's.

A mystery man waits for Agent Fornell across from the drive through where he's getting dinner. As Fornell digs in his car, the man crosses the street toward him and fires twice through the windshield. He looks to see if he hit Fornell and is knocked down by Fornell's hail of return fire.

One the scene later, Fornell tells Gibbs he's fine. He had a bullet proof vest on after work. The shooter was Navy seaman Tyler Brown. Fornell doesn't recognize him. Duckie checks his pupils and thinks he might have been on a stimulant. They find the matchbook with Fornell's license plate in the shooter's car.

Fornell and Gibbs visit a Navy bar, where Brown worked as a bouncer. A drunk bar patron says Brown liked beating people up and was dealing speed. Gibbs and Fornell are both taken aback when their mutual ex-wife Diane (Melinda McGraw) walks out of the bathroom.

She's an IRS auditor and says she's working, investigating the bar. Gibbs stops Fornell from telling her about the shooting. When the bartender comes back, he calls Melinda "Mrs. Fornell" and says the owner isn't interested in selling the bar. Gibbs is annoyed.

They take her back to NCIS and put her in interrogation for obstructing their investigation. She had two IDs on her, one in the name of Gibbs and one in the name of Fornell.

The victim was reprimanded for fighting and was in the process of dishonorable discharge.

Gibbs makes Tony question Diane, who is not happy about it. She says her husband Victor is at a destination wedding with her daughter. Vance interrupts, ending the interrogation.

Diane calls her boss from Vance's office and gets clearance to talk. She's not an auditor, she's in enforcement one of the IRS's agents. "Agents? And the Lord wept," Fornell says, aghast.

She was undercover in the bar. Someone is stealing identities from the bar. She used Fornell's name because fake IDs are expensive. Fornell is angry her investigation using his name almost got him killed. Vance announces the three of them will be working the case together.

Gibbs and Fornell go to check up on fake tax return checks.

Diane and Ziva go to check cashing outlets. She mentions she's taking a break from her husband. She wonders if made a mistake getting married again, missing her chance to go out and act crazy.

They show the check cashing clerk (Danny Nucci) the fraudulent checks. He recognizes them as belonging to Oliver Lambert. He gives them surveillance footage.

Back at the office, they figure Lambert is the ID theft ringleader. They realize Diane could be in danger and argue over who has to watch her.

She ends up at McGee's, complaining that her husband wants to leave her.

She worries there's something wrong with her. McGee assures her she's attractive, "at least on the outside." She asks McGee for a hug. He balks, so she insists. When she says his parents failed, he relents.

In the morning, Gibbs and Fornell find McGee, asleep, spooning Diane on the couch. "Holy Fourth of July weenie roast! What the hell am I looking at?" Fornell demands.

McGee wakes up protesting it's not what it looks like. Gibbs reports Abby has a lead on the accountant, an overdue payment on a rental house. They men meet Tony at the house.

They bust in and find a room converted to a walk-in freezer with chests full of seafood. "Right, of course. The accountant was renting a home for his frozen fish collection," Tony concludes.

The drunk guy from the bar is in another chest.

Back at NCIS in the morgue, McGee protests to Duckie, Tony and Palmer that nothing happened with Diane.

Duckie reports the freezer victim was Viggo Kiln, working with Oliver the accountant to chat bar patrons up for details to steal their identities.

Upstairs, Ziva and Diane work on a theory about the fish. Diane finds a shipping manifest for a shipping company in China on the border with North Korea. Others were going to countries on the borders of Syria and Iran.

Diane goes to talk to a customs agent she knows. She sends Fornell and Gibbs to look into the shipments.

In the lab, Abby opens up a tuna to show Ziva the fish had a cell phone in it. All the fish had them, from the same manufacturing batch. Someone used one to call Oliver and she tracked the caller's location.

They stake out the park. Fornell and Gibbs gossip about Victor maybe leaving Diane. Fornell tells Gibbs that Diane asked to be transferred to Gibbs' jurisdiction.

Oliver Lambert sits down on a park bench and Gibbs and Fornell approach him. He's zonked out and won't take his hands out of his pockets. They all draw on him as he says he was trying to set things right. "I gave them this week's payment, but they're worried, I think they might try and kill me," he says.

He takes his hands out of his pockets and shows he's bleeding badly from his stomach. He keels over.

Back at the office, Duckie confirms Lambert died of multiple stab wounds. He had thumb drive in his wallet showing he was embezzling. He had a statement prepared to give to the Treasury, but with his boss' name left out.

They get a call about another shipment, this one with DVDs instead of phones. Abby reports she traced the fish to a distributor run by Avis Boyle.

Diane joins them, saying he was a client of Oliver Lambert's. They think he's the smuggler, but don't have enough to arrest him.

Diane points out that with Oliver dead, Boyle will need a new accountant to launder his money. She wants to approach Boyle. Gibbs insists on going with her.

Boyle is at a wedding.

Fornell grills McGee on his couch cuddle time as they run surveillance from the van.

In the wedding, Diane sees Boyle and approaches him. She lays out her pitch and Avis goes to get his boss. On surveillance, they see the boss come in. It's the guy from the check cashing place (Nucci).

He pulls a gun on Diane and starts to lead her out when Gibbs gets everyone's attention by proposing a toast.

Then he gets Diane away from the check casher by getting down on one knee and proposing to her in front of everyone. The team swoops in and arrests the man.

Back at the office, Diane explains to Vance that Boyle was one of four distributors in the smuggling operation. The check casher was Gordon Fremont, running the whole thing.

Down in his basement, Gibbs gets a visit from Diane. She's touched he remembered how he proposed and repeated it.

Gibbs tells her to give Victor a break "for being him and not somebody else. You've got to let it go, Diane. I couldn't and I drove everybody away. The last thing you want to be is me," he says.

She assures him he's not so bad. She asks if he'll spend the rest of his days alone. "I'm not alone," he says.

Production Code: 220
Summary: It's Christmas time for the DiNozzos when Tony's dad comes to visit. Meanwhile, the NCIS team is "following the money" in order to solve a murder investigation.

Naval Air Station – Base Housing, Pleasant River. A woman comes home for the holidays to find her neighbor stringing lights. She comes in the door to a dark house, pile of mail and a terrible smell. And a dead husband in an easy chair.

On the scene the next morning, Megan Huffner explains to Gibbs she last spoke to her husband Pat at Thanksgiving and she'd been deployed in the Gulf for six months. She knocks him as an "unemployed Navy husband." There's no sign of forced entry and he's been there three or four weeks. He has no visible wounds.

Back at the office, Tony gets a notification his dad's flight into town has been delayed. He's not looking forward to the visit, which is bound to lead to an argument.

Abby goes bonkers with decorations in the lab, setting up an entire village. Palmer brings her the victim's personal items including a phone and cash, including a weird looking $100 bill.

At the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, Gibbs and Tony learn from Assistant Director of Operations Donald Linder that the bill is authentic. But it hasn't been put into circulation yet or even left a Treasury building.

It has all the latest security features, including color-shifting ink, raised printing and a 3-D liberty bell – it's counterfeit proof. It was supposed to be introduced in February 2011, but there were production issues, including creases in the notes. It's possible fully 30% of $110 billion in bills were printed with flaws.

Tony's dad calls. He tells him to take a cab.

The bill's serial number is from a batch that was shredded 18 months ago. Secret Service Special Agent Ashley Winter joins them, she says she's taking the $100 as evidence, but Gibbs sets her straight.

Back at the office, they can't connect Noel to the Bureau of Engraving and Printing.

Abby brings in Anthony DiNozzo Sr. (Robert Wagner). He informs Tony he's staying with him. Abby tells him about their tradition of watching "It's a Wonderful Life Together."

Down in the morgue, Duckie tells Gibbs the cause of death was a broken neck. Noel was also a heavy drinker.

At Tony's place, he has a flat screen and grand piano but no decorations. He greets his goldfish, her name is Kate. He has a spacious modern kitchen, with only pizza and water in the fridge. He's lived there 12 years.

Tony sets his dad up in his bedroom, with a twin bed. He doesn't have women over. His dad thinks he's missing intimacy and commitment.

In the lab, Abby lifts prints from her family's ornament dating back to the 1890s. She used to fingerprint all her relatives. She found Noel's print on the $100, and another belonging to Justin Cannady, who was fired from the BEP.

In the office, Ziva and McGee report that the Secret Service had Cannady's place locked down. Tony is working out his couch kinks on the floor. He reports Cannady had horrible credit and was broke.

Agent Winter arrives to brief them on Cannady, who was fired for being drunk on the job. He lost two fingers on the job in a shredding machine. She reports they found nothing at Cannady's. Gibbs won't let her people go through Huffner's house.

Megan Huffner tells Gibbs and Ziva that her husband over-drew their credit cards. He was always at Gillespie's Saloon.

At the Huffner's, Tony gets McGee to crack his back. Tony Sr. calls Tony to ask where his roasting pan is. He's preparing a traditional DiNozzo Christmas dinner.

Tony tells McGee about his dad not being around a lot and his dad breaking the tradition of passing down a signet ring on the son's 21st birthday. He thinks his dad pawned it.

McGee inspects a dying fichus and finds a false bottom with a bag of the new $100s.

Gibbs and Ziva head to Gillespie's, where the owner Pat says Megan calls the bar when she can't find her husband. Gibbs appreciates Pat's old time pick-up truck. He says Noel and Justin Cannady were like Cliff and Norm.

Tony comes home to find his dad trimming a Christmas tree. He moved Tony's piano and baked snickerdoodles using Tony's mom's recipe. Tony gets all huffy about his dad being in his space.

Tony ignores the knocks of his neighbor, a cougar. Tony gets a text that Cannady's body was found.

At the park crime scene, they find his body crawling with maggots. Gibbs is annoyed when Agent Winter shows up. He diverts her from the body.

Back at the office, they find that Noel had $400,000 in $100s. They wonder if Huffner bought the $100s at a discount because Cannady could use them until they were in circulation.

In the lab, Abby tells Gibbs that fibers on the bills show they left the Treasury in the trash.

Agent Winter comes down to the morgue to ask if the body has been ID'd at Cannady. Duckie distracts her while Palmer calls Gibbs down.

Duckie reports it is Cannady and his neck was also broken about three or four weeks ago.

Gibbs and Winter go back to talk to Linder, who doesn't understand how the money got stolen. He says the money was destined for the Adam County Landfill in Virginia.

Back at the office, Tony Sr. comes by in a Santa hat, bearing gifts. He tells Ziva he might be trying to make up for too many missed Christmases.

At the landfill, McGee is surprised to recognize Stewie, an old MIT classmate who says he found his calling in trash. He tells Tony that McGee was the school mascot, a beaver. Stewie recalls where the trash from the date 18 months ago is buried, and he remembers they had a break in that night. He remembers the date because it's the night the SEALs killed Bin Laden.

Tony comes home to find even more decorations. He's impressed and thanks his dad. But then he opens the door to his bedroom and sees his dad busy with his neighbor.

"I'll have to burn the bed now," Tony says. "You nearly pulled it off, it was almost like old times. You have to go just a little too far."

He's upset with his dad for breaking the rules of his house, his sanctuary. He wants his dad to leave.

The next day, Winter reads Linder the riot act. Gibbs calls her to access archival surveillance of the DC area, which was stepped up that night after the raid.

Back home, Tony says good-bye to his dad.

Down in Abby's lab, they watch the surveillance footage of the landfill break-in. It's dark and poor quality, but Gibbs recognizes the old pick-up.

Back at Gillespie's, they serve Pat with a warrant to search for $100s. Gibbs thinks Pat Gillespie stole the money with Cannady, then killed him when he sold some of it to Huffner. Gillespie is a retired Marine and could have accessed Huffner's house on the base.

Gillespie watches nervously as Ziva searches his office. He tells them where to find his safe.

Tony tells McGee he's not in the mood for "It's a Wonderful Life" and he left the DVD at home. He goes home to get it and sees his dad's Santa hat and a photo of his mom.

He turns on his tree and sees a small box under it – it's the heirloom signet ring.

Later, in MTAC, they watch as Agent Winter takes full credit for the investigation at a news conference.

Tony joins them late. He thinks his dad wanted to make amends and Tony blew it.

Abby shows up for the screening, with Tony Sr. in tow. Tony hugs his dad and tells him he loves him.

Summary: While the NCIS team investigates the link to a dead journalist and a Navy petty officer, Ziva is taken aback by the sudden emotional visit by her father, who she hasn't seen in more than two years. While Ziva questions the purpose of her father's visit as the Director of Mossad, her father insists he is in the U.S. strictly to see his daughter for Shabbat dinner. Ziva pays her a visit.

McGee stops by with word the victim was Tyler Wilkes a lowly-regarded journalist who is something of a government paparazzi. He's been working on story about drugs in the Navy and would have had many enemies.

Ducky tells Gibbs that Wilkes died via exsanguination and had several blows to his chest and abdomen. But the death was essentially an accident, as he had a case of mono of which he was likely unaware. One of the blows spit his liver. That said, the killer disposed of the body in a way that makes it clear he knew he had committed a homicide.

Open with a man fishing with his son. They end up hooking what appears to be a human ear.

Based on the uniform the dead body appears to be that of Petty Officer Second Class Grizmer. It has gashes on the head and hadn't been in the water long. But quickly they realize his uniform rank is wrong and his fingerprint doesn't show up in the active service member database.

Ziva finds a picture from when she wore a pregnancy prosthetic for an old case. Tony notices she was smiling.

Tony meets with Grizsmer. Grizsmer knowingly lent Wilkes his uniform in exchange for being kept out of the story. Wilkes wanted to get into Grizsmer's barracks to conduct research.

Grizsmer roommates are brought in and they are upset Wilkes was going through their stuff. They all confess to his murder.

After a workout Ziva is stunned to find her father Eli (Michael Nouri) hiding in her car. She thinks it was stupidly risk for him to travel in the U.S. Eli says he arrived that morning and says his business there is to see her. He assures her that his intentions are honorable.

Abby tells Gibbs that some high-end electronic equipment is missing from Wilkes' apartment. They still haven't found Wilkes' car.

Ziva tells Gibbs about Eli being in the country and even his own people at Mossad know he's there. She asks if he has any instructions. He wants her to keep him updated.

Vance's wife Jackie drops by his office with the exciting word that the kids will be gone that night and they'll have the place to themselves.

Ziva and Eli had lunch. She asks him about retirement. She wants him to repent for some of his past actions as a father and he seems interested in redemption.

Gibbs and Vance talk about Eli's presence in the country. Eli is supposedly on his way out at Mossad and they are worried he might be stirring up trouble during a precarious time for the Middle East. Vance had made a call to Homeland Security and learned that Eli's Iranian contemporary, Arash Kazmi, is also in Washington. They are concerned Eli is there to kill Kazmi.

Gibbs and Vance meet Eli and Ziva and mention Kazmi. Eli bring them to his hotel room, where Kazmi is waiting. It turns out Eli and Kazmi are childhood friends and are meeting in secret. The two recognize the need for open dialogue and are risking their lives to come together. They brought Vance in to help Eli remain in power. Eli thinks the potential for peace depends on it. Eli seems to be winning over Ziva.

Wilkes' car has been found. Inside the find a camera, along with a tablet on which his photos were backed up. They find pictures of his likely killer, but all that is visible is a hat.

Vance tells Jackie they need to have Eli over for dinner. She is not pleased.

Tony tells Gibbs that Grizsmer's bunkmates could not have killed Wilkes. They confessed just to make the story go away, as the story Wilkes was working on involved one of their friends. Ziva walks in and sees the picture of Wilkes mystery killer. Her face changes but she says nothing.

Ziva confronts Eli about lying about when he got to America. She shows him a picture of Wilkes' body. It turns out that Wilkes recognized him and began taking his picture. Eli tried to take the camera and a fight ensued. Eli covered up the murder. Ziva is distraught and doesn't think she can get past her father's sins. He asks her to join him for dinner at Vance's home, "one last time."

During dinner an angry Ziva leaves the table and walks outside to call Gibbs. During the call somebody opens fire on Vance's home, firing through the window into the dining room. Ziva chases the gunman, eventually wounding him and forcing him to crash his car and flee.

Tony and McGee arrive at the scene, while Gibbs helps Ziva track the gunman. Inside they see Vance is unharmed, but he is covered in someone else's blood. Gibbs and Ziva track the gunman to a garage, but he kills himself before then can get more information. Back at the house McGee tells them Jackie was hit and is on her way to the ambulance. Eli was killed and Ziva rushes to his body.

At the hospital the team waits hours for word on Jackie. There is concern that what happened to Eli will be a declaration of war.

Eventually Vance walks out and comes over to Gibbs. "She's dead. My wife is dead, Gibbs."

Production Code: 222
Summary: In the aftermath of an event that strikes close to home, the NCIS team unites to seek answers and demand justice in order to protect their most vulnerable colleagues.

Ziva remembers learning how to say the blessing with her father when she was a child.

Cut to present day, her praying in a synagogue, asking God why she should still have faith. Tony finds her. She's not in the mood for sympathy. She wants revenge.

At NCIS, Sec Nav Jarvis gets 48 hours from the Secretary of State before they tell Israel what happened. They caught the shooter, but not the ones who hired him. Jarvis is mad no one told him Eli David was in the country. Deputy Director Craig is on his way back to fill in for Vance.

In the morgue, Duckie puts Jackie Vance away. She died of a single gunshot. The shooter committed suicide by cyanide, but they haven't ID'd him. He also had less than six months to live, due to liver cancer.

Vance comes into the office to find Deputy Director Jerome Craig (Greg Germann) in his chair. He was buying chocolates for Jackie in Geneva when he got the news. He excuses himself. Vance asks to be part of the investigation. Jarvis will keep him in the loop, but says he can't be involved.

Outside, Craig assures Gibbs he's not interested in Vance's job permanently. Gibbs assures him he has his back.

McGee IDs the shooter as Roland Ames, a Swedish mercenary. Gibbs wants them to track down Eli's Iranian pal Kazmi – Gibbs dropped a bug in his pocket. They track him to Georgetown.

Down in the lab, Abby makes cookies. Ziva drops by. She knows she has to pretend her father is still alive. Ziva wants to know about the bullets, but Abby says she can't tell her.

Gibbs sidles up to Kazmi on the street. Gibbs pulls him into an alley and pulls a gun on him, demanding to know where Eli is. Once Gibbs is sure Kazmi doesn't know, Gibbs takes him in to NCIS to break the news.

Kazmi says he approached Eli about forging peace. To prove he's on Gibbs' side, he offers to share Iranian intelligence.

In MTAC, Tim chats with Gavriela Adel, their mole in Jerusalem, who has heard from her contacts that Eli David was going to visit Ziva. She says the First Wave group, a pro-Palestinian organization funded by an American billionaire named Gustafson, was out to get Eli David.

Back in the office, McGee finds a wire transfer of $3 million to the shooter's ex wife just after the shooting.

Tony interviews Gustafson about First Wave. He admits contributing because of his oil ties in the Middle East. Gustafson is about to call his lawyer when Vance busts in, full of rage, and asks Gustafson what he thinks about collateral damage to innocent people. Craig diplomatically gets Vance out of the room, then asks him, on Jarvis' behalf, to take administrative leave.

Duckie finds Ziva in the dark morgue standing outside the drawer that holds her father. She wants to take his body to Israel for burial according to Jewish custom. Duckie agrees to help, despite the secret murder investigation.

Tony and Gibbs come down, telling her to go stay at Tony's because her place isn't safe. At Tony's she sees that he has brought in her old friend Shmiel for her to talk to.

Back at NCIS, Mossad Deputy Director Ilan Bodnar (Oded Fehr) comes looking for Ziva and Eli. He demands they call Jarvis. They call Gibbs instead.

At Tony's place in the middle of the night, he hears Ziva making troubled noises in her sleep.

Back at NCIS, Jerome Craig briefs Bodnar on Jackie and Eli's deaths. He assumes the Palestinians or Iranians are behind it – Craig tells him the Israelis have agreed to let NCIS lead the investigation and the Israelis prosecute. Bodnar doesn't agree to cooperate.

Gibbs meets Vance. He can't even tell his kids who killed her. Vance tells Gibbs he now understands some of what Gibbs has done, getting revenge for his wife's murder. He asks if it was worth it, but Gibbs doesn't answer. Vance asks Gibbs to catch whoever did it to keep war from breaking out.

At Tony's place, Ziva checks her email and learns Bodnar is in town. She's upset he's in the loop and she's not. Tony tells her to focus on grieving.

At NCIS, Abby finds the bullets were Russian, from a batch seized by Swedish police last year. They were smuggled by an Iranian named Omeed Abasi. He's not in the Iranian intelligence files Kazmi gave them. Gibbs talks to Kazmi, who knows Omeed's name and is surprised he wasn't in the intel files.

Craig and Gibbs believe him and don't think Kazmi's involved.

Bodnar drops by, angry over having learned that they believe Kazmi really wanted peace. He thinks Kazmi and Iran are responsible and says it could lead to war.

At Tony's place, Ziva sees an incoming video call on Tony's computer and answers. It's Bodnar, he wants to see her. When she says no, he says he'll just track her down.

Kazmi checks with his office and finds Omeed was in the files they sent – but there was a six hour lag from when they sent the files and when they arrived. They were hacked.

McGee tracks the wire transfer to the shooter's ex-wife to a bank account in the Caymans labeled Virtue. They call Ziva, who says Virtue is "Tohar" in Hebrew – Ilan Bodner's middle name. He's on his way to see her. They roll out.

Tony tells her where to find the gun taped to the back of his toilet.

Gibbs and Tony arrive there first. McGee reports Bodnar isn't at his hotel room.

Jarvis, Craig and Gibbs brief Kazmi on the fact Bodnar is behind Eli's death, trying to frame Iran and take over as director of Mossad. Gibbs commends him for trying to forge peace.

Kazmi gets a ride to the airport in an SUV. When his car stops on the street, it explodes in a giant fireball.

Ziva and Shmiel prepare to fly with Eli David's body to Israel. Tony comes to see her off. She gets choked up and gives him a hug. He whispers something in her ear in Hebrew. "I know," she says.

(We would need a Hebrew expert to verify this for sure, but the title of the song that plays for the rest of the episode is "You are not alone" which can be assumed is what Tony whispered in Ziva's ear)

The team goes to Jackie's graveside service. Leon consoles his children.

In Jerusalem, Ziva leaves a prayer in the wailing wall.

Production Code: 223
Summary: The NCIS team investigates a Marine's car accident and ignites some upsetting past memories for Abby as a young girl on the trail of her first case.

Civilian Lila Cutwright and Marine Lance Corporal Chad Dunn are the victims of the car crash.

At the scene, Duckie immediately notices Lila has a wound on her head that doesn't match the accident. There are no skid marks at the scene.

Gibbs declares it a possible murder-suicide and orders the car taken to Abby.

In the garage, Abby looks at the spiderweb impact on the windshield.

Flashback to Abby as a young girl playing in the junkyard with Luca, wondering how a truck windshield got the same crack. She finds a teddy bear in the truck and resolves to get it back to the young owner, whoever she is.

Back in the garage, she doesn't want to tell McGee about it.

Upstairs, McGee worries about Abby. Gibbs comes in for a report. Lila Cutwright was 19, attending community college. Her father dropped her off at class yesterday.

Chad Dunn was 20, last seen leaving the barracks on weekend leave. Cutwright's father owns a drycleaner at Quantico and Dunn's father was stationed there 10 years ago. They knew each other as kids, but don't seem to have been in touch since fourth grade.

A decade ago the dads got in a fight and both men were charged with disorderly conduct.

Gibbs visits Duckie in the morgue. Dunn was ejected from the vehicle and died of blunt force trauma. He confirmed Lila was dead before the crash.

Abby is testing fragments of whatever hit her head and stuff that was under her nails. Duckie warns Gibbs that Abby is acting stranger than usual.

Gibbs visits Abby in the garage, where she has laid out all the evidence on the ground. She didn't find any DNA under Lila's nails and the murder weapon was made of chestnut.

She's spacey and distracted, but explains Cutwright was attacked when she was seated in the car facing out.

Flashback Young Abby cuts opens a 2 liter bottle and pours water in to magnify the name on the teddy bear's tag: Ricki Evans.

Ziva shows in Walter and Meredith Dunn. They run into Lila's dad Scott Cutwright, who accuses the Dunn's son of killing his daughter. Walter Dunn decks him.

Ziva sets the families up in separate interview rooms, neither will talk about their feud.

McGee finds a phone record that Lila Cutwright called 911 and hung up last week. Dunn called a disposable phone the night before the crash was discovered and multiple times in the days before.

Gibbs talks to the Dunns and Ziva sits down with Scott.

Walter says a decade ago Scott's wife died and he started spreading lies about his family. Scott tells Ziva he had an affair with Meredith and told Walter about it so she could leave him. Walter beat him badly. The kids knew about it. Walter claims it's ancient history.

Scott and Meredith exchanged letters last year and Scott says she was ready to leave Walter this time.

In the lab, Abby tells Gibbs that at the time of the crash, Chad was unconscious. First the killer whacked Lila then shoved Chad's head against the car and put him behind the wheel, using the murder weapon to hold down the gas pedal. But she was wrong, it wasn't chestnut, it was aluminum. She gets defensive and yells at Gibbs that she's not perfect.

Flashback Abby brings Ricki her teddy bear back. Ricki's mom died in the car crash and her funeral is today. Ricki explains that she can't have the bear because her grandfather gave it to her and she's only allowed to see him with her mom. Ricki's dad sees Abby with the bear and is mad at his daughter.

McGee and Gibbs trace the disposable phone Dunn called to his cousin, Brandon Singer, who owns an alternative energy company.

They find him tinkering with solar panels in the back yard of his house. Brian says he was supposed to go hiking with Chad, but he canceled. Chad and Lila were dating secretly. They reconnected after Chad found the love letters Scott wrote to Meredith and Chad tracked the Cutwrights down.

Brian says Chad was afraid what his dad might do if he found out about them.

Back at NCIS, Walter Dunn told Gibbs he was home at the time of the accident.

Gibbs says Abby called in sick, so they'll have to pick up the slack for her. He wants McGee to run DNA.

Gibbs meets with Meredith for coffee. She says she doesn't love her husband anymore, but he was home with her at the time of the crash.

In the garage, Tony and Ziva try to catalogue the evidence according to Abby's complicated system. They find a bank receipt for a $15,000 cash withdrawal.

Gibbs visits McGee in the lab, he's been trying to run Walter Dunn's DNA but Major Mass Spec won't cooperate. He checks the "Abby's Lab for Dummies" book (he's featured on the cover). Gibbs tells McGee to find Abby and make sure she's OK.

Meanwhile, Abby calls out Bingo numbers for old people. McGee finds her there after tracing her phone. He tells her everyone is worried about her. She shows him a small pink felt heart.

Flashback to young Abby with the teddy bear, with the heart stitched into it. She takes it to Jake's barbershop. Jake is Ricki's grandfather. Abby suggests he take the bear to her, but he says it's bigger than what she can understand.

Grown up Abby gets overwhelmed by the idea that bad things outweigh the good things, in which case why should she even try?

Back at NCIS, they find the $15,000 came from Lila Cutwright's trust account. They found job searches on the Cutwright's computer in the city where Camp Pendleton is, where Dunn was being transferred. They think Lila was moving with Chad. Chad also tried to get a loan for $5,000, but was turned down.

Tony and Gibbs talk to the loan officer, who really wanted to give Chad the money but couldn't justify it. Chad said he wanted to use it for an investment in something solar, but the paperwork made her nervous.

Ziva and Gibbs take a search warrant to Brian, and accuse him of taking their $15,000 in a Ponzi scheme. He denies killing them, but Tony finds an aluminum bat in his Dumpster.

In the office, Abby tries to write a note to McGee.

Flashback Abby watches Ricki's dad pack their things into a moving van. She watches as Ricki comes out and sees the stuffed bunny Abby left for her. Abby hangs onto Ricki's teddy bear.

Gibbs finds Abby with the pink felt heart from the bear. She tells Gibbs about having a bear as a kid that she loved to pieces.

She tells Gibbs she's trying to find a way to be OK with not being able to do enough good. He tells her she can't always see the payoff of the good she does.

He reminds her of the first day they met, when she gave him the fortune from her cookie because she wanted it to be about him.

He pulls it out of his wallet. "The things you do mean something to people," he tells her.

Flashback to Abby in her childhood home, surrounded by hippos and early goth gear. She cries to Luca that she couldn't fix things so Ricki could see her grandfather again. He assures her Ricki won't forget that Abby gave her her rabbit.

Back in the present, Abby reads the fortune: "Today's new friend is tomorrow's family."

Summary: The team looks into a hacker that could lead them to the most-wanted cyber terrorist in the world.

A guy on a bike wants to get in the front door of a building, but is stopped by McGee, who tells him to use the back. He goes in the back and gets whacked by a homeless man throwing trash out of a Dumpster – it's Gibbs.

The man, who is Middle Eastern, keeps walking and passes Ziva all dolled up gabbing on her cell phone. The man gets suspicious and takes her hostage. Gibbs draws.

The man tries to lead Ziva out, but when he passes the Dumpster, Tony pops up and grabs him, Ziva decks him and NCIS gets their man and his laptop.

He's been on the Most Wanted list.

Back at NCIS, Tony enjoys the capture. They took down Ajay Khan, the guy who hacked into MTAC last month, the No. 2 cyber terrorist, who they hope can lead them to No. 1. But in the meantime, the network is down.

Tony complains to Kevin from IT about the delay. He explains there are new security measures in place. Kevin gives Ziva a flier about an improv comedy night to give to McGee. Because of his beard, he says, he usually ends up playing a bumbling terrorist.

In interrogation, Ajay calls his lawyer, who can't make it until tomorrow. Gibbs doesn't care and forces Ajay to look at photos of Agent James Hunt, who was undercover when Ajay's hack took down the system and exposed him.

All Ajay knows about his employer is that he goes by M.C., but he doesn't know where he is. Ajay is glib and dismissive of Gibbs' threats, calling him a technological dinosaur.

Out in the hall, Gibbs tells Tony he said "UP address" instead of "IP" so Ajay would think they're dumb.

In the lab, McGee takes Ajay's laptop apart as Abby supervises closely. McGee is impressed by Khan's credentials – he also went to MIT and remembers a hack Ajay pulled there. With the laptop's power bypassed, McGee turns it on. The motherboard starts smoking, failure.

Down in the morgue, Duckie explains that Ajay is motivated only by money. He doesn't have any family or friends, he's the ultimate narcissist. Duckie thinks he would worry about losing it all or dying. Khan double crossed a terrorist group that's now being held in Guantanamo.

In MTAC, Gibbs conferences with Air Force Brigadier General Jack Mandrake to arrange a three hour intimidation trip for Khan to Gitmo. NCIS Deputy Director Jerome Craig joins Gibbs and balks at the idea of doing something off-book.

Gibbs visits Abby in the lab. She captured some of Khan's computer booting up on film before it fried. With screen capture of the video, she has an address of a warehouse in Anacostia.

Tony and Ziva check out the warehouse, which is big, dark and empty. Except for the dead body on the ground, covered in sores. Tony suggests the Hazmat team.

Back in interrogation, Gibbs Khan photos of the dead man, killed by ebola. He was the warehouse caretaker who doubled as a bomb maker.

Gibbs mocks the use of ebola as unoriginal. He mocks Khan, saying he bets he's not even the brains of the operation. Khan boasts that they should just wait a few days to find out. Gibbs has what he needed. Meanwhile, McGee waits in the hall with an orange jumpsuit.

Andrews Air Force Base Khan is shackled and strapped into a transport plane to Guantanamo. Ziva and Tony join him. Khan tells Gibbs he doesn't believe they're going to Guantanamo.

Gibbs gets off the plane as they close the doors and power up.

Gibbs visits Duckie in the locked-down morgue, where the ebola victim is on a slab. Duckie found a cut on his finger, which could be how he was given it. Duckie thinks he was given a weakened strain of the virus.

Craig comes to get Gibbs to go over the plan. He's not sure what to do if Khan doesn't start talking before the plane lands. Gibbs says it'll be up to Craig.

On the flight, Tony has to hold a barf bag for Khan. Ziva tells Khan that his former employers are at Guantanamo. Khan doesn't think they have the power to arrange to put him in holding with them.

Craig visits Abby in the lab. She found the ebola strain was developed as a vaccine by the CDC, but their system was hacked and the vaccine was shipped as a flu vaccine. Craig realizes this means that anyone who opens the boxes for the flu vaccines could unknowingly release ebola, putting hundreds or thousands of lives in danger.

Tony takes a call on the plane that it's time to change the game.

Khan still isn't taking them seriously as the crew tells Tony and Ziva to strap in for the descent into Gitmo. Tony takes out a syringe and injects Khan with something, knocking him out.

Back at NCIS, Kevin the IT guy nervously looks around for Gibbs with a replacement phone. Abby announces she has tracked the ebola shipment to the GPS-equipped delivery trucks.

Craig calls for Kevin.

Khan wakes up shackled in a cell with Tony and Ziva looking over him. He hears shouting in Arabic, Ziva translates: "Give him to me, you pig, you coward. Die!"

They leave Khan alone in his cell, surrounded by screaming terrorists.

Metro PD helps NCIS set up a DUI checkpoint to intercept the delivery van. Gibbs and McGee see it approaching.

Ziva and Tony bring Khan a tray of food, which he throws across his room. He still refuses to talk.

An army guard tells Tony and Ziva the base commander wants to see one of them, but because Khan isn't legally supposed to be there, one of them has to stay with him.

Khan enjoys seeing them busted. The guard leaves Tony a walkie talkie.

Back in DC, Gibbs and McGee pull the confused delivery driver out of the van.

In his cell, Khan waxes about grunge music. Tony tries to understand his motivation. Khan says it's about a steady paycheck and power. Tony compares Khan to Tony Curtis' character in "Spartacus," who just "minced around giving people sponge baths" and had no real power.

The cell door opens and Tony notices the guards are gone and the cameras are off. Khan thinks it's all part of the ruse until the lights go out, an alert comes over the loudspeakers and they hear gunfire in the distance.

Tony was required to check his gun at the gate per base protocol and he can't reach anyone on the radio. They hear shouting in the distance.

Ziva radios back, telling Tony the entire security system is down. It may have been hacked. Khan thinks his boss found out he was there and thinks he's going to flip.

Ziva radios Tony that other cell doors have opened. Tony goes to investigate, telling Khan to shut his cell door.

A guard walks into the cell block and starts to explain when another prisoner's door opens and he attacks the guard. Tony tries to help but is shot in the leg. Khan hides in his cell.

In DC, with the truck enclosed in a Hazmat tent, McGee and Gibbs don Hazmat suits and find the box with the ebola virus. It's rigged to blow.

Back in Gitmo, the prisoner throws Tony to the ground, gets the guard's gun and shoots him. Tony holds his wounded leg. The prisoner is about to shoot him when Ziva comes and shoots the prisoner in the back.

Tony and Ziva go for cover in Khan's cell as they hear more cell doors open. They have eight bullets to fend off an angry mob.

Back in DC, everyone runs for cover from the ebola bomb. It explodes in the tent, but is contained.

Gibbs gets a call from Craig.

Back in Khan's cell, Tony uses his belt as a tourniquet for his leg. Ziva translates a terrorist banging on the other side of the door, saying he'll let Tony and Ziva go if they give him Khan. Tony thinks about it, then agrees as Ziva points out Khan has been of no use to them yet.

They're about to open the door and throw Khan out when he agrees to talk. Ziva holds the cell door shut as it's banged on from the outside as Khan tells McGee back in DC how he contacts "MC."

McGee doesn't believe Khan's first answer and cites an old hacking trick Khan used at MIT to make Khan tell the truth. He gives them MC's IP address so McGee can track him. They radio Gibbs the all clear.

The lights come on in the cell, Tony takes the tourniquet off his "hurt" leg and the cell door opens to reveal Gibbs in the hallway and an unhurt "guard" and "prisoner."

Kevin the improv terrorist comes out and practices screaming in Arabic.

The team leaves the holding facility at Andrews in the blowing snow – they were never in Cuba.

Production Code: 225
Summary: While grieving for the deaths of his wife and the mother of his children, Director Vance comes across personal information he didn't expect and they make him doubt everything.

A Marine leads the pack on a training course, but at the top of the wall, he starts bleeding from his nose, falls and dies.

At the office, the team complains about NCIS Deputy Director Jerome Craig (Greg Germann), who's been filling in for Vance for two months now. Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week: a dead Marine at Quantico. But first, Jerome Craig pesters Gibbs to see if he has heard anything about when Vance might return.

At home alone, Vance remembers Eli David's toast with his family, the night he and his wife were killed. Going through his wife's files, he finds a bank statement with a huge balance and keys to a safe deposit box.

On the obstacle course, the victim is Lance Cpl Gabe Crow, 23. He has defensive wounds on his hands, bruises on his head and weird cuts on his leg.

At the bank, Vance can't close out the account because it's in Jackie's name only. He checks out the safe deposit box, which contains their marriage certificate, some of her jewelry and files from Mathison & Burke law offices and a big wad of $100 bills.

The victim rundown back at NCIS: Crow was raised by a single mom, was training for weapons tech, about to deploy on his first tour and had a spotless record. He spent time in juvie as a teenager but graduated at the top of his college class. McGee finds chat room records. Crow's mother got a call from him three days ago and said he sounded "agitated." He was sending her cash to help with her mortgage.

Private David Holland from Quantico comes to talk to Gibbs. Crow was involved in illegal backroom fighting in clubs in DC. Holland saw him sneak off base last night and come back beat up after midnight.

Vance goes to talk to Jackie's lawyer, Abe Mathison, who drew up the documents to separate their property. The lawyer can't tell Leon anything other than she hired him last May.

Vance leaves and calls someone to pick his kids up at school.

In the morgue, Duckie reports Crow had 13 wounds over the past few days or week. He died of cerebral hemorrhage from taking repeated hits to the head. The weird marks on his legs are older puncture wounds. He also had a stitched up wound in his side with plastic in it. His nails were split, meaning his killer will have wounds.

Gibbs worries about Vance.

Back in the office, they watch street fighting videos and find deposits to Crow's account after the fights. There's a sign for Williams Fruit Company in the video.

Jerome Craig comes to Gibbs with messages that the base commander has called three times about the investigation into Crow's death. Vance shows up, announcing he's ready to work – on the floor with Gibbs' NCIS team. Gibbs gently questions his motives and the team makes room for him.

At the fruit company, Gibbs and Tony talk to Ruben Williams, the owner, who knows nothing about the fight club. He recognizes one of his employees from the video as "Chucky Bang," a giant Samoan.

Back in interrogation, Chucky recognizes Crow's photo but says he hasn't seen him for three months. He says he was in the ER last night with digestive issues, but they notice his hands are covered in cuts. He says Crow quit fighting, but was good at it.

Tony confirms Chucky's alibi. Vance pipes up, saying Holland was written up twice for fighting with Crow, including three days before he died. Holland called for the ambulance, but not until 30 minutes after Crow died.

Vance and Gibbs pick Holland up from Quantico. Back at NCIS in interrogation, Holland says the write ups on his behavior are wrong and they called the paramedics late because they were trying to save him. He doesn't have any scratches or wounds on his arms.

Down in the lab, Abby explains Crow's side and leg wounds came from a jagged fiberglass tool. The stitches were bad enough she think he did it himself – and more than once from the same injury happening over and over again.

In the office, McGee looks into weapons Holland might have checked out and if he had any mental issues. Gibbs is surprised to learn that Vance sent Ziva and Tony on assignment. Gibbs tries to tell Vance they can handle things and he should go home, but Vance won't listen. Craig suggests to Gibbs that Vance might not be fit to be at work, but Gibbs argues they need to give him time.

Ziva and Tony watch over the Vance kids.

Gibbs finds Vance staring off into space in the break room. Vance shows him the legal files he found. He's rattled to think he might not have known everything about his wife. He wants answers. Gibbs assures Vance that Jackie loved him and urges him to go home to his kids. Then he tells Vance not to come back until he's ready to be there.

McGee reports no mental issues in Holland's records, but he did find a lot of communications with Crow. Holland got access to the weapons room the night before Crow's death.

Vance comes home to find Tony chasing his kids around the house with a pizza box on his head. He's happy to see them happy. Ziva tells Vance she's sorry about his wife's death, given that it wouldn't have happened if her father hadn't been there. Vance tells her not to worry about it.

Gibbs and McGee go to Holland's room at Quantico and find him dead on the bathroom floor.

In the morgue, Duckie reports Holland was also beaten over the same time period as Crow, but not as severely. His spleen ruptured. He had the same fiberglass bits in a wound.

McGee finds three other Quantico Marines with similar injuries in the last three weeks. They look into their CO, Jonah Ellis, in his first command since returning from Afghanistan. Jonah's brother was captured, tortured and killed in Afghanistan. He had the same wounds that the Quantico Marines do. Duckie calls it emotional transference.

At Quantico, Gibbs and Vance try to talk to Ellis alone but his unit backs him up. He says he's trying to toughen them up.

Back at NCIS, Vance drops in on Craig in his office. He asks Craig if he has a suitcase packed and says he'll be in touch.

Vance finds Gibbs in his basement, refurbishing a cast iron stove. Gibbs gives Vance papers – Shannon increased his life insurance at one point, worried he wouldn't return from overseas. Gibbs points out that Jackie did everything right after the attack on NCIS, she was preparing for life after him. Gibbs urges him to be OK for his kids. He says Jackie couldn't tell him what she was doing because she knew Vance would have left the job he loved. Vance asks what he's building, but Gibbs isn't saying.

Guest Stars: Valerie Cruz (Anna), Robert Gant (Mike Dunkel), Ricky Whittle (Lincoln), Joe Reegan (Marcus), JoNell Kennedy (Navy Commander Lisa Cleveland), Peter Breitmayer (Dwight Romano), Valerie Wildman (Valerie Kordish), Brent McGregor (Rodney Romano)
Summary: After Ducky and Jimmy fail to return to headquarters following a crime scene investigation, the rest of the NCIS team works to locate the disappearing duo.

Plumbers show up at a suburban house when they see a badly wounded man stumbling down the street, holding his stomach. He rummages through their truck and chugs the drain cleaner then froths at the mouth and keels over.

Back at NCIS, Palmer counts out $200 cash for McGee. They try to hide their transaction from Ziva and Tony. McGee gets busted for having a ticket connection and Tony feels left out.

Gibbs announces the dead body of the week: a dead officer in Richmond, two hours away.

At the scene, the victim is Lt. Gordon Roth. He was chased by police for running a stop sign before appearing on the street. He's been shot in the stomach and has bloody and broken knuckles, but died from the drain cleaner. Palmer and Duckie load the body in the van. Duckie plans to take the back roads to avoid the forecast snow.

An unseen person in a black SUV watches them leave and gets orders from a woman on the phone not to lose them. The SUV follows the coroner's van.

Back at NCIS, they learn Roth was sent to work in the Office of Naval Research after suffering hearing loss in Iraq and was an expert on high end military encryption, despite not having a degree.

Duckie drives while Palmer does a crossword on his laptop. Their van won't go above 50 mph. One of their tires blows out, which Palmer finds weird since he just changed it.

McGee explains to Tony that his cousin works for a concert promoter and occasionally gets him tickets. He didn't tell Tony because he knew he'd take advantage of it. They meet with Commander Lisa Cleveland, Roth's CO, who says he was very stable.

Roth oversaw the Navy's highly classified materials, the kind people might kill for.

On the side of a country road, Palmer finishes changing the tire, which Duckie examines with a magnifying glass to find the blowout. He finds a bullet.

A woman pulls up in a Mercedes and opens the back of the van while her goon holds a gun on Duckie and Palmer. She searches Roth's body, then announces "it" isn't there. They switch to plan B, which involves kidnapping Palmer and Duckie.

Gibbs goes down to the morgue for an update and is surprised to find Duckie isn't there.

Meanwhile, the ME's van pulls up to a cabin in the woods. There's a blood stain on the floor. They clap Duckie and Palmer in leg irons. The woman wants Duckie to conduct his autopsy in the cabin. She sends her men Lincoln and Marcus back to the scene to look for "it."

Gibbs visits Abby, who has the results from Roth's car and his GPS-enabled camera, which puts him in a park taking pictures before he died. She calls Duckie then Palmer and both their phones are off. She tries to trace Palmer's phone, but the error code tells her his battery has been removed.

Back upstairs, they know Palmer called the motor pool to report the flat. McGee traces the location of the call and pulls up surveillance footage, which shows the SUV trailing the van.

Duckie and Palmer cut open Roth in the cabin. Roth had a hearing aid, which Duckie can find no physiological need for. Duckie suggests the shooter was about 6 feet tall and skin cells under his nails show the shooter was white. Duckie opens Roth's stomach, sending their captors outside for fresh air. Duckie tries to come up with a plan to get free.

Back at NCIS, they have found the shot out tire on the side of the road and footprints and tire tracks. Tony reports Roth had an off shore bank account, funded by Cuban sources, a violation of Navy code. Old documents show that Roth's signature changed at some point. Lt. Roth is not Lt. Roth.

In the cabin, Palmer uses not-Roth's stomach acid to eat through his leg irons while Duckie rewires his hearing aid to use as a microphone to listen to their captors outside. Roth was supposed to bring them a package and they plan to kill Duckie and Palmer when they're done with the autopsy.

Abby runs facial recognition and confirms from Roth's high school photo that the victim isn't Roth. The imposter switched in 10 years ago on his Naval induction day, after he'd passed security clearances.

Roth's been using his CO's access codes to download classified files once a month. They think he's a mole.

Abby has ID'd Lt. Michael Dunkel's blood at the crime scene.

Back at the cabin at night, Duckie reviews the plan with Palmer.

With their captors back in the room, they explain that Roth was shot from his own gun during the course of a struggle. They suggest his attacker's prints might be on his gun. The woman gives her goons the OK to kill Duckie and Palmer.

Duckie suggests they held back information to ensure their safety.

The woman catches Palmer eyeing a teapot on the stove and Duckie is chagrined. She finds a gym locker key that they tell her Roth swallowed. Duckie tries to keep Palmer from talking, but he nervously babbles about finding the key and methane gas and a reaction with drain cleaner.

Duckie admits they're stalling - waiting for the cigarette to ignite the gauze in the oven.

Duckie and Palmer back away and the oven explodes, catching Marcus on fire. The cabin fills with smoke as the woman and Lincoln struggle to put out the flames. They realize Marcus is dead and Palmer and Duckie are gone.

In interrogation, Dunkel denies knowing Roth, even though he has a giant shiner. After some Gibbs yelling, Dunkel admits Roth was sleeping with his wife, Commander Lisa Cleveland.

He confronted Roth, but Roth pulled a gun. They struggled, the gun went off and Dunkel ran. He denies knowing about anything else.

Duckie and Palmer run through the woods, heading for the highway.

At NCIS, they confirm Roth's affair with Cleveland, whom he was sleeping with for her access codes. Roth had to kill himself so his operation wouldn't be compromised if he was captured. They think Roth's handlers took the body and Duckie and Palmer.

In the woods in the middle of the night, Duckie and Palmer hear gunshots. They left a message for Gibbs at the cabin, but don't know when he'll find it. Palmer snagged one of their guns in the confusion.

At NCIS, McGee gets a report of the SUV at a national forest, where people asked to rent the most remote cabin two weeks ago. They run the plates and find it's registered to a shell company that uses the same bank that funded Roth's offshore account.

In the woods, Duckie twists his ankle on a rock. They hear another gunshot. Duckie tells Palmer to leave him.

Gibbs and the team pull into the park in the pitch dark. They find the cabin and R9 carved into Roth's foot: Rule 9, Never go anywhere without a knife. They see a scalpel stuck in a mounted animal head and head out in the direction it's pointing.

In the dark, Duckie calls out for Palmer. Lincoln finds him and holds a gun on him, telling him to call for Palmer.

Suddenly Palmer busts out of the woods and empties his gun into Lincoln, who drops. Jimmy's reeling from the shock when Lincoln gets to his feet and holds his gun on them. He's about to fire when Gibbs and the team find them.

Another day, the woman goes to a gym and opens a locker. She finds a jersey with Palmer's name on it. The NCIS team finds her.

They have the USB Roth put in a sewer drain, they didn't mention the sewage they found under his nails. The key and locker belong to Palmer. "You've been played," Duckie announces.

Production Code: 227
Summary: A media frenzy surrounding an unidentified criminal prompts Gibbs' barber to question his son's involvement and ask for Gibbs' help in ruling out his son as a prime suspect.

A woman gets out of her shower and ends up getting stabbed in her bathroom.

Gibbs gets his hair cut as a TV news reporter Bart Crowley attributes the murder to the Dead Rose Slasher. Gibbs' barber Frankie is worried about his son Cameron, who's been acting strange since he got out of the Navy.

The Dead Rose Slasher sketch looks like his son. The murders started four years ago when Cameron was in college, then stopped for three years while he was in the Navy, and started when he came back home.

Frankie tells Gibbs that Cameron was thrown out of college because he was accused of date rape. The charges were dropped, but Frankie is worried because Cameron wasn't home on the nights of the last two murders. Gibbs offers to look into it to put Frankie's mind at ease.

At NCIS, Tony tells Probationary Agent Ned Dorneget that he has to take a newly re-instated probie test, the GS 11. Dorneget thought it wasn't given anymore, but Ziva says it's serious stuff.

The team pulls up surveillance of Lance Corporal Douglas Alexander driving off the base at Norfolk three days ago with a passenger. He stole over $120,000 from the office he was assigned to. Abby has ID'd the passenger as Melissa Tourney, a civilian.

The team tells Gibbs that Vance is looking for him, but Gibbs leaves.

At a crime scene of a Dead Rose attempted murder, Gibbs pumps the detective for info. They have no forensics, all they know is he's left handed. So is Cameron.

At NCIS, they've confirmed Melissa Tourney just flew to the Bahamas. Gibbs sends Tony and Dorneget to apprehend Anderson.

Gibbs visits Duckie in the morgue, to get him to ask his Metro ME friend if there's any information to rule out a suspect in the Dead Rose Slasher case.

McGee warns Dorneget not to let Tony pull rank on him on their trip.

Meanwhile, Ziva and McGee look into Cameron Dean. He left college after the date rape allegation in his sophomore year. He doesn't have a criminal record. Gibbs tells them why he's looking into it.

Vance drops by Gibbs' basement, bearing brownies. He got a call from chief of Metro detectives and knows Duckie talked to the Metro ME. Gibbs tells him it's not official, he's just checking something out for a friend.

McGee watches Cameron Dean at a packed bar. Ziva sidles up to him at the bar. He's taking pictures of a girl in the corner and isn't interested in Ziva at all. When the girl leaves, he follows. She fits the profile of the other victims.

Tony relaxes poolside in the Bahamas, on stakeout. Dorneget joins him. Melissa is hanging out by the pool, with no sign of Douglas Alexander.

At NCIS, McGee and Ziva report that Cameron followed the woman home last night, then went home.

Metro Detective Bill Shard drops in on Gibbs, demanding the name of his suspect. Gibbs gives him nothing.

Shard chats up Ziva on his way out.

Duckie reports to Gibbs that the two recent murders were the same as the ones three years ago and were committed by someone left handed, using the same knife for each. The ME told him all the victims were IV drug users, and he knows there's something they're not telling him.

On the beach, Dorneget shoots down Tony's attempts to senior agent boss him. Tony notices Melissa checking him out and goes to talk to her. She thinks Tony and Dorneget are a couple.

At NCIS, they watch a Crowley news report about another Dead Rose Slasher victim. Shard calls Gibbs to tell him he's picking up Cameron Dean as a suspect. He read Dean's name off Ziva's desk.

Gibbs tells McGee to pick Dean up first, has Ziva check that the victim isn't the woman Dean followed and he goes to talk to his barber.

Gibbs tells Frankie that they got careless and his son is going to be questioned.

In interrogation at NCIS, Gibbs talks to Cameron. He says he went to look for work at a construction company first thing in the morning. Gibbs asks why he was following the woman last night. Cameron says she's the wife of an old shipmate of his who worried she might be cheating. He followed her to make sure.

Detective Shard busts into the interrogation viewing room and demands NCIS release Cameron to his custody. When Gibbs joins them, Vance says Metro PD is sending over their evidence for NCIS review since they're backed up.

In the Bahamas, Dorneget is buried in his NCIS regulation manual studying for the GS 11 when he looks up and sees Douglas Anderson walk into the resort.

Melissa goes to meet him and Tony intercepts Anderson in the lobby. He turns to run and decks Dorneget. Anderson runs through the hotel and out onto the beach, where Tony and Dorneget manage to tackle him.

Vance asks Abby to help his daughter with her science project. She's thrilled.

Metro PD's forensic specialist Ramsey Boone, an old friend of Abby's, brings the Dead Rose Slasher evidence to the garage.

McGee confirms Cameron's Navy friend did ask him to follow his wife, and Ziva confirms Cameron did go to the construction site looking for work.

Tony and Dorneget bring Anderson back in custody and most of the money he stole.

Abby and Boone plow through the evidence in her lab. Gibbs drops by with Caf Pows. Abby reports that the Slasher left a plain silver wedding band in each of his victim's mouths and only three people knew: the Metro ME, Detective Shard and Boone.

Abby found the killer's DNA on a rose thorn left on the second victim. It doesn't belong to Cameron Dean; it belongs to Leo Winkler, a man who died after the early murders. The most recent ones were by a copy cat.

Dorneget is psyched they're working on the Dead Rose Slasher case; he taped all the news coverage to stay up on the case while they were gone.

Winkler was born to a drug addicted woman whose name was Rose, which is why he left roses on the victims. They explain why Dean couldn't have done it.

Dean asks Gibbs why they suspected him. They run into his dad and Cameron walks off angry that his dad thought he was a serial killer. Gibbs goes after him and urges him to talk to him.

Vance and Gibbs ask Shard who else could have known about the wedding rings in the victims' mouths. Shard realizes he gave a redacted report on the Slasher to the TV reporter covering the case, Bart Crowley.

McGee reviews the documents and finds Shard missed blacking out one reference to the wedding band in the file. Crowley didn't have any major stories during the three year murder lull, but now he's back in the spotlight. They go to check where he was yesterday morning.

Vance finds Dorneget studying for his GS 11 exam and tells him they haven't given that test for years. Ziva only went along because Tony pulled the same stunt with her and she studied for three months. Vance suggests they teach Tony a lesson.

Up in NCIS, Ziva finds Bart Crowley's car was parked two blocks away from yesterday's crime scene. His cell phone was off during the time of the murder. Dorneget volunteers that Crowley is left handed.

Shard goes to get a warrant and Dorneget leaves an important-looking inter office memo envelope on Tony's desk.

Crowley gives a report on the latest murder when Gibbs and Shard pull up and interrupt. They tell him about the copycat and that they just found roses, rings and a knife in the suspect's apartment - his. Crowley's camera crew records his arrest.

Tony comes in in the morning and opens his memo, his Bahamas expense report. It's been rejected and he's being audited for the past two years.

Frankie cuts Gibbs hair again. Cameron comes in as Gibbs leaves.

Gibbs watches the men talk and calls his dad.

Production Code: 228
Summary: A marine skilled in K-9 bomb detection is killed on duty in Afghanistan and his wife begs the NCIS team to conduct their own investigation.

Open in a war zone as a bomb-sniffing dog helps get a kid out of a mine field. Just after the child is rescued the dog's handler is shot by an unseen sniper.

The team discusses Vance having trouble picking a nanny for his kid. A woman drops by looking for Gibbs. She is the wife of Ted, the man killed in Kabul in the opening. The military has told her he was killed by an enemy sniper, but she shows him a message he sent her about having done something stupid that "will piss some people off." It was sent the day before his death.

Ducky says the cause of death was a sniper wound and he's not sure the distance. The helmet trapped a small piece of metal.

Abby looks at the metal shard which is part of a armor-piercing alloy produced in the United States.

The team tells Gibbs that a James Virgil witnessed Ted's death. Word is that Ted's station had recently lost several clips of ammo.

Virgil tells the team he never saw the sniper, just heard it. He says Ted and his dog Dex helped save their lives. Virgil gets angry when he's asked if Ted had any enemies. Virgil said he had recently offered him a job and that Ted didn't want any trouble.

Gibbs asks Ted's widow if he had any issues at work, anything on the base with other Marines. She says he was easy-going, then starts to talk about a fight he'd had at the base six months earlier. It was with a trainer named Pit who Ted thought had been rough with Dex. Since he's only four, Dex will be headed by to the war.

Vance meets with yet another potential nanny. The team tells Gibbs that Pit's real name is Norman. He's a 61-year old civilian contractor, the Marines' dog whisperer who recently returned to the states. The incident report said that punches were thrown and the two were ordered to stay away from one another.

McGee and Anthony stop by to see Norman, who immediately lets two attack dogs loose on them.

Norman is brought to NCIS where he's questioned by McGee and Anthony. He says Ted was too overprotective of Dex but assures them there was no bad blood. He says he recommended Ted for the post he had because he thought him and Dex were "top shelf."

Vance interviews one more nanny, a young one with a social media obsession. Afterwards he tells Gibbs the whole nanny idea was a huge mistake. Gibbs gives him a brief update on the Ted case.

Ted's widow brings Dex to the office. She shows Gibbs an expensive-looking necklace she received from him in the mail. It was dated two weeks ago.

Abby analyzing the necklace and finds the gem and jewels are real. The design seems Middle Eastern.

Gibbs walks Ted's widow home and she thanks him for his help. She goes inside and Dex begins growling. He goes after a robber and is able to pull something out of hand and force him to drop jewelry. Gibbs doesn't think the intruder was after the jewels.

The team figures out the pendant on the necklace contains the crest of a wealthy Afghani family who owned a jewelry shop but has left the country for Pakistan. It's worth about $9,000.

Gibbs tells Vance he thinks the team should go to Afghanistan. He takes McGee and Dex.

The NCIS team arrives in Afghanistan and is told they believe they've found the sniper. He was killed and the Marines say it was Virgil and his contractors.

Back in the states Ziva talks to Vance about his nanny choice. He admits being worried that hiring someone will make it feel like he's moving on and make his wife's death more final. She tells him to use his own timeline.

Gibbs thinks the sniper would have targeted the dog before he would the handler. Virgil and another military contractor tell Gibbs the Marines were the ones who got the sniper. They both say they heard the shot come from the mountain, which is where the Taliban were rounded up. Gibbs tells him what they heard was the echo and the sniper is still at large.

Abby finds a dog hair on the shirt sleeve Dex ripped off the attacker. It's from a Doberman, the same breed Norman has.

It turns out Norman's uncle was the one who tried to break into Ted's place. He was working with someone to bring back jewels from Afghanistan but won't give Ziva a name.

Ted's replacement want to take Dex to a few locations Virgil says need sniffed out. Gibbs tells him to hold on.

Instead Gibbs and McGee bring Virgil to the location. They've figured out that Virgil was having Dex help clear buildings of bombs so they could take valuables left behind. Virgil gave Ted the pendant to try and buy him off and then had Norman's nephew try to steal it back to cover his tracks. Virgil's buddy, a former special forces sniper, was the one who killed Ted. When he realizes he's been found out the man pulls a gun on Gibbs. Dex helps save the day and Gibbs shoots the man. It appears that Dex is hit.

A final nanny candidate named Laura shows up at Vance's office. When he tells her he's no longer hiring she calls him out for wasting the time of some of her fellow nannies. She says she sympathizes with his plight but assures him she would never try to replace their mother. He then asks her to meet his kids.

After Ted's funeral Gibbs speaks with his widow. She says Ted would have liked to know that Dex helped. He tells her Dex was shot and has been officially retired. She is overjoyed.

Production Code: 229
Summary: A massive storm brings the NCIS team aboard the USS Borealis, where everyone becomes a suspect once the crime scene proves that Mother Nature wasn't the only culprit. Tension builds when McGee discovers that his estranged father, Navy Admiral John McGee, was on board during the incident.

On a ship at sea in a storm, a captain gets a report of a person above deck.

Two men are sent out in the pounding surf to look for whoever is out there. They strap in to the ship's cables and see a man prone on the deck. He's not moving. It's the doctor and he's dead.

In the office, Tony and Ziva wonder why McGee might be late. Gibbs arrives with the body of the week aboard the USS Borealis.

Cut to McGee in his car with a kid named Adam, volunteering as a Big Brother. He's driving Adam to his field trip in Colonial Williamsburg because his mom is sick.

Aboard the destroyer, the body has been moved – by their old pal NCIS Special Agent Stan Burley (Joel Gretsch). McGee arrives an hour and 46 minutes late, apologizing.

Below, Duckie finds a puncture wound on the victim's neck.

The officer on board, Navy Lieutenant Carlton Mane, wants to talk to Gibbs. He's an admiral's aide and worried about keeping his admiral on schedule. Gibbs informs him the admiral can't leave the ship crime scene. The admiral arrives to talk to Gibbs himself. McGee sees who it is with interest. It's his dad.

He reiterates what Gibbs said that no one can leave until they finish investigating. "Understandable, but I have some place I have to be," says dad McGee (Jamey Sheridan). "Been hearing that my whole life," replies young McGee. "Good to see you, too, son."

McGee sits down with his dad, John, and Gibbs. He was on two other carriers before the Borealis and boarded during battle exercises.

As Gibbs asks questions, John turns on his son and critiques him. McGee says his dad was never there and his family was the Navy.

Ziva and Burley question Petty Officer Graves, who tells them Haber was about to come forward about a crew member's illegal drug use of an amphetamine/ADHD drug cocktail used to stay awake, but he doesn't know who.

Back at NCIS, Vance tells Gibbs that Sec-Nav said Admiral McGee should be allowed to leave the ship because he's on the fast track for a cabinet appointment. Gibbs isn't a fan.

On the ship, Burley asks Ziva how the investigation into her father's death is going. They still don't have suspects. They find Dr. Haber's medical records of the crew. Stan and Ziva pair off to investigate and Tony thinks he sees some sparks.

Gibbs joins Duckie and Palmer in the lab. They found a piece of a broken needle in his neck and are waiting on the tox reports from Abby. Duckie finds it surprising that the attacker was able to hit Haber's carotid artery during the rough squall.

Back at NCIS, Tony worries that Burley might be preying on Ziva when she's vulnerable.

Tony reports Petty Officer First Class Wyeth made repeated trips to sick bay for minor issues. He has a juvy drug record and has been under suspicion for drug use since being in the Navy.

Back on the ship to talk to Wyeth, Tony gently warns Burley to go easy with Ziva. But Burley tells him he's engaged.

They see Wyeth – and he runs. They chase him through the ship and he sneaks up on Burley and decks him. Tony drops him.

Back at NCIS with Wyeth in interrogation, Tony has blood results that show he's on five different drugs. Tony notices he has the shakes – and couldn't possibly have hit Haber's carotid.

Down in the lab, Abby tries to stab a dummy in the carotid and can't do it. The needle used on Haber contained a slow-acting strychnine that led to paralysis and eventually asphyxiation. She thinks whoever did it must have been very skilled.

Abby encourages Tim to stand up to his dad. "Abby, he's the admiral, no one talks to him, they just listen," McGee says.

Upstairs, McGee's "little brother" Adam oogles Ziva. He took the bus from Williamsburg. He was supposed to share a motel room with a bully. McGee encourages him to stand up to him.

Back on the destroyer, Burley has found surveillance of Haber being jabbed in the neck, but the attacker's face is obscured. Footage also shows Petty Officer Graves sneaking into Haber's office and removing data from his computer.

Graves tried to be a SEAL and excelled in hand to hand combat, but couldn't handle the psych pressure. They wonder if he was selling drugs to the crew.

Vance sits down with John McGee and asks about Tim's status at NCIS.

"I want to know if he'll ever amount to anything more than an overpaid paper-pusher," dad says.

"Special Agent McGee is a valuable asset to this team. As a Navy officer and as a father, you should be proud of what your son has accomplished," Vance says.

McGee doesn't respond when Vance asks why he suddenly cares.

On the ship, Graves didn't report for duty. Burley gets a call that an ambulance is waiting to pick up a crew member with a ruptured appendix. They find Graves in back, having faked it.

Back in interrogation, Gibbs tells him half the crew gave him up. He says he was trying to get rid of the paper trail on the doctor's computer. He doesn't have an answer for why he first told them about the drugs.

In the office late at night, Gibbs commends McGee for working with Adam. McGee says he was thinking about moving on from it because he doesn't have the time. Gibbs encourages him to "let him know who you are." McGee wonders if Gibbs is talking about his dad or Adam.

McGee calls his dad to go for a walk. His dad knows how much his mom hates it when they fight, but they don't resolve anything.

At the office, they find a $10,000 payment to Graves. They track the missing sign in log – on a tablet – to John Hamilton University.

On campus, McGee and Tony track the tablet and Tony brings up fathers. "The fact is, fathers start out as heroes and they end up disappointing," Tony says.

McGee doesn't think his dad will ever understand him.

They track the tablet to a pick-up basketball game where one of the players turns it over. He found it in the trash yesterday.

Back at NCIS, McGee checks out the tablet. The last to sign in was Henry Newbolt, which McGee immediately recognizes as the name of his dad's favorite poet. He used a pseudonym to see the doctor.

McGee tries to discourage Gibbs from bringing his dad in, but Gibbs insists.

In interrogation, John McGee says he was with his staff the entire time on the ship. The admiral gets indignant when Gibbs asks about the phony sign-in, then asks who's on the other side of the interrogation glass, if Tim is.

"You make him think he's nothing, you're the one with nothing," Gibbs says.

Gibbs asks why he'd lie.

"Because I'm sick, no one could know. Stage 4," he says. He didn't feel well when they started the exercises so he transferred to see Haber, but Haber was going to report his illness, which would mean the end of his career.

Gibbs points out that could give him motive, but he doesn't really mean it.

Watching from the other side, Tim cries as he learns about his dad's illness.

Ziva, Tony and Gibbs talk to Vance. They wonder who would have motive to keep the admiral's illness quiet and was close enough to know about it. Tony goes to look into the admiral's aide, Carlton Mane, but Vance offers his own computer.

Mane's a former intel officer who worked black ops. There's a letter in his file from the admiral requesting Mane go with him to the White House if he's appointed.

Gibbs, McGee and John McGee confront Mane, who says John McGee treated him like family. John McGee asks him outright why he killed Haber. Mane says he had to do something to keep Haber quiet.

"You taught me that commitment to success comes first," Mane says. "I was wrong," says John McGee.

Back at NCIS, McGee is thinking about calling his dad to talk. And he's staying on as Adam's big brother. Gibbs says it might be time for McGee's dad to learn from him.

He gets a call from his dad.

They go for another walk. McGee asks if the rest of his family knows and suggests he call his mom. John McGee says Tim's mother would like them just talking a walk together.

Summary: When a Navy reservist returns home to find her husband missing and her living room covered in blood, she turns to the NCIS team to bring him home. Meanwhile, Tony suspects that Ziva is planning a risky move to avenge her father's death.

Noah Daniels' wife Callie comes home from her business trip and finds their living room trashed and her husband's phone on the floor. There's a blood trail on the floor and the back door is open. Her neighbor Ben comes in, the back door has been open all morning. Noah is gone.

At the office, Tony is alarmed that Ziva is five minutes late. She thinks something's up with her.

Gibbs comes in with the case of the week: a Naval officer's husband has gone missing.

Vance tells Gibbs that Homeland has called twice about Ziva looking into her father's murder.

At the Daniels' house, neighbor Ben describes an older model sedan with tinted windows he saw outside the house.

McGee finds Noah's severed finger in the trash.

Back at the morgue, Duckie works up a psych profile and kicks Palmer out, but Palmer protests and Duckie agrees to teach him.

Upstairs, they learn Callie was working on a classified case and just got back from San Diego. They find Noah Daniels being driven away on a traffic cam at 2:15 a.m.

Gibbs visits Abby in the garage, where she has recreated the crime scene. The attacker didn't violently enter the house. The blood on the couch indicates his finger was cut off there. She hasn't found any prints. The finger was severed surgically at the joint. She found a second blood type on the floor.

Gibbs and Ziva update Callie. She talked to Noah at 10 p.m. from on the road, he was watching the news and playing the computer.

They find bank records showing Noah had more than $2 million in trust from his dad's business. Callie says Noah would never give up the money because his father worked too hard for it. Callie gets a call from Noah. They hear a voice say "meet me or he dies" then Noah saying it's a trap, then what could be gunshots. They trace the call and find the sedan Noah was abducted in.

There's blood inside, but no Noah.

The car is registered to Landers Orton from Roanoke. Gibbs and Tony talk to him back in interrogation. He says he thinks his brother Darryl might be involved. He lent Darryl his car and Darryl took his debit card.

Back in the office, frazzled Callie lashes out at Gibbs.

Darryl Orton has been in and out of jail, including for assault with a deadly weapon. There are multiple charges to a Mexican restaurant where Noah Daniels also went at the same time.

Ziva talks to Callie in the restroom, assuring her they'll find him. Callie confesses that things have been bad between them.

Ziva and Tony check out the restaurant and talk to the owner (Lourdes Benedicto), she recognizes photos of Noah and Darryl and knows Noah recently came into money. Ziva takes a call in Hebrew, Tony is suspicious.

In the morgue, Duckie explains that Darryl isn't afraid to die and craves a sense of belonging and a real family. They think he went home to his brother in southwestern Virginia.

Vance meets with Tom Morrow from Homeland Security, former head of NCIS. He tells Leon that CIA also knows Ziva is looking into her father's death. Morrow says recent intel says the man who orchestrated her father's murder, Mossad Deputy Director Ilan Bodnar was last seen in Rome. He assures Vance they're handling it.

They find that Daniels' bank account has been emptied, even though the FBI froze it. Darryl opened an account with $37,000 – he's spreading the money around, too complex a scheme for a high school drop out.

Gibbs visits Abby again, who says the rugs and walls should be roughed up but because they aren't, it means Noah was carried out unconscious, which means Darryl had help.

Darryl Orton's brother has an alibi. They get a tip that leads to a hotel.

Tony, Ziva and Gibbs check it out and find Darryl Orton dead with a gun beside the bed. He left a note: "Sorry to all I hurt. He's dead, I threw his body in the Potomac."

Back in the morgue, Duckie says the gunshot wasn't self-inflicted, it was a staged suicide.

Back at NCIS, Abby brings up a picture that was found on the floor. The frame would be cracked if it fell, but it wasn't. Also, the tipped over couch was solid oak and couldn't have just been knocked over. The crime scene was staged. They think Noah Daniels staged his own abduction. They play the phone tip and Tony and Ziva recognize the restaurant owner's voice.

They pay her a visit. It's her second restaurant to fall into debt. They have phone records linking them. They think she cut his finger off since she had culinary training. She says no one was supposed to get hurt and they were just supposed to get away. She agrees to cooperate.

Gibbs and McGee find Noah Daniels on a bus out of town. Callie confronts him, but he doesn't have anything to say. Ziva takes Callie's hurt personally.

Back at the office late at night, Tony continues to worry about how Ziva is handling her father's death. Gibbs gives him permission to look into it, telling him to go find her.

Tony goes to Abby to ping Ziva's cell phone.

Abby leads him to a dingy apartment building. He knocks on the door and is shocked to find McGee already there. They have an entire investigation set up on the walls. They explain they were going to tell Tony. Ziva explains there have been sightings of Bodner throughout Europe. Ziva resolves not to stop until she finds him. Tony asks when she's going to tell Gibbs.

Back at the office, Ziva asks for permission to go to Europe to find him. Gibbs knew she was looking into, but was waiting for her to tell him. He tells her Bodner's in Rome and suggests she take Tony. Vance also gives his blessing.

Production Code: 231
Summary: While the NCIS team investigates the murder of a Mossad officer in Virginia, Tony and Ziva depart for Berlin as they track her father's killer.

An Israeli operative waits in a parked car in a garage. An SUV pulls up to meet him, he's surprised to see who's behind the wheel. Then the driver shoots him.

At NCIS, Tony rubs his trip in McGee's face. Gibbs arrives and announces that Tony and Ziva won't be going to Rome to track Ilan Bodnar, the man suspected of killing Ziva's father. They're going to Berlin.

Ziva is annoyed to see Orli Elbaz (Marina Sirtis) from Mossad arrive in the office. She's the new head of Mossad, there to meet Vance. She lays out the body of the week: Amir Mantel, an agent in town off the books. Five officers went rogue in support of Bodnar and Mantel thought one was in Virginia. She thinks they're a threat to anyone looking to Bodnar. She asks NCIS to lead the investigation.

Ziva asks permission to leave. Orli thinks she's heading to Rome.

Gibbs visits Abby and the murder scene car in the garage. The victim is in a body bag in the trunk. Mossad cleaned the crime scene, handing over a laptop and watch.

En route to Berlin, Ziva remembers seeing her dad fighting with a woman when she was a child.

Ziva explains they're going to Berlin because her father taught her to set up a network of diamonds in case she ever needed to disappear. Everyone else is tracking Bodnar's bank accounts, but Ziva found a spike in diamond sales in Berlin.

Back at NCIS, in the morgue, Duckie is annoyed that Mossad stuffed their own agent in the trunk for transportation. He finds a rubber earwig piece in Mantel's ear. Abby video conferences in to report the bullet is a .9 mm, the same kind Mossad intel shows the rogue operatives bought. Duckie doesn't like that they're working with Mossad.

Gibbs meets with Orli, who worries what Ziva may have told him about her.

Gibbs and McGee head to Mantel's hotel room, which was also scrubbed by Mossad. The hotel manager thinks he recognized Tomir Gottlieb, one of the rogue agents. Gibbs notices they're being watched, but the green SUV takes off.

Gibbs goes back to Orli for more information, thinking Mossad is hanging NCIS out as target. He warns her away from his crime scene.

Vance meets with Homeland Senior Division Chief Tom Morrow (Alan Dale), who isn't happy NCIS is working with Mossad. He also knows Tony and Ziva are in Berlin.

In Berlin, Ziva remembers saying good bye to her father as he left for a work trip. She takes a call from her contact, who has information.

Ziva and Tony wait for her contact, Adam Eshel, an attractive man who Tony seems to instantly distrust. Ziva looks at pictures that Adam emailed her of a hired courier known as "K." He used Bodnar's ID to empty safety deposit boxes and Adam has heard there's a hand-off tonight.

Ziva gets a video call from a number she recognizes. It's Ilan Bodnar. Tony calls McGee to run a trace. Bodnar tells Ziva she doesn't know the whole story about her father's death. He asks her to forgive him and walk away. McGee traces the signal to a subway station around the corner from them in Berlin.

They head there and look for him. McGee sees his signal on the train, but he loses it.

Tony and Ziva chat with Gibbs and McGee back in MTAC and update them on K. Facial recognition IDs him as Edward Kraus, a drug trafficker who works at a nightclub. Ziva warns Gibbs not to trust Orli unless she earns it.

Back in their room in Berlin, Ziva hangs up Tony's clothes and he reminds her of the time he called her "sweet cheeks" – in Paris. They flirt about how she likes to hang up clothes for her man. He invites her to share the bed for a nap, but nothing happens.

In the lab, Abby updates Gibbs on the earwig piece – an old model Mossad doesn't use any more. His laptop was full of planted useless intel.

Up in Vance's office, he directs McGee to hack Mossad's database. They find Mantel was actually the rogue agent. Orli lied.

Gibbs and Vance talk to Orli in interrogation, confronting her with their hacked intel. He was the only rogue officer. Vance is annoyed she put people on his people following them on a case that doesn't exist.

She gets up to leave, but Vance refuses to let her go.

At the nightclub where Edward Kraus works, Tony orders them martinis then pulls Ziva onto the dance floor as the music turns slow. Ziva keeps an eye on Kraus as they sway, but she worries that he might have made her. Tony tells her to just act like she's there with him. She looks deep into his eyes and remembers her father telling her that one day she'll dance with a man who deserves her love.

Ziva sees Edward make a handoff to someone. She thinks it's Ilan, but is surprised to find it's Yaniv Bodnar, Ilan's brother.

Back in interrogation, Gibbs tells Orli that Bodnar was just arrested in Berlin. Orli asks for her phone to confirm. Gibbs accuses Orli of bringing them a dummy case to get Mossad permission to be on US soil. She admits it and Gibbs tells her it was Yaniv Bodnar who was arrested.

On the return flight home, Ziva asks Yaniv what Ilan did to win him back. Yaniv isn't Mossad.

Orli turns over all their intel on Ilan to Vance and Tom Morrow. They have surveillance footage from the airport showing Yaniv switching clothes with Ilan and boarding the flight overseas. They let everyone believe Ilan was in Rome so he'd let his guard down. Vance suggests NCIS look the other way about Mossad's actions, but warns Orli it's the last pass Mossad gets. He plans to have her escorted out of the country.

Tony and Ziva drive back after dropping Yaniv off with federal Marshals. Ziva tells Tony that Orli was the reason her parents split up. She thinks Orli is after Ilan because she loved Ziva's father. Ziva thinks if not for Orli, she might be a different person. Tony takes Ziva's hand and interlaces his fingers with hers. "Then I should catch her before she leaves, and thank her," Tony says.

As they're driving through an intersection, an SUV barrels through and slams into them. We see their hands, and broken glass and blood.

Summary: In retaliation for the murders of Eli David and Jackie Vance, the NCIS team feverishly searches for Bodnar despite orders from Homeland Security to relinquish the case.

Tony and Ziva's car is T-boned in an intersection. She comes to as someone walks toward their car. Tony is out cold. Ziva watches groggily as Ilan Bodnar, the man she's been hunting for killing her father, leans into her car and takes something.

"I told you to walk away Ziva," he says. Another car pulls up and he gets in and drives off. Ziva gets off a few shots but manages only to shoot out the rear windshield.

Vance and Gibbs wait for Tony and Ziva in the emergency room. Bodnar took the diamonds.

Ziva got a partial plate of the getaway car, it's registered to a soccer mom.

Gibbs, McGee and a team head to the house and surround it, shouting for whoever is inside to come out. When they don't, the agents fire a flash bang in. The person inside starts shooting with an automatic weapon. The NCIS team riddles the house with bullets.

Inside, there's a dead body in the kitchen – not Bodnar.

Tony and Ziva sneak out of the ER and head back to the office. Tony has a message from his insurance agent with bad news. He's being put on the at risk list after totaling his third car.

At the house, they find the victim's ID, Carl Miller, is fake and he has no finger prints. A piece of paper in his pocket says "see Reisiger 19." He has a few diamonds in his pocket; payment for helping Bodnar.

Down in the garage, Abby is going over the SUV that hit Ziva and Tony. There was a harness installed and the airbag was removed; the crash was planned. Ziva peppers Abby with questions about where everyone else is.

Gibbs talks to Miller's landlord, who says he drove a motorcycle and would sometimes be gone months at a time.

Back at NCIS, Homeland Senior Division Chief Tom Morrow is annoyed Vance OK'd the raid without telling him. He says the search for Bodnar should be left to Homeland.

Ziva and McGee check international databases and get nothing on the name Reisiger.

Tony ducks a call from his insurance agency, making Abby answer. They're canceling his policy if he doesn't call them back in 24 hours.

Down in the morgue, Duckie hasn't gotten anywhere on identifying the body. Miller's had tons of plastic surgery and his teeth were all replaced.

Down in the lab, Abby is trying to figure out how long Bodnar was at the house. There's a beer bottle with the finger print of Amir Mantel, the rogue Mossad agent who was killed.

Ziva ignores her injured shoulder and works out her aggression on a heavy bag.

Tony complains that McGee wouldn't stop for coffee on their drive in from work. Ziva lends Tony her car; she's planning to jog into work the next few days. Tony is still sore and achy from the accident, but Ziva is powering through the pain.

Police find Miller's motorcycle near Union Station.

Down in the morgue, Duckie has been able to trace the serial number of his jaw implant. Dr. Madison Fielding installed it.

Tony and McGee visit Dr. Fielding, the plastic surgeon. He did Miller's surgery three years ago. There was nothing wrong with him and he paid in cash. They look at the before photo – he looked completely different.

At the office, Ziva gets a video call from Bodnar, who says her father was selling out Mossad and Israel to Iran. He denies killing Arash Kazmi and says others are responsible for killing the Iranian. Ziva vows to find him.

Abby IDs Carl Miller as South African Clive Goddard, whom she ID'd from his "before" photo through facial recognition. He's involved in blood diamond smuggling.

McGee analyzes the trees and lamp post in background of the video chat from Bodnar. He's in New York.

Vance tells Ziva they have to let Homeland handle things.

In MTAC, Vance tells Morrow they think Bodnar is in New York. Vance tells Morrow the case is all his, but after they hang up Gibbs notes Vance didn't tell him what Bodnar said about Kazmi.

Later that night, Ziva's Shin Bet contact Adam sends her a photo of Bodnar and Goddard together from five years ago. McGee stays late to check on something.

In the middle of the night, Tony drops by Gibbs' basement to talk. He's worried about Ziva, she's been more secretive since her father's death. Gibbs knows she wants revenge. He asks if there's anything Tony didn't tell him about Berlin, but Gibbs' phone rings before Tony answers.

McGee calls and Tony and Gibbs go to the office. He thought there was something wrong with the video and it turns out there was, Bodnar pasted himself into a YouTube video. He's not in New York.

In the morning, Tony catches Ziva up. The boys were at the office all night.

Tony goes down to the morgue to stop the release of Goddard's body. Duckie waxes about the Afrikaans language and Tony wonders if Reisiger might be Afrikaans. Palmer looks "See Reisiger" up on his phone app and learns it means "Sea Voyager."

Vance finishes an unpleasant call with Tom Morrow, who thinks NCIS misled them to New York. Vance isn't backing off.

Upstairs they find Sea Voyager is a Liberian freighter docked in the Port of Baltimore in Pier 19, leaving for South Africa tonight. Tony and McGee go to tell Gibbs. Ziva takes her gun and car keys and leaves.

At the Port at night, Ziva grabs a flare from her trunk and uses it to start a Dumpster fire near the gangplank. The man guarding it goes to check out the fire and Ziva boards the ship.

Down in the hold she hears Bodnar. She confronts him with her personal gun. He knows she won't shoot an unarmed man in the back and walks away. He gets out onto the deck and jumps her. They start fighting, grabbing nearby tools and a fire extinguisher to go after each other. Ilan gets her around the neck with a chain, but she flips him off and gets back on top, punching him.

Gibbs and the team pull up, wondering if the fire is Ziva's doing. Ilan's body falling over the side of the ship is their answer.

Later, back at NCIS, a battered Ziva goes to see Vance. "Is it over?" he asks. "It's over," she says.

Production Code: 233
Summary: A Department of Defense investigator scrutinizes the NCIS team's response to the Bodnar case involving the murder of Ziva's father and Vance's wife. Meanwhile, the team examines whether a Petty Officer is suffering from paranoia or if his claims of being followed are tied to a matter of national security.

A Navy seaman chases a man through a park at Quantico and tackles him. Sailors training nearby pull him off. Someone watching the whole scene on surveillance chooses not to intervene.

At NCIS, Ziva pulls up to work in her new sports car, she thought it was time for a change. Tony is upset she sold the Mini to someone else. Gibbs pulls up to get McGee for the case of the week.

At Quantico, the attacker is Petty Officer third class Evan Lowry. He tells Gibbs that the man he tackled was following him and someone has been going through his email, too, and been in his house. He's a cook on a ship and thinks someone might be trying to infect him to infect the crew. He's insistent, but McGee and Gibbs are skeptical.

McGee notices a GPS tracking device on Lowry's car. Someone really is following him.

Back at NCIS, they try to figure out who might be following him. They're looking into his mugging two weeks ago, when the surveillance started and he was hit by a tire iron and got a concussion. His laptop and cell phone were stolen.

McGee traces a photo that was taken on Lowry's phone.

Richard Parsons (Colin Hanks), with the Inspector General's Office, meets with Vance to start the inquiry to Ilan Bodnar's death. Vance is eager to get it over with.

Parsons goes with McGee and Tony on a stakeout to watch the phone. Parsons starts his questioning about the night Eli David was killed.

Tony and McGee go intercept a man on the stolen cell phone. He runs.

Back in interrogation, Lowry isn't sure if it's the guy who mugged him. The suspect tells Gibbs he found the phone in the trash. Gibbs bluffs him and believes the guy knows nothing.

Abby finds a piece of a legal document that was left in Lowry's backpack, releasing them from any physical and mental trauma to Lowry. He signed it, but has no idea what it is.

Down in the morgue, Duckie tries to help Lowry remember signing the document. He remembers whatever he signed up for had something to do with bratwurst, the same blend as was found in a recent morgue victim's stomach.

In the lab, Abby cooks up various bratwursts, explaining to Parsons how she'll test them. He's a forensic know it all. He asks her about the memory card she processed five months ago that had a picture of the man who killed Tyler Wilkes, Eli David, even though they could only see the back of his head in the photo. Ziva recognized him.

Gibbs goes with Lowry to a food cart with brats. He recognizes a nearby empty warehouse. There's an office inside, with a guy eating the brat Lowry remembered. A woman comes out and IDs Lowry as one of their "helping eyes" test subjects. They're examining the psychological effects of surveillance, which started right after he got mugged. Lowry is angry until he learns he's getting $1,500.

Gibbs is annoyed and wants Tony and Ziva look into the doctor running the study.

Back at NCIS, Parsons talks to Ziva in interrogation. He asks why she waited three hours to tell Gibbs her dad was the one in the photos; she wanted to talk to her father first. Ziva insists she tried to save Bodnar, but he fell. Parsons starts yelling, asking her if she slept with Adam Eshel from Shin Bet, saying it would be a threat to national security. Ziva tells Parsons to go to hell. Tony busts in and ends the interview.

Back up in the office, they see on the news that there was an explosion at the office where the experiment was being run. At the scene, Ziva admits to Tony she slept with Adam when she went to Israel to bury her father. She says she felt alone and it was a moment of weakness. He reminds her when he dropped her off at the airport he told her in Hebrew that she wasn't alone. He tells her to talk to legal.

All the surveillance footage was destroyed in the blast, Dr. Hale received minor injuries.

Duckie calls Gibbs after talking to Parsons. The team meets, he warns them Parsons is looking to dig up dirt on Ziva. He has an old photo of her friend Schmiel. She didn't know he once worked for the Israeli government in September 1972, after the Munich killings. Duckie thinks it's a witch hunt.

Back in the office, McGee hacks Parsons files, including a locked Justice Department file.

Back to the explosion, they find Simon Gravy, one of the test subjects, has disappeared.

Tony and McGee watch the footage of Gravy in MTAC. Ziva knocks to get in, her retina scan was denied. Her security clearance has been suspended.

Tony follows Parsons.

Ziva reports to McGee that Parsons is looking into their old case files, including some before Ziva got there.

Tony warns Parsons not to question Ziva's loyalty. "What makes you think I'm going after Ziva?" Parsons says.

Ziva realizes the common thread in the files Parsons pulled: Vance.

Ziva, Tony and Gibbs brief Vance. They think Parsons is trying to get leverage on Ziva to get her to flip on Vance. Tony put a surveillance bug on Parsons phone.

Gibbs talks to Gravy, the surveillance arson suspect, in interrogation. He emptied his bank account an hour ago. Tony thinks Gravy's off his meds. He says he knows who blew up the building – God. He has an emotional meltdown but denies blowing up the building. He wonders what kind of an idiot would get into trouble knowing he was being followed.

Someone who didn't remember they were: Lowry. Gibbs finds Lowry at lunch with a woman named Stella and her toddler, Abner. Gibbs knows she's UA (the Navy's AWOL) – they ran facial recognition on everyone Lowry came in contact with and ID'd Stella as a corporal. When he remembered the study he realized he'd exposed Stella, so he set the fire to destroy the surveillance with her in it.

Ziva leads Lowry away and Stella explains she got called for her third tour shortly after Abner was born and didn't want to go. "Haven't you ever bent the rules for a friend?" she asks Gibbs.

McGee listens to Parsons make a phone call and runs to Gibbs. McGee is explaining that Parsons isn't after Ziva or Vance when serious looking men get off the elevator with Parsons. Parsons knew he was being bugged. "Special Agent Leroy Jethro Gibbs, you've manipulated evidence and you've obstructed justice. Do you take full responsibility for the actions of your team?" Parsons asks. "What do you think?" Gibbs says.

Summary: Gibbs and the team are assigned legal counsel after the Department of Defense IG Investigator puts their future at the agency in jeopardy.

Gibbs fishes in a boat on a lake and imagines talking to his late mentor Mike Franks. They have a meaning-heavy conversation about catch and release then Mike takes out his gun and shoots into the water. Gibbs sees bodies float up around him, his team stands on the shoreline.

Gibbs' reverie is broken by DOD IG Investigator Richard Parsons (Colin Hanks), questioning him in the conference room. He says Gibbs' actions have been "inappropriate" and the deaths of Eli David and Jackie Vance have opened doors to an investigation.

"Step up, take responsibility. I'll leave your people alone. All I want is the truth,"

Parsons says. "You weren't there," Gibbs tells him.

Tom Morrow hangs out in Vance's office, complaining about Parsons. Vance doesn't understand why he's not the one in the crosshairs.

"Parsons recognizes the political fallout of going after a man who's lost everything because of his agent's poor judgment.... To an investigator like Parsons, Gibbs is a hell of a trophy," Morrow says.

Back with Parsons, Gibbs' lawyer arrives, even though he didn't call him. Rear Admiral AJ Chegwiddden, the former judge advocate general, arrives. Vance called him, he and Gibbs go way back.

DCIS comes and takes NCIS's old files. Gibbs tells the team to back off, but they decide to ignore him and look into Parsons.

In the lab, Abby takes out her aggressions on a shooter video game with Parsons as the target. Duckie and Palmer stop by to show her a listening device they found in the morgue.

A judge gives AJ 48 hours to get a defense prepped for Gibbs.

The whole NCIS staff meets in the elevator. Palmer found another bug in the ladies room. Vance asks if anyone knows anything else that could hurt Gibbs. Abby mentions all the stuff at Gibbs' house.

Gibbs and AJ return Gibbs' place to see the place trashed. Gibbs draws his gun when he hears a noise, but it's just Ziva coming in the back door.

AJ wants to go somewhere secure to talk. Gibbs takes AJ, Tony and Ziva to the cabin he built in the woods. They go inside when a helicopter circles overhead.

Later at night, AJ reads Parsons' bio. There's a knock at the cabin door, McGee joins them with the body of the week: a dead Navy SEAL in Virginia.

At the crime scene, the victim's wife came home to a box shipped from Riyadh, Saudi Arabia with Chad McBride's head in it.

In the morgue, Duckie and Palmer examine the head. Palmer announces he and his wife are adopting.

Then he takes out a Gieger counter and it goes crazy detecting radiation.

Out in the woods, Gibbs imagines hunting with Mike, who talks to him about not being able to control every little thing. Gibbs takes aim at something and imagines seeing Vance breaking the news that Jackie is dead.

Gibbs wakes up to AJ bringing coffee.

At the office, Parsons gets on the elevator with Ziva, who ignores him as he tells her he's trying to catch bad guys just like her, "good people who have made bad decisions."

He accuses her of throwing Bodnar off the ship and killing her brother, Ari (which she did) and says she'll have to pay.

In MTAC, Vance talks to Capt. Wayne, McBride's CO. He says McBride was on top secret recon and seems surprised about the radiation. He tells Vance not to tell anyone about it.

In the lab, Abby says McBride was beaten with a stick.

Upstairs, McGee finds Parsons has tons of secure files, including sensitive personal documents belonging to high level justice department people.

Out at the cabin, AJ asks about all the people Gibbs' team has killed. Gibbs has no regrets.

Parsons meets with Vance in his office. Parsons mentions a missing file: the one with Abby's results on a Mexican shooting (the one that proves Gibbs shot the man who killed his wife and daughter).

At the cabin, Tony, Ziva and McGee present their intel on Parsons, including the fact he's essentially a blackmailer. They want Vance to show it to the Inspector General, but Gibbs tells them to stay out of it. "It is not your job!" Gibbs says.

"This is not about my job, it is about my family," Ziva says and storms out.

Tony follows her. She tells him she's sorry if she hurt him, she cares too much about their friendship. She doesn't want it to be awkward. "Nothing's awkward between friends," he tells her and kisses her on the forehead.

Vance meets with Morrow, who tells him there's a connection between McBride's death and what's happening with his team.

The CIA needed Iran to believe Mossad was responsible for Arash Kazmi's death, as a distraction. Bodnar didn't kill Kazmi – the CIA did so that Bodnar would be a fall guy and Iran and Israel could fight while the US focused on domestic threats.

Parsons doesn't know anything about it. Vance asks about McBride. "It's not good, Leo," Morrow says.

Back at his ransacked house, Gibbs imagines Mike Franks accusing him of running. Mike tells Gibbs he should come clean and admit there are good reasons he did the things he did.

Back at NCIS, the team is surprised to see Gibbs come in.

Gibbs isn't surprised when Vance tells him the CIA was behind Kazmi's death. Gibbs doesn't plan to fight by Parsons' rules. Vance says Morrow might have a solution, but it might kill Gibbs.

Alone later, Vance shreds Abby's report on Gibbs' Mexico shooting.

McGee, Tony and Ziva talk and agree to do what's necessary, even though Tony warns Ziva she might not like how it ends. They go upstairs and all resign, turning in their badges.

Back at his house, Gibbs opens a hidden compartment in his basement and takes out Mike Franks' old files. He burns them one by one, refusing to play Parsons' blackmail game.

The next morning, AJ, Vance, Morrow and Wayne with JSOC show up to meet with Parsons. Gibbs is on special assignment for JSOC. Morrow presents Parsons with a letter from his Inspector General boss telling him to back off the investigation. Once the team resigned, Gibbs was sent on assignment.

"Is agent Gibbs so valuable that you would allow this to happen?" Parsons asks.

Four Months Later

In a dark room at night, Gibbs tries to stop Wayne's bleeding, but Wayne urges him to "do it."

Gibbs goes to the window, lines up his sniper rifle and takes aim at someone getting out of a town car on the street below. Agent Tobias Fornell ends up in his rifle sights. Gibbs pauses. The screen goes black. We hear a gunshot.

Summary: Following an explosion at a D.C. black-tie affair, Parsons assumes a new role within the NCIS agency, while Gibbs' team remains down three agents.

Four Months Ago — Parsons approaches Homeland Security Director Tom Morrow at a function at a hotel. Parsons knows Sec Nav Jarvis is inside and he wants to talk to them about his case against Gibbs. He thinks the "cowboy" mission Gibbs was sent on was just a ruse to get Gibbs away from the investigation. "Gibbs is being given a 'get out of jail free' card," Parsons says. Morrow tells Parsons he's just getting in the way. "There's a line in the sand, Parsons, don't cross it," Morrow says. Morrow turns and goes into the function, leaving Parsons on the street.

Parsons walks away, and as he does, a blast explodes from the hotel behind him.

Later, at NCIS, Abby, Duckie and Palmer watch news reports that say Sec Nav was killed in the hotel bombing. Abby blames Parsons for his investigation leading to the departure of Gibbs and his team, who she thinks would have prevented it.

Suddenly, in comes Gibbs. Vance meets with Gibbs and Captain Dominick Wayne, who mentions the bombing might be tied to the death of Lt. McBride, the head in the box. Vance suggests Gibbs lead an off-book investigation into the bombing and Wayne volunteers that he has an overseas informant.

Tony wakes up in the middle of the night and sees he missed a video call from Ziva. She chats with him instead, saying she's on a bus to Tel Aviv and thinking about him after hearing of the bombing.

He asks if she wants some company and gets a "Yes :-)" He tells her to count a million and he's on his way. He looks into flights to Tel Aviv. "This is good," he says.

McGee meets with Delilah in a café. He hates being on the outside of the investigation and wonders why he hasn't been called in. She tells him more than once source is saying the device wasn't Middle Eastern, it was American. He wants to go in to at least talk to Abby, but Abby appears. She tells him Gibbs is headed out of town.

Vance drops by Gibbs's house as he packs. He's off to see Capt. Wayne's informant in Tehran.

Overseas, Gibbs walks through a street market and checks his watch, waiting. He pulls his gun, feeling like he's being watched. Suddenly, someone shoots at him from behind a car. Gibbs ducks behind a wall and takes out a second gun and starts firing. A shooter is coming right at him when someone takes him out. Parsons pulls up in a Jeep and saves Gibbs.

"I knew when they got Jarvis, you were next," Parsons explains. He couldn't call because the phones are tapped. "You're in danger, Gibbs. I came to save your life," Parsons says.

They sit down to talk it over. Parsons thinks NCIS is being set up and that Gibbs was sent to Iran to separate him from his team. Parsons thinks they should talk to one of McBride's coworkers, JSOC Operative Lt. Eric Kagen. Gibbs doesn't believe him. "If I've learned right things, Gibbs, it's that people do the wrong thing for the right reason," Parsons says. "Speak for yourself," Gibbs says. "I am," Parsons says.

Duckie comes down to the morgue and finds a strange man on the computer. The man goes after Duckie and then knocks Palmer over when he comes to help. Palmer is about to freak out when Duckie beans the intruder with a bed pan and knocks him out.

Gibbs and Parsons talk to Kagen, who tells them McBride's orders were canceled. He was recalled after just 24 hours, but Kagen didn't see him get on the transport plane.

Back at his apartment, Tony is all packed and ready to leave for the airport to fly to Israel to see Ziva. He says good-bye to his fish, Kate. "I know it's not the brightest idea, but we're not coworkers anymore, so all bets are off," he tells the fish. He texts Ziva to check that it's still OK to come. She says yes and signs it "xo."

Tony looks down at his chest in the dark and sees the telltale laser sight of a sniper's rifle. He ducks just as shots start flying through the windows.

At NCIS, Vance pours Tony a drink and tells him to lay low following the shooting. Tony says he was on his way to Israel on a "personal trip." Vance isn't buying it and makes sure Ziva knows he'll be delayed. Vance wants to give him protection, but Tony offers to just stay at NCIS, with his Visitor pass.

Tony heads to interrogation, where the man Duckie and Palmer subdued is being held. Vance interrogates him as Tony and Duckie watch. The man is Victor Cheng, a private computer contractor who used to work for the FBI. He got a call promising him $20,000 if he came in and hacked NCIS's database. He says he doesn't know who hired him.

Vance gets a call from Gibbs in MTAC, along with Agent Parsons, who Gibbs is now working with. They believe Chad McBride was a decoy and wasn't killed overseas.

Tony wakes up at his desk to see Murray, the large new IT guy at Ziva's desk. Palmer runs the big screen rundown. Cheng was fired from the FBI for moonlighting as a hacker for hire.

Someone has been trying to hack NCIS files from the outside, they were mostly after former personnel.

Tony calls McGee and tells him to ditch his phone. He does but dark sedans pull up. FBI Special Agent Tobias Fornell gets out.

Fornell takes McGee to Tony's place, where he and Vance are waiting. Fornell tells them about Benham Parsa, a young extremist who claimed responsibility for killing Sec Nav. He's the son of slain parents from Karachi. He started a new terrorist cell and is brokering deals between terrorists and US companies to rebuild after attacks. Fornell says Homeland has known about it from day one.

Vance goes to confront Tom Morrow in the hospital. He's recovering and won't lose his leg. Vance demands to know if Morrow's involved. He swears he's not but says Ziva is the next target. "Eli knew too much, they think she does, too," Morrow says.

At NCIS, McGee works to establish a secure email to communicate with Ziva. Gibbs re-introduces Parsons, saying he's OK now. Tony and McGee both want their badges back. Parsons says he'll see what he can do, now that the investigation is over.

Parsons explains someone went to great lengths to make it look like Iran killed McBride, but it was a local terrorist cell.

Down in the lab, Gibbs, in his wordless Gibbs way, explains that Parsons is OK now because Parsons saved his life. Abby explains the sand found on McBride was partially Middle Eastern and also from the Sonoran Desert in Arizona.

Vance gives Tony and McGee their badges back. He wants ideas on how to find Ziva. Tony has one. He goes to MTAC to talk to Ziva's old Mossad friend Adam Eshel about tracking her down, knowing that he's one of the few people that Ziva trusts.

Gibbs and Fornell have an elevator brainstorm, realizing the best person to sent McBride to Iran and cancel his orders was his commanding officer. They check his bank records and find no pay-offs. Gibbs asks McGee how his handwriting is.

Gibbs and Fornell pay Captain Dominick Wayne a visit and show him the letter from McBride (presumably forged by McGee) saying Wayne changed his orders. Wayne says he didn't know McBride was going to be killed. They blackmailed him using his affair. He got one call to change McBride's order and another to send Gibbs to Iran. Wayne is facing prison time and court martial.

In Vance's office, he introduces Tomas Mendez with Public Anti-Terrorism Coalition, which helps facilitate cooperation between the government and business to stop terrorism. He shows them surveillance footage of Parsa from one of his buildings in Miami. They mention Arizona.

Tony ends up in an uncomfortable elevator with Parsons. Parsons stops it and gives Tony a file on farm property in Israel that secretly belonged to Eli David, where Parsons suggests Ziva might be hiding out.

Gibbs walks Fornell to his car. Gibbs wants to know how long he knew NCIS was in danger; Fornell says he came to Gibbs as soon as he learned. "No matter what happens with this, I've got your back," Gibbs says.

Back in the office, Abby runs a trace on the shrapnel removed from the bombing victims. It matches a bombing in Yemen and a white supremacist group. The bomb was in the frame of a mountain bike, the method used by The Brotherhood of Doubt, based in Yuma, Arizona.

Gibbs, Fornell and a team head to Yuma. They find handcuffs where McBride was kept and photos of the NCIS team, Sec Nav, Tom Morrow and Tomas Mendez.

Later, Gibbs gets Mendez and takes him to protective custody.

In Israel, Adam leads a raid with a team into Ziva's dad's farm house. He finds three dead men.

Adam reports back to Tony from MTAC. Ziva left her Star of David necklace behind, so they'd know she was there.

Later at night, home alone, Tony looks at a picture of Ziva and wonders where she is.

Production Code: 236
Summary: Determined to locate Ziva, Tony chases leads in Israel in search of her current whereabouts. Meanwhile, Gibbs and the team continue the hunt for Parsa and his growing terrorist ring.

Late May — Tony flies to see Ziva and imagines seeing her on the plane next to him.

In Tel Aviv, Tony is met on the tarmac by Mossad agents who request he come with them and don't give him much choice. He's brought to see Mossad Director Orli Elbaz. He's surprised to see Ziva's friend Adam there with her.

Back in DC, Vance introduces Gibbs and FBI Agent Tobias Fornell to the new Secretary of the Navy, Sarah Porter.

They brief her on Benham Parsa, the Pakistani who's in charge of the terrorist group Brotherhood of Doubt. They expect Tomas Mendez is their next target, because of the help he's given the government tracking terrorists.

In Israel, Adam reports that the three gunman found dead at Ziva's house were just hired guns. Tony tells Orli he last heard from Ziva two nights ago, when she sent him a photo of her and her brother Ari as children.

They have a report of someone matching Ziva's description being seen on a kibbutz they went to as children. She buried a list of life goals she wrote as a child, including ride a horse. They were all crossed out and on it was written "I will stop this for him."

Later, Adam takes Tony to the apartment where Ziva grew up. Tony imagines seeing her as a 13-year-old.

When Tony and Adam go in to talk to the current resident, Dr. Deena Bashan, who grew up in the building with Ziva.

At NCIS, Fornell has a hard time convincing Mendez to take his protection, until Gibbs tells him not to be a "dumb ass," and he agrees.

Deena serves Adam and Tony tea. She last saw Ziva at her father's funeral. She made a list of "I Will" statements like Ziva but doesn't know what Ziva's means.

"She mentioned you at the funeral, I could see what she felt," Deena tells Tony, suggesting he's the "him."

Tony checks in with McGee in MTAC. They traced the last text from Ziva to a wifi hotspot in Tel Aviv.

In the lab, Abby is tracing the bullet trajectories from the shots fired into Tony's apartment, which contradict the witness statement.

A resident of the building said he saw a shooter on top of his building, but Abby thinks that's wrong. Homeland talked to all the residents of the top floor except one, Lisa Pierway. They head to her apartment and find her several days dead inside.

Fornell and Gibbs meet for coffee. Fornell complains about guarding Mendez, who has plans to go see a billionaire philanthropist who wants to support anti-terror activities.

In Mossad's version of MTAC, Tony reviews security footage from the Internet café where Ziva sent the text. They don't see her until they check outside the hospital across the street and see Ziva meeting with Deena, the doctor.

Gibbs visits Abby in the lab. She has a partial thumbprint from Lisa's contact lenses belonging to Henry Coldwell, who was dishonorably discharged from the army and had sniper training. He's the one who shot up Tony's apartment.

Tony goes to see Dr. Bashan at the hospital. She admits she stitched up Ziva's leg, but then told Ziva she was in love with her brother Ari and he was about to propose when Ziva killed him. Ziva tried to explain, but Dr. Bashan wouldn't forgive her, so Ziva left.

Bashan says she would have told anyone but Tony the truth. "Why should she have the man that she loves, when she took mine from me?"

Fornell and two other agents escort Mendez to the hospital to see the billionaire. Mendez's phone rings outside and he answers – an explosion blasts from the hospital in front of them.

October Gibbs and McGee try to reach Tony on video chat. He's been to North Africa, Yemen and is now back in Israel on Ziva's trail. He talked to someone who saw her a week ago. Gibbs suggests if Ziva doesn't want to be found, maybe he should respect that. He wants to go off the grid for a few days and follow a lead.

Gibbs tells him to do what he needs to.

When Tony hangs up, we see Ziva is standing near him. She asks why he came. "You invited me," Tony says. "That was before," she says.

Back in DC, SecNav Porter wants an update on Parsa and his Brotherhood. He tells her to try to reach out to army about talking to Captain Wayne, the one who sent Gibbs on a distraction mission to Iran.

Tony gives Ziva her Star of David necklace back. He found her by tracking her past, traveling to where her mother was killed, her grandparents' graves and, finally, the house where she was born.

She's feeling guilt over the people she has killed in her line of work. Tony tells her it's never too late to start over.

Gibbs meets with Captain Wayne in a diner late at night to ask about Parsa. All Wayne got was text messages from a 305 area code in Florida. Gibbs urges him to do what's right.

When Gibbs goes out to his car, a man jumps him. The two men fight until Gibbs knocks him down. "You have no idea what's coming tonight," the man says.

Back in Israel, Tony helps Ziva plant her new list of things to do. He asks her to come to DC with him. "I know it's hard and I know you want to change. I can change with you," he says, kissing her hand. She leans in close, but doesn't kiss him yet. "I'm fighting for you, Ziva," he says. "I know," she says.

Gibbs interrogates his attacker back at NCIS. He's just a hired thug. McGee traced the blocked numbers on the guy's phone back to Gran Castillo, Tomas Mendez' company. He compared the bombing materials and found they traced back to Medez's phone.

Fornell ignores a call from NCIS on his way to visit the billionaire with Mendez. At the house, snipers take out other snipers.

Captain Wayne approaches a sniper with a knife, saying he can't go through with it, it's wrong. The two men fight. Gibbs gets there as the sniper is dead and Wayne is bleeding out.

(Scene from the season finale.) Gibbs looks through the sniper's scope and sees Fornell getting out of a sedan on the street below. Fornell notices the snipers aren't where they're supposed to be. Fornell stands outside the car as Mendez pauses to answer his ringing phone – to detonate the bomb.

Gibbs looks through the scope and sees Fornell just slightly in the way of Mendez. Gibbs takes the shot.

Later, Mendez is dead and Fornell is fine, but complaining loudly about getting shot in the butt.

In Israel, Tony tries to get Ziva, one last time, to change her mind. She tells him she wants to follow her heart and make Gibbs proud. He's the "stop this for him." He encourages her to call Gibbs.

"Tony you are so..." she says. "Handsome, funny?" "Loved," she says. He kisses her hard, then he turns and walks away to get on the plane.

On the flight, he makes his own "I Will" list. He takes out Ziva's Star of David necklace and smiles.

Home alone, Gibbs puts a cold beer to his black eye. He answers Ziva's call, and listens.

Production Code: 237
Summary: The NCIS team must rely on Twitter for a case involving a missing Navy Lieutenant. Meanwhile, McGee misplaces his badge but withholds the information from Gibbs and the authorities.

A Navy dress uniform hangs from a chair in an empty apartment. The room is completely wired to blow, with a trip switch on the door.

The occupant's neighbor comes by to leave him a registered letter and the building manager offers to put it in his apartment. He opens the door, triggers the bomb and is blasted to smithereens.

At NCIS, Tony chafes to see large Murray at Ziva's desk, although Murray points out it's not Ziva's anymore. He's scrubbing her hard drive. He finds an old photo of Tony, which Tony takes back.

McGee comes in in a huff. He can't find his badge and ID. Tony suggests he wait to report the loss in case it turns up, even though waiting is a violation of the rules.

Gibbs come in with the body of the week: the building manager.

At the crime scene, the cop guarding the tape is actually checking IDs. Tony thinks McGee is screwed, but he loads up his arms, sticks a pad in his mouth and mumbles his way past.

In the charred apartment, Palmer and Duckie are loading up the building manager when Palmer gets a call from Breana – they're meeting with the adoption lawyer later in the day.

Outside, the neighbor who came to drop off his mail is freaking out. She's not much help, her ears are still ringing.

The occupant, Lt. JG Terence Keith, is on two week's leave visiting his mother in Ft. Wayne, Indiana. He wanted to fly, but washed out of the program. McGee calls Keith's mom – he hasn't been there and isn't expecting him.

There's no recent activity on his credit card or cell phone.

The office stops as Ziva's phone rings. Tony answers it. It's her dentist.

A loud woman comes in cheerfully calling Gibbs "probie." She's Vera, she has a meeting with Vance. She calls him Leroy and says they'll catch up later.

She's Special Agent Vera Strickland, Mike Franks' last partner.

Gibbs tells McGee to come with him to the Pentagon, but he lies and says Abby needs his help with something in the lab. He'd never get in the Pentagon without his ID. Tony insists he has nothing to do with the missing ID and asks if McGee left it on a booty call with DOD Delilah.

Down in the morgue, Palmer leaves early for his appointment with the lawyer.

In the lab, Abby is rocking out to the Sterile Puppets – she and McGee went to the concert last night. She mentions the band has been trending on Twitter since the show. He wonders if someone lifted his things at the show.

Abby lends him Ziva's scarf to help him feel better.

Duckie brings up the building manager's clothes, which have something fused on them.

Abby determined the explosive was 10-12 ounces of C4.

Gibbs meets with Keith's CO, who says his heart wasn't really in the job.

In MTAC, Vance and Vera are chatting when Vance notices McGee down on his hands and knees in the corner. He says he lost his car keys.

Vera's retiring at the end of the month and will be at admin riding out her time.

Abby IDs DNA on the bomb – it belongs to Lt. Keith.

They look over his phone records and find he called Lt. JG Dana Robins repeatedly over the past few days.

Tony looked into his background and found Keith was a science nerd in high school and got picked on.

Gibbs sets Vera up in an empty cubicle.

Down in the lab, Abby reports the C4 was manufactured by a company in Des Moines, which is only distributed by Pyrotechnic Engineering in Anacostia.

Tony finds Keith was an electronic engineering major, so he'd have the know how to make a bomb. Gibbs sends them to Anacostia and McGee has to confess he lost his credentials. Gibbs sends Vera with Tony, over her strong objections based on his history of car crashes and getting shot at.

At Pyrotechnic Engineering, Vera takes over Tony's interview and learns that Keith was there looking to buy C4 but was turned away for not having the credentials. The manager referred him to a demolitions expert, Larry Purcell, when Keith said it was for blasting tree stumps.

Gibbs meets with Lt. Robins at NCIS. She's deploying in the morning on the USS Benjamin Franklin. She flies F-18s. She and Keith were "just classmates." He was a good pilot, but the pressure got to him. He needed to be on anti-anxiety meds but couldn't and fly. She thinks he resented her moving on in training. She thought his call was odd, he wanted to see her, but she said no.

Tony and Vera go see Purcell, who says Keith was there a couple weeks ago. He says he has to go check his records to see if he sold Keith C4. He goes inside and Tony hears a noise. He tackles Vera out of the way just before Larry comes crashing through his garage door in a truck. Tony shoots out one of its tires and Larry doesn't get far.

Back at NCIS, Larry tells Tony he needed the money.

Vera joins McGee in observation. She has a severe ankle sprain.

Larry tells them he sold Keith 200 pounds of C4. Vance freaks out – that's more C4 than was used to attack the USS Cole in Yemen.

Abby reports that she got into Keith's hard drive and found he's been buying anti-anxiety meds online. The melted plastic on the dead guy's shirt was a private pilot's license registered to Lt. Keith – the contents of the registered letter the manager was going to put in his apartment.

Tony goes to visit the pilot who certified Keith. Keith rented a two seater for two days.

In a barn somewhere, Lt. Keith works on building a giant bomb.

Vance chats with FAA Director Stacy Bergin, who says the plane flew below radar so they don't know where it is.

Gibbs orders everyone to stay on alert.

The next morning, Vera gets off the phone with HR and rejoices that she doesn't have to come in to work anymore because of her injury.

Vance comes to McGee with his ID – it was turned in at RFK Stadium where McGee went to the concert. He's busted.

Gibbs, Vance and Duckie conference with Bergin in MTAC. Duckie profiled Keith and says his going off his meds suddenly could make him unstable. They think he's seeking revenge but still don't know where.

Down in the lab, Palmer is worried about his adoption chances given the macabre nature of his and Breena's work (she's a mortician).

McGee comes down, bummed about his ID and inevitable investigation. Abby mentions the band they saw has gone viral with more than one million followers. She knows the drummer. McGee gets an idea.

It takes several attempts to explain it to Gibbs, but they convince him to get Twitter followers to be on the lookout for Keith under #findthisplane.

McGee tracks the tweets that follow and they get a sense of its flight path. Admiral Wayne Hargrove scrambles two jets to intercept, but they can't shoot it down over a populated area.

From the tweets, they see he's flying a zigzag pattern. Gibbs realizes where Keith is going – to the Benjamin Franklin in the bay.

They find a way to access him via radio.

Up in the plane, Keith is twitchy.

The fighter planes catch up with him and the Benjamin Franklin goes on alert.

Gibbs radios Keith to tell him the Franklin has locked onto him.

"You don't understand, I need to do this," a shaky Keith says. Gibbs urges him to turn around so they can help him.

The ship is ready to fire.

Keith turns away from the Franklin and takes his hand off the switch – his plane explodes.

Later, the NCIS crew is ready to head home, but Agent Eugene Coyle is waiting for McGee about his credentials. Vance intercepts him – McGee and the rest of the team have been invited to the White House for saving the Benjamin Franklin.

Solider), Nikka Far (Elina), Paris Benjamin (Mor), Shani Atias (Stoic Afghan Girl), Jasmine Di Angelo (Halia), Ben Maccabee (Afghan Local Leader), Zoey Diaz (Amira)
Production Code: 238
Summary: Gibbs and McGee travel to Afghanistan when a murder case leads them to an Afghan women's shelter Mike Frank's secretly supported for years.

A pillow store owner comes to work and notices a drop of blood leaking through a hole in his ceiling. He looks up through the hole and sees a dead body staring back at him.

At NCIS, Palmer snoops on Tony's desk and finds a hand written letter from Tony to a woman named Jessica, apologizing for something.

"What are you, in some kind of 12 step program for recovering misogynists?" McGee asks. Tony says the last few weeks have made him think.

NCIS Special Agent Susan Grady, from the polygraph room, comes in with the body of the week. At the apartment, the victim's ID says Sgt. Patricia Moreno.

Grady is applying for a full-time criminal investigator position. Tony thinks they can't let on how much Grady annoys them or act threatened, or Gibbs will like her.

Duckie arrives with some Duckie facts on pillows, but gets shutdown at "buckwheat."
The body is corroded with acid.

McGee looks Sgt. Moreno up and finds she died in Afghanistan three and a half years ago.

Back around the big screen at NCIS, the rundown: Moreno was killed by an IED and her body was sent back to Kansas. They think the victim stole her ID to steal her identity. The ID was stolen en route.

Susan is talking to Moreno's family, but Tony tells Gibbs not to hold out much hope. He backpedals, and he and McGee both say they don't need a third person, but Gibbs asks if they're threatened.

He barks at them to get on ID'ing the body.

Down in the lab, Abby has ID'd the acid used on the body, but it's common. There's DNA on the necklace she's testing. The necklace stone is from Afghanistan, as is the inscription on the back. They look up an old job application and notice her emergency contact: Leyla Shakarji, Mike Franks's daughter-in-law.

Gibbs and Tony pay a visit to Leyla at the park with her daughter. (The kid wants to know if Gibbs is coming over to play Twister again.)

When Leyla looks at a picture of the woman, she says she doesn't know her. But they tell her the woman was murdered. Leyla says she only met her a few times, Mike asked Leyla to look after her. She never saw her again after he died.

Two Years Ago Mike drops in on Gibbs in his basement, with a Middle Eastern teenage girl named Elina, saying he needs to leave her with Gibbs for a few days. He says there's no one else he can trust, but Gibbs can't ask any questions.

In the car on the ride home, Tony thinks Leyla was holding out on them.

Abby calls to report the DNA on the necklace is from Farshad Sarabi, who has a history of domestic violence and works in a garage with acid.

Gibbs remembers waiting for Mike with Eleni, who barely speaks English. He asks her where her family is. "Sold me to man," Eleni says. And old husband, she explains.

Back in the morgue, Duckie speculates the victim died in an honor killing – killed by her family for things like refusing to go along with an arranged marriage. The victim also has scars from a lifetime of beatings.

Gibbs remembers seeing Mike drop Eleni off with a couple.

Mike tells Gibbs about helping get a 12-year-old away from her rapist uncle in Afghanistan and becoming a sort of underground railroad for girls being moved by a women's shelter in Kabul. He asks Gibbs to put in a transport request for six refugees from Kabul to El Salvador, saying he'll do the rest.

Back in interrogation, they have Farshad Sarabi in custody. Grady comes in to do the interrogation. When Tony and McGee are surprised, she also tells them the investigator job she wants is in San Diego and they relax.

They found a list of Afghan women's names linked to dead service members in Farshad's apartment. Three names have been crossed off, including the victim's.

Grady sits down with Farshad and accuses him of murder. When he denies it, Tony is ready to play bad cop, but so is Grady.

She needles him about motive until he says the women brought shame upon their family and it was god's law that they be punished. Even if they stop him, someone else will get to them.

In MTAC, Gibbs calls Lt. Thomas Gorman, the liaison to the women's rights group who says all the women on the list stayed at the same women's shelter in Kabul.

Gibbs heads to Kabul with McGee. They meet Catherine Tavier, who runs the shelter. She shows them inside and she confirms the dead woman was Nadira. She's sure her family killed her, because they're the only ones who'd "care enough" to kill her.

Catherine knew there was a conduit to the US, but now it's closed. The other women under assumed names in the US are being brought into protective custody, but they need to find out who leaked the names. Catherine tells Gibbs that Mike Franks spoke very highly of him.

Gibbs remembers back to the travel request – but tearing it up before he submitted it.

In Kabul, McGee tries to talk to the women in the shelter to find out who might have leaked the names, but he's getting nowhere. There's one woman he hasn't spoken with yet.

Tony calls on a video conference with the other women whose names were on the list. As he talks to McGee, one of the women with Tony sees one of the women in the shelter – it's her mother, whom she hasn't seen in two years. Catherine explains that the mother was supposed to follow to the US, but it didn't happen after Mike Franks died. Tony called immigration because the women are in the country illegally, but Gibbs tells him to file requests for asylum.

They're interrupted when someone throws a rock through the shelter window.

Gibbs remembers Mike Franks coming to him, railing at him for not submitting the travel request. Gibbs says he's a federal agent and can't get involved with human smuggling. He cites his own Rule 10: Never get personally involved on a case and Rule 14: Bend the line, don't break it.

Mike reminds him about getting Leyla and Amira into the country. Gibbs asks him where the line is, how many do they let in.

Back in the shelter, McGee tells Gibbs about the girls' stories: one was sold into an arranged marriage at 13 and one was beaten by her father for kissing a boy. Thomas gets word that there's a bonfire planned at the shelter and says they've been recalled to base. He says they can't get involved due to the rules of engagement.

Gibbs looks around at the scared, defenseless women and refuses to go. Tom says the girls will be fine, but it'll turn violent if they stay.

Back at NCIS, Tony says good-bye to the refugees, then gets a call from McGee. He and Gibbs are both staying. He asks for satellite support.

After night falls, they board up the shelter. Shots come through the windows.

Tony calls to say a UN team is on the way. He checks the satellite and reports five attackers on foot.

Gibbs remembers seeing news reports about six Afghan women killed in a similar attack, in which Catherine was the lone survivor. Mike harangues Gibbs, saying he could have gotten the girls out.

Back in the shelter, they can't fire upon the attackers because they're outnumbered and the villagers would turn on them. And there's clearly no negotiating. Gibbs declares that the men are bullies, and resolves to stand up to them. Gibbs removes his weapons and goes outside to confront the men. One of them is holding a Molotov cocktail that he hasn't lit yet.

One of the men approaches Gibbs and throws a punch. Gibbs knocks him down then stands there defiantly. The man with the bottle goes to light it, but McGee shoots the bottle. The men all aim their weapons at Gibbs, but he stares them down.

When another man approaches with a knife, Gibbs quickly subdues him. Finally, their UN support arrives and essentially shoos the men away.

"Boss, you saved the shelter," McGee says. "For now, what about tomorrow?" Gibbs asks.

Back home, Tony says the leak turned out to be one of the girls who was threatened. Gibbs returns home with Catherine – and all the women from the shelter.

"Mike would be so proud of you," Catherine says.

Production Code: 239
Summary: DiNozzo spots a suspect from a 15-year-old cold case he handled when he was with the Baltimore PD at the scene of the murder of a Petty Officer.

A wounded man stumbles through the woods at night. He reaches the road and sees a stopped car. He tries to call for help, but can't manage the words and the couple inside is arguing and doesn't notice him. Before he reaches them, he's shot. They drive off.

At the office, McGee is surprised to see Tony at work at 7 a.m. He got a lot done in the morning, because he hasn't slept. McGee has noticed Tony has been different the past few weeks (with Ziva gone). Tony admits it's been a few days since he slept.

Before McGee can pester further,

Gibbs arrives with the body of the week: A dead sailor outside Baltimore.

At the park, walking to the crime scene, Tony crunches coffee beans and rejects McGee's offer of sleeping pills.

The victim is first class Petty Officer Andrew Wells, he was a cryptotech who just returned from overseas. McGee says he was staying in a really nice hotel room and goes to check it out.

Tony notices one of the lookie loos stands out from the crowd of joggers. The man runs when Tony calls after him, saying he knows him. Tony loses him. Gibbs notices Tony acting strangely. Tony picks up a wad of Choward's grape gum at his feet.

Back in the office, Delilah Fielding is sitting at Ziva's desk and tells Tony she's joining the team. She's joking, the DOD sent her over because Andrew Wells had top level clearance. He was due to report to a base this morning.

Tony has a pack of Choward's gum, which takes him back to 15 years ago when he was a beat cop in Baltimore, busting a kid named Anton Markin with gum and stolen cell phones.

McGee reports Wells was staying at a $1,000 a night hotel and had $10,000 cash in his room. They sent his laptop to Abby to go over.

In the lab, Abby doesn't have permission to log on, so she took it apart instead. She finds the insides don't match the case and it has spyware in it.

Down in the morgue, Duckie knows Ziva is the reason Tony isn't sleeping. Tony thinks he's starting to hallucinate.

Up in the office, McGee reports Wells' room was paid for by Amy Linden, a private defense contractor who used to work for Chinese tech companies. He called her repeatedly in the past few days. She could be Wells' handler and Gibbs wants them to pick her up.

Gibbs goes with McGee when he sees how out of it Tony is.

Abby brings Tony the DNA report on the gum – it belongs to a fugitive wanted for stabbing a Russian mobster, the kid he busted all those years ago, Anton Markin.

15 years ago

Anton cooperated with Tony on the name of the guy he got the cell phones from, but Tony knows he's part of a Russian crime syndicate so he takes him to his apartment to press him. He knows Anton was present at the murder of a truck driver recently. Anton admits it, but says he waited in the car and didn't know anyone was killed. Tony leans on him to cooperate, but Anton is worried about his sister.

Tony goes to his old apartment, which is boarded up. He finds Anton inside. Anton holds a gun on him, remembering how the last time Tony convinced him to help, he lost his life and his sister. Anton blames him for what happened to him, but Tony says running was his choice.

Anton hesitates shooting him and Tony takes the moment to swing at him. Anton runs and Tony follows, but he loses him.

Tony calls McGee to look up the address of Anton's sister Marie Markin, but asks him not to tell Gibbs.

Back at NCIS, Gibbs and McGee sit down with Amy Linden, who says she wanted Wells for his cryptology skills. She's a headhunter. The $10,000 was a signing bonus.

In the lab, Delilah is looking over Wells' computer and Abby is digitally scanning the bullet fragments.

Delilah finds a file she doesn't understand in Wells' computer and thinks it's something – but it's his fantasy football team stats. They find he logged in from another computer.

McGee calls Gibbs to report Marie works at Rankoff's Bakery in east Baltimore. Gibbs hears the conversation.

Tony knows the bakery.

Flash back to 15 years ago Tony goes to the bakery looking for Anton, who's late for his shift. He meets Marie, who defends her brother, saying he only stole to get by. Tony is there because Anton missed a meeting with a detective. He promises to take care of Anton.

In the present, Tony runs into Milo, the owner's son who he met at the bakery 15 years ago. Milo gives Tony Marie's address.

When he gets there, he sees a broken window and blood inside. He hears a noise. But it's not Anton – it's Gibbs.

Wells served overseas with Marie's husband, who died a couple weeks ago in the line of duty. They think Wells' beating started in the house.

Gibbs asks Tony about Anton. He killed one of the Russians he was informing on and skipped town, leaving Marie. But Tony doesn't think Anton killed Wells.

"It was just one of those cases, everything fell apart," Tony says. He knows Anton is a killer, he stabbed that guy 15 times. Tony just wants to find out what went wrong.

McGee shows Gibbs and Tony fingernail scratches in the garage. They find Marie's necklace. Gibbs looks around and find a hidden compartment in the garage with a stash of counterfeit laptops worth $300,000 on the street.

Back in the lab, Abby and Delilah worked together to crack the laptops and learn they can be traced. The spyware is American, planted to track the people smuggling them. The computers belong to US Customs.

Back upstairs, McGee explains Marie's husband was Sgt. Randy Hollister, whose partner was Jacob Spoke. Customs recently raided a warehouse owned by Spoke and arrested both men. They let Hollister go when they couldn't find the computers.

15 Years Ago Tony comes home to find Anton hiding in his apartment. Anton thinks his boss knows he's snitching, but Tony tries to convince him to go through with it, then leaves for the station to put the operation together, leaving Anton in his apartment to wait. It was Tony's first time running an informant.

At NCIS, Tony admits to Gibbs that he couldn't pull the trigger when Anton ran. "You followed your gut," Gibbs allows.

Tony thinks he can't rely on his instincts anymore. "I was wrong to trust Anton, maybe I was wrong about a lot of people," Tony says. "Are we still talking about the case?" Gibbs asks.

Tony says it's weird how no one will say Ziva's name. Every time he looks at her desk he feels like he made the wrong decision, except it wasn't him that made it. Gibbs still trusts him.

Gibbs, Tony and McGee go to Spoke's warehouse and find Anton with a gun on Spoke, demanding to know where his sister is. Tony convinces Anton to put down his gun, promising him they'll find Marie together.

Gibbs talks to Spoke in interrogation. He says he has no idea where Marie is. He is too scared of the people running the computer operation to rat on them.

Abby tells Gibbs the bullet that killed Wells was also used in a truck hijacking 15 years ago.

Tony talks to Anton, telling him everything that's happening is because of him and the Russian gangster he killed 15 years ago. Anton still blames Tony for not being there that night like he promised.

Anton tells Tony that that night 15 years ago, when Tony left to go back to the precinct to set up the operation, a guy came to Tony's apartment for him and took him to the shipyard. Anton says they were going to kill him and he grabbed the screwdriver in self defense. He ran because he knew how bad it looked.

He came back for Marie's husband Randy's funeral and they're still after him.

Tony goes to confront the person who told the gangsters that Anton was working with the police: Milo at the bakery. Milo goes for a gun, but Gibbs comes in the back and stops him.

It's the same make and model that killed Wells, which means he has Marie. Milo says he convinced the gangsters to let Marie live, but then Anton became his debt. He sent guys to watch Marie when she told him Anton was coming to Randy's funeral. His guys held the guy who showed up – but it was Wells, not Anton.

Wells ran.

They demand to know where Marie is.

Later, Tony tells Anton that Marie is safe. Anton is in custody and being taken to Baltimore. Tony wants to help. He shows Marie in to hug her brother.

At the end of the day, Tony stays to make sure Anton is processed smoothly. Then he kicks up his feet, leans back in his chair, and promptly falls asleep.

Production Code: 240
Summary: NCIS partners with the Coast Guard Investigative Service to probe a suspicious explosion on board an oil rig. Meanwhile, a prankster targets the NCIS team.

On an oil rig on the ocean, they run a drill for an attack. When it's over, there's an explosion.

In the office, McGee arrives to find his desk completely covered in plastic wrap. Abby is upset that someone moved her desk three inches and concludes they're dealing with a sadistic, evil genius. Tony denies responsibility.

Gibbs comes in with the body of the week: a dead Marine at Virginia Beach.

At the scene, Coast Guard Special Agent Abigail Borin (Diane Neal) is in charge. The victim, Marv Hebner, was on the bridge at the time of the explosion.

The victim's wife Paige arrives and Marv's friend Jonah confirms it's Marv.

A freighter captain called in to report he passed a motorboat with its lights off last night. They get notice that Homeland Security put all rigs on alert.

Back at the office, it's victim rundown time. Marvin Hebner completed three tours in the Middle East until returning three months ago and going to work for City Line.

Gibbs get a call that annoys him greatly. He goes to the conference room to meet with Secnav Sarah Porter and City Line CEO Perry Davidson and Brett Creevy, their lead counsel. They're assuming the attack was terrorism.

Davidson says if it was an attack, it wasn't very strategic – it has a smaller crew and output than other rigs.

Down in the morgue, Agent Borin joins Duckie. There's a faint beep from somewhere. Gibbs comes down and Duckie reports that Hebner drowned. Duckie pulled gold fragments from Hebner.

Borin gets a call that the rogue motorboat has been found abandoned, it was stolen from a cruiser.

Duckie hears the phantom beep again.

McGee comes down to the lab and grabs a fire extinguisher when he sees an open flame. Abby was burning sage to purify her work space.

Abby found malware on the rig server sent through email spam. McGee scans the malware for a coding signature.

Tony and McGee go talk to Danielle Benton, the programmer. She explains she created the software for her senior thesis years ago as a tool for anti-corporate intelligence gathering. It has no input capability. "It's looky, no touchy," she explains.

McGee is chagrined he didn't realize it.

With the crime scene released as structurally sound, Borin and Gibbs go check out the blast site. She tells him about her time in Iraq, including narrowly surviving an IED attack. Gibbs finds the detonator, which rules out terrorism. Since the bridge is a poor place to try to take down the rig, they figure Marv himself was the target.

Gibbs and Borin take their theory to the CEO and lawyer. They tell them Hebner had a falling out with Jonah over an OSHA infraction and Jonah was about to be fired.

When McGee and Tony meet with Jonah says Marv was his closest friend. Jonah says Marv actually committed the safety violation, but Jonah took the fall for him to try to repay him for everything he'd done for him.

Agent Borin drops in on Abby to learn about the bomb. The cell phone detonator was untraceable and the main ingredient in the explosive was pure black powder, which isn't very powerful. Also, the bomb was placed in the one spot on the rig where it wouldn't trigger a chain reaction.

In the office, Tony gets nervous that Secnav is hanging around so much.

McGee runs background checks on the food service employees who weren't screened by City Line. He finds Lenny Pachaca has a record and was aboard as Lenny Machaca. He did time for possession and transportation of explosives.

When Borin and Tony go to pick up Pachaca, he runs when he sees them. Borin cuts him off and takes him out with a well-placed board.

Back in interrogation, Pachaca calls Hebner a "tightly wound hardass." He says his past explosive dalliances were just for fun blowing stuff up. Borin paints a gruesome picture for him of what being caught in a blast is like, from her own experience narrowly missing an IED in Iraq. She gets too intense with him and Gibbs relieves her.

Secnav shares memories of Boston with McGee. Gibbs is annoyed. McGee confirmed Pachaca's alibi.

Tony reports the server of the firm that designed the rig was hacked recently and the only plans compromised were those of the City Line. They decide to look at Danielle Benton again.

When Secnav leaves, Gibbs follows her. He wants to know what she's doing there. She assures him it's only for the case, and she isn't concerned about him adding someone to replace Ziva.

Gibbs sits down in the park with Borin. She admits she thinks about that day in Iraq everyday and replays things she could have done differently. She lost three people that day, including her boyfriend. She saw him blow up and pulled his body from the water.

Tony calls with Danielle's location. Borin wants to pull out of the case, but Gibbs won't let her.

Danielle, an eco warrior, is found on a boat with 50 gallons of black gun powder in its hold.

Back in interrogation, McGee confronts Danielle with surveillance photos and security access codes to ten biotech labs hit by arsonists. Her prints are all over them. She says the lab experimented on animals and she saved lives.

She says she got the plans to board City Line in a protest, the explosion harmed sea life, which goes against everything she believes in.

Down in the lab, Abby says she found sturgeon leather in their crime scene. The gold Duckie found was from a locking mechanism. Putting them together, she traced them to an attaché case. She was able to connect it to Brett Creevy, the corporate counsel.

As they wait to interrogate Creevy, McGee reports Creevy lost his life savings in a Ponzi scheme last year. He shorted City Line stock and made tens of millions after it crashed following the explosion. He has a flight booked to the Maldives tonight.

Gibbs lets Borin talk to him. She confronts him with the evidence and the fact witnesses remember seeing him with the attaché case on the rig, but don't remember him leaving with it.

Creevy cracks and say no one was supposed to get hurt.

Back upstairs, Duckie comes up with the source of the beep – a tiny gadget designed to beep intermittently. They all assume Tony's behind it, in part because he haven't been pranked. He picks up his bag to go, but falls over under its weight – it's packed with books and dumbbells.

Borin drops in on Gibbs in his basement. She assumes he's behind the pranks. He asks her if she's interested in coming to NCIS. She's tempted, but doesn't feel her work with the Coast Guard is done yet. But she leaves the door open.

Production Code: 241
Summary: After Gibbs leaves mid-case to help his father reconnect with a former war pilot, Tony and McGee argue over who should run lead on the team's investigation into the murder of a Marine Sergeant.

We start with the body of the week, Sgt. Michael Dawson, dead in a robbery in a suit store.

Gibbs' dad calls him.

Tony talks to the owner, "Mr. Spiffy." A guy came in with a mask and a gun and demanded the money. He was going to turn it over, but Sgt. Dawson intervened and the robber shot him and ran off. "Spiffy" looks like he's going to lose his lunch.

There have been three other armed robberies in the area this month. Gibbs answers the call from his dad – but it's not his dad, it's a police officer. Gibbs hears his dad ranting in the background, asking them what law he broke.

Back at the office, Tony is more concerned with what happened with Jackson than their case. He thinks Jackson got busted with a "lady of the night." Or he was trying to buy an exotic pet.

McGee thinks Tony is in a mood. Tony dumps a box of files from Metro PD on McGee's desk and announces he's taking point. He tells McGee to go through them looking for a connection.

Gibbs picks his dad up from the station, thanking the officer for handling it. Jackson's ornery, he hit a parked car. The officer says they need to take his license away.

Jackson was on his way to pick up Gibbs to go visit an old war buddy in North Carolina after receiving a letter from the man saying he's dying. He has things he needs to say to him.

Jackson remembers the war and radioing in that he's hit.

Jackson reminds Gibbs of the name Walter Beck, the other pilot from a story Jackson told him about flying. Jackson insists that Gibbs meet Walter. "I need you to do this, please," Jackson says.

In the lab, Abby tells Tony that Dawson was killed with a Glock 17 .9 mm, similar to the gun used in the other robberies.

Tony conferences McGee in with Gibbs. He says the other robberies seem similar. Gibbs tells McGee he has point. McGee starts giving Tony orders.

On the road, Jackson remembers being in the air with a busted compass and no ammo, radioing for help. Gibbs thinks he knows the story.

Tony talks with Michael's mother. She didn't know he was on leave. She assumes he was working on something, which is the only reason he wouldn't call.

Gibbs and his dad stop at a diner, but Jackson is extremely anxious to get back on the road.

Tony brings McGee surveillance footage from outside the suit shop that shows Dawson was being followed – they now think the shooting was staged to look like the other robberies.

Tony and McGee agree to be co-point on the case. Michael Dawson was on seven day leave from Anacostia, nothing odd in his bank records. He had a minor drug charge years ago, but that's it. He was on loan working for the Defense Clandestine Service, even though he was a mechanic.

Jackson and Gibbs reach Walter's house in North Carolina. Gibbs learns that Walter didn't know they were coming.

Jackson remember looking over midair and seeing Walter flying next to him and motioning for him to follow.

"He saved me, Leroy. I was flying in the wrong direction. He turned me around, brought me home on his wing," Jackson said. He wants to wait for Walter.

McGee and Tony meet with Dawson's DCS boss, Karen Fox, who says he was an incredible asset. They ask for his files. She references his past pain pill problem and the fact he seemed stressed lately.

But Abby reports he had no drugs in his system. Abby figures out that Dawson speaks Jala, because that's what his mother spoke growing up in Nigeria. There's a Nigerian terrorist group using it as a code because so few speak it.

Abby got the tip from McGee's girlfriend at the DoD. They think Karen Fox brought up Dawson's pill use to throw them off the trail and buy the DCS time to cover their tracks.

They send word to Gibbs, who tells his dad it's time to go home. Jackson gets upset, saying again he wants Gibbs to meet Walter.

Tony and McGee try to figure out where to go next, wondering how to get the DCS files. Gibbs shows up at the diner, telling them they have to go to DCS to read the files.

McGee briefs Gibbs, saying not only could he not find record of Walter Beck in a hospital or morgue, there's no record of him serving with Jackson.

In the morgue late at night, Duckie commiserates with Gibbs over the pain of watching a parent age. Gibbs is disturbed that his dad lies to him about things that matter. Duckie urges him not to give up.

Gibbs tells his dad about finding no record of Walter Beck. Jackson isn't surprised – Beck was German, the enemy. Walter wrote to Jackson and said he saved him that day to remind himself of who he was. He's dying and all he can think of is the people he killed over ideas that weren't his.

Gibbs agrees to try to try to track him down.

Tony and McGee report back after their night reading at DCS – Dawson broke the Jala code so they don't think DCS had any reason to want him dead.

Gibbs sees in Dawson's phone records that only two people called him at work, his mother and a guy named Aaron Connelly. He drives an SUV like the one they're looking for. They go to his apartment, where Connelly busts out of his closet and tackles McGee. After they subdue him, he insists he didn't want Dawson dead.

Back in interrogation, they found that Connelly was on bath salts and PCP. Connelly insists he didn't know the weed was laced. They haven't been able to find the murder weapon.

Connelly admits he drove by the suit shop, but he didn't kill him. Dawson was his sponsor in Narcotics Anonymous.

Connelly says he showed up at Dawson's place high and it crushed Dawson. He took Connelly's stash and took off to confront Connelly's dealer – the owner of the suit shop.

Tony looks through the drawers of the suit shop and finds a hidden compartment full of heroin. Mr. Spiffy says he didn't kill Dawson, but then Tony finds the murder weapon.

Down in the lab, Abby has determined what ambulance company transported Walter. They look in his letter to Jackson and see the name of a hospice.

Gibbs takes Jackson to the hospice and gently suggests his dad move in with him. "I appreciate the offer, I do. Maybe I'll take you up on it when I start getting old," Jackson says.

Inside, Walter cries when he sees Jack and hugs him. Jack introduces Gibbs, saying what he did made his son possible and Gibbs helps people. Jackson says his son is the best person he knows.

Guest Stars: Salli Richardson-Whitfield (Carrie Clark), Dameon Clarke (Homicide Detective Paul Dockry), Steven Helmkamp (Marine Staff Sergeant Justin Dunne), Rodney Eastman (Wendell Kaiser), Nicole Steinwedell (Olivia Chandler), Jeff Harlan (Reverend Miller), Connie Jackson (Elaine), Eltony Williams (Marine Gunnery Sergeant Cal Groves), Abe Daniels (Marine Private Daniel Cliff)
Production Code: 242
Summary: The NCIS team is forced to re-examine a hit-and-run murder case when a former FBI agent turned lawyer confides in Gibbs that her client's confidential alibi is solid. Meanwhile, McGee grows suspicious of Tony's strange behavior.

Marine Corps Base, Quantico. A female Marine is jogging down a muddy road when a red pick-up with a white stripe nails her from behind. The driver gets out to check and, upon seeing she's dead, flees the scene.

On the scene, Tony is missing. He told McGee he'd get a ride; he still hasn't replaced his car. McGee gets a text from Delilah, they're thinking about getting away for the weekend.

The victim is a petty officer third class. She'd been training for a marathon and running every night.

McGee is curious about the "friend" who finally drops Tony off. Duckie estimates TOD around 10pm.

Back at the lab, from a headlight shard, Abby has ID'd the vehicle as a 2005 Dodge Ram.

Upstairs, McGee reports that make and model truck is registered to Marine Staff Sergeant Justin Dunne, but he never left the base last night. He's a helicopter mechanic with a past DUI.

When Tony and McGee go check out the truck, they see it has serious front end damage. McGee is nervous things came together so quickly.

They go to pick-up Dunne, who is washing a bloody knife in his apartment when they knock on the door. He sneaks out the window, but McGee catches him.

Back in interrogation, Dunne tells Gibbs he hasn't driven the truck in a couple days and was asleep at home last night. He says he's been sober for 13 months. He won't explain why he tried to run.

Down in the garage, Abby is hoping to match Dunne's boot to the foot print from the scene. The truck is definitely the murder weapon.

The next day, Tony rides the elevator up with Carrie Clark, a former FBI agent now in private practice. She's representing Dunne.

When Tony notices she doesn't have a wedding ring on, he calls Tobias Fornell to get the scoop.

Dunne tells Carrie he wasn't driving his truck. She thinks he seems nervous. He doesn't want to tell her his alibi. After he quadruple checks that she can't repeat what he says, he tells her he was 35 miles away in Falls Church - stabbing a guy to death.

Back upstairs, Carrie says her client has an alibi, but won't tell them what it is. She says she's going to check his alibi herself and get back to them.

Down in the garage, Abby tells Gibbs the truck was wiped clean of fingerprints, even the spare key hidden in the wheel well.

Carrie calls Gibbs to tell her that Dunne's alibi checks out, but she still can't tell him what it is.

Gibbs notices she didn't call from her cell phone and McGee traces it to a pay phone in Falls Church. They think Carrie just dropped them a clue.

Tony and McGee head to Falls Church and notice a police car in the area and meet Homicide Detective Paul Dockery, who tells them the cigar store owner was found dead upstairs last night. He tells them to tell Gibbs he says hi.

In the garage, Abby reports she found a thumb print on the back of the rear view mirror - it matched Private Daniel Cliff.

In interrogation, Gibbs asks Dunne about Cliff.

Out in the hall, Gibbs asks Carrie about the Falls Church murder and if her client could have done it. She only says he didn't do the hit and run.

In the office, Tony satisfies McGee's curiosity and says he's been riding public transportation.

When Gibbs gets there, McGee says there's no connection between Dunne and the dead cigar store owner. Dunne called a woman named Olivia Chandler at lot.

Gibbs confronts Cliff Daniels in interrogation and he cracks quickly, saying he knew where the spare key was from back when Dunne was drinking and locked himself out. Gibbs doesn't want to charge Daniels just yet, because they'd have to let Dunne go.

Gibbs goes to meet with Detective Dockery. The store owner was a bookie. Dockery is looking at a man named Kaiser who owed the bookie lots of money, but he has an alibi.

Back in the office, McGee has a photo of Olivia Chandler, the woman Dunne called often. She's drop dead gorgeous but married to a much older man. She has a DUI on her record.

McGee found Olivia Chandler's car on traffic cameras in the area where the bookie was killed. Gibbs tells McGee to try to link gambling or Kaiser to Dunne. He tells Tony to check out Olivia Chandler, making Tony's day.

Tony talks to Olivia outside her house. He admires her Astin Martin. She met Dunne in an AA meeting. Tony notices her suitcase. She says she's going to Jamaica with some girlfriends.

Back in the office, Tony looks over Dunne's credit card charges and sees multiple charges at a motel.

Their 48 hours are up and they have to let Dunne go.

Tony heads to the motel, where the desk clerk recognizes Dunne's picture. And even though he arrives separate from Olivia, he recognizes her photo, too.

Duckie drops by Gibbs' basement to ask him what's bothering him. He says he's worried about Carrie Clark, and burning her if they mishandle the direction she pointed them in. She could be disbarred for steering them.

Tony and McGee stake out Wendell Kaiser's apartment. They follow him to an AA meeting at a church. It turns out Tony knows it well. The Reverend knows him by name, from the meetings Tony attends. It's a men's support group, after the past year, he wanted to shake things up.

The Reverend drove Tony to Quantico the other morning.

Back at the office, Tony reviews the AA connection between Dunne, Olivia Chandler and Wendell Kaiser. Kaiser wanted the bookie dead, and they think Olivia wants her husband dead. They think it's going to happen when Dunne ships out tomorrow and Olivia goes to Jamaica. Olivia drove Dunne and he killed the bookie.

Detective Dockery talks to Kaiser after his meeting, mentioning Dunne and Olivia to him. He offers him a deal if he talks first. Gibbs watches as they take him in to custody.

Olivia is about to leave for her trip when the police pull up to arrest her. They get Dunne off his ship before he ships out.

Carrie Clark meets Gibbs at his diner. He plays dumb when she tells him about the arrest of her former client. They found the murder weapon at his house. She feels good about things, she did her job and now it's not her problem. She joins Gibbs for dinner.

Ducky Mallard), Sean Murray (I) (Special Agent Tim McGee), Brian Dietzen (Asst. M.E. Jimmy Palmer), Rocky Carroll (Director Leon Vance), Emily Wickersham (NSA Agent Ellie Bishop)
Recurring Role: Leslie Hope (Secretary of the Navy Sarah Porter)
Guest Stars: Alan Ruck (Ward Davis), Geoffrey Blake (Marc Attencio), Gideon Emery (Rudolph Stalin), Tim Peper (NSA Agent Chad Flynderling), Nichelle Hines (NCIS Special Agent Norma Hench)
Production Code: 243
Summary: After discovering the Secretary of the Navy was bugged during a confidential briefing, NSA Analyst Eleanor "Ellie" Bishop, who predicted the security breach in exact detail two years ago, partners with the NCIS team on the case.

SecNav Porter leads a presentation in MTAC to four defense contractors United Equinox Electronics, Galaxy Missile Corporation, Dearborn Dynamics System and Beringer Marine about a new destroyer class.

When she finishes, MTACs alarms go bonkers, shutting down at the sign of someone trying to hack into the system. The threat is coming from inside the room.

At his desk, Tony tries to make small talk with Norma, another agent. He tells her hes apparently dating a tennis pro she left her number on a tennis ball on his pillow.

Gibbs comes down with the crisis of the week not a body, but the breach in MTAC.

Upstairs, Gibbs sweeps the defense contractors and the room and they find nothing. But Tonys scanning wand goes off as SecNav walks by. Tony pats her down and they find a flash drive with a pinhole microphone hidden in her pen. Shes the breach.

In the elevator, SecNav tells Gibbs she has no idea where the pen came from and the last time she can remember using it is to sign a permission slip for her daughter yesterday. He believes her, explaining she gets the benefit of the doubt. She had classified briefings at three DOD facilities yesterday and the strategies she talked about could cause serious issues if they leak.

McGee reports on Abbys findings on the pen. Based on the battery charge left, they think its been recording for 30 hours or so. Its not transmitting, the information has to be downloaded, which they have to assume has happened already.

Tony gets off the phone with the NSA. They have a threat assessment two years ago on this exact situation. Gibbs and Tony go to talk to the analyst to talk to NSA Special Agent Todd Flynn Flynderling, who isn't thrilled to refer them to the person who wrote it.

Flynn takes them to see NSA Agent Eleanor Ellie Bishop, who is reading and rocking out to loud music. Flynn sneaks up on her, causing her to cite Rule 1: When my earbuds are in, flash the desk light.

She remembers the report, she wrote it after finishing Cocoa Pebbles and seeing the pen prize inside. She says she didn't give the report to anyone else. She plops back down and puts her earbuds in, explaining she's not a field agent. But Gibbs wants her to come with them, they get a call of a second pen.

Gibbs takes her to the morgue, where an accountant for United Equinox is on the slab. The DC ME found the second pen on him after the alert. He died two days ago of myocardial infarction. But the pen is missing, collected by someone posing as an FBI agent. Ellie gets an idea.

Tony and McGee find Ellie sitting on the breakroom floor with her earbuds in, surrounded by papers. Tony notices a gold ring on her finger and wants to know if she's married. She says the person who stole the data has three options: release it in the name of freedom of information, which hasn't happened; sell it to an enemy country or sell it back to the US. Gibbs comes in to report someone just called to sell it.

SecNav got a demand for $10 million in an email. They have an hour. Ellie plops herself down on top of Zivas desk and suggests they pay him and follow the money. Vance says SecNav approved making the payment.

SecNav runs interference between Ward Davis with Beringer Marina and Marc Attencio, with United Equinox. They worry what the news leaking would do to their company's stock.

SecNav takes Gibbs and Vance aside and tells them she's calling in more NSA help because she wants to make it right.

Ellie drops in on Abby in the lab. She got a description of the fake FBI agent who picked up the second pen and ran it through facial recognition and ID'd it as an American named Rudolph Stalin, with ties to Russia. Abby gets a call.

At the scene of the money drop, Agent Flynn has been shot dead. The bad guy accessed the money through coffee shop wifi, so Flynn came alone to check it out.

Ellie arrives in time to see Tony pull her report out of Flynn's pocket.

Back in the office, they confirm the $10 million is still there. Bishop realizes what someone could get out of luring and killing a federal agent: proof that their intel is legit so they can sell it to another, bigger, buyer. She blames herself for not realizing it and starts to get frantic.

Gibbs suggests she take a break.

Down in Abby's lab, she presents Gibbs with a date and time stamp of when the pen info was downloaded 7:30 last night, when she was at dinner. Abby found Stalin on a traffic cam sitting outside the restaurant.

SecNav sits down with Bishop in the breakroom and Bishop tells her how hard it is not being able to talk to her family in Oklahoma about what she does. Tony comes to get her, they found Stalin.

At the movie theater, Gibbs orders Bishop to stay in the car as he and Tony go inside to find Stalin. Later, she sees Stalin run out the back door. Worried he'll get away, she blocks him with the car and knocks him out. Tony comes out and says Gibbs had the exit covered.

Back watching interrogation, Bishop apologizes to Gibbs for hitting him. She remembered reading in his file that he was a high school track star. She remembers most of what she reads. She has an idea to pose as his lawyer, just being careful not to explicitly say she is.

She and Gibbs join interrogation, she lays out her business card. Stalin says he didn't do it, but Edward Gracie did. When she leaves, she points out to Stalin that she gave him her real card.

Down in the garage, they're heading out to go to Gracie's place, but Bishop gets called back to NSA HQ to debrief.

Gibbs, McGee and Tony bust into the office building rented to Grace, but it's empty. They find lots of spy pens along with flyers for a heart disease charity. He sends the pens with junk mail in the hopes people will keep the pen. They find a shipping receipt to Sarah Porter and many others.

At NSA, Bishop gets an idea and looks something up. She likes what she finds. She drives to a mailbox store, she discovered Grace was an alias and had a weekly charge to the mailbox store. As shes about to walk in the door, Gibbs calls and angrily asks what shes doing there. Theyre staking out Edward Gracie hes inside.

He walks out and sees Bishops NSA tag. He pulls his gun and tackles her as Gibbs and Tony drive up and get out of their cars. By the time they get there, Bishop is sitting on top of Gracie with his gun in his back. She has three older brothers. Gibbs is annoyed with her.

Later, Bishop doesnt think their corporate pretty boy fits the crime. She thinks he wouldnt make the jump to treason without a good reason trying to impress his boss.

Bishop looks up the staff lists from the corporations in MTAC this morning. Bugs have been sent to every person on the list, except one: Beringer Marina, the one paying Gracie. They wonder what Beringer has against her.

Later, Gibbs meets with Ward Davis with Beringer. Gibbs pretends to be frustrated with Sarah Porter and Ward vents, saying he was on the short list for SecNav but he declined because he didnt have a military background. He thinks she should have done the same thing. Porter, Vance and Gibbs confront him with the pen. He says he was just trying to protect the military, but Porter says she doesnt have to be military to serve with honor.

Bishop goes to see Gibbs late at night to apologize for not being a team player.

He directs her to papers on Zivas desk Bishops NCIS application from years ago. He remembered her name and looked her up, which is why he brought her along today. He offers her a joint duty assignment.

Production Code: 244
Summary: Complications arise when the NCIS team discovers a link between a murder victim and the current boyfriend of Gibbs and Agent Fornell's ex-wife. Meanwhile, NSA Analyst Ellie Bishop adjusts to joining the NCIS team.

A Marine leaves someone a message saying they need to talk and he can explain everything. He returns to his apartment and hears an odd squeaky sound from down the hall. A clown steps out – and shoots him in the chest.

In the office, Ellie Bishop gets her stacks of paperwork to finalize her joint NSA-NCIS assignment from Rhoda, the legendary no-nonsense HR woman. Then after that she has to take another polygraph and survive Gibbs, who arrives with the body of the week: A dead marine in Potomac Heights.

On the scene, the victim is Cpl. Ron Flegman, stationed at Quantico, worked in the motorpool. Ellie and Tony got a sketch of the clown from a neighbor's description. Gibbs orders them to pull all the street performer's weapons permits.

McGee finds the Marine's second cell phone including dozens of missed calls from the same number before he died. Tony recognizes it as the Adams House, where his dad always stays.

Tony and Gibbs head to the hotel room and use the key to go in. They find Gibbs' ex-wife, Diane Sterling, on the bed. Then Tobias Fornell comes out of the bathroom wearing only a towel.

Gibbs wants an explanation, especially since Diane is married. She says she's getting a divorce from Victor, and they were going to tell Gibbs but were keeping things quiet for their daughter Emily's sake.

Gibbs tells Tobias about the missed calls. Diane confesses she was calling her boyfriend Eddie to break up with him (while Tobias was in the bathroom). She doesn't see what the big deal is with a little "innocent overlap." She's not surprised Eddie's phone was found on a dead guy, since he seemed shady and had no credit history.

Back at NCIS, Tobias joins them for the rundown. Eddie Macklin works at a local climbing gym, but they found nothing on him prior to six months ago.

At the gym, the owner Elijah tells them Eddie missed his personal climbing instruction appointment. He recognizes the client as the victim. He gives them the info on the car Eddie put on his employment application, because they found none registered to him.

Later, Tobias drives Gibbs home. "What the hell am I doing, Gibbs? I feel like I've been swallowed by a python, cut my way out and crawled back inside again," Tobias says. "That's about right," says Gibbs.

Tobias says it's different this time and tries to get Gibbs' to weigh in. He finally settles on "If you're happy...."

Tobias is interrupted by a call from his neighbor who watches Emily. She didn't come home, for the third time this week. He leaves to go search the mall.

Gibbs goes inside his house, glad to be free of their drama, but a teen girl is waiting for him. "No way in hell am I living with either of them if they're back together," Emily says.

The next day in the office, Emily asks Gibbs to let her stay with him another night, but he says her parents want her back. Ellie presents an overly wordy update on the case to Gibbs, and Emily tells her that he thinks she's doing a good job, but needs to relax.

When Diane sees her daughter, she tells her she's in big trouble, but Emily starts arguing back about how terrible her parents are together. Finally, they think to ask her how she even knows. She put a keystroke logger on both their Facebook accounts.

Abby comes up and tells Gibbs that Eddie exchange racy texts with Diane – then she notices Diane standing there.

Tobias races down to Abby's lab to read the texts, followed by Diane. Abby manages to remove them from her screen remotely, but Tobias wants to know how innocent the overlap was.

The suspect sent texts to a burn phone about a security box. Gibbs takes her to the bank to ID Eddie from the security footage.

When the bank manager leaves Gibbs and Diane alone, she unburdens herself. "Jethro, what am I doing? I feel like I drove my car into a ditch, dug myself out and then drove right back in again," she says.

She says it's his fault for shooting Tobias in the rear and she had to nurse him back to health. She wants to know if they're making a mistake.

The manager interrupts with the security footage and the box. Eddie's been there ten times in the last few weeks, but only stationary is left in the box.

Diane sees Eddie on the footage, kissing a woman.

Ellie drops in on the morgue to familiarize herself more with dead bodies. She looks at Flegman's body and is able to deduce everything before Duckie and Palmer can tell her: that the body wasn't moved and that a bruise on his leg indicates he was diabetic. She read the 600 page autopsy manual over the weekend.

Tony interrupts with a cupcake to celebrate Ellie's first joint duty BOLO coming in. Eddie's car was found in airport longterm parking. She can't go, she has to take her polygraph.

Tobias joins Abby in the garage, where she's going over Eddie's car with McGee. They found a clown nose in the truck and minute traces of blood in the car from four separate victims. Tobias giggles over the idea that Diane's ex was a serial killer.

Back in the office, they're focusing on Eddie as the main suspect. Diane calls Gibbs for the fifth time to see if they've found Eddie yet. He says no and hangs up. Then Tobias calls and he goes through the same routine. Finally, when it rings again, he dunks his phone in his coffee.

Ellie joins them, after finding her polygraph a breeze compared to NSA. Gibbs tells them to expand the BOLO on Eddie to train and bus stations. "That's a bad idea," Ellie blurts out. Instead, she suggests they put his car back at long term parking and wait for him to come back, then follow him to see where he goes.

Gibbs goes for it, to the shock of McGee and Tony.

Gibbs goes home for some peace and quiet and a sandwich, but he hears noises coming from his basement. He goes to investigate and runs into Diane. She and Tobias had plans with Emily and she didn't show, she thought Emily might be there.

Gibbs ushers her out, then hears a ringing from his closet. He finds Emily. Her Happy Cat Friend Alert watch is going off – she set it to remind her to record a "Colombo" marathon. She asks him to help her break her parents up. She says all they do is fight, then says it's OK when it's just the three of them, then says she doesn't want to go through them breaking up again. Gibbs is confused about what she wants. So is she. "You suck at this," she tells him, completing the Fornell family trifecta of advice sought and rejected.

Gibbs gets a call from Tony: Eddie returned to his car.

In the morning, Gibbs joins the team. Tony reports Eddie drove all night to lose a tail, then went into the storage locker where they are. Gibbs and Tony open the unit and find what Tony calls "Hannibal Lecter's little hobby center," with a mask and various tools. It's empty, then they see Eddie walking up to it. He takes off running and Tony follows. Eddie hits a dead end into a building, but then he uses his climbing skills to scale the wall and drop to the other side – where he runs into Tobias' fist.

In interrogation, Eddie says the storage unit isn't his. They found almost $100K in cash hidden in it. Eddie worries that "he" will be angry if he finds his money missing. Eddie gets up to leave, but Abby slides a file under the door. She connected one of the blood spatters to an unsolved quintuple homicide.

Eddie insists he didn't kill anyone, the car is ten years old and is from a police impound. Then his demeanor shifts completely and he says his name isn't Eddie Macklin: It's special agent Edward McKenzie, with the Secret Service. He's in the middle of a highly classified six month operation.

Later, in the conference room, Edward updates them on the money laundering case. They traced one of the sources to the Tower gym, where he went undercover. The cash came from a bank robbery gang, the owner Elijah Banner ran it with his girlfriend. Edward went with her to the bank to rent a safety deposit box to case the joint.

Flegman drove the getaway car, but they haven't been able to tie Elijah to the robberies. He thinks Elijah's girlfriend was probably the one who killed Flegman, she works kid's parties as a clown. McKenzie wants to put the money back before Elijah notices he's gone, but before he can leave, Elijah calls him and asks to talk to Fornell.

He knows McKenzie got picked up and he has Tobias's daughter, Emily.

The team goes into overdrive. McGee reports there was a camera in the storage locker and Elijah must have seen them collect his money.

Tony calls from the climbing gym, where they've found Elijah's girlfriend dead and surveillance photos of Fornell with Emily.

Elijah calls and demands Ellie meet him alone with his cash. Gibbs leaves what to do up to Fornell, who asks Ellie, the analyst, if she thinks Elijah can be trusted. She says yes and goes to the meet.

In a park, Elijah jogs up, takes his money and gives her a phone, saying he'll call with Emily's location.

When Ellie checks in over comm, McGee suggests they can look up the phone to see where it's been, and maybe find out where he's going. Emily tries to look it up, but the phone doesn't work. She realizes something's wrong. Rather than reporting back, she takes her earpiece out and sits down to think in peace.

She doesn't see any upside to killing Emily and she runs through all the possible scenarios, knowing he can't use his white van to get away because they're looking for it. She sees a blue van parked nearby and realizes he painted it. She runs over and opens the door and finds Emily unharmed inside.

Ellie brings her back to NCIS, where she has a happy reunion with both parents. Gibbs tells Ellie good job, but warns her not to ever take her ear piece out again. They worry Elijah got away. "Oh, he didn't get away. My last name is Fornell, after all," Emily says.

Elijah pulls up to a gas station on his motorcycle and is quickly surrounded by Fornell and Gibbs. He asks how they caught him and Gibbs pulls Emily's Happy Cat Friend Alert watch out his backpack. It's Blue tooth enabled, McGee traced it.

Elijah curses Emily and says he shouldn't have let her go. Tobias decks him.

Gibbs comes home after a long day and crashes on his couch. Then he sees Diane and Tobias sitting at his kitchen table with a bottle of liquor. He tries to run, but they stop him. They want his blessing. He thinks about it.

Production Code: 245
Summary: After a mysterious illness strikes children from military families, Gibbs and the team investigate the cause. Meanwhile, Abby and Jimmy partner with the Naval Medical Research Center to determine the strain of illness, all in hopes of delivering a cure before the holidays. Also, Vance struggles with forgiveness as his estranged father-in-law makes a surprise visit to his home.

A Marine comes home for the holidays to see his wife and two kids. He goes to check on his young daughter Emma, who came home early from school with a fever. When he touches her, she's burning up. Her parents try to rouse her, but can't.

At NCIS, Tony is looking forward to spending his Christmas in Jamaica. Ellie is going home to Oklahoma where her husband and brothers will argue about football.

Abby presents them with her lab-baked holiday cookies. McGee gets off the phone and reports about Kevin and Audrey Daly and their daughter, Emma.

She's in the ICU. Ellie recognizes the symptoms as McGee describes them, the same thing happened to her Marine friend's son, who's now on a respirator.

Gibbs comes in and reports there are eight sick kids total. Abby's oldest friend Carol, who works at the Naval Medical Research Center, is with him.

Abby worries it's bioterror. Carol and Abby will coordinate with the CDC while NCIS works the case.

At home, Vance checks on his own kids before he takes them to school. Outside, Vance isn't happy when he sees an older black man named Lamar Addison on his lawn. Lamar assures him he's not looking for trouble, as he extends a hand, but Vance is angry and suggests he return to New York. He tells his kids the man is nobody.

At the hospital, the total of sick kids has reached 14 and none of them is responding to treatment. Tony calls and says there are five more cases at Washington General in the last hour.

At NCIS, Duckie is impressed by Palmer's epidemiology knowledge from classes he took after Tony got sick. He suggests Palmer help Abby and Carol pour through the data.

In Vance's office, he tells Gibbs about Lamar Alexander: he's Jackie's father. He owns a chain of car dealerships in New York and walked out on Jackie and Michael when they were kids.

Palmer's wife Breena stops by the lab to tell him the agency may have found them a birth mother to meet with. He's excited, but that's interrupted by Carol isolating the pathogen through a microscope. It doesn't look like anything they've ever seen.

Back upstairs, the number of sick kids keeps rising. Gibbs calls everyone to the big screen for an update, but Ellie stays put to follow a lead – not knowing they always meet around the screen in the second act.

Ellie gets a name from a government watch list: Max Comey, a scientist fired for stealing mold samples. He lives on the same street as a school four of the kids attend. He also got in a fight with a Marine recruiter last week after he was rejected.

Tony, Gibbs, and Ellie go to Max's apartment, but it's completely empty. Gibbs finds a bio-hazard bag in the trash. Duckie calls to report the illness caused a death of an elderly person. The victim is Lloyd Grunfeld, a Vietnam Vet who managed an on-base dry cleaner.

There are now 28 sick children.

Max's coworkers say he was egotistical and thought highly of himself.

Down in the morgue, Duckie tells Gibbs that Lloyd died of aggressive pneumonia. Palmer starts to worry about having kids at all, given the fear over things going wrong. Abby and Carol work to ID the strain.

Vance has Lamar brought into his office after his nanny called to say Lamar was at his house. Lamar wants to get to know his grandchildren, but Vance tells him Jackie always told them their grandfather was dead and he doesn't intend to say otherwise. Lamar offers to pay for the kids' college if he can meet them but Vance bristles at the idea he's trying to buy them. He throws Lamar out.

Down in the lab, Abby and Carol have ID'd the strain as strep pneumonia and the hospitals are going to start administering the right drugs.

Back upstairs, they're reviewing video of the kids to see where they might have picked up the germs.

McGee gets word that Max Comey has been located. Gibbs wants Ellie to approach him since he fancies himself a ladies man. She flirts him up at the Christmas tree lot where he's working. She says she temped with him and flatters him. "They'll know they've made a mistake soon enough, I'll show them," Max says.

The team comes out and searches Max's van. They find a biohazard cooler in it.

Back in interrogation, Max says the lab was throwing away the mold spores. Max says he kept them to do his own experiments. Max says he was planning to make his girlfriend Bernadette sick so he could cure her to make her appreciate him.

Later, Duckie thinks Max is completely delusional and Bernadette probably isn't even his girlfriend. Abby comes down with bad news, that the illness is not what they thought and the kids aren't responding to treatment.

Gibbs calls Vance at home to update him. Vance's doorbell rings, it's Lamar. He has one thing to get off his chest. Vance hears him out. Lamar says he left Jackie's mom Millie because he felt too young to handle the responsibility. He later had his own family and raised three wonderful kids. Then he got a letter from Jackie last Christmas.

Lamar says he's just worried about the kids' safety. Vance points out the card Lamar got is an unsigned Christmas card, and even their mailman got a more personal note. "You've got regrets, that's on you, but it's not up to me and my kids to make them go away," Vance says.

In the lab, they're now confronted with lesions the kids are developing. Palmer insists on staying for the all-nighter, even with the meeting with the birth mother tomorrow.

At the hospital, McGee gets word the number is up to 34 sick kids from eight different hospitals, from Portsmouth to Baltimore. They can't find any crossover.

Gibbs notices the candy stripers, dressed as elves heading home. He gets an idea.

Back at NCIS, the team has spent all night cross-checking volunteers at base holiday markets. All of the kids attended one.

Vance drops in on the lab. The lesions are now turning purple, which prompts Palmer to say he's never having kids. Abby gives him a lecture on how good things like optimism, compassion, and faith are supposed to be infectious at the holidays. Vance takes note when she lists forgiveness.

Gibbs conferences in to ask if the disease could be African. They've narrowed patient zero down to the Marine who played Santa at all the holiday parties – who also took his suit in to be dry cleaned. He just returned from Congo. With Africa as a parameter, the lab geeks identify it as meningococcal A, which is treatable, and begin alerting the hospitals.

At the hospital, the Dalys watch as Emma wakes up. Jimmy and Breena meet with the birth mother.

Vance introduces his kids to Lamar, their grandfather.

Ellie shares her mom's coffee cake with Gibbs before he leaves for the airport, saying it always makes her happy and everyone deserves to be happy at Christmas.

Summary: When a stolen drone is linked to the elusive terrorist Parsa, the NCIS team partners with the Department of Defense, including Gibbs' former girlfriend, Hollis Mann, to track down the device before it is used for a large scale attack.

A woman waits for a man in a park. When Danny comes, she's hugely relieved. But she's nervous and says they have to get out of there. They hear a noise in the air, possibly a helicopter, and as they turn to run a bullet cuts through the air and Danny falls down, dead. The woman runs to him, then runs away.

In the elevator up to work, Delilah is annoyed with McGee when he's telling her he needs more notice for something. Ellie joins them, she's excited to meet Delilah, who she describes as "a big deal in the analyst world, ever since Operation Pin Drop." But they can't tell McGee what it is.

In the office, Tony is up to speed on McGee and Delilah's tiff because McGee butt-daïled him. Delilah is being awarded an impressive intelligence fellowship and wants him to go to a black tie gala tomorrow. McGee says he can't get time off, but Gibbs joins and is open to the idea.

Then he gets the call with the body of the week: a dead Marine in Rock Creek Park.

As they're leaving, Gibbs tells McGee not to use him as an excuse.

In the park, the victim is Daniel Coyne. He was killed by a sniper bullet from an acute angle – close and high up.

Tony talks to a dog walker who is clearly crazy and says he saw a grey airship. Ellie has a sketch from other witnesses' descriptions. It's a Navy surveillance drone.

Back in the office, Ellie reports that Coyne was a drone operator at Pax River. She hands Tony a primer she wrote on the merits of drone warfare. Tony thinks he knows everything there is to know about computerized technology from SkyNet in the Terminator movies.

Down in the morgue, Duckie smells Shalimar perfume on the victim, meaning he was very near a woman with expensive taste. Duckie finds that Coyne had sex shortly before he died.

At Pax River, Lt. Commander Stone tells Ellie and Tony that none of their drones are missing. He calls himself a hall monitor given the inexperience of the drone operators, but says Coyne was the exception and had a bright future.

He was seeing Petty Officer First Class Patrice Gates, who thought they were getting married. But she's not the Shalimar-wearer. She didn't know Coyne was cheating and couldn't have modified the drone into a weapon.

McGee says only someone who worked for the defense contractor Rhinehart Carrion would have the know-how, but they're under investigation by the DOD. Delilah arrives to meet with Vance and Gibbs.

In MTAC, Delilah describes a drone strike in Pakistan six months ago targeting Benham Parsa in retaliation for the murder of SecNav. Parsa escaped, but the mission was a success. Coyne was part of the kill chain, although his drone crashed. They think Parsa or his people may have recovered the crashed drone and smuggled it into the States. If so, they're not done attacking.

The DOD investigator arrives: it's Gibbs' ex-girlfriend Hollis Mann. She tells them Rhinehart's systems were hacked a month ago. They have one suspect: Erin Pace, a computer engineer who's gone missing. Her photo looks like the woman in the park.

Gibbs wants to take over the investigation but Hollis points out she was appointed by the Inspector General. She speed dials the Secretary of Defense, who tells them to work together.

Downstairs, McGee and Tony use the big screen to brief Ellie on the many loves of Gibbs. Diane, "Satan's spawn" the first ex-wife; Stephanie, ex-wife three. Ex two is a mystery. Hollis was supposed to be ex number four, but one day she just moved to Hawaii.

Gibbs comes down and requests info on Parsa.

Hollis and Gibbs join Abby in the lab, where the DOD has sent over things from Erin Pace's apartment. She wears Shalimar. Abby swabbed the OJ for DNA and got a hit for Yusef Ryder, a violent ex-con who recently converted to Islam.

Back upstairs, they report Yusef skipped parole two weeks ago and they have footage of him looting a gun store, including taking a high powered rifle. The van he was driving has been spotted a motel.

The team heads there.

In the car, Hollis tries to talk to Gibbs. She tells Gibbs she got married two years ago to a trauma surgeon.

They notice Yusef's van rocking and close in. When they open the doors, they find Erin tied up in back. Gibbs assures her she's safe.

"I'm not safe, none of us are," she says.

Back at NCIS, Erin ID's Yusef as one of the three or more Pakistani men who kidnapped her. One spoke almost proper British English, and was polite. Something strikes Ellie and she starts researching.

She refused to modify their drone until they showed her a feed of her husband asleep in bed in Mali, where he works for an NGO, then she did what they asked.

She wasn't having an affair with Coyne, she just worked with him. They forced her to get Coyne to the park as a test run. She thinks someone important is next, revenge for an attack in Pakistan. She heard the word "acrobat."

Hollis knows it as a secret service code name. Erin IDs a photo Ellie shows her: The polite man is Benham Parsa.

Gibbs and Ellie brief Vance on the fact Parsa is in the country. The Secretary of Defense is meeting with several world leaders tomorrow, Hollis is already working to relocate it. Vance tells them to track the drone.

McGee runs into Delilah in the hall. She bought him a tux. She understands that with Parsa in the country he can't come to the gala, but she doesn't understand why he was so resistant in the first place.

Back in the office, Ellie is stumped over what Parsa is really up to, saying he only plans large scale attacks. They realize Parsa can't use military satellites to control the drone, so he must be nearby. McGee starts tracking.

Later, Hollis joins Gibbs in his basement. She brought bourbon and wants to apologize. She tells him she could tell he wasn't ready to let go of his past so she made an executive decision and left. "You should have just asked," he says.

She turns to leave, but he invites her to stay and pours her a drink.

In the lab, Abby and McGee scan low frequency radio providers.

Abby grills McGee on why he's being dumb about Delilah. He says he needs space, but she says he's just scared of getting hurt and Delilah is the best thing that's happened to him in a long time.

They get a hit on the emergency broadcast tower, broadcasting a second carrier wave. McGee traces it to a storage building.

On site, the team sees Yusef loading up his truck. Tony steps out and shouts NCIS. Yusef turns to fire at him, with Ellie right behind him. Then Yusef dives back into the warehouse. Ellie fires and the whole building explodes.

Down in the NCIS garage, Ellie is kicking herself for blowing up the building and the drone. But, going through the wreckage, Abby finds evidence of a bomb. Yusef blew himself up.

Abby has sorted things into bomb components, drone parts, and miscellaneous. She and Ellie start going through them.

McGee comes down in his tux. With the immediate threat over, he's going to the gala. When he leaves, Abby finds parts that don't make sense.

She and Ellie report to Gibbs, the parts are spare parts and they were supposed to explode. The drone is still out there.

Down in the morgue, Duckie examines Yusef's body and finds tattoos for multiple prison gangs. Yusef went with whoever could protect him, not the type to martyr himself for a cause. So Yusef didn't kill himself, Benham Parsa detonated the bomb.

Ellie and Tony go back at Erin. They've looked at her correspondence and finances. They know she hasn't spoken to or corresponded with her husband in the 11 months he's been gone. He left her saddled with debt from gambling. And they found $5 million in a living trust set up for her sister, who's in a care facility. Parsa didn't threaten her, he bribed her.

They call her a terrorist and tell her she'll spend 50 years in jail. She changes her tune and starts bragging about the drones she helps build.

Ellie briefs Gibbs. The drone is loaded with 100 pounds of C4, but Erin doesn't know the target. Ellie knows Parsa's targets are symbolic.

They realize he's targeting the gala McGee is attending, where half the intelligence community is gathered.

They call McGee at the gala. He steps outside to take the call and Delilah goes in.

Tony tells him to get everyone out, but McGee looks up and it's too late.

Gibbs gets a call with the source of the signal where they believe Parsa is. He and Hollis go to the building and find three men inside. They shoot two but the third runs. He makes it to the street. Gibbs fires but an SUV pulls up and the third man, Parsa, gets in and gets away.

Back at NCIS, Tony reports there are four dead at the hotel and a few dozen wounded including Delilah, who's in surgery.

Gibbs is focused on finding Parsa. He grabs all the intel and lays it out on the floor for Ellie to go over. "Get the son of a bitch," Gibbs says.

Production Code: 247
Summary: In an effort to find the terrorist Parsa, Gibbs and the NCIS team track down one of his cohorts using evidence from the drone attack. Meanwhile, an emotionally shaken McGee struggles with the ramifications of the incident.

Following the drone strike at the Conrad gala, McGee goes to see Delilah in the hospital. Six people were killed and 22 wounded. "It was Parsa, did you get him?" Delilah asks, before she crashes. Nurses come to wheel her into surgery, she's not breathing.

Back at NCIS, Ellie is surrounded by their old intelligence, looking for something they missed. Tony, knowing she has her earbuds in, confesses he feels helpless to help McGee. Ellie takes out her buds out and explains why she's on her third bag of junk food. "Cheese puffs are the perfect food to support the linkage between new info and stuff already stored in the brain. Just like the cheese particles link the cheesy taste," she says.

But she hasn't gotten anywhere yet.

Gibbs arrives and suggests Parsa's surviving bodyguard knew nothing. Ellie thinks that makes sense given how Parsa operates.

Suddenly, Gibbs orders them to grab their gear. "I knew this day would come. Did you just hear about a body telepathically?" Tony asks.

"It's not a body, it's a bullet," Gibbs says.

Gibbs takes them back to the alley where he shot at Parsa as he was getting in the SUV. He sees a shell casing and follows the trajectory to a bullet hole in a door across the alley. Back in the lab, Abby has DNA from the bullet belonging to Bashir Malik, a U.S. citizen who grew up in Karachi. He's a suspect in an unsolved bombing at Camp Pendleton in 1990. If he was responsible, the two decades since is "a long time to get very angry and very organized," Abby says.

Back at the hospital, McGee gets a visit from Dr. Rachel Cranston, Kate's sister. She's there as a crisis counselor. McGee says Delilah's parents are on the way from Wisconsin, but he told everyone else to focus on Parsa. Rachel offers to stay, but he declines.

At the big screen, Ellie says Malik was arrested for assaulting a police officer in 2002 when the officer thought he was involved in a kidnapping. At the time of the 1990 bombing he was a delivery driver for Wellspring Fruit. He was brought in for questioning repeatedly but the investigation never got anywhere.

Ellie suggests that because Malik got away with it back then he wouldn't have a reason to change his tactics, so anything from back then could help them now. Unfortunately, the NIS agent who investigated it is Duke Turner, and he's dead.

Gibbs stays to go over the video of the interrogations while Tony and Ellie got to the NSA. NSA Senior Intelligence Analyst Sofia Martinez greets them. She says the recent Interpol summit on Parsa concluded that he would leave the country after the drone attack. Martinez delights Tony by thinking he looks like Robert Redford and getting all his movie references.

Martinez is the "Smee" (Subject Matter Expert) on Benham Parsa. She's been monitoring Benham's sister's communications since 2007, she gets lots of calls from payphones in code. They ask for her reports and she says good-bye, calling Tony "DiNoknowsital," which he loves. He asks Ellie if Martinez is single, but says she reminds him of someone annoying, he just can't think of who. (Himself.)

Back at NCIS, Gibbs watches Duke's interview with Bashir, in which he insists he was in the area of the bombing only to deliver fruit. Gibbs asks Duckie to do a profile of Bashir. Duckie thinks it's odd that someone with Bashir's experience would bow to Parsa.

Neither of them has heard an update on Delilah from McGee.

Ellie announces that Parsa's SUV has been found. Tony, Ellie and Gibbs head to the scene, where the SUV is a smoldering heap following an explosion. Ellie recognizes Parsa's handwriting in the windshield message to them: "Try again."

Later, Gibbs joins Abby in the garage. She found two bolts that don't come from the SUV. Abby thinks the explosion was covering something else.

McGee joins them. He says Delilah is stable and in recovery. He's ready to work, but Gibbs is concerned and asks for his fitness for duty paperwork first.

Gibbs sits down with the witness who saw Bashir at Camp Pendleton 23 years ago. He was out for an early morning run and saw the fruit truck parked at the side of the building, when deliveries are usually to the front. He saw Bashir Malik by the truck. He's kept tabs on info about him since then, and thinks he might have been responsible for the Keely Smith kidnapping that he assaulted the officer over in 2002.

Rachel Cranston comes to NCIS to talk to McGee. She sees Ellie perched above her desk for a fresh perspective on the evidence. They talk briefly about the women who sat there before, without Rachel saying she's Kate's sister. Rachel says she thinks both women would say there's no better place to grow than a desk next to McGee, Tony and Gibbs.

Martinez calls Ellie with info. Ellie goes to MTAC to take her call securely. Martinez starts the call by saying Tony reminds her of someone annoying, but she can't think of who. "Yourself?" Ellie suggests.

Tony joins them and Martinez relays that they picked up a call that Parsa's sister received containing the numbers 180, 60 and 45. The sister said "it's not enough."

McGee talks to Rachel, saying he's fine. She thinks he's giving the perfect responses, but she'd rather hear the real ones. "Is it just me you're shutting out, or is it everyone?" she asks. He says again that he just wants to get back to work.

Gibbs watches more of Bashir's interview. He helplessly insists that he was there to deliver fruit and parked in the wrong place because he hadn't been there before. "Sir, I am not a terrorist, I just move things from one place to another," Bashir says.

Gibbs takes that to Duckie. He thinks he delivered the fruit while someone else delivered the bomb. And he didn't kidnap Keely Smith, he was helping her flee her abusive husband. He's hired transport, which could mean Parsa is gone for good.

In the morning, Tony volunteers to bring McGee a casserole, saying his men's health group encourages him to be sensitive during difficult times. Gibbs comes in for an update. McGee has found cash deposits in Bashir's account around the time of the 1990 bombing and Keely Smith's 2002 disappearance. Malik knows all about trucks, trains and cargo planes from his work at Wellspring as director of transportation.

Gibbs tells McGee to take it easy.

Down in the garage, Abby tells Gibbs that she found the SUV was modified. The gas tank was moved and split into the doors and there was a compartment big enough to hold a person.

Back upstairs, Tony tries to fit in a 6 x 2 x 1.5' space and asks if Pakistan uses metric. Those numbers come out to about 180, 60 and 45 in centimeters. Benham's sister was worried the space was too small. They don't think there's a chance she'll turn on her brother, so they decide to use her loyalty instead.

The CIA sends one of their embedded agents to Parsa's sister's house in Karachi to tell her something went wrong with his escape. Martinez conferences in in MTAC as they wait to see if the sister will react. Martinez says she's methodical, so they have to wait.

Rachel stops Gibbs. She just spoke with Delilah's parents – a piece of shrapnel moved and Delilah is paralyzed. McGee left the hospital before she ever woke up.

In MTAC, Parsa's sister makes a call and McGee traces it as the CIA and Martinez at NSA listen in. The sister talks to Bashir Malik, who assures her he's doing his part. They trace Malik's phone to a DC address.

When they're done, Gibbs tells McGee to talk to Cranston.

Tony and Gibbs head to the address where they traced the call. They find Malik burning documents in an oil barrel. They take him into custody.

Back at NCIS, Rachel tells Gibbs that McGee took off and she doesn't think he's fit to be at work. She suggest they let him process things on his own.

In interrogation, Tony has confidence that Gibbs will get Malik to give up Parsa's location. Ellie is restless and goes to help Abby with the burned documents.

"Sir, I am not a terrorist, I just move things from one place to another," Malik says.

Gibbs shows him pictures of the victims as Bashir boasts about his skill but insists he's not a terrorist. Gibbs leaves, frustrated, and goes to think.

McGee approaches him at his desk, telling him he wants to work. "You're more important than the job," Gibbs says.

Gibbs knows McGee feels responsible and is just blaming himself so Gibbs tries to assure him they are responsible. He tells McGee to go back to the hospital and just talk to Delilah and tell her the truth.

Gibbs goes back to Malik and makes a pitch to him to do the right thing. He says he put Parsa on a freight train in Baltimore hidden inside a car. He was supposed to move the body guard as well, but couldn't after they lost the SUV. The train was going to Miami and Parsa was supposed to get off along the way.

He asks Gibbs to be sure to tell people he's not a terrorist.

Back at the hospital, McGee joins Delilah.

The team works in the garage to figure out where Parsa could be. McGee texts Gibbs. Gibbs goes to the hospital. McGee plans to come in tomorrow to tell the others what happens. He asks Gibbs to sit with him.

Summary:	The murder of a port authority officer reveals Parsa's possible whereabouts, as the team continues their tireless hunt. Meanwhile, Bishop reveals her past association with the elusive terrorist.

Ellie Bishop hits balls in the batting cage and gets a visit from her NSA Supervisor Jeremy Marlens. He's concerned she's working on the Parsa case, given what happened last time. She assures him she'll be fine. He starts complaining about the cold and she gets an idea and runs.

In the office, Tony waxes rhapsodic about bath beads he plans to use in his hot soak later. Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week: a man matching Parsa's bodyguard's description.

Ellie comes in, with her mind racing. She announces that Parsa is in Pakistan. His parents, innocent civilians, were killed in an airstrike in Pakistan and the 10 year anniversary is in 48 hours.

Later, Vance joins them to hear Ellie explain that every year Parsa disappears the first week in February to mourn.

There's no record of where his parents are buried, but Ellie thinks they're in the Swat district. A remnant of the document Bashir Malik tried to destroy mentioned Parsa being "out two sea," which translates to Bahrain, the name of a road that runs through the Swat district.

Vance is ready to call other agencies for their Parsa experts, but Ellie explains they'd all just refer him to her. She's been studying Parsa for six years – which is a shock to Gibbs.

In the morgue, Duckie defrosts the recovered body. He was shot in the neck, but Duckie can't say more until he's thawed.

McGee gets word that CIA just intercepted a call from Parsa to his sister, planning a meet. But Ellie thinks it seems odd because he's always kept his distance from her. She thinks it's misdirection.

Gibbs pulls Ellie aside to grill her about her connection to Parsa, but she would need clearance to tell him. She assures him it has nothing to do with the current situation. He tells Ellie he doesn't work with people he doesn't trust.

Later, McGee and Tony hide from Gibbs and Ellie's silent détente. When Gibbs finally sneaks up on them, Tony reports a Russian freighter leaving the area had a passenger helicoptered off.

Down in the lab, Duckie and Abby explain the body is not Parsa's bodyguard, he's a Port Authority officer named Alex Rio. He was in the bodyguard's clothes, which had a bullet hole in the leg, meaning the bodyguard was wounded before they switched. They think it was bad enough to prevent him from traveling.

Ellie finds record of a John Doe treated for a gunshot at a local hospital, but he took off.

Gibbs gets a call and leaves without saying a word, just a glare at Ellie.

Gibbs goes to meet with Jeremy Marlens, who says he's just trying to protect Ellie. He tells Gibbs that Ellie was assigned overseas when she first began and was the first to home in on Parsa as a threat, but she was eventually reassigned for her own good.

Marlens suggests that Gibbs "distance her from the Benham Parsa case. The deeper you let her get, the more harm you're doing."

Back in the office, they have a charge on Rio's stolen credit card for a ticket to Miami. Ellie wants to go to the airport to pick him up, but Gibbs tells her she's assigned to her desk.

Gibbs, Tony and McGee pick up Khalil Farooq, the bodyguard, at the airport.

Back in interrogation, Gibbs knows Farooq is Parsa's cousin. Farooq says he'd never turn on his family.

Ellie goes to Tony for help – in the men's room. "Gibbs doesn't expect that you'll tell him everything, but he needs to trust that you would," Tony says.

McGee joins them with a file on Operation Street sweep. Ellie takes it to Gibbs, saying it's the leverage they need with Farooq. She asks him to trust her gut.

Ellie joins Gibbs in interrogation, explaining that through a CIA program they have identified his three sons and believe they're with Parsa so a drone strike has been authorized. To save his sons, Farooq tells them where Parsa really is – in a compound right in the area where Ellie predicted he'd be, where his parents are buried.

Vance and Gibbs get a briefing on the planned assault on the compound by the SEALs, led by Lt. William Blake.

In the office, Tony can tell something is bothering McGee and tries to get him to talk. McGee wants to update Delilah on the Parsa hunt, but he doesn't want to get her hopes up. Tony uses a Rocky metaphor to assure him they'll catch Parsa.

When they can't find Ellie, Gibbs knows to look down in the morgue, where she's sitting alone. She blames herself for the havoc Parsa has wreaked.

She tells Gibbs that Parsa made contact with her a few years ago, taunting her with clues and gifts, to remind her that he was watching, too. She didn't tell the NSA, thinking he'd eventually slip up – but they found out. All the study of him humanized him for her and she started to see the man, not the monster.

Gibbs tells her they're the same and she should make her move then adhere to Rule 11: When the job is done, walk away.

Ellie joins the team watching the assault in MTAC with JSOC Vice Admiral Lloyd Manditsky. They watch as the SEALs breach the compound and shots are exchanged. There's a report of a SEAL down but the mission continues.

They watch as the team grabs Parsa. Sec-Nav's orders are to press Parsa for intel on his network.

Gibbs, McGee and Gibbs fly to the ship where the SEALs took Parsa. He was shot through the shoulder but is refusing treatment or pain meds.

Gibbs goes to talk to Parsa, who recognizes Gibbs. Parsa says he'll cooperate on one condition. He'd rather destroy what he has spent years building than let someone else run it. In exchange, he wants to talk to Ellie.

McGee video chats with Abby to try to decrypt Parsa's laptop.

On the ship, Parsa is excited to talk to Ellie. She gives him a candy bar – his favorite. He tells her his main base of operation is in Peshawar. He says he has six targets planned. They're interrupted by a guard telling them Tony is calling.

Ellie wants to talk to Parsa while Gibbs takes the call. Gibbs is reluctant, but she points out Parsa's cuffed and there's an armed guard. He relents.

Over video conference with Abby, Gibbs learns that half of Parsa's bankroll came from two government contracted US companies.

McGee shows Gibbs a file he just decrypted on Parsa's laptop: surveillance photos of Ellie. Gibbs races back to the brig, where Parsa is with Ellie.

As he's talking with Ellie, Parsa grows weak and falls out of his chair. The guard comes in to investigate and Ellie steps into the hall to shout for help. Parsa disarms the guard, knocks Ellie to the ground and shoots the other guard.

Gibbs arrives just in time to see Parsa seal himself in with Ellie.

Gibbs waits as they try to weld through the brig outer door, but it takes too long and he tells them to blow it if they need to.

Parsa tries to mess with her, asking about her husband Jake and saying he should be more aware of his surroundings.

Ellie realizes he's not taking her hostage, it's a suicide mission.

Gibbs conferences with Marlens back home and asks for the CIA tapes of Parsa talking with his sister – he plans to use his family against him.

Parsa asks Ellie how she knew he would become a terrorist. She says it was about not feeling alone, and causing pain to others so they would know how he felt.

Suddenly, Parsa hears the voice of his sister, pleading with him to come home to her.

Parsa aims at Ellie and is about to shoot when Gibbs busts through the door and kills him with two shots.

Back at the office, Tony and McGee leave for the night, telling Ellie good job. She writes a note to herself: "Rule 11." She walks out.

Back in the batting cages, Ellie is taking swings in the freezing cold. Gibbs tells her to trust her instincts and stop trying to guess what's coming.

Ellie tells Gibbs he's not the easiest person to read and it's really frustrating. He tells her she completed the task he gave her and it's the standard he'd hold her to as a probationary NCIS agent. "Before I officially start working for you and this becomes frowned upon..." Ellie hugs him. "Welcome aboard, Probie," Gibbs says.

Summary: After uncovering faulty bulletproof vests in a truck filled with stolen U.S.M.C. merchandise, the NCIS team attempts to locate both the source and any vests that had been shipped to military personnel overseas.

Two best friends named Chris tag in an abandoned warehouse. One gets annoyed with the other and tosses his backpack, but the target sidesteps and it flies out a window to the ground below. There's a screech of tires. They look out and see a van crashed.

Ellie practices her hand-to-hand combat skills in a gym for her certification. McGee and Tony come to take her to the body of the week.

At the scene, they find guns and Marine cases. There's a mattress and latrine buckets inside, the driver lived in his van. There's blue paint splattered on the windshield.

Tony finds the Chris's backpack with spray paint.

The Marine crates don't contain guns – they have armored vests, but they're missing their National Stock Numbers, meaning they never made it to the Marines.

In the lab, Abby tested the vests and found the ceramic plates in them shatter on impact and can be lethal.

Later, Tony gets off the phone with body armor manufacturers who are sending representatives.

McGee gets off the phone with Delilah, who wants to come by and thank them for the take-down of Benham Parsa, but she's struggling with adjusting to being seen in the wheelchair she's now in. "Just don't not avoid not making her feel self-conscious about it," Tony offers.

Gibbs arrives and calls for a rundown on the driver. They tracked down a Chris from his homework at the scene.

Tony talks to the Chrises. One of them wants to be arrested for scholarship purposes. "We're out of control teens, sir. We need the state to intervene," Chris says. Tony disappoints them by telling them they're not going to jail, but he offers to put them in a holding cell if they help ID the driver.

He was a big guy in a fairgrounds gunshow t-shirt that was too small.

Tony and Ellie head to the gun show. She's adjusting to always wearing her gun. She remembers the stress of the gun training exercise and Tony guesses that she shot the mother holding the baby. "I thought it was a gun wrapped in a towel, like in 'Godfather Part 2,'" she defends. She begs him not to tell McGee or Gibbs.

Fay Gussman, the gun show organizer finds them. She recognizes the picture of the van as belonging to someone who always tries to sell guns at her show without a permit. She leaves to find his name and address.

Tony and Ellie see a woman named Karen selling care packages to send to troops overseas, including non-standard issue armored vests. She assures them hers are military grade. Tony checks, the vest isn't from the batch they're following.

Fay brings the van driver's name and address. The team heads to his apartment and finds him shot dead on the floor.

With Duckie and Palmer on the scene, Ellie is very helpful to Tony to get him to keep her secret. Palmer is acting odd but finally shares that their birth mother signed the adoption papers.

In Abby's lab, she stares down Benson Honeycutt, a rep from a vest making company, Dearborn Dynamics Systems, trying to make him feel guilty. He assures her the faulty vests were set to be destroyed and never made it to the market or the military. Gibbs joins them and wants to know how they ended up with the vests. Benson doesn't have a good explanation.

Abby finds evidence of another complaint with their vests that resulted in sergeant named Fred Linn becoming paralyzed.

Gibbs and McGee go to the field where Linn said he'd meet them. They look up and see him floating down in a tandem parachute jump. Once he's on the ground and in his chair, he explains that he started a skydiving company. He's sanguine about becoming paralyzed, explaining that he was shot in the back four times in Kabul and doesn't blame his vest, even though it was a shard from the vest that hit his spine. When Gibbs asks, she says it was a gift from his mother but he's not going to ask where she got it.

McGee asks him how long it took him to get used to being paralyzed. Linn explains you don't, you just move on.

In the morgue, Palmer compares Linn's wounds to the ballistic dummy they used the faulty vest on and finds they're very similar. When Abby realizes she's chewing on a bubblegum cigar Palmer bought to celebrate the adoption her superstition kicks into high gear. Palmer knocks on a tongue depressor to reverse it.

In the office, Mallory Linn, Fred's mom, arrives angry. She's alarmed to learn she sent her son faulty body armor and demands answers. She doesn't even remember sending it. She brought a dozen moms with her, all of whom sent body armor to their children.

Delilah calls McGee – she's in the office. McGee arrives to find Delilah and Tony naming all the disabled movie characters they can think of (Professor X, the old lady from 'Titanic'). McGee is appalled until Delilah says she started it. When the whole team is there, she thanks them for taking out the evil coward bastard Parsa. "You know, that was actually the name on the death certificate," Tony says.

Ellie announces a break in the case. She found that Mallory wrote a check to Karen with Home in Your Hands foundation – the care package from the gun show – which is why Mallory doesn't remember sending the vest. Three of the other waiting mothers did as well. They're going to have to coordinate with the other branches of the military. Gibbs suggests Delilah go up to MTAC to smooth things out since she's with the Department of Defense.

In the elevator up, Delilah and McGee do an awkward dance with her chair, with McGee not knowing how or where to stand.

Tony and Ellie stake out the charity woman Karen. They watch as a pick-up pulls up next to her and the driver hands something over then pulls away. Tony and Ellie stop the cars.

Back in interrogation, they reveal that the bag Karen picked up were just tampons. She says the man is a dad who was sending his daughter her favorite brand; Karen was on her way to the post office.

Gibbs shows her a photo of the shattered armor and they accuse her of selling faulty armor. She says she had no idea they were faulty. She admits she bought them from the dead van driver. She didn't ask questions because it saved money so she could send more.

They want all her records.

In MTAC, McGee and Delilah update Gibbs. A bulletin has been sent to all the services about the faulty vests but there's a recon unit outside of communication range and two of the members received the vests.

In the office, McGee finds that Dearborn made money recycling their defective vests when it should have cost a lot. Benson Honeycutt signed the forms.

In interrogation, Honeycutt insists there's nothing wrong with good business. When Gibbs comes in doing his Gibbs bluster, Honeycutt explains the recycling company was going to use the ceramic for other things which is why they made money. He says if the recycling company isn't destroying the vests it isn't his problem. McGee comes in with phone records showing multiple calls between Fay and Benson – she owns the recycling plant. Benson confesses that Fay called him to say she wanted to tie up loose ends, but he didn't know that meant murder.

He insists he didn't know the vests wouldn't be destroyed. Gibbs tells him to call Fay and set up a meeting.

Fay waits outside the fairgrounds but when NCIS races up, she runs into her mobile home. Moments later, she opens fire on them with a semi-automatic weapon. They return fire and Ellie is hit.

After a few more rounds, Fay opens the trailer door. She's wearing one of the faulty vests, and is hit. She's dead. Ellie has bruised ribs, but is OK.

Back at the office, McGee asks permission to drive Delilah home. He asks Gibbs if he could make a stop and Gibbs tells him to take the time he needs.

McGee takes Delilah to Linn's landing site. McGee checks his watch then see Linn come floating down from the sky and land on the landing pad next to his wheelchair. He thought Delilah might want to talk to Linn since they're going through some of the same things.

She thanks him, but suggests as long as they're there, they should try sky diving, too.

Production Code: 250
Summary: When DiNozzo confronts a man impersonating a Navy officer, guns are drawn and the perpetrator is left dead. The subsequent investigation uncovers that the only eyewitness is DiNozzo's father, who is in town to disclose a secret to his son.

Tony meets his dad, Anthony Dinozzo Sr., outside the Adams House hotel. His dad arrived in town last night but only called Tony this morning. He has great news.

As they're standing outside the hotel, a man in a Navy commander uniform bumps into Tony. Tony recognizes his rank and asks to talk to him, but the man makes excuses and keeps going. Then he runs. Tony follows him down an alley, but the man draws a gun on him. Tony draws his and tells him to take it easy, but Mr. Dinozzo runs up.

When the man aims at his dad, Tony fires, killing him.

Later on the scene, Duckie finds nothing on the man but a key. Tony tells Gibbs the man's uniform stripes were Lt. Cmdr. but his visor was full Cmdr.

Tony says he didn't look the part, his shoes were scuffed. McGee can't find the man's prints in any military database.

Gibbs notices Tony's dad talking to local police and has Ellie corral him as the only witness.

NCIS Special Agent Eugene Coyle is heading up the Inspector General's investigation into Tony and the shooting.

Later, in the conference room, Coyle asks Tony Sr. who drew first. Tony Sr. says they both had their guns when he got there. Coyle asks him to repeat who was aiming at whom.

The hotel surveillance was hacked and not recording during the time the bogus Commander was there.

Next, Coyle comes for Tony. His dad is annoyed he can't leave town. Ellie offers to give Tony Sr. a ride back to the hotel.

Abby arrives, excited to announce the dead guy's identity. He's Nick Bodeen, a famous private investigator to the stars.

Tony says he drew his gun because Coyne drew on him. Coyne says Tony's own father isn't sure it happened that way. Tony explains that his dad's memory isn't what it used to be.

In the office, Ellie and McGee make apologies to their significant others for not being available on a Sunday.

Victim rundown time: Bodeen was a Metro cop, then became an investigator for lobbyists and lawyers. He was arrested for wire tapping, but got off, but the arrest ruined his business.

When Tony comes back, they hide the information on the case from him.

Down in the morgue, Duckie reports Bodeen has gunshot residue on his hand and his gun is missing a bullet.

Tony is annoyed he can't track down his father. The Adams House says he was never staying there.

Gibbs sends McGee and Ellie to find evidence of a gunshot at the Adams. They start by searching the rooms the maids haven't cleaned. Standing in the hallway they see Tony's father escorting a very pregnant woman into one of the rooms.

McGee advises Ellie not to tell Tony.

In the office, Tony plays Solitaire, appropriately, alone. Palmer brings up the autopsy report. When McGee's phone rings, Palmer answers. He reports to Tony that the search warrant for Nick Bodeen's office and residence came through. Which is how Tony learns who he shot.

McGee and Ellie check another room and immediately know they're in the right place. There's a pillow with a gunshot through it and, more importantly, a dead man in a chair.

With everyone else on the scene, Duckie puts the time of death between 9:30 and 10, which fits because Tony shot Bodeen at 9:50 a.m. The victim's wallet says Michael Elliot, but he checked in under an alias.

Back at NCIS, for the second victim rundown. Elliot worked for Senator Denise O'Hara and was single Coyle drops in on Abby in her lab and gets her fierce Mama Bear routine over investigating Tony. She tells Coyne that the bullet in Elliot matched Coyne's gun. But Coyne points out Tony didn't know that when he shot him.

McGee goes to Bodeen's office and is surprised to find Tony already there. They find an extremely sophisticated computer system in the closet, including one strong enough to hack the hotel's security.

At NCIS, Ellie lets Gibbs now that Colonel Lionel Saxon is waiting to talk with him about Michael Elliot. Saxon didn't know Elliot, but Elliot called his office Friday saying he wanted to talk. Saxon helped prepare a report on the strategic military value of several military ports in Asia for Elliot's boss, the senator. Saxon went to meet him at the Adams Sunday but got there after the shooting. He asks about the other shooting and Bodeen. "You think he was impersonating me?"

McGee and Tony have no luck cracking a giant safe in Bodeen's office. There's a knock on the door and Tony steps out to deal with Liz Allen, posing as Bodeen. She thinks her husband is having an affair. Tony leaves when his dad calls, asking him to meet in the hotel bar.

At the senator's office, Gibbs and Ellie find the senator's receptionist, Jennifer Morrison, crying over Michael Elliot.

The senator says her chief of staff Will Pritchard mostly dealt with Elliot. She knows the name Bodeen but doesn't think Elliot would have anything to do with him. The senator asks Jennifer to help NCIS.

Tony meets with his dad, worried about him. His dad tries to evade but Tony forces his "great news" out of him. "I found my soul mate, I'm getting married," Tony Sr. says.

In the office, Ellie goes over files in her customary research position: the floor.

She finds that O'Hara's office was working on a budget bill that would close several military bases in Asia, which could be why Elliot wanted to talk to Saxon about the same bases.

Tony returns and tells McGee and Ellie his dad is getting married. Ellie does a terrible job being surprised and Tony pumps her for information. She tells him the woman she saw was "very beautiful, very young, and very pregnant."

In her lab, Abby works on cracking Bodeen's safe. She finds a .357 Magnum, a burn phone and nearly $50,000 from the bank of Macao.

Back in the office, Gibbs sends Ellie to the State Department to see if Bodeen has been to Macao. Tony blurts out that Bodeen has, then he has to scramble to cover.

He says Coyne told him Bodeen was the victim and that McGee has photos from Bodeen's office on the big screen and he saw a photo from Macao. McGee pulls it up. The photo is signed by Calvin Ling.

Later that night, Tony Sr. stops by Gibbs' basement, hoping he'll talk to Tony. Gibbs mentions the much younger pregnant fiancée and Tony Sr. explains that's his fiancée's daughter, Taylor.

The next morning at the office, McGee says he can tie Bodeen to Senator O'Hara. The burn phone made 17 calls to O'Hara's cell.

Calvin Ling has controlling interest in a casino in Macao, but he also own a company that sells fuel and supplies to the military at several Asian ports. Ling would lose a fortune if Senator O'Hara's committee eliminates the ports.

McGee wonders if O'Hara took a bribe and Elliot found out about it but was killed before he could tell.

Down in Abby's lab, she has found Bodeen was tapping people all over Washington, including Michael Elliot. He has the conversation of Elliot calling Saxon and asking to meet, and Saxon saying Elliot can recognize him by his Navy commander's uniform.

Ellie has found that the Navy ports owned by Ling were moved up the rankings for the bill O'Hara is presenting this morning.

Agent Coyne arrives and announces Tony has been cleared, but Gibbs still won't let him work the case. He tells him to go talk to his father.

At the Adams House, Tony Sr. tells his son he was hesitant to tell Tony who he's marrying because he's known her his whole life. It's Linda Turner, Tony's godmother and his late mother's best friend. Her husband died last year and Tony Sr. reached out to console her and they "rekindled their friendship." Tony asks point blank if his dad had affair with her while his mom was alive, but his dad say he didn't.

On the Hill, Gibbs intercepts Senator O'Hara on her way to the vote. He tells her Bodeen killed her staff member and they have evidence he called a cell phone registered to her office. O'Hara can't imagine who would have reason to be talking to Bodeen. McGee calls the number. Jennifer, the receptionist, rings.

She had access to all the senator's mail and easily could have changed Saxon's report. She asks for a lawyer. McGee learns Jennifer has $25,000 from the bank of Macao in her apartment, and was dating Bodeen. She wasn't crying for her coworker that morning, she was crying for her boyfriend.

Gibbs checks in with Tony about his dad and points out that his father is seeking his blessing.

Back outside the Adam's House, Tony runs into his dad's fiancée's daughter, Taylor. She agrees their parents getting married is weird, but once she saw them together, she could see they were in love.

Tony tells his dad he's happy for him and his mom would approve. His father is relieved. Tony suggests his dad and Linda catch a later flight and they all go out for a family dinner.

Production Code: 251
Summary: After a bomb detonates in the dressing room at a military charity concert, the NCIS team must determine if the target was a washed-up '80s rocker or if the bomb was part of a larger scheme. Meanwhile, Jimmy prepares for fatherhood.

Marines get ready for a charity concert. Backstage, a janitor encourages a Marine named Hunter to try out one of the musician's electric guitars. Hunter strums it and the amplifier explodes, taking out both men.

At the office, Tony gets off the phone with his dad, who asks him to plan his wedding for him. Tony wants to hire a wedding planner, but McGee is full of information on wedding websites, including great resources for napkin folding. Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week: A dead sailor at the convention center.

On the scene, one victim is Earl Grieve, the auditorium janitor. The function was a concert for the Hero Comfort Foundation. Petty Officer Damian Hunter is the other victim, he was volunteering to help make sure families of Marines could attend. Vivian Sutton, the director of the local HCF office, comes by along with Luke Pischedda, the concert coordinator. They identify the source of the explosion: a warhead from a WWII torpedo.

Back at the office for case rundown, Abby says the explosive wasn't set to go off until after midnight, but was activated by the vibrations. The concert was Country Rock Back-up Bands and the room was going to be used as a dressing room for the acts, including Manheim Gold, who missed rehearsal.

Manheim Gold opened for all the big acts decades ago but threw a TV and his agent out a window into a pool.

Bishop and McGee drop by Gold's day job at a drycleaner. He's living upstairs, but they find it has been trashed.

Down in the morgue, Palmer practices diaper changes on a doll. Their birth mother was due yesterday. Gibbs drops by. Duckie says the blast killed the victims and they were in perfect health.

Gibbs gets called up to the conference room. Tony found Manheim Gold in the drunk tank. They show him photos of his trashed apartment. He clarifies it always looks like that. He had been sober 15 years, but the brakes were going out in his car and he crashed into a telephone pole, so he had a drink.

Gold's agent Bobby drops by and is jazzed to hear about the bombing because it's great publicity. It's being moved to Pax River Naval Base. But Gibb informs them someone is trying to kill Gold so he has to go into protective custody.

Tony and McGee take Gold by his apartment to get things for protective custody, but all he grabs is his guitar. Gold says someone saw his old video on the internet and wanted him for the concert. When they ask who might want him dead, Gold suggests any of his band mates, or ex-wives. The agent he threw out of the window, Ronnie Mustard, died in the 80s.

Then he mentions a man who keeps bringing in the same suit to be cleaned, even though it hasn't been worn.

Down in the garage, Ellie, Palmer and Duckie try to install a child's car seat, and the car seat is winning. McGee brought the suit for Abby to try to find DNA. She's been going over the bomb in the torpedo shell. She also found that someone sabotaged Manheim Gold's brakes. She suggests they might be able to trace the brake fluid from the scene of the accident back to where they were sabotaged.

Tony is going through all Manheim's old contacts and finds most of them are dead. McGee returns with news that all of the NCIS-approved hotel rooms are booked for a convention. Tony gets stuck with Manheim. Once they reach Tony's place, he gives Gold a list of rules of the house. Gold agrees to sign if Tony plays for him, but there's a knock at the door.

It's Bobby the agent, he got Manheim a gig tonight. Tony tries to explain that Manheim is in protective custody for a reason.

Tony accompanies Manheim to the bar for 80s night. But Manheim takes one look around the sad dive and wants to bail. Tony accuses him of cold feet. Manheim confesses he hasn't played in public in two or three decades.

Abby calls with news that she got a hit on the DNA on the suit. She texts Tony a picture of the man, who is sitting at the bar. He runs when he sees them looking. Tony tackles him. Manheim doesn't recognize him, but he says he's Manheim's son.

In interrogation, Gibbs shows Denny Johnson the crime scene photos. He found his mother's diary three weeks ago and learned Manheim was his father. Watching in interrogation, Tony tells Manheim DNA confirms it. Manheim goes to talk to him in the hall. Denny tells him he tracked him down through his agent, Ronnie Mustard.

Later, it turns out that Manheim helped Ronnie spread a rumor he was dead to avoid some tax issues, but then Manheim forgot it was just a rumor when he went to rehab. When he got out, everyone told him Ronnie was dead.

Palmer races through the office, having just gotten the call that the birth mother is in labor.

Tony gets a call from his building manager. Manheim is there with Agent Holgate. The manager says there is loud noise coming from his apartment. Tony gets home to find a rager going on in his place.

He orders everyone out. Tony chews out Agent Holgate.

Manheim says when his team started calling his old friends, they started calling him. Manheim says the party was for his son, to get to know him a little. Tony tells him he should just sit down and get to know him. They hear the sounds of Denny retching in the bathroom.

Denny mentions he's great at getting stains out, and Tony should see the first dressing room they had him in at the HCF concert.

McGee and Bishop go visit Ronnie Mustard, who runs as soon as he hears the name Manheim Gold.

Back in NCIS interrogation, McGee tells Mustard they've traced the brake fluid to him and two witnesses saw him there.

Mustard tells him Manheim was big in Equatorial Guinea and he kept all his royalties. He admits to the brakes, but says he knows nothing about a bomb.

Tony reports that Abby says the bomb was put in place a week ago and Manheim switched rooms two days ago, so he wasn't the target.

Abby calls with a partial print from the bomb: Luke Pischedda, the concert coordinator. They think he's planning an attack at the base.

Palmer comes back, shell shocked. The birth mother decided to keep the baby.

Ellie and Gibbs call Tony at the new concert site at Pax River Base. They don't want to stop the concert yet, but tell Tony to find Luke.

McGee finds that Pischedda used to be a private military contractor who helped transport $2 billion in cash to Iraq. Hundreds of millions went missing. The money was stored at Pax River.

The team arrives and Gibbs tells Tony that the concert is a cover for a heist and they want everything to go as planned so Luke doesn't know they're on to him.

The band starts playing and Manheim is rooted in place with stage fright. Tony goes out on the audience to stall for him and Manheim finally comes out and sings.

Underneath the stage, Gibbs tries to figure out what's special about the venue. He hears something and kills the power. He and Bishop follow the sounds of jackhammers and catch Luke and his crew red-handed.

Back at NCIS, Abby tells Palmer that Luke hid the money there years ago and it got covered up by a concrete slab when Pax expanded. He spent years trying to figure out how to get at it and moving up the charity's ladder to be able to plan a concert and have it relocated there.

Gibbs drops by and finds Palmer unloading baby gifts. Palmer is crushed and ready to give up, but Gibbs assures him he has to fight to have a family.

Douglas (Tom Speakman), Andrew St. John (Navy Petty Officer Second Class Abraham Lycek), Kelsey Scott (FBI Senior Agent Lynette Doyle), Trav Lyons (Sheriff's Deputy Kyle Travers), Muse Watson (Mike Franks)
Production Code: 252
Summary: When the body of Congressman Dan McLane, a former NCIS agent, washes ashore in New Orleans, Gibbs reunites with his former colleague, NCIS Special Agent Dwayne Cassius Pride, in a joint case between the two field offices and the FBI. The teams must work together to determine if the murder was politically based or linked to McLane's most well-known case, the arrest of the Privileged Killer, a serial murderer who targeted military and public servants.

Special Agent Dwayne Cassius "King" Pride picks up an attractive age-appropriate woman (Paige Turco) in a bar. After noting the undeniable chemistry between them, he manages to convince Linda to bring him home with her. In the morning, it turns out it's because King is her husband – they've been married 23 years. But he's not living with her and she suggests he head home to his apartment. He almost has her convinced to spend the day together when he gets a call.

Pride rolls up on the crime scene in his cherry old car. NCIS Special Agent Christopher Lasalle, an Alabama boy, hasn't been to bed yet. The victim is a retired Navy reserve commander who was a guest on the USS Ulysses, he's retired NIS and a Congressman, Dan McClane. The FBI is coming. Pride thinks of the victim as family and says he has some catching up to do with Jethro Gibbs.

In the morning, McGee and Tony arrive to the parking lot to find Ellie up to her elbows in grease and calling parts of her engine thingamabobs and dohickeys. Gibbs arrives and takes a look, suggesting she connect a couple gizmos.

Gibbs is called up to Vance's office, where Pride is waiting for him. Pride wants to run the investigation alone, but Vance tells him the FBI will be assisting. Vance references "recent flaws" in Pride's technique, although Pride insists he only punched the XO once.

When King comes downstairs, Tony recognizes McClane as only of the Original Fed Five, along Mike Franks. King gets a call in MTAC.

LaSalle is calling, along with Jefferson Parish Coroner Doctor Loretta Wade. The Feds just took McClane's body. They think the FBI is hiding something.

LaSalle and McGee are checking private security cameras in the area where McClane was. They find footage of him at a hotel bar with a working girl King recognizes.

Down in New Orleans, LaSalle goes to talk to FBI Senior Agent Lynette Doyle, who took McClane's body. She won't let LaSalle work the case with her or even given him any information, saying it matters to Washington.

At Gibbs' house, FBI Agent Tobias Fornell joins Gibbs and Pride, an old friend, for dinner. He has located McClane's body and is having it sent to Washington. He agrees to work the case with them if they keep him in the loop. He mentions the New Orleans FBI is pulling a lot of old murder files.

Gibbs gets word that Sally Hammond, the working girl seen with McClane, was just picked up in Virginia.

In interrogation, she tells Pride and Gibbs that someone paid her $3,000 to talk to McClane for a few minutes and then leave New Orleans for a week. She didn't know he was a congressman.

Pride points out she was set up to make it look like she was running.

Later, they recap. Gibbs wants to know who on Capitol Hill didn't want McClane re-elected. Pride gets word that LaSalle is checking out the Ulysses, which is still on lockdown.

Down in the morgue, Duckie has received congressman's body, but finds the body was messed with, likely by the FBI.

Pride goes to visit with Abby in the lab. She runs a simulation that proves McClane's body wasn't dumped at the marina, it was dumped at the wetlands up river.

LaSalle returns to the office to find NCIS Special Agent Meredith Brody there, recently transferred to their two man office from the Great Lakes Region. LaSalle recognizes her as the agent afloat when a terrorist attack hit a boat he knows. She doesn't want to talk about it.

Back in the office, Ellie has tied the files the FBI pulled to Victor Lorda, the man the Fed Five convicted as the "Privileged Killer." Pride and Gibbs were the probies on the case. Lorda always maintained his innocence and died in prison.

Tony reports from his DC contacts that McClane recently burned bridges trying to stop construction of a power plant. A lobbyist named Tom Speakman had it in for him. Speakman's nephew Andrew Lycek is stationed on the Ulysses and broke.

Gibbs and Pride track down Speakman and he's openly pleased McClane is dead. When Speakman says McClane deserved it, Pride throws him over the hood of a car. Gibbs enjoys the old school approach.

Back in interrogation, Speakman says he was in DC when McClane was killed.

Brody and LaSalle interview Lycek, who claims he was drunk when he was on leave. Finally, he confesses he was getting a tattoo with a hooker. He shows them his double rainbow.

Back at NCIS, Pride and Gibbs join Duckie who is videoconferencing with Loretta. The two stab wounds and throat slash mimic the Privilege Killer's MO. They think the FBI is trying to hide the fact there's a killer on the loose.

Down in NO, LaSalle explains to Brody how Pride got the name King: When Pride first opened up the New Orleans NCIS office he made a big drug bust and a local crew made him an honorary member and named him King. LaSalle was a sheriff's deputy and King saved his life after Katrina.

Brody says she came to town to start over.

Later at night, FBI Agent Doyle leaves a bar in the Quarter and gets into her car. Someone grabs her from behind and slits her throat.

Back in DC, Tobias relays the news to Vance, Gibbs, and Pride. She was killed the same as McClane. Vance sends Gibbs, Pride, and Bishop to New Orleans.

The New Orleans office is in the middle of the French Quarter in an unassuming brick warehouse. King comes in to find the office has been organized. Gibbs recognizes Brody, but says it's classified.

Brody has found a series of recent unsolved murders dating back to 2001 that all match the same MO. Ellie gets to work looking over the files.

Tony, McGee and Fornell meet Abby in the lab, where she's gone over the floor mats from Doyle's car.

Brody, Pride, and LaSalle check out the street where Doyle's car was parked. Brody is convinced someone must have seen something.

Pride takes Brody aside to ask if she's running from something, but they're interrupted by Gibbs. He heard from Abby. The floor mats had popcorn, junk food and pigeon crap.

LaSalle and Pride take them to the French Market. They get there and realize the killer led them there so he could scope them out. From above through a building window, an unseen person snaps photos of the group through a telephoto lens.

Summary: Gibbs and Special Agent Pride chase leads in New Orleans after evidence points to a copycat of the infamous Privileged Killer. Meanwhile, Bishop sends DiNozzo a special souvenir from the Crescent City, as DiNozzo, McGee and the FBI continue to track political connections to the case from D.C.

Brody and Pride bond over a traditional New Orleans breakfast at Mother's. They get called to a crime scene, Brody is bummed to leave her grits. Jefferson Parish Coroner Doctor Loretta Wade gives Gibbs and Ellie Bishop a ride to the crime scene. She's from Santa Fe originally and settled into New Orleans in 1997. She goes on about loving the area and especially LSU football.

NCIS Special Agent Christopher Lasalle gets a cup of terrible coffee at an empty bar when a punk teenager comes in to rob the place. Lasalle coolly continues sipping his coffee as he tells the teen he's a federal agent. When the teen taunts him, Lasalle easily disarms him. Brody and Pride join him on their way to the crime scene and Brody takes note that Lasalle is starting his morning in a bar. "This is New Orleans: It might be daylight, but the evening's still young," he says.

The body is dumped in a swamp. His ID says it's Henry Wainsgard, but he's been gnawed on by wildlife. He was killed two or three weeks ago, by the same throat slashing MO as the Privilege Killer.

There are tire treads nearby. Because Wainsgard doesn't fit the victim profile, Gibbs theorizes he was killed because he saw the killer.

Back in Washington, Tony opens a gift from Ellie from New Orleans. It's a Tony voodoo doll. He's creeped out and dumps it in the trash.

Down in the morgue, Vance, Duckie and Tobias Fornell examine boxes of letters. Vance had the prison warden where the Privilege Killer, Victor Lorta, was incarcerated send them Lorta's correspondence, which the warden kept after Lorta died.

Down in New Orleans, we learn that Lasalle makes landmarks out of Legos and donates them to the children's hospital. Brody gets another hang-up phone call, she assumes it's related to the business cards she left at Boyle's crime scene. The trio heads to follow them up.

Gibbs and Ellie pay a visit to Wendell Hobbs in the coroner's office. He's her assistant (Jimmy Palmer's counterpart) and plays jazz keyboards during their conversation. The DNA under the victim's fingernails was over 70 years old. Hobbs then shares that the killer was probably wearing a Navy jacket from a thrift store because he likes the way it makes him feel. Gibbs seems to be impressed by his insight.

Back in DC, they come upon a letter that's CC'd to Joseph Hanlon, who gives money to Congressman McClane.

Down in the Quarter, a streetwise young kid approaches Brody, Pride, and Lasalle and shakes them down for his memory of the night Boyle was murdered. He saw the killer in a white military jacket.

Tony and McGee visit Hanlon. The threatening letter CC'd to him came from Emile Titus. He offers up his company's security information on him.

Duckie goes over Lorta's correspondence. He wrote copies of every letter he sent and insisted in each one that he was innocent and that he was framed by Dan McClane.

Duckie wonders if maybe the murders today aren't being done by a copycat, but by the real Privileged Killer.

From MTAC, Vance and Fornell talk to Gibbs and Pride. Pride says there was a mountain of forensic evidence connecting Lorta to the murders and defends McClane fiercely. Pride and Gibbs were both probies on the case. Gibbs isn't so sure McClane didn't cross the line.

Pride storms out into the Quarter, angry at Gibbs for not sticking up for their former boss. Gibbs suggests they talk to another agent who was there at the time.

In DC, Tony has a crushing pinpoint headache and finds his voodoo doll on his desk with a needle in its head.

McGee gives Vance and Fornell a rundown on Emile Titus, an aerospace magnate whose father was an admiral. Titus followed the Privileged Killer case and wrote letters insisting Lorta was innocent. Once McClane became a congressman, Titus started making sizeable donations to his campaign. He's been lying low and now lives in a house in the Garden District in New Orleans.

Gibbs and Pride go visit their old pal and fellow agent Felix Betts. They break the news to him about McClane. Gibbs asks Betts if he ever heard of someone framing Lorta as the Privilege Killer. Betts isn't entirely there, and doesn't answer directly, but he doesn't deny it.

In the coroner's office, Hobbs reports – after turning down his blasting Blues – that the murder weapon was an antique steel blade. There was aviation jet fuel in the tire treads. They get a warrant to search Titus's house.

As they prep to execute the warrant, Pride pulls Brody aside. He got her confidential file – she saw the bomber aboard a ship but froze and he detonated the bomb before she could react. Pride assures her he only cares about how ready she is now.

Before they go, Pride busts out his "mistress" Charmaine, an old handgun.

Abby calls Gibbs about the jet fuel – the stuff in the tire treads is identical to what was on Agent Boyle's floormats. She thinks it means Titus is their guy.

Everyone storms Titus' house – but they find him dead in the study, wearing a white admiral's jacket with a bullet to his forehead.

After examining the body, Wade says the scene was staged. They think the real killer is playing with them – the killer wore Titus' jacket while killing Boyle to lead them to him.

In DC, Tony suggests McGee go update Hanlon, who could also be in danger.

Brody and Ellie find deposits in McClane's offshore accounts totaling $750,000.

Pride is upset that his friend isn't the man he thought he was.

From MTAC, Tony tells them that McClane's mother was dying at the time and his daughter had been diagnosed with lymphoma when he took the money. He was ready to tell the truth with re-election coming up, and so the killer offered him. They look into McClane's campaign money, assuming it was hush money. Hanlon was McClane's biggest contributor, but he's been in DC the whole time. He has a son, Spencer, who runs everything now, including their factory in New Orleans. And he'd have access to a private jet.

Meanwhile, McGee finishes briefing Josef Hanlon on the case. Looking at family photos, McGee gets suspicious of Spencer and starts to draw his gun, but Hanlon knocks him out.

Hanlon has been paying off McClane to protect his son. Spencer wanted to be a Marine but was rejected.

Tony reaches Hanlon's house and finds McGee knocked out, but OK. Hanlon is dead in the bathroom after taking pills. He called his son to warn him.

In New Orleans, they close in on Spencer's house, but he's not there. He has framed newspaper clippings of his killings. Thinking Spencer is freaked out and on the run, they plan to case every military bar in the city.

Spencer picks up a Navy woman at a bar and gets her to leave with him when he sees Brody and Lasalle walk in.

Walking down the street, he chloroforms his victim and drags her into a cemetery.

Brody calls from the bar – the bartender saw Hanlon leave with the woman. When she mentions the cemetery is nearby, Ellie remembers marble dust in his apartment.

In the cemetery, Hanlon is about to kill his victim when Pride and Gibbs find him. Hanlon considers their commands to halt, but when it looks like he's going to go ahead with it, they shoot him.

The next day, back in the office, Brody starts to pack up. Pride tells her he asked the director to extend her assignment indefinitely. She's happy to stay, but requests her own Lego sculpture from Lasalle. He hands over a fleur de lis.

After lunch with Betts and Pride, Gibbs waits for Bishop to catch their plane back to DC. Brody and Lasalle pull up and take Pride to the next crime scene, with plans to stop for chicken on the way back.

Production Code: 254
Summary: McGee's girlfriend turns to NCIS for help when she finds new evidence in a controversial case that her bosses at the Department of Defense closed. Meanwhile, McGee talks to DiNozzo about whether he should ask Delilah to move in with him.

Back at the Department of Defense after being injured in a bombing, Delilah decrypts emails. She finds something and calls for her boss.

Two weeks ago a Naval Intelligence officer was killed in Budapest, but the case has gone cold. But Delilah found an email from a known alias telling the suspect to lie low at an address in DC. She's ready to alert everyone, but instead her boss deletes the email and tells her and her chatty coworker that they never saw the email.

At NCIS, McGee is ready to ask Delilah to move in with him. Tony is excited for him. Tony gets a call from Delilah, but she tells him not to tell McGee she's calling.

She asks about the progress on the murder of Navy Lt. Kit Jones, hoping there's a classified investigation she couldn't dig up. But Tony says there's nothing.

Delilah takes it to Gibbs and McGee. Jones was trying to take down a website that sells everything from drugs to hitmen. Delilah is bothered that her boss is clearly under orders not to act on the case. Gibbs says they'll look into it.

McGee goes to the apartment posing as pest control. The building owner, Ronald Troutman, says the tenant paid with cash but has moved out and the whole place was cleaned and smells like bleach. The name he used is fake. Troutman is a fit man in his 40s but walking with a cane, he says he has surgery on a bum knee tomorrow.

In the apartment, Tony and McGee don't find any blood. McGee sent a photo of a partial print to Abby. The mystery renter is Lt. Kit Jones, who died in Budapest two weeks ago.

Back at NCIS, it's time for the victim rundown – in Vance's office this time. Jones was looking into the Phoenician Exchange, an offshoot of the Silk Road. His hotel room was destroyed and there was no body left but he made a call from the room seconds before the bomb went off.

Heidi Partridge, the site's former operator, is currently in prison. Vance wonders if Jones faked his death to take over the multi-million dollar role. But he left behind a fiancée, Melody Partridge.

Gibbs meets with her. They were supposed to get married last week. She was able to cancel almost everything for the wedding, but not the reception catering from Leo's restaurant. She asks Gibbs to take the leftovers off her hands.

She says Kit did everything 100% and loved his job. He called her every day he was gone, except the day before he died.

Tony and McGee go to Dandridge to talk to Heidi, who is awaiting trial and won't reveal anything. She used to be a kindergarten teacher. She says she was hired to keep a website functioning on a purely code level, that was it. When they ask if Jones could have taken over the site, she ends the interview saying it's violating her new deal – she struck it just before they arrived.

The prison log doesn't show any visitors. As they leave the prison, Tony checks in with Gibbs, but his phone cuts out. He has a full signal, so they look around for someone with a signal jammer and find a man in a car nearby. When they pull their guns on him, he says he's case officer Jim Brisco and they're interfering with a CIA operation.

Later, Brisco meets with Gibbs and Vance. Jones is alive and working for them. They staged the hotel explosion. Jones work overlapped with a CIA money laundering investigation into bitcoins. Gibbs wants to tell Melody, but Brisco says it would make her a target.

They had brought Melody back in, but Gibbs has to send her home. He apologizes on behalf of NCIS and the CIA, which he name drops to see if it means anything to her.

Gibbs wants a way into the site, so McGee turns to Delilah's informant and ex-boyfriend, Sampson. Tony and McGee stake out Sampson out. He's gigantic – he uses the PX website to buy and sell steroids.

Vance meets with CIA Head of Intelligence Kirkwood Zaysen, annoyed at being left out of the loop. Kirkwood essentially tells Vance to butt out.

Back in interrogation, Sampson is happy to help until he learns they wants his Phoenician login. He doesn't want to risk anything they do tracing back to him, but he shows concern for Delilah and finally agrees to help in exchange for coffee with her –as promised to him by Tony.

McGee checks in on Delilah, who called in sick to work and is camped out in Abby's lab. McGee doesn't understand why she's risking her job and she points out the case involving a bomb and a website with ties to terrorism both hit home for her.

She's scanning PX and has already found classified DOD security protocols – the kind of thing Jones would have access to. "He could be a double agent," Delilah says.

In the morgue, Abby ran the tissue Tony and McGee found in Jones' secret apartment and found signs of malnutrition and high doses of oxycodone. He's not a double agent – he's a prisoner.

In MTAC, Gibbs, Vance and Brisco talk with Kirkwood with the CIA. He's angry to be learning from NCIS that Jones is being held captive. Brisco was in contact with him, but only via email. Kirkwood turns things over to NCIS.

Delilah, McGee and Abby comb through the code Jones has sprinkled throughout the dark part of the website (more tech speak here), and find (tech jargon) breadcrumbs he left, leading them to an IP address in use at a nearby hospital. A quick check of patients and staff against their files pulls up Ronald Troutman, the landlord having knee surgery.

They don't want to bust him, because that could leave Jones in harm's way. They plan undercover instead to get the proof from his computer.

In the hospital, Troutman is recovering from his knee surgery and is knocked out. Jimmy and Duckie go in to get rid of his college age daughter, Kim. McGee runs in and takes apart Troutman's laptop to swap the hard drives.

Back at NCIS, Tony goes through Melody's phone records to make sure she's not keeping anything from them, or in danger.

Delilah comes by Tony's desk wanting advice. She's interested in a senior analyst position in Dubai. Tony is about to ask more, when they see that Melody just got six one-second phone calls from Leo's, the restaurant where Kit proposed and their reception was supposed to be held.

Down in Abby's lab, she finds absolutely nothing on Troutman's laptop, it's been cleaned. He knew they were coming – someone tipped him off.

Outside Leo's restaurant, Gibbs and Ellie run into Kit Jones. He pulls a gun on them, wary of any government agents. Tony easily sneaks up and disarms him. Kit explains the last federal agent who said he was going to help was Jim Brisco- and he was the one holding Kit prisoner.

Back in interrogation, Kit tells Tony he walked into Brisco's trap. There was never any undercover operation – it was Brisco's ruse to make him think he was taking down the world's biggest undercover drug market. He says Brisco tortured him for information to give to PX. He escaped the day before they found the apartment.

Brisco has gone missing. Gibbs wants to take a run at Troutman.

At the hospital, Gibbs pokes Troutman's operated on knee to get him to talk. Troutman is happy to cooperate, as soon as they tell him how to hand over his passwords and login. He asks if they need his AOL info. Gibbs notices Troutman has a flip phone like him – a fellow tech troglodyte. When Ellie mentions his laptop, he says he doesn't have one. When they point out the one in his room, he realizes it belongs to his daughter.

Meanwhile, Kim Troutman meets with Jim Brisco in a restaurant. They've never met before, but she gets him talking about tipping her off.

Then she leaves and checks in with Gibbs to make sure her plea deal is intact.

Jones sits down with Brisco to let him know the jig is up. Jones decks him for good measure.

McGee gives Kit a ride to meet Melody at the courthouse – she's wearing a veil and saved the top of their wedding cake.

In the car, McGee tells Delilah she should go for the Dubai job if she wants it – Tony told him about it. She will only do it if he's up for a long distance relationship. He gives her the keys to his apartment.

Production Code: 255
Summary: After a Navy officer is found dead on a rural road, the NCIS team must ascertain if the murder was the result of a bar fight or because he knew too much about an attack on a fellow female officer. Meanwhile, DiNozzo and McGee start a juice cleanse to purge their bodies of impurities.

In the suburbs, a man texts and drives in Chesapeake when he hits something. There's a dead body in the street.

At NCIS, McGee and Tony are on day two of a cleanse diet. McGee is loving it and Tony is pretending to. Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week: a dead Navy officer. Ellie takes along her bacon and egg sandwich to finish in the car.

On site, the victim is Ensign Lester Tate and his body shows signs he was in a fight. The driver is beside himself, in a public service announcement to not text and drive.

Gibbs and McGee head to Tate's ship to speak with his commanding officer Louis Wexler. They learn Tate rented a house for a week of leave with his pal, ensign Thomas Burke.

At the apartment, Gibbs, McGee and Tony bust in when they hear a noise inside. Burke throws his hands up and proclaims he didn't do it.

Later, Burke tells the team he left Tate at a bar called the Silver Leaf around midnight when Tate started ordering shots. They ask him what he meant by "I didn't do it" and he plays dumb and asks for a lawyer.

At the bar, the bartender says he threw out Burke and some other guy after they started fighting about a girl.

Back in the morgue, Duckie says Tate died of having his head smashed against the pavement.

In the office, McGee goes over Tate's phone records and find multiple calls a few days at to NCIS's own Family and Sexual Violence unit.

Vance summons Gibbs to meet with Special Agent Maureen Cabot with the unit. Tate reported a rape on behalf of a friend who's now refusing to cooperate. She was drugged and unconscious during the attack and thinks she met her attacker in a bar.

Gibbs goes back to the ship to speak to Ensign Holly Farrell, who bristles when she sees Cabot with him.

Back at NCIS, Farrell repeats her denials that anything happened. Then she worries that her telling Tate what happened got him killed.

She tells them what happened. She went out with her fellow junior officers, including Burke and Tate, on a leave in Key West. On her second margarita she felt way drunker than she should have and returned to the ship, where she had her own quarters. The next morning she came to and felt beaten up. She tried to forget about it until Tate asked her what was wrong.

Abby interrupts and Gibbs asks her in the hall how long a roofie would stay in Farrell's system. Not long enough for them to test now. Farrell is upset he told Abby and again they try to convince her to let them investigate, but she refuses.

Back in the office, they've confirmed Burke was home like he said when Tate was killed.

Gibbs is summoned to meet with Vance and Cabot, who says they can't convince Farrell to let them investigate until she's ready.

Abby goes to the conference room to talk to Farrell. Farrell apologizes for not being more trusting. Abby tells her nothing makes her "sadder, or madder, or badder" than when she hears about assaults against women (she also apologizes for rhyming). Abby assures Farrell she can trust Gibbs and Cabot. Abby hugs her.

Farrell changes her mind and confesses that she went and had a rape kit taken in Key West after her attack. She agrees to cooperate.

Back at the bar, the bartender goes through photos of all the men from Farrell's ship but doesn't recognize anyone.

Bishop gets an order of chili cheese fries and Tony tries to contain himself. Then the bartender comes over and points out a man who just entered the bar. Tony and Bishop try to talk to him, but end up chasing him out the back door – where he runs headlong into a Dumpster and knocks himself out.

Back in interrogation, Ellie and Tony talk to Eddie Patch, who's an ex-con, which he says is why he ran. He says he was hitting on a woman at the bar and Tate interceded, so they fought. He came back last night looking to take him on again. They're convinced he's a lowlife, but not their guy.

Abby joins Gibbs and Vance with the preliminary results from Farrell's rape kit. There was no DNA but they found ketamine –a horse tranquilizer- in her system.

Gibbs, McGee and Cabot got to see Captain Daniels and Commander Wexler. Daniels agrees to help anyway he can. When McGee says they can't get a search warrant for his ship, Daniels orders Wexler to do an inspection and he invites McGee to tag along.

Cabot interviews the other junior officers who were out that night with Farrell. Burke says he didn't notice anything out of the ordinary and was upset to learn about her attack.

Junior Lt. William Greco has a selfie with all the guys back in their bunks at the end of the night. He has another of all of them in the bar.

The search turned up nothing useful.

Duckie comes up and tells Tony and Bishop that Tate had an epidural hematoma and could have walked a ways before he died.

Palmer joins them to report on the asphalt from Tate's wound, which had old burnt vegetable oil in it.

Back at the bar, Ellie and Tony talk to Fred the bartender, who says he threw Tate and the scumbag out the door in opposite directions. They walk Tate through it and conclude Fred accidentally threw Tate into the Dumpster. He's horrified to learn what he did, but they're convinced it was an accident.

Later, Gibbs and Cabot update Farrell, who is at least glad to learn Tate wasn't killed because of what she told him. McGee and Abby join them. McGee checked Navy personnel against ketamine use. Three years ago Lt. Monica King was examined by a civilian doctor for a separated shoulder and found to have ketamine in her system. She left the Navy two months later.

They didn't find anyone who was stationed both places.

Later, Vance, Cabot, and Gibbs talk to Monica King in MTAC from Atlanta, Georgia. She can't believe they want to hear about it now. She describes going to the Officer's club with fellow officers and getting woozy on her second drink. She only remembers flashes of the attack, but didn't know who it was. She told her XO and he asked what he was supposed to do without a name.

Later, McGee looks up people stationed on both ships and comes up with the XO, Wexler.

In MTAC, Wexler is combative and defiant.

Cabot lays out seven other attacks they discovered on women under his command. He says he doesn't recognize any of the women in the photos. "Because they're not unconscious?" Gibbs says. When Wexler charges him, Cabot lowers him with a stiff hand to the jugular. They arrest him.

The next morning, Ellie reports that Fred the bartender is only going to be charged with involuntary manslaughter.

Tony notices McGee swallowing and finds a pepperoni stick in his file. McGee admits he's been eating them the whole time. He offers one to Tony but he can't be bought for anything less than steak, creamed spinach and French fries. They all head out, McGee's treat.

Gibbs and Abby walk with Farrell in the park. She's having a hard time believing Wexler attacked her, but is looking forward to testifying at his court martial. She's heading to a memorial for Tate, even though she knows her ordeal will be a popular subject of discussion.

She hugs Abby and salutes Gibbs. Burke comes to pick her up and she greets him with a hug and a Gibbs head slap.

Colley (Christopher Ramos)
Production Code: 256
Summary: When a Marine photographer disappears prior to providing his testimony in an Army court-martial hearing, the NCIS team investigates both the murder he witnessed as well as his current piece on military veterans who are homeless in the D.C. area. Meanwhile, Abby tries to help a young homeless woman reconnect with her family.

A Marine photographer follows a joint Army-Marine task force in Afghanistan and snaps pictures as one of the soldiers appears to kill an unarmed civilian.

Back in DC months later, the picture was leaked by someone and led to the court martial of the man shooting in the picture, Army First Lieutenant Michael Waters. Marine Staff Sgt. Martin "Shooter" Roe took it. Roe is supposed to testify that it was a revenge killing, but no one has seen him in four days. Vance warns Gibbs to tread lightly with the Army.

Downstairs, McGee arrives late with stubble. He has an itch and a doctor told him not to shave for a week. Gibbs joins them with the news about Roe, along with Commander Chad Hendricks, from the public affairs office.

Roe is working on a piece on homeless military veterans in the DC area.

Gibbs sits down with Waters and Major Huggins, his JAG lawyer. Waters is angry and defiant, calling Roe a lying bastard. Waters accuses Gibbs of being "one dumb jarhead covering for another."

In Roe's apartment, Tony and Ellie look through his things, finding a threatening note. Ellie finds cooking tools for heroin.

Back in the office, they place the most recent photos from their GPS tags and find most were taken right near the Navy yard.

Down in the lab, Abby reports she found Roe's DNA on the needle. Hendricks doesn't believe it.

Tony, McGee and Ellie wander among homeless people on the street where Roe took his pictures. They head inside a building where another was taken and find a homeless encampment. They find Roe dead inside with a needle in his arm.

Later, on the scene, Duckie says Roe died four or five days ago. He was a new drug user without needle tracks.

Back in the office, Vance reports that with Roe dead, Waters court martial has been dismissed.

Vance and Gibbs join Abby and Duckie in the morgue. Roe died of an OD, but he was chloroformed before he was injected. He was murdered.

Back upstairs, they go over Roe's photos and find a man with a Navy tattoo. Abby recognizes the man as Blue, with his dog Dave. She sees them every morning on the way to work and brings Blue food for Dave. Abby hasn't seen him for a few days.

Tony and Ellie go back to canvas the homeless with photos of Roe and Blue, but no one will talk to them. Tony suggests they go undercover, but everyone knows their faces. Tony has another idea of someone who's been looking scruffy.

Waters' lawyer Huggins visits Vance to object to him speaking to Gibbs again. Huggins insists Waters is a hero with a purple heart who was in that village to flush out a sniper who killed one of his unit the day before. Vance insists Huggins bring him in.

Down in the lab, Abby gets a hit on the facial recognition of Blue, a vet named Everett.

Christopher from tech services finishes prepping McGee to go undercover as a homeless person, complete with cat urine spray.

Back in the office, Ellie wonders if Waters could have slipped off base to kill Roe only two miles away.

McGee wanders through the homeless encampment, not having found anyone who's seen Blue. Tony taunts him via earpiece from inside the warm car. McGee is ready to give up when a man approaches him and tells him a "nosy photographer" took Blue to get help, but the rumor is that Blue died.

The next day in the office, Ellie confirms with a hospital that Blue died of a heart attack one day before Roe.

Abby comes in and takes news of Blue's passing hard and worries about the dog.

At a free clinic, Gibbs and Ellie talk to the clinic director Lorin Davis, who tells them about Roe bringing Blue in having chest pains.

Out on the streets, Abby finds Dave the dog with a young homeless woman. She defiantly explains Blue asked her to watch the dog and Abby breaks the news to her about his death. Abby tries to talk to the woman, but she runs off.

Duckie comes by Gibbs' house at night. Gibbs asks him to get Blue's body and perform an autopsy.

In the lab, Abby has pulled the homeless girl's prints off something she touched and found she's a runaway from Nebraska named Emma Carter. She's been missing six years and the FBI and her parents are looking for her.

In the morgue, Duckie reports to Vance and Gibbs that Blue did die of a heart attack, but both of his kidneys were stolen. They would have had to be harvested quickly after he died.

The doctor who signed Blue's death certificate is Dr. Graham Novak, who has a prominent practice in Reston but volunteers at the clinic.

Back out on the streets, Abby finds Dave and Emma. She plays Emma a video from her mother, apologizing for any mistakes they made and begging her to come home. Abby gives Emma a prepaid phone card, but Emma says she has nothing to say to them.

Gibbs and Tony talk to Dr. Novak in interrogation. He admits he stole Blue's kidney and says he only meant to do it once, after a homeless man died and he gave his kidney to his mentor, who was dying. He says he was blackmailed into doing it again by Lorin Davis, the clinic director. He insists he was just trying to get organs to people who needed them.

Roe came in to pay his respects to Blue's body and noticed he was still on a ventilator. Lorin said he'd deal with Roe.

The team goes to the clinic and arrests Lorin.

Back at the homeless encampment, Emma finds Abby and asks her to watch Dave. Her parents bought her a bus ticket to Nebraska. She explains she was on the streets so long she started to believe she got what she deserved for running away. But Abby insists she's better than that, which is what Emma's mom said, too.

Late at night in NCIS, Gibbs and Vance look at Roe's pictures of homeless vets. Vance just heard the court martial of Waters is back on. And Duckie informs them that Blue and Roe are going to be buried in Arlington National Cemetery with full honors.

The Admiral's Daughter

Season 11
Episode Number: 257
Season Episode: 23

Originally aired: Tuesday May 6, 2014
Writer: Christopher Silber, Steven D. Binder

Show Stars: Mark Harmon (Special Agent Leroy Jethro Gibbs), Michael Weatherly (Special Agent Tony DiNozzo), Pauley Perrette (Forensics Specialist Abby Sciuto), David McCallum (Chief M.E. Ducky Mallard), Sean Murray (I) (Special Agent Tim McGee), Brian Dietzen (Asst. M.E. Jimmy Palmer), Rocky Carroll (Director Leon Vance), Emily Wickersham (NSA Agent Ellie Bishop)
Guest Stars: Abhi Sinha (Khan), Daniel Hugh Kelly (Admiral Kendall), Maite Schwartz (French Inspector Isabelle Chablis), Margarita Kallas (Amanda's friend), Medalion Rahimi (Iranian terrorist), Meg Chambers Steedle (Amanda Kendall), Jonathan Roumie (Officer Gerard), Joseph Zinsman (Amir Askari), Senta Moses (Katherine Atwood)
Summary: DiNozzo is sent to Paris on a covert mission to bring home an admiral's daughter, but he turns to the NCIS team for help when he encounters a controversial crime scene.

In Marseille, France, a TV report announces that authorities are looking for an American in a murder – a picture of Tony DiNozzo flashes across the screen.

Meanwhile, in the back of a crepe food cart, Tony incapacitates someone while apologizing. He gets out and a young debutante asks him what to do next. He goes with "run."

36 hours earlier Tony is called in to see Vance, who introduces Admiral Kendall. He asks Tony to go run a seminar on internet security in Marseille – but really to get Kendall's daughter. His plane leaves in two hours.

Kendall explains his daughter used to be a good student but is now an international party girl. She was out partying with gun dealers and Iranian terrorists and her dad thinks she's in over her head. Vance makes it clear no one but Gibbs is supposed to know what he's really up to.

Downstairs, Tony sells his story to McGee. Duckie interrupts, addicted to a charades-like app. Gibbs announces the body of the week, in Norfolk. Duckie reminds Tony to not tip more than 6%.

In Marseille, Tony examines his check and calls McGee for help with the tip math. McGee's at a crime scene with a body stuck in a septic tank.

Tony arrives at Marseille NCIS and finds a crime scene with five dead bodies instead. He's just a few steps inside the door when French police come in and arrest him.

Back at NCIS, Abby is trying to work up the nerve to climb inside the septic tank. The body was weighted down by rocks.

The French police call Gibbs and another agent shows up and order Tony released from custody. Tony has a careful conversation with Gibbs about the situation and promises to call him later when he can talk.

The French inspector shows Tony a picture of the admiral's daughter leaving the scene and he says he doesn't know her. They ask to examine his gun to make sure it hasn't recently been fired.

Back at NCIS, Vance wants Tony to focus on finding the admiral's daughter.

At a nightclub, Tony shows Amanda's picture around and finds her at the bar doing shots. She's snotty and dismissive until Tony tells her everyone in the NCIS office is dead. She crawled out of the window to get away from the NCIS agents taking her to another hotel.

Tony is primarily concerned with getting her somewhere safe, but she is worried about meeting with a boy named Amir, the son of an Iranian politician.

She's explaining things outside, when the French inspector pulls up wanting to taking Amanda in for questioning. Tony isn't inclined to let Amanda go with her, but the inspector pulls Tony's gun and shoots her fellow officer. Tony ducks out with Amanda.

Back in the NCIS morgue, Abby has matched the septic tank body to Zach Martin. He was tortured.

Gibbs expects Tony home on the next flight.

Back in Marseille, Tony wants to call NCIS but Amanda worries the French are tracking them through Tony's phone. She crushes it with her shoe – and Tony notes he took the battery out hours go. Tony says they're going to rent a car and drive to the NCIS satellite office in Rota, Spain.

Tony goes to the crepe cart to order Amanda some food when the news report featuring him shows up on the TV. Tony incapacitates the employee and decides renting a car won't work.

Instead, Amanda calls a friend with a party RV. She asks about Amir and learns he's with a girl on the way to Switzerland. Tony still wants to call Gibbs, but thinks it's too risky. He spies the Symbolese app on someone's phone.

Ellie and McGee go Zach Martin's office, where his secretary admits she's never met him, he does all of his business by phone. He doesn't have any actual clients.

Back at NCIS, Abby saw Zach's Georgetown mug and ran past yearbooks against facial recognition. She found out Zach Martin was really Zacharia Hassan, and he went to school with the admiral's daughter Amanda Kendall.

In the office, they've realized Tony didn't make his return flight. They've seen the French reports. Gibbs suggests they work the case to help Tony.

Palmer comes up with news from his app. He has two images that he's sure are from Tony, indicating autopsy gremlin, his name for Palmer. Then bus and road – for Rota, Spain.

They send a message back.

Meanwhile, on the party bus, Tony gets the reply indicating agents will meet them at the border. He's about to read the second message when he smells smoke. They pull over for the fire and Tony drags Amanda away before the fire brigade arrive.

Back at NCIS, they got Tony's message about a dirty cop and are worried about an internal incident. Ellie and Tony tell Vance that Hassan had information on his laptop related to Amanda. He was a spy and had a message sent through a DOD server.

Vance and Gibbs meet with Kendall in interrogation –the encrypted message on Hassan's laptop was from Kendall's account. Hassan had classified intelligence documents.

Meanwhile in France, Tony and Amanda walk into a quiet restaurant. Amanda wants to go back to Marseille for her boyfriend, Amir. Tony leaves to go to the bathroom, then doubles back to intercept Amanda on her way out of the front door.

He dumps out her purse and finds a matchbook with missing matches. He knows she started the fire on the bus and wants to know why she's so desperate to get back to Marseille. Tony tells Amanda that Zacharia Hassan is dead.

He thinks the party girl routine is an act and she's a spy working for Amir and the Iranian government. She says he's half-right, Amir works for her and she's a member of the Defense Clandestine Service. Hassan was her handler. She says she turned Amir and he'd been giving her intel, including information recently on Iran's WMD program.

"It's 'Three Days of the Condor,' except I'm Faye Dunaway," Tony says.

Tony promises her he'll help her get Amir out of Marseille. Tony calls Gibbs from a payphone, asking him to get an NSA Alpha team to find Amir ASAP but he can't tell Gibbs why.

In the lab, Abby finds that Inspector Cheblis was listening in to Tony's call, as they expected. They sent Tony a message through Symbolese.

Amanda and Tony wait in a car, watching Cheblis. When she leaves, Amanda and Tony go inside an empty night club. They find Amir bloodied and battered with a woman named Lila. As they're taking him away, Cheblis returns and draws on Tony.

He asks who she's working for and Amanda's friend Lila turns on them. Lila grabs Amanda hostage.

Tony tells Lila that snipers have her in their sights. She thinks she's bluffing, but a tactical team comes in and approaches her. When Lila goes to fire on Tony, he shoots her.

Tony is surprised to see the tactical team, but is sure Gibbs was behind it.

Back at NCIS, Amanda is reunited with her dad, who is surprised and proud to learn of her covert work.

Tony thanks Gibbs for sending in Interpol.

Palmer walks through with a message on Symbolese from his wife that he doesn't understand –it's a bun and an oven.

Production Code: 258
Summary: The NCIS team investigates whether a fire on a U.S. Navy ship that served as a secret detention site for indicted terrorists was accidental or an intentional diversion for an escape. Meanwhile, Gibbs travels to his childhood home following news of his father's passing.

Ellie and McGee stake out a bar, with Tony and Gibbs providing back-up in the truck. They're staking out a burglar named Wayne Levinson. They see him come in and Ellie and McGee catch him in the back room taking money from the safe. When Wayne runs out the back door, Gibbs intercepts him. The puddle on the street causes Gibbs to remember a glimpse of a scene from his childhood, with his father. He gets a chill.

Later, back in the office, a TV news report announces an accidental galley fire on the USS Niagara. The team engages in empty banter until Vance interrupts, summoning Gibbs to his office.

An employee at Gibbs' father's store called – Gibbs' dad had a stroke, he died. (This episode pays tribute to actor Ralph Waite, who portrayed Gibbs' father for the past six seasons and who died in February.)

Later, in the office, Abby stresses about getting the right flowers for Gibbs' father. They tell Ellie what a sweet man Jackson was and how he was the only one who could do the Gibbs stare at Gibbs.

Vance interrupts, summoning Ellie, McGee and Tony to MTAC. Sandra Jenkins with the CIA and Captain Arnold Craig tell them a civilian contractor brought an incendiary device on board. He was killed after the explosion, but they reveal that the ship was carrying prisoners – indicted terrorists, most of whom were captured following Benham Parsa's arrest and were part of his Brotherhood of Doubt. Two escaped during the diversion.

Tony steps out to call Gibbs with the update, but Vance follows and tells Tony not to contact him, saying he needs time. Tony objects, but Vance orders him not to brief Gibbs.

Gibbs arrives at his father's store in Stillwater. He sees a rifle on the wall and remembers he was never allowed to touch it, and his dad noted how ironic it was Gibbs grew up to be a sniper.

Back in NCIS, it's perpetrator rundown time. The escapees made off in a RIB (rigid hull inflatable boat) while the sonar was out of whack from the explosion.

The escapees are: Edwin Smith, a Canadian cruise ship mechanic, and Lateef Mir, who assassinated a group of American journalists in Pakistan. Mir is known for being able to drastically alter his appearance.

Abby comes up with photo of a RIB on a nearby shoreline that she was able to track down.

Tony and Ellie head to the beach and find the abandoned boat, and the dead body of Edwin Smith in it.

Later, Duckie and Palmer are on the scene. Duckie announces Smith was strangled. Tony ignores a call from Gibbs. "It's like I can feel Gibbs looking at me through the phone," Tony says.

Back at his father's place, Gibbs goes through his garage. He remembers seeing his dad tell his mom to get a second opinion and her getting angry, then Gibbs asking his dad later why his mom was mad at him.

Gibbs' reverie is broken when Cal, Jackson's store employee, comes by. He tells Gibbs he was there when his dad died and wished there was something he could do. Gibbs' dad thought very highly of Cal. Cal tells Gibbs that his dad kept him from going down a bad path. Gibbs asks for his help getting the store ready to sell.

Back in MTAC, Tony, Ellie and McGee are briefed on Fouad Ansour, Parsa's second in command. He released a video claiming responsibility for the jail break from the boat, but they're sure the Brotherhood doesn't have the money to have pulled it off.

Down in the lab, Abby has head, beard and facial hair from Lateef found in the abandoned boat, proving he shaved and bleached his eyebrows. She has a new composite of him that looks totally different and an off-duty cop just saw him going into the backroom of a bar - the Green Star Bar & Grill, the same one where they caught Wayne Levinson last night.

Tony sits down with Wayne in interrogation, telling him he's a loose end. Wayne says the money he took from the safe was his payment for three untraceable Glocks that were supposed to be picked up today. He says the woman who dropped off the first half of the payment was a Hispanic woman in her 30s with a child.

He got the job through someone he met in prison named Alejandro Rivera - the leader of the Mexican drug cartel who tried to kill Gibbs a few years back. (Because Gibbs killed his father for murdering Gibbs' own wife and child.)

Tony finally calls Gibbs. "Is it bad?" Gibbs asks. "Worse," Tony says.

Later, Tony goes to visit Rivera in prison. Rivera says he hasn't had contact with Levinson since he got out of prison, but Tony doesn't believe him for a minute.

Back at NCIS, McGee says the owner of the Green Star is Rivera's second cousin.

Ellie reports that Leticia Gomez visited Rivera in prison and had a baby eight months ago.

Suddenly Gibbs storms in and up to Vance's office, saying he had a right to know what was going on. Vance reminds Gibbs of his own advice after his wife was killed, telling him to take time to recover. Gibbs tries to argue and Vance gently places him on administrative leave. As Gibbs leaves he tells Vance not to ever tell his team to hold out on him again.

Ellie and McGee meet with Leticia, who admits to delivering the money to Wayne for Alejandro. Alejandro saw news of NCIS capturing Parsa on TV. He used cartel money to fund the Brotherhood prison break because they had an enemy in common. Anyone who escaped was ordered to hunt down and kill Gibbs.

Meanwhile, Gibbs returns home and hears the sound of water flooding his basement. He gets to work fixing his spraying water heater, removing his gun in the process. But while he's under the tank, he sees a hacksaw and wires touching the water.

The lights go out.

A man comes from upstairs to inspect. Gibbs is no longer on the ground, he's clinging to the stairs and shoots the intruder several times in the chest. The intruder falls into the electrified water below.

Later, the team is on the scene. The attacker matches the new description of Lateef Mir, he burned off his fingertips with acid. He was carrying one of the Glocks.

Gibbs remembers his dad teaching him woodworking, saying it was something he could make right when other things can't be set right.

Duckie urges Gibbs to return to Stillwater, but he has a stop to make first.

Gibbs and McGee go see Rivera in prison. They show him Leticia's signed statement and show him video of an attack on Fouad Ansour's compound. The CIA followed Alejandro's funding trail there and they wiped out all remaining members of the Brotherhood.

Alejandro seethes at Gibbs, promising him he'll get him someday. Then Gibbs reveals the photo of Lateef Mir's dead body and the news that he was the only one to escape.

Back at the office, Abby comes upstairs in a tizzy with DNA results. The guy Gibbs shot was not Lateef Mir – he was a mercenary. Mir planted the hairs in the boat so they'd think he'd changed his appearance, then hired the mercenary to take on the look and go after Gibbs.

McGee tries to reach Gibbs, but he's working on a truck in his father's garage, listening to blue grass. He hears the garage door open and catches a glimpse of Mir in the truck's side mirror. Gibbs waits for him to come around the side of the truck and then whacks him with a tire iron. The gun goes under the truck the two men grapple for a moment. Then Mir dives under the jacked up truck to get the gun. He's lying under it and taking aim at Gibbs when Gibbs whacks the jack out from propping up the truck and the trucks falls, crushing Mir underneath.

Back at Jackson's store, Cal arrives to pick up Gibbs, quoting Jackson that if "you're not early, you're late."

Gibbs gives Cal the keys to the store and asks him to take it over, saying it's what his father would have wanted.

The whole team turns out for the funeral, along with Jackson's old friend LJ (Billy Dee Williams), and Jackson's old Navy buddies. A color guard presents Gibbs with the folded up flag and a bugler plays Taps.

Back in basement, Gibbs opens a box labeled "Chickadee." He remembers presenting the box to his mom as a young boy, with a small boat, named Chickadee, that his dad had helped him build. "Water never forgets – anyone with a boat named after them will live forever," his mom said.

Later, the family took the boat out to the water and Gibbs recalled the family time fondly.

Back home, Gibbs examines the small model Chickadee boat and unrolls a piece of paper. He starts sketching schematics for his next project.

Production Code: 12001
Summary: Gibbs and McGee travel to Russia to safely escort home an NCIS computer engineer connected to classified intel, but their mission is compromised and they are forced to go off the grid while hunted by a Russian mercenary group. Meanwhile, the team in D.C. frantically uses every asset and inter-agency contact they have in an attempt to locate their missing team members.

Moscow, Russia — A Russian counsel Anton meets with an international mercenary named Sergei Mishnev, who has funded many terrorists over the years including Ziva David's late brother Ari Haswari, warning Sergei off going after NCIS. He knows there's an NCIS agent in town and Sergei's people have been following him. Sergei assures Anton he won't implicate Russia, his revenge is purely personal.

Back at NCIS, Director Vance mentions the new systems admin Kevin Hussein to Gibbs. Kevin went back to Russia last week to visit a sick uncle, who died yesterday. Kevin has the feeling he's been followed. He's holed up at the US Embassy and needs an escort home, given his high security value.

McGee and Tony both try to get out of the job. Ellie is willing, but only a senior agent can go. McGee loses rock paper scissors and is off to Moscow.

At the US Embassy, Kevin is relieved to see friendly faces.

They fly him out on a Naval airplane, with permission from the Russians. It's piloted by Lt. Commander Banks and Lt. Hagan.

After they've been flying for awhile, the pilots notice they've been targeted by a surface-to-air missile. It hits the tail and they go into a tailspin. The pilots tell everyone to brace for impact.

Back in DC, Tony, Ellie and Vance listen to the radio transmission in MTAC. Twelve minutes after the crash and they haven't picked up a distress beacon.

Gibbs comes to by the wreckage to see a wolf growling at him. His gun was knocked away. He's scaring the animal off with a stick when McGee comes to his rescue firing.

They hear Banks moaning in the front seat. She has a fractured rib and likely punctured lung. The copilot and crewman are dead. Kevin stumbles out of the woods, apparently OK.

In MTAC, Vance and Tony conference with Anton, who assures them Russia had nothing to do with it. He offers to send search planes.

Out in the woods 12 miles (20 clicks) from Finland, they try to patch up Bank and fix the radio. Gibbs thinks Kevin knows something about who might have shot them down, but he pleads ignorance. They hear someone coming. Banks tries to tell Gibbs to leave her, but he'll consider no such thing.

Back at NCIS, Abby thinks she has an idea related to the missile. Vance asks Ducky to brief Kevin's family. They're not happy about having to let Russia take the lead on the search, for diplomatic reasons.

Sergei and his men surround the wreckage and find Banks, who tells them nothing. When they see blood on a tree branch nearby, they head off in that direction. Sergei leaves one man behind, but tells him to let Banks bleed to death.

Down in the lab, Abby replays the audio of the missile hitting the helicopter tail. She's in a high state of Abby agitation. Ellie tells Abby the statistics of surviving a helicopter crash are actually pretty good, near 2 out of 3.

Abby played the audio of the missile for her Marine anti-aircraft gunner friend in Kuwait. He identified it as a 9K 32 Strella 2 surface to air missile. A huge cache of Strella 2s were stolen from Libyans two years ago and the suspects were Russian mercenaries.

Back at the crash site, the mercenary is getting creepy on Banks and Gibbs comes out of the woods and kills him quietly. Gibbs goes back to Kevin, demanding to know what info he has.

Banks it looking worse by the minute.

At NCIS, Ducky comes from talking to Kevin's sister, who lives in Buffalo and knew nothing about her brother's trip to Russia or her uncle's passing. Ducky called the Embassy and changed the shipment of Kevin's uncle's body from a funeral home near Kevin's house to his own morgue. Palmer is on the way to the airport to pick it up.

At the crash site, Gibbs sits with Banks the tries to keep her talking, but she slips away. When Sergei radios his dead mercenary, Gibbs, McGee and Kevin start packing up to trek to Finland. McGee thinks he might be able to get a signal with the merc's sat phone if the reach higher ground.

Down in the morgue over Edgar Hussein's body, they are all surprised to find two bullet wounds in the body. The x-rays reveal a micro SD card in his chest.

Out in the woods, Gibbs withholds water from Kevin until he talks. He tells them about being approached by Sergei for help getting something that's "kind of a weapon." He agreed to help with his uncle's medical bills for cancer. But then he backed out of the deal and when he went to visit his uncle, he found him shot to death. Kevin explains the weapon is in his uncle - a computer virus that could de-activate defense systems. Worse, it's a prototype and he's the only one who can deactivate it. But he thinks there's no risk because he's the only one who can sign for his uncle's body.

McGee and Gibbs know better and expect Abby has it already.

She does. But she's plugging it into an isolate laptop inside a cage to protect its signal from the rest of their system. There are two folders, one with a shark and one with a kitten. She debates which to click, first building a virus scanner and firewall. Then she clicks on the kitty. The virus blows through her firewall and spreads through the lab.

McGee gets a signal on a hill and reaches Tony. They warn them not to plug in the disk, but it's too late. Gibbs tells them they're being pursued and McGee starts to give their coordinates when the mercenaries start firing. They hit the satellite phone and Kevin's leg.

With the coordinates, Vance OKs Tony heading out to find them. While McGee patches up Kevin, Gibbs takes sniper aim at an exposed mercenary. Gibbs hits him and they run.

Late at night, they stop to build a fire. Without warning him, McGee puts a stick in Kevin's mouth for him to bite down on and Gibbs heats a knife in the fire and then uses the broad side of the blade to cauterize Kevin's wound. Then Gibbs puts branches on the fire to make smoke and attract the mercenaries.

Back in the NCIS lab, Abby does magic computer stuff to try to slow down the virus.

In the woods, Sergei and his men close in on the position of the fire. They open fire on the three blankets left as decoys.

Back at the road, Gibbs tosses a grenade under Sergei's SUV, exploding it. Gibbs, McGee and Kevin continue toward Finland on foot.

At NCIS, Ellie husband has hooked her up with the NSA satellite feed of Russia. She punches in the coordinates of the crash and as they pan west, they see the exploded SUV and three men pursuing three other men, one of whom is wounded.

In the woods, Gibbs tells McGee and Kevin to keep going while he stays back to slow the mercenaries. Duckie, Ellie and Vance see him split off on the satellite. In the dark, Gibbs easily picks off two mercenaries with his sniper rifle. Then when that is out, he switches to a handgun.

He finds Sergei on the road and is preparing to fire at him from a distance when a truck pulls up and Tony jumps out, telling him to get in. When Sergei raises his gun to fire, Gibbs fires first, hitting him. The truck drives off, leaving Sergei lying by the side of the road. McGee and Kevin are in it.

Back in Gibbs' basement, Vance drops by. It will take weeks for Abby to clean up the virus and Kevin is looking at serious jail time.

Vance tells Gibbs about Sergei's connection to Ari and his vendetta against NCIS. Worse, their intel indicates that Sergei survived. Vance expects he'll be coming for NCIS.

"Not if we find him first," Gibbs says.

Production Code: 12002
Summary: A Navy lieutenant is murdered on his way to a private meeting with the President. The NCIS team try to determine if the death was part of a recent series of muggings in the area or if it was a targeted hit to keep intelligence secrets.

A dad and his pre-teen daughter take lots of pictures on their sightseeing tour of DC. When they pause near bushes in the ellipse near the White House, the daughter finds a Naval officer's hat. The dad peers into the bushes and sees the dead officer lying there.

Back at NCIS, Ellie and Tony take down the most wanted photo of Benham Parsa and put up Sergei Mishnev. McGee comes in exhausted from his 3 a.m. video chat with Delilah. Then Gibbs is in for the body of the week.

At the crime scene, a DC park police sergeant Burt Moore tell Gibbs there have been five muggings in the area in the last week. The mugger carried a knife but was very polite. Sgt. Moore mentions a photo a tourist took that shows the back of the mugger's head and Gibbs asks him to send it to Abby.

The victim is Lt. Cmdr. Edward Wallace. His wallet and watch are missing. Duckie says Wallace was stabbed by a large knife two hours ago. The victim's phone rings from a secure number. The caller is the President.

Later back at the office, Gibbs comes from visiting the President with Vance. Wallace shadowed the president for four years as an aide. He played in a pick-up basketball game at the White house every week. Last night he called the president to ask for a minute of his time, but then didn't show for breakfast, the president called him.

Time for victim rundown. After leaving the White House, Wallace was assistant director of policy and plans for the Navy.

Ellie brings Sgt. Moore down to Abby's lab. He's mesmerized by her neck tattoo then shows her his own grim reaper ink – she recognizes the artist. Abby looks at the photo of the fleeing mugger and sees that he's reflected in the Vietnam War Memorial. She asks Moore for the digital file.

Wallace's widow, Trish, meets with Tony and McGee. She admits she hasn't seen Wallace in a few weeks because of a trial separation, but she says they were working things out. Ned was staying on his yacht. She says the watch he was wearing was priceless. His maternal grandmother was an heiress.

In the morgue, Duckie says the murder weapon was a tactical knife. The mugger was left handed and about the same height as the victim. As Gibbs is leaving, Vance comes down to ask Duckie about something on a disc.

McGee is shocked that Tony believes the widow. Ellie reports Wallace's phone records show calls from a woman named Courtney Reed, who works at a tech consulting company called Colford-Webb. It was founded by a former CIA officer named Richard Colford.

Down in the lab, Abby is on the phone with McGee so a very impressed Sgt. Moore tells Gibbs that Abby was able to get a name for the mugger from his sharpened reflection run through facial recognition. His name's Nicholas Dunne. Gibbs answers Moore before he can ask, telling him Abby is available.

Dunne reports that Dunne is a student at John Hamilton University. Gibbs and McGee go visit him during field hockey practice. Dunne is a Criminology major and doesn't want to go with them, until they mention the murder. He admits to the muggings but lets them search his backpack to prove he didn't kill anyone. The knife is a rubber training knife.

Later that night, Vance stops by Gibbs' basement. Vance says he's recently been in for tests but his doctor thinks it might be advanced stage lymphoma. He's having a CT scan tomorrow. Vance admits he's scared.

Duckie had to admit it didn't look good. Vance is worried about his kids.

At NCIS the next morning, Abby races up to escort Sgt. Moore to take a statement from Nicholas Dunne.

McGee reports the Wallaces had a prenuptial agreement, giving her a lot in the event of his death.

Gibbs wants more info on former Navy Lt. Courtney Reed, who went to school with Wallace. She's not at her apartment, called in sick to work and isn't answering her phone. They put a BOLO out on her.

Tony takes Ellie to search Wallace's yacht. Gibbs sends McGee to the Pentagon to talk to Wallace's CO.

On Wallace's boat, Tony finds pictures of Trish Wallace hidden in drawers. She has short hair, but Ellie found a hair band and shampoo for a blonde, like Courtney Reed.

At NCIS, McGee reports that Wallace's CO said he was well-liked and didn't have high clearance. McGee gets a call from Delilah but doesn't answer, which Gibbs finds odd.

Down in the lab, Abby reports finding a draft of divorce papers on Wallace's computer. She confirmed Reed's fingerprints were all over the boat.

They get called into MTAC where Marge Fields, the Harford County Sheriff, reports they found Reed's car crashed into a river. The window was smashed, so she got out, but they haven't found her.

Up in Vance's office, he tells Duckie that a thoracic surgeon reviewed his CT scan and said it looks like lymphoma. Vance is having surgery for a biopsy tomorrow. The surgeon asked Vance if he had his life in order. Vance says he doesn't – he hasn't redone his will or determined a caregiver for his children.

At Courtney's office, her boss Bryce Tolson speaks highly of her work with the government intelligence agencies they work for. Richard Colford, the CEO, joins them. He agrees to let NCIS look over Courtney's files as soon as they get proper clearance.

Vance remembers back to happier times with his whole family. Vance's nanny Lara comes by his office, at his request. He asks her to watch the kids while he's in the hospital for a few days. He's going to tell them tonight that he's been called away on business.

McGee escorts Trish Wallace to interrogation, where Tony shows her the draft of the divorce papers and asks about Courtney Reed. Trish knows her name as an old girlfriend of her husband. McGee mentions the prenup and asks Trish for her alibi. She asks for a lawyer and leaves.

In the office, Special Agent Tony Francis (Tony Gonzalez) stops to ask Ellie about working for Gibbs, the "hard ass." Naturally, he is busted by Gibbs standing right behind him. "Don't you have some place else to be, Francis?" Gibbs says. (Yes, on the CBS Sunday NFL pregame.)

Ellie tells Gibbs she found a credit card charge on Wallace's account for the night before he was killed, an Annapolis hotel room under the name Regina Lambert. Tony recognizes the name as Audrey Hepburn's character from "Charade." A woman using that name and fitting Courtney Reed's description checked into the hotel two nights ago.

Tony hears McGee's phone ringing with a video chat from Delilah. With McGee escorting Trish out of the building, Tony answers and gets an eyeful of naked Delilah.

Gibbs sends Tony and McGee to the hotel, where they see Courtney outside. She runs when she sees them but after a good amount of chasing, they catch her. She screams at anyone nearby to call the police.

She doesn't believe Tony and McGee are really with NCIS. She didn't know Wallace was dead.

Back at NCIS, Duckie shows her Wallace's body. She says she and Wallace were going to get married.

Up in the conference room, she tells the team that she discovered Colford-Webb's security had a flaw that any hacker could exploit, revealing government secrets. She told her boss, Bryce Tolson, who wanted to cover it up. So she told Colford, who assured her he'd fix it. The company would lose billions if it was exposed.

Tolson started excluding her from meetings and she thought she was being followed. Then she made her "tragic mistake" of calling Wallace from her work phone, which must have been bugged. She was on her way to her parents' cabin, at his suggestion, when a car ran her off the road.

She barely made it out and to the hotel room, where she called Ned and he told her he'd speak to the president.

At Colford-Webb, Gibbs confronts Bryce Tolson and notices he's left handed. He arrests him.

Back in the office, Tony apologizes profusely to Delilah.

When Abby wanders by, she's not sure why she hasn't gone out with the park ranger yet. She wonders why Duckie and Gibbs aren't around.

At the hospital, Lara brings Vance's daughter Kayla by. Duckie talks to Vance's surgeon then happily reports that Vance doesn't have cancer, but sarcoidosis, which mimics cancer on x-rays. He probably won't even need treatment.

Kayla goes in to see her dad. She overheard Lara on the phone with Duckie. Assures her dad she can handle it. Gibbs promises to look out for Vance at work.

Summary: Ducky returns to London after a case reveals a connection to his estranged childhood best friend. Agent Bishop accompanies him on the trip, and they interview his friend's family and coworkers. Meanwhile, Ducky recalls the choices he made in the past and the impact they've had on his adult life.

In his car on the road, a British man talks to someone on the phone, assuring them he hasn't been followed. But off in the distance, a man in a ski mask sees the car approaching and takes aim with a bazooka. He blasts the Brit.

In the office, Ellie and Tony give Abby the complete rundown on her hot park ranger crush, Burton Moore. He's from Wisconsin, was in the Peace Corps and likes the hobbits. McGee busts them. They hid it from him because his overprotective big brother routine is getting old.

Gibbs joins them for the body of the week, the car blast in Virginia.

On the scene, NCIS was called because there was a box containing troop deployment orders. The car was rented by Angus Clark. Duckie realizes he knew him Angus was Duckie's best friend growing up.

Back at NCIS, Duckie waits outside the morgue. He hasn't seen Angus in ages, but has incredibly fond memories of playing tag with Angus. He's determined to do the autopsy. Palmer tries to loosen him up with a joke. (What happens when frogs park illegally? They get toad.)

Duckie looks at the x-rays and gets excited. His Angus had his two front teeth knocked out in a fight and had implants and the body on the slab has his original teeth. Duckie is sure he's the one who knocked them out.

Flash back to a very young Duckie in a train station, 30 days away from reporting to basic training for Royal Army Medical Corps. His pal Angus meets him, but Duckie is suspicious when he suggests a stop somewhere on the way to a drink, thinking Angus is planning a surprise party. Angus reveals he knew he couldn't get that past Duckie, so he whistles and all of Duckie's friends come out at the station.

Back at the lab, Abby tells Gibbs the bazooka was an AT4 Anti-tank weapon. She also found that NCIS was programmed into the car's GPS and he had dossiers on three naval officers all of whom are dead of natural causes or accidents. Abby gets a hit in the DNA database. He's Samuel Culpepper, who works for Angus. They were both in town recently but Angus went home three days ago, but he hasn't been heard from since.

Gibbs orders McGee to look into the three deaths. He sends Ellie to England, and then reminds Duckie he has all of his unused vacation time.

Duckie remembers the last time he saw Angus when he punched him in the mouth at his own going away party.

In London, they're met by Angus's personal assistant, Gareth Godfrey. He won't let them search Angus's office, per his boss's standing orders, but Angus's estranged wife Maggie Clarke (Alice Krige) intervenes. Duckie knows her.

At Duckie's going away party (where everyone knows him as Donnie), Maggie presents Duckie with his going away present: a bowtie. Duckie scoffs, asks if he looks like the type. Angus got him an engraved scalpel. Duckie doesn't expect to need it in obstetrics. He had wanted to be a heart surgeon, but he's had enough of cadavers.

Duckie clearly has the hots for Maggie.

Back in the present, Ellie and Duckie search Angus's private office. It has a bed and is clearly where he's been staying. Ellie finds a deleted email to Culpepper on Angus's computer, sent the day he was killed. It has the files of the dead sailors attached. They're interrupted by a half-naked woman running out of the bathroom.

Back in DC, Gibbs and Tony track down a businessman named Peter Velo, who's angering a business owner by trying to buy him out of bankruptcy for an equity stake. Velo met with Angus five days ago. They had past business and after Velo moved to the US two months ago he asked Angus to fly out and consider opening a hotel here.

After they tell him about Culpepper, he remembers Angus was really mad at him.

Down in the lab, Abby has found something fishy in each of the three deaths, showing they weren't accidents. Checking the forwarded email from Ellie, they find the other two dying under suspicious circumstances and that one is still alive.

Gibbs and McGee find Navy Commander Zachary Bucket out for a jog. He's skeptical that someone is out to kill him, but when he takes a swig of his water, he starts coughing uncontrollably.

In London, Duckie gets word that Bucket had an allergic reaction to something but is recovering in the hospital. Ellie talked to the half-naked woman, who says she's just an employee who was staying in the office and wasn't seeing Angus.

Maggie joins them to look at the photos of sailors. Sensing the chemistry and tension between Maggie and Duckie, Ellie makes an excuse to leave.

Duckie remembers the end of the night of his going away party. He invites her on his trip tomorrow, showing he has two tickets. She says she has something to tell her, but then he confesses he loves her. She asks why he didn't say something sooner. He kisses her and she lets him, until Angus walks in.

Maggie tells Duckie they were going to tell him. Angus is drunk and is insulted. He demands Maggie choose between them, but she runs off. When Angus realizes Duckie is in love with her, he says he doesn't care and Maggie is nothing but a cheap floozy.

That's when Duckie decks him. Angus tackles him through a table onto the floor.

Back in London, Maggie explains that she ended up with Angus when Duckie left and didn't come back.

Back in NCIS, Tony and McGee explain that in each case, after the sailor died an Albanian-American was assigned to take over their duties. The possibility of that happening by chance are less than 1 in 10,000.

Gibbs gets a call from Ellie police found Angus at the bottom of a river.

Duckie goes to break the news to Maggie and sees that Angus kept his going away present scalpel. Maggie says that, despite 45 years of marriage, they were only meant to be great friends. The last few years they barely spoke to each other. Maggie goes to break the news to Angus staff, but finds Gareth standing outside her door.

Tony talks to Navy Chief Petty Officer Refet Ramadani who is cocky and uncooperative, like the other five replacements.

McGee found that all the Albanians listed the same emergency contact, an Albanian assassin with ties to the Albanian mob. Interpol says hes now living in the UK as Gareth Godfrey.

Hes still free because no one lived to testify against him. He was sent to the UK to smuggle weapons, including the kind that blew up Culpepper. A large amount of them went missing from the Joint Munitions Command, where one of the Albanian replacements runs the department. Theyre operating a smuggling ring after Gareth took out all the sailors.

Gibbs calls Duckie after Palmer mentions that Gareth was Angus assistant. In a room with Gareth and Maggie, Duckie takes the call. When he hangs up, he tries to excuse himself, but Gareth pulls a knife.

Back at NCIS, Gibbs calls Ellie to tell her to get to Duckie ASAP. Tony calls whatever law enforcement he can over there.

Duckie grabs the scalpel but Gareth merely taunts him. When Gareth gets close enough, Duckie slices quickly inside Gareths upper arm. Gareth seems unaffected until he starts to get woozy. Duckie explains he nicks his brachial artery and Gareth will be dead in 90 seconds. As Gareth slumps into a chair, Duckie refuses to help until Gareth explains they were running a prostitution ring out of one of Gareths hotels by threatening to kill Maggie.

Angus had hoped to get word to NCIS, but they found out. Duckie lets Gareth continue to bleed until he reveals who was in charge of the ring.

Back in DC, Gibbs and Tony go to meet Peter Velo. After looking at the chemicals the crew smuggled off a Navy base, they think hes expanding into cooking meth.

Back in London, Duckie is ready to leave town without saying good-bye to Maggie again.

He remembers back to waiting for her at the train station the day after his party, wearing his bowtie. His heart leaps when he sees her arrive, but then crashes when he sees the look on her face. He leaves without talking to her.

Back in London, Maggie tells him she chose the wrong man. When she asks him why he never married, he tells her about Gibbs losing his soul mate and nearly wrecking his life marrying the wrong woman over and over. Duckie chose to skip that part. He reveals that he still has the train tickets from that day. They both enjoy finally being near each other.

Summary: The NCIS team is assigned to a joint terrorism task force by the Secretary of the Navy after a Naval research scientist is murdered and the chief suspect is wanted by the Russian government. Gibbs and DiNozzo run interference with task force leader Leia Pendergast.

Two beat cops find a woman sitting on a park bench after dark. Upon closer inspection, they find she's been strangled by a wire. They also find she's still alive, but she warns them not to touch her. Her badge identifies her as Sofia Glazman, a laboratory researcher.

At the office, Tony and McGee read a sex tips article in a magazine. Ellie joins them and points out that as a married person she probably has more sex than the two of them combined. They're interrupted by Gibbs with the victim of the week – a Navy research scientist. She's still alive.

But at the scene, they learn that's not true. The beat cops explain the woman didn't want to be moved, but they couldn't get the wire off. The EMTs got her into the ambulance, but no one saw the device.

At the ambulance, Gibbs is surprised to see two body bags. Glanzman's head is laying on the floor of the ambulance, standard procedure requires a severed head go in its own bag. Tony finds a mechanized garrote (from the movie "The Counselor") which just keeps tightening until it lops the victim's head off. There's no timer or remote, it just got jammed, which is why she was begging not to be moved. The jostling into the ambulance started it again. They conclude the killer was sending a message.

Back at NCIS, Ellie and McGee talk to Sofia's boss, Doctor Ishmael Havana. He wants Sofia's notes back for a test they're running tomorrow morning. They're working on using lasers for data transfer.

Sofia grew up in Moscow and Dr. Havana recruited her to work for him. He identifies Dr. Nellie Benin, Sofia's college lab partner in Russia, from a photo. She works for the Russians and she and Sofia had a professional rivalry but were best friends.

Down in the lab, Abby tells Gibbs a thin chemical residue inside the garrote caused it to jam. It was pot smoke. Abby can match the stash if they find it.

Gibbs and Tony get called to the basement of the Pentagon to meet with the Secretary of the Navy Sarah Porter (Leslie Hope) – in the men's room. Tony is there to stand guard.

Inside, Porter tells the men that a foreign embassy says it has information on Glanzman's murder.

In the hallway, a beautiful woman comes out of the women's room and sees Tony standing there. She flirts with him, but they're interrupted by the arrival of Russian Counselor Anton Pavlenko. They take turns casually assigning blame for the downed copter rescue mission until Porter calls them into the men's room.

Gibbs takes exception to Pavlenko calling it an "accident." Pavlenko says he's there to ask for help. He tells them Nellie Benin is working for Sergei Mishnev. A colleague of Benin's was found dead by a mechanical garrote a few days ago.

Benin is in DC and Pavlenko wants NCIS to help find her, in cooperation with the FBI.

Out in the hallway, Tony asks for the woman's name and number. Porter comes out and introduces her as FBI Special Agent Leia Pendergast, their partner on the case.

At NCIS, Pendergast holds their secure briefing in MTAC. She mentions that she hates "Star Wars," because her first name is Leia. Tony is still intrigued.

All she knows is the date Benin entered the country. McGee and Ellie explain that Benin appears to have been a model Russian citizen, and not someone who would turn to terrorism and murder.

Down in the lab, Pendergast meets Abby, who grills her. She's also not impressed by Leia's rabbit's food. Abby shows Leia an email from a junk account to Sofia Glazman, which mentions a meeting at a bar on the other side of the park around the time of the murder. Abby got the email off Glazman's computer and traced the junk email back to Moscow.

Back in the office, Tony is dwelling on Leia, but Ellie tells him she's just flirting with him to get closer to the investigation.

They have surveillance from the airport when Benin arrived, after a delayed flight – at the same time Glazman was killed in the park.

They get an alert about a call to Glazman's phone, from the bar beside the park. Ellie shares a theory that maybe Benin is running and trying to defect. The airport surveillance shows the Russians gave them bad info, and if she didn't kill Glazman, she probably didn't kill the man back in Moscow. She and McGee suggest the Russian could be calling her a killer because they don't want her to turn over state secrets.

Gibbs, Ellie and McGee head to the bar. Gibbs tells Tony to keep it from Leia.

At the bar, they see Nellie at the bar. McGee feels her out and quickly confirms she wants to defect. She's happy to go with them, but says she needs to use the bathroom first.

A blonde woman watches them.

Back at NCIS, Tony leads Leia on a long pointless tour of the office. When he mentions their desks are in the Stephen J. Cannell annex, she recognizes the name of the creator of the A-Team and Rockford files and realizes he's been stalling.

Back at the bar, Ellie watches over Nellie in the bathroom. The blonde woman sits unseen in a bathroom stall with the mechanical garrote in her hand. She's about to make her move when Gibbs comes in. The woman ducks out past him. As she wafts past he smells weed. He follows her but she goes out the side door and uses the garrote to close it and he can't follow her.

Back in interrogation, Nellie says she doesn't know who the woman is, but says she was working for Sergei Mishnev. She says she had never heard of Mishnev until last week when he approached her in a Russian café and offered her a job, but wouldn't say more.

She identifies the other garrote victim as her coworker Mikael, who she says Sergei also approached. The day after she got a call saying she'd be next if she didn't work for Mishnev. She reached out to her friend Sofia Glazman, not realizing she was putting her in harm's way. Nellie insists she's not a killer and wants asylum.

In Vance's office, Pavlenko confronts Sec Nav Porter about NCIS having Nellie. Vance tells Pavlenko that Nellie isn't a killer. He doesn't disagree and says he's ready to take her home.

Porter won't confirm they have her, but Pavlenko leaves expecting their full cooperation.

After he's gone, Porter calls him an ass, but says he's right that they can't cause an incident by keeping Nellie. Vance is more concerned with finding out how Pavlenko knew they had Nellie.

Tony finds Leia and asks her if she told the Russians they had Benin, which she knows would be treason. She's been assigned to protect three Russian emissaries in the last three months and the Russian Embassy specifically requested her assignment to this case. They also have $28,000 in her account from an offshore account. She's annoyed at being accused, but Tony says he believes she's not the leak but needs it explained. Leia says it's from her dad. He came into money after she turned 17 and now he sends her $28,000 every year because of some sort of tax benefit. Tony recognizes her challenging relationship with her father.

Leia cuts things off to go get Nellie.

Vance and Gibbs escort her to Leia's car. Nellie protests that the Russians will kill her if they turn her over, but Vance says there's nothing they can do. He puts her in the car with Leia and they drive off.

Ellie comes down with an ID of the Russian hit woman, Renata Atal. She thinks that because they can identify the threat they can keep Nellie to protect her. Instead, Gibbs tells her to send the information to McGee and Tony.

On the road with Nellie, Leia tells her she understands her situation, but can't risk starting a war over her. Leia notices a black SUV closing in on them and pulls into a parking garage. She gets a call from Tony, who was following the SUV. He tells her to stay in the car.

Renata pulls up to Leia's car, but peels out when she sees Tony. She tries to drive off, but Tony and McGee stop her. They order her out of the car, telling her it's over. She says "I know," then grabs a garrote from the seat next to her, slips it around her neck and essentially cuts off her own head. Nellie has just one question: "How did this woman know I was being transferred?"

Back at the office, they still don't have enough evidence to connect Pavlenko – the only one outside the office who knew Nellie was being transferred – to the hit woman or Mishnev. Renata's SUV is in the garage and both parts of her are with Duckie.

Gibbs goes to the morgue with Leia, hoping for information on Renata's employer. Duckie doesn't have any. Abby joins them and reports the weed residue on the garrote matched the other two. She doesn't have anything from the car yet. Sec Nav Porter joins them and announces they're out of time, they have to turn over Benin.

Gibbs goes to the carport, where Pavlenko is waiting to take Nellie himself. Gibbs tells him to tell Sergei he said hi, then accuses him of continuing to lie.

When Leia brings Nellie down, Nellie gets anxious when she sees Pavlenko. She protests then suddenly she grabs Leia's gun from her holster and aims at Pavlenko. Gibbs and Tony draw, but Gibbs tells Tony to stand down. Tony doesn't understand, but listens.

Gibbs speaks to Benin in Russian telling her this isn't the answer. As he's trying to calm her down, Leia grabs her back-up weapon and shoots Leia twice in the chest. Gibbs checks on her. She's dead. Pavlenko is shaken and says it didn't have to end this way, but he'll tell Moscow that the Americans were a big help.

He gets in his car and leaves.

Later, McGee and Ellie photograph the crime scene. Nellie's body has been cleared. Sec Nav Porter comes down, furious about what happened. Gibbs remains calm. When McGee gets a call that Pavlenko is no longer in the Navy yard, Gibbs goes to the ambulance and shows a fully alive Benin inside.

"You said give the Russians what they wanted. We did," Gibbs says.

Tony talks to Leia, incredulous that she and Gibbs faked Benin's death without telling him. It was her one condition for going along with the plan. They flirt/argue over who's better at their job. He asks for her number again, but she points out he's the detective and can find it.

After she leaves, Ellie points out that Gibbs would never leave Tony out of the loop on something like this. He didn't.

"Then why fight with her?" Ellie asks.

"She fights back. I have a type," Tony says.

Production Code: 12005
Summary: Gibbs spots a dead man in the water during a joint Coast Guard and NCIS training exercise at sea. The investigation reveals the man is a missing crew member from a ship 60 nautical miles away. Upon boarding the ship for questioning, Gibbs discovers the vessel has been commandeered by pirates.

Open with Ellie Bishop sneaking through a Navy ship cautiously with her gun drawn. She radios that she's tracked the final suspect to her location. When she goes in, she orders the suspect to put his hands up. He doesn't and she's jumped from behind. Then Gibbs removes his mask and announces Ellie is dead.

Later, Ellie is bummed she failed the training exercise. Coast guard agent Abigail Borin is aboard and asks Tony about Lead Pendergast, a friend of hers. He says it was a dalliance, but didn't work out.

Tony tells Ellie she did fine on the test, but needs to worry less about procedure and more about her instincts next time.

Up on deck, Gibbs is staring out into the water when Borin joins him. They both yell "man overboard!"

Later, the victim is hauled on deck, already dead. He's a civilian named Joe Willis from the crew of the San Dominick. Gibbs asks Ellie what she can learn from the body. He hasn't been floating in the water long and she thinks the cut on his head was from a fight.

In the ship's command center, Borin reports that the San Dominick isn't answering its radio and is far off course. Gibbs orders Ellie back to NCIS while the ship goes after the San Dominick.

Back at NCIS, McGee has background on Joe Willis. He served 15 years in the Navy and is working as an armed guard on the cargo ship. Ellie is still beating herself up over the test so McGee tells her it's designed to be unpassable, like the Kobiyashi Maru from "Star Trek." Well, except Gibbs passed.

The Navy cruiser pulls over the San Dominick, where Gibbs and Borin are greeted by the affable First Mate James Meyer. He tells them the captain is busy. He says they went off course to avoid the bad weather and the radio is on the fritz. He doesn't know anything about Joe Willis being missing, so they show him a picture of Willis' body.

Below deck, Gibbs and Borin meet with the captain Tom O'Rourke, who doesn't want to lose time to help with their investigation. Then he collapses and Borin sees he's been stabbed.

In the morgue, Duckie confirms that Willis drowned, but not in the ocean. He also says the victim is not Joe Willis – the dead man had a medical condition that would have kept him out of the Navy and Joe served.

Back aboard the ship, Meyer shows Gibbs and another crewmember, who follows them closely, to the radio room. They find blood everywhere and a post-it with numbers on it. When Gibbs bends over to look at it, he takes note of the shifty crew members shoes. He also sees the radio has been sabotaged. Then he orders the man out of the room so he can talk to Meyer alone.

Alone with Meyer, Gibbs confronts Meyer about the fact that Ronaldo isn't wearing the proper steel-toed footwear and demands to know what's going on.

Back on the Navy ship, where Borin returned with the wounded captain, Abby calls and tells them the victim is actually a Venezuelan named Ernesto Alandro who is wanted in five countries for piracy. She emailed them a list of all his known associates. Borin recognizes Renaldo.

Tony radios the information to Gibbs, but before he can answer, Renaldo busts in holding a Navy petty officer hostage.

Tony and Borin conference with Ellie and McGee, who tell them Ernesto got aboard the San Dominick by impersonating Willis, who was last seen at a bar in Norfolk 10 days ago.

Ellie relays an Interpol report about Ernesto's last piracy two years ago – when he took captain Tom O'Rourke hostage for two weeks. Tony signs off by telling McGee he's in charge.

With Renaldo and two other armed men standing over them, Gibbs asks Meyer for information. There are 12 crew and six or seven pirates. The crew is being held in the mess deck. Gibbs tries to help Petty Officer Patricia Felton stop the bleeding from where Renaldo cracked her in the head and also keeps her calm. When Renaldo sees, he rips the handkerchief away. Gibbs ignores him and reapplies it, telling Renaldo he's in over his head and should answer the radio, get his money and get off the ship.

Renaldo radios Tony demanding $10 million within an hour.

At Joe Willis' apartment, McGee and Ellie find it empty, trashed and stinky. They find boxes of ammo and fake ship IDs. They also find Joe Willis dead in the bath tub.

With O'Rourke strapped to a gurney aboard the Navy ship, Tony talks to him before the medivac helicopter takes him. He asks for his chewing tobacco, but Tony says it's in evidence. O'Rourke says he recognized Ernesto Alandro immediately and tried to stop him. After the crew was locked up in the mess, when O'Rourke was alone with him in the radio room, he attacked Alandro and threw his body overboard, hoping someone would find the body.

With the ransom hour up, Borin radios Renaldo and tries to stall him, but he sees through it. Renaldo hangs up and yanks Felton to her feet Meyer tries to stop him, then Gibbs stands up and volunteers to take her place.

Tony radios Renaldo again, saying they will have the money in 30 minutes. Borin is on the satellite phone trying to get any kind of bills to give them. Renaldo marches Gibbs through the bowels of the ship and tells Tony he's going to make an example of him. Gibbs finally gets tired of Renaldo and turns and attacks.

Tony and Borin hear a gunshot then wait until they hear Gibbs report that he's fine. Renaldo has a gunshot wound to his leg.

McGee visits Duckie in the morgue, where he reports that Joe Willis' body was preserved in his bathtub in chemicals to slow decomposition. He's been dead five to seven days.

Gibbs puts a tourniquet on Renaldo's leg and tells him to radio to his friends that he's fine. Renaldo says they were going to contact the shipping company for ransom but when O'Rourke's fight with Alandro destroyed the radio, their plan went to hell.

Gibbs tightens Renaldo's tourniquet to get the location of the sixth hijacker on board.

Back at NCIS, Ellie has found tons of encrypted emails with shipping times and petty cash drops on Alandro's laptop, showing the operation was clearly carefully planned and financed.

McGee comes down to visit Abby doing his best Gibbs impression. She's trying to ID eight different DNA samples and says Willis was stored in dead animal deodorizer.

Back on the Navy ship, Borin and Tony look at the matches to several of the hijackers, whom Tony says look like members of an evil boy band. They're all small time criminals, but someone smuggled them into the country and made them fake IDs. Borin thinks they're missing something.

In the office, Ellie tells McGee she traced the encrypted emails to a Kinko's outside Norfolk.

Abby comes up to report she knows what the numbers found at the crime scene mean. It's a locator number for a shipping container on the San Dominick, owned by LCD Liquidated, a shell company that ships out of the US to countries with loose banking laws. They're being investigated for laundering money.

McGee cites Rule 70: "Keep digging until you hit bottom." Abby points out to "McGibbs" that there is no Rule 70 and the power has gone to his head.

Renaldo marches Gibbs into the mess hall, where Renaldo calls his fellow hijacker over. Once he's nearby, Gibbs pulls his gun and disarms the man. Meyers tells Gibbs the hijackers took Felton.

Renaldo shows Gibbs to the container his man was supposed to be guarding. They find it empty and Gibbs finds a sophisticated bomb hidden in the doorway.

Gibbs hears a noise and turns to see another hijacker holding Felton hostage with a gun to her head. Renaldo clarifies that the bomb is not theirs.

It's counting down past three minutes. Gibbs says he'll disarm it if the hijacker lets Felton go. In Spanish, Renaldo tells Jaime not to trust Gibbs.

Tony and Borin join them in the cargo hold and also draw on Jaime. Borin tells them there was no mention of the escape boat Renaldo is expecting in the operational plans they found. Gibbs explains that they were set up to take the fall and the money was never on the boat.

With the counter down past 1 minute, Jaime still won't surrender. Gibbs offers to shoot him, or just go straight to diffusing the bomb. With 30 second left, Jaime finally surrenders. Gibbs walks away from the bomb to cuff Jaime, letting it count down to zero.

Nothing happens. Then Gibbs reveals the wire he pulled when he first saw the bomb. Borin punches him in the shoulder.

Tony looks inside the shipping container and sees chewing tobacco.

Back on land, Tony and Borin catch up to O'Rourke as he's checking on stacks of bills in the back of his truck. They explain they matched his DNA in the chewing tobacco found in the shipping container, and found video surveillance of him buying tons of dead animal deodorizer at a store two miles from the Kinkos where he sent the emails from.

When they ask if he was partners with Alandro, O'Rourke says Alandro tortured him for those 10 days when he held him hostage and he only used him to set up the hijacking, always planning to kill him.

Back at NCIS, Tony tells McGee he did a good job, not blowing anything up or causing any international incidents. Ellie reports she watched "Star Trek 2" last night and thinks she knows how Gibbs passed his exercise. She thinks Gibbs fixed it, like Captain Kirk. Tony explains to her why she won't ever get to ask Gibbs for the truth (no accusing the boss of cheating).

Left alone in the office, McGee tries on Gibbs' chair for size. Naturally, Gibbs finds him. "Really? Rule 70, McGee?" Gibbs says.

Production Code: 12006
Summary: A Navy commander's wife is murdered and NCIS must determine whether her death is linked to her profession as a therapist or an act of terrorism after finding her husband's name on a jihadist target list. Meanwhile, the team discuss Halloween costumes and Tony's recent dating habits.

Nathan Curtis and his son Ben walk a young girl named Rachel home after school. They hear screams coming from inside and Mr. Curtis goes in to see Rachel kneeling next to her dead mother's body.

Tony comes in to the office to see McGee futilely trying to convince Ellie that she has to wear a costume to Abby's Halloween party. Tony laments the couple's day it's become and that everyone will have a date. He's gone on six this month, but none of them took.

Gibbs comes in with the body of the week.

On the scene, Duckie says the victim was killed by a single shot to the back between midnight and 2 a.m. The victim is Dr. Valerie Barnes, wife of Navy Commander Ryan Barnes.

Gibbs talks to Mr. Curtis outside, who tells him he was bringing Rachel back from a sleepover because her mom had to work late. He doesn't know her father at all.

Gibbs finds Rachel outside in her elaborate fort, with her mother's blood still on her hands. She's worried about where her dad is and doesn't want to leave her fort, in case the people trying to kill her dad come back.

Back in the office, Tony and McGee reject all of Ellie's cliché couple costume ideas.

Gibbs comes in for the victim rundown. Valerie Barnes worked at a counseling center. Ryan Barnes has been on survival training and he's a highly decorated SEAL.

McGee runs a search and finds that Barnes participated in the raid on Benham Parsa and, after his identity was accidentally leaked, he's now listed as a target on a jihadist website.

Down in the lab, Ellie, McGee and Abby have tracked the jihadist web IP address to Dorian Hobart, who who lives in Maryland and was dishonorably discharged from the army. They cook up a cover ID for McGee to send Hobart a message through his website to see if he'll bite.

Gibbs takes popcorn and hot chocolate to Rachel in the conference room. He gently tells her about his own mother dying when he was about her age. She's mad at her mom for not being on alert against the bad guys like her dad taught them. She wants to go back to her fort safe place. But Gibbs has brought all of the essential fort building materials to make a new one.

Down in the morgue, Duckie tells Tony that Valerie died instantly. He also found a ten year old fracture to her cheekbone that isn't in her medical record.

After Hobart responds to McGee, they head to a park to meet him. Tony leads Ellie through yoga poses as they watch Hobart join McGee on a park bench. When Hobart takes McGee's sample detonator, Gibbs gives the signal to converge.

But before they can arrest Hobart, a woman tackles McGee to the ground and Hobart pulls a gun. As everyone is trying to figure out what's going on, the woman recognizes Tony as "Spider." She's Zoe Keats and used to be with Philly PD, but is now with ATF. "Hobart" is one of their agents acting as a decoy.

She tells them Hobart couldn't be their killer because they've had him in custody for two months. They didn't take down his hit list website because they wanted to maintain authenticity. When Keats says they would have acted if anyone was in danger, Gibbs points out that Valerie Barnes is dead.

Keats gets defensive but insists a .38 to the back is too quiet for terrorists.

Tony and Keats flirt as they remember being rookies together in Philly.

Back in the NCIS morgue, Ryan Barnes IDs his wife's body. Barnes thinks his job is to blame, but Gibbs says it might not be related. Barnes can't think of any threats to his wife, mentioning that he's gone ten months of the year.

Down in the lab, Ellie, Abby and McGee conspire to try to get Tony together with Keats.

Gibbs sees Ryan and Rachel Barnes to the elevator.

Tony has answers about Rachel Barnes' facial fracture. She was beaten up by famed serial killer and cannibal George Burton (Bronson Pinchot), when working as a prison psychiatrist.

Burton is serving a life sentence, but Valerie visited him two weeks ago.

Tony and McGee pay Burton a visit. As soon as he learns they're from NCIS, he assumes Valerie is dead. He says she's one of the few people he respected. He explains that he beat her up ten years ago because he thought a "little outburst" would help his insanity plea. He insists he could have killed her if he wanted to.

He tells them Valerie came to see him because she had another patient kind of like him, a sociopath. He says she was scared, more scared than she ever was of him.

Back at NCIS, Ellie and McGee come up with nothing while going through Valerie's patient files. Zoey Keats comes by with coffee and a peace offering bran muffin for McGee. When they catch her up on the patients, she suggests they look at the ones flying under the radar.

Ellie asks Keats her thoughts on classic movie marathons and home cooked Italian food, and Keats thinks she's asking her out.

Down in the lab, Tony responds to Abby's 911 page. She seals the doors and tells him it's time to talk about Ziva leaving. She tells him it's time for him to face the fact she's gone. He says the truth is he misses his friend.

Abby gets an alert on her 3D rendering of the pieced-together bullet. It was already in the system from an accidental discharge at a private residence. The gun is registered to Nathan Curtis.

In interrogation, he tells them that the accidental discharge was actual him attempting to kill himself when he was depressed after leaving the Corps. He went to Valerie for help and she referred him to a colleague. He gave her the gun for safe keeping because he didn't trust himself with it.

McGee brings up an argument people saw them having outside the school. He says he thought something odd was going on with Ryan and Valerie and after he saw bruises on Rachel, he confronted Valerie, but she insisted he had it all wrong.

Ellie pulls Gibbs into the hall to report that Ryan Barnes was on a training mission 12 miles from his own house and no one saw him between 11 p.m. and 3 a.m.

Ellie and Tony go to the hotel where Ryan and Rachel are staying. They hear a TV on inside and go in, but the room is empty and looks untouched. "Ryan played us, he's gone," Tony says.

Back at NCIS, they put a BOLO out on Ryan Barnes and track Rachel's cell phone to a rest stop. Ryan is sitting next to Rachel on a bench. He surrenders, confessing that he killed his wife. He apologizes to his daughter as she sobs.

Late at night, Gibbs is bothered by the case and visits Duckie. He's been going over Rachel's files and finds she was the victim of severe abuse. Gibbs notices the hospital report dates are all while Ryan Barnes was gone.

He remembers what Burton said about sociopaths going to any lengths to get what they want. Valerie knew the warning signs but still covered up whatever was going on. He thinks that means Ryan Barnes isn't their killer.

Gibbs goes back to talk to young Rachel, telling her she hasn't been honest with him. He found the murder weapon buried under her fort. "I didn't have time to bury it deeper. I needed to get back before Mr. Curtis realized I snuck out," she says.

Rachel says her mother was going to send her to a special hospital in Montana for help. She hated her. She says sometimes he'd come back when she hurt herself, but never stay as long as she wanted. So getting rid of her mother was the only solution.

"Daddy didn't understand either when I told him what I did. He'll come around eventually," she says.

A stoic Ryan Barnes watches his sociopath young daughter through the glass.

Later that night, McGee is upset to see Tony's Batman costume is a tux – he's going as Bruce Wayne. McGee has a Robin costume. "This is great, now I'm going to be the only one at the party wearing spandex," McGee says.

"Maybe not," Tony says, when he sees Ellie saunter in as Sandy at the end of "Grease." Her husband is meeting them at the party as Danny.

Tony says he has things he needs to do and will meet them there. At his desk, he sees Ziva's star of David necklace in his drawer, he puts it back and sees Zoey Keats standing nearby.

Seeing he looks rough, she asks if he's had a bad day. When he says it was a bad year, she offers to listen.

He asks why she didn't look him up if she's been in DC for five years, and she points out he left without even saying good-bye and she didn't know where he went.

He apologizes and says she deserved better.

Ducky Mallard), Sean Murray (I) (Special Agent Tim McGee), Brian Dietzen (Asst. M.E. Jimmy Palmer), Rocky Carroll (Director Leon Vance), Emily Wickersham (NSA Agent Ellie Bishop)
Guest Stars: Aaron Abrams (Todd Price), Bart McCarthy (Retired Marine Master Sergeant George Hawkins), Connor Kalopsis (Oscar), Keith Robinson (Henry Caldwell), Long Nguyen (Ky Van Tu), Nikki DeLoach (Army Lieutenant Colonel Maya Leland), Tembi Locke (Alice Kent Staley), Tyree Brown (Zak), Kyla Drew Simmons (Greta Staley)
Production Code: 12007
Summary: The NCIS team investigate the murder of a retired master sergeant and uncover a fraudulent charity that preys upon families who are searching for missing military personnel. Meanwhile, Bishop agonizes over the results of her probation evaluation; and Tony contemplates adopting a stray cat that followed him home.

Gibbs has issues in tonight's episode. One involves that gravest of sins, someone taking advantage of a Marine. The other involves a piece of haunting furniture. And Ellie Bishop gets good news that turns out to be bad news that turns out to be a reason to be angsty and make determined faces the whole hour. Finally, Tony is left to pick up the emotional pieces when his latest relationship runs out on him.

But we begin, as we always do, with the discovery of the body.

Two young boys sneak into Old Man Hawkins' garage looking for something to resell and find it full of war stuff – and also the dead body of Old Man Hawkins. Stealing is wrong, kids.

In the office, Tony shares that a cat that has made itself at home in his apartment. Ellie Bishop is scared to open her nine month probie eval from Gibbs. To help her manage her expectations, McGee tells her he got 63 out of 100, Tony got a 58.

Bishop gets an 82, and some shocked looks.

Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week. Hawkins was a retired career Marine. On the scene, he's holding dog tags in his hand belonging to Sgt. Charles J Kent, who was killed in the Vietnam War.

Back at the office, Bishop's 82 has gone to her head.

Update time. Kent was KIA in Vietnam in 1969, he was Hawkins' squad leader when they were ambushed. Kent's remains have never been found and there's no record anyone recovered his dog tags, making it quite a puzzle how they ended up in Hawkins' hands. Phone records show Hawkins has been talking to Kent's daughter, Alice Kent Staley.

In the conference room, Alice tells Gibbs that "Hawk" looked out for her ever since he came back from the war, and was focused on trying to find her dad's remains. But she didn't know he had his dog tags. Hawkins held Kent as he died and could never accept that Kent's body disappeared. Hawk was making videos about Kent for Alice's eight-year-old daughter, Greta.

Down in the morgue, Duckie tells Ellie that Hawkins was dying of pancreatic cancer. He was shot by a .38 special. Before Bishop leaves, Duckie and Palmer give her an unsolicited pep talk about her probie score – not knowing that she already knows it. They explain that Gibbs gives low scores to push people he sees have potential. And if she got a high score? "Then I'd advise you to turn in your badge," Duckie jokes.

Ellie's doubt cycle begins.

In Hawkins' garage, McGee finds Hawkins spent boatloads on search firms to find Kent's remains. Tony is distracted with thoughts of the cat he has decided to keep. And named: Rick Blaine after Bogart's character in "Casablanca" because the cat has a "fur tuxedo."

Down in the lab, Abby announces to Gibbs that the dog tag was a fake and even had the wrong blood type on it, so Hawkins would have known it was fake. The blood trail on the floor of the garage shows that Hawkins dragged himself to the table to grab the dog tag – to send them a message.

The next day, Tony is late because Rick Blaine sat on his alarm. McGee is going through the PIs, charities and for-profits that Hawkins worked with to find Kent.

Gibbs puts Ellie on finding Kent's remains, nevermind that it's a decades long fruitless search. Ellie chats with Col. Maya Leland in MTAC about a search two years ago that turned up objects, including a necklace and water bottles, but nothing related to Kent. They think the Vietcong might have moved the body.

After pouring through Hawkins' extensive collection of stuff, Abby has found a plain white envelope that contained the fake dog tags. She's traced the torn partial logo to BST travel agency, which McGee and Tony visit. When they notice handwriting matching the envelope Hawkins had, the boss, Todd Price, tells them he recently fired a guy named Henry Caldwell for stealing from petty cash. He has two convictions for fraud.

Gibbs and Bishop head to his place, but when he sees them out front he runs through the pizza shop below. Gibbs sends Bishop to cover the back, but she runs in when she hears a crash, and the distraction of falling pans lets Caldwell escape.

Back at the office, they find that Caldwell was targeting people who contacted a legit charity that helped locate MIA and KIA soldiers and claiming to have their dog tags, then asking for money. Tony and McGee leave to stake out a pharmacy where Caldwell's insulin prescription for his diabetes is waiting.

Gibbs lets Bishop off the hook about letting Caldwell go, but tells her to keep looking for Kent's remains. She's upset not to get yelled at.

Ellie watches one of Hawkins' videos down in the morgue, in which he describes Kent ordering their unit to stop and help a crying Vietnamese boy bury his parents. After a pep talk from Duckie, Ellie looks at the photo of the boy in the video and recognizes a necklace recovered on Leland's search mission two years ago.

After an all-nighter staking out the pharmacy waiting for Caldwell, Tony is despondent when he gets a call from his cleaning lady that Rick Blaine escaped. They finally see Caldwell come in.

Back at NCIS in interrogation, Caldwell turns on the charm for Gibbs but is stunned when he says Hawkins is dead. Gibbs presses and Caldwell gives up his travel agent boss, Todd Price, as his partner.

The team gets Price's revolver and Abby confirms it as the murder weapon, but Price is long gone to Vietnam. As Gibbs and Tony prepare to fly there, Ellie makes her case to go along and track down the boy from the photo with the idea he might have moved Kent's remains. She wants a chance to prove herself, asking Gibbs what else she's supposed to do when he doesn't believe in her. They get into it and she finally accuses him of going easy on her since she started.

In Vietnam, Gibbs and Tony meet with Sgt. Leland.

Back in the morgue, Abby and McGee piece together the other reason Price kept returning to Vietnam and get a location for his girlfriend.

Gibbs and Tony track down Price and arrest him.

Leland calls Gibbs to meet with Ky Van Tu, the young boy from the photo. He tells Gibbs about following Kent to thank him and seeing him killed. He got his cart and brought Kent's body back and buried him next to his parents, to honor him.

Leland and her team unearth Kent's remains and Gibbs brings the dog tags back to his daughter.

Late at night with Bishop hunkered down on the floor with her laptop, Gibbs admits to Bishop that he was going easy on her, but not why she thinks. It's about the desk. He blames himself for losing two good people who sat there. Bishop ends up giving him a pep talk, saying that the job is hard, but that doesn't mean his way of teaching is wrong. "I'm asking you to push me to be like you," she says.

"Ok, back to the old way," Gibbs says, then barks at her to get off the floor.

Sergeant Sherman T. Harper), Karl T. Wright (John Hicks), Laura Seay (Anna Dillon), Lou Ferrigno Jr. (Dave Lancellotti), Mary Lafleur (Samantha Boscarino), Sergio Enrique (Marine)
Production Code: 12008
Summary: A former Navy hospital corpsman gives aid to the victims of a wreck; local officials arrest her for practicing medicine without a license; Gibbs and company find the other driver, his killer, and a lawyer who makes a deal for the corpsman.

U.S. Park Police Sergeant Burt Moore gets a friendly interrogation from the team when he drops Abby off. When he leaves, Tony references the fact that two months with Abby is her max relationship.

Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week: A petty officer killed in a possible hit and run.

On the scene, the victim is John Hicks, home on leave. His two passengers were taken to the hospital. It looks like Hicks lost control of the car. They're puzzled by the bandages on the dead man.

Sgt. Sherman Harper with Fairfax PD explains the EMTs found Harper and his friends bandaged when they got there. A woman named Anna Dillon found them and was tending to them. She said she saw an SUV pass her and then came upon the accident, but won't say anything else without a lawyer. She's not a nurse, doctor or EMT and could be in trouble for practicing without a license.

Gibbs tests Dillon. He shouts "corpsman!" at her and she wheels around as she's being put into the police car.

Back at the office for victim and good Samaritan rundown. The passengers were Mary LeFleur and Ben Koss, high school friends of Hicks'.

Dillon was a Navy hospital corpsman, but can't legally help.

In the morgue, Duckie explains that Dillon couldn't have saved Hicks from his internal bleeding. There was no medical reason for the car to crash.

Ellie and Tony visit Ben in the hospital. He says they were run off the road, but didn't see the car. Anna Dillon saved Ben's life.

Anna Dillon served two tours in Afghanistan and saved at least 12 lives there. But the county prosecutor is charging Anna.

Gibbs goes to visit Anna. She blames herself for Hicks' dying and thinks she could have saved him. She learns the same as Army and Air Force medics and they come out as EMTs and could have legally saved those kids.

After a call from the US Attorney, Gibbs escorts Dillon out. Sgt. Harper tells them Mary LeFleur might be paralyzed and Dillon is responsible.

At his favorite diner, Gibbs meets with Carrie Clark to asks her to represent Dillon. Gibbs knows they can't win, but he wants to get the laws changed.

Down in the garage, Abby has found paint on Hicks' bumper and the five cars in the county that have it. McGee tries to convince Abby not to enforce her two month rule with Burt, but she shoes him away.

Ellie and McGee visit one of the silver truck owners, Dave Lancellotti, who discovers his truck is missing when they ask to see it. He says he was at a bar all night.

Gibbs introduces Anna Dillon to Carrie Cook.

Back at the office, Ellie and Tony report the bartender confirmed Dave's alibi. Dave is a semi-pro race car driver and his website is full of comments saying he's a hot head on the track. They find a video of Lancellotti fighting trackside with Ben Koss, the crash survivor.

Tony and Gibbs visit Ben in the hospital. He tells them about Dave bumping him during a race and making him spin out, just like the car crash.

Ellie and McGee visit Dave's part time job, a high end garage. His boss Bennett says Dave took off a few hours ago.

Back at NCIS, Ellie summons Tony and McGee for a men's room conference about Abby. McGee tells Ellie about finding a list of qualifications Abby wants in a boyfriend, including opening the door for her but also a two month cut-off and very specific requirements. Ellie wants to stop Abby from sabotaging herself but the guys caution her not to get involved.

Carrie meets with Anna and Gibbs to explain her plan to have Anna admit what she did and argue the law is flawed. Sgt. Harper joins them as they head out to the lojack location of Dave's truck. They find him dead in the driver's seat with a gunshot wound in his head and gun in his hand.

In the morgue, Duckie says Lancellotti's death was staged.

Carrie, Gibbs and Anna meet with Hicks' father to get him on Anna's side. He thanks her and agrees to do whatever he can to help Anna.

In the lab, Abby has ID'd two DNA samples on a wrench in Lancellotti's truck. One belongs to Bennett Jemaine. He was kicked out of the Navy in basic training when a petty officer found drugs in his locker and turned him in: Hicks.

The team uses their cars to block the road out of town and wait for Bennett to drive up.

In the office, they get word that Mary Lefleur is doing well.

McGee tries to convince Abby to give Burt an extension to her two month rule. Burt comes in with black roses for her and she seems to reconsider.

Anna paces nervously in Gibbs' basement, awaiting word from Carrie Cook. Carrie comes by and tells Anna all she'll have to do is community service since the victim's parents all went to bat for her. Gibbs encourages her to finish med school like she plans.

Production Code: 12009
Summary: DiNozzo, Bishop and her husband, who are stuck at Dulles airport due to inclement weather, work an NCIS case involving an elevated terrorist threat to Northeast airports during the Thanksgiving travel period.

A massive snow storm is hitting DC when a business traveler answers his motel room door and is shot dead. The shooter puts on the dead man's glasses and jewelry and heads for the airport.

At NCIS, the team minus DiNozzo finally meets Jake Malloy (Jamie Bamber), Ellie Bishop's husband. They're flying to Turks and Caicos for Thanksgiving. Tony's already at the airport to meet his father, who is flying in from London.

At the airport, Ellie thinks her husband seems on edge, but he assures her he's fine. They run into Tony at the gate. An announcement is made that all flights are delayed. Ellie goes to the counter to change seats and the shooter bumps into her. Jake confronts him for an apology. Ellie is bothered by how familiar the man looks and can't place him.

Jake tells Tony that Ellie is more suspicious since she started at NCIS, but she argues that's only because they can't talk about his job anymore now that she doesn't work at NSA with him.

Back NCIS, McGee gets an alert through the National Terrorism Alert Network about a possible terrorist strike at a northeast airport.

At the airport, Ellie makes up a reason to talk to the shooter, asking if they know each other from somewhere. He's shifty and gets away from her as quickly as possible.

Gibbs calls Tony to mention the chatter, but Jake already knows about it. Ellie is upset he didn't tell her and realizes that's why he was on edge. Then she notices the shooter is wearing an ankle holster. She decides to go ask to see his ID.

Tony and Ellie flash their badges as an airport policeman comes up. He draws on them, then asks to see the shooter's badge after they show theirs. "You're making a big mistake," he says, then takes out a badge. He says he's an air marshal named Mike Beers and they just blew his cover.

In a police room, he says no one on his Paris flight saw him show his badge, so he's OK. Tony makes a joke about needing a "Beers" and is surprised when the man doesn't get the easy joke about his last name.

Gibbs calls to check in. The threat level has been raised and it now specifically mentions DC metro airports. Tony calls McGee privately to have him look into Beers.

Ellie takes a photo of him to send to Abby. She compares it to his ID photo and finds that the man in the airport is not Mike Beers. They also find he's got an open credit card charge at a local motel.

They update Tony and Ellie, who wait for DC airport police to meet them outside the bathroom Beers just went into.

They go in with Janet Lewis of the airport police and find not-Beers dead of a stab wound in a stall. His gun is gone. Lewis gives the OK to shut down the airport.

"Great, we're snowed in here with an airport full of cranky passengers, a dead fake air marshal, and his killer on the loose somewhere with a knife and a gun. Anybody else feel like they're playing Clue?" Tony says.

Ellie sends crime scene photos to Abby. Tony, Gibbs, Duckie and Palmer find the real Beers dead in his motel room.

Ellie MacGyvers a way to lift the dead man's prints. Jake is impressed by his wife in action.

Tony and Lewis go to look at surveillance footage of the people leaving the restroom before they went in, but there's a wad of gum on the camera. Angry passengers converge on the closed bathroom and Tony tries to calm them down. A dapper doctor offers help for the "medical emergency" excuse Tony gives, but Tony declines.

Abby IDs the dead man as Norman Dopps, a gun for hire who's on their most wanted every week. But he doesn't usually work for terrorists.

Homeland Security now thinks it's an assassination attempt, but they don't know of whom. Lewis won't give them access to their security cameras, per Homeland rules. But Jake thinks he can help.

In the morgue, Duckie and Palmer examine the crime scene photos emailed by Ellie. They think it could have been a stab from a nylon knife or something that could get through security.

At the airport, Jake rigs his product placement laptop webcam to send video of the crowd to NCIS.

Tony is annoyed to see Lewis bringing out a metal detector to start searching passengers, per Homeland's orders. He worries it'll spook the gunman. Then they hear that the snow is letting up and three flights are being cleared to land, including Tony's dad's from London.

At NCIS, they comb passenger manifests for possible targets. There's Joseph McBride, a lobbyist for a chemical company. Ruth Potts, a retired school teacher who's been mouthy all evening.

Passengers begin lining up to be screened again. Tony texts his dad to stay on the plane when it lands.

At NCIS, Abby finds two Colombian agents are escorting Hector Gomez, who's wanted for the murder of a cartel leader. They start searching for anyone who could be on their connecting flight to Bogota. Gibbs notices a man with a beard who looks familiar. It's the clean shaven dapper doctor.

They send his photo to Tony and Ellie, who wait outside the gate as Hector is escorted off. Tony spots the doctor just as the target is being led off the plane and draws before the killer can. Tony shoots him dead.

Back at the office, Duckie suggests cocktails, but Abby has a suggestion first: snow angels. Gibbs agrees to one.

Production Code: 12010
Summary: The NCIS team consult with three cyber-terrorists they imprisoned after a citywide Internet shutdown the week before Christmas. Meanwhile, McGee reflects on the case and Gibbs' infamous rules as he writes a heartfelt letter to his father.

McGee sits down at his old typewriter to tell his dad about a case they had last week that made him think of his dad.

Flash back to Gibbs sitting down for dinner in front of the TV and seeing a breaking news bulletin about the Internet being shut down around DC.

Tony and Ellie report to the office, called in three hours from being officially on holiday leave. The Internet is down, but the military intranet is not.

Ellie explains the coordination the attack would require a lot. Everyone is trying to figure out what the point is.

Down in the lab, Abby and McGee have identified Krampus as the coordinator. Three people from past cases have connection to Krampus: IT Kevin, who sold secrets to the Russians; Heidi Partridge, who ran the dark net and Ajay Khan, a cyber terrorist.

McGee knows he'll be roped into talk to the tech nerds, and he quickly is.

McGee is surprised that all three prisoners are transported together. They're not impressed by his authority.

Ellie brings them all sweatpants as a peace offering. Kevin is more inclined to help his former colleagues than the other two, but they peer pressure him into clamming up. They're trying to leverage their assistance but Tony gets a call that the Internet is back up.

Abby runs a server test and finds the one in Anacostia isn't back up.

McGee writes to his dad about how hard it is to enforce the rules and feel like a bad guy.

Back in the office, they have determined Krampus is going after Congressional emails. Gibbs orders McGee to keep the hackers at the office, but not let them near computers.

They get word of a body found hooked up to a utility box at a server farm. Gibbs orders the hackers down to autopsy to try to ID the body bust mostly so Duckie can gross them out with a gory autopsy.

It gets the hackers talking and they conclude that because the dead guy died before Krampus warning went out, so he was just working for him.

McGee tells Abby that his dad's chemo stopped working and he's scheduled for surgery this week.

Typing to his dad, McGee cites more of Gibbs' rules and notes that Nos. 3, 8, 36 and 40 are the same and that there are two No. 1 and No. 3.

Back at NCIS, they find that Heidi was using an anonymous message board in prison and hooked Krampus up with hackers before the attack.

Gibbs and McGee pull Ajay into an interrogation room. They know he's trying to land a consulting job with internet security companies and offer to put in a good word if he works with them. They want him to say he stole a phone off Bishop and let Heidi use it to warm Krampus that they're going undercover online. Ajay is about to agree when someone slips a note under the door that reads: Abby says wait.

In Abby's lab, Duckie announces the hacker had a rare disease that prevented him from sleeping. They ID him from his father's medical records as Lyle.

In the office, the hackers stand handcuffed behind members of the team, leading them through creating false IDs for message boards. McGee answers a call from his sister and hangs up angry. His dad canceled his surgery and McGee is angry he's not there to convince him to go through with it.

When Heidi asks to go to the bathroom, Ajay takes the opportunity to show her the phone. But instead he double-crosses NCIS and tells Heidi what they put him up to.

Later in the office, Ellie and Abby track the records of message board chats found in Lyle's apartment and think they've ID'd Krampus as a guy working out of his parents' cabin in Wisconsin.

Gibbs is about to call in nearby SWAT when McGee suggests it seems too easy. When Gibbs wants him to show the pictures of Krampus to Heidi, McGee refuses, frustrated that Gibbs is continuing to pursue a plan he said would never work of trusting criminals.

Gibbs cites Rule 51, which they've never heard. (Sometimes you're wrong.)

They take his record to Heidi. He hacks revenge porn for hire and hack into teenage girls' cell phones. McGee tries to appeal to her good nature. She tells them where to find Krampus.

McGee writes to his dad about the importance of rules protecting them.

Later in MTAC, they watch news footage of Krampus being arrested at his parents' place in Florida.

McGee puts on a nice suit and re-reads his writing about his dad teaching him to be prepared and stand up for himself, but also be prepared to admit when you're wrong.

Back in the office, McGee talks to his dad. Gibbs sends McGee off to see him.

McGee reads his letter to his dad, in which he realizes his postponing his surgery was his dad trying to give them one last Christmas together.

Then the priest knocks on the door of the room where McGee is sitting beside his father's coffin, finishing up his letter after spending the last few days together. He thanks his dad for making him the man he is as he wipes away tears and wishes his father a Merry Christmas.

Guest Stars: Alex Veadov (International Mercenary Sergei Mishnev), Melinda McGraw (Diane Sterling), Andy Milder (Gene Isaacson), Cesili Williams (Vera), Jeri Ryan (Rebecca Chase), Lucy Walsh (Alice), Reggie Hayes (Mike Batowski), Alvin Cowan (Metro P.D. LEO)
Production Code: 12011
Summary: The NCIS team investigate a series of crime scenes that appear to be copycats of previous cases. Meanwhile, two of Gibbs' ex-wives show up at a crime scene to discuss something important with him.

A diner staff arrives at work to find a massacre inside.

At work, Ellie and Tony are having fun with a list of McGee's New Year's Resolutions (stop watching cat videos, separate whites from darks). Palmer interrupts with potentially terrifying news: Gibbs has stopped drinking coffee per his doctor's orders.

Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week: five of them.

At the diner, it looks like the victims all shot each other.

Outside, a woman is making a ruckus when the local policeman won't let her through. It's Gibbs' ex-wife Diane Sterling (Melinda McGraw). She's soon joined by another woman, Gibbs' ex-wife No. 2 Rebecca Chase (Jeri Ryan). Inside, Rebecca says they met at an "emotional dwarf support group."

Diane brought Rebecca to a crime scene to talk to Gibbs because he couldn't get away.

Back at the office, it's victim rundown time. Victim No. 1 is staff sergeant Victor Delgado, a body builder. Chief Petty Officer Bo Lorden just returned from Afghanistan. They don't seem to be connected. All of the victims have good records and all failed to report to work last week. They're also all late paying their taxes.

Down in the lab, Abby explains that the four men surrounded the female victim, who fired at each man, killing them all before succumbing to her wounds.

Abby found they all had appointments with We Got Your Back Taxes accounting firm.

Gibbs races out of the building to avoid seeing ex No. 2.

At home, he sits down with a cup of coffee and inhales deeply, but pitches it. McGee calls with an address for the accounting firm. They make plans to go there in the morning. Since Diane works at the IRS, she's coming along.

Suddenly, No. 2 joins Gibbs. She starts to yell at him for ditching her at NCIS, then calms down to talk. He offers her a drink then she explains that she quit and that's why she's there. She bottomed out about a year ago and is at the step in the program where she makes amends.

She apologizes that he caught her in bed with another man. Gibbs says OK and leaves it at that. He mentions his terrible caffeine withdrawal headache and she works on his temples. He gets lost for a moment.

In the morning, McGee and Diane walk in to find Gibbs curled around Rebecca on the couch. He says they were talking and fell asleep.

Diane shows Gibbs that someone hacked the IRS to find Navy sailors who were late paying their taxes.

Before Diane can drag Rebecca away, Rebecca gives Gibbs an invitation to her wedding.

At the office that supposedly belongs to the accounting firm, they find an empty warehouse space. The renter paid in cash and gave a fake name.

McGee notices a bullet casing and blood. They turn on their black light and find the walls are covered in blood.

In the lab, Abby IDs the blood as belonging to the diner victims. She now thinks the diner shoot-out was staged. None of the victims had gunshot residue on their hands.

Ellie gets called to another crime scene, where Master Chief Eckham Beams is lying in the street dead. He has a We Got Your Back Taxes card in his pocket.

Down in the morgue, Palmer and Duckie find the attack familiar. The murder weapon was a syringe. Gibbs realizes the scene mimics the murder of Gibbs' mentor, Mike Franks.

Abby joins them with a crime sketch from years ago, the California scene where Director Jenny Shepherd was killed. It matches the staged diner scene. Someone is recreating murders from Gibbs' past.

Back in the office, they plan to talk to all of the people who had access to the crime scene sketch of Shepherd's murder. The team gingerly points out that someone is recreating the murders of people Gibbs cared about at the same time someone else he used to care about showed up: Rebecca. He freely admits she's a liar and totally unstable, but doesn't think she's a killer.

They show him a large wire transfer to Rebecca from an off-shore account three months ago. The IP address used to hack the IRS is Rebecca's.

Gibbs talks to Rebecca in interrogation as the entire team, plus Palmer and Duckie, watches from the observation room. Rebecca's fiancé and lawyer arrives. It's the man Gibbs found her in bed with. Gibbs can't take it anymore and chugs the man's coffee.

When Rebecca refuses to talk, Gibbs asks her where she was two nights ago, knowing the answer is his couch. She says the money was left to her by a relative then argues she's being set up.

Abby examines Rebecca's phone and finds it's bugged. Someone knew she was coming to see Gibbs. The bug traces back to a two-year-old espionage case involving a Russian mercenary. Abby finds he's worked with Sergei Mishnev, their No. 1 most wanted.

The team surrounds the Russian's last known address, an RV park. They find pictures of Rebecca all over the wall. Diane calls, ordering Gibbs to come meet her and saying she knows what's going on. Gibbs orders Rebecca and her fiancé into protective custody.

He goes to meet Diane on the roof of a parking garage, but she doesn't know why she's there. Gibbs realizes they've been set up. He's hustling Diane to her car when a shot rings out. She falls dead, with a bullet through her forehead.

From a distance, Sergei Mishnev looks at Gibbs through his scope and promises it's only the beginning. With Diane's blood spattered all over him, Gibbs goes down to the street and fires at Mishnev as he drives off.

Back at the office, Gibbs orders protective custody for Tobias Fornell and Emily, Diane's daughter. McGee reports on a motion sensor that was set off when they entered the RV and triggered the recording of Diane calling Gibbs. The voice is a fake. There's also a recording from Mishnev, addressing Gibbs and telling him he should have seen it coming. "You mess with my family, I mess with yours," he says, adding: "Check."

But they don't know what family he's referring to.

Down in the morgue, Palmer bows out of Diane's autopsy, saying he doesn't want to cut up another friend. Gibbs comes down to see her and remembers happier moments.

Duckie says if Sergei has a master plan, it means they might be able to figure it out and stop him. He's not happy with just killing Gibbs.

Abby comes down to report that Mishnev got access to Director Shepherd's murder file through the virus that their own IT guy Kevin made for him, the one that trashed their systems. He got Gibbs' personnel and everyone he's ever worked with.

Abby has an idea that will either help them find Sergei or "kill us all."

In the lab, she explains to McGee that she wants to re-release Mishnev's virus and trace it. She thinks she's removed all the dangerous elements.

Later, they call Gibbs to report they traced it to an apartment building next to where Diane was killed. Gibbs races there alone, with Diane's blood still caked to his face. He kicks in the door and start firing. He shoots two of Sergei's men but not Sergei. Gibbs starts beating him, but one of Sergei's men knocks him out.

Gibbs wakes up with the team standing around him. Sergei is gone. Gibbs phone rings. It's Fornell.

Production Code: 12012
Summary: Gibbs and the rest of the NCIS team, along with FBI agent Fornell are on the hunt for an American born terrorist who was detected in Syria but is now back in the D.C area.

Northern Syria — A Navy SEAL team leads an assault on armed militants in a house, killing half a dozen men. The SEALs rescue an American woman, Sarah Goode.

A news report says that after a week in a hospital overseas, Sarah is being brought back to the US. Director Leon Vance visits Gibbs in his basement to ask him to handle Sarah's debriefing. He asks Gibbs to fix an antique jewelry box that used to belong to his wife Jackie. Vance wants to make sure Gibbs is doing OK with Sergei Mishnev coming after him.

There was no memorial for Gibbs' ex-wife Diane (whom Misnev killed) – she didn't want one. She was planning to re-marry FBI Agent Tobias Fornell, who is now struggling with her loss.

In the office, Tony is all smiles and mellow. McGee goes through Tony's desk then pours his coffee on Tony's car magazine to prove to Ellie Bishop that Tony isn't acting normal.

Gibbs interrupts for a rundown on Sarah Goode. She was a social worker in an orphanage when she was captured. The militants tried to ransom her for $100 million, but the US doesn't negotiate with terrorists.

Tony returns to see the spilled coffee and is totally understanding about it.

Down in Abby's lab, she's going through the terrorists' things confiscated in the raid. She found fingerprints belonging to a man named Kyle Nasry, who wasn't among the dead terrorists and has a Maryland driver's license.

Kyle was born in Syria and lived there until his father died when he was 12, then he grew up with his mother in DC.

Gibbs and Ellie go to visit Sarah in her hotel. She doesn't have any family. She doesn't recognize a photo of Kyle Nasry and says her captors always wore hoods. She asks if he was killed in the raid.

Before she leaves DC she wants to go hear Imam Musa ibn Hasan, who has a fatwah against him. She hopes to return to the orphanage in Syria but knows she can't.

Gibbs and Vance talk to Chris Hegarty, Assistant Director of Homeland Security. He says the US knows of a dozen Americans fighting with the Syrians, but there are likely others.

Tony and McGee go to speak with Kyle's mom, Rachel, an American. She says he's traveling in Greece and her husband wasn't religious or political. He originally left to travel Europe with his girlfriend Chelsea, but they broke up.

Ellie talks to Duckie about her concerns about Sarah Goode, who she worries isn't dealing with her ordeal.

Tony and McGee go talk to Chelsea in her dog grooming van. She says she hasn't seen or spoken to Kyle in months. He was hanging out with radical extremists while they traveled so she left. She flirts with Tony, but he's politely uninterested.

As they leave, McGee realizes Tony is acting oddly because he's seeing someone.

Back in the office, Vance reports that they just learned from Homeland that Kyle landed in the US two days ago. "Our worst fear: a homegrown terrorist back on US soil," he says.

The next day, Fornell stops by. In 2010 he personally investigated Kyle Nasry after he protested against the wars in Iraq and Afghanistan and cleared him. He wants to help to take his mind of Diane.

He and Gibbs interview Rachel Nasry. She emailed him her son about visiting him in Greece and his answers all read like excuses. But she still doesn't believe he could be radicalized or is back in the US.

Abby interrupts to report she found DNA on the terrorists' cell phone belonging to Randall White, who was discharged from the Army for bad conduct in 2011. He spent time in jail after for assault and converted to Islam.

McGee looks up his passport and finds White's passport was scanned at Dulles 15 minutes ago. Gibbs, Ellie and Tony head there. McGee calls to report they tracked him getting into a cab. They track the cab's GPS and have the dispatcher call for the destination.

In the cab, White gets suspicious. He takes a bullet out of a pen and calls someone to say "leave now." He has the cab driver let him out 10 blocks from the hotel.

Tony and Ellie get out of the car while Gibbs pulls around to stop White. They surround him and he puts a plastic gun to his head and pulls the trigger.

They find that Nasry pre-paid for a week at White's hotel but left minutes before they got there.

In the morgue, Duckie shows Gibbs that White recently shaved his beard. He had his Army Ranger tattoo covered up.

ATF Special Agent Zoe Keates surprises Tony by showing up at the office. Abby called her, but she's also there to return the handcuffs Tony left at her place last night. She notices he's acting oddly and asks if they're keeping their relationship a secret. Tony says it's going really well and he doesn't want to ruin it. He thinks they're in the clear, but Ellie and McGee hear the whole thing from behind a filing cabinet.

Down in the lab, Zoe says the gun could have been made by a 3-D printer like the one photographed in the terrorists' hideout. They can pass through airport security, but don't aim well and have to be used at close range and only have one shot. Ellie and McGee show up to stare at Tony and Zoe, then catch Abby up when they leave.

Gibbs and Fornell update Vance. Vance offers Fornell an ear if he needs it, as a widow and single parent.

Gibbs goes to visit Sarah Goode and shows her Randall White's picture. She says she doesn't recognize him. Gibbs studies her as he tells her White killed himself in DC.

After Gibbs leaves, Sarah talks to "Faheed," who was hiding in her bathroom. It's Kyle Nasry, armed with a plastic gun. She's clearly in charge and reminds him that they never thought she'd be rescued and they can use the current situation.

At the office, Gibbs is annoyed that Tony is late and tells McGee to call Zoe. He knows they're dating.

Fornell and Ellie stakeout Rachel Nasry's house and he accepts her offer of womanly advice for his teenage daughter. Fornell gets a call that Kyle just called his mom. They watch Rachel walk out of her house and over to their car. Kyle called needing money and she thinks he needs help before he gets hurt.

In a DC street, Kyle goes to get into his mother's car but finds Ellie instead. NCIS agents surround him.

At the "Forum for Peace" featuring the Imam, Vance is surprised to see Sarah Goode show up. She's been invited to meet with him privately after the speech.

Back in interrogation, Gibbs tries to get a rise out of Nasry but he won't talk. Duckie thinks it's odd that Nasry allowed himself to be taken captive.

Abby summons everyone to the lab, having decrypted the terrorists' hard drive. She found the unedited version of Sarah Goode's ransom video, in which Kyle Nasry appears and Sarah asks for another take. Gibbs realizes Nasry called his mom to draw them away.

They find out Sarah left her hotel an hour ago. Gibbs realizes Vance is at the Imam's speech and calls him.

Sarah waits in line to shake the Imam's hand and Vance races toward her. As she gets close, she grabs the plastic gun out of her purse. Vance grabs her just in time.

Back at the office, McGee brings Zoe in from the parking lot, where she was waiting for Tony. He tries to play it cool, but everyone announces they know.

Alone with Gibbs, Fornell asks him to let him have a crack at Sergei Mishnev when they find him.

Guest Stars: Chris Coy (Davis Riley), Andy Favreau (Navy Lieutenant Eric Kutzler), Will Green (Mat Jebson), Alano Miller (Vince Armstrong)
Production Code: 12013
Summary: Gibbs and the team investigate when a Navy lieutenant who is set to be the first openly gay servicemember to receive the Medal of Honor is murdered. Also, as his wife's due date approaches, Palmer prepares for fatherhood with a NCIS baby shower

A man with a scarred face and bloody knuckles tries to pull himself together, but he's shaky and on the edge. He calls someone named Vince for help but gets voicemail. When the power goes out he goes outside to the breaker box, where he's gunned down by someone dressed in black.

At NCIS, they host a baby shower for Breena and Jimmy Palmer. Abby gives them a baby lab coat. Tony is late but comes bearing earplugs, a bottle of wine and $100 in cash. Breena sends Jimmy away for water and then pleads with the team for help getting Jimmy away from her because his excessive worrying about the baby is driving her crazy.

Gibbs arrives with the body of the week: a dead Navy lieutenant in Falls Church. "Oh thank god," Breena says.

On the scene, they find three .22 casings. The victim is Eric Kutzler. Inside they find the glass Kutzler dropped while he was shaking and bloody hole punches in the wall.

Gibbs talks to a police officer who has a cut on his face and is fighting back tears. He's the victim's husband, he was working last night.

Gibbs reports to Vance's office and is not pleased to find his ex Hollis Mann there for the Department of Defense. She was vetting Kutzler for the Medal of Honor.

Down on the floor, Tony explains to Ellie that Hollis might be the person to get through to Gibbs after his ex-wife Diane's murder. Gibbs and Hollis join them for the victim rundown.

Kutzler was with the construction battalion but spent 18 months at Walter Reed Hospital recovering from injuries sustained in Afghanistan on a humanitarian mission. When they were ambushed, Kutzler threw himself on a grenade and saved the lives of two of his men. He was also active in the effort to repeal Don't Ask Don't Tell and they want to make sure it wasn't a hate crime.

Down in the lab, Abby gets off the phone with Breena and gives Palmer the news that Breena is in labor. He runs.

Abby has surveillance footage from Kutzler's neighbor's camera including a shot of the killer from behind.

They also see that Kutzler's husband, Vince Armstrong, found his body outside then went inside and waited 20 minutes to call 911.

Tony and McGee talk to Vince in interrogation, who says he was in shock. He says the cut on his face is from pulling over a drunk. Armstrong was discharged from the Marine Corps for conduct unbecoming in 2007 and his files says he had a temper. Vince gets angry that they're wasting time with him instead of investigating.

Gibbs interrupts. He went through Vince's stellar record and realizes he was forced out of the service when his superiors found out he was gay. The allegations against him were trumped up.

Vince tells Gibbs about finding a bag of vials and syringes inside the house. He is sure they're not Eric's, but he didn't want them to affect his medal nomination so he hid them. He begs Gibbs to help him protect his husband's memory.

In the lab, Abby says Kutzler had no drugs in his system. The vials Vince found have morphine and fentanyl in them and they're homemade. They wonder if Kutzler was selling them.

Down in the morgue, Hollis asks Duckie how Gibbs is handling Diane's death. He's shutting her out. Duckie is about to tell her his theory as to why when Gibbs walks in.

Duckie is bothered that there were no drugs of any kind in Kutzler's system. The grenade broke his ribs and collapsed his lung, severed his jaw bone, tore through his eye socket and fractured his skull. But he never filled any of his pain medication prescriptions. Gibbs immediately understands that Kutzler blamed himself for the men who did die in the ambush.

They review the survivors and home in on Davis Riley, who was discharged in 2012.

Ellie finds that a letter of reprimand was put in Kutzler's file by his commanding officer Xavier Meade, but later withdrawn. Gibbs and Ellie go talk to Meade, who says he had no issues with Kutzler.

He says some men had issues with Kutzler being out and he got in a fight with one, Davis Riley. Meade wrote the letter but withdrew it because it didn't sit right with him that Kutzler got in trouble for defending himself from bigotry.

Tony and Hollis visit Davis Riley at his construction job. He throws up when he hears Kutzler was killed. Back at NCIS, Riley admits he hated everything about Kutzler back then but says he's changed. He describes Kutzler throwing himself on the grenade without hesitation and seeing him as a hero ever since. He says he and his chief Donahue nominated Kutzler for the award but that's news to Hollis.

Vance gets a call from the Secretary of Defense – some news outlets heard that a medal nominee was found dead with illegal drugs on him. They're canceling the medal nomination in 48 hours.

The next day, Gibbs is on a tear. Vince Armstrong comes in with the day's paper and lays into Gibbs.

In the lab, Abby finds from Kutzler's GPS that he went to a community outreach center in Maryland. Ellie, McGee and Tony learn at the center that Kutzler attended the nightly addiction meeting. The clerk, an annoying hipster named Mat, saw Kutzler in an argument after the last meeting. Tony wonders if Kutzler was selling drugs to addicts.

Back at NCIS, Hollis tells Gibbs that she found that Admiral Xavier Meade buried Kutzler's medal nomination from Riley back in 2012. Gibbs and Hollis sit down with Meade, who denies every seeing the nomination. But Hollis has proof he got it. They also know he's given low marks to every openly gay sailor under his command. Gibbs calls Meade a disgrace.

Outside the center, Tony, Ellie and McGee see Davis Riley leave the addiction meeting. He's clearly stoned and has drugs in his bag. He keels over and stops breathing.

Later that night, Hollis visits Gibbs in his basement. Riley is in stable condition. She knows he's blaming himself for Diane's death. He says her being near him makes her a target, but she assures him she can handle herself.

Gibbs visits Riley in the hospital, where he's handcuffed to his bed. Riley describes being haunted by the ambush and Kutzler helping him get better by taking him to meetings. Riley relapsed three days ago and Kutzler came to get him and took his stash. He told Kutzler he got his drugs from the guy at the front desk, Mat.

After searching Mat's apartment and finding his lab, Ellie and Tony confront Mat. They found a .22 with a silencer in Mat's trunk.

Later, Vince thanks Gibbs for solving Eric's murder. The medal announcement will be made in a few days. Gibbs urges Vince to continue his husband's legacy by carrying on his efforts to help people.

At the hospital, Palmer comes out and announces it's a girl, she's named Victoria Elizabeth, after Duckie's mother. Vince goes to see Riley to see how he can help him.

Donald "Ducky" Mallard), Sean Murray (I) (Special Agent Tim McGee), Brian Dietzen (Asst. M.E. Jimmy Palmer), Rocky Carroll (Director Leon Vance), Emily Wickersham (Agent Ellie Bishop)
Guest Stars: Jamie Bamber (NSA Attorney Jake Malloy), Tanner Struebing (Young Anthony DiNozzo), Phillip Fallon (Young Travis Phelps), Brendan Patrick Connor (Travis 'Piggy' Phelps), Steve Harris (Coach Tanner), Lennie Loftin (Cantor)
Production Code: 12014
Summary: DiNozzo returns to the military academy he attended as a teen after a murdered Marine, who was an alumnus of the school, is found clutching the photo of a current student. Meanwhile, Bishop and her husband invite Gibbs and the team for a special dinner.

Someone dumps the body of a young man in the woods. He's wearing a military academy ring.

In the office, Ellie and her husband, Jake Malloy come by and announce their plans to invite the team to dinner. Gibbs comes in to announce the dead body of the week and also that he's already accepted the dinner invite.

The victim is 19-year-old John Wallis. His cell phone is missing. Wallis was stabbed repeatedly. They notice the trail of blood leading into the woods. Tony ID's Wallis ring as belonging to the Remington Military Academy – the last prep school Tony ever went to. Wallis is clutching a blood-soaked photo in his hand.

Tony was sent to Remington after six prep schools in four years.

Ellie and Tony find the burned tarp the body was dragged in and tire tracks.

Back in the morgue, Ducky tells Gibbs that Wallis was stabbed 20 times in the gut by a stab to his neck killed him. He thinks it was a 6" knife. He has no defensive wounds.

In the office, it's victim rundown time: Wallis graduated at the top of his class and joined the Marine Corps. He was about to deploy when he got a call from the Military Academy, then emptied his bank account and disappeared.

Tony isn't thrilled when Gibbs sends him and Ellie to the school in Rhode Island.

McGee joins Abby in the lab and accidentally mentions dinner with Ellie and her husband tomorrow. Abby isn't upset she wasn't invited; she and Burt do things with Jake and Ellie all the time.

On the road, Ellie gets a text from Abby of the cleaned up bloody photo Wallis was holding – it's of a young woman in a cadet uniform. As they pass through the school gates, Tony remembers when he arrived. The basketball coach Gerald Tanner picked him up from the train station and dropped him off with a "Godfather" reference lost on teen Tony. Tanner tried to offer Tony words of comfort, but teen Tony snottily shot him down.

Cut to the present, Tanner greeting Tony and Ellie. He recognizes Christine Sanders from her photo – but she's also dead. Sanders was about to be the school's first female valedictorian when she began to withdraw and then OD'd on pills 10 days ago.

Wallis was Sanders' commanding officer, but Tanner says dating among the ranks is forbidden.

In the lab, Abby tries to match the knife used to kill Wallis. Tracking calling cards, McGee reports that a cadet named Lucas Craig, the senior cadet, was the one who called Wallis.

Abby remotely turns on Wallis' cell phone and tracks it to the home of Frederick Cantor.

Back at Remington, Tony does 5 a.m. push-ups but quits when he notices the overweight cadet next to him laboring. He told the drill leader to get the cadet, "Piggy," to the nurse, but got in trouble for insubordination instead.

Back at the school, Lucas Craig tells Tony and Ellie that he called Wallis after Christine died because they had been dating for a year.

Tony notices a man at a pick-up nearby eyeing them.

Gibbs visits Frederick Cantor, Wallis mentor and an RMA grad, who's working with tools in his wood shop. He started a scholarship program and Wallis was a recipient. Wallis was a mess when he came to see Cantor. Cantor says Wallis came from a really bad part of town and his parents are out of the picture.

On the drive back from RMA, Tony tries to forbid Ellie from telling McGee anything about their visit. They get a call from a man who claims to have information about Wallis' death. They've just reached DC and it's the night of Ellie's dinner, but they turn around.

Ellie calls Jake and Tony calls Gibbs to explain, but they're already at the diner. McGee gets a text as he walks in, he sizes up the situation and bails before they see him. Gibbs turns serious and asks Jake what he knows about Russian-Palestinian relations.

Back by Remington, Tony and Ellie meet their mystery caller – "Piggy" aka Travis. He takes Ellie and Tony to his house and is very paranoid about RMA hearing him. He works for the school now, but says Christine was pushed to suicide by "honor corps."

Tony remembers when he was a cadet, practicing on the basketball court alone one night. The lights went out and five cadets came in and surrounded him, announcing they were "honor corps" and they were going to punish him for breaking the rules. Just as they were surrounding him, Coach Tanner interrupted and told Tony he'd made the team.

Tony thought Tanner put an end to honor corps, but Travis explains they just made basketball players off limits. Travis says honor corps "disciplined" her every night for a month before she died. He told Wallis the same thing when he visited and Wallis seemed to know who to go after.

Alone in the office, McGee answers a ringing phone on Gibbs' desk – it's Jake's. Gibbs finds a police report Christine filed about being stalked.

Tony and Ellie go to her stalker, Lucas Craig. Tony finds a gray honor corps armband in Craig' locker. Craig relents and says Wallis was furious when confronted him. Craig admits he pushed Christine too far and caused her to kill herself. Wallis was ready to fight Craig, but Tanner stopped him.

Back at the lab, Abby announces the tire tracks at the crime scene were from custom tires for a 1972 Citroen.

Back at RMA, Tony and Ellie look at Tanner's Citroen and find cleaned up blood in the trunk. They arrest Tanner.

Tony remembers trying to hotwire Tanner's car as a cadet and Tanner catching him. Rather than busting him, Tanner gives him a pep talk and assures him he'll protect him from honor corps. "Take a stand and I'll stand with you," Tanner says.

Back in interrogation, Tony doesn't relish facing his former mentor. Tanner says he doesn't know how the blood got in his trunk. Tanner, who is now the school's provost, says he couldn't get rid of honor corps. He says he stopped Wallis from going after Craig and told him exposing honor corps would hurt the school.

He says Wallis was alive the last time he saw him and reminds Tony that everyone knows where he keeps his spare car key. (Tony remembers the end of Tanner busting him trying to hotwire the car – Tanner showing him the key is in the sun visor.)

Later, Abby examines Tanner's car in the garage. The spare key was still in the visor. Wallis' fingerprints were all over the car. His killer drove the car back. Abby found wax in the car, like the kind a carpenter would use. Gibbs wants to find the security footage from the bus station from after the car was returned.

Gibbs pays Frederick Cantor another visit in his tool shop. When Gibbs accuses him, Cantor goes for a chisel – the murder weapon. Then he admits Wallis came back to see him after going to RMA, wanting to expose honor corps. Cantor didn't want to let Wallis hurt RMA and his legacy.

On the way out of the office, Tanner runs into Tony and tells him he's proud of him, but he's resigning.

Back at his desk, Ellie gives Tony a photo of a photo she took of him on flag duty. She encourages him to embrace his past.

Jake joins Ellie after being in closed door NSA meetings all day. He says Gibbs was really easy to talk to, but he can't tell her about any of it.

Tony puts the picture up on his wall, then calls Travis to meet for a late dinner.

Production Code: 12015
Summary: Gibbs' arch-nemesis is suspected of being responsible for an explosion at a summit on global terror, but Gibbs chooses to sit out the investigation to help a grief-stricken Fornell, whose life is on the verge of imploding following his wife's murder.

A pair of state police pull over a car that's swerving wildly. There's a half-drunk bottle of bourbon open next to the driver: Agent Tobias Fornell.

The next day, Tobias tries to convince Gibbs that he was mostly out of it because of a beer with dinner mixed with pain pills. Gibbs is called away to a fire on a Navy ship.

The ship was supposed to host a summit on global terrorism. One female petty officer is dead with almost a dozen wounded. The team is already there and quickly concludes it was a bomb. They find a fragment that says "grenade" on it in Russian.

Gibbs immediately assumes it's his foe Sergey Mishnev and that Leon Vance was the target. Russian Counselor Anton Pavlenko was scheduled to attend but arrives late. Pavlenko says if Sergey was behind it, he was the target.

Pavlenko explains that Sergey thinks Gibbs saved his life from the Russian defector (whose death NCIS actually faked).

On the scene, Gibbs impatiently barks orders. The victim is Katherine Gomez. Tony gingerly suggests to Gibbs that he sit this one out.

Gibbs gets a call from Emily Fornell, asking to see him right away. At NCIS, she tells Gibbs she knows about her dad's arrest. She says he's been angry, bitter and self-destructive since her mom died and is drinking too much. She asks Gibbs to help him.

Gibbs demands a rundown moments after the team returns. Gomez was setting up food when the bomb went off. No one reported seeing Sergey. Fornell joins them, says he's not on leave anymore. Gibbs tries to talk to Fornell, but he barks back and Vance has to intervene.

Up in Vance's office, Vance accuses Fornell of letting his demons get the better of him. He asks Fornell to wait outside while he tells Gibbs they can't cover for Fornell and the FBI needs to know. Instead, Gibbs offers to step away from the case and take care of Fornell.

Gibbs hijacks Fornell and takes him to his electricity-free cabin the woods. He pours Fornell a giant bourbon and joins him.

At the office, McGee thinks Gibbs would only step away from the case if he had a plan. Gibbs calls for an update while Fornell retches in the background.

The team heads to the hospital to interview more victims. McGee talks to Frankie Boulos, an employee of Video Light and Sound and was only on the ship to run a teleconference of the summit for people who couldn't attend.

Tony talks to Gomez's fellow officer and friend Petty Officer Second Class Judy Sloan.

Ellie pulls Tony and McGee aside to tell them she found out Gibbs asked her husband Jake for intel on Russian-Palestinian relations, including Mishnev and Pavlenko. Gibbs just asked Jake to send everything he had to the team.

Back at the cabin, Gibbs makes coffee over the fire and tells Fornell he dumped the bourbon. Fornell is ornery and resentful. Gibbs asks him if he's done embarrassing himself and his badge and Fornell swings at him. Gibbs goads Fornell into swinging again and when he ends up on the floor, Gibbs says it's OK that Fornell blames him for Diane's death because Gibbs blames himself, too. But Fornell says it's his fault.

At the office, they comb the files from Jake and find that Mishnev and Pavlenko are old college buddies.

Meanwhile, Pavlenko meets with Mishnev in an alley and tells him he's convinced the Russian government to give him asylum – if he kills Gibbs. Pavlenko knows NCIS faked the scientist defector's death. Pavlenko says he knows exactly where to find Gibbs.

Up at the cabin, Gibbs and Fornell freeze as they fish on a small row boat. Fornell can't help but be delighted when he snags one.

At the office, they find Sergey was born in Israeli. His father was a Russian officer stationed there and his mother was a doctor from Saudi Arabia. Suddenly they wonder if it's possible Sergey was Ari David's half-brother.

Down in the lab, Abby explains the grenade used a sheet of thin plastic for a detonator and it could have been triggered by sound. Abby suggests it could have been inside Boulos' sound equipment.

At the cabin, Fornell tells Gibbs about a voice mail he has saved from Diane. Gibbs gives him his phone and he plays it. It's from right before Diane went to meet Gibbs. Fornell blames himself for not calling her right back and the fact the last thing he ever said to her was in a fight the night before.

Gibbs tells Fornell he can prove how much he loved Diane by taking care of her daughter Emily. Back at the hospital, they should Sergey Michnev's picture to Frankie, but his father Nazar freezes when he sees it.

At the cabin, Gibbs doesn't have good enough reception to get a full update from Tony and Fornell is raring to go back. Gibbs keeps checking out the window and Fornell questions what Gibbs isn't tell him.

In interrogation, Nazar Boulos says he was friends with Sergey as a boy and then saw him a week ago when Sergey gave him a package to deliver to the ship inside the speaker. Then Sergey dropped in again today demanding a cell phone jammer.

Vance tries to call Gibbs.

Meanwhile, Sergey prowls the woods outside Gibbs' cabin with a long range rifle. Sergey busts in the door and finds Fornell by the fire. Sergey holds a gun on him and jabbars on until Gibbs sneaks up behind him and whacks him in the head with a log.

Sergey wakes up on a dark road mimicking the one in Russian where he faced down Gibbs. But this time Fornell is the one facing him. Sergey still has his gun but when he fires it, it's empty. Fornell shoots him dead between the eyes.

Later, back at the office at night, Fornell is reunited with his daughter. Vance confirms to Gibbs that Mishnev is really dead this time.

Back at his house with a beer, Gibbs gets a visit from Anton Pavlenko, telling him his ploy to trick Sergey worked. Anton, who was in on it, thanks Gibbs.

Production Code: 12016
Summary: A covert identity created for one of Gibbs' undercover cases 20 years ago resurfaces after a murder victim is found living under the alias.

A man follows his GPS through an area full of warehouses while he talks on the phone, doubting he's in the right place. Two shots blast through his windshield, killing him.

In the office, McGee programs a new smart phone for Gibbs to try out. Gibbs arrives with the body of the week, not a member of the Navy.

On the scene, Metro PD explains that the victim was Leland Speers and his ID was flagged to notify NIS (previous name of NCIS, changed in 1992) if anything happened to him.

Gibbs and McGee arrive late. McGee's smart phone navigation tutorial resulted in a battered smart phone. Gibbs recognizes the victim's name and knows his birth date – the ID is his.

Back in the office, Gibbs explains that Speers is his old undercover ID. McGee thinks it must have been unearthed by hackers since any hard copies would have been destroyed years ago.

In the garage, Abby tells Tony that "Speers" was talking on a burner phone when he was killed. There was also a very sophisticated GPS tracker planted in his car, the type used by government agencies.

In the morgue, Duckie got nothing from the victim's fingerprints.

Ellie and McGee check out the victim's apartment and find sports memorabilia and video games, like a teenage boy's apartment. They find his access card. They bust one of his neighbors, a day trader named Robbie Hale, at the door. He says Speers as been home a lot playing video games and listening to top 40 pop.

In the lab, Abby tells Gibbs the slugs that killed Speers don't match any weapons. His GPS shows he's been to NBA games, strip clubs and burger joints, plus a remote cabin.

Ellie and McGee head to the cabin. Ellie starts worrying about what would happen if she was undercover and the mark hit on her. They're steps away from the cabin when it explodes.

Later, with everyone on the scene, they find a melted computer and the bomb's trigger.

Back in the city, Gibbs meets with Homeland Senior Division Chief Tom Morrow, his old boss, at the diner. He says a woman named Michelle Stark built the Leland Speers cover ID, along with many others for the CIA. She retired recently.

Gibbs and Ellie pay a visit to Michelle Stark. She says the ID would be burned from everywhere except the CIA's classified files. It shouldn't be able to be retrieved.

Back at the office, Tony makes excuses on the phone to bail on Zoey. Her parents are in town and he's avoiding dinner. He's never met the parents before – other than when he was undercover.

McGee found that Speers was looking into a semi conductor called Gallium Nitride, which is used in the military.

Later, with Morrow in the office, Gibbs knows all about Gallium Nitride from the undercover investigation he was conducting as Speers. He posed as an IT guy.

Down in the lab, Abby and McGee tell Gibbs that Speers used Gibbs' old ID to get a job at Longview Technics, a research company that uses Gallium Nitride. Speers was stealing data.

They know the company won't want to allow access to their network, so Gibbs' suggests they go in undercover. Gibbs wants to send McGee, but Abby insists it's faster and easier to send Gibbs.

Later that night, with Abby and McGee watching on headsets in MTAC, Gibbs goes into the company. His ID badge doesn't work and he has to talk to the security guard. He ignores all the techno babble McGee feeds him and says his boss emailed him to come in. When the guard asks to see the email, Gibbs takes out his smashed smart phone and says his boss woke him up. The security guard laughs and punches in the code to let Gibbs up.

Up in the lab, McGee walks Gibbs through logging into the system and getting what they need. It takes four hours.

The next morning, McGee finds that's Speers used company software to transfer files. They get a location and the team busts down the door to an immaculate safe house with another dead body in the kitchen. There's mail addressed to Edgar Braun – Mike Franks' old cover ID.

Back at the office, Gibbs notices tattoo magazines among Speers' things and finds it odd, since he didn't have any. He order the team to find out everything they can on Miranda Fleming – but doesn't say who she is.

Down in the morgue, Gibbs finds ultraviolet tattoos on Speers' body, including one in Serbian.

Gibbs sits down with Michelle Stark and Morrow. Franks' used his ID back then to identify suspects they thought were trying to sell intel to the Serbians, but they never got anywhere. It can't be a coincidence that now they have two dead Serbians.

McGee interrupts with the Miranda Fleming file Gibbs asks for – it was Jenny Shepherd's old ID. He found Fleming, she has a ticket booked for Buenos Aires tomorrow. Her passport shows she's Michelle Stark.

In interrogation, Michelle tells Gibbs and Morrow that an attaché from the Serbian embassy approached her for backstopped IDs to get Gallium Nitride. She was resentful at being forced into mandatory age-related retirement. She figured the Nitride was so old, it wouldn't matter. She never met the agents, but their handler said Speers was getting sloppy. He was "going American."

They ask her to email the handler and tells them that Edgar Braun is on life support at a hospital and is expected to live.

Later, at the hospital, the team stakes out the hospital, with McGee as Braun. The fire alarm goes off. Ellie is in McGee's room when Speers' neighbor Robbie Hale comes in to inject him with something.

They take him in to custody.

Back in interrogation, Hale is claiming diplomatic immunity, even though he had a syringe full of heart attack-inducing drugs. Hale confessed and says the two victims finished their mission and were supposed to return home, but hadn't.

Gibbs confirms that Hale has no diplomatic immunity.

Gibbs sends Tony and McGee home. Ellie asks Gibbs if he'd ever ask her to do deep undercover work. Gibbs tells her to go home to her husband.

Production Code: 12017
Summary: After a Vice Admirals aide is murdered, Gibbs and the NCIS team theorize that it was because of a valuable painting in her office. DiNozzo's father is more than happy to help with the investigation by sharing his knowledge of the artwork.

At the Defense Logistics Agency late at night, a janitor shows his teen son the proper way to mop a floor and take pride in his work. They hear a crash. The dad sends his son to an office to lock himself in while he goes to investigate Lieutenant Dominic Pine's office. He finds Pine dead on the floor.

At NCIS, Tony is excited to leave work before midnight for the first time in two weeks. He had big bread making plans with Zoe. But Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week.

Pine was an aide to Vice Admiral Janet Kleibor and was killed in her office. Kleibor isn't answering calls. The janitor's son saw a blue sedan driving away.

Duckie arrives and announces that Pine was hit with something and then crashed through a coffee table. Ellie finds a gift wrapped fancy pen under a couch.

Gibbs takes pity on Tony and sends him home early. But his bread plans fail to rise when Tony returns home to find his dad, dejected, on his couch. His fiancée, Linda, left him.

Tony drags into work the next morning. His dad won't get out of his pjs. McGee suggests putting him to work to distract him.

Gibbs comes in for an update. The blue sedan had a key card to get out of the gate. Kleibor was at sea and will be calling soon.

Senior calls Tony, asking for nice paper to write a letter to Linda begging her to come back. Gibbs suggests giving him a project. Tony asks his dad to recaulk his tub.

Ellie and McGee talk to Pine's girlfriend Gloria Hernandez in the conference room. She and Pine had only been together four months, but she thought he was the one. She thinks there was something going on at his job.

In MTAC, Vice Admiral Kleibor tells Gibbs and Tony that she asked Pine to go to her office to pick up the pen as a gift for someone. She blames herself for his death.

Gibbs visits Abby in the lab, where she is sewing skull pajamas for Senior. She shows Gibbs that the "Chesapeake" painting of a ship on the wall was a fake and was hung after the murder – because it wasn't covered in blood spatter.

They think Pine wasn't the target and was just in the wrong place at the wrong time.

Senior wanders in, still in his pajamas. He hired someone from the hardware store to fix the tub, but now doesn't want to be alone. He recognizes the painting and offers his insight on the underground art world. Gibbs agrees.

Later, dressed in his suit again, Senior suggests they offer the thief a better deal than he already has. He's put out feelers to his contacts saying he's interested.

Gibbs visits Duckie in the morgue. Pine had two pins in his knees from a car accident as a child, in which he lost his family. The murder weapon had a rounded edge.

Senior and McGee pay a visit to Perry Swan, the art forger. Senior passes McGee off as his son, who he's told people is a catalog model.

Perry recognizes the gallery label on the back as one from a template he made. He agrees to track down the forger.

Palmer drops by the office and urges Tony to cut his dad some slack.

They get a hit on the alert for the car. A homeless man found the plates in a Dumpster. Ellie dives in and finds the painting frame and the murder weapon – a flashlight.

Back in the lab, Abby finds Pine's blood on the frame and blood from Brian Khosa, an undercover CIA agent who was killed in Pakistan last year.

Back in the office, it's victim rundown time for Khosa. He was deep undercover with a tech savy terror cell called Al Zalim, which has programmed radio frequency key cards in the past. The "Chesapeake" was in the embassy in Pakistan when Khosa was killed.

McGee brings Senior back to Tony's place. When Senior frets about Linda leaving, McGee gently suggests he stop conning people. Senior is aghast to learn that Tony is telling people he's a con artist.

Gibbs and Ellie meet with Khosa's boss, Agent Harris. He doesn't know much about the operation Khosa was working on, except that it was headed by Samir Aziz, who is still at large. They were breaking into the embassy to plant a device, but Khosa was made once he was inside and killed. They never found anything planted inside.

In the lab, Abby finds the terrorists planted a voice activated recording device that has to be accessed directly. The bug was in the painting.

It was in the Secretary of Defense's office for two months after the embassy.

Gibbs sends McGee and Tony to follow up with Perry the forger. When McGee tells Tony he let slip that Tony calls his dad a con artist, Tony can't get past the fact that McGee had a nice chat with his dad.

Perry tells them he got nowhere on the forger, but Tony finds McGee's number in the trash and deduces that Perry already knows who the forger is. Once he announces they're federal agents, Perry says the fake Chesapeake was done by Gloria Hernandez – Pine's girlfriend. Perry forwarded Senior's email to her.

Tony races home, but his dad is gone and there's a wine glass with lipstick on it. Gloria has Senior.

Back at the office, McGee goes through Hernandez's email. Abby matched Gloria's print to the murder weapon. McGee finds an email routed through Senegal inquiring about the painting from someone named "Smith". Abby recognizes that's where Al Zalim has their server farm. Abby finds that "Smith" is really the terrorist Aziz.

Tony gets a call from his dad at the Adams House, where Senior is carousing with Gloria. He doesn't believe Tony's warnings about Gloria until he sees the gun in her purse.

Senior smooth talks Gloria until Gibbs arrives, posing as Senior's accountant. Tony is urging Senior to get out of there, when Aziz walks in and joins Gloria. Gloria announces to Aziz and Senior that she's holding an auction for the painting. Aziz draws on Senior under the table and Gloria points out a man in the corner she says is covering her.

Gibbs tells a story about a friend (Tony) covering his dad's hotel bill out of love, as a set up to say the code word. Then the team springs into action, grabbing Aziz, disarming Gloria and determining the cover man is unarmed.

Later in the lab, Abby scans the painting looking for the recording device and finds it under a mound of paint. Gibbs turns it over to the CIA.

Later that night, Tony makes new plans for bread with Zoe. Senior announces he's off on another European art trip. Then he tells Tony that he's not a con artist, he's an entrepreneur, the different being that the latter believes in the dreams he's selling.

Production Code: 12018
Summary: McGee reunites with his girlfriend Delilah to investigate the death of a thief who is found dead in a marine's house. The probe reveals a clue to a terror group Delilah and the Department of Defense have been tracking from Dubai.

A woman comes from the hardware store and doesn't notice a man sneaking around her garage. He sneaks up on her when she gets off the phone and attacks.

At the office, Tony and Ellie bust McGee for flirting with Agent Tina Larson, even offering to let her stay with him while she apartment hunts. He insists it's innocent, but they note he's been away from Delilah for six months.

Gibbs interrupts with the body of the week at off-base housing.

The victim is slashed and bloody in the garage.

The house is registered to Holt Perkins, who arrives back from leave as the team is on the scene. But he starts saying "thank you" – the victim is not his wife.

He's never seen her before.

Inside, Perkins can tell someone has been staying in the house, but his wife Leandra is nowhere to be found. He told his wife he'd be back from leave in a week so he could surprise her. He finds his home gym cleaned out. Remembering the drill bits the victim had, they ask about Holt's safe.

In Abby's lab, she IDs the victim by her fingerprints as Mallory Bleeker, a convicted thief. She hadn't cracked the safe yet. They check Leandra Perkins' social network sites and find she's been at a health spa for the past four days. Previous posts mention her husband is on duty. The thief was staying in their empty house.

In the morgue, Duckie reports that Mallory was tabbed with a blunt knife. There was a piece of paper with a logo on it stuffed in her bra, probably put there post mortem.

Tony interviews Mallory's brother, Scott, a former accomplice. He says he hasn't talked to his sister in a year but insists he's out of crime. He gives a prostitute as his alibi.

Gibbs comes in and shows Scott the symbol on the paper. He insists he's never seen it. McGee watches from observation and recognizes it.

He calls Delilah in Dubai and confirms that they're tracking a terror group called Dragon's Tooth. As they're talking, Agent Larson interrupts asking for McGee's extra apartment key.

In MTAC, Delilah and her Homeland Security boss Rafi Ali brief NCIS. Dragon's Tooth uses social media to harass military members and their families. It's run by Omer Malik, a British citizen. Vance isn't impressed that they don't have more info and Ali ends the call abruptly. McGee is uneasy with how cozy Ali seemed with Delilah.

In the conference room, Holt blames Leandra for oversharing on their social networking page. They identify a friend on the list that neither recognizes.

McGee texts Delilah after not hearing from her all night. He found that Omer Malik is the cousin of Bashir Malik, who was an accomplice in the bombing that paralyzed Delilah, which she didn't mention.

Tony got one message from her about Agent Larson, but then nothing. He insists he cleared that up.

In the lab, Abby has connected the mystery friend on the list to Omer Malik. She found reference to a meeting taking place in less than an hour.

At the apartment, they intercept a pizza delivery guy and Ellie poses as him to get the man inside to open up. He says Malik is his roommate and he found him on Craigslist. He knows Malik is supposed to be meeting someone soon, but it hasn't happened yet.

The team waits until there's a knock on the door – it's Delilah and a bunch of armed ICE agents. She explains to Tim that Malik was meeting her deep cover alias. She's been in the States for a week.

Rafi Ali arrives and insists he was protecting his operation by not telling them. He continues being too friendly with Delilah.

Back at the office, McGee worries that something is going on with Delilah and Ali and Tony tries to convince McGee to give her some space.

Ali arrives and they gather in MTAC to watch home movies found in Malik's apartment. They're recordings of him breaking into empty houses and disturbing just enough to creep people out. Gibbs gets to work on IDing Malik's accomplice, whoever was holding his camera. Vance tells Ali that NCIS will handle the case.

When they're alone in MTAC, Ali assures McGee that he and Delilah were staying in separate rooms.

Downstairs, Ellie and Tony talk about the way social media is being used to recruit terrorists.

In the lab, Abby and McGee find the camera man touching the Perkins' banister. They trace his fingerprints and find it's the pizza delivery guy from outside Malik's apartment. He insists Malik found him online and he was only helping because it paid well. He says the Perkins house was supposed to be empty and Malik panicked when they saw the thief.

He offers them intel on Delilah's alias, saying that Malik was incredibly into recruiting her. Gibbs wants to use Delilah as bait. She finally calls McGee and he goes to see her. They start arguing about her keeping her orders from McGee. They both say they don't want to break up, but McGee says it sounds like they are.

There's a knock at the door. McGee answers – it's Malik holding a gun on him.

Gibbs calls McGee and gets his voice mail.

Rafi arrives at NCIS and is promptly hauled back into the elevator by Tony, Ellie and Gibbs, who demand he take them to the safehouse.

At the apartment, Malik has McGee and Delilah tied up on the floor. He wants to know if Delilah is really interested in selling him DOD secrets. With Malik out of earshot, McGee urges her to tell him what he wants to hear.

McGee and Delilah start fighting for Malik's benefit, but also hash out their own issues. "Why did you move half way around the world?" McGee asks. "Why did you let me?" "Because I love you," he says.

Malik buys it enough to crack McGee over the head and free Delilah. He gives her a gun, insisting that she shoot McGee to prove her allegiance.

As Malik holds a gun on her, McGee urges Delilah to pull the trigger, saying it's a test. She can't do it. McGee lectures her, saying the gun wasn't loaded, which is why he said it was a test.

Delilah reveal her plan, taking a knife out of her boot and stabbing Malik in the leg. He falls over McGee and drops his gun. McGee and Malik are scrambling for it when NCIS busts in.

After McGee is untied, he finally kisses Delilah a proper hello.

The next morning at NCIS, McGee is all smiles. Delilah joins them. Agent Ali was suspended for gross negligence. Delilah was promoted and she's moving back to DC.

Production Code: 12019
Summary: A petty officer's murder produces a lead in a 40-year-old airport bombing cold case that Gibbs and DiNozzo have been assigned to for the past two years. Meanwhile, McGee gets jealous that he was not previously involved in the case.

A prostitute gets into a car with a man who appears to be a john, but then it becomes clear that she knows him and is expecting him to protect her and her family. He's reassuring her she's safe when they're both shot to death is a hail of bullets.

Later on the scene, Tony shows up despite his plans to fly to Atlantic City with buddies at 2 p.m.

The man's ID says petty officer 2nd class Daniel Harvey, but they can't find any record of him. Back at the office, they ID the woman as Lolita Cortez, a Colombian native who returned from a two day trip there last night.

Gibbs dismisses Tony, but as he's leaving Gibbs reports that the male victim's car was requisitioned for an operative called Lex Talionis. Tony stops in his tracks and he and Gibbs wordlessly head for MTAC with Vance, locking out McGee and Bishop.

Inside they talk to Vice Admiral Dawn Tyson at the Pentagon, who says she doesn't know of any recent activity on the operation.

Later, they loop in McGee and Bishop. The op relates back to an unsolved bombing at Metropolitan International Airport in 1979. Two years ago NCIS agents in Colombia recovered a bomb with DNA matching the airport bombing. Gibbs was put in charge because of his Colombia experience. The subject is Tomas Orlando, a 62-year-old drug kingpin. They've been trying to get a DNA sample from him for months.

Down in the garage, Abby is miffed she wasn't used to run the DNA. But she found fingerprints belonging to a pimp named Eddie Rosario in the victim's car.

Back in MTAC, Gibbs talks to Tyson and Olivia Edmunds, the Ambassador to Colombia. The victim was Louis Freston, an intelligence specialist. Lolita's relatives in Colombia knew where Orlando got his hair cut. Freston filed a report saying Olivia had the hair sample sewn into the lining of her purse. They have cell phone footage of a witness that shows Rosario reaching into the car and stealing the purse.

Meanwhile, they think they have an opportunity to take out Orlando, but have to confirm his DNA first.

Duckie reports to Gibbs that Lolita has a scratched off tattoo on her behind from her pimp. Ellie tracked the tattoo parlor where it was done.

Tony and McGee head to the tattoo parlor and McGee is grumpy about not being read into the op sooner. They find Rosario in the parlor and bring the DNA sample back to Abby.

They conference with Seal Team Commander Joe Hankos, leader of the team ready to kill Orlando. His father was killed in the airport attack.

Gibbs talks to Rosario in interrogation. He denies knowing anything about Orlando and only taking her purse because she was working his turf.

Abby interrupts with the news that Orlando's DNA matches the bombing.

Everyone heads to MTAC to watch the SEAL operation, but Orlando is nowhere to be found.

Hankos says the compound was cleaned out in a hurry and they're on Orlando's trail. They found an encrypted laptop and Gibbs suggests McGee and Abby head to an aircraft carrier halfway to Colombia to help crack it.

But first Abby reports finding Orlando's niece, a Dr. Susanna Soto who lives in Baltimore. She was born in the States and her parents were killed when she was seven. She has no obvious connections to Colombia. Gibbs sends Tony and Ellie into Soto's walk-in parenting class. Except when they get there, it turns out to be a couples intimacy class. Ellie tries to excuse herself to mirror Soto's computer, but Soto insists she sit down and hold Tony's hands and stare into his eyes.

Abby and McGee arrive on the aircraft carrier, where a petty officer John Goode says he's already cracked it. He recognizes Abby from when she dated someone he knew 11 years ago – when McGee and Abby were dating. Abby is busted but McGee assures her it's no big deal.

Tony and Ellie return to MTAC with Soto's files. They worry about sorting through them to find Orlando. But then Orlando shows up at NCIS seeking asylum.

In interrogation, Orlando claims to be a freedom fighter who only sells drugs to support his cause. He says he had nothing to do with the airport attack and is being set up. He says Lolita's family came to him for protection after she was killed and he realized he was he was being framed. He gives them a hair sample.

With Abby on the carrier, Duckie and Palmer test it.

Back in MTAC, Gibbs and Vance report to the ambassador that Orlando's DNA doesn't match the airport bomb.

From the ship, Abby joins the conference call to report that a key stroke logger shows someone was monitoring Orlando's laptop for week: Ambassador Edmunds. She bails on the call.

The military police catch her and bring her to NCIS where she asks Gibbs to make a deal. She says she was threatened into cooperating.

Cut to news reports about a drone strike on a compound belonging to Armand Luna, another drug lord in Colombia. His DNA was linked to the bombing.

Guest Stars: Robert Wagner (Anthony DiNozzo Sr.), Marisol Nichols (ATF Special Agent Zoé Keates), Myndy Crist (Jennifer Vickers), Randy Vasquez (ATF Special Agent Philip Caffey), Gill Gayle (Waylon), Octavius J. Johnson (Gary), Edward Edwards (Older Man), Alexandra Kyle (Emma Vickers)
Production Code: 12020
Summary: DiNozzo is partnered with his girlfriend ATF Special Agent Zoé Keates after evidence reveals that the murder weapon in an NCIS case was originally purchased for the controversial ATF sting operation "Operation Fast and Furious." Also, Anthony DiNozzo Sr. returns to town for a special dinner to meet his son's girlfriend.

We open with a roadside pick-up crew finding a dead motorcyclist by the side of the road.

DiNozzo's father is coming to town, and he claims to be happy that Anthony Sr. wants to meet Zoe.

The dead motorcyclist turns out to be Marine David Austin. He died of a broken neck, but a bullet wound to the chest caused the accident.

Anthony Sr. drops by the office, in town earlier than expected. They make plans for dinner that night with Zoe.

Abby finds a match for the slug pulled from Austin's chest. It matches a weapon purchased directly from the manufacturer by the ATF. It was part of the disastrous Fast and Furious operation that has planned to track weapons as they made their way to the Cartels. 1,300 of those guns, including the murder weapon, are still unaccounted for.

DiNozzo volunteers to help Zoe track the weapon as it made its way from Mexico to D.C.

Abby finds out that Austin was shot from a few feet away, likely from a car traveling at approximately the same speed. And not only was Austin's motorcycle almost out of gas, but he had passed a station just a few miles earlier.

Zoe and DiNozzo argue about how to handle the ATF agents they are interviewing.

It turns out that Austin swiped his credit card at the station, but never purchased any gas. Surveillance footage from the station shows that before buying gas Austin was distracted by a car, which he then proceeded to follow.

Dinner that night is a disaster. Anthony Sr. tries to make dinner by ends up setting a small fire in DiNozzo's kitchen. DiNozzo is furious and makes a point to say how happy he is that his father lives in New York.

Abby enhances the video from the gas station. We can see that a woman in the passenger seat mouthed "Help me" to Austin.

The car Austin chased was registered to a woman named Jennifer Vickers, though the woman in the car was not her.

Gibbs tells DiNozzo that Anthony Sr. crashed at his house the previous night. DiNozzo then tells Gibbs he no longer thinks she should be working with Zoe.

Zoe and Van have a video interview with an ATF agent who was part of the Arizona sting involving the weapons. He agrees to look into the serial number.

Gibbs and Bishop meet with Vickers. She tells them her daughter Emma was using the car. Emma has battled drug addiction for years and Vickers thinks she must be using again.

DiNozzo gets caught in lie with Zoe. The agent comes back with no information on the murder weapon, but DiNozzo doesn't buy it.

Anthony Sr. and Gibbs have a drink together. Anthony Sr. talks about getting older and wanting to be closer to his son.

Emma's body is found in an alley inside the car. She died earlier that evening.

Gibbs brings DiNozzo back to his place and tells him to work things out with his father. DiNozzo agrees to help him find an apartment in town.

Indications are that Emma died of a drug overdose. There are also signs of abuse. There is evidence somebody tried to wipe down the car. DNA from the assault kit returns a name, Jamie Rivers. Rivers has a history of assault and matches the description from the gas station. They also find a picture of Rivers being arrested by the very same ATF agent they've been working with.

Anthony Sr. tells his son that he's found an apartment in his building. DiNozzo is less than pleased.

The ATF agent tells them his agency cut Rivers a deal to work with them on Fast and Furious. Back then Rivers told the ATF the gun in question was still in Mexico, but clearly he lied.

Zoe's plan to find Rivers is to go through one of her local informants. He's been selling to drug dealers and has now become an addict himself. Zoe will set up a buy with Rivers.

Rivers shows up to the fake buy, but when he pulls a gun Gibbs is forced to shoot him.

DiNozzo and Zoe work out their differences and agree to give the relationship a chance. Both DiNozzo and Anthony Sr. agree that he shouldn't be living quite that close.

Summary: Gibbs and Bishop go to Afghanistan after the murder of a marine in Washington, D.C., is linked to a terror group that is holding another marine hostage overseas. Meanwhile, DiNozzo gets upset when he learns that McGee is the new face of NCIS on recruitment brochures.

A Marine, Joseph Wilkes, goes to wake up his captain at his house and sees him lying dead on the floor inside. After kicking down the door, a masked intruder attacks Wilkes with a baseball bat. Wilkes chokes his attacker until the attacker stabs him in the side with a knife and runs off.

At the office, Tony is peeved to learn that McGee has been chosen as the new face of NCIS — he's on the brochure.

Gibbs summons them to the crime scene. The victim was put in a stress position with rope, so any struggle by the victim only choked him more. He died early that morning. The victim is Marine Captain David Landis, stationed at Quantico.

Tony and Bishop interview a witness who saw a young Middle Eastern man fleeing the scene.

Gibbs talks to Wilkes, who served two tours in Afghanistan with Landis. He blames himself for the killer getting away.

Gibbs visits Abby's lab, where she's trying to set a calm scene before telling Gibbs the fingerprints at the crime scene belong to Kaseem Nasir, a 21-year-old Afghani with ties to the Taliban.

Back in the office, McGee is standing proudly next to a life-sized cut-out of himself that's going to be displayed in every NCIS office. Palmer and Ellie lay the praise on thick until Tony can't take it anymore.

Gibbs shows up for the victim rundown. Landis' unit returned from Afghanistan eight months ago. Kaseem Nasir has an older brother named Rasheed who has claimed responsibility for more than 100 deaths for the Taliban.

In the morgue, Duckie reports that Landis was stabbed seven times with non-lethal wounds, meant to inflict pain. Duckie theorizes the lethal slice to his neck was inflicted when Wilkes arrives unexpected and that the killer hadn't achieved his goal in torturing Landis.

Tony and McGee track down Kaseem Nasir and find a tactical knife on him. Back in interrogation, Kassim pleads his innocence.

Bishop finds Gibbs and tells him she thinks Kaseem might be innocent. He and his brother didn't exist before 2011. They're Kaseem and Rasheed Matar, brothers who went missing after their parents were missing in 2008. Ellie thinks the Taliban took them in and forced them to follow their ideology, but Kaseem didn't go along.

Abby tells Gibbs that the knife isn't the murder weapon, and it belongs to Landis, who shows up to tell Gibbs that he and Wilkes snuck Kaseem into the country. "He's one of us," Landis says.

Landis shows the team footage of Kaseem trying to warn their Humvee to stop before it hit an IED. He pulled them to safety and watched over them until help arrived. He joined their unit as a translator. Landis and Wilkes snuck him into the country, fearing he'd be a target in Afghanistan. Gibbs warns him he'll face consequences.

Ellie gets a text from her NSA friend Martinez, who meets with Ellie to show her a bounty that Rasheed put out on Kaseem. They realize the killer was torturing Landis for information on Kaseem.

At NCIS, Kaseem tells Gibbs and Wilkes that the Taliban didn't kill his parents — his brother did. Wilkes gives Kaseem Landis' dog tags.

Vance calls Gibbs in to show him a video of Rasheed holding a Marine hostage, demanding Kaseem in exchange. Vance tells him the State Department has agreed.

Gibbs and Ellie accompany Kaseem on a military transport back to Afghanistan. Ellie assures Kaseem they won't let the deal go through. Ellie tells him about her 18 months stationed in Pakistan as an analyst. A coworker of hers was killed.

Back in Abby's lab, she tells McGee the murder weapon was a knife sold only to the US Military and private contractors.

In Afghanistan, Kaseem is greeted warmly by members of his old unit. The commander says turning over Kaseem isn't an option.

Back at NCIS, Tony and McGee are trying to narrow down the suspect list based on who had access to the knife. Tony realizes whoever attacked Landis wanted to follow their investigation to Kaseem and they focus on the eye witness, Ken Ashmore, with WingSpan security forces. He was in the Army until 2007 and WingSpan had such a bad reputation it was forced to shut down. He was stationed in Kabul.

They find the murder weapon in Ashmore's house with his prints on it. He says Landis was protecting a terrorist. But McGee found emails between Ashmore and Rasheed and a deposit of $50,000. Ashmore denies knowing where Rasheed is but says his hostage is as good as dead and so is anyone who tries to stop him.

In Afghanistan, they get word that Kaseem has fled the base by himself — to turn himself over to his brother. They find the burned out Humvee nearby and a bullet proof vest with a bloody bullet wound to the shoulder.

Back in MTAC, McGee, Tony and Vance look at satellite imagery of a Taliban safe house. In Afganistan, Gibbs suggests Ellie drive in by herself because she'll arouse the least suspicion. She argues she's not trained for it, but Gibbs insists.

Ellie drives up to the compound claiming to be a doctor and quickly finds a gun in her face.

In the compound, Kaseem is alive, but bleeding from his bullet wound. The Marine hostage is badly beaten, but still alive. Ellie is brought in by Rasheed's men as a distraction, quickly followed by Gibbs and the Army unit. They kill Rasheed and take Kaseem and the hostage to safety.

Back at NCIS, Tony apologizes for not being more supportive of McGee as the new face of NCIS.

McGee confesses it was all an April Fool's joke. Tony can't be mad. "I've taught them well," he says.

In Afghanistan, Ellie commends Kaseem for his misplaced bravery. She and Gibbs break the news to Kaseem that his special immigrant visa came through — he'll be working as a translator for NCIS.

Production Code: 12022
Summary: Special Agent Ned Dorneget from NCIS cyber operations assists the team when an ensign who worked in the Office of Naval Intelligence is murdered. Meanwhile, the team learn that Jake and Gibbs have become good friends.

A couple gets a late night slice of pie and the man's in the middle of proposing way too soon – their eleventh date – when a woman crashes into the diner with a wound in her neck.

At the office in the morning, Jake drops after carpooling with Ellie. Tony and McGee are jealous to learn that Jake and Gibbs talk almost daily.

Gibbs comes in with the body of the week.

At the crime scene, the victim has a slit throat. She's Navy ensign Janine Wilt but her whole file is classified. They find a Gordon Poly high school shirt in her car and Ellie and Gibbs head there. She's a volunteer basketball coach who stayed after practice last night and left around 11 p.m.

She was a cyber warfare engineer with the office of naval intelligence. Her personnel file went dark two weeks ago.

At the office, Vance and Gibbs talk to her captain, who sings her praises. She was working on the Sword of Satan Colombian drug ring, she hacked their dark web and tapped their communications. The captain is sure they picked up every member of the cartel, but Gibbs isn't so sure.

Special Agent Ned Dorneget joins them from the cyber division to try to crack Wilt's laptop.

Down in the morgue, Duckie tells Gibbs that Wilt was cut with a wide blade and had the knife held to her throat before she was killed.

Ellie finds surveillance of Wilt's car running a red light at 11:42 p.m., before she was hurt.

Going through Wilt's emails, they find reference to Alfredo Montez, who did computer work for the cartel. They wonder if he went after Wilt when she made him look bad by cracking their network.

Tony and Ellie pick up Montez, who is surprised they didn't come to kill him. In interrogation, he's relieved they're legit. He clearly doesn't know who hacked his system.

Abby calls Gibbs down to the garage, where she found evidence someone was in Wilt's back-seat, holding a knife to her throat.

In the office, Dornegut finds that Wilt accessed a computer belonging to someone named Adem Faruk Korkmaz from her laptop.

McGee and Ellie head to Adem's suburban home where his typical teenage daughter answers the door. Adem, who is in the import-export business, says he didn't know Wilt and there's no way she had access to his computer. He won't let them look at his computer without a warrant, which McGee later fails to get from a judge because another agency has jurisdiction.

Vance gets word it's the NSA, using a FISA warrant to monitor Adem's dealings with Turkey. Ellie goes to her husband for information.

He tells her NSA has been monitoring Adem for months but he gets angry that she's asking him to reveal classified information. He thinks she's acting differently and she confesses that she shot a man in Kabul last week.

He can't believe she didn't tell him, but she throws it back in his face, saying they don't talk anymore. She's pretending she's fine, but she's not. She tries to leverage his sympathy for help on the current case.

The next morning, Ellie is in a foul mood. Tony and McGee notice when Jake comes in and is cool to Ellie and gets a glare from Gibbs. Gibbs and Jake head up to Vance's office, but Gibbs won't let Ellie come.

Gibbs is annoyed at Jake, who quickly reverses course and hands over Adem's SST drive. Dornegut and McGee find Adem is shipping and receiving tons of designer clothes. They find files protected by the same firewall Wilt used.

The only thing left is a deleted email account and list of screen names from a chat room.

When they go to see Adem in interrogation, he thinks they're interested in the designer hand-bag knock-offs he was buying. He doesn't know anything about the email account or chat room, but recognizes a screen name as belonging to his daughter Layna. She goes to Gordon Poly and is on the basketball team.

She comes in to talk to Gibbs and Ellie and her father encourages her to tell them everything. She admits using his computer to visit chat rooms, but says it got weird when people started asking if she knew her true calling, so she quit. Then she started getting weird messages from "crazy people" saying she needed a purpose in life. She went to Wilt for help and Wilt accessed the computer remotely to delete the email and block everyone.

Layna points out the screen names of the people who harassed her.

After examining tissue samples from Wilt's neck, Abby reports the murder weapon was likely an old Vietnamese bayonet. She has a list of collectors in the area and they match the name Peter Simek to one of chat room aliases used by Bradley Simek.

Tony and McGee head to the Simek house. There's a display case missing a bayonet. Brad is a teenager and his late father, Peter, who was in the military. They find a 3D computer in Brad's room but he races off in his mom's minivan.

Brad also attends Gordon Poly, but Layna doesn't know him. Duckie offers a profile on Brad, saying he was susceptible to being lured into a terrorist cause. Brad's father died of a heart attack three years ago but Brad still emailed him every week.

Duckie suggests Brad went after Wilt because she could expose him, to prove himself.

In the lab, Abby finds traces of gun powder on Brad's computer and a blueprint for a plastic detonator on Brad's computer. He has a bomb. They trace his phone. His mom calls him and tries to convince him to come home, but he hangs up. They figure out he's on a bus and try to reach the driver to tell him to pull over.

There is a mother with a baby in the back and dozens of people.

NCIS catches up to the bus. Brad grabs his detonator but NCIS hustles all the passengers off the bus as Brad hesitates. Gibbs gets on and aims at him, but then sees that Brad isn't prepared to go through with it and lowers his weapon. Brad insists he didn't kill Wilt and Gibbs calmly talks him through putting down his bag.

Brad is almost to the steps of the bus and ready to surrender when local police pull up and Brad gets spooked. Gibbs tries to keep him calm, telling him he's a good kid.

Then Gibbs can see he's lost Brad as Brad says: "No, I'm not."

Brad turns and runs to the back of the empty bus and detonates his bomb, knocking Gibbs to the ground in a fireball as it explodes.

To be continued. . .

Summary: The NCIS cyber case turns into a united global effort after evidence confirms "The Calling", an international terrorist group that recruits children through the internet, has been purchasing S-bombs off the black market.

The episode began with Tim and Ellie going through the remains of the bus that was bombed when Brad Simek killed himself. They are both feeling guilty about not getting there in time and Ellie mentions that things could have been worse. Outside, Gibbs and Tony talk about what to do to move the case forward and catch the recruiter before Gibbs goes to see Ducky. His colleague noticed a burn pattern on Brad's arm that he thinks could have been a tattoo. Gibbs is distracted, though, when he sees a young boy looking at him. However, before he can go over to him, the kid runs off.

Back in the NCIS building, Dorneget is standing outside of MTAC when Tim and Tony come up to him. They tease him about being nervous about going into MTAC for the first time, which can be daunting. Dorneget tells them he is just getting into character for his alter ego that works well under pressure. Tim jokes that he could be Sasha Fierce and Beyonce but Dorneget claims he thought of himself as Clark Kent and Superman before telling them he is Gilroy Libbs. He goes into MTAC easily.

Inside, Dorneget, Vance, Gibbs, and Tim talk to foreign dignitaries about the case. They discover a group known as The Calling is using cyber techniques to recruit children into terrorism.

There is a man named Matthew Rousseau in France they are trying to find who is believed to be part of the group since he runs communication with the terror cell there. The team also finds out that they are looking for S-mines on the black market.

Gibbs and Abby talk about the case and she tells him about S-mines, which are deadly and can't be easily found. She tells him that they would need a "scary friend" who knows where to get them and Gibbs has one himself. He goes to talk to Agah Bayar, the DIA agent he has dealt with in the past. He asks for help finding information on the S-mines and who is looking for them. Bayar agrees to help and asks which of them is making a deal with the devil.

Ducky, Gibbs, and Abby are in Ducky's lab, where Ducky and Abby are jamming to Abby's music. Eventually, Ducky tells Gibbs the markings on Brad's body are not a tattoo, but something written in permanent marker. He found they matched a man named Randall White, who was part of the group attempting to assassinate the Imam from several episodes prior. Just like Simek, they also had weapons that were printed off of a 3-D printer. The terror cell that recruited White and his two accomplices is connected to The Calling. They can't talk to Kyle Nasry since he is dead so they decide to bring in Sarah Goode.

Vance tells Dorneget and Tim they have been selected to be part of a think tank in Cairo, Egypt to work on finding Michael Rousseau. Dorneget is very excited and when Gibbs comes in, he goes to shake his hand, but ends up knocking some pens over from Vance's desk. Dorneget then leaves and Tim follows so they can get ready to go. Gibbs learns from Vance that DIA heard about the deal he made with Agah and shut it down.

Sarah Goode is in interrogation with Ellie and Tony. She willingly gives them some information, including that they are looking for Sadiq Samar, who is on the list of user names that they show her. He had broken off of the cell she had been a part of in Syria to join The Calling. She is willing to do what she can to stop them. After she identifies him, Goode tells them to make sure to "end him."

Tony, Gibbs, and Ellie track down Samir based on a building he had put money down for under an alias. They leave to investigate the building and inside, they find a bayonet that could have been their murder weapon that killed Ensign Wilt. When they arrive, Gibbs finds the boy from earlier hiding and holding a gun. He slowly walks toward him and is able to take the gun from the kid. Ellie puts flex cuffs on the kid's wrists.

Gibbs talks to the kid in the interview room while a social worker watches. However, the kid refuses to talk to him. Eventually, Gibbs leaves and finds out the kid, Luke Harris, was born to Iraqi parents before he was put up for adoption. Tony and Ellie read from a script Abby gave them to report findings she found on Luke's laptop that she is unable to give Gibbs herself. They tell Gibbs there were numerous chat rooms being used since Samar would vacate one and use another, making sure to delete the old one. They find out from the chat that Luke found out about the bus bombing afterwards, which is why he went there.

Later, Abby talks to Gibbs about someone she knows who works with historical documents and found out the building that Samar bought had a bunker that could be used for storage. She makes it clear she wants to go when she pulls out Poppy, her parasol that she uses whenever she leaves the building.

Tim and Dorneget go to Cairo and meet up with one of the dignitaries they spoke to in MTAC. Their first meeting with Interpol is an hour from then. They find out that Michael Rousseau was captured and he needs an escort back to the United States since he faces bombing charges. Tim volunteers to go talk to him while Dorneget stays behind at the hotel for the Interpol meeting.

Tony and Ellie are investigating the bunker as Abby asks them what was going on. They go inside a secret room where they find evidence of a test bombing, complete with shrapnel and mannequins ripped apart. Eventually, they find a ripped up diagram Samar had made and it looks like it was used for bombs. He was trying to figure out how to connect them, but are now wondering where they are.

Gibbs goes to talk to Luke's adoptive parents. They reveal that their son had been a normal, happy kid, but then something happened and he changed. Kids at school had apparently given him a hard time when they found out he was originally from Iraq. Luke's mother asks Gibbs to bring her son back as Gibbs holds a baseball glove that belonged to Luke.

Gibbs is at his house with Luke, who is barely touching his food. He gets Luke to put his milk away before telling him a story about his daughter, Kelly. She had once taken his favorite pocket knife without asking and carved her initials in his cabinet. When the knife was lost, he scolded her just like any parent would. Luke is only barely listening before he tries to run out. He tells Gibbs to just end his life because he is "nothing."

Vance, Gibbs, and Tony are talking about the bombs Samar had put together. There were eight total and two were detonated using a trip wire in the bunker and another six are missing but linked to wifi so they can easily go off. They need Luke to talk about Samar. In order to get Agah's help, Gibbs has a plan to blackmail him.

Tony and Ellie talk to Agah, who is only interested in talking to Ellie. They ask for his help, but blackmail him by attempting to use his mother. Bayar is angry and tells them that he would have helped without blackmail and that babies should never be used for wars.

Ducky gives Gibbs a psychological profile of Luke based on what he has found out about the boy. While Luke has those dark thoughts in his head, there is still some of his old self in him. Ducky tells Gibbs one of the things The Calling does is make their targets disown those who love them. Luke had started a suicide note, but then couldn't finish it.

Gibbs takes the unfinished note to Luke and tells him to finish it so they can show his parents. However, Luke doesn't want to because deep down, he loves his parents. Eventually, he asks Gibbs to take him home and says he will talk about Samar.

Down in the lab, Abby and Ellie talk as they watch a chat room by Samar. Abby learns Samar had told Luke to stay in the bunker where he was found, likely so he could kill the team. They find out that the chat room is talking about Luke and how he was a traitor. They are planning to show him what happens to traitors.

Gibbs arrives at the parents' house, only to find the door open. He orders Luke to stay in the car and goes inside. He makes the discovery that both the mother and father are dead. Before he can do anything, Luke comes in and screams when he sees his parents are dead.

Tim is in the middle of interrogating Matthew, who doesn't say much and tells Tim he is not asking the right questions since he is focusing on the United States. But when he begins talking about the fact that Tim is missing their big party at the hotel, Tim reaches the horrifying conclusion that the bomb is at the party. He calls for a phone and immediately contacts Dorneget.

As he listens to Tim talking about the bombs, Dorneget looks stunned before he begins an evacuation. He rushes people along and then once the place is mostly empty, he notices a red trip wire line near one of the steps. He looks up and sees a man looking at him before walking away. Before he can do anything else, another man accidentally walks across the red line, causing six bombs to come out into the air. Dorneget whirls around in shock just as the bombs explode, causing him to fall to the ground with wounds on his face.

In the squad room, Tony and Ellie are trying to get information on Dorneget while Gibbs impatiently waits. For now, they know Dorneget was rushed to the hospital. But within a few minutes, Ellie gets the news that Dorneget has passed away. Gibbs is upset, as he wants to find out who is running this operation. They decide to set up a meeting with Bayar.

Tony talks to Bayar, who won't give information until Ellie joins them. When she arrives and they begin talking, where Bayar informs them that other attacks are being orchestrated, a car speeds by and someone begins shooting, wounding Bayar.

Vance and Gibbs talk about Dorneget. Gibbs is distracted when he sees a pen on the floor, which Dorneget had dropped the last time he saw the man. SecNav confirmed to Vance that Dorneget saved lives and would have wanted Gibbs to be informed. Dorneget's mother won't arrive in time to see his body home, so Gibbs says the team will go.

The team arrives at the airstrip to welcome Dorneget's body home. Tim walks off the plane and stands beside Abby. As the casket is being taken to the hearse, Gibbs sees visions of agents they have lost before, including Paula Cassidy, Kate Todd, Mike Franks, Dorneget, Jenny Shepard, and Christopher Pacci. A car pulls up and a woman walks out. She touches Ned's casket before Vance introduces her as CIA officer Joanne Teague, Dorneget's mother. She tells them they need to find the killers who murdered her son.

Summary: NCIS feverishly investigates a global terrorist group that is recruiting teens via the Internet, following a deadly bombing overseas that resulted in an emotional and surprising loss for the team.

When the episode opened, Joanna Teague, the CIA officer who is also Ned's mother, is torturing Sadiq Samar in an effort to find out where Luke is. When he gives the boy's location, she makes a phone call to Gibbs to tell him she knows where the boy has been taken.

The episode brings us back hours earlier as Joanna is in Vance's office with both the director and Gibbs. She wants to be read in on their case so she can help find the people who killed her son. They tell her Ned always wanted to be seen as being a capable agent in his own right and no one besides the two of them knew about his family lineage. Joanna talks about her son and begins to tear up slightly before composing herself. After telling Gibbs Ned always talked about his rules, he brings up number 10, which is never to be personally involved in a case. Despite this, she still does not back down.

Down in the bullpen, Tony and Tim are watching the director's office before they discuss the case with Ellie. They know Sadiq and Rousseau are the face of The Calling and they need to find out who ranks on the next level. We learn that Sadiq handled the bomb that was found in Egypt and Matthew Rousseau had admitted the involvement. After Tim talks, Tony pats his back and tells him they are glad he is back with them.

Joanna comes down to meet the team. Ellie gives her condolences and when Tim speaks, his guilt is evidenced as he tells her he shouldn't have left her son. Joanna dismisses this, telling him they all did their jobs they had to do. She meets Tony, who is surprised when he finds out that Ned thought highly of his relationship with his father. Gibbs comes down and receives a call from Ducky. He tells Joanna, who steels herself.

Down in the morgue, Joanna prepares herself to see her son's body, which is still in the body bag. Ducky opens it and Joanna says goodbye to her son. While they are down there, Gibbs also hears Mike's ghost, asking how many more agents will die.

She asks about seeing the bomb fragments that are in his body and Gibbs tells Ducky it's fine, even though he wants to do the autopsy first. Jimmy is also there and he gives Joanna his condolences. Ducky pulls a Titanium ball bearing from Ned's neck. Joanna thinks they might be able to track down the ball bearings. Gibbs has someone he can contact.

The team tells Gibbs a blond man was seen at the hotel during the time of the bombing. There was also security camera footage of Sadiq at that same hotel a month prior. They also have evidence showing he came to Virginia, which was when Janine Wilt was killed. Gibbs' contact, Pavlenko, had discovered the ball bearings came from an aerospace facility that was purchased by a dummy corporation. The facility, Bianca Aviation, had the ball bearings and Roger Dietz signed for it.

Gibbs meets up with Luke, who is wearing headphones as Paula sits nearby. Luke appears to be feeling guilty that people are dead because of him. He doesn't appear to say much as Gibbs tries to console him. Luke tells Gibbs he might know how to show him who shot his parents.

In Abby's lab, she has a stuffed giraffe known as Safari Sandy that came from Luke's room. It has a nanny cam inside it and caught the entire murder of Luke's parents. Gibbs watches the video.

In the interview room, Joanna is looking at a photo of herself and Ned. She cries softly before Luke comes in with Paula, having forgotten his homework. When he realizes her son is the agent who was killed, Luke says everything is his fault. Joanna asks if he can help her catch who did it, Luke goes quiet before leaving.

Tony and Ellie go to talk to Roger Dietz, who denies knowing anything about selling his ball bearings to Sadiq. However, they have evidence that shows the transaction. Dietz appears nervous and tries to say their inventory is accounted for and that they won't find anything. Tony begs to differ.

Gibbs interrogates Matthew Rousseau about the ball bearings and the dummy corporation. However, Rousseau is not helpful. Gibbs asks why they are recruiting children and Rousseau comments that they can be shown the way to rise up. Mike's ghost tells Gibbs to "break" Rousseau. Then Rousseau cryptically asks about the time in Arizona. Gibbs gets a call from Tim to inform him there was a bombing in the Grand Canyon.

In the bullpen, the team is gathering information about the bombing. Tony tells them there was one fatality and a few injuries. Two busses full of tourists were just minutes away from being at the spot where the bombing occurred. Ellie finds confirmation that Dietz had records indicating he was in contact with Sadiq. They determined the phone was left near a college campus. Gibbs tells Tony and Ellie to go find Sadiq. Tim finds information that Ned had been unable to finish working on when he died. It is loud music that is apparently being used by The Calling to give to the recruits.

Tony and Ellie are looking around trying to see if anyone knows Sadiq. They see one boy listening to music and stop him to talk. He looks like he is younger than a college student and when they show a picture of Sadiq, he runs away.

Joanna, Gibbs, and Luke are out for breakfast. Mike's ghost is still present, reminding Gibbs to be careful since Luke is not a good kid anymore. Luke is not very responsive as he listens to music on his headphones. Joanna tries to ask if she can hear his music, but he ignores her. He asks to go back to Gibbs' house and as he walks off, Joanna stops Gibbs to tell him that Luke is "playing him." Mike's ghost also tells Gibbs that she didn't forget rule 36, which is about feeling like you are being played.

The boy from earlier, Elan, knocks on a door and Sadiq answers. He tells Sadiq that people are looking for him. They talk about getting Luke so they can leave for Iraq.

In Abby's lab, Tim walks in to see her listening to the music on her headphones. She tells him the music is horrible and that when she broke up the layers on the track, she found a particular beat that sounded like it was in Morse Code.

The team decodes a song found on Brad Simek's computer and the message has the phrase "Prove what you can do," which is what was sent to him before he blew himself up. Vance asks Gibbs where Luke is, who informs him security and child services has him. He tells Tim they need to go to MTAC.

In MTAC, they speak with Commissioner Girard from France, who Ned had helped to rescue before his death. She tells Joanna about her son's bravery and we learn that they know each other. She tells them that kids are now being sent video games that have a message once you win the crown at the end. Ned was going to be asked to play it, but she tells them he had said Tim was good at video games and calls him "Elf Lord." Tim makes a comment about his mother saying he'd never get paid to play video games and agrees to try out the game.

Elan shows up at Gibbs' house and knocks on the door. Paula answers, but doesn't want to let him in, and is confused about how he found the house. Luke watches from the stairs.

Gibbs and Joanna talk in the elevator as Mike's ghost appears once again. Joanna is lamenting on how they are chasing so many people and it's hard to know who they are trying to catch anymore. The elevator stops and Ellie is standing there when it opens. She tells them something happened at Gibbs' house.

Gibbs and Ellie go to his house, where Paula is on the couch with a head injury. Luke is gone and Ellie describes the kid she saw with Tony. They realize the kid has him. Gibbs leaves and tells Joanna to "say it" but she is quiet as her phone beeps.

In Vance's office, we learn that Joanna is doing undercover work for the CIA against The Calling. Vance is worried her work with NCIS could disrupt her cover, but she still wants to remain on the case to catch Sadiq. She is sure she can handle it, but tells him he is welcome to call her boss. But she also makes it clear if he does, then they could lose Sadiq and Luke. When she leaves, he picks up his phone.

Gibbs is standing in the morgue staring at Ned's body. Mike's ghost comes back to him and Gibbs asks why he has shown up. Mike remarks he is so busy trying to save other people and questions who will save Gibbs.

The next scene takes viewers back to what happened at the beginning of the episode after Joanna called Gibbs. There is a knock on the door and Gibbs is standing there, looking less than thrilled to see Sadiq tortured. Gibbs talks to Joanna in the small space, not happy she used her CIA intel for herself. Joanna points out that he killed people and Gibbs tells her he cares more about his agent he lost. They ask why Luke was taken and Sadiq reveals because they had him "in custody." Joanna and Gibbs realize that Luke could possibly give them information on the team members since they had been around him. Joanna tells Gibbs Luke is in Zakho.

Gibbs calls Tim and asks him to look for Daniel Budd, who is the leader of The Calling. Tim asks his boss where he is and is stunned to find out he has Sadiq in custody. The team finds out Daniel Budd had once been a DJ, which is likely where the music had come from, before he got into terrorism. An informant of Ellie sends her a test that they identified Luke in Zakho, so Joanna, Gibbs, and Tony all head down there.

In Zakho, Joanna tells them a group of kids from Western countries were found in the area and taken to different locations. Gibbs splits up from Tony and Joanna when he sees a suspicious young girl. Back at NCIS, Vance interrogates Sadiq, who appears to know Vance is a great interrogator. He shows Sadiq photos of his victims, but gets no reaction. Vance asks about targets and Sadiq makes a cryptic comment about older people sitting on their benches. He tells Vance age is the enemy.

In Zakho, they are still trying to track the girl when Gibbs suggests they split up.

Tim is trying to finish the game as Ellie and Abby look on. Eventually, he wins the crown and images of different targets appear on the screen. Ellie realizes they have kids on the inside and Luke could still be with The Calling. Vance rushes in and asks where all the Supreme Court justices are. They are apparently on their way to a retreat and Vance orders them to put security measures in place.

Gibbs goes up to the girl he followed and tells her she shouldn't be there alone. She looks at him with an evil glint as she tells him her new friends told her to walk around. Nearby, Tony gets a call on his phone. It is Daniel Budd and Tony looks around, trying to see where he could be. Joanna gets stuck when people end up crowding her. As Budd taunts Tony, Gibbs sees Elan and turns to see Luke standing there with a gun. Tony listens to Daniel tell him that Luke is only a kid just as Luke pulls the trigger before Gibbs can pull his weapon. Tony can only watch in stunned horror as Luke shoots Gibbs twice, once in the leg and once in the chest. Gibbs collapses as Luke walks past him.

Summary: Gibbs fights for his life after being shot by Luke. Meanwhile, Agent DiNozzo and Johanna travel to Egypt to take down The Calling Luke Harris was the young man that Agent Gibbs had befriended last season. That kid had nearly set off a bomb for a secret terrorist cell merely on their say so yet Gibbs was the only one that was willing to overlook that in order to get Luke the help he actually needed. And at the time he was sure Luke would get the help he needed behind bars.

Not because he wasn't dangerous but Gibbs felt that with a second chance Luke might just be able to turn his life around.

Gibbs had seen a kid that desired a way out and so he became the kid's only friend. He took him in, he bonded with him, and he had even tried to protect Luke from retaliation from the Calling.

But on last season's finale it was the same the kid, the one that Gibbs had so valiantly fought for, that betrayed them all by returning to the Calling and following their orders. And when they commanded him to shoot Gibbs — he did.

Luke shot Gibbs twice. One in the leg and once in the chest. And it was that chest wound that had Gibbs lying between life and death. Which was a problem for his unit!

Gibbs had immediately been transferred to the USS Daniel Webster following the shooting and a Dr. Taft had taken over his care. So while Gibbs was fighting for his life and seeing far too much of the family that he had lost, the rest of unit was forced back out into the field. Director Vance had demanded that Agent DiNozzo and CIA Officer Joanna Teague (mother of the murdered NCIS Special Agent Ned Dorneget) return to Iraq. He said the Calling was still within their grasp and that Gibbs would want them to finally dismantle The Calling.

So those two weren't around when Gibbs came to and, admittedly, they lucked out. Because although Gibbs returned to work, Director Vance decided to be cautious with his agent and he had him put on administrative leave. Meaning Gibbs was going to be bound to desk until Dr. Taft gave Vance the all-clear.

And there's nothing worse than caged Gibbs.

He wanted to be back out there doing something and it was killing him that the Calling had managed to invade authorities in Iraq and was reportedly in Shanghai. So he tried to contact DiNozzo yet he was put off. DiNozzo told him "Rule 45". It means to clean up your own mess. And DiNozzo was still blaming himself from getting distracted in Iraq and not coming to Gibbs's aid fast enough.

But there was no way Gibbs was actually going to sit a fight out. And not long after the call with DiNozzo, he approached Matthew Rousseau. So far Matthew is the only member of the Calling still in custody and Gibbs wanted to know how much he knew about his leader's end game.

Only Matthew didn't want to be forthcoming. And that was even after he somehow got a pen stuck in his hand. So Gibbs might have gone too far but he was doing it for a good cause.

Though, no one knew the extent of how much they needed information until they all got called in by Director Vance. Vance had been notified by the US Secretary of Defense about a North Korean warship that just happened to be in nearby waters and apparently this concerns NCIS.

It seems someone has been using Dorneget's laptop to send messages to North Koreans and it was up to Agent McGee to figure out what those message were. However, right before his country started World War 3, he realized something. He knew no one had been sending messages at all.

Instead a hacker had made it look like message were being sent meanwhile they were using Dorneget's computer to infiltrate the US Defense System. And once they were in they then made it appear that a North Korean ship was on the verge of attacking. So McGee find did stop a war and more importantly it stopped Daniel Budd.

DiNozzo eventually caught up to Luke and the kid was so distraught about what he did to Gibbs — he told the agents everything. Including the fact that Daniel was never a real terrorist. The Calling had been a front for Daniel but the whole scheme to his bombings was simply to show off his skills in order to entice the Chinese into buying his services.

So the US didn't fall for his North Korean trick and over in Shanghai Luke led DiNozzo to Daniel.

And though he could have chosen a different path, DiNozzo ended up shooting Daniel twice. Once in the leg and once in the chest.

Summary: NCIS assists a DEA agent on a drug-running case that keeps going cold, after Gibbs agrees to help a friend who shares a tragic past. Meanwhile, the team gossip about Gibbs' new look after he replaces his standard military haircut and polo shirt with a modern cut and tailored dress shirt.

Gibbs was suddenly a changed man on tonight's episode. And it looks like it was the shooting that finally made him let go of some of his old ways.

Apparently coming close to death can do that to a person. Though who knew Gibbs would have ever fall for it much less buy into the whole life changing moment? If anything he would have been just the man to have willing (and condescendingly) smirked at others for wanting to abruptly change their lives. And yet no could deny the facts — Gibbs was changing.

And there was a reason for that.

On this season of "NCIS", Gibbs had realized that it was time to move on. And in his case that meant looking past more than just his recent shooting. Even if it had played a part in his new demeanor.

See, Gibbs had seen his family during surgery. Now that could have been the drugs he was on but simply envisioning them had reminded our beloved Gibbs about what he had and that neither his late wife nor dearly departed daughter would have wanted him to close himself off from rest of the world. So Gibbs set out to change and, funnily, he began this new outlook with a new wardrobe.

He got rid of the polo shirts and started to wear good old fashion button-downs. And he also got rid of the old hairstyle. So you could say he brought into the 21st century.

But on a much more serious note, Gibbs was taken some odd chances at work. A DEA agent needed some help in gaining enough evidence to finally take down a drug cartel he's been after and for some reason Gibbs made that a NCIS job. So that didn't really make a lot of sense. That wasn't their field of expertise and DiNozzo for one wanted to know why his boss was taking such risks.

DiNozzo had been benched at the outset of the job and so he had an outside view of their situation. And one of the first things he noticed was that Gibbs was going out of his way to help DEA Agent Luis Mitchell. So DiNozzo looked into Luis and surprisingly he found out Luis was the son of the late NCIS Agent Kurt Mitchell. Kurt being the agent that died trying to protect Gibbs's family.

So right away he noticed the danger because Gibbs had, ironically enough, been the one to warn him about making things personal.

By making it personal, things get messy. And that's not something DiNozzo wanted to happen on this case. The drug cartel they were investigating was run by Benson Long. A notorious and deangerous skilled criminal. Yet a criminal that had still managed to get away each and everytime someone attempts to look into his dealings.

So no one could afford to make mistakes involving this man. Especially when Long is known for hiring out ex-military in order to fill in his ranks.

And so DiNozzo did what he felt he had to. He tried to get someone else to take Luis's case and that plan would have worked if Gibbs hadn't shut it down. So DiNozzo was then stuck. He knew his boss was too close to be objective and he couldn't keep the other man's secret.

That's why he told his partners. Bishop and McGee were shocked about Luis's and Gibbs's connection. More so Bishop because she never got the full story about what happened to Gibbs's family. So she looked into her boss's file and she found out that Shannon and her daughter were witnesses to a murder. And then later moved to a safe house by Agent Mitchell for their protection.

Mitchell eventually died trying to protect them and the ladies died not long after him because of a nasty car crash. But what the guys didn't know, and that Bishop ended up informing them about, was that the man that had put out a hit was Long. Long had controlled the area at the time and it was his man that would have gotten locked up if the Gibbs women had survived long enough to testify.

So it was personal for both Gibbs and Luis. And Gibbs wasn't merely protecting Luis, the men were in bringing down Long together.

Yet when they kept missing their opportunity, Luis almost took matters into his own hands. He went over to Long's and he was planning on killing the man that was responsible for the death of his father. And it was only fortunate that Gibbs was there before he could make a mistake.

See, Gibbs talked Luis down and in the end they were still able to get Long because the other man just didn't know when to stop talking.

He thought because they were in his house illegally that it wouldn't matter if he did confess to murder. Not with what he had on them anyway. And he was right. If it was only them that heard then there's no way that two men that tried to kill him would have considered great or even good witnesses. But, luckily, McGee had planted a listening device and got a recording of Long confessing to murder.

So Long got himself caught.

And the families he hurt finally received closure.

Production Code: 13003
Summary: Hours after calling Gibbs about a possible case, a Marine is found dead in Quantico; McGee and Bishop pose as a married couple.

Earlier, a friend of Gibbs had called him about a possible case. However that friend was Major Newton and the reason that name sounds familiar is because he once worked with the NCIS on a prior case and eventually they found their suspect.

But, at the time, Newton swore there was accomplice and so over the years the gang has gotten quite few phone calls from him about some theory or another involving said accomplice. And none of those theories of his have ever panned out. So it would be kinder to say that Newton had become sort of a Chicken Little around the office.

He would claim he found a lead and he automatically would bring it to the NCIS to investigate.

Though Gibbs never held that against Newton and he appeared to be one of the few people left to take Newton seriously. So when Newton called again, Gibbs and Anthony went out to Quantico where Newton was recently teaching Military Law Enforcement. And it was their intent to investigate whatever theory he came up with.

Unfortunately, however, the guys never got the chance to interview Newton much less find out who he was investigating. Newton's body had been found in the nearby ravine and it had looked like he died shortly after his call to Gibbs. And the only things he had on him was his VOQ room card, cellphone, and a bracelet.

And so Newton's death naturally raised a couple of flags. Thus Gibbs didn't have a choice about what he upon hearing about his friend. Gibbs quickly stepped in and proclaimed the crime scene to be under NCIS's jurisdiction. Because while the officers at the scene initially believed Newton's death was an accident, Gibbs had a gut feeling that Newton's recent investigation was what brought about his death.

See the case that just never went away was an armory theft. And Newton felt that if they didn't catch the accomplice then a second robbery was bound to happen.

Yet he hadn't given his friends a lot to work with. He simply arranged for them to meet up following the call and, when that didn't happen, the team had to go searching through his items. And what they found was a plastic knife. Newton had taken a knife from the Quantico cafeteria and he had wrapped in a napkin before placing it in an envelope.

So DiNozzo theorized that maybe the envelope had been for Gibbs. After all Abby ran the necessary tests on the knife and found a fingerprint matching a Lauren Hudson. Lauren being the civilian wife of Marine Lieutenant Dean Hudson.

And although nothing seemed to be standing with those two, Gibbs felt there were holding back when he questioned them about Newton.

Hence, Bishop and McGee were chosen to go in undercover as a married couple in order to get the dibbs on the Hudson. And there was slight hitch with that plan. Bishop was currently angry at McGee when they got that wonderful opportunity of being forced into living together.

Bishop had apparently come up with a surprise for her husband Jake. She was going to take him to the Caribbean for their anniversary but she hadn't told McGee that the trip was a surprise. So he ended up chatting with Jake and spilling the secret.

And that trip was actually very important to Bishop. She and her husband have been experiencing some problems lately in their relationship and so she was hoping a grand romantic gesture would get them back on track.

So that loss of that chance, put Bishop at odds with McGee.

They weren't talking to each other unless they honestly had to and even then a lot of calls got ignored when it really mattered. Like when they found out that the woman pretending to be Lauren Hudson was really Dean's mistress and that the wife was dead.

McGee followed the wife but, because he ignored a call from Bishop, he couldn't talk her out of her foolish plan to break into the Hudson house. And after she left her phone, Abby couldn't warn about Dean returning home early.

Luckily, Bishop could take care of herself but both she and McGee realized afterwards that it would be best if they got past the whole ruined anniversary gift.

And Bishop didn't risk her life for nothing. She was the one that found the real Lauren's body. It seems her husband had murdered her in order to live off of her inheritance with his mistress Rita Applegate. So the entire case had nothing to do with the armory theft.

Newton just kind of stumbled across what they were doing and then tried to warn Gibbs about it.

Production Code: 13004
Summary: Vance partners with Gibbs and returns to field duty when a murder is connected to a former NCIS agent he locked up years ago for stealing evidence.

The body of Navy Seaman Apprentice Brian Dokes was found in the early afternoon. Though nothing about the scene or their victim seemed to make sense to the NCIS. That is not until a mysterious third party put everything perspective.

At the start, Dokes's body was found near his car which appeared to have been involved in an accident of some kind. However Dokes had enough strength in him to drag himself away from the car and was still struggling to move when someone decided to finish off the job that car could not. He was killed but what became blatant clear is that someone wanted to make a message out of Dokes's death seeing as his killer went to extra lengths to gorge out Dokes's eyes.

Yet the brutality that was used on the victim was not the only red flag at the scene. There was also the box of dud grenades that Dokes had in his trunk. As well as the bag of cash that he had in his front seat with him. So, right away, Dokes was looked on with suspicion.

On paper, he came across as a good guy but it was apparent that he had crossed a line. There was no way a kid that young could come across fifty grand legally.

And he didn't. Though it took former NCIS Special Agent Mr. Kip Klugman to fill Gibbs on what really happened to his victim. Klugman was not only a former agent but he was a disgraced one on top of it. Towards the end of his career, he began pilfering money and drugs out of the evidence locker and his partner at the time was the one to turn him in.

But Director Vance has come a long way since he was a NCIS Special Agent and it's made him more circumspect about who trusts. So he didn't want Klugman to offer up any assistance to Gibbs and, after hearing what the other man had to say, he didn't even think the intel was worth allowing Klugman to make a deal. For that was the only motivation behind Klugman's altruism.

He had told both men about a man named Kobe Carver who ran an illegal loan shark business with a lingerie store as a front. And he told them that Dokes had robbed Kobe the night before he was killed. Though the reason Klugman was being so forthcoming was because he owed Kobe money. And if Kobe went away for murder then all three knew Klugman wouldn't have to pay him.

So Klugman wasn't a reliable source and he would have wanted his own illegal gambling to be overlooked.

That's why Vance ultimately decided to turn down Klugman's offer and simply leave Gibbs's team to find out what happened to Dokes. And using their information about Kobe, the agents did go to interview him at his "shop". However by then Kobe had already called in his lawyer and hid all evidence of his betting hall.

Meaning the agents had nothing to use as leverage. But they did know they were looking at the right man. Kobe had a reputation for always getting those that have foolishly tried to turn against him. And later that day Vance opened his door only to find a bloody Klugman on the other side of it.

Though oddly Klugman was claiming it was Vance that beaten him up and he informed NCIS that he would be suing thanks to his new lawyer. The same woman that was representing Kobe. So just like Vance predicted — Klugman turned out to be an unreliable snake.

And because of Klugman's latest antic, Vance found his job suddenly being threatened. Madame Secretary paid him a special visit and she told him that the bruises and the lawsuit didn't look good to Washington. Therefore the possibility of Vance peacefully retiring was put on the table.

Only there was no way that Vance was going to go quietly. Nor for that matter was Gibbs going to allow the Dokes's case getting transferred to another unit. So both men decided to continue with their investigation despite what was in their best interest. And in the end Madam Secretary allowed them a deadline before they both got pulled away.

NCIS figured out there was no second person at the original crime scene with Dokes. In fact Dokes had been the one to scratch out his own eyes and that was because of the LSD in his system. The drug has been known to cause vivid hallucinations and Dokes had had a large amount of it show up in his blood. But the team came to realize that Dokes would have never willingly put drugs in his system.

His father was a drug addict and, after the state wide service couldn't help, Dokes somehow found a way to get his father into an expensive private clinic. The young man had used his joining fee from the Navy to make the initial down payment for his father but the final payment was coming due right around the time Dokes was about to go on his first overseas mission.

So that's why Dokes stole from Kobe but it seems like he wasn't the only one with the idea. There was a tracking device found in the bag of money. And when Tony used the device as proof the money belonged to Kobe, Kobe was furious about someone putting a device into his bag.

And that was about as close as Kobe was going to admit to secretly drugging Dokes. As for the tracking device that wasn't his, it had also led the agents to the drugs that Kobe used as well as identifying Kobe as the man that sold Dokes's father the same drugs the older man got hooked on. Which meant the agents could get Kobe for murder. Though Vance wanted to know how Klugman came into all of this and a sting operation was the only thing left to do in order to find answers.

The team left the tracking device in the bag and when the money was getting transported — it got hit. But luckily Gibbs had put his cell phone into the bag so his agents were able to track the money until they found Klugman and his friends counting all the cash. For it looks like that was Klugman's endgame all along.

He wanted to steal from Kobe but Dokes beat him to it and everything afterwards was just about getting close enough to the money for a second attempt at taking it for himself.

So Vance was able to clear his name once he brought Klugman in on charges including attempted murder on a federal agent. (It's not like Klugman was going to let anyone arrest him without a fight.)

Production Code: 13005
Summary: When a texting teenager rear-ends a criminal's car, the accident initiates a series of events suggesting bioterrorism; as the NCIS team races to prevent it, Abbie ends up one of many hostages at a pharmaceutical company with a dangerous secret.

Gibbs's makeover has inspired Abby this week. Subsequently she wants to trade in her lab in the basement for something with a view. And HR was fighting her on that decision. So Abby was going to ask Gibbs if he could help but in a polite yet Gibbs way he had to blow her off.

A dead Navy captain required his attention and honestly he didn't want to get into office politics because of a view. So Abby was stuck in the basement and her friends were out investigating Navy Reserve Captain Doblin's death. Doblin had apparently been murdered by someone crushing his trachea and whoever the murderer was also had extensive knowledge of the claw grip. The claw grip was eastern technique that could be considered Kung Fu and what it did was kill someone using only three fingers.

Thus this case got to be very interesting for the guys back at the office. However their victim ended up sending up some red flags. He had a half of a compound found in a drug sold by Celodyne Pharmaceuticals in his system and he had vials of neurotoxins in his digestive system. Which is typical for drugs mules, but at the time, the team was more worried about why he had the neurotoxins because it might have explained why he was murdered.

Though Abby had used that compound in the victim's system as an excuse for a field trip. She eventually got Gibbs to say he'd try to see what he could do about her office situation but she didn't a second more in the basement. So that's when she came up with the field trip idea and went to go meet Dr. Brown at Celodyne Headquarters.

Dr. Brown proved to be someone that took after Abby's own heart and the two women hit it off right away. However Brown didn't know how or why a testing compound much less half of one was found in the victim's system. And the two women were left discussing that mystery when all of sudden the labs experienced an emergency shutdown.

Brown said the Ebola department must have had a leak so the ladies were simply going to wait out. But there wasn't a leak and the women quickly realized that when they began to hear gunshots in the building. The janitors it seemed had set off the alarm in an attempt to rob the place yet they hadn't counted on Abby, a federal agent, being in the building.

So Abby knew she had to send out a message to Gibbs but she was also a wanted woman. The janitors didn't want her to live to tell the tale and Dr. Brown was too scared of dying to stand beside her new friend. Even when it mattered the most.

Therefore Abby had to escape the lab on her own and thanks to her own ingenuous she was able to alert Gibbs. And in return, Gibbs had told her to hide. He said he and the team were coming her way and that she shouldn't risk her own well-being.

Yet Abby had to. She knew the bad guys wanted something off the server and so she locked them out in hopes of stalling them. And that came back to bite her.

The janitors knew that it was Abby that had locked them out and, although she had returned safely to Dr. Brown's lab, she had unfortunately put other people at risk. The bad guys were demanding she let them back into the system. They sent out a message over the intercom and they told her that if she didn't fix what she did then they were going to start killing hostages.

Only Abby had already overheard their endgame. While she was locking them out of the system, she stayed long enough to hear them say they weren't going to be leaving any witnesses behind. So that meant it was part of their plan all along to kill the hostages and Abby made sure to send up a red flare to the NCIS agents watching the building.

Red Smoke means distress in naval code so Gibbs and his people knew that the situation was deteriorating fast though they hadn't known the details. Like how Abby told the bad guys that they could have her if they came and got her.

And that wasn't such a bad idea. Abby got the men to collect her and Dr. Brown who had suddenly found courage and the two women were in the server room when Abby had automatically locked the doors. When she was supposed to be letting them into the system.

Abby you see had come up with a plan. She wanted to save the hostages and so she set off a knock-out gas inside of the room thereby taking out the man in charge. A man named Travis Cook.

Though Abby wasn't entirely left pleased by what she stopped. She did save the hostages and the NCIS team were able to revive everyone inside of the room but sadly it was revealed that Travis Cook had been hired by Dr. Brown to break into the servers. It seems the company she works for has been selling generic drugs that don't work so she wanted to turn whistleblower.

However she didn't have enough evidence and not even the chemist that first brought the company's crimes to her, Doblin, knew how to stop the company. So they hired Travis and as payment they told him he could take whatever he wanted on the server for himself. But then Travis got idea and he started killing people including Doblin who knew who he was.

So Doblin and Dr. Brown were good people and they put their faith in the wrong person. And though Brown tried to later stop Travis, she's still going to jail for the part she played.

Production Code: 13006
Summary: A petty officer is murdered and the NCIS team investigates to determine if the crime is the work of a local serial killer or a copycat. Meanwhile, McGee and Delilah must learn to compromise before moving in together.

Petty Officer Second Class Adam Meyers was just enjoying a day in the park when someone decided to shoot him with children running close by.

It was Halloween and the park that Meyers was in had been full. It seems they were having these fun activities set up for all the neighborhood kids. You know where they could gorge on as much candy as they want and be as equally safe under the watchful eye of their parents. Yet despite the number of people at the park with Meyers, when a gun went off, everyone had been focusing on protecting the children and thus didn't lift up their heads until they were sure they were safe. And unfortunately in Meyer's case that meant no one saw his killer.

Though if killer was as good as he's been boasting then he probably knew how to hide from any and all witnesses. See, a calling card was left behind at the scene of the crime and it identified the killer as the known serial killer The Tri-State Sniper. The Sniper had already killed six people up until then and so when the agents find the calling card with the number seven they just assumed they had the same guy.

And to be fair to them, everything fit. Again there was that calling card that seemingly looked like all the others. Plus Meyers had been killed in the same fashion as the previous victims. He received one shot to the chest and that was it.

So there was no reason for the NCIS to doubt Meyers had been killed by the sniper. However a source on the sniper's case eventually reached out to them and he had some sorry news. He said he couldn't tell them before until he had the guy arraigned, but his people picked up the sniper on the same he was supposed to have killed Meyers. And there was simply no way the Tri-State Sniper could have killed Meyers and be almost a state away in the next fifteen minutes.

Therefore the NCIS had to start looking at copycats and by doing that they also found a motive that is for why someone would target Meyers to begin with. Meyers, it appears, had an unsavory past. In fact he had an altercation with a fellow officer while the last time the USS Camden was at sea.

An agent from the Sexual Violence Unit informed Gibbs that his victim had been put a hidden camera in the women's changing area and he had uploaded images of them online. One of the women, an Ashley Ryan, was never able to overcome what she had suffered and she eventually committed suicide because of what Meyers did. So, in other words, Meyers wasn't a likable guy and the only one that regretted his death was his younger sister Farrah.

But his victims were still raw from what he did. Another officers tried one injunction after another to get her pictures removed and nothing worked. So she wasn't upset when NCIS informed her about Meyers. If anything she felt he had it coming.

What Meyers did onboard the ship was wrong however he never got a chance to pay for it. He had been given a slap on the wrist by the Navy at the time and continued with his life as if nothing was wrong. That is until he was punched.

Ducky found evidence during Meyer's autopsy of someone having punched a few teeth lose in the last couple of days. So DiNozzo went look for this puncher and he found a victim of Meyer's. She said she didn't tell anyone including NCIS when they first asked her about Meyers because she knew it looked bad. And she didn't want Meyers to further ruin her life by causing her to get a dishonorable discharge.

Though she said he was very much alive when she left him. She had only hit him to begin with because he had showed at Ashley's funeral promising to make everything better. And all wanted to do at the time was let him know that nothing he did could fix the damage he caused.

Only Meyers did cause anything. He did not have the tech savvy to set up a hidden camera much less upload the images. So when DiNozzo and McGee that he was meeting on the day he died — everything became clear. And what the team knew for sure was that Meyers hadn't been the voyeur on the USS Camden. He just took the blame in exchange for cash that he apparently needed to hire a lawyer for his sister.

See Rossmore later told NCIS that Farrah had gotten arrested for a DUI when they were on deployment. Now there was a way for her to get a lenient sentence but at the time Meyers hadn't had the money for a proper lawyer. Yet in the following days after that, Meyers ended up confessing to the whole camera scenario. And someone managed to miraculously wire him all the money he needed for Farrah.

Abby eventually found the money transfer that Meyers used to pay for a lawyer. And that money could not have come from thin air. So Bishop did a search into who else would have taken the pictures and she found former Officer Woodruff.

Earlier Bishop had been worried about her husband being possible caught in a terrorist attack but he turned out to be fine. NSA had removed him from Dubai before the bomb could go off at his hotel and so he was safe. But while Bishop appeared to be fine in front of everyone else — she did let Gibbs see how much she had been falling apart on the inside.

And when she returned to the field, she gave her team what they needed to know on Woodruff. It seems he had a problem with taking orders from women so that's why he did what he did. But, regardless of what he thought about his former captain, the other man refused to help him and instead turn him over to NCIS along with the recording of their conversation.

Summary: Ducky reveals his participation in a secret society devoted to solving cold cases when NCIS investigates the murder of a retired lieutenant who was also a member of the secret group.

Bishop had come into work with a mood. Apparently things aren't easy at home despite her husband escaping a terrorist attack last week by the skin of his teeth and if anything it seems like the marriage is still on the verge of collapsing.

So on tonight's episode of "NCIS" Bishop said the one that she shouldn't have in the orange room. She told her coworkers that all she wanted was a quiet day at the office. And, them being the superstitious king, they waited around to see just what kind of case that Bishop's remark must have doomed them with.

Although, to be fair to her, the body that was found not long after she made her statement had revealed to have been lying around for a good three days before she made her announcement. Therefore their next case was not her fault and she had in no way brought it about. But that wasn't a claim that Ducky could make.

As it turns out he knew the retired Lt. Commander Runyan Hayes. And so he had to recuse himself from the case because of his entanglement with The Sherlock Consortium of Investigation. For it was that organization that had taken on the responsibility of investigating cold cases like the one that Hayes had brought to their attention.

Earlier, Hayes had gone to the sleuths because he felt like his son Michael had wrongly been imprisoned for a murder he hadn't committed. In fact Hayes had a suspect and he just needed the Consortium to either help him cast enough doubt or find evidence against a man named Bennett who Hayes believed was responsible. Yet the Consortium apparently weren't working as fast as Hayes might have liked because he told them one day that he was going to confront Bennett and that was last they had ever heard from him.

That is until he wound up dead a few miles away from where Bennett worked as a fireman. So NCIS had viable suspect for Hayes's death but they too simply didn't have the evidence.

Hence, Gibbs turned to an odd group of people. He sought out the Consortium to find out what they had on Bennett and he made Ducky do the introduction. Ducky hadn't really been that happy about mixing those two parts of his life but he couldn't afford to let his friends go on remaining anonymous during an active investigation.

So he brought his friends in on what was going on and then took a step back as they proceeded tear in the original 1999 murder in which they believe Michael Hayes was innocent of. It seems they found reasonable doubt that Michael hadn't killed Lt. Swannie. And their main piece of evidence is the faulty DNA testing done at the time that was conducted by a young Abby Sciuto.

Now Abby hadn't remembered the case. She's seen too much to every pinpoint one murder but she did end up feeling guilty about possible sending an innocent man to jail. So after she had found out about Michael — she locked herself away in the lab and Gibbs was the only one willing to drag her back out.

Therefore finding out if Michael was guilty soon became as important to the team as finding his father's murderer. Bennett had had an alibi yet no one believed he was entirely innocent.

There was plenty of items left at the scene of the crime that the team hoped they could use. There had been evidence of there being two shooters that night. And every time Dinozzo and McGee went back into the woods — they were left covered in tree sap. So Lyle from the Consortium came up with an idea to help them.

He looked into how to remove tree sap and he told Gibbs that what the guys needed were peanut butter. And funnily enough it was Lyle's advice that helped pieced together the evidence. Because Gibbs had seen dark spots on someone's shoes but it hadn't been Bennett's. It had been Michael's best friend.

The same best friend that had stayed close to Michael's family even when he had gone to prison and who had stuck around to help raise Michael's daughter. So the team had their guys but to get him on something a little less circumstantial they had found a way to get his keys away from him.

The killer had used his car keys to dig out a bullet from his gun that had gone into a nearby tree. So Abby was able to test the sawdust on the keys as if it had been DNA. And she put their suspect at the scene of the crime.

And from there, the truth finally came out. It was the friend that had killed his lieutenant. Though he hadn't wanted to set up Michael, he was actually going to pin the crime on Bennett. However Hayes must have found out the truth and confronted him not Bennett.

So once the team got their suspect's full confession, Michael Hayes was able to go free and he thanked Abby. He said it didn't matter what had happen in '99. She was the one that had given him the chance to be a free man again.

But, later, Ducky did resign from the Consortium. He felt they took too many risks so he gave his position to Palmer instead.

Production Code: 13008
Summary: Insurgents in Sudan attack a group of volunteer doctors and murder some, while kidnapping others. DiNozzo and McGee visit the crime scene, where DiNozzo is reunited with his ex-girlfriend, whose husband is among those who were attacked.

NCIS Special Agent Stan Burley called in to headquarters in need of favor. Apparently a friend his, Navy Lieutenant Elizabeth Cortland, was working overseas using her Navy doctor experience to help those in need when the hospital she was in was attacked by insurgents.

It seems the hospital had been in Togu, Sudan which was known as an unstable region. Yet the IDG which stands for International Doctors' Group hadn't wanted to leave the people in that area without care. So despite the risks the doctors travelled there with full knowledge of what they were walking into in order to assist the many.

And unfortunately the man that was the leading the group was Dr. David Woods. At the start of their day, no one at NCIS had known who he was but afterwards Dr. Woods became known as only one thing. He was Jeanne Benoit's husband.

Jeanne had been the one to get away with DiNozzo and till that very day he refused to talk about her or their relationship with others. But it was obvious to everyone that DiNozzo truly cared for her and so they understand if her husband's case turned out to be a problem. After all David ended up being the man she married while she was perfectly willing to walk away from DiNozzo.

However DiNozzo refused to shy away. His boss wasn't doing too well and so Gibbs needed him to step. Especially after he collapsed at work right in front of Dr. Taft.

Dr. Taft had known someone that was with the doctors' group and so he had stopped by to ask after her. Only Joni Ryan along with David Woods were reported as missing. So that came as a personal blow to Taft. He had worked with Joni over the years and she had even been assigned with him to Gibbs's surgery. But she was missing and after hearing about their connection — Gibbs collapsed.

So Taft finally took Director Vance aside and told him about all of those checkups that Gibbs had been missing and that it turn made Vance bench Gibbs. At least until his old friend got the all-clear from his doctor. And that was never going to happen as long as Taft felt Gibbs's stress levels was manifesting into physical symptoms.

Therefore Taft wanted Gibbs in touch with his feelings and psyche. And Gibbs being Gibbs was putting up a fight.

Meanwhile DiNozzo, McGee, and Jeanne had flown to South Sudan. Sudan had apparently gained its independence not that long ago but since then various tribes have been doing their best to kill each other at every interval. So when the cavalry arrived, they couldn't seem to get much help from the nearby villagers.

Those who knew about the attack on the hospital were just not talking. And one young woman put everything in perspective. She said that the doctors and the people that come claiming to help — all eventually leave. But she and many like herself have to stay and face the consequence. So to be quite frank they didn't want to risk their lives for a couple of doctors.

But sadly that wasn't the only place that the NCIS weren't getting any love. Gibbs was able to pull some strings back home but even that could only provide Navy SEAL assistance for twenty-four hours. So the situation in Togu was three NCIS agents and one doctor against a whole tribe.

Though Abby and Palmer did manage to identify which tribe that had attacked the hospital. They got a picture of a knife left behind at the scene and used the dialect etched into it. So that's how they found out that Shilluk Ethnic Tribe had been behind the attack and kidnapping.

It seems the tribe's ferocious leader, General Ajat Gadak might have been injured during an earlier skirmish of theirs therefore they kidnapped David and Joni in order to patch up their General.

And while the thing with the Gneral may have begun as a mere idea, the agents ended up finding an abandoned camp site that proved David had still be alive with the tribe. So Jeanne took that as a good sign and the guys backed her up. They knew as long as the tribe needed her husband's expertise then the longer he got to live.

So all they had to do was track a large slow moving tribe then create a distraction big enough to allow them the necessary time to grab their doctors at the first chance they could. And in the end they were they did that but were allowed to away afterwards thanks to Gibbs. Gibbs had made another round of calls, once he found a way to evade Taft that is, and those calls brought in air support and so that even the playing field.

And luckily everyone got to go home.

But as for DiNozzo, he did something he never thought he would. In returning David to his wife, DiNozzo finally found a way to make it up to Jeanne for the way things had ended between them.

Production Code: 13009
Summary: A petty officer tries to clear his name after his murder case is dismissed due to mishandled evidence. He volunteers to be court-martialed if NCIS agrees to investigate.

Naval Petty Officer Kyle Friedgen and his attorney have approached the NCIS on tonight's all new episode with an unusual request.

Earlier Kyle had been arrested for the murder of his former girlfriend Joy Vanatter and, while he claimed he was innocent, there appeared to have been one piece of evidence that would have had spending him spending the rest of his life behind bars. However that one piece of evidence was thrown out because of an overzealous district attorney. So with nothing else to use against Kyle — Kyle was freed by the judge.

Yet Kyle didn't necessarily recover his old life. For it seems the court of public opinion have already made up their minds about him and therefore there was not a single person in his life (besides his attorney that is) actually believes in his innocence. So after he was freed his fellow crew members onboard the ship then began to shun and his own wife started fighting him for custody over their unborn child.

So Kyle figured he really didn't have anything to lose by then and that's when his attorney came up with a drastic plan in order to help him. She told him that if the NCIS were to officially court-martial him then he could finally have a day in court. Where he could prove his innocence once and for all.

But the real question was what if Kyle actually did have something to hide? With an investigation officially opened, the team had to look at all the evidence as well speak with the lead detective on the case. And Detective Malone was a good friend of DiNozzo's so DiNozzo didn't doubt the other man when he said he ran the case by the book.

However he did wonder if the police might have only looked at Kyle so they did a little digging into Joy and Kyle's past.

Joy and Kyle used to be a highly-strung and volatile couple but then one day they got pregnant. So it was that pregnancy that changed everything between them. Because after an abortion that essentially ended their relationship, Joy continued to spiral out while her ex managed to get his life together.

Therefore it was odd that the two of them had exchanged texts and even calls on the day Joy was murdered. To put it simply, it did not make sense for Kyle to be in communications with someone from a very ugly part of his past. But Kyle said he never physically saw her before she died and that it had been years before they talked when out of the blue she began texting him.

So NCIS was investigating why Joy would do that when Abby found something interesting. She found footage from the day before Joy was murdered and she had proof that Kyle did see Joy.

The money he had withdrawn from his account was the exact same amount that was later found Joy. Thus there's evidence of both him paying her as well his attempt at covering it up. And no shocker but that made Gibbs very angry.

Gibbs had felt his team had been used. There they were tirelessly working on helping Kyle yet Kyle had chosen to lie to them about a very important detail. So Gibbs turned over the evidence to the Baltimore police and they once again arrested Kyle for murder.

Kyle had denied seeing the victim but he did so that placed him at least near the crime. However Gibbs later found out that Kyle had been right about one thing — the syringe! The same syringe that had been found in Kyle's car with his Joy's blood on it. Only Abby and Ducky found out the drugs that had been in syringe were not the same ones that had been found in Joy's system.

So someone did plant the syringe in Kyle's car.

And Bishop and DiNozzo think it might have the prosecutor on Kyle's case. Alan Wyner had prosecuted Joy a couple of years before her death and the syringe that had been collected at the time was found to be clean. As in absolutely clean of everything including the drugs that had allegedly been found in it two years ago.

Which meant Wyner had then set Kyle up only to then screw up over a small detail such as a warrant. So the team looked into him and that's when everything just fell into place. Wyner had secretly been seeing Joy when one day she tried to get away from him and frantically called her ex Kyle asking for money. Poor Kyle hadn't known what the money was for but knew Joy must be bad off if she was reaching out to him.

But Joy never got to make her escape. Her lover killed her and then tried to frame Kyle though he later said he had wanted to make it better by messing up on the warrant. And so Wyner didn't understand why Kyle would then get an investigation reopened.

It was as if he couldn't believe that Kyle wouldn't be able to return to a normal life after getting off on a mere technicality.

Yet Kyle did get his freedom in the end and he now has to work on his marriage seeing as his wife had left him because she too thought he was guilty. And speaking of marital problems, Bishop and Jake might just be over for good. Jake had apparently cheated on his wife and so Bishop packed up her bags in order to return home to Oklahoma.

Alex Quinn), Joe Spano (Senior FBI Agent T.C. Fornell), Stuart McLean (Malcolm Turro), Eric Nelsen (Sean Quinn), Scott C. Roe (Marine)
Production Code: 13010
Summary: The Secretary of Defense calls on NCIS to help a sailor who is battling leukemia to locate a donor for a bone marrow transplant, after two of his siblings are killed in the line of duty. Meanwhile, Bishop returns home to Oklahoma for Thanksgiving.

The episode begins with a woman talking to her son who is in the hospital sick with cancer. She mentions Rebecca but he says he doesn't want his sister to see him like this. He says she's in Kandahar and doesn't need the distraction. He jokes about his eulogy and he says he knows he's not going to make it.

His mother says he will because he's a Quinn. She tells him to get some rest. She tries to call Sean from the hospital but then a Marine representative is there and tells her that her daughter Rebecca was killed in action. Jimmy shows Tim photos of his turkey and Tony asks what it is. It's a turducken.

Tim says he and Delilah will be late for dinner because they're volunteering with Abby at a soup kitchen. Tony turns down the invitation. Jimmy tells them he heard Gibbs chewing out Jake on the phone. But then Gibbs is right there behind him. He runs off terrified. Ellie's mom comes to talk to her as she's chopping wood and says her dad is on the way. (OMG it's Lindsay Wagner — The Bionic Woman!)

Her mom says her grandparents are coming too then asks if Ellie can call her brothers but she says she can see them at Thanksgiving. Her mother tells her that she's there for her but Ellie just wants time. She tells Ellie Jake has been blowing up her phone. Her mom says she needs to address the problems.

Ellie ignores another call from Jake and takes her axe and chops her phone into splinters. She tells her mom the problem has been addressed. Leon gets off a call and tells Gibbs that SecDef called for help with a time-sensitive matter — a dying sailor. He says Alex Quinn is at Walter Reed with leukemia.

He says his sister Marine Captain Quinn died last week from an IED. Major William Quinn, the oldest brother also died overseas serving his country. Leon says Alex needs a bone marrow transplant and they're hoping they can find Sean Quinn the youngest of the family who's missing for six months.

Leon says find Sean to save his brother's life. Paulette meets with Gibbs and says she and her husband both served as well as all the kids but Sean who couldn't get in because of a heart murmur. She says Sean spiraled when his older brother Will died and started drinking and hanging out with bad guys.

She says he won't return her calls and won't see any of them. She says he doesn't even know his sister died. She begs him to bring Sean home. Tony goes to see Sean's landlord and he says he's a great tenant, is never around, and is quiet. Tim finds a stash of something behind a vent.

There's a brick of cash and passports with different names but all have photos of Sean. Ellie's brother George comes in and calls her special agent Barbie. He says he came early to hang with her and he admits that their mom called. George says her coming out of the blue is suspicious. He head locks her and they go hang in their clubhouse. Abby has made a Gibbs pumpkin then says she did one for all of them for the soup kitchen centerpiece. She asks him about his phone call with Jake but he brushes her off. Abby says the cash is fake and not a perfect counterfeit. There's $100k there.

Tony says Sean was going to East Coast casinos to cash in the fake money and was using it at retail establishments. Fornell shows up and Leon says the FBI and Secret Service have been tracking the counterfeiting ring for a year. Fornell says Sean is lower level and was recruited by Thomas Reynolds.

He went to school with Sean but was whacked. Sean is operating as an informant for the FBI. Fornell says he can take them to an FBI safe house to meet Sean tonight. Ellie tells George about Jake's cheating and he says he's going to kick the guy's ass. She says there's not much hope here.

George pulls out an old bottle of hooch they'd hidden in their clubhouse and he asks about her wearing her wedding ring still. She says the vows meant something to her. She says she thought she and Jake would work things out no matter their problems. Their mom comes in and George says they're having a moment but she says Agent DiNozzo is on the phone for her.

Dr Mallard comes with Gibbs and Fornell to meet with Sean and they see signs of trouble. Gibbs sends Duckie back to the car and they see Sean's handler is dead, his gun is gone and so is Sean. Tony takes a call from Gibbs as they're searching for Sean. Tony says a 9 mm killed the agent and Tim says Sean could be the shooter since he has a 9 mm.

George sees Ellie working with a donor database looking for a donor for Alex. She says they found a donor but the person turned it down. She wants to try and get the donor to change his mind. Richard Doogan is the potential donor and he's in Kansas a few hours away but he's in Leavenworth barracks. He's serving life for double homicide. Ellie wants to go talk to the guy.

Duckie coaches Jimmy about being careful with his stitches. They are working on the turducken. Gibbs comes in and asks what it is. Jimmy makes a bad fowl joke and Gibbs is annoyed. Abby is on the screen and says Sean did not kill Agent Potter. The bullet had DNA from two other people — Potter's DNA and Sean's DNA. Looks like the same bullet went through both of them.

Duckie says Sean would need medical attention. Ellie is at Leavenworth to see Doogan and she introduces herself. He asks what the Navy wants. She talks about him being in the donor registry. He says it must be important and asks who it's for. She tells him about Alex and how close of a match he is. Ellie tells him what would be required. He agrees to donate. She thanks him.

He says he wants a deal. He wants his life sentence reduced to time served if she wants his bone marrow. He walks away after delivering that bit. Paulette tells Gibbs she knew Sean was in trouble but never any idea that it was like this. She asks if he has children and he says he had a daughter. She says burying your child is awful. She says she's lost two children and another is dying in front of her eyes.

She says now she hears Sean is injured and says she can't take much more. Gibbs says they can save them both. He asks where Sean would go to lay low. She says his boat and says he and Will were fixing it up. It's at a storage place near a marina. She tells him where to find it. Tony and Tim go looking for Sean. They talk about boat names. They see a bloody fingerprint on the handle of the unit.

They go inside and find more blood on a ladder leading up to the boat and find Sean. He's still alive. They call an ambulance. Tony tells Gibbs that Sean lost a lot of blood but he's going to recover fine. Tony says they did a blood panel on Sean and found out he's not a viable donor. The prisoner is the only option. Tony says he killed two Iraqi detainees and has a life sentence.

Gibbs tells Tony to find out who shot Sean and killed Potter. He's going to Leavenworth. Abby is watching casino footage looking for hints on the counterfeiting ring. Tim says someone was doing casino runs before Sean since he's new to the crew. Abby looks at the footage looking for frequent visitors. They find the building manager at Sean's apartment — Alton Brinkman.

George tells his mom about Jake cheating when Ellie comes down. She says she has to go back to Leavenworth. Ellie says this is what she does but her mom thinks she's avoiding and making excuses. George says they have company — it's Gibbs. She goes outside and she asks if he's really in Oklahoma. He says howdie and says he got a deal for Doogan.

Her mom and George come out and ask for an introduction. Her mom says she's Barbara and offers him coffee. Ellie says they have to go. Doogan asks what this is and Gibbs says these are the terms. They got him the possibility of parole in 40 years. He says he'd be 70. He hands back the papers unsigned. He says if they want the marrow, get him out. He's unrepentant about killing the prisoners.

He says they were terrorists who killed innocent people. Doogan asks if they killed people in the line of duty then says he sleeps better knowing those bad guys are gone. Gibbs says this is the only deal he's ever going to get, take it or leave it. He says no thanks. He tells them save his life and he'll save the sailor's life. Fornell and Tony sit down with Anton who asks for his lawyer.

Tony says they don't need a confession and he says they're bluffing. Fornell says they can show him their hand. They show him the gun from his apartment. He says he has a permit. They tell him ballistics show he killed an FBI agent and Sean ID'd him as the shooter. Fornell arrests him for the murder of Agent Potter and Anton says wait. He says he can give them his boss but he needs protection.

He says Malcolm Turro is his boss. He says he monitored low-level runners for him. He says he saw Sean with a Fed and says Turro would have killed them all. He says the guy operates out of a warehouse in Arlington. Barbara invites Gibbs to stay for Thanksgiving and Ellie says he's busy. Barbara and George embarrass Ellie with childhood stories of her stubbornness.

Ellie answers the phone — it's Jake. She tells him she won't come back for Thanksgiving and hangs up on him. George asks how Jake has the nerve to call the house and says he's calling him back but Barbara says to sit down. He says Jake can't disrespect his little sister like that. Ellie snaps and says it's her life, her marriage and tells him to back off. Barbara chews out George.

She tells him to go cool off and Barbara follows her daughter. Gibbs gets a call from Tim who says Alex has taken a turn for the worse. He says they're almost out of time. Gibbs is sitting on the front porch when Ellie comes out. She says she was going for a run to clear her head. He says she's done enough running. She doesn't want a lecture and he asks what she needs.

She says she doesn't want to be treated like she's fragile but he reminds her how often she checked on him after Iraq but she says he almost died and they were worried. He says her family is worried. He says she needs to talk about it. Ellie is shocked he's telling her to talk about her feelings. She asks how you process getting shot then who he opened up to. He says Dr Taft.

He says everyone gets to that point, even him. He says just take the first step. She says she can't and he says Rule 28 — ask for help when you need it. Fornell tells them he has a surveillance on the warehouse and Tim and Tony tell him Malcolm is associated with more than 15 murders. They get a call that Malcolm showed up and they raid the warehouse.

Turo's guys take shots at the agents but then Fornell has a gun in his face and tells him put down the gun. Tony comes up behind him and knocks him out before he does something dangerous. Ellie comes back to see Doogan who asks if she has good news. She says there's no possibility of a deal with his conviction. She says she thinks he's a good person who made mistakes.

She says she knows how the detainees he killed were responsible for IEDs. She says she knows they killed his friend Logan and says grief can push people to extremes. He says he saved soldier's lives and she says it cost him his. Doogan says he can't change the past. She says he can change the future. She tells him about Alex. She shows him Alex's photo and says he can save his life.

She says he took an oath to never leave a fallen soldier behind. Doogan says a deal was his only shot at getting out. He says he just wanted a fresh start and she says this can be a new beginning. She says don't let a bad situation define who you are. He makes the donation and Gibbs tells her Alex will be on his feet by the New Years. He says thanks to her.

She says she wasn't sure she could get through to him. Gibbs says he never doubted her for a moment. Sean is with Alex in his hospital room. They take each other's hand. Fornell tells Tony that he has time to pick up wine for his dinner with Emily if she hasn't burned the place down. Tony says he stayed to do reports for Tim so he could go volunteer.

Fornell asks Tony about his Sudan trip and then Tony gives him a bottle of wine from his drawer. Fornell is impressed with the vintage then he turns back and says this is pathetic and tells Tony to come to his house for dinner. Tony says he thought he was his second least-favorite agent and Fornell says it's a punishment since his daughter can't cook.

Tony asks if he can call him Toby now they're friends and Fornell says don't push it. Gibbs is peeling potatoes for Barbara in the kitchen and she says if Ellie trusts him, she can too. She steps closer and says it's hard Ellie being in a dangerous job so far away. She says she'd prefer she lived at home and worked as a teacher or nun. Gibbs pledges to look after her.

Ellie comes in and says her brothers and father will be there soon and tells Gibbs to watch out for them. Ellie says she's ready to go back to DC. He tells her he only booked a one way ticket and wasn't leaving without her. They agree to drive back home together. She starts peeling potatoes with him. She wishes him Happy Thanksgiving and he says you too Bishop.

Summary: Ducky is attacked by a man claiming to have information about his half-brother who died decades ago. While the team search for the perpetrator, Ducky recalls the final days he had with his younger sibling. Also: Bishop and Jake discuss the future of their relationship.

The body of Marine Private John Angel was found in an alley. However the marine's death was forced to take a backseat when Ducky had also been found on the scene gagged and bound.

Ducky it seems had been lured into a trap by a man claiming to have information on Ducky's half-brother Nicholas. Nicholas you see had died some years ago but even before that Ducky hadn't seen him a while. So naturally his brother has been a bit of a sore spot for him and that explains why he never talked about it with Gibbs.

But what with a kidnapping and a murder being involved, silence was just a luxury that Ducky no longer afford. Therefore he had to relive some of the worst days of his life. Including when Nicholas's mother Lorraine (a woman lacking in maternal instinct) decided one day that she was going to divorce her husband and take Nicholas out of the country.

Elsewhere, though, back in present times Gibbs had DiNozzo and McGee run down the license plate on the van that Ducky had been found in. And what the boys found out was that the van had been rented by a man named Rufus. Rufus had found the van and house package on a renting app. And he was willing to pay full price from Sam Butler.

Yet Sam had been a couple of feet away from the house, staying in a tent, when someone had killed Rufus and arranged it so that Rufus's death looked like a suicide.

And Rufus's death only made the situation with Ducky look even direr if that could possible. The man that had apparently kidnapped him had gone on to kill two other men but had kept Ducky alive. So that begged the question why. He could have only have left Ducky alive if he wanted to use him in some way later down the line.

Hence the guys had to take a more in-depth look at Rufus and as it turns out they found a letter addressed to Ducky from his brother. The letter itself carried information that only Nicholas would know and so Abby ran some tests on it in order to indicate when it had been written.

And the letter had been written by Nicholas three weeks ago.

So that could only mean one thing. Nicholas had to be alive however it was a bit strange that the letter had been written in a child-like script. If the letter had been created a mere three weeks go then Nicholas had to be a man in his forties. And his script should have improved since then.

But that part didn't really seem to matter to Ducky. All he cared about was that there was suddenly proof his brother was alive. And more than anything he wanted to reunited with him.

When his stepmother had initially threatened her husband with full custody, Ducky had reached out to his old friend Angus who was a barrister (British lawyer). Lorraine had asked for ten grand in exchange for leaving Nicholas in England. And neither Ducky nor his father had it. So Ducky had Angus if he could fight Lorraine's full custody in court.

And the other man said they couldn't but that he was willing to give Ducky the money to keep Nicholas. Yet by time the offer had come, Lorraine had already had her and Nicholas's things packed up. Therefore Ducky wasn't left with much choice.

Lorraine had changed her mind about the money and she had wanted to take Nicholas out of spite. So she called the magistrate and had the officers he sent delay Ducky. And took the boy all the way to Albania.

Where Ducky then followed her from country to country until a relative of hers informed him that both Lorraine and Nicholas had died. But back in present times, the team figured out what Rufus had been up to. Rufus had worked in the post office in Philadelphia and after he noticed that one letter had a very expensive and one of a kind stamp — he hired a PI to track down Nicholas Mallard for him in order to get the matching set to the Merlin stamp.

Apparently the two together would have brought in serious money but Vigo Trellis realized he didn't just want his fee to be paid. He also wanted the money from the stamps. So he killed Rufus and tried to find Nicholas on his own.

And that's what led to him kidnapping Ducky. However, when that didn't work as planned, he then tried to find Nicholas again and accidentally picked up the wrong guy by the same name. Thus when the team found them — they were able to bring him in but broke Ducky's heart in the process.

He felt like maybe Abby had been mistaken when she said the letter was actually from his brother. But to make it up to him, the team did conduct a search on the real Nicholas and found him in a home in Philadelphia.

Nicholas has been suffering from early onset Alzheimer's and a few weeks back he had escaped the home. And they had later found him at the post office. He had been trying to reach his brother.

So when Ducky finally saw him again, Nicholas' disease was no impediment. He knew his big brother when he saw him.

Summary: The passengers and crew of a private plane traveling from New Orleans to Washington, D.C., are poisoned and the evidence points to Abby's brother, the aircraft's missing chef. The episode concludes on "NCIS: New Orleans."

Military spotted an unmanned plane on tonight's episode of "NCIS" and it quickly became a situation that needed to be handled by two NCIS teams.

Apparently the unmanned plane was original supposed to be on autopilot for a short amount of time but something went wrong and the entire crew were unresponsive to distress calls. So Director Vance had to assume the worst. He had to believe the passengers as well as the crew had died from hypoxia. Hypoxia being the moment the bodies onboard were deprived of actual oxygen thereby causing them all to pass out.

But sadly no one could wait around for one of them to come to and that is if they could. The plane had a set course and a full tank. And with no one alive or at the very most awake onboard to take control, there was no way the plane could make a gentle landing and it had been headed to heavily populated metropolis. So what that means is a crash was bound to happen.

However, the military had options. The plane was either go to crash on its own and risked thousands of lives or the military could rouse an air assault in order to take the plane down themselves. And guess which option they chose to take.

Abby had later been given the job to crash the plane remotely by hacking into the navigation unit and she was able to fool the plane into believing it was dropping altitude. Therefore, the plane was able to crash on its own without putting anyone else at risk. And without causing a PR nightmare.

Yet Abby hadn't known who was on board or supposed to be onboard until after she brought down the plane that was allegedly carrying her brother Luca. Luca generally doesn't leave New Orleans but the flight manifest had him as one of the passengers. And he did just take a job as a personal chef.

So for a few critical hours, Abby thought she had crashed a plane with her brother onboard. But thankfully he wasn't because he reached out to her after his supposed death. In fact, Luca ended up texting her following the crash and he said he was in danger. And what her to meet him at the amusement park they used to frequent as kids.

And while she was doing that, the rest of her team were trying to figure out what happened onboard a billionaire/military contractor's plane.

Only no one knew how to find Mr. Blye. Jenner Blye of Blye Industries had gone missing and none of his people had wanted that information to get out however it was hard to turn a man like Gibbs away without a proper explanation. Gibbs had been tasked with questioning Blye about whether or not he has any enemies that would wish to kill him and so it didn't look good that Blye had disappeared.

If anything it made Gibbs and his people believe that whoever originally set out to crash his plane must have found another way to get to their intended target.

Though that didn't help Luca Sciuto. Moments after his sister found him, DiNozzo was then forced to arrest him. It seems they have evidence of him being the one to kill the entire crew of the plane with a neurotoxin and so they had a few questions for him.

And Luca didn't want to answer of those questions without a lawyer. Apparently his big sister once told him to never speak to the police without a lawyer so he took that advice to heart and it was messing with the investigation. So Abby asked Gibbs for a favor. She asked that she been the one to question Luca seeing as she knew she could crack him.

And crack him, she did. Abby knew her brother was holding back on something and so she got him to admit that while he was drugged and dropped off at motel on the very same day he was supposed to board a private jet — he was protecting someone. Her name was Eva and Luca was so hung up on her that he didn't bother to ask any pertinent questions. Like what was her last name for instance.

But a caricature he had gotten of the two of them eventually led to Abby finally identifying the mysterious Eva. And Eva's last name was Azarova as in a Russian name. Which makes sense because she was a Russian spy that worked for Russian Counselor Anton Pavlenko.

Although Pavlenko said he didn't kill those people and that the chef who substituted for Luca was one of his own men. So Pavlenko had been in the middle of convincing Gibbs to team up in order to find out who the real threat was when suddenly he dropped dead. One second he had been enjoying his drink and the next he was dead.

Someone had poisoned him with the same neurotoxin that had been used earlier. And Gibbs, thinking quickly on his feet, realized the best place to take Pavlenko's body would be the New Orleans Medical Examiner.

The conclusion of the episode was aired as NCIS New Orleans's S02E12 episode titled "Sister City, Part II".

Summary: An international human-trafficking ring that was believed to be shut down is uncovered when NCIS investigates the murder of a seaman who was set to testify before a grand jury. Meanwhile, McGee hopes to spend the night at a colleague's home after a storm causes massive power outages in the city.

Virginia State Police had called the NCIS about a body at one of their landfills. However, McGee ended up being presented with the wonderful opportunity of seeing his old friend Stewie at the very same landfill. Stewie you see had gone to MIT with McGee and Stewie had also studied Evolutionary Biology while he was there but despite his impressive degree — there was nothing Stewie loved more than trash. And therefore Stewie had been working at the landfill when he came across the body of Seaman Alessandria Ramos.

Ms. Ramos had been third generation Navy and by all accounts she had been exemplary at her job as well. So the NCIS couldn't have guessed why someone would harm her until a detective from DC Metro showed up. He said Ramos had been a witness of his and that she was going to testify for him in front of a grand jury.

Apparently Ramos had witnessed a shooting when she was driving home one night. And so she did the right thing. She took down the make, model, and the first three numbers of the license plate of the car that had been speeding away from the crime scene.

Detective Jeff Katz said that the police had her to thank for placing their murder at the scene of the crime. For not only was the shooting intentionally but it had been connected to an escalating turf war in Columbia Heights. And therefore Ramos finally gave the police something to quell the ongoing violence. The man she had incriminated had been one of the gang leaders involved in the turf war and without him — his people would have most likely have settled their differences with the other side.

But Rubin later denied any and all involvement in Ramos's death. He said he has a younger brother that was currently serving and that he held a lot of respect for the military. Which of course the NCIS didn't believe.

Only Rubin had a motive to kill Ramos but as it turns out he didn't have a motive to hurt a Waverly University Student. Hair from Jane Murphy had been found on Ramos's body and there was connection between the two. So the agents looked into whether or not the women had ever cross paths and they found out that they had both attended a concert on the same night.

Security footage showed them entering but not leaving the building. So Gibbs theorized that they might have gone out the back and not willing. However, the autopsy done on Ramos had also tipped Bishop off.

Bishop it seems had once worked on an international joint task force between the NSA and the FBI. And they had been looking into Human Trafficking.

A group had literally set up shop overnight some years ago and it had begun to abduct college age students which they could then sell overseas. And eventually the joint task force had brought them all down. Though Bishop had remembered their trademark.

This group would usually implant trackers in the girls they had abducted and it would always be placed under the left armpit. So when it had been revealed that Ramos had a tracker planted under her left armpit, Bishop had wondered if her old task force had really captured everyone involve. So she asked Gibbs if she could follow up with her former associates on the case and she set up a meeting between herself and her old friends Daisy and Adam.

Daisy had still been working with the feds and so she was able to look into any college age missing girls and what she found out was that six of them had gone missing in the last two months. Therefore, someone was meeting a quota. And later Daisy had gone on to say that she could probably still find out more from her people when out of nowhere she had been shot before she could reveal anything to anyone. Including Bishop who suddenly found herself to be the only person left of the old task force.

Adam had told Bishop he was out after Daisy's death but he had given her his report from all those years ago. And so she Bishop had been reading through Adam's file, when her friends found a viable lead. They had found where the trackers had come from and was given access to the ones that had been bought by Vanderhusen Industries that had secretly been a front for traffickers.

So NCIS were able to use locators in revers to find where three of the girls had been hidden. And they had managed to rescued them at the Virginia Port Authority before they could be shipped overseas. But Bishop had some unfinished business with her old friend Adam and she decided to talk to him without any backup.

Bishop had apparently realized something while she had been reading Adam's report. She had realized that he had doctored everything that had happened all those years ago. And that such a situation would only make sense if he had been the one to restart the trafficking business. Therefore, he would also have been the one that could get close enough to Daisy to kill her.

And once Bishop had realized those things, she went to Adam's in order to bring him in. Though Gibb's timely appearance did give just enough leverage to shoot Adam before he could shoot her.

Diego De La Rosa), Brett Rice (Captain RJ Hammond), Dahlia Salem (Maria De La Rosa), Greg Serano (Jalen Washington), Maya Stojan (Meredith Ragen), Henderson Wade (Sam Harper)
Production Code: 13014
Summary: A deep sea diver is murdered on the job, and his body and his suspected coworkers must remain in a high-tech decompression chamber for four days, which forces the NCIS team to undergo an unorthodox investigation from outside the tank.

Senior Chief P.O. Diego De La Rosa was a retired Navy man and therefore he gone on countless missions that tested both his stomach and his nerves. But he had never freaked out before so the diving team that he later joined had no reason to fear him.

De La Rosa had become part of an elite diving team that was supposed to be taking samples of saturation of the ocean floor in preparation of welding some oil pipelines. Yet the mission had gotten stalled when De La Rosa began flipping out in the diving compartment and had been threatening one if not all of three of his fellow divers of poisoning him. So naturally the guys that were watching the entire scene play out over the security cameras called their boss. Who then authorized them to bring up the compartment from the sea and back onto the boat.

However, De La Rosa had been dead by time they did so and fortunately someone had been smart enough to call it in. And so that's how a retired Navy diver's death suddenly became an NCIS case though admittedly it was pretty hard to start an investigation without be able to go near the body. The compartment in which the corpse was in had to also undergo a decompression stage that would make the compartment to be opened without killing the three remaining divers.

So really Ducky was put in an awkward position on this one and he knew that he couldn't determine the cause of death from instant replay. And without being able to open the hatch, he simply chose to gather evidence another way. He got the three divers that were still stuck with the body to gather evidence for him but only McGee saw the problem with that.

McGee you see had questioned the part where they were using all of their suspects to gather evidence. He said that any one of them could tamper with the blood samples or merely contaminate everything. Yet NCIS had no other choice.

DiNozzo and Bishop had done the leg work on this one and they weren't finding anything. There was a diver with a burner phone, another that was heavily in debt, and one diver even had their military record sealed. So the one thing that they could give Gibbs was that the diving ship hadn't been working for the oil companies. If anything the ship had been leagues away doing something else but they must have lied to federal agents for a reason.

Though no one apparently was allowed to give a reason. The second Gibbs and McGee started to ask around, a lawyer showed up and chose to show everyone the nondisclosure agreement they had all signed. So that meant that no one abroad the ship was allowed to talk about what they were really doing on the ocean floor.

And the company that had hired everyone wanted to be extremely difficult, they had their lawyer to look into the case that NCIS had against the remaining divers. Which is why the autopsy that the guys had performed was ruled unethical. Apparently Ducky couldn't use a proxy to gather evidence.

Even though that very same evidence had proved that De La Rosa had been murdered. After his freak-out, the compartment had been brought up and the crew inside had to put on air masks just to make the journey. So the reason De La Rosa hadn't survived the trip was because someone had loosened the hose connected to his oxygen mask.

Though De La Rosa ended up sounding very familiar to another situation that had happened with one of the divers. Sam Harper had gone diving on a different mission and his partner on that one had died because of faulty hose as well. So the captain of Brandywyne had gone on to accuse Sam seeing as it was now twice that people have died around him.

But the guys had seen Meredith Ragan's sealed army record and they had found out she killed a guy with her bare hands because she had mistaken a translator for an insurgent. So if anyone had a violent tendency — it was her. And surprisingly she had a lot of other fun facts in her background check.

It seems she had known the lawyer from the company for quite some time so when they finally realized that she had killed De La Rosa because he had found out she was using waterproof closets on the ocean floor that was supposed to be later sold to the navy as way move weaponry — to instead smuggle drugs — they then realized who her partner in all of this must have been. And as the added cherry on top the lawyer gave them the drug cartel that behind everything.

He had once worked for the Suarez Cartel and so it wasn't much of a leap to assume that he was still working with them.

So that's how Meredith got her hands on enough cocaine to drug De La Rosa and she ended up killing him with a hose because the cocaine hadn't worked out like she planned. She must have thought it would cause a stroke but all it did was make him freakout because he knew that someone had poisoned him.

Summary: NCIS and the FBI join forces when the daughter of Sarah Porter, the Secretary of the Navy, is kidnapped. McGee's childhood friend, NCIS Special Agent Valerie Page, assists the team with advance tactics training.

Megan Porter and her boyfriend had simply been taking their time on the way to school when a black SVU appeared out of nowhere and dragged the two teenagers inside, but luckily a witness saw the whole thing. And the Amber Alert had been quickly released by the authorities. Yet, Megan hadn't just been anyone. She had been the Secretary of the Navy's daughter and therefore her kidnapping became a crisis.

But, again, NCIS got lucky. Abby had immediately got to checking on the kidnapped teenagers' cell phone and she was eventually able to turn one of them on. As well as pick on its location.

So Dean Campbell, Megan's boyfriend, had actually been found alive because of Abby. It seems that while he was not part of the kidnapper's original plan, they had taken him out of necessity because they hadn't wanted him to raise the alarm before they managed to make their escape. Yet they did leave him gagged and tied up in an empty parking lot.

And what that means is that whoever had Megan had also not been willing to kill an innocent teenager simply for being in the wrong place at the wrong time.

These kidnappers simply assessed the situation and they hadn't killed Dean because they had thought he would be harmless. And thankfully that hadn't been true. Dean had later told the NCIS agents about the second car that the kidnappers had waiting for them in order to transport Megan and surprisingly the teenager had also able to identify the kidnappers' guns and military lingo. Dean apparently plays hours of video games so he knew what he was talking about and he knew for sure that kidnappers were military trained.

However, Secretary Porter didn't get to where she was by being friends with everyone. She was a woman in a high ranking position involved with a very traditional institute. So naturally there were some that begrudged Secretary Porter for her rise and possibly felt like her recent take on instilling women into other high-ranking positions within the Navy could be too much for them.

And Secretary Porter had in fact remembered one man in particular that appeared to have a problem with her policies. Commander Christian Broderick it seems had crossed a line when he tried to deny jobs to women under his command and he had also stepped on the Secretary's shoes by so. Therefore, she fired him and he lost out on a pretty good pension.

But Broderick didn't seem to bear the Secretary any ill-will. He said she had been to right to relieve him and he had put on a decent show for both Bishop and DiNozzo yet there was just something that didn't make sense. If Broderick hadn't wanted revenge on the Secretary, then how was he able to get his hands on ten million dollars?

Ten million is the exact number that the Secretary had taken out on her daughter as an insurance policy. She said that everyone in DC are ask to get ones for themselves and their children though she hadn't told anyone about that. Much less a man they all believed had been perfectly willing to spit in her face.

So the team as well as Special Agent Fornell and NCIS Special Agent Valerie Page had been wondering about where to look next when suddenly a ransom demands was made. The kidnapers naturally wanted a lot of money but not the full policy on Megan and they specifically asked that Secretary Porter be the one to make the drop off. Which was what she wanted to but no one allowed her to follow up on.

Apparently, the agents had all been in agreement about that one. They said the Secretary to risk falling into enemies' hands. And so they convinced her to let her ex-husband make the drop off. So Richard Porter and a few hidden agents had later showed up at the meeting place however all was not as it seemed.

The kidnapers hadn't wanted Richard. Therefore, they waited for him to drop off the money and had even let him see his daughter one last time before they then shot him. And sent off the bombs that were supposed to derail the NCIS agents.

So it hadn't been just about the money, there had also been another motive. Though the team knew that SECNAV wasn't going to like.

It seems that her ex-husband's girlfriend had been the mastermind behind the kidnapping. She was apparently about to lose everything and rather than ask for a loan — she kidnapped her rich boyfriend's daughter in hopes of extorting Megan's parents. But the woman's lies eventually fell apart after they had found her body.

Funny story! It appears that while Justine Wolfe had been prepared to double-cross her boyfriend, the guys she hired hadn't believed in honor amongst thieves. They just killed her and simply kept the ransom money for themselves.

And it turns out that Justine had hired mercenaries that used to work in a privatized army overseas but who had gotten brought up charges once Secretary Porter found out what they were really doing. So it had always about revenge for those guys and they were going to sneak Megan out of the country to further hurt Megan's mother.

But Gibbs and his agents showed up. And they were able to get Megan away from her kidnapers so the young woman had been returned to her family at the end of the day.

Although, now, Secretary Porter is wondering if she should quit her job!

Williams (Louis Shekian), Catherine Kamei (Nurse Ella)
Production Code: 13016
Summary: Dr. Taft experiences the rush of an NCIS case when he is assigned surgical duty on Gibbs' suspect and discovers some key evidence. Meanwhile, DiNozzo visits Jeanne Benoit to help chase a lead involving doctors in Sudan.

Dr. Cyril Taft apparently he had finally gotten Gibbs to agree to talk. However, before Cyril could talk Gibbs into seeing a proper therapist, they each received a call about a shooting at the Naval Ops Center. It seems that a group of armed men had broken into the facility to steal crates of military grade rifles as well as ammo when two petty officers came upon the scene. And had valiantly tried to stop the robbery.

And well Petty Officer Lamar Finn was found dead on arrival, but his patrol partner had survived the initial onslaught and she had managed to cripple one of the shooters. So it was this Fritz Beimler that Cyril had gotten the call about because the shooter desperately needed surgery. Yet Fritz later died on the operating table and Gibbs had somehow taken the death personally.

In fact, Gibbs had gone on to blame Cyril for making them lose their best lead into the missing crates of arsenal. And, though Gibbs did see sense in the end which had included an almost apology, Cyril had remembered that accusation and had tried to make it up to the guys by helping in whatever capacity he could. Starting with that strange scar he had seen on Fritz during surgery and that he thought Ducky should be aware of.

Cyril had mentioned the scar to Gibbs and, together with Ducky, the two men had opened Fritz open and had found a titanium plate installed in his forearm. Now that wasn't strange because Fritz may have needed it, but that plate had been much too big for his arm. As if it had actually been made for someone else.

So Abby ran the code found on the plate and she found out it had been installed in a catholic priest some years ago after he had been involved in a nasty accident. Father Gerard Carlin, you see, had been much beloved priest down in Texas and many had mourned him when he left the church to go do missionary work in South Sudan. And unfortunately the man was just never heard from again.

Although, Father Gerard had been the second Africa reference that the NCIS had because Fritz had also been in Africa six months ago. Right around the time that Interpol had lost track of him. So Gibbs had told DiNozzo to speak with their doctor friends that had worked in Sudan to see if they may have an information about the people they were looking for.

And sadly that required DiNozzo to see Jeanne again. Jeanne was kind of the love of his life and so DiNozzo didn't want to see her with her husband. But the boss gave him orders and Cyril decided to tag along just for the fun of it.

Which would have been fine if Cyril hadn't offered commentary. Cyril it seems had taken a guess at DiNozzo and Jeanne's former relationship and therefore he had made things extremely uncomfortable for DiNozzo. Especially when he asked if David also knew!

However, DiNozzo didn't think that David knew and so he asked Cyril to tone it down while he got to work. And later he finally got the chance to ask David and Jeanne about their work overseas though his question eventually reminded Jeanne of a different time. Like when he was looking for her father, the infamous arms dealer.

So DiNozzo had actually promised her that the case he was talking about had nothing to do with her dad. Yet he soon had to eat his words when they found out one of the men they were looking for happened to have worked with Renee Benoit in the past. And that meant they needed Jeanne's help in identifying the man going by the name "Oscar".

And naturally Jeanne hadn't been happy to hear her father's name. To be honest, she had blamed DiNozzo for lying to her again even though he had been telling her the truth when he said her father wasn't involved. But Jeanne had told them all she knew about Pierre.

"Pierre" had been her father's driver and he had worked for Renee for years. So he probably learned everything there was to know about arms dealing from Renee and may have also have used some of Renee's old tricks. Yet they had missed their chance on finding "Pierre" and had in fact run into another tactical team hunting the same man.

ATF had sent an agent to lead the investigation into the missing guns and, for some reason, Gibbs didn't trust Agent Kitt. He would later say that he had bad relationship with ATF in the past but he had a change of heart about his willingness to trust the other organization when someone had tried to bomb Cyril after the doctor had gotten too close on the case. So Gibbs decided to speak agent to agent with Kitt and he learned that ATF had secretly been tracking the guns since they were stolen.

Apparently, they had put a tracker on everything in case of it being stolen and it had been their organization's plan to see where the guns were going to be offloaded. Though Gibbs got Kitt to change his mind as well so he found the guys, including "Pierre", and he got justice for Petty Officer Finn.

But, just when it looked like Gibbs was to get out of doing therapy, Cyril played a fast one on him and he secretly set him up with his own therapist. Who somehow got Gibbs talking without the NCIS agent even realizing it.

Production Code: 13017
Summary: The NCIS agents' personal plans are interrupted when each of them catches errors in a seemingly cut-and-dry closed case. Meanwhile, McGee and Delilah argue over the importance of not talking about work during dinner; and DiNozzo bores his date with shop talk.

Falls Church Emergency Response received a strange call late one afternoon when a Naval Petty Officer called them to inform them about a man he shot.

Apparently Naval Petty Officer James Muldoon had shot someone in what had looked like self-defense after he noticed the victim had been attacking a young woman and had tried to intervene. So the case, from the outside looking in, had appeared as if it was going to be pretty open-shut. However, there was just something about Muldoon's story that didn't sit right with Gibbs.

Although Gibbs didn't immediately tell anyone why he had been so suspicious of the Petty Officer. He merely took one look at the crime scene before he made up his mind and, afterwards, he had his people dig into both the victim and the Officer because he was looking for something. And hadn't honestly knew the right word for it at the time.

All that he did know was that there was something wrong with the Petty Officer's story. The young man claimed to have been driving back from grocery shopping when he spotted the victim holding a knife to the young woman's throat. So that's when Muldoon claimed he intervened. He said he stopped his car and quickly reached for his weapon in his glove compartment and that particular weapon ended up belonging to his grandfather who died back in January. Though Muldoon said he hadn't register the weapon because he hadn't been emotionally ready to even look at yet.

And then the story just continued to get stranger. Muldoon said he fired a warning shot that had allowed the young woman to get away, but that the man he would learn was Mitchell Grafton had then set his sights on attacking him. Hence he shot off three rounds with the last shot being the luckiest.

So what was weird about that story was that McGee realized there could be no way for Muldoon to have seen the knife at anyone's throat because his car had been too far away and the knife hadn't exactly been large. And another thing that was strange, especially to DiNozzo, was that he knew Muldoon to be an expert marksman so why did it take three shots to take one man down?

Therefore, Gibbs's team eventually realized that he had a point when he made them dig into Muldoon because his story hadn't added up and yet the real clincher in this case had been when Ducky and Palmer found out that Grafton had been dead a full hour before Muldoon called "911". Well, it was actually fifty minutes to be precise. And in that time frame, someone had moved the body.

The medical examiners said that had Grafton had fallen on his right but they had found him on his left when they had collected them. So what was clear was that the crime scene had been tampered with. However, it was Gibbs that finally confirmed that the crime scene had in fact been staged because he had noticed from the very beginning that there hadn't been any blood splatter on the victim. Or on his knife.

Which would mean he hadn't been holding the knife at the time of his death and that his shooter hadn't been in immediate danger. So right there Muldoon stopped being a hero, but the only motive they could think of was the young woman that he had supposedly saved. Though both Amy Harrison and Muldoon claimed to not to have known each other before the incident.

And Abby proved that one was a lie when she caught on to their text messages that stretched back from three months ago.

Thus Gibbs had both Amy and Muldoon dragged in for questioning and he asked them why it had been Amy's DNA found on the bullets. Abby had apparently run some diagnostics she found when she went back to the crime scene. And it showed that Amy had loaded the murder weapon so all the NCIS was why?

As in why did she shoot Grafton and claimed it had been Muldoon? But the answer ended up being a heartbroken one. It seems that Amy had known the victim in Juvenile Hall where he had been a guard and she had gone in for a drug charge because of the pot found in her locker. And there, Grafton had sexually assaulted for all eight months she was locked up. Which would make sense seeing as he does have a rap sheet

And Amy would go on to say that she didn't even remember following. She just did it and then he realized she was up to something. So she had to shoot him for her own safety and, out of sheer panic, she called "Jim".

Her very good friend that happens to be in love with her, but who had known what she had gone through and has been protecting her ever since. And, really, no one wanted to blame him for that so no one wanted to pursue obstruction charges.

And they told Amy that she had a pretty good case for self-defense.

Production Code: 13018
Summary: The team re-examines an ambush on a group of Special Ops snipers six months ago in Iraq, after an American couple is attacked in the same area. When Gibbs discovers he needs the account of the lone survivor, he tries to connect with the wounded warrior who is being treated for PTSS at Walter Reed Medical Center.

An American couple and their guide were targeted in the Anbar Province of Iraq. A sniper had apparently laid in wait for them before he shot and killed all three. Yet, the NCIS Special Agent that was on the ground in Iraq later told the director that there were no witnesses to the crime and that the shot must have been fired miles away. Thereby the Americans that were still in that country were no longer just dealing with insurgents, they were suddenly dealing with insurgents that had seemingly become adept at high powered rifles that they shouldn't have access to.

So Director Vance had said that the Iraq police could do things their way, but he wanted the Americans to be brought to the states where Gibbs and his people can investigate the crime. Apparently one of the Americans that had been killed was Chief Petty Officer Elaine Dodd and she had only been in Iraq for recreational purposes because her husband had been sent there for his work, And therefore she hadn't been in uniform or was seen in uniform when she was in Iraq yet the couple had been targeted.

And there must have been a reason for that!

However, Abby ended up doing what she could with the information she received and she found out the weapon used to kill three people had been American. It was called the XR-30 and only an elite group had access to the weapon because weapon was considered highly dangerous. It had the power of gun, yet the mind of a computer. Meaning the sniper didn't even have to have skill. All they had to do was train the gun on someone and the computer would perfect the shot.

And with a gun like that, that's why it was only given to people the government knew could handle it. Yet some months ago there had been an incident. An elite group, as in the one that received the gun, had been attacked by insurgents and only one person had walked away from the incident. Gunnery Sergeant Aaron Davis had survived the onslaught but he had lost a leg and also received many injuries to his body that was going to need years of physical therapy.

But there was nothing physically stopping Davis from talking to Gibbs besides his own stubbornness. The Gunnery Sergeant had claimed not to remember a single thing to his therapist and his PTSD had given some the impression he didn't want to talk about what happened even if he did remember it. So Gibbs had a lot on his hands with Davis. He knew that the man needed time however that was the one thing he couldn't afford him.

So Gibbs had his people question Davis's daughter to see if she could give them any insight into her dad. Although her father only saw her the once after he had gotten back and he's refused to see her for months afterwards because he didn't want to answer any of her questions. And it turns out she's pretty into details so questions were her forte.

The teenager had told Bishop and McGee everything she knew about her father and how he used to love to sing. Yet she also mentioned that she got her eye for detail from her father. Who was a sniper himself and probably got a clear look at the group that had attacked his men seeing as he would have been looking at the insurgents from the scope on his weapon. Though Gibbs had come to the same conclusion and that's why he knew Davis remembered what he saw. And the only reason he had his people running around was because that was the only way to give Davis some breathing room.

And when Davis was ready, he did give Gibbs some good intel. He said he hadn't gotten clear look at faces what with his hideout and their masks obscuring his view though he had overheard one insurgent whispering to his men. Which hadn't seemed plausible to Abby because these friends must have been a good distance away, but again Gibbs had figured out what Davis was saying.

Davis had overheard the man whispering because that insurgent had been recording the attack for a propaganda film. A film that should be out there or at most have similar videos that Abby could track. So as she got to working on that, the rest of the guys were following their other piece of evidence. Namely the man that had come into the states on Spencer Dodd's passport.

Apparently the guys had originally believed Elaine and Spencer were targeted because of her job in the navy yet it appeared the real reason they were was because an insurgent knew that he could pass off as Spencer. Then enter the United States where he would go the motel that has been receiving international shipments. That proved to be pieces of the XR-30 that he wanted to sneak into the country.

Thus Abby had a two for one streak of genius. She found herself a new lead that gave her bright ideas and thanks to it she was able to find insurgent they were looking for whose real name was Mathew Cross. Cross being a former British SAS agent that had grown up Iraq because of his missionary parents that had stayed on in the region following the Gulf war. And so Cross hadn't stayed on in Iraq because his business in the states had been personal for him.

Cross had made numerous statements as well as videos in the past where he claimed big businesses were destroying the region and he called them the oppressors. So one of these oppressors proved to be an associate with Saudi Arabia and had oil deals in that country plus many others in the middle east. And ultimately the only way to stop Cross was to shoot him.

Though, thankfully, Gibbs had borrowed Davis's weapon and he was able to make the shot before anyone else were hurt.

So in a way Davis and Gibbs helped each other. Davis took Gibbs back to his old days as a sniper and Gibbs got Davis to leave his room. And simply face the world again.

Guest Stars: Frank Crim (Dave), Vincent Duvall (Holt), Pauley Perrette (Abby Sciuto), Robert Wagner (Anthony DiNozzo Sr.)
Production Code: 13019
Summary: A Navy Public Affairs officer is murdered, and the victim's wife and mistress accuse each other of the crime. Meanwhile, Anthony DiNozzo Sr. helps a homeless woman who believes he is her father.

Apparently the NCIS got the call about a body at Pax River. A young journalist in charge of detailing all of the navy's newest protocols for their civilian newspaper had been shot found dead in his own yet things became confusing after the local police asked the two witnesses at the scene what happened. Laurence Jennings's wife Angela claimed that she had seen Joann Allman shoot her husband and that she had hidden in the bathroom to call 911. Though Joann who just happens to be the victim's mistress had had a claim of her own. She said that it was Angela that had shot Laurence and that she called 911 out of fear for her own life.

So this situation was a bit out there at best and no one at NCIS knew who could they believe? They could have gone with Angela's story in which she said her husband had agreed to stop seeing Joann and thus Joann had killed Laurence because he was going to leave her. But if they went with Joann's story then they would have to believe that Laurence had finally agreed to ask for a divorce from Angela because he wanted to be with Joann and Angela killed him for it.

Either way, though, Laurence was dead and there were two women that were claiming they saw the other shot him and that fought over the gun before they became the next victim. Therefore, there was gun residue on both of their hands and the only thing that NCIS could rely was on other people's testimonies. Yet even that proved to be faulty.

Neighbors claim that Angela had often berated her husband and that they always felt bad for him seeing as he was such a nice guy however Joann didn't exactly have a spotless record herself. Joann who was a lawyer had gotten laid off by her third rate firm for a supposed pattern of professional misconduct. So while Angela may not have been the greatest wife, Joann was also skirting permanent disbarment.

And although the story was murky, the NCIS team were actually divided on this one. Bishop had been the one to question the wife and she had come to see how angry Angela had truly been so she was left with the impression that Angela truly did kill her husband. However, DiNozzo had his money riding on the mistress. He had questioned Joann and his gut had told him that she was in fact guilty.

Yet, both of them had more than enough to count as motive. Angela it seems had shopping addiction that led to her being forty thousand dollars in credit card debt so her husband had been forced to cut up her credit card and the police were even later called after witnesses had reported Angela physically assaulting Laurence. So Angela could have killed her husband for the two million dollar life insurance policy, but Joann could have killed him for a similar financial situation.

Laurence had apparently been paying for everything in Joann's life as well. Thus she may have killed him after she found out that he had stopped paying for the lease on her car as well as putting an end to her many cosmetic surgeries. And so the women both still looked guilty despite everything NCIS had found though there was literally no evidence to prove who was lying and who was telling the truth.

The women had tried to go down the lie detector route yet most of their answers were inconclusive and the one thing they had both been sure about was that they didn't kill Laurence. So, at first when they were getting nowhere, Gibbs had to tell the director that they couldn't take either woman to court seeing as there would be reasonable doubt. But then Abby tried something. She ran a simulation through her computer to prove who was standing where and she found out that neither of the two women could actually claim to have seen anything.

They had both been too far from the victim to have honestly witnessed the other shooting him. Therefore, they were both lying about what they had reportedly seen and the only reason they would have done so was if they had come to some sort of agreement. That made them blame each other as a way to throw so much confusion that neither the police no NCIS would able to prove a single thing.

However, DiNozzo hadn't waited around for the answer to that question. He had been with his father who recently decided to go looking for a project for his later years and had ultimately chosen to take on an unfortunate homeless woman that had mistakenly believed he was her father. He wasn't, yet he had felt for the younger woman. Who was obviously suffering from a mental illness.

So took Susan to the hospital and she had been diagnosed with a tumor though that wasn't all of it. Susan it seems had believed DiNozzo Sr. was her father because a part of her had known that she wouldn't survive her diagnosis and so she had wanted to reconnect with her own dad. That sadly passed away years ago after the two had a falling over her being gay.

And therefore it didn't matter that Susan wasn't related to them because DiNozzo and his dad wanted to at least be there for her towards the end. Thus they ended up just continuing to pretend in order for her still have her father and brother by her side.

But as for the case, it turned out that neither of them women were guilty of murder. They simply had gotten an email from Laurence saying that he was going to kill himself because they had ruined his life. So the only way that Angela could collect on the life insurance policy was for her to agree to split to money with Joann. And then cover up the suicide that would have voided the policy.

Summary: After Tony's identity is stolen by multiple perpetrators, the fake Special Agent DiNozzos begin blackmailing Senators.

SECNAV was invited to a very posh sort of party, one that the Director knew he couldn't take Gibbs so he decided to go with DiNozzo. However, Agent DiNozzo hadn't expected the reception he was going to get at that party when people heard his name and just assumed he should be avoided.

In fact, DiNozzo was still wondering how two senators had heard about him when one such senator handed him an envelope filled with thousands of dollars. Yet DiNozzo hadn't gone to Gibbs or even the Director with his concerns or with that envelope of cash. So he was trying to figure out what to do and was actually in the middle of asking for help from Bishop and McGee when Gibbs came running into the office. And reported that there had been a body identified as Special Agent DiNozzo found out in Virginia.

So it was weird. Though, it didn't take DiNozzo long to make a connection between what happened to him earlier and the man that had stolen his identity. And then apparently used it to blackmail more than one person if the briefcase found in the back of that car was anything to go by.

But Gibbs's first question had been about the money. He had wanted to know and had later asked DiNozzo why he hadn't he reported that Senator Bransfield had given twenty thousand dollars. Gibbs for one thought that particular piece of information should have been mentioned before they went over to collect Phony Tony. And pretty much everyone (including Director Vance) had wanted to know why Bransfield was willing to pay?

The Phony Tony had turned out to be Scott Byers. Byers had been a part-time waiter and part-time Uber driver yet he had managed to steal DiNozzo's identity and had also ran up some credit card debt. However, the team had been mostly concerned with what Byers did to the Senator Bransfield after he couldn't open up a new credit card in DiNozzo's name. So they had asked the Senator to come in.

And once the situation had been explained, the Senator had been more than relieved to find out his blackmailer died however he refused to help with the investigation. The Senator merely told the guys good luck and he then left their office believing his secret was finally safe. Yet it wasn't. Abby had stayed outside of the door while the Senator was talking so she knew he wasn't going to hand over information and so she decided to hack him.

She broke into his phone digitally and she found the guilty email from the man claiming to be Tony. It seems there had been a picture of the Senator with a lovely wife that was not his wife. So the blackmailer had asked for twenty thousand and had even had the nerve to sign the email with "Love, Tony". And if that wasn't enough then Abby had still been logged in when Bransfield's blackmailer sent him a new email.

The new email said that he had missed their drop-off and that he was going to get a second chance before the photo was released. Although, everyone had thought this problem was going to go away after Phony Tony died. So it proved to be disappointing to find out there had been more than one Phony Tony out there. And that DiNozzo hadn't realized that three different people had stolen his identity.

Abby had traced the email to a server and so that's how she found out that Senator Matheson as well Senator Kelly were also being blackmailed. But DiNozzo had come up with solution to capturing all the Phony Tonys out there in one fell swoop. He had McGee show up at the next money drop as Senator Matheson and Gibbs as Senator Bransfield seeing as the only senator that was safe with his blackmailer dead was Senator Kelly. And that way they could actually capture the blackmailers in the act.

Which they did, but it still ended up upsetting DiNozzo. DiNozzo had unfortunately been the one to interview the men pretending to be him and he had found out that they had been hired by some woman to impersonate him for five grand. Yet, the truly upsetting part had been when the guys told DiNozzo that he had been easy to copy.

They mentioned how he's been at the same job and same apartment for years. And how he didn't have a wife or a family of his own. So the guys had certainly driven it home when they said that he was predictably boring and that he didn't have a life. Though DiNozzo got the last laugh when he threatened them with twenty years in jail if they didn't help NCIS catch the woman that hired them.

So the fakes offered to do what they could. But all they could do was show up where they were supposed to leave the money for their boss. Therefore, Abby had to make sure that the cameras were trained on the locker that the woman had to open and then she had to hope the woman would turn around in order to face the cameras.

And thankfully she did. The woman that had stolen DiNozzo's identity had been Leah Ramsay. The socialite that DiNozzo had tried to date though their first date had been a bust. So DiNozzo had promptly forgot about her until he saw that it had been her in the security footage and then realized he had no way of contacting her.

DiNozzo had thrown her email after their first date and Bishop had later tried to find her, but there was no Leah Ramsay matching the woman's description. So Leah hadn't even been her real name and so all they did have on their mystery woman had been her fingerprints. Which she had left on the bottle of wine that DiNozzo had only bought to impress her with.

So Leah's real name had been Elizabeth Elliott. Elizabeth having gone off the grid since 2009 although she had a rap sheet a mile long before she did her disappearing trick. Apparently she was wanted for fraud and embezzling so they thought it was going to be a closed case once they brought her in. Yet, she surprised them.

When NCIS finally caught up with Elizabeth, she hadn't fought them. To be honest, she had wanted to make a deal. Elizabeth told Gibbs that she was willing to testify against Senator Kelly if he made a deal with no jail time. So Gibbs could have let her get away with everything yet he chose to find the person she had hidden inside of Kelly's office because that was the only she could have blackmailed him.

And so after they found her accomplice, the team were also able to find Byers's killer. It turns out he was going to tell so Elizabeth's friend ran him off the road to keep their blackmail a secret.

Summary: NCIS partners with the FBI and Homeland Security when two British prisoners, including a former spy, escape and arrive in the U.S. via a shipping container. Meanwhile, McGee goes apartment hunting and becomes determined to find out how DiNozzo purchased his lavish place.

A dead body was found in a shipping container: apparently the body of Sandra Billingsly, who had been a prison guard at a British prison, had been shipped from the United Kingdom to the United States right after a prison break three weeks ago. So naturally, after Sandra had been found, the authorities searched the rest of the container and they eventually came to a conclusion after they saw two prison uniforms also inside. And that's why the U.S. government believe two escaped prisoners had somehow smuggled their way onto their shores, but later there appeared to be some problem with jurisdiction.

Gibbs had told his people that this was their case because they had put one of the prisoners away. In fact, NCIS probably knew more about Jacob Scott than his own government did and so they knew Jacob hadn't been a killer when he went inside. Jacob just hadn't been a vicious person. Though he had been traitor because he used to be a MI6 agent when out of nowhere he went rogue and NCIS had to arraigned him for espionage.

Yet, Jacob had mostly carried out a victimless crime unlike his partner on the other hand. Cassio Chaves had killed a family member because he believed he couldn't trust them. So Cassio was already a killer when he went inside and odds are he had been the one to kill Sandra after the two took her hostage during a routine prison transfer.

Only Ducky honestly had a hard time on determining Sandra's cause of death. There hadn't been any distinctive wounds on the body beside what looks like fertility treatments. But, while Gibbs kept trying to run point on this investigation, he kept having to check in with his old friend

Tobias. Tobias and several of his FBI flunkies had showed up at the initial crime scene claiming they had jurisdiction so a third party had to decide who should do what. And unfortunately that higher authority said they had to work together.

And that just wasn't going to happen the way their boss thought it was. For instance, Gibbs and Tobias continuously tried to put themselves ahead of the other as if they were competing though they did occasionally remember their friendship when Gibbs noticed Tobias's phone kept ringing and teased him about it. Yet, Gibbs hadn't really wanted to hear about how Tobias has taken to online dating. So they stopped "sharing" the second Tobias started to mention his sex life.

However, the case itself had taken an unexpected turn. Everyone had thought that Sandra had started out as a hostage and had been killed in order to keep the prisoners' whereabouts a secret, but Abby found a magazine in the container and she traced it back to Sandra. Which means Sandra had been an accomplice the entire time and that her death had sadly been an accident.

Sandra who was undergoing fertility treatments had probably tried to start a family with one of the men she helped escape (i.e. she was slightly delusional) however her death hadn't been planned. Sandra apparently hadn't gotten enough air in the container so she slowly withered away from oxygen deprivation. But, as it turns out, Jacob wasn't as timid as everyone thought. And later he appeared to be the true mastermind of everything.

Although they didn't what was his grand plan. Jacob's closest friend Miranda had been murdered and a shipment of guns had been apprehended. So it was assumed that Jacob wanted to get back into the espionage game. Only what no one counted on was that he would take a hostage, a real one that time, and use Director Vance's keycard to break into the Navy's files.

So by time McGee, Gibbs, and Tobias figure out what was going, Jacob had already gotten what he wanted. Jacob had taken a single file from their server and oddly it hadn't been classified or even recent. It had been an old file that didn't appear to have any significance yet it had meant something to Jacob who had taken a great risk to get his hands on it.

But there was something strange about the file he had taken. On the service it had looked pretty harmless though the file detailed a joint operation between the Americans and the British and the operation itself was classified. So Bishop may or may not have been asked to hack into their allies' computer files to find out why Jacob had wanted that particular file.

And so the guys were waiting for the results of that when Cassio was found. Cassio it seems had split up with his partner the second they had made it onto U.S. and the reason behind that had been drugs. Cassio had gotten cleaned in prison, but Sandra had apparently been the love of his life. So he began using again after she died and he had freely admitted to killing everyone they had found because he said the drugs make him get that way.

Only Cassio had never realized that he had been set-up until Gibbs and Tobias told him. Unfortunately, Cassio thought Jacob had introduced him to Sandra out of the goodness of his heart so it had come as quite a shock that he played the two to get them to bring the states. Where he reportedly had some unfinished business.

Jacob's partner, you see, had told the agents why Jacob had come back to the states. He said Jacob was out for blood because NCIS killed his wife. However, there was no record of Jacob even having a wife so things didn't make sense for a while though Bishop had ultimately found the answer. Bishop said the Juniper Strike was a 2002 raid in the middle east and there appeared to be one major casualty — a young woman that Jacob had been selling secrets to.

So that woman must have been Jacob's wife, but that meant the list of NCIS agents that worked that case was in danger.

And neither Gibbs nor Tobias got to the former Homeland Divisional officer in time to warn him.

Summary: A 14 year old foils a home invasion but Gibbs suspects the teen is withholding pertinent details. Meanwhile, Vance and Senior FBI agent Fornell travel to London to investigate a case involving an escaped British spy. Later, First Lady Michelle Obama welcomes Gibbs to the White House for a "Joining Forces" roundtable with military spouses.

The episode kicks off with a soldier saying goodbye to his teenage son. He's heading to Iraq, he tells his son to look after his sister and his mother for him. After his father is deployed, there is a home invasion at their house. The cops find the teen hiding in the closet holding a gun, he shakily tells the cops he "had to do it."

McGee, Abby, Ducky and Bishop head to a diner for breakfast after Tom Morrow's funeral. Abby wonders when Tony will be back — he went to London to track down leads on Jacob Scott, Tom Morrow's killer. Gibbs barges in and interrupts their conversation — there was a shooting.

Gibbs and his team head to the house where the teen by was hiding in the closet. His name is Henry, there was a burglar in his house with a knife and Henry shot him in the leg and he got away. McGee questions Henry's mom — she says she had already left for work and Henry was home alone. He was the only one who seen the intruder.

Back at the office, Leon briefs Gibbs and TC on Tony's progress in London. Tony got contact information on a woman from MI6 named Jessica Terdei, she may lead them to Scott. Leon announces that he is going to London to find Terdei, and TC is going with him. Road trip!

Bishop update Gibbs on the home invasion case — they got the DNA test back on the blood at the crime scene, it matches a career criminal named Doyle. They have BOLO out on his RV, but no luck yet. Henry's mother is a successful assistant district attorney, and his father Sgt. David Marshall is a career Marine — Gibbs says that the break-in may not have been random. He tells Bishop to look in to it.

Gibbs sits down with Henry and his mother, Anne says she doubts her job made them a target because she hasn't been a lawyer since they left California. She has to take the West Virginia bar exam. Right now she is working as a secretary to pay the bills because her sister's medical bills drained them financially. McGee shows Henry a photo of Doyle and he confirms that he is the intruder. They still haven't been able to get a hold of Henry's father David — communication at his base in Iraq is down at the moment.

Gibbs heads downstairs to check on Abby. She confirms that the bullet from the Marshall's gun was what shot at Doyle. But, Henry lied to them. He told them he got the gun from the safe when he saw the man in the house. But, the safe is electronic and logs timestamps when it is opened. The safe was opened two days ago — that means that Henry has been carrying the gun around for two days, he didn't just grab it during the break-in.

McGee takes Henry out to the diner to try and get the truth from him. Henry confesses that he was walking down the street a few days ago and he saw Doyle stab and kill another man in the alley. That's why he got the gun out two days ago, he knew that Doyle was going to come and kill him to keep him quiet.

McGee fills Gibbs in on what he learned from Henry. There are two stabbing victims at the morgue that match the description Henry gave them — but neither of them were found in an alley. It is possible that the body was moved though. Gibbs meets with Henry's mom Anne, he tells her that they have to put her and the kids in protective custody.

Gibbs heads to the local police station and meets with Det. Swanson — he brings Henry along. Henry looks at the photos of the two stab victims, but he can't make a positive ID. Gibbs shows him the crime scene photos, but Henry insists that neither of the two guys are the ones that he saw Doyle stab and kill.

Meanwhile in London, TC and Leon track down Hugo, Jessica Terdei's Uncle. He pulls a shot gun on them and tries to kick them out when he learns they work for NCIS and FBI. Leon explains that Jessica might be Scott's next victim or know where he is — Hugo finally agrees to take them to his niece.

Bishop and Abby head to the alley where Henry says he witnessed the stabbing, but they can't find a single drop of blood. They are beginning to doubt his story. Gibbs is with Henry — he swears that he is telling the truth. While they are talking, a news broadcast comes on the TV, a body was just pulled out of the river — a convicted drug dealer named Wayne Woods. Henry recognizes him and says that is the guy that he saw Doyle stab.

Ducky gets to the work examining Wayne Woods' body — he confirms that he was definitely stabbed to death before he was thrown in the river. And, Abby found traces of Doyle's DNA under his fingernails. It looks like Henry was telling the truth, but it still don't make any sense that there was no blood in the alley.

They finally find Doyle's RV, and they find Doyle inside ... dead. Henry turns up missing — McGee finds him hiding in the alley, the same alley where he says he saw Doyle first. He tells him that Doyle is dead and convinces him to come back to the safe house.

In London, Leon and TC sit down with Jessica Tereid, she says that there is more to the case than what was in the files. She says that there was a leak during the Scott investigation. Tereid says the leak was at NCIS, and Morrow buried it. While they are talking — someone arrives at the house and opens fire, everyone ducks for cover and manages to avoid being shot. Afterwards, Leon calls Gibbs and tell shim to be careful — there is a mole at NCIS.

Abby gets to work with the evidence from Doyle's RV to try and find his killer. They think whoever killed Doyle also cleaned the alley to tie up loose ends. McGee finally gets a lead — someone accessed the security cameras and that is how they found out where Henry lived. The person that accessed the cameras is none other than the Harpers Ferry Police — Det. Kristin, the one helping Gibbs on the case. They head to the police station and arrest her, she's a dirty cop.

After the case is closed, Gibbs rushes to the White House to meet with Henry's mom Anne and Michelle Obama. He reached out to an organization called Joining Forces to help military families, he pulled some strings to try and help Anne get certified to practice law in West Virginia. Afterwards, Anne and Gibbs head back to their house and they have another surprise waiting — they were able to get Sgt. Marshall off the base and he flew home to check on them.

TC is helping Jessica get settled, they brought her back from London to keep her safe, and he realizes there is an intruder — someone dressed in black breaks in to TC's house and shoots him and Jessica Tereid up close and personal ... then leaves them for dead.

Summary: The NCIS team, alongside the FBI and MI6, continue an international manhunt for an escaped British spy who has left one colleague fighting for their life in ICU.

Jacob Scott's one-man vendetta has managed to hit too close to home. Jacob was somehow able to track down one of the members involved in his wife's death and break into the safehouse that Tobias was covering. However, while Tobias hadn't been Jacob's objective, the former MI6 Agent no longer about who was right or wrong. And he shot Tobias just to get him out of the way.

So Jacob was doing well as he worked through the list of everyone he blamed for the death of his wife, but he also managed to make a bigger enemy out of Gibbs by targeting his close friend Tobias. Tobias and Gibbs have always had a tricky relationship what with them being married to the same woman albeit at different times in their lives. Yet, they were able to move pass that and become friends. And Gibbs has proven how close he was to Tobias and his family when he helped avenged Diane's death.

But in the aftermath of Tobias's shooting, his first concern had been about Tobias's daughter's safety. The teenager was all Tobias had in the world and she had recently lost her mother. So Gibbs knew that Emily couldn't lose her father as well. And therefore he later complied when she asked him as her father's power of attorney to rip up Tobias's DNR.

Tobias it seems had had it one file for quite some time, but Emily thought her dad must have filled that out in the wake of her mother's death. So she didn't believe that he had been in the right mind frame and she kindly reminded Gibbs (as well as threatened her father's doctor) that her father was a fighter. Tobias would fight to live and he would fight to stay with his daughter. Though, the doctor herself had been a little displeased when Gibbs chose take Emily's side and disregard her patient's standing DNR so she might have mentioned that he shouldn't make decisions based off of emotions.

Only that's what Gibb was already doing with the manhunt for Jacob Scott. The FBI had sent over another agent to replace Tobias in the field and for some reason Gibbs tried to work around her rather than with her. So all that led to one undermining the other. Yet, Agent Monroe was actually helpful and Gibbs began to see that once he stopped fighting what he thought was her intrusion on his case.

FBI Special Agent Monroe had spoken to former NCIS Agent Dresser's ex-wife and the two were able to build up a rapport that let the ex feel comfortable enough to reveal what she knew about her husband. The two had divorced before his retirement and so she didn't know where he had gone underground yet she did know that someone had dropped off a potted plant for her on what would have been a special occasion. So Abby was later able to get her hands on that plant and run a diagnostic of what was used. And where it originated from.

Though unfortunately NCIS had been a little too late in rescuing Dresser. Jacob had already got to him by then and the two men that were left with the dead body weren't his people. One of the men had been MI6 Officer Clayton Reeves and the other was CIA Operative Trent Kort. Clayton who was a known associate of DiNozzo's had come to the states to hunt Jacob when he had come across Dresser. However, Kort had gotten involved because he had actually known Dresser and the two had even been friends.

So the hunt for Jacob Scott had become personal for more than just Gibbs. Yet, things began to unravel as to why Jacob was doing what he was doing. The spy that had turned on his own country had initially appeared to be on a mission to avenge his wife though that didn't explain what NCIS later found. DiNozzo and Bishop had found Jacob's safehouse and they noticed that he had left behind a message for them. And in it he stated that they should stop hunting him before more people got hurt.

And, well, that didn't seem understandable. If Jacob's sole mission was to hunt and kill everyone he blamed for his wife then why would he suddenly stop if NCIS agreed not to pursue him. But the one thing that did become clear was that Jacob wasn't going to be completely his vendetta list. The last person on it had been former NCIS Agent Allen Kane and it turns out that Kane had been the one to provide Jacob with Dresser's address in exchange for fifty grand. So whatever issues he may have with Kane was quickly resolved.

Yet, if NCIS wanted to figure out what Jacob was truly doing on US soil then he had to find out what happened in his case. Jacob had been caught selling intel on nuclear information to Russia in 2002 and he had tried as an enemy to the UK and its allies. Only there was nothing in his file that connected him to Ziva and recent information they managed to get on Jacob showed he was looking for her. So just as they were able to get Kort to hand them the CIA official file on Jacob, that's when everything took an abrupt turn.

Tobias was thankfully on the mend so he woke up for a couple of minutes and handed his daughter some information to pass on to Gibbs. It seems Tobias had found out which cell phone that Jacob was using and so NCIS were able to put a tracker on it. And that's when they found out Jacob was in the building. Their building which just so happens to be NCIS headquarters.

Although Jacob hadn't been on planning anything nefarious. He had actually come to them because he was framed for the murders and wanted to clear his name of that as well as espionage. So that's why he was looking for Ziva. Ziva's father had proof that he was innocent and he was hoping she had inherited her father's files. And therefore be able to clear his name however if Jacob was telling the truth then they had to look at who would set him up.

And when suspicion finally fell on Kort, it was too late. Kort had made a run for it, but before he set Ziva's father's house on fire and that's reportedly where she was currently staying. So NCIS were left wondering if Kort managed to get to Ziva as a way to stop her from handing over her father's files.

Summary: NCIS, the FBI and MI6 are engaging in an international manhunt for an escaped British spy who is targeting current and former agents.

The fire at the late Eli David's home had set everyone into a panic. However, no one was more affected by the news than DiNozzo. DiNozzo had wanted to know if Ziva had survived the fire and therefore he later didn't hesitate when NCIS received word that a survivor had been pulled from the wreckage on tonight's episode of "NCIS". He just told Gibbs that he had to go to Tel Aviv and Gibbs understood that DiNozzo needed to see for himself whether or not the survivor was their Ziva.

But before DiNozzo could even finish packing his bag, both the Director and SAS agent had heard back from Tel Aviv. The men had come by NCIS headquarters because they had wanted to deliver the news in person however it wasn't good. Ziva had apparently died in the fire so it looks like Kort did manage to get to her. And with Ziva already declared dead by their allies, several of DiNozzo knew that they had to be the ones to break the news to him before he found out what happened from anyone else.

Only DiNozzo didn't know how to handle the news. He had tried to pretend that he was angry because Ziva had been one of them, but Gibbs knew differently and he told DiNozzo to go home. If he didn't go willingly then Gibbs threatened to permanently send him home. So DiNozzo ultimately chose to go home rather than risk losing job.

Yet, he later came back when the Director asked to speak with him. Apparently Mossad Director Elbaz had come to the states to express her condolences over Ziva and it seems she had traveled all that way because she wanted to hand Tali over to her father. Tali was Ziva's daughter and it turns out that she had been the survivor pulled from the wreckage though the reason Tali had to come to the states was because that's where her father was.

Her father being DiNozzo!

So Tali clearly came as a surprise to DiNozzo. He had been assured that Ziva had said he was the only biological possibility yet he had wanted an explanation as to why Ziva hadn't told him that she was pregnant. And he didn't want to hear any second-hand excuses from Elbaz. Elbaz had tried to say that Ziva hadn't wanted to go through life being dependent on anyone else and DiNozzo got that. Only he felt like he had deserved more from Ziva than that.

Though Tali, herself, proved to be a delight to everyone. The team had been ecstatic to hear about Ziva's daughter and that the little girl had survived. So Tali ended up being the one thing that could make them all smile at such a time. And so the one person that was struggling with how to adapt to Tali's presence was DiNozzo.

DiNozzo didn't know how to be a dad, but he was trying. He had a near miss when he couldn't understand what Tali was calling for. So he nearly caused the child to go into a full-blown tantrum because he hadn't known the name of her stuffed dog. And he had beaten himself over that because he felt like Tali's father should know what was her favorite toy was.

However, that was just the start. DiNozzo also struggled to get Tali to eat her breakfast even though she didn't seem to be appreciative of his efforts. And it turns out that child proofing his apartment was just as much of a struggle as everything else. So DiNozzo was kind of happy to see Jimmy had come by. Jimmy was a father too and so he had a lot of advice.

And some of it made DiNozzo think about his future. DiNozzo had never thought about retiring from the NCIS however Jimmy pointed out that he was a father now. So that meant his daughter had to be part of his decisions and, as a single parent, he couldn't exactly afford to continue with a dangerous job. Not when that could leave Tali an orphan.

So DiNozzo was in the middle of trying to figure out his future when McGee later called him with news on Kort. Kort it seems had stayed in the country and merely had one of his friends destroy Ziva's house. But both Mossad and Kort's former organization had no idea what he was planning. Or why he had stayed in the states despite the massive manhunt.

What mattered though was that they found Kort before he could use the nuclear launch information that he was trying to steal and that McGee had called DiNozzo in for the takedown. So when it came time for the final confrontation, it was agents from NCIS, FBI, and SAS that showed up to stop Kort and they admittedly all took shots of their own when Kort tried to grab his gun at the last minute. And therefore it's unlikely anyone would look too closely at who exactly shot Kort first.

But with Kort gone and that chapter of his life over, DiNozzo had decided it was time to turn his papers. DiNozzo had realized that he couldn't be the same man as he was before so he wanted to take Tali back to Israel for a while in order for them to say goodbye to Ziva. And afterwards he told Gibbs that he was going to take his little girl to Paris. Ziva had apparently loved Paris and so that's where DiNozzo wanted to raise their daughter.

And although their goodbyes were bittersweet, the team understood why DiNozzo had to leave NCIS.

Summary: The NCIS team investigate a deadly car explosion in Washington, D.C., that is linked to an NCIS special agent who disappeared six months ago while on a deep undercover assignment in Argentina. Meanwhile, Gibbs asks NCIS special agent Alexandra Quinn to shadow his team after rejecting eight agents she instructed and referred for an open agent position.moreless able to save her husband".

A Naval Commander had had a night out with his family when suddenly his car just exploded on them. Admittedly, the car had been acting up for quite some time leading up to the explosion but no one had expected that it would just randomly combust on them. So neither the Commander nor his family had been prepared what happened. However, the family got lucky. The explosion merely ran their car off the road and so that had given Marine Major Lucia Campbell who had been the commander's wife the time she needed to get out of the car and grab their daughter. And she was able to save both of their lives though she hadn't been

So it was the death of a Naval Commander that brought out Gibbs and his team. Though calling it a team at this point seemed a bit redundant. There had unfortunately been a series of new hires for someone to take over DiNozzo's old position yet no one had been working out far and the woman that kept sending Gibbs new men was rapidly growing agitated. And so Gibbs had been asked if not commanded to get his act and his team together although as it turns out

NCIS Special Agent Alex Quinn thought it would just be best to shadow him and his team. For that was the only way she could make sure that the team he had now wasn't a problem.

But while the guys were trying to investigate Commander Campbell's death, they soon realized that what looked like an accident was actually a planned murder attempt. Albeit not on the Commander. His wife Lucia on the other hand, was the one that had enemies and her own daughter admitted that something had been wrong with Lucia since she went away on a business trip. So McGee had talked to Lucia's Commanding Officer and the other man had revealed that Lucia hadn't gone away on a business trip, she had actually recently returned from some personal time away. And so Lucia's trip was deemed to be their best bet to figuring why someone would target her.

The truth about that trip though hadn't seemed to make any sense. NCIS had dug into Lucia's whereabouts and they found out that she had met with a private investigator who told her that her brother was still alive. Lucia's brother had been NCIS Special Agent Nicolas Torres and he had disappeared almost a year ago when it was assumed he died on a mission. Yet, the private investigator had gotten a recent photo of Nicolas and that meant her brother for some unknown reason was alive and simply chose not share that with anyone. So Gibbs went to Director Vance and asked about Nick.

Nick had apparently gone under deep cover in Argentina and the Director said that he had been up to date on checking in when everything changed after his sister came down to Argentina. Unfortunately, Lucia hadn't known that she was breaking her brother's cover by snooping around so she showed up in the city and began asking anyone she could for information on her brother's whereabouts because she wanted to know what was going on. So that forced her brother to go into hiding and he would have stayed pretending like he actually died this time if his sister and her family hadn't been attacked.

When Nick heard that the people he had been investigating had gone after his family, he got on the next flight out and was quickly taken to NCIS headquarters to answer some questions. Like what he did find out while he was investigating corruption at the military school down there. So Nick told them everything. Nick said that he had met David Silva while training and that he soon spotted why a man like David was even at the school. David it seems had been recruiting mercenaries for his "businessman" father Leo Silva however Leo and Leo's unusual business practices had already been known to Gibbs.

Gibbs had been warned once before about Silva so he knew that Silva had ordered a hit on Nick and Nick's family because Nick had gotten too close. So Nick explained everything that happened while he was in Argentina. Nick had said that he had begun dating Silva's daughter Elena to get close to the family and that eventually Silva had seen him as a second son because of that and that he started to have certain aspirations for Nick. Though once he probably found out that everything Nick did had been to take him down, Silva must have wanted blood and put out a hit just to hurt Nick. Even if Nick was supposed to be dead by time his family had been targeted.

So a hate like that wasn't going to go away because Nick's sister and niece did survive the explosion. But Nick had hoped that he could offer Silva a truce and that Silva would take it. Nick had thought that a truce would be the only way to end it all and call of the hit so he had found out where Silva was in DC and approached him. And while Silva was all for burying what happened seeing as out NCIS now knew what he did, his son on the other hand, had still wanted to kill off Nick. David had called what Nick did unforgivable and he refused to calm down despite how dangerous a feud was at that point so Nick had wondered about reaching out Elena.

Nick and Elena's relationship had been mostly for business, but Nick had hoped that he would be able to open Elena's eyes and get her to see her father for who the man actually was. Yet, Elena didn't want to believe her father could go after Nick's family and it turns out her relatives had known about Elena's meeting because there had been a bomb under the table. So Nick had lost all hope then because he thought that if Silva was prepared to kill his own daughter to get to him that nothing would stop him though Gibbs later stopped him carrying out his own justice. Gibbs had reminded Nick that he still had a mission and that he shouldn't give up on the badge just for a man like Silva.

However, to get to Silva, they had to take out both him and his son David. So the team figured out who the Silvas were staying in town for and they caught David in the act of attempting a US Senator. And though David refused to turn on his father, his sister on the other hand had finally put two and two together. Elena it seems had been smart enough to question her father while she was wearing a wire so she had caught him on tape admitting to the murder of a Naval Commander and the attempted murder of three other people.

And so Nick did get the justice he wanted though he didn't want to go back to undercover work. So Gibbs and Quinn offered him a job on Gibbs's team. Gibbs had needed someone with experience to run point for him and Nick personality had shown itself to be a good fit for the team. Though only time will tell if he truly was worth DiNozzo's desk.

Summary: NCIS uncovers a bomb plot and a long-running theft ring while investigating a death at a Quantico reunion. Meanwhile, Torres and Quinn adjust to life on Gibbs' team, including new seating arrangements in the squad room.

Two new members joined the NCIS team: Special Agents Nicholas Torres and Alexandra Quinn both had very different jobs before so being in the field much less being part of a time wasn't an easy adjustment for them. Torres had deep undercover agent and so he was unfamiliar with having a boss because he had always just used to report what happened and not exactly ask for permission to follow up a lead. So he wasn't used to following anyone's procedure and for that matter neither was Quinn. Quinn had been a teacher and she didn't have any experience being out in the field.

So their latest case was a test of sorts to see who could hack it and who could not, but it turns out that Torres had been the only one that had officially joined the team. Alexandria had just kind of attached herself to the team and apparently she wasn't going anywhere anytime soon. She had initially been asked to review Gibbs's team to see why he had fired so many of her new recruits and now she was merely sticking around because she found Gibbs's job exciting. They were the ones that flying all around the world and investigating the most dangerous missions. But their latest case involved a Special Forces Officer that might have committed involuntary manslaughter.

The Officer involved, Neal Sherwood, had gone to his High School's Fifteenth Reunion when an old bully began picking on him. So the former nerd who had trained in the military had decided to stick up for himself and strike back. However, the victim whose name was James Bruno had then had a fit after being thrown to the floor and it had looked as if he died because of what the Officer did though that hadn't actually been the case. James Bruno was later revealed to have been poisoned. Someone he knew had poisoned his nicotine patch and according to Abby that ruled out his entire graduating class.

James or Jim as he used to be known in High School had gone to the reunion wearing the patch and that meant he had been poisoned before coming to the reunion. Yet, because the team hadn't known that fact until Abby had worked her magic, they had searched the school to find the poison and had found out that Jim had planted a bomb in his old locker at the school. The bomb itself had been packed enough to level the whole gym where the reunion was so the "victim" had been planning on killing everyone from High School. So what NCIS wanted to know was why? Why was Jim was murdered and why was he going to bomb his old classmates?

NCIS thought the best way they could find answers to those questions was to find out who Jim had become after High School. Though Jim hadn't amounted to much. He had gone on to take a job that an old substitute teacher had set up for him and even then there were no records of him ever having paid taxes. So Bishop and McGee had then checked out Jim's place of residence and they found out he was subletting a room from a woman that seemingly knew him when he was a kid although this woman had thought that Jim had turned his life around since then. And finding out he had been a thief had been a shock.

Jim had had a stash in his room. He had unfortunately been robbing the wealthy neighborhoods and he had been using his accomplice to sell of what he found. But Abby's DNA test had showed that the accomplice was a woman. So McGee and Quin had waited around until they saw someone shady hanging around and that's when they found their mysterious accomplice. She didn't talk to them and she had no identification on her yet she was on the weird side and Torres had been asked to talk to her with Gibbs. And so it wasn't hard for Torres to realize that cracking their suspect was a test.

Gibbs was supposed to play the bad cop and Torres was supposed to play the good cop. However, neither of them got her name and all they found out was that she didn't believe Jim could honestly plant a bomb at the school. She said that she knew Bruno and that he was all bark without the bite. So both Gibbs and Torres that maybe she was a little naïve for a thief because Jim's DNA had been found all over the bomb though they gave her enough credit by checking out who else had been in Jim's life and they came across some surprising information. Ducky and Jimmy had learned that their victim had forced a diamond earring into his ear and that it might have been a homage.

There had been a second person's DNA found on the earring and so they had given it to Abby who told Gibbs that the earring belonged to Katrina Cooper. Katrina was one of the most popular girls at High School when she attended it with Jim, but she had gone on to marry the amazing jock and their lives were vastly different than how Jim's turned out. So Torres had gone with Bishop to talk to Katrina and they were trying to get her to admit that she had been in a relationship with Jim when they heard the gunshots. And followed the sound until they found Neal Sherwood.

Neal had been the nerd in High School so finding out that he had been hanging around with the popular girl and the top jock had been a surprise. Yet, Neal's death had had some ramifications. Neal had left behind a suicide note and the note details how he had been a part of the robbery ring with Katrina, her husband Adam, Jim, and the Angela. Angela had been the woman that refused to give up her name so finding out that she had gone to school with the others and that the only time their paths all crossed was at Saturday detention had made sense. It was the Breakfast Club all over again.

The group had met in detention and had all become friends. So that time when Jim was "picking" on Neal had been Jim doing a favor by making Neal look good in front of the ladies. Though if all those people were his friends then who killed him and, well, the answer came from a surprising source. One of Jim's teachers had told him about Jim's Landlady and the woman that had looked so frail had proven to be a murderer. She had set up the bomb and she had been planning on leaving town with the money that she stole from Jim as well as some of what he fronted her.

And the frail woman was eventually shown to have perfect eyesight, hearing, and walking capability when she got arrested trying to leave town.

Summary: A marine sergeant is killed when she falls from a building, but her doctor, Grace Confalone, risks breaking patient confidentiality and urges Gibbs to investigate the death as a murder.

A Marine Sergeant was in a coma on tonight's all new episode after she took a dive from the rooftop of her building. However, NCIS was called in on this particular case because there was some confusion about whether or not Sgt. Erin Hill had tried to commit suicide. Hill's psychiatrist who knew Gibbs personally had said that she couldn't mention much about her patient, but she had been pretty sure that someone had tried to kill Hill and so she had asked that Gibbs investigate the case as if it was. So naturally Gibbs had later tried to pressure Dr. Grace Confalone to spill more than that only she wasn't having it.

Dr. Grace was very careful about respecting doctor/patient confidentiality which was why she didn't allude to Gibbs being a patient in front of the newbies and so she didn't want to go into why she believed Hill didn't try to kill herself. But Grace did want to help NCIS's investigation so she again reiterated that she was sure Hill hadn't killed herself. So it had really been up to Gibbs to decide if he could trust Grace's judgment and he did. He had investigated Hill's death as suspicious and he thought he was going to find something yet all that the investigation turned up was that Hill had killed herself.

Hill had been spotted on several security cameras that had been placed all throughout the building and there had been no one with her at any point for Gibbs or his team to believe that she had been pushed. It didn't look like it and other testimonies including one from her superior officer showed that she was in a fragile state of mind. Hill had recently returned from a stressful tour of Afghanistan that saw her see especially grueling action when she had been forced to use her body to protect her fellow comrades so her superior officer had also believed that she wouldn't have reenlist once her time was up. And her time was coming up.

Hill had enlisted right out of high school and so she her choice about reenlisting had been relatively close. But what Hill's sister Devon couldn't understand was why her sister killed tried to kill herself. Devon had said that she and her sister had been discussing their futures so the plan had always been that Hill was going to help her sister go back to school. So Devon was feeling guilty because she wondered if her sister was afraid about staying on in the military though there had been other options for Hill. Hill had gotten an offer from a private contractor that claimed he met her overseas and he said that he had tried to call her on the day she died however she never answered.

Nor will she ever wake up. Hill later went into cardiac arrest at the hospital and she died from her injuries. So the first thing that Grace had done when she heard the news was to go over to Gibbs's place. Grace said that confidentiality ended when her patient died so she finally revealed to Gibbs and Gibbs's new roommate Fornell that Hill had told her that she had taken part in a murder cover up overseas. Hill had just been opening up to her and so Grace hadn't gotten all the details. However, Grace felt sure that the cover up had in some way caused Hill's death so Gibbs and surprisingly Fornell had investigated that lead.

Hill hadn't told anyone else about this murder, but Fornell ended up finding out that the contractor that had supposedly wanted to hire Hill had been former CIA and Fornell's contacts also said the guy was on the shady side. Though Gibbs didn't want Fornell investigating the case because Fornell was still taking it easy so he had asked McGee to escort his friend out of the building and he had gotten back to investigating what happened with Hill. So Abby went back to the drawing board and she had found something odd with the surveillance video that they all thought had proved Hill killed herself.

Hill had apparently been wearing one watch at the start of the video and she had been found with a second watch when the ambulance came for her after her fall. Abby therefore said that it was impossible for the other woman to change watches mid-fall and that someone had edited the video. But the only person that could have edited the video was the building's maintenance man who just so happened to be an ex-con. Gregg Abell had gotten arrested for hacking and so he knew his way around the computer. So the only question that daunted everyone was why Gregg had edited the video before turning it in?

Torres though was able to get the answer to that question by heavily flirting with a woman from the apartment building. Torres found out that Hill's sister Devon was involved with Abell and that the couple might have been who Hill was talking about in therapy. So Hill hadn't been all that honest with her therapist. Hill had made Grace believe that the murder had somehow involved her work when really it had been her sister that had gone in over her head. Yet there had been reason for why she didn't want to talk about her sister. Hill's sister Devon had raised her since she was small so she had thought she owed Devon something and that's why she covered up what Devon did.

Devon had been convinced by her boyfriend Gregg that the old man she wound check up on in the building wasn't going to miss his gold coins' collection. Gregg had apparently said that Leonard Odette was going to die soon from old age and that he didn't have any family. So that coin collection which would have been a small fortune to the both of them wouldn't be missed if they took out a few pieces here and there. But Devon later claimed to Gibbs during their interview that she had no idea that Gregg was going to kill Leonard and so she only helped him hide the crime because she knew that she would look guilty if anyone were to investigate Leonard's death.

However, Devon didn't realize that Gregg had hurt her sister until that very second in the interview room when she was explaining what had happened to Leonard. So Devon will have to face charges for what she was complicit in, but Gibbs and his team had later captured Gregg so Devon won't be the only one facing charges. And in the end Grace had been right. Grace had known that Hill didn't kill herself so once everything had been cleared up, Grace had gone over to Gibbs for another drink with the guys.

Summary: Gibbs, Quinn and Palmer travel out to sea and board a destroyer after the body of a navy lieutenant is discovered during a tiger cruise, when civilian guests are allowed to spend the night on the ship. Meanwhile, McGee contemplates the perfect proposal for Delilah Fielding.

Gibbs had a tough case on his hands when a dead body was found on an active Navy Destroyer. Gibbs was apparently used to working a case no matter the condition so working on the seas didn't bother him, but that particular Destroyer had what they called a Tiger Cruise. The Tiger Cruise was when family of acting navy personnel were allowed to spend a night on the ship in order to get better understanding of what it was like. So, in this situation, that meant Gibbs had to tread on thin ice. For some reason or another the captain of the ship hadn't wanted to announce what had happened because she said she didn't want to alarm the civilians that were still on the ship. Yet, the news still later got out despite her best efforts and there was no calming the victim's cousin.

The victim had been Lieutenant Vivian Mills. She had been found stuffed in the trash chute by the person that usually cleaned the area. So it was safe to say that someone put her in there and that and that they were probably hoping that the chute would kindly destroy the evidence for them. But it didn't and Mills's death was therefore ruled a murder though her cousin had no idea why anyone would hurt Mills. David Kemmons had been closed to Mills since they were younger and it didn't seem as if they had anybody else so David had wanted to know what happened. And he sure didn't like it when Gibbs naturally questioned him as a suspect.

David had actually gotten angry about that last part and he had told Gibbs that he didn't like what he was implying. He had said he could never hurt Mills and he had appeared to be genuinely worried about her and her absence earlier when everyone had first heard about there being a death on the ship. Though once David had passed Gibbs and Quinn's initial interview, they then had to interview all the other family members onboard the ship. So they had to question everyone. They questioned the friend that said he had agreed to the Tiger Cruise to escape his kid, then there was the rude younger brother had been forced on the Cruise, and finally they there was someone missing.

Navy Seaman Jennifer Baxter had asked for two "tigers" for the Tiger Cruise and no one had any idea where her brother was. However, Baxter had said her brother couldn't make the trip because he had called her about car trouble so there were a few people that questioned that. Baxter had apparently gotten some looks for her fellow servicemen because they had wanted to know if her brother was telling the truth or if he had helped someone get onboard the ship without anyone knowing, but Abby had thankfully found Baxter's brother and his car. So she checked it out herself and found out that someone had deliberately tampered with it.

So Mills's death hadn't been random. Someone had gone through a lot to make sure they were onboard and unfortunately no one knew who that person was. NCIS for instance had known that their culprit was a man because he had passed himself off as Baxter's brother. But other than that they didn't have much. Palmer, though, had come onboard with Gibbs and so he had collected as much evidence as he could and some of it was actually useful. There was a drone in the garbage which proved that someone had destroyed it and there was also footage from the cruise that showed the celebrity onboard had been allowed into a restricted area.

Some singer by the name of Kasey Powers was doing a goodwill tour by visiting the military. Though her lawyer that was constantly by her side hadn't wanted her to talk to NCIS unless they had necessary cause and they got that with the video. Kasey after all her been allowed into a restricted area and so NCIS had needed to know if anyone else had been with her. So, despite what her lawyer wanted, Kasey thought it was best to comply. She told Gibbs and Quinn that she had been signing autographs because there was kind of a secret agenda behind her goodwill tour. Kasey it seems had needed a way to cover up the fact she had surgery on her vocal chords so that's why she suddenly to do to cheer up active servicemen.

Kasey explained that her grandfather had been Navy and that she thought she could some good while recuperated. Yet, neither Kasey nor her lawyer had known who was in the restrictive area with her. She hadn't been paying attention and her lawyer hadn't exactly taken attendance. So the two weren't much help in finding out who had impersonate Stewart Baxter however the impersonator had thankfully left behind some DNA and there was a match in the system. The impersonator was Wayne Cribbage and Wayne had tried to swim to shore when he knew that he was close to being arrested.

However, Wayne wasn't their killer. Wayne was just a paparazzo that had wanted to get good shots of Kasey and he later said that he had been in the trash room when he overheard a woman and man arguing. Only Wayne claimed he didn't see anyone's face and so he wasn't really a good witness to the murder, but thankfully a restraining order had pinged and they had found out that someone on the ship had lied to during questioning. Gibbs and Quinn had apparently questioned the guy that said he just wanted to a free ride from his responsibility and it turns out that he was actually using the ship to reach his ex-wife's port.

Merrick Gomer had wanted to see his son though he couldn't because his ex-wife who was in the Navy had taken out a restraining against him. So he used the ship to reach her port and unfortunately Mills had recognized him. Mills had known his ex-wife and therefore she knew that Merrick shouldn't even be on the ship much less one that was pulling into the port nearest to his wife. But Merrick killed her to protect his secret and his plan was to kidnap his son when no one was looking.

Only Gibbs figured out what he was going to do and stopped Merrick before he could disappear with his son. So Merrick will be going to prison for Mill's murder yet Mill's it seems had a secret. Her cousin wasn't really her cousin. David had actually been her boyfriend and so he hadn't wanted to say anything because he didn't want to tarnish Mill's memory with the crew by showing her in a negative light by bringing an unauthorized boyfriend on the ship. Though David hadn't lied earlier. He had loved her and that's why he wanted to protect her memory so badly. And, do you know what, David's devotion had given McGee all the inspiration he need to scrap his over the top proposal plan and instead just propose spontaneously.

Summary: When a missing MI6 agent is linked to a murdered petty officer, Gibbs sends Quinn and Bishop to Philadelphia to work with MI6 officer Clayton Reeves. Meanwhile, Quinn painfully recounts the NCIS case that made her leave field work.

Things had gotten a bit tricky at the office when a friend of the team had stopped by and had apparently remembered Special Agent Quinn. Though not in the way she expected or would have preferred, Quinn, it seems had been trying to dodge this guy Francis for some times now and he just wasn't getting the hint. So Quinn had been a little embarrassed to have someone hit on her right in front of her entire squad, but she had agreed to take Francis's number and had told him that she would call him. Even if chances of that were pretty slim and would always slim.

Quinn had later told everyone that she hadn't been interested in Francis and that she simply didn't know how to turn him down gently without hurting his feelings. But Gibbs had eventually helped her escape a dinner with Francis when he told the team about a new case. Gibbs had said that another old friend of theirs who was always an MI6 agent had wanted the team to come up to Philly in order to help him with a petty officer's death. So both Quinn and Bishop had been told to board the plane and head out to Philly so that their team had some sort of presence in the city.

However, that trip and any trip to Philadelphia was something that Quinn never would have done if Gibbs hadn't forced her into it. Quinn as it turns out had a history in the city and so she didn't want to revisit it yet she had to for the case because MI6 Agent Clayton Reeves had needed them. Clayton had said that he had been looking for his friend and fellow MI6 agent when he came across petty officer's body and didn't know what happened. He didn't know if his fellow agent had been responsible for what to Petty Officer Gary Falco and so he didn't want to rely on the NCIS agency in the northeast.

Clayton had preferred Gibbs team because he had worked with them in the past and had a reason to trust them. Yet, Clayton had also warned Gibbs that he and MI6 Agent Mason Finley had been investigating illegal gun smuggling and black market items. So what Clayton wanted to do was first find Finley and then find out what happened to Gary Falco. He said that he had traced Finley's last location to the alley and that he had found Gary's body in that same alley. And so Clayton thought that Gary might have been part of that smuggling ring.

Only he hadn't been. Gary had apparently talked to his mother about possibly getting a ride back home so it seems that he might have just been in the wrong place at the wrong time. Though that theory that NCIS had come up with hadn't panned out until Clayton had suddenly gotten a distressed signal from Finley. Finley had managed to get a text to Clayton so he had traced the signal to where Finley was and that lead to Clayton eventually finding his partner in an abandoned house. Finley had unfortunately been beaten almost to death and had badly needed a hospital.

But Finley didn't want to go to the hospital and all he truly wanted was to find the men that had tortured him. So Clayton had thought that his friend was ready for the field and he had decided to let Finley come with them to investigate what happened despite Quinn having objections. Quinn had said that Finley wasn't ready to go back out into the field and she thought that Finley might snap if he was under anymore pressure. And sadly Quinn had eventually been proven right when Finley had gone off half-cocked and ended up shooting a suspect.

The suspect had been Nestor Carbone and the guys back home had thought that he might be involved in what happened to Finley because Nestor had inherited a smuggling ring from his father. However, Nestor had worked in and owned an auto body shop. So he wasn't exactly a dangerous threat when Finley had shot him and it turns out that Nestor hadn't been part of what happened. Nestor had run a body shop with stolen and therefore illegal cars. And a stolen car ring wasn't a big enough reason to kidnap much less torture an MI6 agent.

So Finley had clearly made a mistake with shooting Nestor however Torres had seen some of the pictures where he had been allegedly held prisoner and he had thought that there was something off. Which was why Torres had gone to Abby for help. Torres had later asked Abby where was the bathroom in the pictures because he said that Finley would have needed some place to go if he had really been held prisoner for a few days and in the same place. Yet, Abby hadn't thought that was a stupid question and so she had investigated it for Torres.

Abby had gotten blueprints for the house that Finley was supposedly held in and there was no plumbing at all in the building. Though there had been a bathroom at a coffee shop just down the block and surveillance cameras from that same coffee shop had showed Finley laughing it up with two suspects that he swore hadn't been involved in his kidnapping. Finley had said that Daley brothers were into exotic birds smuggling and that they weren't even on his radar yet the footage showed that Finley was instead in cahoots with them and that his kidnapping had been a setup.

Finley had probably faked the whole thing after he realized Clayton was looking for him and had found that dead petty officer. So the bruises as well as the "trauma" that led to him shooting Nestor, had also been faked. But Clayton hadn't the truth lightly. He had wanted to find Finley the second NCIS had informed him about the fraud though by then it had been too late for him and for NCIS. Finley had apparently gone on the run after the "accidental shooting" and there was no trace of him or of the Daley Brothers.

However, Torres and McGee still had a few leads on their end so they looked into where the Daley brothers would be hiding while Gibbs decided to fly to Philly. Gibbs had been concerned about Quinn and nothing that Bishop had told him had made him feel better about forcing Quinn to face her past. So Gibbs had flown to Philly and he had gone looking for Quinn when no one could find her so he eventually found Quinn at a bar. Quinn had unfortunately wanted to drink herself into oblivion and so Gibbs had finally asked what happened to make her so frightened.

Quinn had always been one of the toughest people he knew and he didn't think the official story about what happened to her in Philly was the whole story. Gibbs had said that Quinn would have recovered by now if all that happened was that she lost someone in the field. Yet, Quinn had been hesitant about telling him what really happened so Gibbs had to goad her into telling the truth. So Quinn told him everything in the end. Quinn told him that she had been on the phone with her fiancée when her partner Emily Shaw had left the car to give her privacy and had been gunned down before either she or Quinn had known that they were under fire.

So Quinn blamed herself for Emily later dying from her wounds. She said if she hadn't been distracted that she would have seen the guy hiding out in the doorway and Emily wouldn't have been alone when she died. But Gibbs had told her that both she and Emily knew the risks of the job and that Quinn shouldn't blame herself for what happened to her friend. He said that she had done her best to help Emily and that's what mattered. And so Quinn had gone with Gibbs when their friends back home found some reliable information.

Torres and McGee had pinpointed where the Daly brothers were hiding and that led to the capture of the Daly brothers as well as Finley. Finley had actually tried to plead with Clayton to let him go. However, Clayton had realized something since finding out that Finley was dirty. Clayton had realized that his real friends were the ones fighting by his side and Finley was merely the man that turned his back on everything they believed in. So Clayton had personally brought Finley down and, elsewhere, Gibbs finally came around to asking about Quinn's fiancée.

Quinn though had said that the relationship fell apart not long after Emily's death and that she was pretty gun shy about entering into a new relationship so that was something else that she had to work on.

Summary: When a petty officer escapes from her kidnapper, the team finds a connection to her missing husband.

Kristine Francis: Petty Officer Kelly Ristow had been held prisoner for days without end and had been subjected to the worst kind of torture when she managed to do the impossible. Kelly managed to escape. She had waited until her kidnapper had let down his guard and she had killed him before he could put out much of a fight so that allowed her to run away however Kelly strangely didn't seek out a police station or even a nearby military base afterwards. So NCIS ended up finding Kelly at the airport. She had been planning on boarding a flight and unfortunately that looked as if she was running just shortly after she killed someone.

So it looked bad. Kelly had injuries and she was psychologically traumatized, but she had gone to the airport for some reason and no one knew why. Kelly hadn't actually bought a ticket for any flights and her husband had still been in town. However, NCIS believed that Kelly had been prisoner so they had wanted to protect her and sadly that also meant that they had to tell Kelly about her husband. Kelly's husband's Chris hadn't filed a report that she had been missing nor did he make any strides to find her once she was gone and so that didn't make sense to Kelly. She had said that she borrowed someone's phone after she had escaped and that she had talked to Chris.

Chris had told her to meet him at the airport and he had said that they had to get out of the country. So that's why Kelly had gone there yet Chris hadn't showed up at their designated spot and that she had truly frightened Kelly. She had told NCIS that she truly believed that her husband was in danger because he didn't show and so they had agreed to look for him. But nor for the reasons that Kelly thought. NCIS had wanted to look for Chris because they thought that he had something to do with his wife's kidnapping. Chris hadn't showed any concern for Kelly after she had been taken and evidence at the house proved that Chris had been home fairly recently.

The house that Chris and Kelly shared had been tossed as if someone was looking for something and the couple's dog was gone. So either Chris had been taken or he had made a run for it without his wife though the other possibility could be that both those things happened. Chris had packed up their stuff because he had wanted to leave town and someone had merely come by afterward to search the place. Yet, there was always the same questions. Why was Chris running and why didn't he care enough about his wife to file a missing person's report? Kelly apparently thought that her husband was in trouble and that her husband forgetting about her had been a misunderstanding.

Only it wasn't and there appeared to be a good reason behind that. NCIS believed that Chris might have tried killing his wife because of the pricey life policy he had out on Kelly. The policy was for half a million dollars and that was a lot of money for a night watchmen. Though what NCIS suspect the husband was the fact that someone had clearly arranged for Kelly to be taken by Olek Lazarenko and they had even messaged the kidnapper to tell him what he could do to Kelly. So Kelly had been hated by someone and she eventually admit that her husband could still be upset with her for the affair she had a while back.

So Kelly could understand why others might suspect Chris however she still didn't want to believe that her husband arranged her kidnapping or that he had been planning on killing her. Kelly had said that she and Chris had been working through their problems and trying to rebuilding their marriage. Which was something that had also been corroborated by Kelly's own sister. Yet, Kelly's own sister had been holding onto Kelly and Chris's dog so she some questions to answer herself. And so Kelly's sister eventually admitted with great reluctance that Chris had stopped by and had asked her to watch the dog because he was going out of town.

Only Chris didn't town. There had been no evidence that he had bought a plane ticket and he hadn't showed up to meet his wife at the airport. So it simply didn't make sense for a man like Chris to just get up and go on the run. Chris had allegedly been a mere night watchmen and therefore they shouldn't be any reason whatsoever for someone to target Chris or his wife. However, Chris's accounts had showed in the end that he had managed to get his hands on millions of dollars and none of it had come out of the policy he had on his wife. Instead the money had come from a shell company called QFire.

QFire was a shell of a shell type of company so no one knew who exactly owned it. But a guy in the department did end up linking QFire to a name. He linked it to Leonard Weiss. Weiss was a military contractor and he had several contracts with the US government. So Nick later had to reach out to some of his old contacts just to get some information on Weiss and it wasn't pretty. Weiss according to the story had found out that Chris had taken some money out of his shell company and had kidnapped Kelly in order to get his money back. And so Weiss could be guilty of lot more than kidnapping.

Weiss could also be accused of murder. Chris's body for instance, had been found in the end at the airport in the back of his own car. So Weiss might have killed Chris once he realized that he didn't have Kelly in his custody anymore and was never going to get his money back. Though Weiss was denying everything and he actually sounding as if he was telling the truth when he said he wouldn't go to lengths for three million dollars. He was a billionaire after all and so Dale who had been helping NCIS had taken another look at the files that Nick had been given. And he figured out that they were fakes.

Chris hadn't stolen three million dollars and an investigation into what Chris was doing showed that he had been an inside source for some journalist. Chris had apparently found out that the company he worked for was fraudulent and so he had collected enough evidence to give the Washington Leader. But he hadn't been able to go through with handing it over because his wife had been kidnapped and the kidnappers had demand the SD Card in exchange. So Kelly escaping from that basement had changed everything once again. She was no longer prisoner and so there was nothing stopping Chris from handing over his SD Card to the right people.

So NCIS only needed to find where Chris had hidden that SD Card and it turns out he had put it in the dog's new collar. That's why he had left the dog at his sister-in-law's and he probably would have told his journalist friend by time he and his wife were escaping. However, that chance never came about and Gibbs was the one that ended up figuring out where the SD Card was. And so Kelly was able to do one last thing for her husband when she made sure that his death meant something.

Summary: Torres boldly breaks protocol when he learns a witness in an NCIS case is wanted by U.S. Immigration and Customs Enforcement. Meanwhile, Abby, Bishop and McGee woo landlord Tony DiNozzo Sr. in hopes of subletting Tony's apartment.

had caused something of a rift with his offer.

Senior hadn't meant to cause trouble though he had his friends who he loves as surrogate children competing and they were still fighting about the apartment when they were called out to the latest scene of the crime. Navy Seaman Troy Willis had been killed in an alleged store robbery and there had even been a witness to the event. However, the witness's story didn't quite match up with the evidence they later found. The witness whose real name was Victor Medina had said that everything happened real fast and that the perp had fled the scene in a white vehicle and that didn't explain why they found so much blood in the back closet or why the perp left his weapon in the store.

So it was strange that Victor would say that the perp left through the front yet the back room which he had access to had the most blood as well as the murder weapon. Though no one could find Victor right away to get him to explain the discrepancies because he had quickly fled the DiNozzo Senior had come back to town and he was doing his son a favor. Senior was apparently leasing his son's apartment and was acting as its landlord while Tony remains in Paris however he later made one crucial mistake as a landlord as well as a friend. Senior he had offered everyone as in Gibbs, Bishop, and Abby first dibs on the gorgeous place with low rent. But unfortunately, everyone wanted the apartment. So Senior had started something of a bidding war because they all wanted the apartment and they all believed that they were the best renters to take the place. And so Senior scene after giving his testimony to the local police. Victor as it turns, out was in the country illegally so he had fled because he didn't want to be deported and, despite that, NCIS had risked his status in this U.S. by eventually tracking him down. NCIS could be quite persistent after all with their investigations and they found Victor on his way to Ohio which was his mother lived.

Victor had seemingly been heading to his mother because he had wanted to visit her and not because he wanted to flee. Yet, that didn't matter to ICE or NCIS and funnily enough, they had been wrong about Victor. NCIS had thought that he was a possible criminal that was trying to flee meanwhile Ducky found evidence that Victor had tried to give the victim CPR and save him. So Victor hadn't been the cold-blood killer they all thought and more importantly he hadn't been just some hero. He was actually a former Marine that had gotten into trouble with a bar fight not that long after he was honorably discharged so that risked his status in the country.

He had served the United States by wearing a military uniform and all of that got tossed aside because one bar fight. The bar fight had unfortunately counted as a felony. So that allowed Immigration to revoke his status as an American because his parents had come here illegally when he was a kid. But Bishop and even Torres had a heart. They had heard from Victor that he had wanted to see his mother so they had taken pity on him and had driven him to his mother's. They had thought that Victor deserved at least a chance to say goodbye to his mother and so they gave him one.

Bishop and Torres had gotten off their set path and had finished the trip to Ohio. However, Torres had later let his emotions get in the way of the job. It was one thing to drive Victor to say goodbye and quite another to have dinner with Victor and his mother. So Bishop had tried to say something though Torres didn't want to hear it. Torres had felt for Victor so he had delayed the return trip as much as possible and immigration had to go to Gibbs back home to demand where Victor was. The ICE agent had said that Victor should have been by then and he was beginning to suspect that something had happened. And all Gibbs could do was say that Victor was on his way.

Gibbs didn't care to say anything else or explain why his agents were taking so long because he felt they had the situation handled. Though the agent Gibbs was concerned about was Quinn. Quinn had been acting strangely and he didn't know why yet everyone else knew the reason. They knew that Quinn had had a sex dream about Gibbs and that she didn't want to look him in the face because she was a little embarrassed about the sex dream. So Gibbs was the only one out of the loop and he thought that Quinn was just off as they tried to investigate who really shot Seamen Willis. And as they were going through several suspects, there was a man that had a gun on him when he went into the same restaurant as Victor as NCIS.

So Torres and Bishop had wanted to find answers about that because it was simply a little too coincidental for someone to try and rob the same place that Victor was in twice. That was either bad luck or someone had intentionally had wanted to harm Victor for some reason. Yet, Bishop shot the potential shooter and they hurried home in a hurry to figure things out, but thankfully they were right about something. There was something off with the shooter and it turns out he was a hitman. The hitman's name was Carl Dixon and he had been sent to clean up what happened at the store.

Victor had apparently come a little too close to the thief at the grocery store for the thief's liking and surprisingly someone that would rob a little store on the corner had the means to hire a hitman. But the truth was that the kid had a father that hired the hitman because the thief had been an entitled twerp that wanted to prove he was badass. So following the money as well as the car that Victor had seen had led them to L. Conway who was the overprotective father and his son Brandon. Brandon had grown up with a silver spoon in his mouth yet he proved that he was willing to kill on whim and not care.

However, Gibbs at the end of the day found a lawyer that he thought could help keep Victor in the country and Senior eventually decided who should get his son's apartment without causing another fight.

Summary: Bishop questions her previous work at the NSA when she's sent to Gitmo to collect evidence for a Navy chaplain murder case. In the meantime, her brothers visit for Thanksgiving and want to know from her co-workers who she's dating.

Bishop was dating again and she was apparently trying to keep her dating life a secret. However, Bishop hadn't been counting on her brothers visiting her for Thanksgiving or that all three of them would be interested in who she was dating. So the NCIS agent had been caught off guard when her brothers came to town and automatically guessed that she was probably dating someone from work though she did try to stop them from embarrassing her. Bishop had told her brothers George, Rob, and John that she was seeing anyone that they knew and then she had been saved by a phone call.

Bishop had gotten called into work about a car accident involving a naval commander yet sadly there was something just a little bit off about Navy Commander Derrick Reza's death. Reza was a chaplain in the navy, he was known as a peaceful man, and it didn't appear as if he had any enemies. Though the time of death was what warranted further investigation. Reza it seems had died around seven that night and Ducky's initial autopsy at the crime scene had appeared to prove that. So then why did Reza's car go off the road at eleven? A husband and a wife were driving their baby around to get the little girl to go to sleep and they had seen the car go off the road at eleven.

Yet, Abbie's review of the crime scene had helped clear up any misunderstanding. Abbie had found the cement block that had been used to apply pressure on the gas so that it looked like Reza was still driving, but by that, he must have already been dead. So Abbie's findings proved that Reza had been murdered and that someone had done their best to cover up by trying to cause a crash that would burn most of the evidence. Only the evidence never got the chance to disappear and so NCIS needed to review Reza's life. Who did he talk to, where did he visit, and most importantly why someone would go to such lengths to kill him?

So NCIS looked into Reza's last phone call from his office and they hadn't found anything there however, they did find out something by talking to Reza's commanding officer. The commanding officer had told the agents that Reza often counseled men in detainment and that it created a problem for him. Mainly because some of the other soldiers had believed that Reza sympathized too much with the terrorists and so that led to many accusing him of being in cahoots with them. But Reza was a dutiful American citizen and he had no problem with men trying to ruin his country being in jail.

What Reza had a problem was the fact that some of the detainees were given their basic human rights and that some of them didn't actually deserve to be at Guantanamo Bay. So Reza did his best to spiritual guide the men he had seen and had also attempted to help those that had been wrongfully locked up. Reza had reached out to the family of Amir Hassan and he had told them that he could help them free Amir. Amir had apparently been videotaped confessing to an attack yet Bishop and an old friend that was now firmly in the NSA had looked at the tape again and they had seen that someone had dubbed Amir's voice.

Amir was actually denying that he had been part of any attack though the voice had admitted that he had been a mastermind and that he didn't feel any type of guilt. So the video had been illegally doctored to keep Amir in prison for the last eleven years of his life and NCIS had every reason to believe that Reza had been killed trying to free Amir. However, the team didn't know where to look. Reza had told Amir's sister that their had been someone on the inside that had known the truth and was willing to help only he hadn't given up a name. And so NCIS had tried asking Amir if he had talked to anyone else.

Yet, Amir later said that he hadn't. Amir had unfortunately given up on talking to people seeing as no one else was going to believe him however he had talked to Derrick because he had said that Derrick was different. So NCIS had looked into who else at Gitmo could have possibly have wanted to help Amir and in time they found Brandon Peters. Brandon Peters had been the name of someone in charge of Amir's case when he first got arrested and it turns out that Brandon who was going by Ronald Ayers now had been the one to give Amir's file to Reza.

Brandon aka Ayers had said that he had been ordered to doctor Amir's interrogation video and that he had reached out to Amir as a way to correct the wrong. So NCIS had figured out that they had been wrong about the motive. Someone hadn't killed Reza to cover what happened to Amir, but that led to them looking into other motives and they eventually found out about the embezzling. Reza had apparently worked alongside Gareth Brainridge and Gareth had been looting thousands of dollars out of the organization because he had been greedy jerk.

So Reza had died after he confronted Gareth and Gareth had pushed him. The push had led to Reza's head hitting the desk table and Gareth hadn't bothered getting help. Though once Reza's true killer had been arrested and Amir had been freed, Bishop had finally confessed to her relationship with someone she worked with. Bishop as it turns out was dating Qasim Naasir who was the NSA agent that helped them with this case and her brothers had been so happy to be introduced to him. They had worried that she was dating Gibbs so meeting Qasim had been relief.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates a series of escalating threats against congresswoman Jenna Flemming, while Director Vance oversees temporary protection detail.

Congresswoman Jenna Flemming was considered one of the good ones on Capitol Hill however, someone had apparently been threatening her for months and the level of violence was merely escalating. So Flemming's personal aide Max Sanders grew concerned. He thought it would be best to finally report what was going on and to ask for help protecting his boss. But Flemming told him no. She hadn't wanted anyone to hear that she had been frightened by a few "little" things because she didn't want to come across as someone unable to handle herself and who needed the big guns to protect her.

However, the Max did eventually gain the courage to go behind her back and that was only because he had to. Max and his boss were simply heading back to the car after a long day of duck shooting with the congresswoman's donors when they both found a dead rat in her car. The rat it seems had had a note for Flemming indicating that she was next so Max decided to take that threat seriously. He had later reported the rat and he had talked to NCIS about the others threats when he knew that Flemming would be angry with him. Max though didn't care and he told NCIS that the threats began as threats on social media then it was letters followed by angry faces in the audience.

So having that sort of information did help NCIS and they saw where Max was coming from. They too were concerned that the congresswoman was taking things too lightly and they had tried talking about it to her themselves. Though the congresswoman was stubborn. She refused to believe that her life was in danger and she had honestly thought NCIS were blowing things out of proportion seeing as Director Vance had a bill on the books that she could hopefully help him to pass yet Vance knew better than that. He said that he had tried getting that bill for funding to pass for years and nothing had worked on the congresswoman. And Vance reminded her of threat!

Vance had said that he wouldn't try bribing her and that he never would risk the integrity of his office to create a false threat. So Flemming backed off from trying to accuse Vance of something, but she still needed some more clarification about the threat and so the guys explained it to her. They told her that someone had bypassed security on base to get to her car and that they must have been watching her to know when she would be going back to her car. Which was something that Flemming was able to take seriously. Yet, she didn't think that she needed protection much less that the FBI had fobbed her off on NCIS and so she was proving to be a handful.

Flemming had wanted to go about her day like nothing had happened and she had hated answering questions. But McGee and Torress later found where the threats were coming from. They found out that a teenage girl had started the whole threatening Flemming thing as some sort of social project and that she had gotten a little carried away. Amy had apparently referred to Flemming as Attila the Hun and she had stirred up a frenzy by implying that Flemming should be hung up for her crimes. So the guys had checked out Amy and she hadn't cared about whom she was about or that she was creating a dangerous situation.

Amy had just thought that she was finally in her mother's footsteps and she later didn't get it when NCIS informed her that someone had taken up her call. Though the one person that was eventually convinced that the threats were serious was Flemming. Flemming and NCIS had been informed that her personal aide Max had been found dead and Flemming couldn't help but blame herself for that. Flemming and Max had been close and she regretted that she had never told him how much he had meant to her. So Flemming quickly began helping NCIS with their investigation and she told them that Max was one of the few people that knew about the Brighton Naval Base.

The Brighton Naval Base was one among many naval bases that needed funding and so Flemming had sent Max out to see it in order to gather research. Max was supposed to gather enough information on the base to detect whether or not it should remain open and his conclusive results had been to close the place. So that's what was going to happen to the base and Flemming was the one that was going to be signing off on it. However, it wasn't an easy decision for her. She said that she regretted doing it because the base was at the heart of a small town in her district and she didn't want to see that small town disappear.

Yet, the base wasn't feasible so Flemming signed off on closing it and had thought that was still a hush hush. She said that everyone that knew the base was closing had been sworn to secrecy and she knew that Max hadn't talked. So they asked who might have found out, even if it was by chance, and if that person could have been violent so she told them about Jed Hamilton. Jed Hamilton had owned most of the property in Brighton and he knew that the town would die if the base was closed. And he was right because everyone knew that decision would be the end however Jed wasn't their killer.

Jed had made a big scene with Max at the motel and he had hit him though then he had gone to the strip club and therefore he had an alibi for Max's death. But the one person that didn't have an alibi was Max's girlfriend. Max had apparently met Laurie when he was doing research for the base and she was a realtor in Brighton. So Laurie would have lost out on the property development venture she was handling in Brighton if the base closed and unfortunately she had overheard what Jed had said because she had also been at the motel yet Laurie hadn't gotten upset that Max hadn't warned her in advance and she said she didn't know that she had hit him that hard.

So she didn't know that what she did with what Jed did was what ended up killing Max, but now she's going to jail and the congresswoman who got justice for Max was also suddenly asking out Vance.

Summary: The NCIS team tracks evidence from the murder of a Navy captain to Ducky's deceased mother. The probe leads Ducky to look back and question a pivotal life choice he made 37 years ago. Meanwhile, the team exchanges holiday gifts; and Gibbs eats Christmas dinner with Fornell.

Emily Fornell was apparently getting tired of her father living on "Uncle" Gibb's couch. She said he wasn't doing any of his exercises and that he wasn't fit to be seen. However, Emily had had a reason for disturbing her father and the status quo. She had recently started seeing someone named Jack and she wanted to introduce him to her father. So Emily had told her father to get his act together because she didn't want him to embarrass her yet Fornell had heard the word boyfriend and he had flipped out. The FBI agent hadn't known that Emily was seeing anyone and he actually thought she was too young for that.

Yet, there was nothing that Fornell could do to get his teenage daughter to change her mind about dating Jack and he wasn't going to get any backup from Gibbs. Gibbs was very firm about wanting to stay out of whatever family drama that the Fornell were going to get into. So the call about the latest case had come in at just the right time. Navy Capt. Mason Green had been murdered and left in some dingy lot though he wasn't robbed. His wallet had still been found on him and it had been full of cash as if robbery hadn't been the motive at all. And so NCIS had to look into the navy captain to see why he was murdered.

So there were things that stuck out. There was the internal investigation because Green was being investigated for selling classified information and that meant he could have been killed by one of his buyers that naturally didn't want to get caught, but the other thing that stood out was the piece of paper in Green's wallet. Green it seems had been carrying around Ducky's old address on a piece of paper that he kept in his wallet and that simply didn't make sense to Ducky. Ducky had said that he never met Green and that he couldn't see why Green would try to contact him. Though Green didn't want to contact Ducky. He actually wanted to contact Ducky's mother Victoria.

Victoria had been quite a character in life. She would call Ducky's lady friends tramps and she would do so even as she had a naked boyfriend hiding in the wardrobe. But Ducky remembered that one in particular. Ducky had been worried about his mother when she had decided out of the blue to marry Balthazar who she had met on vacation and he had thought that there was something off about the fiancée. So he had asked a friend of his to check out Balthazar for him back then and as it turns out Balthazar's name came up in Green's later investigation. Green had seemingly tried to see Victoria for something when he had found out she had passed however he had a reason for doing so.

Green had been trying to look for Victoria because of her connection to Balthazar Kilmeany. So Balthazar was the key to the investigation and the only one that knew anything about him had been Ducky yet Ducky swore the man claiming to be Balthazar now couldn't be the one that his mother dated. He said that would make the man at least 109 which was impossible so he thought this new Balthazar had to be an imposter. However, the man that his mother had almost married had been a con artist. Ducky's friend back then had found out that the guy liked hanging around expensive hotels to prey on older women with large bank accounts.

So Ducky had done what any good son would have. He had gotten "Balthazar" alone and he had told him that he knew about everything though all the same, he had offered the other man a choice. Ducky had told him that he could either be arrested by Scotland Yard or he could dump Ducky's mother Victoria and leave England. Yet, Balthazar hadn't hesitated when he chose to leave both Victoria and the country. He hadn't Victoria and he had been after her money all along. And so the only thing that connected Victoria to anyone wanting to find Balthazar Kilmeany had been the ad. Victoria had taken out an ad to find Balthazar after their engagement had been called off.

Ducky on the other hand, hadn't known about the ad. He had thought that his mother had moved past the Balthazar issue and that she had been fine without him. Though learning that his mother had gone to such lengths to seek Balthazar out had made Ducky doubt the decisions he had made back then. He wondered if he had deprived his mother of her one true love and if he had made her unhappy for the rest of her days, but there was also another part of Ducky that questioned if he had saved her from learning what or who Balthazar truly was. So he was going back and forth over his decisions when NCIS found out something.

The guys found out that Green hadn't been a traitor. Green had found out that someone had accessed classified files using his sign-in and that the person had been selling the information. So he was investigating who that person might be possibly when he found out that the other man was using the alias Balthazar Kilmeany to funnel money through various accounts. But the name was eventually revealed to be an alias that a whole crime family used whenever they were up to another job and so the latest person to use it had been Green's son-in-law, Logan. NCIS had found out about Logan because Victoria had revealed to her lover during her last days that she had seen Balthazar at the theatre.

However, the only person that had been going to the theater had been Logan who had been her Balthazar's nephew and who had taken up the name when he began selling classified information. So Ducky had been right all along. That man from his mother's past hadn't been right for her and she had ended up being happy with someone else. Even if he hadn't realized it at the time. So Ducky had been given one of the best Christmas presents he could ever ask for and later he got to celebrate the holiday a little earlier than planned with his friends. And one of them had been a very happy Gibbs.

Gibbs had finally gotten Fornell off his couch like Emily wanted, but he had later found out that he had termites and so now he was sleeping on Fornell's couch.

Summary: The team searches for new leads when an undercover mission to apprehend a businessman who's committing acts of terrorism to manipulate the stock market is comprised.

Gibbs had finally gotten the go ahead to fill in his team from Director. The Director as well as Gibbs apparently had known for a while now that there was going to be a joint task force, called Project Willoughby, that was carefully put together to take down a nefarious businessman by the name of Kai Chen. Kai was a very private man and he had money hidden all over the world however he used most of his resources to fund terrorist groups as a way to manipulate the stock market and he didn't care about who got hurt. So looking into someone like Chen was dangerous.

Chen had ruthless contacts that were just as protective of their privacy as he was and so he had lived most of the last fifteen years in hiding. There wasn't a recent photo of him and his digital security was so impenetrable that he didn't even leave behind a footprint. However, Project Willoughby had eventually got something. The joint task force had found out that Kai's regular copilot was sick and so that allowed them to sneak in Reeves as a replacement. Reeves had been given a new identity and they had ensured that Chen's people couldn't poke a hole in it yet he had been wrong about that.

Something strange had happened as NCIS watched the plane waiting for Chen. They had noticed that Chen's right hand man Jintao had quickly fled the plane and they were worried that someone would happen though they were too far away to get to Reeves in time before the plane blew up. So what everyone wanted to know was how did it all unravel? Reeves and the pilot had both survived the blast so the MI6 agent got to talk to Gibbs. And he told the other man that he couldn't pinpoint the exact time his cover was blown.

Reeves had said that he had stuck with the cover story and that neither he nor Miller should have gotten hurt. Though an investigation into Jintao showed that Reeves had been wrong about Miller. Miller had been the one to tip off his boss about Reeves after Reeves had spent months gaining Miller's trust. So Reeves would have never guessed that it would be Miller that would give him up or that Reeves preferred to die rather than harm against his boss, but NCIS hadn't gotten the chance to talk to Miller because he attempted suicide again and had succeeded in killing himself at the hospital.

But there were still questions that needed to be answered. How did Miller figure out that Reeves was an agent? Did Reeves do something to destroy the mission? Did Reeves compromise himself with Miller? So a lot of the Director's contemporaries had wanted to throw Reeves under the bus rather than blame themselves or look for another possible answer however both Gibbs and the Director felt that Reeves had been above reproach. Reeves had spent months living under an assumed name and then he had deliberately set out to manipulate others.

So Reeves had done his job and it wasn't reasonable to use him as a scapegoat yet NCIS knew that they needed to find something on either Jintao or Chen if they didn't want Reeves's career to be destroyed. However, Reeves didn't want to sit anything out. He had gone back to work as soon as possible and that had been awkward for Bishop. Bishop had been Reeves's emergency contact and Bishop had wanted to know why that was so she asked her boyfriend. She asked Qasim why Reeves would put her as his emergency contact and Qasim had said that it was probably the same reason Bishop was his emergency contact — they didn't have anyone else. And that hurt Bishop.

Bishop hadn't known that Reeves hadn't had anyone else and she was concerned that he didn't even tell her that he was signing on for Willoughby without telling her. Yet, she wasn't the only one that was concerned. Gibbs felt that Reeves had signed on for the task for all the wrong reasons and he had decided to make Reeves ride the desk while he interviewed Miller's family about what happened. So Gibbs and Reeves had been in a room with Miller's wife and daughter when Bishop spotted little Lexi's charm bracelet. Lexi had apparently gotten it from her father and he gave a new charm for each city he visited though Bishop had thought she recognized some of those cities.

Bishop had noticed the charms were from countries that Qasim had recently talked about so she asked Qasim to see the transcript for the latest conversations he was listening in on and her theory turned out to be right. Qasim had accidentally heard the code that Chen was using during his travels and so NCIS had been sitting on hundreds of transcripts. Though those transcripts couldn't be study by one person so Gibbs gave that task to Reeves. The paperwork was enough to keep Reeves busy and he had even invited the other man to house because he said that he cooked a mean steak.

The invitation however, was a way to help Reeves with the papers and speak with him about why he joined Willoughby. So Gibbs did get Reeves to lower his guard in the end and Reeves admitted he took the project because Bishop had said her team was family to her and he didn't want to risk anyone that has people risking their lives. But while Reeves was struggling to think better of himself than merely assuming her replaceable, the team caught a lead. They found out that there had been a mole in the joint task force and that Chen had known for months that Reeves was a plant.

However, Chen hadn't done anything about it because he liked keeping everyone busy instead of knowing what he was actually doing yet Miller hadn't been in on it. Chen had just thought that Reeves would turn Miller and so he made Miller kill himself. So Chen had played everyone and later he even got to Qasim. Qasim had gotten shot and sadly he had been without oxygen for too long so it was the machines that were currently keeping him alive. And Bishop was the one that had the choice about whether or not he should be taken off of life support.

So either way they lost Qasim and unfortunately they couldn't even get justice for him — Jintao chose to die rather than give up anything on his boss.

Summary: When Gibbs spots the brother of a Most Wanted suspect, he assumes an old alias and goes undercover with their anti-government militia.

No one had seen Gibbs! He was apparently supposed to teach an early field training class and he never made it. But Gibbs also hadn't made it into the office and so Director Vance was concerned. He wanted to know where Gibbs went and he wanted answer immediately. So he had asked Gibbs's people to investigate his disappearance and they hadn't wanted to do that. The guys knew that Gibbs was probably off somewhere investigating something for himself or simply needed time alone however McGee had stepped into Gibbs's shoes and he had told the others that didn't matter if they hadn't wanted to interrupt Gibbs.

However, Gibbs's disappearance was worrisome even if no one wanted to call it that. Gibbs liked his routine and he rarely ever broke it. So McGee and Torres had gone to the diner that Gibbs frequents for breakfast and they had talked to the waitress that sees Gibbs almost everyday yet Elaine had said that Gibbs was chatty that morning and that he hadn't waited around for the check despite telling her that she could take her time. And so something was clearly off with Gibbs. He wouldn't have just left money on the table and run off without speaking to Gibbs so McGee had decided to track his boss's location.

McGee had called Abby and had convinced her that they needed to track Gibbs's cell phone. Yet, Abby had said that Gibbs's phone was weirdly across the street from the diner. So that had spooked Abby and it had later spooked McGee as well. McGee had gone across the street and he tracked the phone to a mailbox though there were security cameras in the area and that cameras told NCIS a lot. The footage told the guys that Gibbs had put his own phone into the mailbox and that he had done so as a message. And so the guys checked the other cameras and they found Gibbs into a car with an unknown man.

So a picture of a potential suspect had been shown to the Director and unfortunately he knew who the mystery man was. Vance had recognized the man as Bodie Whitman. Bodie and his brother had been part of a militia that had stolen a truck of radioactive isotopes which were the ingredients for a dirty bomb, but the contents were never found even as the members were brought in or killed and so Vance believed Gibbs fell back on his undercover persona to get the truth. Though Vance hadn't been happy about it. He said the brothers were crazy and dangerous so he was concerned that the mission would go south before they had a chance to get Gibbs out of there.

Only Gibbs had known what he was doing. He had borrowed a woman's cell phone to call McGee because he knew McGee would trace the call to his location. So Gibbs had called in for backup and he had tried to let his team know where was going every step of the way. But Vance had called in for additional help. He had called an old friend of his and Gibbs's who also had worked the case and so he had Fred going through all of those files at the time to see if anything new has come up. And in the meantime Gibbs had had his people following him in case he needed to them in an emergency. Which at first wasn't the case between Gibbs and Bodie.

Gibbs and Bodie had talked like they were old friends. They discussed the past and Gibbs had known the right buttons to push to get Bodie contact his brother Ramsay. However, Gibbs's plan had quickly collapsed not long after he set everything in motion. Gibbs had talked with Ramsay and he had told Ramsay that he had buyer for the nuclear rods. So Ramsay had say he needed to think about it when in fact he needed to double check Gibbs and so he called back his brother with the truth. He told his brother that Gibbs was a federal agent seeking to entrap them and so Bubba pulled a gun on Gibbs.

Yet, Gibbs's people were waiting and they had diverted Bubba's attention just long enough for Gibbs to get his gun. So Gibbs had tried to get the other man to lower his weapon and in the end he had been forced to shoot though the autopsy on Boden afterwards had at least come in handy. Boden had been suffering Huntington's Disease and that usually an inherited trait so Abby looked into everyone else with the disease in the area. And she found Ramsay Whitman only he wasn't Ramsay anymore. The former radical had turned into a family man with a house in the suburbs and a new name as well as look.

So they found Ramsay in due time and he hadn't put up a fight. He had turned himself in and he had even said where the radioactive material was, but he had also confirmed that a federal agent had told him about his Gibbs and so all Ramsay wanted in return was to see his brother one last time.

Summary: During an NCIS hit-and-run investigation, Palmer joins a stranger on the ledge of a building in an attempt to save his life.

Palmer hadn't been in a good mood lately. He had been experiencing the winter blues and to make matters worse his family was also out of town visiting relatives. But Ducky had given Palmer some advice. He told the other man that if "he was going through hell, keep going". So Palmer had tried to take Ducky's face and persevere when things looked ugly however the two had been called out to a scene of an accident not three blocks away. The accident had apparently been a hit and run and their victim Navy Captain Paul Smith had unfortunately been dead on arrival.

However, there had been two witnesses at the scene and one had gone missing. The older woman that had been at the ATM machine and so she had merely heard the accident instead of seeing anything yet she told NCIS that she the captain's son could have seen more. So everyone looked for this son that had seemingly fled the scene and Palmer had been the first one to spot him. Palmer had seen Ryan up on the ledge of the nearby building and he had known that the young man was going to jump.

So Palmer had taken a gamble. He had rushed to the ledge without telling anyone and had climbed out the window in order to physically stop Ryan from killing himself. Yet, Ryan didn't want to be saved. He had blamed himself for what happened to his father because he had gotten laid off and his father had stopped at the ATM to give him something for rent though there was more story that Ryan simply getting laid off. He had also been fighting with his father before the crash because his dad had thought Ryan had needed to finally get settled.

Ryan had graduated college in a field that his father hadn't approved of and he's been struggling with getting a job. He later told Palmer that he was constantly getting entry level jobs and that his father felt they had wasted money on tuition for nothing. So that had made Ryan feel guilty because he thought that he had never gotten a chance to please the old man and that the last words Ryan had told his father was that he couldn't wait for his dad to butt out of life. Though there was a chance that Ryan's father would have always died even if he hadn't gotten laid off.

The car that had hit the captain hadn't slowed down or swerve and NCIS believed that could indicate that someone had intentionally run over the captain. But what they kept hearing and how Ryan had also described his father was that everyone had loved Captain Smith. So Gibbs and his people had questioned that. Gibbs had asked the captain's Operation Officer if she was sure that no one had a problem with the captain and she ultimately confessed that there might have been someone that was upset with the victim.

She told Gibbs that the captain had almost court-martialed the XO. They had apparently been a disagreement with both sides yelling and the XO had gotten heavily reprimanded. However, she didn't think that Commander Morgan would hurt the captain and so NCIS had to investigate the matter for themselves. They had looked into Commander Morgan and had tried to contact him yet Morgan wasn't anywhere to be found and he had cell phone turned off. So Morgan was a chief suspect and it looked bad for him.

Yet, things were fine as long as Palmer kept Ryan talking. Palmer had had a near miss when he almost fell off the ledge though Ryan had pulled him back up and so that had convinced Palmer that Ryan didn't really want to kill himself. If he did then he wouldn't have cared if someone else had died as well. So Palmer kept Ryan talking. He had Ryan talk about his mother and how she died when he was twelve. And how Ryan's dad had tried to act as two parents after that by both disciplining Ryan one second and then babying him the next.

So Palmer got Ryan to a point where he admitted that he did know his father had loved him, but the problem that Ryan truly had was that he didn't know if his father had known how much Ryan had loved him back. Though Palmer had talked to Ryan about himself and he had told the other man what he had to face. Like how he had lost a child when the adoption fell through and had how Gibbs had been the only one that could console him. He said that Gibbs had lost more than other person he knew and he still was this pillar of strength that that they all could depend on.

Only Gibbs and the rest of the team had been listening in on the conversation and they had heard everything that Palmer had told Ryan. So they knew that Palmer firmly believed in opting for happiness and that he had passed the medical examiner test on his third try however he didn't want to leave his job with all of his friends and so he hadn't told anyone that he had passed the test. But Palmer had made Ryan realize that how you measure success could make all the difference and so that had told the guys back at the station what they needed to give Ryan to make him come inside.

The guys realized that they needed to give Ryan a purpose and so they had asked for his help. They had investigated his father's case and his father hadn't been run over by Commander Morgan. He had actually been run over by a road rager that had gotten upset earlier when the captain had cut him off at the intersection. So the guys went to the window and they told Ryan they needed his help as an eye-witness to put the man that killed his father behind bars and that had convinced him to come inside.

However, the guys had also given Ryan the captain's wallet. They had wanted him to see that the captain had carried around a picture of the two of them on the day Ryan had finished his senior thesis and they also told him that his father had showed it off to everyone because he had been so proud of Ryan. So Ryan's last memory of his father was going to be that picture and that was going to get him through his birthday yet at the end of it all everyone had just been so glad that both men were ok and Palmer had even gotten a hug from Gibbs.

Summary: The murder of a petty officer in a small town outside of Washington, D.C., prompts NCIS to once again partner with "The Sherlocks," a privately funded investigative team that includes their newest member, Anthony DiNozzo Sr.

NCIS had gotten pulled into a turf war on tonight's episode when they tried to investigate the death of Petty Officer Maya Kettering and unfortunately found themselves in Sheriff Walter Osorio's district.

Walter or Walt as he was known by NCIS was apparently a member of "the Sherlocks". The Sherlocks were a group of individuals that probed into cold cases and did their best to solve them. But the group has had dealings Gibbs and his people in the past and NCIS pretty much found them to be annoying. So Gibbs had been able to get away with ignoring last time however he couldn't do so now because one of their own actually held jurisdiction. And therefore Gibbs hadn't really had a choice when Walt said that they had to work together because he thought it was better to keep their enemies close than let them run wild.

However, both parties had truly wanted the same thing. They had both wanted to find Maya Kettering's killer and so they both relied on the many resources at their fingertips though NCIS did have something of an advantage. They had Ducky and technically Palmer first had to work with them before he reported to do duty with the Sherlocks. So Gibbs had found out that there had been a rash of some sort on the victim's neck and back and that she had gotten because it of an exposure a certain synthetic fibers though another thing that Gibbs had gotten first dibs with had been the victim's husband.

Mike Kettering had said that he knew nothing about the rash and his chief concern had more or less been his wife's death instead of her rash. So Mike had a few questions of his own and one of them had been whether or not his wife was killed during a botched burglary. Though NCIS had wanted to know why Mike would think that and so he told them about the emergency fund. The emergency fund had been five thousand dollars that Mike and his wife had kept hidden in the freezer and so Torres and McGee had gone back to the house to check on the money yet they had found themselves running into the sheriff.

Walt had gone to the house to confiscate the alarm system and see if there had been anyone that had tried to break in earlier as maybe part of a practice run. Yet, the guys had been the upset that Walt hadn't been cooperating with their team like he said. So Walt, being the crafty guy that he is, had said that NCIS wasn't cooperating either. He said that he hadn't found out a single thing from what they learned from the husband and that they hadn't forthcoming with the autopsy, but both parties did eventually calm down and agree to share information. Which was why NCIS didn't make much of a fuss when Walt deputized the Sherlocks.

When Walt deputized the Sherlocks, that allowed them to see official reports and even gave them the power to invert view suspects. So the Sherlocks and Gibbs ran into each other again later when they both showed up to question Maya's XO. Maya it seems had gotten into an argument with her commanding officer and the two women had had a history. But Maya's XO had said that she had merely been hard on Maya because she thought the other woman had potential and didn't want her losing that drive however the two had argued because Maya had wanted to stay on the ship and put off her leave.

However, every officer needs their leave and so the XO made Maya take hers though the Sherlocks and NCIS had wanted to know why Maya hadn't wanted to go home. They had asked if she had been interested in anyone on the ship and that had been shot down right away. The XO said that Maya mostly spent time with the chaplain because she was religious and it had been her faith that had made Maya more dedicated to her marriage than ever. So everyone knew that Maya hadn't wanted to go home and just didn't know why. And so they tried probing into her private life as well as that of her husband's.

Maya's husband had allegedly been on a plane when Maya died and so watching him had simply been a way of writing him off completely. Though surveillance did pay off. The team learned that Michael Kettering had been having an affair and funnily Michael had been upset when NCIS revealed to his girlfriend that he was married because she hadn't known. The girlfriend had just been told that he lived in Dallas and so that's how he been able to explain that he could only live with her on weekends. So Michael had made Darlene believe he was a completely different person and the poor woman had bought into seeing as there had been no interaction between her and the wife. And so Darlene didn't honestly have a reason to kill Maya while Michael did.

Michael had later told NCIS that he was sad about what happened to Maya, but he claimed that Darlene was his soul mate and that he would have asked Maya for a divorce. So everyone had looked into Michael because they had been sure he was their guy and the one thing standing in the way of that had been the tapes. The tapes at the airport had showed someone matching Michael's description getting on a plane when Maya died. Yet, DiNozzo Senior who was a new member of the Sherlocks had been the one to figure out how Michael had killed his wife. DiNozzo had realized that Michael had traded clothes and hats with a guy that could practically be his double and that's how he had been two places at once.

So Michael did reveal in the end that he had killed his wife because she had tried telling her that he wanted a divorce and the catholic Maya had told him "no". Maya had thought they could still work on their marriage and so her fear about returning home had been from not wanting to be served divorce papers the second she set foot on land. But Michael had known that his wife would fight him and so he thought killing her would move things faster because he had been on a time crunch. He had found out that Darlene was pregnant and he wanted to start over with her and the baby.

Summary: When Abby's homeland security think tank is compromised, the team realizes that a theoretical terror playbook has been stolen.

Abby had gotten conned. She had somehow been talked into taking part in a think tank despite her reservations and she had carried out the mission that Homeland Security had assigned for everyone working the experiment. But the think tank hadn't been what it appeared. Abby had thought she was working for the good guys when she along with the others came up with a terrorist scheme that could potential kill people. So she had been confused when the fake bomb and sarin gas balloons she carried into the arena had proved to be all too real in the end.

But no one had gotten hurt, luckily. Abby had been caught by the MetroPolice before she could activate the plan and so she had never gotten the chance to detonate the bombs or release the balloons into the air vents. So Abby didn't find out that she had in fact been conned until the police had set off one of the bombs in a safe designated area and she had been left looking like a fool because she had been trying to tell them that it was all fake yet she had wisely asked for Gibbs and Gibbs came through for her.

Gibbs had alerted the team and Director Vance that someone had piggy-backed on the think tank's plan for the crowded arena. But the question was who? Abby had had a team for the think tank and so she had found them at the hotel where they all met with Earl. So they all wondered where was Earl. Earl Goddard was the Homeland Security Agent and he was the one that brought them all together to make a plan for the arena though his disappearance after that plan had gone haywire had seemed suspicious.

So an APB had been put out for him and he was later found in his van however he had been dead by then. Earl had died from Sarin gas and so they had made everyone believe that he might have switched out their harmless for something more dangerous before taking his own life. But Earl's people weren't buying that. There were some on the think tank that swore Earl would never harm innocent people and naturally Earl's bosses didn't like it that one of their own was being accused of something.

On the other hand, Homeland Security weren't really willing to fight anyone on the point that Earl was their terrorist because they also thought he did it and simply didn't want that information to get out. But the agent that Homeland sent down to run point on the case had did more harm than good. Agent Knox Ellicott hadn't told anyone that he had wiped his office's entire data and Gibbs's people had had to find out about it for themselves. The guys had all been talking to the think tank and one person had said he called Homeland to complain yet they had never heard of him.

All of Earl's files for the last couple of weeks had all been wiped and his alleged friend Knox had wiped his computer on the night he died. But Knox swears he had nothing to do with what happened to Earl. He said that he had been checking his files on his computer at home which was a big no no when he saw that someone was hacking his computer. So Knox said he had ordered an entire wipe at the office to keep the hack from spreading and hopefully cut it off at the knees. And so the fact he did what he did to cover his own butt had been something to consider.

But Knox had been telling the truth when he said that someone attempted to hack him. McGee had run a system check on all of the computers and it had unfortunately been revealed to him that someone had hacked Homeland Security files all across the country. So every idea that the think tank over the years have come up had been stolen and so there suddenly a national concern over another terrorist attack though the attack on Earl hadn't seemed like it was part of a bigger plan and that's because it wasn't.

Whoever had stolen the playbook hadn't killed Earl or gone out of his way to kill people at that arena. So the guys checked who was in the VIP suite and had found out that a former sniper during the Bosnian War had taken his son to the concert. The sniper turned politician was Jovan Dezic and he had taken part in a death connected to a young man in the think tank. The young man's parents had been killed by Dezic however Dezic never served time for it because it had been hard to prove that he had been there.

So the whole think tank had been arranged to kill Dezic. The guy had faked reports for Earl about a possible sarin attack and that had led to the experiment. But then Earl became suspicious and he had been killed because he was going to plug on everything though Earl had done something with his last breath. He had set off the alarms inside and had made sure that MertoPolice stopped Abby could before she could carry out the attack. And so Abby had also done something for Earl, she had stopped a second attack that had been planned and she had fully cleared Earl's name.

The playbook however was still out there and the some of the agents were heading to New Orleans to find it.

The episode concludes in the NCIS: New Orleans episode S03E14 titled "Pandora's Box, Part II".

Summary: Bishop becomes more determined than ever to seek revenge for the murder of Qasim, her late boyfriend, after Gibbs and the team find a new lead in the Chen case. Meanwhile, Torres teaches the agents the art of pickpocketing.

Naval Commander Renee Turner was murdered. She had apparently gone jogging like she routinely did and she had returned home to find a gun laid out for her however her killers had been kind enough to call her make their motivations known. They had said that Turner had let them down which appeared to be a death penalty in itself and so they demanded that she kill herself with the gun or Turner's daughter would face her mother's punishment. So Turner didn't have much of a choice. She had been told to kill herself or let her daughter die and so she chose to kill herself.

But that begged the question of what she did to deserve punishment? Turner was a decorated naval commander and she had been married to someone that had also been involved with the navy. So her death just didn't make sense. Turner had no reason whatsoever to be dirty and her file had seemed normal enough yet she did something and that led to her death. And so NCIS were flying blind when they received Turner's case. They had looked into Turner and she had come across as a devoted mother. She had planned a trip planned to Disney world as a surprise for her daughter and she had admittedly been doing her best to let the time fly by with her husband on tour.

So Turner's death had stumped NCIS. They didn't know why she would commit suicide because she didn't have a record of depression and no one in her unit had suspected that there wasn't anything wrong. Though something about the scene, while clean-cut, had felt wrong. The guys had found the TV still on and there hadn't been any indication that Turner was gearing up to kill herself much less go through with it, but Gibbs had ordered his people to go through everything and McGee had been told to find out where the feed for the TV was coming from. And he had had to investigate on his own because Bishop had surprisingly bailed on him.

Bishop had said that her water heat had sprung a leak and that she had to take care of it. So Gibbs had allowed her to leave the scene and he had thought she was going right home though she instead went to a meeting with Reeves. Reeves and Bishop had started their own investigation into Chen and their latest lead had told them about a radio station. The guy who was allegedly a courier for Chen had overheard some of Chen's people talking and he said that he overheard them talking about a radio station. However, Reeves and Bishop had wanted to check out the station for themselves and so they had eventually run into Gibbs and Quinn.

Gibbs had found out that someone used the video feed to threaten Turner and so McGee had traced the feed directly to that radio station. So that meant Turner's death was somehow connected to Chen however neither Gibbs nor Vance had wanted to hear excuses from their rogue agents about why they hadn't stood down liked they had been told. Yet, Bishop and Reeves didn't feel like they had been in the wrong. They had lost friends and had almost died because of Chen and so arresting Chen meant a lot to them. Even if others didn't understand it or thought that they were on some revenge mission.

But Bishop and Reeves hadn't been just stumbling in the dark. They knew that the radio station had attacked the electrical grid and they had been trying to prove it when they had been caught. So Gibbs had followed up on their leads and he had properly interrogated their witness though that radio station that was all so important was part of an underground network. The network was apparently put in place by survivalist who thought the world was going to end and had been a compound for themselves where they thought they would be safe with their weapons. And so Gibbs had had to ask the "survivalists" some questions.

Gibbs had asked the guy running the place if he knew Chen and it seems he didn't know Chen's name, but he did know Chen. Chen had been going by the name "Bobby" with the survivalist and he had even helped them fund their compound. Though Bishop had wondered if the attack that Chen was planning was so bad that he wanted a compound to escape to if need be. So NCIS had continued on with the interrogation and he had found out something important. He had found out that Chen was allegedly coming into town that same weekend and that they could catch him if they moved fast enough.

So the Director had called the mission in and he had been completely set on capturing Chen yet somehow the mission to find the billionaire terrorist had later gotten derailed. The higher ups and their personal spokeswoman, which turned out to be Congresswoman Jenna Flemming, had told Vance and NCIS that they couldn't bring in Chen. They had said that they didn't have enough evidence to arrest him and so at most all they could do was surveillance. However, Bishop hadn't been happy with that. She had lost Qasim who had been more than her boyfriend and had actually been her fiancée because Chen had wanted to stop Qasim from cracking his code.

The strangest thing happened, however. Chen had showed up at Gibbs's house and he had practically gloated about being untouchable. He had told Gibbs and Bishop that he was working with the CIA and Jenna later confirmed it. The congresswoman had told Gibbs and the Director that just so happened to be her boyfriend that Chen had agreed to work with the CIA on capturing a man that was terrorizing Aleppo. Yet, Bishop had done some recon on the man in question while she was in the NSA and she had said that he was small potatoes. So she had wanted to arrest Chen and get justice. And she had no problem with going rogue.

Bishop had gone out of her way to steal the congresswoman's cell phone and that she had used it to set up Chen. So she had in fact ambushed him. He hadn't been expecting to see her and he hadn't come with any backup because he thought he was meeting with a handler. But instead, Bishop had handcuffed to a generator with his code to blow and she had told him that he could press the trigger or wait for the Syrians she had called. Which would be the same men that Chen had been willing to inform on.

And so given such a choice, Chen chose to kill himself by blowing the generator and that stopped him from ever going through with his grand plan.

However, Bishop went rogue and Gibbs told her that there will always be a price that comes with doing that!

Summary: McGee's apartment is torn apart by a robber looking for a valuable item hidden by the previous tenant, a convicted criminal.

McGee walked in on his apartment getting ransacked on tonight's episode. But, thankfully, he hadn't been truly harmed. McGee had been able to get to his gun in time and he even took out of one of the assailants however one guy got away and McGee didn't know why someone had been searching his apartment. So he had just been glad that his girlfriend Delilah wasn't there because he didn't want to explain how bad the damage or why his friends all thought an earlier triple homicide at the apartment was involved.

However, it wasn't just McGee's team that believed the apartment's bloody history might have something to do with what happened. Gibbs had also been intrigued when he heard about the triple homicide for himself because it seems he and Quinn had been left out of the loop. So McGee explained everything. He said Paul Triff who worked as a licensed furrier had actual used his furrier business as a front for a smuggling ring when he turned on his fellow smugglers and cut them into pieces using an electric carving knife.

So Quinn had frankly been astonished that McGee would ever want to live there and Delilah was somehow ok with it. Yet, McGee admitted that he hadn't told Delilah. He said he would simply worry her and so he hadn't want to tell her about it though the others did push him into telling her little by little. Like he eventually worked his way into telling her that the apartment had been broken into before confessing that there had been some damage so what he was struggling with was the murder part.

McGee hadn't wanted to his girlfriend about the triple homicide because he knew he would then have to tell her that he hid it from her. Though while McGee had been hoping for another possible scenario, he and his team had found the other assailant that had been at the apartment and he had confessed that his dead partner had told him something valuable had been hidden there. He said that Louis worked in a lot of prison kitchens over the years and that one day the guy that used to live at the apartment admitted that he hid something that the police were never able to find.

What that 'thing' was on the hand was still a mystery. Louis hadn't told his partner everything and so NCIS had to go directly to the source to find out what had been hidden at the apartment from hell. But Truff hadn't wanted to tell them anything. The serial killer had thought it was funny that a federal agent was no living in his former apartment and he did his best to bait McGee rather than tell the team anything they could use. So they had to fall back on Abby. Abby had promised that she could search the walls without tearing the place up and she did her best to abide by that.

However, Abby hadn't said anything about not ripping the place up once she detected something. So Abby did have take up the floorboards when she detected something under McGee's bed yet McGee had had to remove his father's ashes that had placed and everyone had thought that was a little odd because they didn't understand why McGee or even Delilah for that matter would sleep over his father's last resting spot. And so they were still pondering that when Abby revealed the treasure that Louis had been trying to find.

Louis had apparently been looking for Logan Pruitt's body. Yet, Pruitt was well-known because of his involvement with the Pretoria Heist. The Pretoria Heist was when over a million dollars worth of African diamonds were stolen some years ago and many believed that Pruitt was involved seeing as he disappeared not long after that. So NCIS didn't know what was going on until Ducky and Palmer found a key in Pruitt which looked like a bank key and would be a perfect spot to hide diamonds.

So the team did have answers for Truff and he eventually want to tell his side of the story. He told them that he and Pruitt had stolen the diamonds and the agreement was that they would sit on them for a few years, but then Truff found out that Pruitt had bought a condo and was buying politicians steak dinners like he had money to burn. Though Truff thought that was calling attention to them so he threatened to take the diamonds away and Pruitt swallowed the key because he swore Truff would get the diamonds over his dead body. And that turned out to be a mistake.

Truff had no problem with killing Pruitt and because he still wanted to wait on the diamonds he didn't have a problem with leaving the key in Pruitt's stomach. But then he went to jail and he thought that Louis was a nice guy. So that's why he told Louis about the key and he also knew where the bank was however he wanted a bigger cell in exchange for telling NCIS the diamonds' location and that was a deal they weren't prepared to make. Not even when Congresswoman Jenna Flemming told the Director that would up his profile on Capitol Hill.

Director Vance had tried to tell his girlfriend that what he and his people did was important because they didn't go around making deals to make themselves look good yet Jenna had gotten offended by that and she had ended their relationship. However, NCIS found the bank on their own and they were still able to recover the diamonds without making a deal. So Truff lost and McGee admitted to everything to his girlfriend of his own free will.

Summary: Gibbs honors a sailor's dying wish and re-investigates a closed case that was originally deemed an accidental death and discovers it was actually murder. Meanwhile, the probe reminds Torres of a tragic time from his past.

Navy Lieutenant Laura Ellison had been at the hospital the last few months. She was apparently dying of Stage Four ovarian cancer and she had wanted to do something for a friend before she died however she needed Gibbs's help to do it. So Laura's father who was General Ellison had done the asking for. He had gone to Gibbs like the old friend that he was and he had told him that his daughter needed him. But Laura had wanted to tell Gibbs the details herself because of how important it was to her and so Gibbs had gone to her.

However, he hadn't been prepared for what she had to say. Laura had wanted Gibbs and NCIS to look into Navy Petty Officer First Class David Collins's death. She said she had served with Collins and that it had been her job to look after him yet there were a lot of things that he wouldn't discuss with her. He had come onto the ship one day with a black eye and he had told Laura that it was better not to say what happened to him because he hadn't wanted to lie. So Laura had had some doubts when not long after she spotted the black eye, Collins "accidentally" fell overboard.

So Laura had said that she thought someone had arranged for Collins's death to look like an accident and she had wanted Gibbs to open an investigation based on her gut. Yet, there were going to be a few problems with doing that. Gibbs and his people had to review a case that was at least ten months cold and had already been closed by another NCIS unit. So his people had to do a lot of checking up on what was in already in the file. They had talked with people on the ship that had heard about the accident or had known Collins. And so they came across Nicole.

Nicole had been Collins's friend and she had told them how Collins had gotten the black. She said she had been dating someone at the time that had gotten jealous of their friendship and that he had punched Collins when Collins stood up for her. So Torres and McGee had met Holden Baxter and he said that he had moved on by time Collins went overboard, but it had been pretty clear that he had still carried a grudge. He said that Lt. Laura had made his life a living hell and that she had only been doing so because she had been in a relationship with Collins. Though Laura later said that wasn't true.

Laura had told Bishop that she had been close to Collins because she believed he had incredible potential and she had wanted him to take advantage of that however Laura also said they hadn't been in a romantic relationship. She said that Holden got into so much trouble that he went down a paygrade and still refused to believe it was his own fault. But Torres had been acting oddly while Bishop had been questioning Laura. He had been pacing back and forth which wasn't like him and it had been clear that he was barely paying attention to the conversation. So Bishop had tried to ask him about that afterwards and Torres had pretended like nothing was wrong.

Torres had said that he was good yet he continued to act absent-minded. So at first Bishop had just thought he was ignoring his feelings and she hadn't thought it would a problem with the case because they later had a breakthrough. Abby had found out that Collins's blood had been on a broken part of the ship and they had found where he went overboard. However, Abby had also found traces of bleach on the area and the Navy wasn't allowed to clean the ships with it so that must mean someone tried to clean up the crime scene.

Yet, there had been more than just that. Bishop and Torres had found out that several traces of drugs on the ship and so they had looked into who had access to leave at will. So they found out the only one person had received a large case influx and it had been Nicole Trainer though, when McGee and Quinn went to question her, they had found her dead of a supposed overdose. Nicole had been found in a needle in her arm and plenty of heroin at her rundown apartment. And so one of the first things anyone questioned had been the apartment.

Nicole had had a hundred thousand in her bank account and so it hadn't made sense why she had been living at what could only be described as one step above a crack den. So of course everyone had wondered if she had felt guilty about accepting the money with her friend dead and possibly because of her, but that hadn't explained her death or why Ducky had found restraints marks on her arms and so Ducky had taken a DNA sample of Nicole's fingernails because she had fought off her attacker as well.

So Abby had gotten the answers she needed pretty quickly. She had found out that the assailant had been in the Navy records and it turns out that Holden had been one of the last few people to see Nicole alive. But Holden had told NCIS that he hadn't killed Nicole. He said he had gone to see her because he had been worried about her. Holden told the guys that someone had forced Nicole to take the drugs with her and that all he had wanted to do was to protect her from what she did however she hadn't wanted his help and she had thrown him out of her apartment. And so Holden believed someone must have gone to see her after he did and Gibbs was willing to believe it.

Holden could be a jerk yet he hadn't had the pull to force Nicole into anything because she had broken up with him early on. So Bishop and McGee looked up who had signed off on all of Nicole's searches and it had been Chief Michael Vinton. Vinton was apparently getting forced into retirement and so he had needed a get rich quick scheme. However, he had also been dumb enough to hide everything on his basement and so Quinn and Gibbs had no problem with arresting him afterwards. And he had also helped because he decided not to fight them once the rest of the crew found out he had killed two of their own.

And so Gibbs was able to provide Laura the closure she needed and he had even gotten Collins to be posthumously awarded the rank of naval officer. So that would have been fine for Laura, but she had also met a new friend. Laura had been assigned Torres when they thought she might be in danger and she helped him get to the heart of why he hated hospitals. Yet, she had pretty much called it beforehand. There had been someone that Torres had loved and she had died of cancer so he hadn't wanted to be around Laura at first because she reminded him of what he lost. So Torres had actually fought taking on her detail and he had almost pushed Gibbs too far though in the end he came to appreciate Gibbs forcing him to face his fears. And he even liked Laura.

Summary: A Marine is murdered at an event for the Honor Flight Network, a non-profit that arranges for veterans to visit the World War II, Korea and Vietnam War Memorials in Washington, D.C., for free. The NCIS team is forced to rely on a cantankerous Vietnam veteran to provide details on the victim's whereabouts throughout the day he was killed.

McGee had a friend that went through training with Torres and she had revealed to him something he hadn't known about Torres. Like how Torres allegedly had had a brief fling with Quinn who had been their instructor at the time. But McGee being the gossipy sort had talked to Bishop about what he heard and she didn't believe him at first. She hadn't noticed anything different or even sensed anything romantically inclined between Torres and Quinn. So Bishop had need proof and McGee had wanted to find some. He watched Torres and Quinn and he had been hoping to spot some sign that the two were once the plot to 'Top Gun' however he was later grasping at straws.

McGee and the others had gotten called to a crime scene after a Marine suffered what looked like a suspicious death. However, McGee had seen Quinn drop her notebook and Torres retrieve it for her. So he thought that Torres's hands had lingered when he handed the notebook back and so he had tried to show Bishop that because he thought that was her proof yet Bishop hadn't been impressed. She said that Torres was merely being nice and that he would have done that for anyone. And so she tried to put the rumors to rest by doing her own research. Bishop had later contacted a friend who knew someone that had also been part of the FLETC class.

Yet, the friend of a friend had confirmed the rumors. People in the same FLETC class had all believed that Torres and Quinn had had some torrid relationship that had burnt itself out fairly quickly and that neither party had let the relationship distract them for the remainder of training. So things only became worse once Bishop suddenly believed in the rumors because she then assisted McGee with finding out more about the supposed relationship and the pair of them had found out that Torres had participated in karaoke session that he dedicated to Quinn who then fell for him. And that rumor had some basis of truth in it.

Torres sung "Puppy Love" at a karaoke bar and there did appear to be a woman that looked like Quinn listening. Though both Bishop and McGee had gotten so caught up in discovering whether or not Torres had won over Quinn with a song that they started to ignore the investigation. NCIS were investigating Corporal Beck's death because he fell down and began foaming at the mouth before he died, but the team had also figured a few other things since then. Like the fact that Beck had been poisoned and that the weapon had been injected through the smallest pinprick that Beck probably thought was a mosquito.

So that begged the question why? Why did someone want to kill Corporal Beck? Beck was considered to be a kind-hearted young man that liked to volunteer during his own hours and he was even volunteering with the Honor Flight Network when he had been killed. But the non-profit organization had nothing to do with Beck's murder. He had been a temporary guardian for a Vietnam vet that didn't have any family to show him around and, while the vet had been cankerous, he hadn't been deadly. And so the vet, whose name was Henry Rogers, turned out to be the last person that saw Beck alive.

Unfortunately, Henry didn't want to be of any help. He was a cranky old man that didn't have family and had seemingly hated everyone. So Henry had been assigned to Reeves. Reeves had demanded more responsibility and he had been a slight pain in the neck for Vance so Vance had wanted to see if Reeves could rise to the occasion. However, Reeves and Henry hadn't gotten along very well. The two men had both been stubborn and they could say things they didn't mean yet Henry was constantly attempting to escape and he refused to let Reeves protect him. He said that he didn't need a baby-sitter and that he just wanted to go back to his hotel room.

Yet, Reeves had asked Henry about that. He had wanted to know why Henry had travelled with the Honor Flight Network to see the Vietnam memorial and they not go. So Reeves had tried talking about it with Henry and he did get some answers. He found out that Henry had won a medal because of his overseas heroics and that the medal didn't matter to Henry because he still lost friends over there. And so Reeves knew the subject was a touchy one for Henry though he didn't count on Henry losing him just to go visit the memorial by himself because he hadn't wanted anyone around to see how much pain he was in.

So Reeves gained a new understanding of Henry and Henry was helpful in his own way. Henry had told the agents about the woman that had bumped into Beck and he later identified a woman that had been around the corporal during his time of death. Though the woman that Henry had identified was a suspect in two murders. Bridget O'Leary had apparently been near a young woman's apartment when she had also been poisoned to death, but the murders had been connected because Beck had volunteered at a Crisis Center when Maya called and she must have told him about what her bosses were doing.

Maya's bosses were attempting to sell flooring that used a dangerous chemical that would make people sick. So she had reached out to a journalist that she hoped would break the story and she had also confessed to Beck. But Maya's friend and coworker who had signed off on the environmental safety report had found out about the confession so she killed Beck and erased his phone logs at the center however that hadn't been enough and so Bridget then killed Maya hoping that the story would die with her. And, well, that didn't happen. The story did break and now Bridget was facing time for a double murder.

And because he knew how important it was to Henry to have someone that cared, Reeves organized a welcome home party for Henry Rogers so that his entire town knew about the returning Vietnam Hero. However, Torres and Quinn both denied the rumors. They said they had never been in a relationship yet there was more to their story than they were letting on by the way they looked at each other when no one else was around. So who knows what between them or what could happen between them!

Summary: A vice admiral's laptop is infected with ransomware and he enlists McGee's help to track down the hacker before the computer virus eliminates his personal and professional files. Meanwhile, Alex takes time off to assist her mother, after she receives a 911 text.

Vice Admiral Chase asked for McGee's services when his computer became infected with something called ransomware. However, there wasn't much that McGee could do for him because he couldn't access any of the files or protect them until he had the ransom key. So McGee thought Chase's best bet was to pay up and he had told the other man that very same thing though the Vice Admiral had said that he wouldn't do that. He had claimed that he never gave up a day in his life and that he wasn't going to start now.

Though McGee had more or less told Chase that he was on his own. McGee knew his limits and he wasn't going to waste their time by pretending he could get rid of the ransomware when he knew he could not. So McGee had walked away and the Vice Admiral hadn't appreciated it. Chase had thought that they could still save his data and so he decided to motivate McGee. McGee had unfortunately mentioned that the virus would spread if Chase were to try and send a message to anyone so Chase later decided to send Tim the virus.

Chase had thought that would be enough to get McGee to look at his case again. But Chase hadn't known that McGee shared his Wi-Fi with everyone in his department and so everyone became infected. Bishop, Torres, Quinn, and even Reeves. So the only one that hadn't been affected had been Gibbs. Gibbs was pretty low tech already so his phone had been safe yet his team had been compromised and so the Vice Admiral case did become an NCIS case. And there was no simply nothing they could do about it.

So the Vice Admiral was later brought in because he had technically victimized the NCIS department and Vance had wanted answers. Yet, it turns out the reason Chase had been so desperate to get his laptop back was because of his wife. His wife had died a while ago and he had had pictures of her on the laptop that he said he was going to print one day and just never got around to it. And so Chase couldn't afford to lose those pictures. There were all he had left of his wife and he couldn't let the hacker destroy them.

The Hacker's entire game plan was to infect random computers with the ransomware and then threatened to delete the data unless he/they/or she were paid the ransom. However, the Vice Admiral's desperation led to the team being hacked and now there was no way to pay off the ransom because Vance wouldn't allow them to each pay off the hacker. So Chase ultimately got what he wanted and McGee as well as the others had tried to find the hacker before their time was up. And they thought their best shot was to go to the Hacker unit of the federal building.

The people working there at least could devote the time needed to find a way to get around the hack and so both Bishop and Reeves had dropped off the laptop believing they were going to get help. Though for some reason the guy that was supposed to help them had been acting quite suspiciously. Clint Asher had sort of jumped when he heard they had been infected by the Elliott virus and he had then claimed that he would work on the computer first thing until he found something. So he had said that he would call them that night.

But something about his behavior had made both Bishop and Reeves feel apprehensive about him. So they tried going back to Clint's office not long after they had left and they had found him gone. Clint was missing and the laptop was still in his office despite saying that he was going to get on it right away so the agents had wondered what was going on. They knew that they had their suspicions yet it didn't make sense for Clint to have done a runner within moments of them leaving and not take the computer.

If the computer connected him to the virus in any way then he would have taken it. Yet, it stayed and he just disappeared. So NCIS looked into Clint Asher and they hadn't found anything that would connect him to the virus. He was thirty years old with a wife and son however he had never been in trouble with the law and even his super secret storage container that he had put under a false name had been completely empty. And so they tried finding Clint by using the GPS on his car and it had been under a lake.

So NCIS had had the car pulled out of the water and surprisingly they found Clint Asher in the trunk of his car though he had been frozen to death and that wasn't a euphemism. Clint had actually been frozen to death with liquid nitrogen and not a lot of people had access to the amount that it would take to complete such a job. However, there was this thing called Cryotherapy Spa that was the latest trend so Bishop had looked into the spas in the area and she had found one that was ordering more than necessary.

The Spa was technically ordering enough material to give five hundred people their special treatment when they mostly had eighty to ninety people coming in a week. Though Bishop and McGee had spoken to the girl that oversaw the place while her manager was away and they had found out that there was something going on. The spa was apparently giving away tanks to someone by the name of David Yates and that had been the same name that was on the storage unit. So they knew that David Yates had to be real.

It was one thing to have the container and quite another to be meeting with people by that name. So the team assumed this David must have had something to do with Clint's death and they might have found out why. Clint, it seems had been familiar with the Elliott virus because he created it. Clint had created the virus in college and had sent it to all his friends as some sort of joke yet he had gotten in trouble for it and had gotten kicked out of college because his friends hadn't appreciated his joke. But the fact that Clint had created the virus meant he knew his killer.

His killer could have only have used the virus if he knew how it worked and how Clint set it up. So the answer to who the hacker was turned out to be Carlo Hackett who was Clint's roommate in college and who had helped create the virus. Yet, Carlo had gone down a different path. He had become obsessed with suspended animation and had even rented out a second storage unit where he had kept his frozen specimen in cryo-storage however his "specimen" had been homeless men that he had essentially killed and he had used the ransomware to help fund his project.

The liquid nitrogen had been too expensive for Carlo who thought he was some kind of genius and could barely hold down a job. So he revived the ransomware and had ultimately killed his old friend Clint when Clint figured out what he was doing though Clint helped point the way to Carlo and capturing Carlo alive allowed the team to remove the ransomware without losing any data. However, the Vice Admiral did apologize in the end for what he did to the team and had learned a lesson about pride on tonight's episode of "NCIS".

And Quinn who hadn't been involved as much as usual with the case had been taking care of her mother who forgetting more and more of what's going on so Quinn ultimately decided to move back in with her.

Summary: The murder of a Marine is linked to an old dirt bike gang Torres joined while undercover.

A Marine Corporal was found murdered by the side of the road. His name had been Kyle Campbell and he had seemed like an upstanding guy. However, there was evidence not that far from where the body was found that a dirt bike had gotten into a truck and so it didn't like a coincidence that a dirt bike had been used that same day during a bank robbery. So NCIS had known that the robbery was connected to Campbell's murder, but Torres had been the one to connect the dots because he was apparently familiar with that MO.

Torres as it turns had been worked a case back during his undercover days in which he infiltrated a biker gang that just so happens to like robbing banks. But when Gibbs asked why an NCIS Agent had gotten involved in something like that, Torres had told him that the gang used to like recruiting sailors and military personnel. So it had looked like Torres was onto something when he told everyone about the Rosewood Boys though Torres had thought that put that part of his life behind when the leader of the Rosewood Boys went to prison.

Mitch Monroe was serving twenty years for what he did and there was no way he could get out of it because Torres had turned one of the Rosewood Boys against Mitch. Though Gibbs hadn't wanted to rule out Mitch possibly running things behind bars, so he went to go speak to him and he had been surprised when Mitch hadn't known anything about the recent robberies. He said that a lot of his old friends were either dead or scattered to the four winds. So no one had been in contact with him for a long time yet he had still be somehow proud of his boys.

He said real Rosewood Boys wouldn't talk and now that Nick the traitor wasn't around he didn't believe the feds could ever stop them. Yet, Mitch had also said asked Gibbs and Bishop to pass on a message for him. He asked them to remind Nick that he wouldn't be behind bars forever. So again it had just seemed like too much of a coincidence when Torres went to go get some of his old case notes and was nearly blown up because someone had rigged his old dirt bike. And so Bishop later questioned if his cover was blow, except Gibbs thought differently.

Gibbs thought that if someone truly wanted Torres dead then they would have actually killed him rather than just leave something like a message behind. However, Torres didn't think he knew who the new guys running things were. His contacts were rather old and he didn't know what things were like now. So Quinn had brought in Campbell's ex-girlfriend and the girlfriend had told them about the gps tracking device that she had put on Campbell's car to see where he was going, but while she had been embarrassed by her confession, the ex did help them pin down Campbell's location in the last few days.

He had apparently gone to the track where all the people ride their dirt bikes. So Gibbs using the information they had on what to look for had found the right bike and had even gotten picture of the rider though Torres couldn't remember who Alonzo was. He said that there had been plenty of guys that weren't part of the investigation and that Alonzo didn't stick out for him. But Torres had thought that he could speak to an old friend from those days because Royce had been the same man that flipped on Mitch.

So Torres had gone to see his old friend and Royce had been happy to see him. Though Royce seemed to remember things a lot differently than Torres did. He for instance thought that what he did to Mitch was wrong because he became a rat and so Royce was questioning what they did to take down the crew seeing as so many had gotten hurt yet Torres had tried to tell Royce that Mitch deserved to get put away and that what they did had been the right thing to do. And then Torres had asked for another favor.

Torres has asked Royce if he recognized Alonzo and he did. He said that Alonzo was a harmless kid and that he couldn't be in trouble. Yet, Torres said they had evidence that Alonzo killed a marine. So Royce gave Torres all the information he had on Alonzo and Torres had thought he could use that to get Alonzo to talk when the unexpected happened. Torres had found Alonzo and his boyfriend murdered and whoever did had called Torres saying that the investigation should end now before Torres threw away his own career.

However, not a lot of people knew that Torres had planted evidence to frame Mitch. So Torres was already having his suspicions when Abby said the substance found on Alonzo's boots and connects him to all the crime scenes was clay. Like the same clay that Torres saw Royce used. And so Torres knew that Royce was the new guy in charge, but Royce also happened to be the one person he confessed to about Mitch and Royce had claimed that he had a tape of the entire encounter. So Torres was out of options.

He knew that he couldn't give Royce money to keep quiet and didn't want to allow Royce to continue doing business. So he went to Gibbs and Gibbs surprisingly had his back in the whole matter because there had been a few things he did that there out of the book. And so Gibbs helped Torres take down Royce and he covered up the tape in which Torres confessed to what he did by claiming it was a lot of mumblings that didn't make sense.

And that more than anything saved Torres's career after he made one mistake in his youth.

Production Code:	14023
Summary:	A Marine sergeant is murdered in a national park, and Gibbs and the NCIS team partner with mounted police to solve a string of related crimes in the park.

Unfortunately, a body was found in Rock Creek Park. The Mounty Police had found the body of Marine Sergeant Tanner after a long night on duty and there had been something strange about the crime scene. The victim was technically murdered by a piece of an old structure that's been in the mark for centuries and it was nearly impossible to move. But there was no doubt that the murder was suspicious. The Mounty that had been on duty that night had heard a struggle as well as the victim's screams. So she knew that the death wasn't ordinary and she wanted to help NCIS with their investigation.

NCIS was brought in because the victim had been military personnel. However, Mounty May Dawson felt attached to this case and she knew the park better than the federal agents. So she pointed out a few things they might have missed as they were going over the crime scene. She pointed out that there was blood on other forms of the same building that killed Tanner and that blood led them to finding several skulls that clearly belonged to animals yet there was some confusion. The skulls themselves were of rare monkeys found only in Africa and that begged the question of why their victim was in the park.

Or for that matter if the victim was truly a victim? Tanner after all could have been up to anything that late at night and so NCIS did investigate if their victim had been involved in any way of trafficking those skulls seeing as they did fetch a high price on the black market. Yet, that line of question was immediately put down because Tanner had been involved with an animal protection group that worked all over the world and his group in particular recently put away one of the biggest animal poachers there is. So Bishop and Quinn looked into a possibility that Tanner's death was a reprisal thought they couldn't get anything concrete.

The poacher he had put away was still in jail and, while he had the means to put a bounty on Tanner's head, there wasn't anything cropping up. Though there was another incident in the park. Another Mouny had been arresting some pothead when he heard a noise and tried to follow it, but he had gotten shot in the line of duty and the culprit had gotten away. So Gibbs teamed up with Mouny Dawson and together they tried to figure out what exactly was going on in the park for it to suddenly become a hotbed of crime. And it was as they were looking into the matter, that a foreign government demanded full knowledge of what happened to Tanner.

Tanner had apparently been working with foreign governments to help them train their own Mounies as well as protect their conservations. But an ambassador showing up in person and demanding to know every single detail of an American killed on American soil did send up some red flags. So Vance had tried to find out what was really behind the complaint however he had been fobbed off and nothing made sense until Gibbs and Dawson had a breakthrough. The two had found out about an old ranger's lodge that had been abandoned and so they had gone there expecting to find the culprits. And what they found was bush meat.

Bush meat was an old Liberian custom in which people smoked the meat from the animals they hunted. However, it had been outlawed worldwide because of the risk it represents. The meat isn't from domestic animals like chicken or goat and instead it was from monkeys and rare animals that possible carried diseases. So it could kill the people that eat and unfortunately the people that were selling didn't appear to care about the risks yet Tanner's cloud did help them clear up the part he played in it all because he had been recording these sellers in the park when they must have caught onto him and killed him to keep their enterprise a secret.

Yet, knowing the truth about why Tanner had been killed had made the Director call in the Liberian Ambassador for some answers. He figured the other man knew what was going on and had been trying to cover up what was happening in his country though the ambassador it seems had only wanted to protect his country. He said that it was hard enough fighting the image the rest of the world had for them that they couldn't risk a bush meat ring being the start of new epidemic. So rather than continue to hide the problem, the ambassador chose to work with NCIS and had gone to traditional Liberian market nearby to see if anyone selling there.

Only if they were then they were doing their best to hide it because neither the ambassador or Reeves found anything. Though they did come across a disgruntled friend of Tanner's who was trying to find evidence against the people that killed him. So Abby had had a lot of explaining to do because she was the one that revealed why Tanner died and, once she had apologized, Abby also told the team that there was a new crisis. She said that there had been an outbreak of Ebola from the same region that the meat came from and that the next shipment could very well be tainted. And so NCIS had had to stop the bush meat trafficking before they have Ebola outbreak in their own backyard.

So the team looked through all of Tanner's photos and one photo especially had helped them figure out who was one of the men in the picture. But once they caught him at the same Liberian market, he spilled everything. He told them about their contacts at the airport and even sold out everyone that was in involved however the Liberian ambassador had still been worried about how it looked for his country and so Vance had agreed to a joint press conference so that no one could turn them against each other or create an issue between the states and Liberia.

Guest Stars: Madeline Bertani (Regina Jones), Nick Clifford (Navy Petty Officer First Class Reed Harring), Christina Ferraro (Navy Chief Mary Choi), Margo Harshman (Delilah Fielding)
Production Code: 14023
Summary: The stress of McGee and Delilah's imminent wedding takes its toll, as Delilah is rushed to the hospital. Meanwhile, the NCIS team travels out to sea after a young and healthy petty officer aboard a Navy destroyer dies in his sleep.

Navy Petty Officer Gregory Jones was young and reasonably healthy for his age if the slight high blood pressure was discounted. So all in all it had made little sense to anyone why he would suddenly drop dead while their ship was sea however the commander followed protocol. Jones was checked over by the doctor onboard and his body was moved to the freezer for preservation. But there was later a complication when Gibbs and Palmer came onboard to investigate his death because someone had broken into the freezer and had removed the body without anyone seeing or hearing a thing.

However, a body doesn't just randomly disappear because that wasn't a thing! There simply had to be evidence of where the body was moved and so Gibbs called in the rest of the team to help investigate the matter yet they found nothing. Quinn, McGee, Bishop, and Torres all flew out to the USS McGuire and took pictures of the scene as well as interviewed all those that were supposedly close to Jones and they got nothing. There was no one on the ship that seemed to have a problem with Jones and he was considered to be a promising young officer. And therefore, the team left the ship with not much to go on and that proved to be hard for Jones's family.

Jones's sister was called in and she had been notified about her brother. Yet, she too was both upset and confused about his body disappearing into thin air because it just didn't make sense and unfortunately NCIS couldn't tell her everything. All they could say was that they were looking for Jones's remains and, while they were talking, Torres also asked the sister if her brother experienced any problems onboard. So she told him about the last conversation she had with Jones. He had sort called her out of the blue and she could hear something was wrong in his voice though she admitted that she didn't have time to ask and so all got was a name.

The sister said Jones was having problems with a fellow Petty Officer by the name of Herring. Herring as it turns out was hazing Jones with a few others and he said that they never went too far or crossed the line. Though both Bishop and Gibbs told him that Jones wouldn't have said anything to his sister about it if he had been ok with what was happening. So NCIS carefully looked into what exactly going on and, while it was horrible, they didn't really find a motive for murder, but Jones's body did later reappear. It had washed up onshore and the Coast Guard found it so those guys helped to ensure was imminently taken to the lab. And that no evidence was lost.

But what Palmer and Ducky found in Jones's autopsy didn't make sense. He was apparently high on drugs the night he died and that didn't sound like the man Jones was however the autopsy did make it clear that whatever drug he took was in his food. So Gibbs tried talking to the commander to find out if anyone would have drugged Jones and it turns out he had gotten the situation wrong. No one had tried to drug Jones because Jones's plate was originally meant for the commander. The commander had gone down to the mess hall to eat with everyone else and he just wasn't hungry enough to eat anything so he had passed his dish to Jones.

So Gibbs quickly caught on that the drugs were for the commander and he had asked the other man if he had any enemies on board. However, the commander wasn't sure if he did. He said he led over two hundred men and women and that no one jumped out as a suspect though fortunately Gibbs found a way to make finding a suspect easy. It had the whole crew of the ship go into the common areas while their bunkers were checked one by one by his team. And so drugs were found. They were just found in Herring's bed and Gibbs thought that sounded off because everything about the plan to kill the commander had been carefully planned while the drugs being found so soon was messy.

Gibbs figured no one go to such lengths just to slack off as they were getting away with the crime. So the guys went to investigate the drugs themselves. The drugs were called Blue Burgers and there was one person in Norfolk selling it in the area. Though McGee couldn't go. His fiancée Delilah passed out and so he had been at the hospital with her when they learned the good news. Delilah was pregnant and the doctor thought she needed to be careful because she was slightly anemic. And so the happy couple were excited about their news and they made the mistake of telling Abby. Abby had promised she wouldn't say anything and then she blew it later on.

She had kind of told everyone at the office and so the team was happy for McGee. Yet, before the team could celebrate the news with the couple, they wrapped up their case. They had found the drug dealer and he had identified a friend of Jones's. So it hadn't taken Gibbs a lot of time to crack their suspect because he had already felt bad enough that his plan to kill the commander had ended up targeting a friend, but he admitted that he also planted the drugs in Herring's room and that he was just covering up what he had done once he saw that Jones had died instead of his intended target.

And so one mistake changed everything and if Jones hadn't taken the plate then the plan would have worked without anyone suspecting a commander in his fifties suddenly dying was suspicious. But luckily the team had finished with the case just in time to attend McGee and Delilah's surprise wedding that they had moved up because their baby had changed their plans. So Gibbs acted as Delilah's man of honor and he had even given McGee his father's old watch because it was a wedding tradition to pass it on to the groom.

Summary: Gibbs, McGee and Torres travel to a remote area in Paraguay that is controlled by a group of violent rebels, in an attempt to locate a missing Navy SEAL who disappeared during an unsanctioned trip.

A bickering young couple were gathering evidence of contaminated water when they came across a hand. Now the hand naturally belonged to someone however it took local authorities some to get an identification and once they it became a problem. The victim was Petty Officer Matthew Dean and he was an American. But Dean like other military personnel had been explicitly warned about going to a certain part of Paraguay and he had ignored that warning at his own peril. So Gibbs and his people had been asked to come in to investigate what Dean was doing in Paraguay and why he was murdered so far from home?

Research on the other hand proved to be somewhat difficult. Dean was a Navy SEAL and so he couldn't talk about his job like other could and instead filled up his social media pages with pictures from one of his trips. Just not vacation sort of trips! Dean had apparently liked extreme sports and he would often go abroad by himself as a way to decompress after every tour.

However, Dean hadn't been in Paraguay to go water rafting down some of their stronger currents. He had actually told his wife that he was going to Canada to go fishing and so she had wanted to know why her husband would go back to Paraguay so soon.

She said that her husband had let it slip that his last mission had been in that country. Though Gibbs of course couldn't get Dean's commander to confirm that they had been there or why they would have hypothetically have been there because those missions are need to know. So the team had tried to ask Peter Josephson about Dean's latest trip and Peter had told them that he was supposed to go fishing with Dean and another Petty Officer by the name of Charles Hudson and that he had to pull out the last minute because he got called to Afghanistan. And so Gibbs had wanted to know where he could find Charles and Peter hadn't been able to help.

He said that Charles was no longer in uniform and that he lived in a mobile home nowadays, but that he moved so often it would be impossible to find him if he hadn't wanted to be found. Yet, finding someone that didn't want to be found had been nothing for the guys and they eventually came across Charles's home only he hadn't been there.

He had gone with Dean and, by what they found at the trailer, it had looked like both men had loaded up on weapons. So the team had wanted to know what the two men had been planning and they decided to try the fourth partner. There was evidence that both Charles and Dean had prepared equipment for four people and two hadn't gone.

One of them had to be Peter except he wasn't saying anything. But the fourth partner had also missed the trip because he had gotten injured at his six-year-old's birthday party and that meant he was still in the state for them to question.

So they had visited Christopher Clayton in the hospital and they demanded to know about the mysterious fishing trip however he said that the code word "fishing trip" was just something they told their families for when they went to Vegas. As Chris explained, both Dean and Charles had a heavy gambling problem and the men already owed money to a few sketchy as is.

However, Dean's body hadn't been found in Vegas and so Quinn and Bishop had demanded to know about what happened in Paraguay. So Chris said that they had gone down there to investigate the uranium mines and that the mission had gone south before they could find anything conclusive though there had been one man in the village nearby that had gotten them all out.

And therefore everyone thought that Dean and Charles had gone down to Paraguay as a way to take the money that had been left behind in the failed mission and what seemed to work with that theory had been the fact that Dean was revealed to be alive. His hand had been taken only all the other human remains had actually belonged to Charles Hudson.

So Gibbs, Torres, and McGee hopped on the next flight to Paraguay to see if they find their missing Seal and oddly enough it hadn't been that hard to find him. Dean was being protected in the village by the same man that had saved his team last time and he revealed that he hadn't gone to South America for money.

He said that he and the others had owed Ricardo their lives and that hadn't been able to say when Ricardo had called needing help. Ricardo's son had been taken with a few other boys by the rebels that were planning on turning the boys into child soldiers yet Gibbs had told Dean that he needed to be evacuated rather than follow through on his plan to rescue the boys.

Gibbs had reminded Dean that he was missing a hand and that he needed medical assistance. Yet, Dean refused. He said he wasn't going anywhere until rescued the boys and so Gibbs decided to help. He had gotten some back up from the national army and had been prepared for anything that happened.

So Gibbs had also tried to warn McGee that he could turn back and that he would understand because McGee had more to lose than they did, but McGee had refused to leave them to fight alone. He said he was sticking it out until the end and had rescued the boys with the others. And so the only problems the rescue experienced was the escape.

The plane couldn't take off under so much enemy fire and so Gibbs had told the others to leave him behind however McGee couldn't do that and chose to stay with Gibbs while the plane got away.

Summary:	The NCIS team is tirelessly searching for Gibbs and McGee two months after they were last seen fighting an elusive group of rebels in a Paraguay jungle. Meanwhile, Vance and Torres are summoned to a congressional hearing regarding the fallout from the Paraguay mission.

Gibbs and McGee were still in Paraguay. The men had gone there as part of a rescue team and they had ended up saving the lives of three children however they had come into contact with the Revolutionary Armed Council. The RAC were part of a rogue group in Paraguay that used child soldiers as well as buy and sell weapons through the black market. But the group had attacked NCIS because of what naval officers were doing for the villages they attacked. So they followed our heroes to the rescue chopper and were trying to kill them all when Gibbs decided to hold them off.

Gibbs kept the group from targeting his men and in return his team had been forced to leave him. However, McGee refused to leave Gibbs behind and jumped off the chopper before anyone could stop him. So the two men were left behind and somehow it had been up to Torres to later explain why. Torres had gotten dragged to the hill and was told he had to explain the actions of him and his team yet Torres didn't think he needed to explain anything. He said they had rescued children and that they needed to go back to Paraguay to rescue their men.

Yet, his bosses hadn't wanted to hear that. They said they had sent out a rescue team and they had been unable to find their men or the RAC because of what NCIS did. NCIS had attacked the RAC compound and that led to the group going deep underground where no one could find them. So the people in charge were upset by that because they had no idea where the group was or what they were doing with the uranium. The uranium was the sticking point. Everyone had wanted to know what that uranium would be used for and so the bosses were taking their frustration out on NCIS.

NCIS had been the one to ignore diplomatic protocol when they went to Paraguay and so Director Vance had had to explain himself. It had been his team after all and therefore he found himself in just as much as trouble as NCIS. But while the hill had written off Gibbs and McGee, they weren't dead and more importantly their team had gotten a lead. NCIS's headquarters had received a call from some man that allegedly wanted to tell them something although the man in question never got a chance to say what he wanted to talk about because he was murdered during a drive-by. Some car had come out of nowhere and shot the victim multiple times. Though Zachary Brooks's death had offered some revealing information. The man's hair had been falling out and so Ducky investigated why that is however he hadn't expected the victim to be suffering from radiation poisoning or that Abby would connect the poisoning to the same type of uranium the RAC were using. So the team looked into Zachary and they found out he was former drug dealer. He had seemingly spent most his life being in and out of prison. And so nothing changed until a year ago.

Zachary had suddenly gotten clean a year ago and stopped selling drugs. However, NCIS figured he must have stopped because he started selling something else. Like uranium. So NCIS investigated Zachary to find out where he could have gotten that uranium and they found out he liked to hang out at a certain bar. Zachary's girlfriend works at that bar and she initially hadn't wanted to talk to NCIS, but the team had pushed her. They threatened her with arrest and had told her about what to her boyfriend because whoever was in charge had ordered his death and she could be in danger too.

So the girlfriend later talked. She said that Zachary didn't know what he was getting into when he first took the job and that a trip to Paraguay had been what opened his eyes. He found out his boss was dealing in uranium and hadn't wanted any part of it. Which was why he called NCIS! But the man that had sent Zachary out of there had been the same person that owned the bar. She said Mickey Clark ran everything out of the bar and that she knew he was behind Zachary's death because he had been in the picture.

The picture she was talking about was of the crime scene. She had pointed to her boss that was clearly talking to NCIS and it turns out Mickey had pretend to be a witness. Yet, Mickey disappeared not long after that and so it had been up to Abby to triangulate his position though she got some help from Delilah. Delilah was concerned about her husband and she was pregnant. So she didn't want to sit back and do nothing while the others were tracking down a lead related to McGee. And Delilah knew she could help Abby.

Together, the two women worked on finding Mickey and they were able to locate him using the dating apps on his phone. Which were those apps that detailed how far Mickey was from his matches and so the ladies used that to pinpoint his exact location. Though Mickey wasn't in the talking mood. He had found out that they didn't know much and so he figured if he stayed quiet that they would be force to release him in the end, but the team had gotten their hands on his phone. His phone had one number was that was blacklisted and that Abby couldn't trace. So Bishop decided to call the number.

Bishop figured that was the only way they'd find out who he was talking to. But the man that had answered the call had been McGee. McGee and Gibbs had broken out of their cell and had gotten into the head office at the compound. So the guys needed to get out of their situation as fast as possible before anyone found out they had escaped their cell however NCIS didn't know their location and so Torres had helped Bishop figure it out. Torres had said that he wished they had Tindr and Bishop said why not. She put a profile on the sat phone and use that to track the guys' location.

They had apparently been on a boat this whole time. However, they didn't need to worry about the men there or how to get away because McGee had sent off the radiation alarm which caused the men to abandon the boat as well as their boss. So the guys handed over the boss to another prisoner because he was threatening them and that way they could still get rid of the guys without dirtying their hands. And so the guys got on their chopper this time around and were finally brought back home after spending months in captivity.

Summary: NCIS investigates when the body of a murdered Navy lieutenant, who disappeared over a year ago, is found by a cemetery grounds crew while relocating caskets on the property. Meanwhile, Gibbs and McGee must pass a psych evaluation before they can officially resume working.

The men were home! But they needed to be officially cleared by Dr. Grace Con-falone before they could return to fully duty and so she put them on something called "light duty". The guys had gotten a call from Bishop about a body being found and that they were needed. So Grace had allowed them to return to work though she didn't want them to strain themselves and therefore they were told to hang back. Gibbs couldn't assume control of his team and had to let Bishop continue to the run show until he had his mental evaluation.

Though taking a step back hadn't been easy for McGee. McGee acted like everything was fine and so the only one that noticed something wrong was Gibbs. Gibbs had also come back different however he was experiencing moments of happiness or at least happiness for him. So the guys were happy to take a step back and they Bishop run the show because she was good at it. Bishop knew how to handle the team and put everything in order. And so Torres was the only one it seems that had ever doubted her.

Torres admitted to the guys that he hadn't thought much of Bishop in the beginning because he thought he had more experience than her. However, he also confessed that Bishop had surprised him. She was good at the job and he said the guys didn't need to worry about all those months they were away. So Bishop took offense at that. She knew she had the experience to do the job and had even reminded Torres that she had spent several months in Iraq, but Bishop knew how to later get her revenge because she saw how freaked out Torres was at the cemetery.

The team had been called to the cemetery because as they were moving coffins, the construction crew had found one coffin with two bodies in it. So the team hadn't known what to think.

They had come across a poor old woman's grave and had found a dead sailor in there as well and yet there was no connection between the two and enclosing a coffin took a certain amount of knowledge. But Bishop decided to just look into their sailor and see where that got them. Therefore, they found out their victim was Lt Richard Coyne.

Coyne had disappeared a day before he was supposed to testify against known criminal, Leo Vairo. Leo Vairo had broken into a gym and had shot the owner when the other man wouldn't give him the two hundred dollars in the safe. Yet, Coyne had walked in on the crime and had seen the other man's face before he fled. So Coyne identified Leo as the culprit and that would have been Leo's third strike if he had been found guilty though not that surprisingly Leo ended up walking from the charges after the only witness couldn't be found.

So Leo was the team's biggest suspect. He had motive for getting rid of Coyne and even Coyne's widow believed Leo killed her husband. She said that Coyne had been nervous about testifying and that she told him not to go through with it because she didn't like it was doing to him, but Coyne refused to back down. He had seen Leo target Pete Wilkins (the owner of the gym) and he thought it was his duty to get justice for Pete. Though Pete eventually went on to begin dating Coyne's wife Donna after Coyne went missing and so Bishop thought that was suspicious.

Bishop and Torres both questioned the couple to find out when their relationship began and they both heard the other parties deny anything nefarious. They said they didn't start getting to know each other until after Coyne disappeared because they had been concerned about what happened to him. Coyne had befriended Pete following the shooting and two had had gone through rehab together. What with one suffering a gunshot wound and the other throwing out his shoulder when he tried to take on the thief. So the best friend and the widow had comforted each other when Coyne disappeared, but they still wanted justice for Coyne.

Donna and Pete were firm about Leo being behind what happened to Coyne. But they said that this time they wanted justice for Coyne because they didn't want Leo to walk away a second time. So Ducky and Jimmy worked on the autopsy and Jimmy later passed out because of something in the victim's liver. Coyne had had a cocktail of drugs in his liver that had crystalized into a gas that knocked out Jimmy however the team couldn't figure out how a man like Coyne would get his hands on some of those drugs so they worked on a theory involving someone drugging him. If someone did drug Coyne then that meant the culprit would have had to have gotten close to the victim. However, it was doubtful he would have let Leo get anywhere near him and the fact Leo never dealt those kinds of drugs showed had seemed to put him in the clear. So Bishop and Torres decided to talk to Leo again and see if he had anything to say about Pete because Pete as it turns out wasn't so clean. He had gotten arrested for coke possession and Leo confessed that Pete had started to deal high-end sports drugs which was why Leo had targeted Pete's safe to begin with.

Leo said Pete had much more than two hundred dollars in his safe. So the team looked into anyone Pete could have bribed and they and they found his former high school classmate that just so happened to be working at the cemetery. Yet, Pete later said Coyne's death had been an accident. He said that he had given Coyne painkillers to help with the shoulder and that Coyne had experienced a nasty reaction, but he didn't take Coyne to the hospital because he hadn't wanted anyone to find out about his side business and then later he didn't want Donna to learn what he did.

But Donna told Bishop that she was willing to testify against him because of what he did to her husband. So Pete will be going away for a long time everyone had been sympathetic about Donna. They knew she had gotten hurt the most out of everyone and so the team were inadvertently more worried about her than they were about their own. McGee had tried putting off his therapy session until Gibbs pushed him into doing and he found lighter by simply talking about his ordeal. Gibbs on the other hand was cracking jokes and smiling with everyone though his hands kept shaking and so he continued to see Grace on his own time because he knew he needed help.

Summary: Torres' partner mysteriously vanishes during a stakeout with Metro P.D. The investigation uncovers new evidence from a decade-old murder case. Meanwhile, Ducky's friend, Cadence Darwin, presents him with a new opportunity during his guest lecture series.

Torres had been teamed up with Metro Detective and together they were supposed to catch a felon however his partner mysteriously disappeared right before the bust and so Torres had thought his partner was mad at him. He had snapped at Metro Detective Miles Higgins because the other man had talked all night and into the morning. But Torres had ultimately realized that something was wrong when Higgins never showed after back-up arrived. So Torres called in his own team and Metro Police sent in Detective Sergeant Danny Sportelli to find out what happened to Higgins.

Higgins had come across a tech nerd and he had bothered Torres with how much he liked to talk. However, the people that knew Higgins well had said he wouldn't have left his post voluntarily and so Sportelli had wanted to treat the case as an abduction. He said that someone must have taken Higgins after Torres had abandoned his partner. So Torres had had a few things to say about that yet McGee had found one of Higgins's tech toys that he said might help things. It had been a pen/recording device and it had recorded Higgins's last moments. He had been in the car when a woman showed up and he had left with her.

So Sportelli had wanted to know who the woman was because everyone started to suspect Higgins had abandoned his post for a booty call. Yet, Gibbs had seen that the woman touched something with her bare hands and so NCIS ran her prints. Her name was Michelle Lane and she was once a detective with Metro Police, but she was allegedly killed on the job ten years and so Sportelli had wanted how she came to be alive. She had apparently been working a case on a gunrunner when the boat she was on had blown up and two million dollars in bearer bonds had disappeared at the same she allegedly was murdered. And so Metro Police and the Director of NCIS talked.

Both believed that the case should continue to be a joint venture and so Sportelli was temporarily assigned to the team. But the team still didn't know where to start. There had been nothing on Higgins's phone and he hadn't gone back to his apartment. So they were at their wits' end when finally a report came in on Higgins being seen with Michelle driving in one direction and so they tapped into every camera hoping to spot the pair though it turns out they hadn't need to do that what with Higgins using his own wife. The wife signal had come from a garage and so the guys followed it right back to Higgins's body.

Higgins had been killed with a single gunshot to the neck however no one could tell if Michelle did the deed or if it had been Sitano. Benjamin Sitano had been the gunrunner Michelle was investigating and, while he had passed away, his son Benny Jr. had inherited the criminal empire. Though the thing about Sitano Jr. was that he wanted to make his business legitimate. He runs his own company now and has been trying to distance himself from his father's legacy. So Sitano didn't seem like the type to go after Michelle and so it had more looked like Michelle was going after him. She had used Higgins's laptop to find Sitano's location and so NCIS immediately went to warn him because Michelle posed as a risk.

Only Sitano had remembered Michelle. He told NCIS that he remembered her as someone that used to work for his father and that she had no reason to want to hurt him. However, Sitano clammed pretty quick when they showed him a photo of Higgins's body. He said that he shouldn't answer anymore questions without his lawyer and had shut down the interview right then. So Gibbs and Bishop could have pushed harder, but they didn't have too because Michelle later showed up in the building. She had gone to see Sitano and instead had run into NCIS who naturally had a lot of questions for her.

But Gibbs never filled in Metro. He hadn't told them about the laptop, talking to Sitano, or that they had caught Michelle. So NCIS used the time they had to grill Michelle. They wanted to know what happened to the bearer bonds and why she ran away yet her excuses had been lame at best. She said she thought the bomb had been for her at first and that she ran because she found out she was pregnant while on the job. And so when she was asked about Higgins, she finally started to come clean. She said that someone had found her in her new life and had demanded she turn over the two million dollar bearer bonds. Except she didn't have them!

Michelle revealed that she never had them and that's why she had gone to Higgins because she needed his help to protect her family. Yet, her son had called her during custody and she had been allowed to answer it only it hadn't been her son. Her son had gotten kidnapped and the kidnapper was demanding she hand over the money. So Michelle desperately asked NCIS to help and that time she had been truthful about why she ran away. She didn't runaway because of the money, she ran because Benny Sitano Jr was her son's father and people on the job would have counted back nine months. And so that made Sitano the best suspect for the kidnapping.

Sitano had been brought in and questioned about his son, but he already knew about Landon. He had hired a private detective to find Michelle when a body was never found and he had seen her with a baby and a new man in her life. Though Sitano hadn't been angry. He said that he had seen an opportunity for his son to have a normal life and not have to live under the Sitano name. So he let them go and he hasn't tried to make contact in the nine years since he's known. And so Sitano had tried to tell they had the wrong guy. NCIS just hadn't believed him and they had allowed Michelle to get arrested.

Michelle had broken several laws after she ran away and so Sportelli had said it was his duty to arrest her. But he had also been angry about being left out for so long. He told Gibbs that he should have been notified the second they found Michelle and Gibbs had fobbed him off. He hadn't wanted to share his investigation with an outsider and he hadn't wanted to turn over Michelle either. So he did what he had to do because he thought that was best and Bishop had continued looking into the disappearance of Michelle's son. She had found out that Sitano's body had recently received a pay increase and so she had gone to speak to him with Torres however Omar Nitro knew what they were up to.

He came right out and said he hadn't taken the kid. He had been former cop with Metro Police and he had only left his job because he had been railroaded out by crooked cops. Like Sportelli! So Bishop and Torres had reported what he said and they tried to find Sportelli yet Sportelli hadn't gone to booking with Michelle and the two had left hours ago. And so the team started to look into Sportelli and they found out why he had gone after Michelle. He had opened up a bar that had gone bankrupt and had lost his 401K while doing so. However, Sportelli had still been paying for the rent on that bar and so the team figured out he would hide there with Michelle.

Michelle for her part had tried giving Sportelli a fake account number because he wouldn't believe her when he said that she didn't have the bonds. Yet, NCIS later showed up just in time to save her and her son. So the two got away while they handled Sportelli. Sportelli had been a crooked cop for years and he was finally taken down on tonight's episode, but surprisingly what he did had a happy ending. Michelle was found and she had ultimately introduced her son to Sitano because she knew now that Sitano would have Landon's best interest at heart.

Summary: NCIS Special Agent Jacqueline Sloane, a forensic psychologist, joins the team just as a horrific storm shuts down Washington, D.C. During the power outage, a sailor is kidnapped, and Torres and Bishop go out to sea to track evidence.

A stranger came knocking on Gibbs's door. She had gotten caught up in the nasty weather outside and had needed someone's phone to call for help. But Gibbs hadn't hesitated in helping Jaqueline Sloane. She was attractive and she sort of got Gibbs's vibe. So the two had talked for a while and they were enjoying each other's company when work called. There had been an incident at a masquerade party involving a Marine and so Gibbs had had to report to duty however he allowed Jaqueline to stay after he had gone.

Gibbs had decided to trust this person out of the blue because he didn't think Jaqueline was the type to steal from him and therefore Gibbs had lower some of his guards. He was usually concerned about his privacy and hadn't shown any of his normal misgivings when he allowed Jaqueline to stay. However, Gibbs had put whatever he was feeling aside to focus on the case. That "incident" at the party had actually been attempted murder. Someone had stabbed Marine First Lt. Ethan Wynn at a Halloween party and he had something to say when he finally came to.

Wynn said that someone in a devil costume had stabbed him. Yet, that person had also taken his wife Helen. Helen was in the military as well and her mother had been notified about her disappearance, but Helen's mother thought Helen had taken because they were wealthy. The family was rich from a soap empire and so the mother thought someone would call demanding a ransom while NCIS didn't think that was going to be the case. They had looked into the party and someone with a devil costume had been following the couple.

The devil had been carrying a river knife and that had been the same kind of weapon used on Wynn. But at no time had there been a ransom call. She had just been taken and then nothing. No word on what happened to her or why someone had taken her. So NCIS investigated all possible angles. They looked into Helen's crew and had found nothing odd there though Helen had been calling the crew's financial liaison a lot leading up to their deployment and he said that Helen had needed to double check everything.

Though that still didn't tell NCIS why she had been taken and eventually the team had gotten word that her car had been found by the lake. So McGee and Gibbs went to go check it and unfortunately they had found Helen in the trunk. She had been tied up and beaten however the two agents at the scene had had to take over the case once it became a homicide. McGee and Gibbs had still been left on land while their partners Torres and Bishop hadn't been able to leave Helen's ship. The ship was already operating on a skeleton crew because of the bad weather and so things became even dire when that case the bad weather turned into a Category 3 hurricane.

Hurricane Molly had gotten so bad that the Director had cleared the building of most of NCIS personnel and so they too were operating with a skeleton crew. However, Director Vance had brought in a forensic psychologist that could stick around to help the team. Her name was Special Agent Jack Sloane and she had apparently pulled a certain stunt with Gibbs in order to find out what kind of man he was. So Gibbs didn't care for how she went about things and the two found themselves constantly butting heads.

Sloane had looked at their case and Gibbs often found her in the way. But Sloane managed to see things that others didn't. She saw for instance that Helen's captor had wrapped Helen's hands in cloth before tying them up in the rope. So someone had tried to make her abduction as comfortable as possible and so Sloane suspected they hadn't meant to kill her. The person in the devil costume had stabbed Helen's husband and had bashed her over the head with a rock. And so Sloane suspected that Helen's death could be a last resort because she either recognized her captor or had managed to upset that person.

Sloane said that the devil was most likely someone in love with Helen and so Gibbs decided to take a closer look at the husband. Wynn had checked himself out of the hospital early on the night Helen was murdered and he had also forgotten to mention his wife had filed for divorce. Yet, Wynn said that they had been working through that and that he left the hospital early to go look for Helen. So things weren't looking good for Wynn though Torres and Bishop had found their own suspect. They had suspected Helen's XO of having an affair with Helen.

Helen had been intending to divorce her husband and so it would make sense if she found comfort in someone else. Though Commander Thomas Buckner said it hadn't been him. He had been there for Helen because he had gone through a divorce after ten years of marriage and so he had counseled Helen not to make the same mistake he did. So Torres had been willing to hear Bucker out, but Bishop hadn't wanted to do the same. She had known Bucker from high school and he used to bully her so badly that she had to get her brothers involved.

Bishop told Torres that her brothers had broken two of his fingers and that he finally stopped teasing her after that. But Buckner knew he was a jerk in high school and he had apologized to Bishop for his behavior however he didn't kill Helen. He said she had been a friend and he had truly been broken up when they told him that she died. So Bishop had to lay off of him for a while and in the meantime, Abby found out who really was behind Helen's death. Helen's car keys had been left in her car and there hadn't been any other keys on them.

Meaning someone had had to take off their gloves to remove the other keys and so Abby ran the fingerprints. However, the fingerprint matched someone on board the ship. His name Petty Officer Joe Smiddy and both Bishop and Torres found him stealing the money from the ship's safe. So that's why he had become involved in what happened to Helen yet he hadn't killed her and hadn't expected she would be murdered. He said he and his friend had planned on stealing Helen's keys to the safe and then getting out of town with the profits only they never agreed on killing her. And so Joe gave up his partner.

His partner was Mitch Grayson and he was the financial liaison that claimed he was only talking to Helen because of deployment when instead the two had been having an affair, but Helen had ended things to go back to her husband and so that's when Mitch decided to kill her.

Summary: After Reeves sees his friend get kidnapped, the NCIS team discovers the primary suspect disappeared two days ago with confidential military information. Also, a photo from McGee's teenage years becomes a popular meme.

Special Agent Reeves was going to AA. He's been part of the group for a while and still hasn't shared anything personal with the group because he wasn't entirely comfortable with them yet. But Reeves was slowly making friends within the group. He had met Melissa and the two had hit it off from the start, however, Reeves had noticed that Melissa was in a toxic relationship and so he had been happy for her when she recently revealed that she had broken up with this ex. She said he had gotten mixed up in something that she didn't approve and had had to break up with him. So Melissa didn't go into too much detail except the bruises on her arm didn't need an explanation.

Her ex-hadn't taken it well when she broke up with him. But Reeves had offered to help her and she said she could handle her ex-boyfriend on her own. She hadn't wanted Reeves to go out and rough him for her. So the two did their best to put what happened behind them and they were leaving AA together when the unthinkable happened. A car sped up next to Melissa and she had been grabbed before Reeves couldn't even do anything about it, but Reeves hadn't given up on his friend. He had filed a report with Metro Police and had given them the make and color of the car. And they had basically told him that there was nothing they could do.

But Reeves didn't want to leave things there. He went into work and he had opened an official case into Melissa's disappearance. So Reeves had had to ask for help from the others and unfortunately, he hadn't had enough information go off on. He knew her name was Melissa, that she had a dog growing up that she loved, and that she was part of a bicycle club though the club was what helped Abby. Abby had used facial recognition to find out which bicycle group Melissa had joined and so she found out her name was Melissa Goodman. Melissa has had the cops called on her and her boyfriend so many times that his name was still in the system.

Melissa's violent ex-was identified as Eddie Holdran. But Holdran hadn't been heard from in a while and he had taken something before he seemingly disappeared. He had stolen an ONI laptop and it carried confidential military information on it. So Reeves assumed that was Holdran's risky plan that Melissa hadn't wanted any part of and he worried she had been taken because she knew too much yet Reeves had later been given an idea from Gibbs. Gibbs had figured out Reeves and Melissa were in AA together and so he asked Reeves who else Melissa would confide in. And that would be her sponsor, Nancy D.

Nancy knew the good and bad about Melissa. But she had a lot to say about Holdran. He was abusive and manipulative. So Nancy had tried to get Melissa to leave him and she just never would. Melissa would cover up her bruises and recently she had hidden out at his cabin because she had gotten beaten up so bad that she hadn't wanted anyone to see. And so Reeves tracked down that cabin, however, Melissa hadn't already freed herself by then. She had noticed her ex was slurring and stumbling around like he was drunk and she figured he was gearing himself up to kill her. And he had wrestled with him over the gun the second she had gotten the chance.

But the laptop hadn't been at the cabin and Holdran had been killed in his struggle for the gun with Melissa. So didn't look good for NCIS because DOD still wanted answers. The information on that laptop detailed a new drone that Holdran and his team had built and therefore it was imperative that the team find the laptop. And their best bet was Melissa! Melissa had been so high strung after she killed Holdran that Special Agent Jack Sloane believed she hadn't fully processed the fact that she was safe now yet Jack knew how to help Melissa. She took the other woman down to the morgue and Melissa see for herself that the man she hated as well as loved was dead now.

So that allowed Melissa to think things over. She told Jack about the times when Holdran would follow her around or join her bike club so to make sure she wasn't seeing anyone else. But a memory that had stuck out for Melissa had been the time she went down to their storage locker and had found the locks changed. She thought Holdran did that to keep her from going out with her friends and she hadn't suspected anything else about it while Jack did. Jack suspected Holdran could have hidden the laptop there and change the locks to keep Melissa from ever finding out what he was doing. And so NCIS checked the storage locker.

They had found mostly dust and we're going to give up until Reeves noticed the Christmas box was on top of the Easter box which didn't make sense. He said if anything that it would be the Easter box on top because that was the last one used. But looking into the Christmas box, they eventually found the laptop and also learned that Holdran had sold the information already. The maps and everything related to the drone hadn't been on the laptop. So the team looked into Holdran's movements to find out who he had been speaking to. And they found footage of Holdran meeting up with Melissa's sponsor.

Nancy had claimed she never met Holdran and so NCIS confronted her with footage of the two getting cozy. But Nancy hadn't known that was Holdran. He told her his name was Austin and they had met on an online dating site. So the team kept digging into Holdran and Jack found certain holes in Melissa's story. Melissa had said that Holdran was violent, but he had no prior history of that with any of his past relationships and Jack's profile of him has him as a sweet and loving man. And so she did another profile of Melissa and she found out Melissa suffered from a personality disorder that meant she was cunning and vindictive.

Melissa had only recently joined AA and so the team investigated her despite Reeves telling them they were off base. But their investigation led them right back to Melissa. Melissa hadn't been abused and she was never an alcoholic. She had found out her boyfriend was cheating on her with Nancy and had joined the group to get close to Nancy. So the whole kidnapping and theft thing hadn't been on Holdran. It had been on Melissa and NCIS had caught her trying to sell the information on the black market.

So Reeves had been disappointed because he truly thought Melissa was a friend, but he still attended meetings and he decided it was time to finally up to others.

Summary: After a petty officer is found murdered, McGee spends hours on the victim's ham radio trying to locate a key witness. Also, Palmer asks co-workers to donate to a charity that builds playgrounds for kids of all abilities.

Petty Officer Jake Miller was found dead at a golf course. He worked there as a groundskeeper and mostly kept to himself, however, the evidence at the scene indicated that his death wasn't an accident and that someone purposely tried to hide him underneath the groundskeeper's truck. But that wasn't everything! There had also been a large blood stain on Miller's shirt and it hadn't been his. So there was a chance the blood was either from a second victim or better yet their culprit. And so NCIS had to find out who the money belonged to as well as why their victim had been targeted.

Palmer later found evidence that Miller's neck had been snapped and not by the machine or by the blooded rake they had found nearby. But Miller had a routine and had made sure he was always on the course by four in the morning. So someone must have studied him and thought it was best to get to Miller before even the dew sweepers. The "dew sweepers" were the early morning golfers and they had been the ones to find Miller yet the body had been cold by then and Palmer estimated Miller's time of death to be between four and seven that morning.

But other than his death, Miller had checked out on paper. He lived alone and had a bunch of dogs, but luckily his dogwalker had agreed to later take them while every. So things didn't start sticking out until NCIS dug a little deeper. They found out he had been frequent calls to a landscaping company and that the owner of said company hadn't wanted to answer any questions. She had first denied knowing about the calls and had then jumped on the reasoning that it could have been about work, but only after NCIS mentioned it first.

The owner said she was under a lot of stress and she looked it. She was taking several calls from her employees and she also seemed to be doing it all on her own. But Bishop and Reeves had put a stop to their questioning because they got a call about the suspect's car. The car had been seen living the course at the right time and it had been abandoned at a cheap strip mall through the local police had left it not long after they found it because of a stolen shopping. So the car had been gone by time NCIS arrived at the strip mall.

The sheriff had later told them that it had been there at least twenty minutes. But both Bishop and Reeves had been irritated while Gibbs had been the only one that saw what he could mean. He had looked around at the strip mall and had noticed that it didn't have any security cameras however it did have a veterinarian's office and so Gibbs knew where a bleeding man might go for help. Gibbs went to the vet's office and had barely flashed his badge when Dr. Cho started to freak out. The vet had wanted them out of his office as fast as possible and hadn't wanted them to go digging through the trash. So Bishop kept looking because she knew it held something if not what.

So it turns out that she had found bloody rags in the trash and that it hadn't been Dr. Cho's first time with illegally treating a human patient. He had gotten his license suspended once before because the board had found out he took cash for "helping" me out. But Dr. Cho said that he had given up on doing that until the guy they were looking for had threatened his life. He said that he was going to kill him and so Dr. Cho gave him some stitches, but he wasn't very good at providing a sketch and had otherwise been of no value.

The suspect had worn gloves when he visited Dr. Cho and that told Jack that whatever happened at that golf course hadn't been an accident. She said they were looking for someone for that planned his every step and that he had gone there that day fully intending to kill Miller. But Jack still didn't know why and so she looked into Miller. Miller had been somewhat invisible throughout his life and the only place he felt comfortable was on the radio. He had owned several ham radios and had made his friends that way yet it looked like he was personally close to "Ricochet".

"Ricochet" hadn't wanted to give his real name to McGee and had refused to answer any of McGee's calls. But Jack said that people picked their names on the radio by playing off their actual names. So McGee ran "Ricochet" through the system and ended finding Richard. Richard was a bit of a nut and probably had way too many surveillance cameras though what he also had was a dog Benji that used to jump on Miller as much as he formerly jumped on McGee when they met earlier because both Richard and Miller shared the same dog walker.

But the dog hadn't jumped on McGee when the two met up again and that bugged him. He asked Richard what type of dog Benji and Richard said that he adopted Benji after he retired from TSA. So McGee borrowed the dog and he took him to the golf course because he figured out why cocaine had been found on Miller everywhere except his system. Miller hadn't been doing drugs and he hadn't been selling it. He was just accidentally working in it and so that's when he realized Southeast Sand Turf wasn't what it appeared.

They had given him the wrong bag of sand and had killed him before he could report it. But checking the company's records against sketch, they found Ramon Moncada right before he left the country. He had been trying to flee to Mexico and so they got to give them a few details, but his boss at the company had provided with the rest. They had been smuggling cocaine across the border and selling it for a cartel down there. So they would have still been in business if Miller hadn't gotten the wrong bag of sand.

Summary: A convicted felon claims NCIS framed him for murder a decade ago, so Gibbs investigates and asks Ducky to conduct a new autopsy. Meanwhile, Senior FBI agent Fornell joins the probe, since he was the lead investigator in the original joint FBI and NCIS case.

A prisoner named Gabriel tells a public defender that he was framed by NCIS. Meanwhile, Torres is bragging to the gang that all of his shirts are too small in the arms. Yup, all that time in the gym is paying off.

Gibbs arrives at the office. He is pulled in by Vance. They have a visitor, a public defender, Jessica, who wants them to look at Lieutenant O'Connell's body. There is something wrong with his autopsy. Donald takes a look. The original M.E. missed the trauma on the head. It was caused by someone that is a lefty who hit the man from behind. Jessica is happy. Her client Gabriel is a righty. He is innocent.

The team goes over the case files. They are extremely disorganized. McGee points out that Gabriel lied about his alibi. The case also lost a major witness. Torres wants to return to the scene of the crime to take a look around.

McGee and Torres take a look around the wooded area. They spot something hanging out from the bark of the tree. It's the Lieutenant's license.

Abby looks over the evidence with Bishop, they feel like this was the work of a serial killer. The prosecutor on the case meets with Gibbs. He feels like Gabriel is the killer. Gibbs wants to look into. Vance agrees. He prosecutor gets mad. A joint investigation gets underway.

McGee, Abby, Torres, and Bishop look over the evidence. Prior to the meeting, Abby was too giddy and went through everything. She already has a game plan on some of the items that were taken in.

Sloane and Gibbs sit down with Gabriel and Jessica. Gabriel explains that he thinks he was framed. If he wasn't, the only answer he has is that this was a consequence.

Torres goes to a store where he has some questions about the bags they used and someone who brought in his fruit. He asks the owner, who tells him he has a sharp memory. And yes, he can remember 11 years ago. An employee of his named Ray has an aunt that brought in the fruit. Ray is still working for him after all this time. He calls her to the front. Torres shows her his ID. The man instantly runs for it. Torres chases him to the back of the building. The two fight. Torres takes him down and out with a sleeper hold. He cuffs him.

Torres puts Ray in the interrogation room. Gibbs watches from outside. Vance comes to talk to him. Gibbs tells him that Torres is in with Ray, the nephew of the missing witness from the case. He doesn't know much about her. She took off a while ago, but annuity checks come to his house for her and he cashes them.

Abby knows what her name is. It's Mary Elaine Smith. Meanwhile, Gabriel takes the stand on court. The prosecutor accuses Gabriel of lying about staying in a nearby cabin to write.

Gibbs meets with a very old Elaine. He tells her that her nephew has been cashing her checks. She tells him she left because she couldn't take care of him. She recalls the day she saw the Lieutenant. She also tells Gibbs that she told her story to the FBI 11 years ago. Gibbs is angry.

Gibbs approaches Tobias. He asks him why he covered up talking to Elaine all that time ago. Tobias tells him that he knows she was lying and he wasn't about to let Gabriel, a serial killer walk. Gibbs accuses him of manipulating the case to help him land a promotion. He denies it.

Gibbs comes back to the office. He is mad that the team hasn't made any connections. He heads into Sloane's office and sparks a fight. She tells him to calm down. She wants him to talk and tell her what is wrong so she can help. Gibbs admits that he is in a predicament. He has to take the stand and if he does he has to tell the truth and ruin a man's life. Sloane really doesn't have a good answer or advice so she changes the conversation.

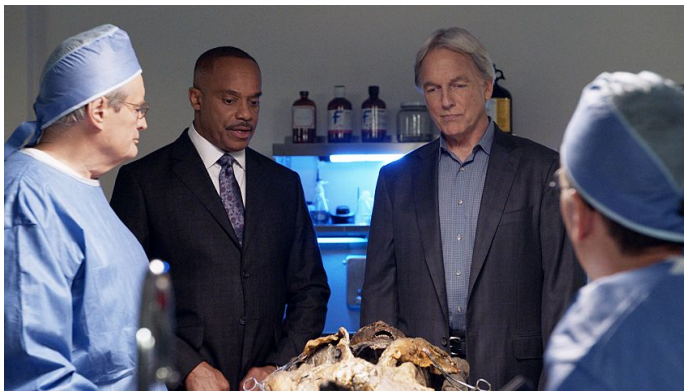

Gibbs takes the stand. Jessica questions him about the witness Elaine. She asks him who Elaine talked to 11 years ago. Gibbs must confess. The court room goes crazy with whispers. Outside of the court room, Tobias admits that he has some relief after Gibbs revealed what he had done.

Gabriel thanks Gibbs for helping him. He slips up about a small detail from his childhood he told them earlier. The slip makes Gibbs question the man's integrity. He just got a liar off. That night, Gibbs and Sloane follow Gabriel to the baseball cages. That watch him hit balls — he is a switch hitter!

Summary: An NCIS person of interest in a bribery and fraud case is found murdered after a runner is led to his body by a strange voice. Also, McGee and Delilah disagree on whether to find out the baby's sex or keep it a surprise.

A female jogger was out on her morning run when she heard a voice. The voice sounded as if someone was in distress and so the jogger went to go see if someone had been hurt out in the woods. But the voice had been calling out "help me" couldn't have come from a living person because it led Amber to a body that had been dumped out there. So Amber tried telling people what happened and they just refused to believe her. They couldn't make a connection between a dead body and a mysterious voice and Gibbs for one hadn't wanted to try.

NCIS had been handed this case after it was revealed the victim was Victor King. King had been a businessman and he had been a supplier for the Navy, however, he had been up to some shady dealings on the side and had been under investigation when he disappeared several years ago. But while NCIS had Amber to thank for finding the body, Gibbs didn't put a lot into believing a voice led her to King. So he asked his people to investigate Amber and had her checked out by Jack to see if she needed a psych eval.

But Jack had talked to Amber for a while and she had noticed a few things. Like how the fights began to flicker out when Amber started to hear the voice again and that Amber knew things that she shouldn't know. She had claimed after all that she had never met Victor King and so she shouldn't have known that he got into a fight with someone right before he died or that the person he supposedly feels had in fact been a real person. So Jack took Amber back to the squad room and the team allowed Amber to assist them.

They knew Amber couldn't have been the killer because she had been overseas at the time of death and hadn't been connected to the victim in any way whatsoever. But Amber "knew" things and the man she had identified as fighting with King had been Thomas Westbay. Westbay had died two days before King had gone missing and his death had been written off as a car accident. So Amber had been surprised by that because she sensed the accident hadn't been an accident and so that led the team into investigating it.

They went back to the car and checked it out. But Abby found things didn't line up with Westbay dying in an accident because she said that Westbay had left an imprint of his shoe on the brakes and that it meant he had tried to stop the car. So what Abby couldn't understand was why didn't it work? She had checked out the brakes and they had appeared in working order though there hadn't been any skid marks out on the street that day that showed he tried to stop. And so Abby kept investigating this conundrum when she inadvertently found something.

Abby had found that someone had hacked the car. The brakes were meant to fail on Westbay and then snap back together by the time the police showed up, but that wasn't all of it. Abby had also looked into the very expensive GPS watch that had been King when he died and that too had been hacked. So someone had gone out of their way to kill both men and the one thing they had common had been them both being dirty. The steel magnate had paid people to look the other way and the inspector was probably one of those people because he had been proved to be dirty.

Westbay had taken his new car to the mechanic every three weeks and the mechanic had verified their theories about Westbay. But Abby had found one other thing that had been troubling. She had found a fingerprint on King's watch and it had come back as belonging to Amber. But proving Amber to be the men's killer had been tricky. Everyone had thought she was a wonderful actress that had been playing a game with them and the tricky part had been Amber herself because Amber appeared to be honestly confused when confronted.

Amber said she would never kill someone and that she didn't even know the men personally. But the team had used facial recognition that proved Amber had snuck back into the country on a fake passport and so she had been in the country to kill both men. So they thought Amber would finally confess and the truth was that she didn't remember those things. She didn't remember sneaking back into the country and had therefore asked for help from Gibbs because she was starting to question her own sanity by that point.

Amber didn't recall anything they pointed out and the team couldn't find a motive. But they found her ex-husband and he told her about their daughter. Their daughter hadn't died like Amber said. She had fallen through the floor when their building had collapsed in on itself and it turns out that both King and Westbay had been responsible. The crappy steal that one of them made and the other had signed off on as safe had killed Amber's daughter. So she killed them out of revenge and she didn't remember until they forced her to deal with her pain.

Amber had believed her daughter died in her sleep peacefully and so finding out what had really happened to her daughter had brought all those memories back. But once she knew, she remembered that there was a third person responsible for what happened to her daughter. So she snuck away from the orderlies that were taking her to the mental hospital and she found the man that King had bribed to keep him out of prison. The guy had worked with NCIS and the investigators looking into King yet he would tell King beforehand about all the possible leads.

But not long after Amber got away from her escort, NCIS was alerted and so they followed her to a house where she was holding someone at gunpoint. So the guys had rushed in believing Amber to threaten and she wasn't. At not anymore! She had simply gotten the last guy on video confessing to bribes and so now it was over. Amber had just wanted justice for her daughter and she has gotten it in the end by putting the last man away in prison. So Amber knew she was going to be facing charges for everything she did, however, the team believed her mental disorder and the fact she had been in a fugue state when she killed her two victims had meant Amber had a good chance in court.

So the case had been closed with satisfying and Gibbs denied to everyone that he hadn't wanted Amber to be a psychic, but deep down, he had wanted to believe. But it didn't work out and so they had all to figure out things on their own. Like when McGee found out he was expecting twins with his wife — a boy and a girl — through an ultrasound rather than asking Amber!

Summary: The team's Thanksgiving plans are put on hold while they track an elusive international arms dealer in D.C. who recently murdered an MI6 officer who was Sloane's close friend. Also, Abby races Delilah to the hospital when her labor starts three weeks early.

McGee and Delilah still hadn't come up with names when she suddenly went into labor a good three weeks early.

But Gibbs understood the situation. He had been a father himself and therefore given McGee leave to go to his wife while the rest of them stayed behind to investigate the murder of MI5 Agent Nigel Ford. Ford had been something of a legend back in the UK and Reeves had even been a fan of his, however, the last time anyone had heard from Ford he had been working a case involving a known arms dealer. So Jack Sloane was able to confirm that Ford had still been working that particular case and had in fact followed the arms dealer to the states because Andre Yorka had entered the country on a fake visa. And so Sloane was the team's best resource in finding Yorka.

Sloane had worked the Yorka case with Ford as part of a joint task force and she had continued to follow it afterward thanks to the relationship she developed with Ford. The two had been friends for the most part though they occasionally became something more and so it was hard for Sloane to distance herself with his case. But while Sloane was heartbroken, the others were striving to figure out where Yorka might be heading next and McGee turned out to have the answer. The concerned father and husband had rushed to the hospital to be with Delilah. And had been waiting for his wife when he noticed Yorka in the hospital waiting room.

Yorka had gotten injured in the confrontation with Ford and had gone to the hospital hoping to patch up the bullet wound in his leg. But McGee had recognized immediately because he was still getting updates on the case and had gotten a photo of Yorka on his phone moments before seeing the man in person. So McGee notified the armed guard at the hospital about the situation and he also called Gibbs to tell him that he found Yorka, but the guard had gotten too carried away and had spooked Yorka. Yorka had noticed the man was paying too much attention to him and was about to leave when the guard tried to stop him.

So Yorka shot the guard and he had taken a woman hostage as things began to escalate at the hospital. But McGee had already his team about Yorka and so they had been halfway there when they have gotten the call about the hostage situation at the hospital. Therefore, both Gibbs and McGee decided to enter the hospital and see if Yorka would be willing to exchange the hostages with two federal agents yet he had barely gotten the chance to think about the offer when the still living guard had accidentally let slip that McGee should be the one to get released because he had two babies waiting for him upstairs.

Yorka hadn't known that McGee had come to the hospital for his own reasons and therefore he didn't realize how valuable McGee was as a hostage until the guard opened his mouth. But everything changed after Yorka learned the truth. He realized he could threaten McGee's life and that the other agents would get him whatever he wanted. Like a doctor to check out his leg! So NCIS tried to get that doctor and nothing they did or said could get them one because no one wanted to put a doctor in such a precarious situation. And so Sloane came up with a plan that would allow them to overpower Yorka.

Sloane decided to go in dressed as a doctor and the plan was to drug Yorka into submission. But Yorka had been too smart for that. He hadn't wanted any drugs because he knew that would impair his senses and so he told Sloane to merely work on him without drugs, but Gibbs had then thought he could overtake Yorka if the other man was in pain and had been close to making his move when Yorka's partner pulled a gun on him. So York had thought everything. He had come to the hospital with someone to watch his back and had even pretended to take her hostage when he noticed the guard wasn't the only one armed.

But Torres and Reeves had found out about the partner on their own. They had rewatched the footage of Yorka and Ford shooting each other and so they noticed Yorka got away in a car that he wasn't driving it however that hadn't been the only thing they found. They also got to Yorka's hotel room and had found components for a bomb as well as a train schedule. And so they had keep looking until they came across a laptop that carried all the detail for a catering company that was working in the same hotel and was about to cater a prestigious event with visiting nations. Including Romania.

Romania had recently frozen Yorka's assets and Sloane had profiled him as being a petty / vengeful man. So the men raced downstairs and had found the catering cart with the bomb on it, but were quickly able to deal with it on their own and so they sent a message back to Gibbs saying the bomb was out of play which allowed him to take risks. Gibbs took on the partner and Sloane dealt with the Yorka. But while those two will be facing long sentences in prison, McGee got to return to his wife before the twins were born and therefore hadn't missed a thing when both John and Morgan were born.

Summary: As Torres and Sloane run protection detail for U.S. Senator John Phillips in Afghanistan for the holidays, they must urgently return to the states after hearing the senator's son is in the ICU. Also, Gibbs and the team investigate the altercation that caused the life threatening injuries to the senator's son.

Unfortunately, Gibbs had had to break some bad news to an old friend. He had been stuck stateside when Senator Phillips's son Chandler got into a nasty accident and so he thought he should be the one to break the news to the Senator. The Senator had been Gibbs have known each other for years and so Gibbs had initially wanted to go with the Senator to Afghanistan as part of his security detail. But for some reason, the Director had pulled off of security to make room for Sloane because she is somewhat familiar with the area. So it became her job to get the Senator back home before his son's condition grew worse.

Chandler had been his only child and the two had been estranged for years because Chandler had gotten arrested for drug possession around the same time the Senator introduced a new drug bill. But the Senator hadn't cared about what happened between them when he heard his son was injured because he just wanted to be there for him. So Sloane said she would get him home and she had the added benefit of having Torres there with her as a backup. He too had gotten put on security detail and he hadn't shied away taking risks to get the Senator stateside, however, Torres and Sloane had made the mistake of believing they could get the Senator to the nearby civilian airport.

The airport was miles away and miles away. But the two agents chose to make the drive despite what they could run into out in the desert and besides the Senator, they only had a comedian and one Marine for help when they drove into a trap. They drove on top of a live IED and had only made it out in time to save themselves if not much else. They lost their vehicle as well as all means to make contact the military base though they needed a place they could hide until it was safe and so they went up into the mountains that even the comedian knew was where the Taliban were hidden. So the plan to get the Senator to the airport had gone awry just as NCIS found out a few things about Chandler.

Chandler's accident hadn't been an accident. He had gotten hit in the back of his head and someone had tried to arrange it to make it look like he had an accident. But NCIS managed to get the case from Metro and they went on to find several others that seemed important. Like Chandler being part of an illegal casino acting out of an apartment and that said casino had been fixing the games. So he and his partner had taken money from their "clients" by weighing down the dice and the team figured he could have been killed because someone found out. And so they investigated that angle by talking to his partner.

But the partner didn't think anyone would want Chandler dead and had been more than prepared to move on to the casino without Chandler. So the team had thought that pretty cold of him and they couldn't understand why Seth would write off his partner/friend when the other man hadn't even died yet. It just hadn't made sense until they also learned that Chandler had made a decision to turn his life around. He enlisted! He joined the Marines and had told the enlisting officers that he wanted to become a better person. And so the team suspected his partner wanted Chandler dead because he was getting out except Seth claimed he didn't know anything about Chandler leaving.

Seth said Chandler would never have done something like enlist because he hadn't wanted to be like his father. But they showed Seth the paperwork and that more than proved Chandler was willing to get out of the business. So Seth admitted that they would never have tried to kill Chandler for leaving and using the word "they" had told the team that there was a third partner out there that he had been hiding. It turns out this third partner was Seth's girlfriend Misty and she could prove that they were innocent. She and Seth had set up their gambling table and had had NCIS test it out however the game hadn't been fixed.

Neither Seth nor Misty knew how to fix the game. That had been Chandler that fixed the games and so the two would never kill the Golden Goose because the scam would officially end the moment Chandler either walked away or died. But without those two as suspects, the only other people the team could think of was someone that Misty described. She described a thin, tall man with a mustache and Bishop had remembered seeing someone that matched that description outside of the apartment. So she checked the description against security detail for the casinos in the area and found the guy thought he had already contacted them.

It turns out he had caught Chandler and he had confronted him. But Chandler agreed to turn his life around if charges weren't pressed and the next day he joined the Marines. So all the other guy wanted was the money Chandler had taken from the casino because he thought Chandler showed promise and had even considered hiring him to help detect other cheats at the casino he worked in. And so the only two people that weren't happy with losing thirty grand each had been Chandler's partners. He had made back their share as well and so either Seth or Misty tried to kill him for ending things.

Seth said it was Misty and Misty said it had been Seth. But Misty could prove her innocence because she had tapped herself practicing the slide of hand and therefore caught Seth's confession to her on tape. So Seth was arrested for trying to kill Chandler and Chandler eventually regained consciousness just in time to enjoy the holidays with his dad. The Senator had a near miss in Afghanistan, but he survived it and so did the rest of his team.

Summary: Torres and Bishop go undercover as a criminal couple available for hire, during an NCIS sting operation tracking illegal drug-running out of the Norfolk civilian marina.

Bishop went in undercover as a prostitute to get some much-needed information on NCIS's latest case. The team was investigating this drug dealer that managed to give everyone the slip and corner part of the market for himself. However, Jared Turner wasn't the director's chief concern. Director Vance has been getting a lot of flak from his own bosses about the massive amounts of fentanyl that was being brought in and so he hadn't wanted to get information on Turner or Turner's partners. He merely wanted to bring Turner in! Vance asked the team why Bishop and her "jealous" boyfriend Torres were doing reconnaissance when they could just easily arrest Turner on the information they did have.

But Gibbs thought differently. Gibbs figured they could find out how Turner was able to bring the drugs in and stop once not just the trafficker, but also what's being trafficked. So Gibbs and McGee waited for Bishop to clone Turner's phone and then used that to gain as much as they could. They found out that Turner was in frequent talks with one man and that the man had warned Turner about a possible murder attempt which was something NCIS couldn't sit back and watch happen. They had to act once they received the information and so both Torres and Bishop were heading back to Turner's boat when it blew up.

The two had luckily been far enough away that they weren't injured in the blast. Though Torres decided to fall back on his own protocol whenever an op goes sideways and so he dragged Bishop into hiding until he was sure they were safe and again got lucky when Gibbs didn't get offended. Gibbs and the others had checked out the blast site and had wondered what happened to their two agents when Bishop reached out. She texted them from her burner saying that they were both okay and so Gibbs waited for the two to contact him more directly. And didn't have to wait for long before they returned to the land of the living.

Torres had later explained that he was just taking precaution and that he did what he had to do to protect the op however Bishop both thought and said that he had been a little overzealous. She figured the op ended the moment Turner was murdered and so she was fine with following Vance's directive to let things go. He wanted the two off the case because they were both compromised following the blast and he wanted the others to follow up on Turner's partner. The partner's name was Mitchell Young and he seemingly ran an inconspicuous store that hadn't appeared to be a front for drugs. Though of course, it was and that's where Torres eventually found Young.

Young had been busy making a sale when Torres walked in and told Young that he knew about his side business. He said that he and his girl ran a long con in which they pretend she's a prostitute in order to get close enough to their marks to clone their phones. But according to Torres, he decided not to blackmail Young because he figured a guy like Young could offer him a job. Torres had wanted to help run drugs and had convinced Young to hire him by handing over information on Turner's hone. So Young agreed to check out Torres's alias and had even agreed to hire him when Torres's cover held up under scrutiny. And so Torres decided to further test his luck.

Torres had gone behind both Gibbs and Vance's back when he approached Young and to make things worse he had also asked for a job for his "girlfriend". Yet, Torres never asked Bishop about going back in or ran it by her before he ran his mouth with Young. So Bishop had hated that. She was Torres's partner and he tended to treat her as a subordinate what with always giving her orders rather than ideas except she followed his lead on this one because there was nothing else she could do. Her bosses had talked about it and they agreed to follow Torres's play even if Torres wasn't their favorite person for doing what he did.

It hadn't mattered at that point. What mattered was working the connection Torres built with Young and so both agents used their aliases to get close to the mark. They wanted to find out how Young was bringing in the drugs and Torres had also built up a rapport with Donnie. Donnie allegedly worked for Young and Young was the boss. However, Young found out who killed Turner and had wanted Bishop to kill her to prove herself, but Torres had found a way to get her out of it. He and Bishop convinced Young to let Bishop take the young woman offsite and kill elsewhere. So Bishop took Frankie Mancuso back to NCIS.

NCIS then helped Bishop stage a couple of photos of a dead Frankie and in exchange for not ratting Frankie out as a snitch, they got her to talk to them. She told them about how Richard Lane was the one runnings things and that was funny because Lane pretended to be a mere boat owner that was upset he rented the boat to Turner on the night Turner blew up. But figuring Lane was their guy, they thought they could finally put an end to the case. They went back to Young's store and was going to arrest him when they saw blood on the floor. They hadn't known who it belonged to and so Bishop kept her cover.

She pretended to walk in on Gibbs and McGee when they had a gun on Young and so she made Young believe she just saved his life. Though Bishop used that currency to demand where her boyfriend was. She asked Young if the blood belonged to Torres and he told her that it instead belonged to Lane. Lane hadn't been their boss. He really did just rent out his boats and eventually, he caught on to what Young was doing. So Lane demanded money for his silence and Young killed him to keep him quiet yet Young also revealed something. He said that Lane wasn't running things and had laughed off the idea that he was the boss.

The boss as it turns out was Donnie who pretended to be the harmless young man that got caught up in something he couldn't get out of. Yet, Torres had bought that story and after Lane shot Donnie he told Donnie the truth. He told him that he was a federal agent and that he could help leave the organization. So it dawned on Torres that he had been wrong about Donnie when Donnie pulled a gun on him and so Torres had had to fight his way out of that on his own. He drove Donnie to the safehouse and had crashed the car to get the upper hand on the other man. And he thought he would have to shoot his way through the others when his own team arrived to save the day.

They had arrested Young and he revealed where the safe house was, but while Torres did get into some trouble for what he did earlier, he and Bishop actually grew closer over what happened and he rubbed off on her because she was now more willing to trust her gut on a case.

Summary: After a seemingly happy and successful Navy lieutenant appears to have taken her own life, Gibbs and the team conduct a thorough investigation, interviewing family and friends from her past and present.

The team got a call about a dead JAG officer on tonight's all-new episode, however, the parents of the victim didn't believe Lt. Melissa Newhall's death was suicide. She had been found hanging from the ceiling by her distraught parents and, despite the circumstances in which they found her, they were sure to tell NCIS when they saw them that their daughter didn't kill herself. They said they talked to their daughter almost every day and she had been happy. Melissa had recently got engaged to her boyfriend David Crocker and so the team knew that they should talk to him about her in case he noticed something her parents wouldn't be aware of.

Except David on a business trip that same morning and so that had made them all little suspicious, but what had made David's trip a little too convenient had been what they'd seen in their report on the preliminary autopsy. The report stated that Melissa had been covered in bruises and often in abuse cases, the culprit is either the spouse or the boyfriend. So the team continued to reach out to David until he eventually got in contact with them and agreed to an interview. David hadn't known that anything was wrong and hadn't therefore been on his guard when he was questioned about Melissa's bruises.

David, though, had no knowledge of these bruises or so he claims. He said that Melissa believed in waiting until they were married so they were celibate and while it hadn't seemed like it was making it up it sure didn't explain why Melissa hadn't actually been celibate. She had had sex within three days of her death and so if David wasn't her partner then who was? The team reached out to Melissa's best friend to find out if Melissa had any exes she might not have gotten over and the friend told them that Melissa didn't really have exes. She said Melissa had never truly dated and that she hadn't cared about dating until she met David.

Therefore, none of what they found was making any sort of sense. They were investigating the suicide of a JAG lawyer that always seemed to look on the positive side and never had a bad thing to say in her video journal that she was holding onto for five years. Just this Melissa that the team kept hearing about didn't actually seem to exist. She had a burner phone in her house and it belonged to her other persona. Melissa liked to go out on the town as Rita and she constantly sought out men that could beat her part of some extreme S&M. So Sloane was brought in to help them understand what happened to Melissa.

Melissa led this secret life and no one in her inner circle knew about it. Her best friend had even been left speechless when she was heard that Melissa hid this other side to herself because she thought Melissa had told her everything, yet with that no longer being the case, Kerry had to wonder if she really did know Melissa or will she be mourning the woman she thought Melissa was and so she asked NCIS not to tell Melissa's parents what they found. She said that she was still Melissa's best friend and that she had to protect her memory especially in regard to Melissa's parents. Their daughter had been their whole world and so she didn't want to take that from them.

Only that wasn't a promise that NCIS could keep. They were running an open investigation and would need to inform everyone in Melissa's life what she had been up to if they were ever going to get answers. So they talked to her parents without revealing too much and they admitted that Melissa kept a diary when she was a teenager. Her father said that Melissa had gone through a drastic change in high school and that he had tried to read her diary when she walked in before he found find anything. And so they asked David if he knew where Melissa's hiding place was, he did and led them right to her diary.

It turns out Melissa had written in her diary about her teacher Mr. Paul and how she was going to teach him a lesson with her best friend Kerry. But they looked into this Mr. Paul and they found out his body had just been found buried in a ditch, but that wasn't all of what they found. They also learned that girls started coming forwards after he disappeared and that the girls revealed that their teacher had molested them. So Sloane put the rest together. She figured Melissa really did kill herself because now that Mr. Paul's body was found she thought her secrets, both new and old, would come out.

The secrets that Kerry would eventually tell them were this: Mr. Paul had molested them and they lured him out in the wood hoping to get him to confess on tape. Except Paul had a heart attack and died while they had him tied up so they panicked. They buried his body and never talked about it again. So when his body was found, Kerry called Melissa to tell her and Melissa freaked out believing her life was over. And just hearing it in her friend's voice, Kerry rushed over to Melissa's and found her friend had killed herself.

Melissa had left behind a suicide note saying goodbye and she also said why she killed herself so Kerry had taken that note before she left because she was in sheer panic mode.

Luckily for her, Kerry had kept the note and she had later handed it over knowing she would also have to answer to Pennsylvania police about Mr. Paul.

Summary: After McGee and Torres visit the home of a high schooler who witnessed a hit and run, her parents flee with their daughter, leaving NCIS in the lurch.

Gibbs was forced to cancel his breakfast plans when the body of a corporal was found floating by the road.

But Director Vance had been disappointed about breakfast. His daughter had him on a morning shake routine that could never replace eating actual solids and so he looked towards breakfast at the diner as his one escape from that routine however he knew why Gibbs had canceled and would have left Gibbs to do his work if his daughter hadn't gotten into trouble. Kayla had gotten arrested for shoplifting. She had ditched school to go the mall and had stolen some merchandise that was later in fact found in her purse. So Kayla did do it!

Kayla had even admitted that she did it. But what she hadn't confessed was that her father was Director Vance. If she had then maybe the police or possibly the store could have cut her some slack, but she hadn't said anything and the store had pressed charges. So it was the police that figured out who Kayla was and unfortunately, they were the ones that notified her father. The Director had thought Kayla was still at school when he got the call and he had been shocked because shop-lifting hadn't sounded like his daughter.

The Director thought that Kayla was serious about her health and especially school because it was her last year. But the Director admitted to Gibbs that he didn't know what to do with Kayla. She was a good kid when she was a younger and she used to talk to him yet things change when she became a teenager because she found outside influences and so the Director had wanted to stay at the office. He hadn't wanted to go home because he knew he would have to have a conversation with Kayla and had wanted to put it off as long as possible. So Gibbs had to convince him to go home.

Gibbs could put work first because he had nothing to go home to. But the Director was different and so Gibbs couldn't let him hide at the office. He convinced the Director into leaving work early and then handle his case. He and his team had quickly found out that their victim, Lance Corporal Jenkins, had ended up in the water after someone had run him off the road. So they had used the broken headlights to tracking down the car and they found John Kendall though Kendall couldn't have possibly have driven his car that night.

The Blue Maserati was outfitted with a breath analyzer because Kendall had gotten into a few DUIs and so he couldn't have possibly taken his car out on the same night he had twelve drinks at the bar. But Abby dusted the car and, while she couldn't find fingerprints, she did find a bracelet. The bracelet had the mascot of the local high school on it and its initials matched only one girl — Genevieve Bell. She was a straight A kid and seemed well-liked, but the team knew that they had to talk to her because she was either driving the car or was a witness to a vehicular manslaughter.

But the team thought they could find Genevieve at home. It was after school hours and so they thought she was probably doing her homework however they went to the house and her parents said she wasn't there. They said their daughter stays late at school for volleyball practice and so the father agreed to drive over there because he said it wasn't that far away. So the guys thought they would meet with the father and the girl at the school and it turns out they were mistaken. They got there and both father and daughter were gone.

The guys had been had. The father had gone to the school to take his daughter and the whole family had escaped before the agents could return to the house. But why did they run? That's the question that bugged the team because it had seemed extreme for the whole family to go on the run even if Genevieve had been driving that car. So they questioned her best friend Maya Guzman because Maya had been with her that night and it turns out Maya had been the one driving that car. She had been seen in security footage from the convenience store the girls had driven to and it driving a stolen car must have been Maya's idea as well.

Maya was the one that lived the next door to Kendall and so she thought it would be a great idea to take the car because Kendall left not only the garage door open, but he also left the keys in the cupholder. But Maya was willing to confess that she drove the car and so that didn't explain why the Bells went on the run. It was just unexplainable until Gibbs took a second look at the family photo. The parents had blue eyes and their daughter had brown. So the odds of that were nearly impossible and Gibbs asked Abby to run a DNA test on the family's toothbrushes.

The later results revealed that the Bells were genetically related to Genevieve and the fact there wasn't an official adoption showed that the Bells kidnapped their daughter. But when they found out who Genevieve really was, they learned that her biological mother had overdosed not long after she was born and that her father had been in prison at the time. So the Bells who knew Genevieve's biological mother had gone to kidnap the baby because they hadn't wanted her to go into the system and they couldn't formally adopt her because the dad had an assault charge from when he was eighteen and had gotten into a fight at a Metallica concert.

So finding the family had been easy though choosing what to do with the parents had been the hard part. They hadn't lied to their daughter and had told her why they had taken her. But they did kidnap her father and biological father wanted to sue the Bells. He hadn't cared to look for his daughter and so the only reason wanted to sue was to get some money out of the couple. And the team figured out the best way to stop him from doing so was having Genevieve talk to Martin Curtin because she was the only one that could convince him to let her go.

If he sued then he would be pursuing custody. But Genevieve loved her parents and she wanted to stay with them. So she talked to Curtis and he officially signed the papers relinquishing his custody to the Bells because he realized that was what was best for her. And while the whole thing had been a trying time for everyone involved, the Director realized his daughter had taken the fall for the robbery at the mall because she had been taking the blame for her friend. The same friend that was eighteen and had two strikes on her record so the Director decided to go easy on Kayla because she was still a good if the misguided kid.

Summary: When the body of a missing Navy commander is found, Gibbs and his team are ordered to work with former FBI agent Tobias Fornell, the private investigator who was hired to find him.

McGee has been on a roll since his two children were born. It was like he had sudden change overnight and became more than the McGee they all knew as well loved. He was now Superdad. McGee has been able to close cases all on his own and he had even started to notice the little things that could have easily turn into something else if he hadn't spoken up. So whatever got into him, it appeared to be doing wonders for both his home life and his work at NCIS, however, McGee's new powers were put to the test when their case proved to be full of twists and turns.

The team had gotten a call when a couple of local police officers pulled over someone driving a stolen car and had found the body of Navy Commander James Willis. Willis had been found in a barrel and the small amount of lye in the barrel had dissolved both of his feet, but there wasn't enough lye to dissolve the rest of the body and so that had stumped Palmer. Palmer had later told Gibbs that it just hadn't made sense to take countermeasures and not use them to their full advantages. He believed the culprit they're looking for had cared about using the lye because they wanted the commander to eventually be found which would make sense.

The culprit had also taken a very large risk when they used a stolen car to carry around the body and the fact that the car had been found in an empty parking lot when it was stolen by another person had shown that the culprit didn't care if the commander was found intact. There was little to no forensic evidence found at the scene and the car had been stolen by one too many to be of actual use. Meaning there wasn't much that NCIS could take from the scene or the body to find the person responsible though Abby had had an explanation for why the scene had been too clean. She told the others that they were looking for hitmen.

Abby explained Willis had been killed by a pro and so she helped them look into anyone that had access to lye or who might have stolen some to use on the victim yet that wasn't the only avenue the team was using. They had also found out that a Private Investigator had gone to Willis's home and was asking about him. Willis had been missing by then and therefore his widow hadn't been able to offer the PI much because she had also been looking for her husband by that point. So the PI left her his business card and the team used it to track down the PI because they had questions of their own that they wanted to ask.

The team wanted to know who this the P.I. was and it turns out it was their old friend Tobias Fornell. Fornell had gotten let go from the FBI when they found out he withheld crucial evidence in Hick's case and so he became a Private Investigator afterward. He said it allowed him to still use his skill set and he seemed happy with his new career. Fornell told Gibbs that he wasn't upset with him and that he was in a great place now, but what Fornell couldn't understand was why Gibbs had been avoiding him before and why he was continuing to do so even as Fornell was brought onboard to help with Willis's case.

Fornell had been looking for Willis because he had been hired by Cash-Line Direct. The money-lending company had signed off on several loans to Willis and Willis started to ignore them by the time some of those payments came due. He didn't answer any of their calls or respond to the many letters in the mail and so the team eventually learned that he had been in debt with quite a few people. He had also borrowed money from a friend that to pay off some his sick mother's medical bills and he recently paid off the thousands of dollars he had owed his friend. And so while he had been in debt, Willis was trying to pay off everyone.

Plus, dead men can't pay off bills and so none of the people he owed would have a motive in killing him, however, there was one other motive that no one had seen until they found out about the hitman. The hitman had paid off two idiots to get rid of the body and so they had happily given him up. They revealed that the hitman was going to kill someone else and it turned out that someone else was a woman that Willis had been having an affair with. The two met when they were serving on the same jury and were sequestered for months. So Willis finally got up the courage to tell his wife that he was leaving her and that she wasn't going to get anything.

Willis had used up all of their savings and so there was nothing his wife could take though she realized that if she killed him as well as his mistress that she would get money from his life insurance policy and that mistress wouldn't be able to point her out as a suspect. Therefore, it had been a good plan until the hitman she hired had turned around to outsource the body's disposal. That's what led to both the hitman and Willis's wife being identified and now they were both looking at life sentences. And while Fornell eventually learned that he had been right about Hicks, he decided to forgive Gibbs for trying to hide it from him and was going to work the case with them.

Sloane for her part had warned his lawyer friend about Hicks and so Jessica gave up on being his counsel because she found something. She couldn't tell Sloane what she found because it was protected by attorney-client privilege and so she just told Sloane to keep digging because there was something to be found. But before Sloane could get anything else out of her friend, Jessica's car blew up and Sloane along with everyone else knew who was responsible. It could only have been Hicks!

Summary: NCIS strikes a deal with convicted murderer Paul Triff, giving him a 48-hour furlough at his former residence, now McGee's home, in exchange for information that can convict his former cellmate, Gabriel Hicks, the murderer who deceived Gibbs and Fornell.

NCIS had opened an investigation into Jessica Shaeffer. However Sloane known who was responsible for her friend's death.

Sloane had been looking into Gabriel Hicks. He was the naval officer that had gotten convicted of the murder of Lt. O'Connell and who also had gotten his conviction vacated when Sloane along with Gibbs seemingly proved that he was innocent, but the two later doubted their theory on Hicks's innocence after he was released from prison and showed off for them at the batting cages. He had shown them that he hadn't mattered whether his left or right arm was dominant because he could use both. They were interchangeable for him and that meant he could have killed Lt. O'Connell only the two knew he did it because of the way he showed off. Hicks had wanted NCIS to know that they had him and they let him go.

Hicks got a thrill out of one-upping his opponent and so that's why let Sloane and Gibbs see him as the sociopath that he was, however, Sloane couldn't stay still when it came near her friend Jessica. Jessica had been acting as Hicks's lawyer and Sloane was worried about her. She went to Jessica to warn her about Hicks and how unstable he was and Jessica had ignored her. She thought Sloane was after some form of petty revenge because Hicks got out and so she didn't start to question who she was defending until much later on when she developed questions. Jessica had looked into Hicks's background and she found out that he had shared a cell with Paul Triff. Triff had his own history with NCIS and so they hadn't wanted to reopen that door.

Triff was the same man that had killed several people in McGee's apartment and was himself a sociopath yet Jessica had gone to see Triff right before she died and so Sloane had wanted to know what they talked about. She and McGee went to visit Triff in prison and they tried to talk to him about Jessica. Jessica had been murdered because she found out something about Hicks and so the two were hoping Triff could help with that while Triff, on the other hand, was hoping they could give himself in return. He wasn't going to talk to them without any kind of wining and dining on their part and so McGee decided to call his bluff. He turned to Sloane and said that Triff didn't know anything so they might as well leave and that pushed Triff into giving them a hint.

Triff told them that Hicks was a talker. He told Triff all about how he killed O'Connell and even told him about the others so the NCIS agents had been a little doubtful. They just couldn't believe that Triff knew as much as he was claiming because Hicks couldn't have been that stupid and so Triff said Jessica had doubted him too until he gave her proof. He said that told Jessica about a witness that Hicks kept talking about in prison and how Hicks talked about killing this woman, but there had only been one witness the team knew about and it had been an elderly woman named Mary. Mary had been a witness in Lt. O'Connell's murder and so NCIS didn't understand why Hicks would go after her seeing as he couldn't be tried twice for the same crime. And that had gotten Triff to laugh.

Triff said Hicks didn't need a reason to kill Mary and so the team raced to Mary's side to protect her though by then they had been too late. She had gone missing when her nurse had left the room for a few minutes and witnesses stated they saw her get forced into a vehicle. But the team didn't know where Hicks would have taken her and their resident expert on Hicks had wanted something before he would help any further. He wanted a forty-eight-hour furlough while he helped them work the case and he had also demanded that he stay at his last known residence meaning he wanted to go back to McGee's apartment. McGee hadn't liked the idea and he hadn't wanted to babysit a serial killer yet he did his job and had also gotten rid of any evidence of his family at the apartment.

McGee's wife and kids went to go stay at her mother's and he had his team clean the whole place of any trace of him, but Triff did at least come through. He told them that Hicks left behind evidence of his crime in the van. The same van that NCIS still had in their custody and the one they swore they combed through until again Triff laughed. He laughed at NCIS because they were still thinking like cops when they should have been thinking like Hicks and so the team did as Triff suggested. They went back to the van and they checked inside of the vehicle where they eventually the murder weapon. The weapon that Hicks had used on all of his victims and not just Lt. O'Connell — a pipe that had his victims' blood all over it and just his fingerprints.

That was enough to try Hicks for the other murders and get him sent away for life however they then had one problem. They couldn't find Hicks. Hicks had gotten rid of the bug they tried to plant on him and he had returned Mary without any problems. He hadn't tortured or hit her and had allowed her to use his phone to call for help when he released her, therefore, no one knew what he was going to do next. They couldn't figure out why he hadn't killed Mary when he had the chance because he didn't seem like someone that suddenly grew a conscience and so they went back to their expert. They asked Triff where Hicks might be heading and Triff had had nothing for them. He instead had wanted to talk to McGee like old friends.

Triff had wanted to talk about their fathers. His own father was an absentee parent and he sensed McGee's father was the same though he assured McGee that he had nothing to worry about his own parenting style. He had figured out that McGee had had kids and he told them that all he could do was love them. Triff's own parents hadn't been into bonding and he said that hadn't hurt him. So Triff had been cracking jokes back at McGee's apartment and it was only afterward that they realized he had been giving them clues. He had wanted to talk about fathers because that was part of Hicks's motivation. Hicks went after strong men in authority and he killed them as a way to reassert his control after losing it to his own father.

It had taken some time for Sloane to realize that and that helped her figure out where he was going. He wasn't going on the run because he felt compelled to go after Fornell. Fornell had gotten kidnapped from his home and NCIS was out looking for him when Hicks decided to go to Triff's apartment. Triff figured Hicks would go there to find him and so he had planned on luring Hicks into a trap except McGee hadn't been fast enough to trigger to stop Hicks from shooting at him and so Triff took a bullet for McGee. McGee was like family to him and he appreciated the care that McGee showed his apartment. So the two were apricating each other when Hicks got away and finally tried to make his escape.

Hicks got into the car and was going to make a run for it, but somehow Fornell had gotten out of his truck and had snuck in through the back seat to take on Hicks. The serial killer had been busy driving that he didn't see Fornell until Fornell had his hands around his neck and so that led to a nasty accident. Hicks had crashed the car and had gotten out to fight Fornell when Gibbs snuck behind him — only to taser him. They had wanted to bring in Hicks alive and they did just that.

Summary: Gibbs and the team work to clear the name of retired Marine Sergeant John Ross when cyanide is found in one of the hundreds of care packages he sends to active-duty Marines.

The body of Petty Officer James Sweeney was returned to the States he died of a heart failure, but that hadn't made sense to anyone.

The sailor was twenty-three, had remained active during his deployment, and most importantly he had been medically cleared in the weeks leading to his deployment. So why would someone that was deemed healthy suddenly drop dead from heart failure? There was usually a build-up to such cases and his doctor wouldn't have deemed him fit for deployment if he noticed his heart was under any stress, however, Palmer had double-checked the findings and what he found showed that Sweeney truly did die from heart failure and so he left the rest like the way to Abby. Abby had run the tox screen and she had found traces of a medication that could induce heart failure.

Therefore, someone had wanted Sweeney dead and Abby's best bet was Retired Marine Sgt. John Ross. Ross ran a charity that provided care packages to sailors overseas and each package has a picture of the soldier that personally wrapped it. And Sweeney's package had had a picture of Ross, himself. He did put together packages for the troops and his mother took a medication that was found in Sweeney's system yet Gibbs had had some misgivings about bringing Ross in. He had seen the background information on Ross and had known that Ross was a prisoner of war for over five years when their embassy was attacked in Iran.

Ross was not the type of man that would have liked being imprisoned again and so Gibbs had had Sloane look in on the interrogation though it wasn't much of an interrogation. Gibbs had tried to push Ross about his care packages and had asked him why he would position an active soldier. Except Ross claimed he was innocent and continued to demand to he'd be released. He couldn't stand to be in a room with the doors closed and so eventually he was released just not before Sloane made her assessment. She could see that Ross wasn't ok and she knew that he wasn't treated when he came home like he would have been treated nowadays. And so she was concerned.

Sloane thought Ross was ok and she wanted to check up on him, but she couldn't tell one way or another if he had anything to do with Sweeney's death and so the other agents began asking questions. They went to Sweeney's home on the day of his wake and they talked to his wife Emma. Emma had been her husband's high school sweetheart and she said he had always known that he was going to go into the navy. He would talk about that and even getting married because he knew how he wanted his life to go. And as Emma was talking to the agents, there was a commotion in a different part of the house because Sweeney's drunk uncle had decided to make a scene.

Uncle Bob, who could not remain standing for long, had gone on and on about how Emma was glad his nephew was dead. He said she had never even paid attention to Sweeney until his parents died when they were kids and she found out he had inherited a lot of money. That part was true just Sweeney hadn't inherited the money alone. He had had to share his inheritance with his brother Clyde and it was Clyde that asked Bob to leave. He told his uncle that he was making a scene because Emma had nothing to do with his brother's death and that it would best if he left. So the agents asked Clyde about his dear uncle.

The uncle had said a lot of things and they had needed confirmation, so Clyde told them that his uncle was only bitter that he hadn't inherited anything. He believed Bob wouldn't have gotten in their faces as much if it hadn't been for the money and so the agents had forgotten the whole thing because the others had found out something about Ross. Ross usually took the packages he has to the mail office himself and the package that had been sent to Sweeney hadn't been sent from their office. The lady that works there says she handles all of Ross's packages because he likes to wait until she was free to come forward and so she told the agents about how odd it was.

The postal worker had also double-checked what the computer said and she told them that the package had been dropped off at a blue box however the agents had checked the box's address and he hadn't cleared Ross. They realized that it was near Ross's house meaning that he could have easily have dropped it off while in a rush and so they checked the date on the packages. The date he supposedly dropped off the package had been the same time he was in Chicago at a Marines reunion. Therefore, Ross couldn't have sent the poisoned package to Sweeney and someone had gone to additional lengths to frame.

The only person they could have thought of was the shock jock. There had been a shock jock that had invited Ross to his station under false pretenses and who had then accused Ross of being a government thug who only pretended to be charitable. That had upset Ross and Ross had even angrier when White Dexter claimed he faked being imprisoned yet Dexter hadn't liked Ross storming off because he asked he told his followers that he would prove that Ross couldn't be trusted. And so the team brought in Dexter. Dexter was rude, loud, and obnoxious except he wasn't a killer. He just said things and made up things to bring the followers back.

Then later when someone floated the rumor online about how Ross had poisoned someone, they went back to Dexter and again he was cleared. He hadn't started the rumor and so NCIS checked who did. It turns out it came from the Legion Hall where Ross works and it hadn't been Ross. It had been a volunteer there named Clyde and he had been with his girlfriend Emma. The brother and the wife of the victim have been sleeping together while he was deployed and they were the ones that crafted the plan to kill Sweeney. They did it because Emma wanted out of the marriage and Clyde had wanted to impress his idol Whit Dexter. And so it had nothing to do with the money.

They were just horrible people and unknowingly talking someone into murder had backfired on Dexter. He began losing sponsors and it wasn't going to be long before he lost his show. Though Sloane later conversations with Ross had helped them get through their experiences as prisoners of war. He had allowed her to open up to someone and she had done the same for him. He had also gotten the chance to tell her that he had a daughter that he didn't know about him because her mother had gotten married when he became a prisoner and so Sloane talked him into finally telling his daughter who he was.

She just happened to be the mail lady he always talked to when he was dropping off his packages.

Summary: Gibbs and Ducky see an antique war stick on television that could be the missing murder weapon to a 16-year-old cold case.

Ducky was back in town and his mind was sharp as ever when he saw a murder weapon on sale. It seems he has never missed an episode of "American Pickers". He even watches when he's supposed to be working and so that how come he saw the antique war stick. The War stick dates back to Vikings' time and the reason Ducky had gotten so caught up on it was because he realized it might be a murder weapon. He remembered working a case few years ago that involved a petty officer being bludgeoned by a stick of some sort and it had always puzzled both him and Gibbs that they never found the murder weapon. They knew the victim had been killed by a stick of some sort and so they couldn't understand why anyone would take it with them when they left rather than just wiping down.

The murderer could have easily wiped the murder weapon down or clean it using bleach. They instead took the weapon with them and so Ducky had investigated what the weapon could be. He had found a small wooden spike that had been embedded in the victim's skull and that coupled with the evidence of the victim dying from a blunt force object, had made him realize he was looking for a Vikings War stick and so the team at the time had made a conclusion based on what they knew. They had known at the time that the stick could have belonged to someone from Esteemed Order of the Blue Guard and that was an old fraternity that tended to hoard such items, but they hadn't gotten any new leads at the time and were eventually forced into benching the case.

That is, until now! Both Ducky and Gibbs were watching the show when they saw the weapon and realized how important it could be. So they tracked down the woman that used to own it and they talked to Mrs. Keogh about how she got such a rare find. She told them that she had bought at a flea market a decade ago and that she hadn't remembered the name of the man that sold it to her. Mrs. Keogh said his name could have Earl or something and so she promised to look through the many cards she had collected over the years until she found the guy. In the meantime, the team tracked down the weapon because it had been sold to Mike Wolfe from the show "American Pickers" and they had talked to him about the weapon.

Mike Wolfe had recognized what a find it was when he had bought the war stick and he told them that there were collectors out there that would never have let such a valuable item out of his sights. He was actually talking to the agents about how strange collectors could get when they heard back from Mrs. Keogh and found out it had been Roy Baxter that had sold her the item. Wolfe had recognized the name and had told the team that Baxter worked his way up to becoming antique's dealer. The man had apparently run a shop not far from their location and so after they got the war stick from Wolfe they had proceeded to head over to Baxter's shop. And unfortunately when they got there, they found Baxter bludgeoned to death by the dumpsters.

They believed that whoever had attacked had waited for him to take out the garbage out back and had then jumped him before he even knew what was happening though the fact he had been killed just like Petty Officer Marvin Finn had been had made them question if that was the killer's MO. The person they were looking for had killed the petty officer sixteen years ago and had then gone seemingly underground when they killed Baxter. Baxter therefore had been the key. He must have gotten the murder weapon from the killer and, when they killer found out that Baxter had sold it, they had then killed Baxter to stop him from revealing where he bought the item. So they checked Baxter's security system and all they found was an avid collector.

The collector had bought a gun that belonged to General Patton and hadn't cared about a war stick. He said that unless they could connect it to someone famous that he wouldn't have cared about it and so the team no longer viewed him as a suspect. They just handed over the war stick to Abby and had hoped she would find some answers and she hadn't. Abby couldn't find anything on the weapon and so the person that had ended up helping them was Kasie Hines. Hines was the Graduate Assistant that was helping Ducky with his book and she had been hanging around while the others investigated the case. And when she found out about this war stick, she had asked her friends to help her research the item. Her friends got back to her when they found something interesting.

Hines's friends told her that a whole host of items from the Esteemed Order of the Blue Guard had been on display at the museum until eventually they were placed in storage and amongst the items that had been listed was a one-of-a-kind war stick. The stick was even listed as still being in storage and so a couple of agents went over there to check out this storage facility. They had noticed that everything had appeared to be undisturbed and so they hadn't noticed anything wrong until they opened the crate holding allegedly holding the war stick. The war stick had been gone from crate and the agents had seen blood splatter. The blood was tested and it had belonged to their petty officer, so they found the initial crime scene.

The petty officer had been killed in the crate and that hadn't made any sense to the team because the guy had supposedly been out having a beer with his best friend Bill Lester. Lester however had later admitted that he lied when he said they had been out to drinks because his friend had taken his place on duty with driving some antiques from the Naval Museum. Lester on the other hand had been having an affair with his Commanding Officer's wife and so that's why he had lied that night. He said he hadn't made a connection between the Naval Museum and his friend's death because his friend had been found twenty miles away in a bad neighbourhood. If he had known differently, he said he would have come forward and so the team were able to connect their victim to the scene.

What they couldn't figure out was who killed them and so they looked into everyone that had been involved with the antiques' removal. That's how they learned that the billionaire they had spoken to, Clarence Wyatt, had lied to them. He said he had bought General Patton's gun and it turns out the gun hadn't belonged to Patton. It had merely been a gun from WWII and so he had made fifteen thousand dollars for it because that had been his way of bribing Baxter. Baxter had agreed to sale therefore he had been willing to accept the bribe and so the only thing that had changed had been Wyatt. Wyatt hadn't been sure of Baxter and that's why he later killed. And he killed him because sixteen years ago he had killed the petty officer.

Wyatt hadn't made his money by then and so he had worked a driver. He drove the antiques to the new museum and had accidentally left behind his DNA at the crime scene in the crate because he stole an item. The item was known to be a good luck totem and so that's why Wyatt had held onto it for so long, but he had had to kill the petty officer to get the thing and had thought he was so smart when he dumped Flynn's body in a bad neighbourhood because no one would suspected a seemingly upstanding citizen. Only this case they had and connecting him to the scene of the crime had forced him to make a full confession.

Summary: The headquarters are evacuated when the team finds a body and bomb materials on the roof of the squad room.

Gibbs and the team are sitting at their desks talking when a body lands on their roof. After getting over the shock, Gibbs and the others head to the roof. He is an AC repairman. Torres calls them over to the other side of the roof. He has a chair with an umbrella set up. It is a secret break room and Torres wants to know who set it all up.

In the office, McGee reports to Gibbs. The company the man supposedly worked for is fake and doesn't exist and neither does the identity of the man.

Eleanor comes to see Abby whose give her the latest. The man is an intruder who was carrying a pipe bomb in his toolbox. He accidentally set it off and killed himself.

Leon wants everyone out. He and his team will stay behind and look around. Gibbs refuses to leave. Leon gives him 30 minutes.

Eleanor is talking to Jimmy in the lab when the dead guy's identification comes back and he has a record.

Gibbs and Torres take a look around. They discover that the dead guy isn't alone. Meanwhile, Eleanor and Jimmy are still in the lab when the door shuts and locks. The lights go out. McGee and Leon also experience a failure with the system. The lights go out. Leon tells everyone they need to get out. They too are locked in. In the lab, Abby comes face to face with the other intruder. He has a gun.

McGee points out to Leon that whoever hit the power and shut the system is inside. Cell phone frequency has also been shut down. Outside, Reeves wants in but no-one will let him.

Torres and Gibbs sneak around in the dark. They see an intruder with a gun. Torres heads back to his desk to get his gun.

Torres dances through the dark office dressed like the cleaning man. Torres continues to play with them until the intruder holding Abby comes to see them both and looks at Torres' desk. He isn't a cleaning man.

McGee taps into the system. The intruders must be talking to one another. He locates the source. It's an intruder in the room with him, Leon and Sloane. Sloane is quick to take the female intruder down.

Reeves wants to bust in there asap, but the authorities outside won't let him. The lead intruder Burke reveals that he is there to destroy evidence. Torres notices his military tattoos and tells him to suck it. He tells him he is no longer loyal.

Burke lights the evidence on fire. Meanwhile, Gibbs pulls a fast one on the less intelligent intruder. He hits him with a bat and knocks him out. He radios to the outside and is just about to grab his gun when Burke comes out of nowhere. He aims his gun at Gibbs.

Sloane, Leon, and McGee try to break down their intruder who has been working for NCIS. Sloane asks her why she is doing this. Leslie tells them they offered her $75k. She didn't know all of this was going to happen. Meanwhile, Eleanor tries to make her own explosive to break the window and free her and Jimmy.

Burke follows Gibbs who is supposed to show him how to get out. Meanwhile, Torres and DiNozzo try to break free from their cuffs while the fire still burns from Burke.

Sloan and the team finally get the computer system up and running. They get free. On the roof, Gibbs struggles with Burke. Gibbs runs while Burke tries to shoot him. They come to a stop. Leon shoots up through the ceiling, taking out Burke who falls through and onto a desk to his death.

DiNozzo finds Abby. She was sleeping in the morgue. They think she is dead. She wakes with a smile. Meanwhile, Eleanor's bomb goes off. She and Jimmy break free. The explosion makes Leon run to them.

The next day, Torres cannot believe Leslie was part of it all. She was always so nice to him. DiNozzo is taking them all out for drinks tonight. While they talk, Gibbs kicks back on the roof in his chair.

Summary: Gibbs is granted protective custody of a 10-year-old orphaned refugee when an NCIS case reveals she is the target of a violent gang.

The team was called down to a records store where they came across a victim that wasn't exactly one of theirs. The team tended to get called to a scene when a member of the armed services was either injured or murdered, but there was something off about their latest victim because Lance Corporal Oliver Harris wasn't who he said he was. He had a military ID that could grant him access to any military base in the world and strangely the military had no record of him. If he was who he said he was then there would have been a record and so the team knew their guy's ID was a fake. They had looked into it and they found several blank ID cards at the store. The store owner who also happened to be a second victim had seemingly been using his store to help a gang create fake military IDs and the team knew they had to figure out this gang's purpose.

The gang as it turns out was La Vida Mala. They started out as a local crew that slowly grew to ten thousand members over fifteen states and they were dangerous. The gang usually took on assassination jobs and so everyone believed the gang could be targeting someone in the military which was why they needed fake IDs however they needed Abby to help trace the fakes that might already be out there and so Bishop had had to make that request even when she didn't want to. She was sort of avoiding Abby because she had blown up Abby's lab and so she was afraid of what Abby might do if she ever found out what Abby did and unfortunately no one wanted to help her. The others refused to lie to Abby and even Jimmy had questioned helping Bishop.

They were all going to leave Bishop to fend for herself and so Bishop did her best to not give anything away. She later talked to Abby about the fake IDs they were investigating and Abby had found something. Abby found a sergeant that wasn't really a sergeant. Sgt Ruiz Rico didn't exist on paper and for some reason he had allowed onto a military base. The team had gone to the base hoping to catch their fake sergeant and it turns out they had just missed him. He had been hanging around the cafeteria and had been noticed by the kids. The kids on the military base were all refugees whose had been left as unaccompanied minors and so they live on the base because housing was so scarce.

The kids mostly went to school and hung out as best they could, but they noticed sergeant because he had been taking pictures and so the team found out what he was taking pictures of. He had been taking pictures of one of the kids. It was a girl by the name of Elena and, by time authorities found her, she had been strapped to her mother who had drowned for hours. The girl was so traumatized that it took some time before she could open up and even then she didn't like strangers. She would shy away from them and so it came as a surprise when Elena easily warmed up to Gibbs when he engaged her in a conversation. He and the others were trying to find out why a gang like La Vida Mala would target a child and they decided to start by talking to Elena.

Elena had told the team about her family and that her mother taught her English because she wanted them to come to the states for a better life. What Elena hadn't told them was anything about La Vida Mala. The little girl didn't know why the gang was after her and so the team had to go looking into the gang. They found out the east coast leader was Javier Martinez and that he had a place off the grid, so the team went to check it out and ran across a guard dog. The guy that was guarding the place had been doing his best to stop the federal agents from finding the other body and he failed. The team found it and they brought in Martinez to question him over his involvement only he denied all knowledge of that as well as other things.

The team also learned that the same day the fake sergeant was on the base, there was a robbery. Someone stole several rocket launchers and so the team knew the gang was collecting weapons though they didn't know why and Javier wasn't talking. He practically dared the team to find something to pin on him and so Sloane believed Elena knew something even if the little girl wasn't sure if she knew something. Elena had heard about the gang because it was a problem in her country and so Sloane asked Elena to tell her everything about this gang. The gang it seems had been giving out ice cream to kids to the villages and wherever they went, violence was soon to follow.

Elena was too young to make the connection and so Sloane told the team the rest. She told the team that the gang was selling stolen weapons to foreign countries and that they were getting the weapons out of the country by using an ice cream company. The company would then giveaway free ice cream that the kids would notice and violence would follow which was what the adults noticed. So the team moved on the ice cream company that was stationed not far from where the weapons were stolen and they found the weapons in the dry ice except they had all been disarmed. Someone had made sure the weapons that were stolen could never be used and so Abby traced the finger prints back to "Sgt Rico".

It turns out Rico had used the gang to get close to Elena and had then betrayed the gang when he found out what they were really doing, so the team later learned their Sgt Rico was actually Elena's father. Her parents had split up when she was really young (which was why she didn't remember it) and her father had needed a fake ID to see her. He was just going to stop at checking up on her, but then he disabled the guns and Martinez put out a hit on him as well as Elena. That was why the little girl was targeted and so her father agreed to testify against Martinez in exchange for protection.

And while Vance wasn't sure what kind of deal the family would get, he was going to at least try to get them the necessary paper work to stay in the country because they all knew what would happen if they were deported.

Guest Stars: Delon de Metz (Petty Officer Thomas Billings), Sara Fletcher (Louise Cabrisio), Daniel Steven Gonzalez (Raphael Ruiz), Matthew Jones (Navy Commander Rick Odwalla), Marilee Talkington (Annie Barth)
Production Code: 15020
Summary: NCIS searches for a petty officer suspected of assault who escapes when the sheriff transporting him crashes into a lake. Also, Torres works closely with Annie Barth, a key blind witness who heard vital evidence needed to solve the case.

The episode kicks off in the wee hours when Sheriff Greg Pearson, escorting a suspect to jail, pursues a possible drunken driver and ends up plowing into the lake.

He swims to safety, but his passenger isn't able to escape... or is he?

Yeah, he totally is. When officials pull the car from the water, they discover that Thomas Billings, under arrest for assault, managed to kick out the window.

Two siblings were camping nearby, and when Torres attempts to question the woman, Annie Barth, he gets immediately flustered when he realizes she's blind. She's bemused by his discomfort.

She reports that she only heard one person emerge from the water, and a man in a boat nearby called out to see if everyone was fine but quickly motored away.

Billings' CO tells Bishop that he was a disorderly sailor and their No. 1 suspect in the theft of a passel of smoke grenades and flare guns from the armory. They were about to call NCIS when Sheriff Pearson came a-knockin' and took the problem off their hands.

NCIS also has Billings' waterlogged cellphone and audio of him in the back of the squad car asking Pearson, "Is this about Randall Peters?" Confusingly, though, that's not the name of the person he's accused of beating.

Reeves and McGee find Billings' fiancée, Louise Cabrisio, at her father's pharmacy, where she tearfully announces that Billings just called from his apartment to break up with her. Torres is dispatched, and when he arrives, he finds Billings gone, but muddy footprints on the bedding lead him to a can light in the ceiling, where Billings has stashed $26,460 in cash.

Louise comes in for questioning accompanied, at her father's suggestion, by the family's comically inept attorney, Webber Silk. (When Silk offers Sloane his card, he's holding it upside down.)

Louise claims to have no idea about the money and says Randall Peters is Billings' business partner. She never met him but says Billings told her last week would be their final meeting. Silk tries to stop Louise from giving Sloane the password for Billings' phone, but the one she gives them doesn't work on it anyway.

This frustrates Abby and company, particularly when a calendar alert pops up to remind Billings of the "Randall Peters pickup."

So NCIS has mysterious money but no phone code and no location for the drunken driver, the witness in the boat, Randall Peters, or even Billings' alleged assault victim, who lacks a permanent address. What they do have is a call from Annie, the woman camping near the accident scene, with the promise of useful information.

Torres is doubtful that Annie can help them, being blind and all, but he arrives at her apartment to find that she's got voice-activated lights and a law degree and can hang her own Braille map of the U.S. by placing a marble on top of the frame to tell her it's level. (Stealing that DIY tip, thanks!) Her no-nonsense manner leaves him awkward and impressed and awkwardly impressed.

When they arrive at the camp site, she takes Torres' arm and explains that her condition is degenerative and hereditary, and it's not that her other senses have gotten stronger, but she does pay more attention to them. What she wants to tell him is about a noise — specifically, the tha-thunk every time a car runs over a grate on the road nearby. When the accident happened, she only heard one tha-thunk when Pearson's car passed over it. So where was the tha-thunk from the alleged drunk driver?

Gibbs and Bishop ask Pearson this question, and he angrily accuses them of believing "Helen Keller" over him. Gibbs suggests that faking a car accident is a great way to kill somebody locked in the back of your vehicle, and then their interrogation is interrupted when a bullet flies through the window and kills Pearson.

Palmer's autopsy reveals that the bullet doesn't match Billings' Glock, and he sends Abby a sample of the dark substance on Pearson's pant leg.

Meanwhile, Billings' alleged victim surfaces. Mr. Nordstrom, sporting a battered face, affirms the details on Billings' arrest report — the details that Pearson wrote. But he can't identify Billings from a photo lineup.

Sloane notes that Nordstrom has a history of possession arrests. That, combined with Pearson's four excessive force complaints, leads her to hypothesize that Pearson agreed not to arrest Nordstrom if he let himself be beaten up and then to accuse Billings of it.

The reason Pearson wanted to kill Billings becomes clear when the substance on the sheriff's pants turns out to be red phosphorous, which is found in flare guns, smoke grenades... and meth.

Abby uses hot wax, Billings' on-file thumbprint, and one of Palmer's digits to unlock Billings' phone, which reveals Randall Peters' address: a sketchy warehouse where Billings has been bleaching all evidence of the meth lab that used to be housed there.

More pieces fall into place when they realize Randall Peters was a code name for red phosphorous, used in WWII smoke screens and sometimes known as Willie Pete. It's also the only ingredient of the nine needed to make meth that isn't readily available to pharmacists. And gee, are any pharmacists connected to this week's case?

McGee and Bishop suggest Billings was the supplier, Pearson was protection, and Louise's dad was the cook. And when Billings' CO confronted him about the thefts, Billings told his team that their supply had dried up, and the next thing he knew, he was in the bottom of the lake.

But when Annie arrives to serve as an ear witness, she doesn't identify Fred Cabrisio as the man in the boat when she listens to a lineup say, "Hey, are you alright?"

As Torres escorts Annie home, she explains that she helps Congress draft bills, resolutions, and motions, which impresses Torres. Meanwhile, she's impressed by his biceps, insisting, "I've held lots of arms. Yours are more than decent." Flirt game on point, girl! Torres is leaps and bounds more comfortable around her by now and is even able to say, "See you around" without flinching at the colloquialism.

At the pharmacy, Louise, wearing a wire, confronts her father about his over-ordering of pseudoephedrine, that ever-popular meth ingredient, and gets him to admit to cooking meth and trying to have her fiancé killed. He tells her he was afraid that Billings would "rat the three of us out." But who's the third man?

Annie finds this out when she answers her door assuming it's Torres, and Webber Silk lunges at her! She thinks fast and takes a cue from the 1967 thriller Wait Until Dark, using voice command to plunge her apartment into darkness to give herself an advantage. Silk busts out his phone flashlight, which Audrey Hepburn's character totally didn't have to contend with 50 years ago. Although Annie tosses coffee at him, Silk wrestles her to the ground and starts choking her. Thankfully, Torres arrives in time to save the day.

The case wrapped up, Annie takes Torres out for a celebratory meal, where they bump into Bishop and McGee. Bishop invites them to join their table, but McGee intervenes, and we close on a displeased Bishop watching Torres have a lovely meal with a lovely lady.

Guest Stars: Skye P. Marshall (Sara Carter), Dedan Donovan (Jax Wesley), Briana Lane (Diane Boyle), Darren Dupree Washington (Security Guard), Shamori Washington (Theo Carter)
Production Code: 15021
Summary: Sara Carter begs Gibbs to investigate her mother's murder as she believes the local authorities convicted the wrong man. Also, Abby is awarded a dinner reservation for two to a brand-new five-star restaurant in an igloo and has to decide which coworker deserves to go with her.

Gibbs was stopped on his way to work because of an altercation at the front gate. The "altercation" as it was called was actually assaulted. A young woman came to the building demanding that her mother's death is investigated by NCIS and she refused to leave when the guards asked her to file her motion through the proper channels. They wanted her to speak with someone on the phone and then be happy with whatever answer those people gave her, but Sara Carter said she was tired of being given the runaround and that her mother deserved better. Her mother was Chief Petty Officer Mae Carter and she had been killed in a robbery gone bad. There weren't any suspects and there weren't even any witnesses. And so a year passes without anyone getting arrested or held accountable for what happened to Carter, and her daughter Sara ended up punching a guard at the front gate to NCIS because she said her mother deserved better.

The guards later took Sara into custody and she probably would have been charged with assault for what she did if her detainment hadn't made the news. Someone had recorded the whole thing and it leads to a media firestorm with everyone wanting an answer to why her mother's case wasn't investigated. It hadn't mattered that Carter was retired or that her case was being handled by Virginia police because Sara was clearly desperate and the Navy was supposed to look after its own whether they were retired or not, so Gibbs decided to speak with Sara to hear her story from the source. She said that her mother did several tours in service of her country and that Sara even joined the armed services because of her mother who she knew for a fact deserved better than what she got.

Sara, however, was just a little too hot-headed. She kept saying that the investigation had been a bust and that the detective hadn't known what he was doing only she failed to mention all that he did find. The team later spoke with Detective Olson and he said that he looked into everything. He looked into a man named Robert Flynn who had gotten picked up for robbery a few houses down and the detective hadn't believed Robert was his guy. He said Robert had been honest when he said he wanted to go for valuables and that nothing had been stolen from Mae's home. The house had simply been ransacked and so that made the detective think about what else Robert told him. Robert said he heard two women fighting from the Carter household and the detective verified this with two of the neighbors.

The neighbors all remember Carter fighting with her daughter Sara. Sara hadn't owned up to that and she told the detective that she couldn't remember what they were fighting about. Which both the detective and the team had a hard time believing. They knew that Sara's fighting with her mother was probably the last conversation she had with the older woman and so there was no way she could have forgotten it. So the team looked into what else Sara could have conveniently forgotten and they found out that Sara had been in a lot of debt. She had been drowning in credit card bills and all that disappeared the same time that her mother died. And so the team went looking for Sara because they had questions. They went to her listed address and they hadn't found her there.

They went on to find her in an alleyway because it seems she had been living in her car with her son for the past few months. Sara used to live with her mother at her mother's house and that house went into foreclosure following Mae Carter's death, which was why Sara and her son Theo have been living out of her car. The two were found out when Bishop and Reeves found them and Reeves had seen such a situation before. He worked with a charity that helps homeless vets find housing and so he had tried to help Sara when he learned about her situation. Reeves had offered to put Sara in contact with people that could help and she turned him down because she said she wasn't homeless. Sara said that she was waiting for her mother's murder to be solved before she left town to go live with an aunt in Texas and so Reeves checked. He found out that there was an aunt and that instead, Sara's pride was stopping her from getting help.

Sara, it seems had suffered from brain damage from an explosion when she was overseas and so her condition severely limits her. She couldn't hold down a job for long and that's how she came to be in such much debt. Sara had even talked about her last conversation with her mother because they were right and she had remembered. She remembered arguing with her mother because Carter had used her life savings to pay off the debts and Sara hadn't wanted her to do it. And so the team ruled out Sara in her mother's death. They then looked into what else could there have been and what they found was that Carter had been looking into packages. She had gotten a list of several packages from a company called Global Courier and the team learned which packages she was looking for because they found a list that had imprinted itself on the inside of Carter's pocket.

So after they realized what it was, they tracked down where the packages were being mailed to and they found out that there was a man named Jax Wesly. He sold prescription drugs and, while he later died when he ran out in front of a truck, the team did find the murder weapon in his possessions. Jax had been selling drugs and the team knew that Carter had had a problem, so they questioned if she could have been killed over a bad drug deal and her daughter Sara said that was impossible. Sara said her mother had gotten clean and it wasn't until later that she admitted that she had gotten a prescription that went missing. Sara said her mother told her that they must have gotten dropped off somewhere else and that she believed it because she hadn't thought her mother would steal her pills.

Sara had beaten herself up for believing her mom and the truth was Mae Carter hadn't taken those pills. She had called the company when the medication wasn't dropped off on time and they gave her a list of packages that had gone missing lately, so Carter investigated what could have happened and learned that the man that owned the shipping company had been stealing packages in order to supply the drug dealer. And so the two worked together to kill Carter because she had been investigating them and had wanted to take them down!

Mae Carter had merely wanted to take her daughter's pain away and she had gotten killed for it. After she heard that, Sara put her pride to the side and decided to do what was best for her son Theo even if it meant she had to accept help.

Reeves had glad to help her and he had gone out with Abby afterward because the two wanted to enjoy this trendy restaurant they heard about, but they had gotten mugged on their way there and Abby had asked the mugger if she could help him because that's just the kind of woman she is. And the robber hadn't liked that because he thought Abby was trying to tell him that she was better than him. And so the last thing that happened on tonight's all-new episode was the mugger turning his gun on Abby and firing...

Summary: When evidence reveals an NCIS team member is a hitman's latest target, the team must search through old case files to determine who is seeking vengeance.

The team suffered a significant loss when two of their friends got caught up in a mugging gone bad. The two that had gotten hurt had been Clay and Abby. Abby had won a dinner for two at this exclusive restaurant and she invited Clay to be her plus one because she could see that he needed a night out. Clay tended to take care of everyone and so Abby had wanted to look after him for a change. She invited him to dinner and they were both so excited about it that it hadn't seemed like a big thing when a man came towards them asking for change. They figured he must have been down on his luck and had wanted to help. Abby had said "sure" about the change and had had her head turned away while she got him the money when the homeless man pulled a gun on them. He hadn't wanted just her change.

The homeless man had demanded all of their valuables. Clay hadn't hesitated when he took off his watch and handed it over without a problem. Clay had also kept quiet while he did and Abby wasn't like that. She handed over her handbag and had told her mugger that she had wanted to help him. Abby thought she could help this man make a better life for himself and all she was anger him. He hadn't liked it when Abby said she could help because he accused her of looking down on him and believing she was better than him. The mugger had gotten so agitated that he demanded Abby repeat her statement even as Clay moved Abby behind him and, so when the mugger got what he wanted, he started shooting.

Clay had tried to protect Abby and had gotten killed for it. She, on the other hand, had also suffered a gunshot wound and had been rushed to the hospital in time. The doctors were able to take out the bullet and Abby eventually woke up. The first thing she did upon waking was asked about Clay and so McGee decided to fill her in on everything. He told her that Clay died and he mentioned what else the team found. They had been all hands on deck when they heard about their friends and finding the shooter had been the easy part. He had gotten some DNA on Clay when Clay fought with him over the gun and therefore the team knew that former Marine Kent Marshall had been responsible for Clay's death. And that the mugging had actually been a hit job.

The team found Marshall dead at his apartment. His throat had been slit and whoever killed him hadn't bothered hiding the evidence of why they killed him. Marshall had had a dossier on Abby and it told him everything about her. From the route she took to work and what she likes. Abby later used her own expertise to go through everything she had on file and she found out that the dinner for two deal had actually been fake. She learned that someone hacked into the restaurant's database to send her an email and that they had even hacked into the restaurant's reservation services just to cover their tracks, so Sloane did a profile for their culprit. She said whoever did was smart, calculating, well-connected, and could carry a grudge.

This person went out of their way to ensure Abby was killed. They must have staged a mugging to throw off whoever turned out to be her plus one and so Abby blamed herself for what happened to Clay. She thought she got him killed and had wanted to do something about it. Abby used the excuse of Rule #45 to lock up Torres in her coffin and then she went after the man that tried to kill her. The team found out it had been that Sgt. Robert King. King had black site connections and was a bio-terrorist. Abby had taken him down years ago and he was supposed to be in prison yet Gibbs and Bishop had gone to the prison and had found someone else in his cell. King had apparently threatened to kill a guard's grandchildren to get the man to take his place and then he went free.

King had Marshall go after Abby and Clay had died to try to protect her. That meant it wouldn't have mattered what she said because things would always have ended that way! Abby realized that and she later tracked down King to a café. He had been waiting for his flight out of the country and she had gone right up to him unafraid. Abby had let him talk and tell him how smart he was when the truth was she was keeping him busy while she slipped something into his coffee. She then waited until he drank the last drop and that's when she told him that she slipped him some cyanide. Abby claimed everyone had a breaking point and that she reached hers, so she told him she'd give him something to cure him if he confessed.

Abby, however, hadn't really given him cyanide. She gave him caffeine pills that gave him the same symptoms as cyanide at first and so she didn't come clean until she got her confession. Abby used Rule #45 because that was one that said: "clean up your own mess". She had wanted to get justice for Clay and she got that. Especially, when NCIS arrested King and sent him back to prison. So Abby thought long and hard about her life at NCIS before she ultimately decided now was the time to quit. She had lost too many on the job and she wanted to spend the rest of her life setting up a charity in Clay's honor. It had been his dream to one day do that for his mother and Abby wanted to carry it out for him.

So Abby said goodbye to her longtime friends and she had tried to things a little easier for herself by writing Gibbs a letter.

Gibbs had been like a parent to her and so she hadn't been able to say goodbye, but she wrote her letter and was there at his window to wave to him goodbye.

Summary: While Gibbs attends the memorial service for a friend who was lost at sea, he discovers that the deceased, Navy Captain Phillip Brooks, has been hiding in a fallout shelter after his boat was attacked and he swam to shore.

Gibbs attended the memorial service of another friend . He lost his good friend Captain Phillip Brooks who was lost at sea during a weekend excursion. The coastguard never found Phillip's body and so Gibbs had gone to the funeral with a heavy heart. He thought that they would have to bury an empty casket and hadn't realized how hard he was taking things until Phillip's widow asked him for a favor. She hadn't been able to bring herself to go through her husband's workshop and had asked Gibbs to take her husband's old tools. Phillip and Gibbs used to work together on their boat and Marcy said her husband would have liked it if his tools went to Gibbs. And so Gibbs accepted the tools.

Gibbs later went down into the basement to take a look at the tools and, while he had been looking around, he saw a hidden door disguised in the workshop. He hadn't known what it was and had gone in there expecting to find some hidden project, but what he found was his good friend Phillip. Phillip was alive and well. He has apparently been hiding out in his basement because someone had tried to kill him. Phillip told Gibbs about being out the boat and how right as he was about turn around there came another boat. This other boat tried to ram into him and he could have thought it was an accident except someone else tried to shoot at him. Phillip said that's when he realized some was trying to kill him.

Phillip was able to survive the ordeal even if he couldn't save the boat and he said he's been in hiding ever since. He had thought the situation would have been cleared up early on and so he hadn't known that his memorial was going on upstairs. Phillip also didn't know that it had been six days since everyone including the coastguard wrote him off for dead and so Gibbs eventually became frustrated. He asked Phillip why he hadn't come to him and Phillip said he did. He called NCIS and spoke to a guy with a British accent. He was talking about recently departed Reeves and so Gibbs figured out why he hadn't gotten the message. It probably came right before Reeves was murdered or in the chaos of that day, Reeves could have simply forgotten.

Either way, Gibbs promised Phillip that he would help and so he convinced everyone to go along with pretending Phillip really was dead. Director Vance had had a problem with faking a naval officer's death and had only gone along with it because Gibbs said there was no other way to keep Phillip alive. Phillip was so afraid that someone would target him again that he hadn't even talked Marcy the truth and so Gibbs used Torres to distract Marcy. Marcy had talked to him for a while about she's slowly trying to adapt to a life without her husband and the team later thought they had a possible answer for why she was doing her best to adjust. They had collected Phillip's laptop from his home when they brought him to a safe house and they found several pictures on the computer.

The pictures were of Phillip and another woman in various as well as scantily clad positions. Gibbs had taken one look at those photos and said they could be motive. Afterward, he confronted Phillip and asked him about the photos though Phillip claimed the photos were a fake. He said that several months back he had gotten sent a bunch of fake photos and a demand for two hundred thousand dollars. Phillip hadn't paid and chose to go to the police. The police said that it could be another internet scam and had warned Phillip that he should tell his wife about them if they were really faking because that way the photos couldn't be used against him. And that's what Phillip did, he went home and told Marcy everything.

Phillip definitely hadn't acted like he had something to hide and he hadn't hidden the fact that he genuinely did know the woman in the photos. He said she was a good friend of his and a couple of agents had gone to speak to her. Antonia Morello had a store restoring old typewriters and she was the only one in business in the strip mall that Phillip owned. She had actually thought the agents were the same investors as before and had taken a tire iron to their car. Antonia later apologized when she realized she was mistaken and she reiterated what Phillip said. They were just friends and she viewed him as a grandfather because he was old enough to be one to her. And so Antonia believed those investors must have had enough.

A few investors wanted to tear down the strip mall and put an apartment complex in its place. The only thing stopping that had been Phillip's stubbornness. He had liked Antonia's father and was going to allow her to keep her show because he rather rent it to her than sell out a mom and pop shop. So NCIS checked with the investors and they found one of them was having money troubles. He was having so many troubles that he tried to kill Phil to get his hands on the land and so the team got evidence to prove this. They used their new forensics analyst, Kasie Hines to get financial records and connect him to someone in Phillip's life. Phillip's eventually told his wife that he was alive and she had been so upset with him that she refused to talk to him. And had only talked to her boyfriend.

Marcy would later claim she had no idea that the man she'd been seeing had tried to kill her husband, but the evidence was against her because she had warned him when she found out her husband was still alive and so the both of them were arrested for attempted murder.

They were also looking at charges of actual murder because the two may have played part in the coastguard agent's death.

The agent had been looking into what happened to Phillip's boat and she could have been killed to end her investigation.

Summary: Sloane is adamant that a man who held her hostage and tortured her years ago in Afghanistan, and was believed to have been killed following her rescue, is alive and in D.C., leading Vance and Gibbs to fear she is willing to risk everything to destroy this man.

Someone claimed a bomb was aboard a Navy destroyer. They didn't see how they knew about this bomb or even where on such a large vessel could this bomb be however they made a claim and so NCIS had to investigate it. Gibbs had asked the others to go to the ship in his place. He said he had to do something first and the fact that case was taking second place with him hadn't sounded like the Gibbs they all knew. The others started to talk amongst themselves and they did their best to figure out he could be doing. They went over everything that could have happened with no one of them coming even close to where Gibbs ran off to. Gibbs, as it turns out, went to his family's grave.

Gibbs never missed his late wife Shannon's birthday. He brought flowers to her grave and had stuck around for a while, but in that time his team had done well for themselves. They found out the threat was announced when someone left a message on a bathroom mirror and so right away that states someone with access left the ship. Meaning it had to be one of the crew. The XO couldn't see why someone would be left behind a message like that and he also had a hard time comprehending the message when there wasn't a bomb. It had been a hoax! A hoax that wouldn't make sense to seasoned to navy personnel and so they had gone to Sloane. Sloane said someone could have used a fake bomb threat as an excuse to stay on at the port longer.

It's hard on serving men and women to leave behind their families to spend months at sea. Sloane said someone might have had an especially hard time with the latest leave and so the team looked into it. They found out two had been denied additional leave and were bringing them in to question them yet before they questioned a couple of people with grudges, Gibbs came back. He acted like nothing happened and had wanted to get on with the investigation. Gibbs found out what they learned and had wanted to bring both sailors that were turned down. One was a man and he was questioned first because Torres said a woman wouldn't call in a bomb threat. And so they talked to the young man who as it turns out was glad that he didn't get leave.

The sailor had found out his fiancée slept with his best friend and had wanted to try to win her back though he said if he had gotten leave then he would have probably have killed the best friend. So it was a good thing he didn't get leave! The other suspect was a woman who wanted to stay behind because her mother was fighting ovarian cancer and it turns out she hadn't been bitter either. She said her mother called the Admiral to make sure she didn't get leave. The mom knew her daughter has always wanted to be in the navy and hadn't wanted her disease to stop her child from finally leaving out her dream. The sailor understood what her mother did for her and so she had her mom promise to keep fighting while she was away.

Both of these people had no reason to be angry. They saw the sense in the end and had realized that staying on the ship was what's best for them. Therefore, NCIS was looking for someone else. They were back to the drawing board in figuring out why someone staged a hoax and were running out of options when they found out about Sloane. Sloane had been set up on a date by McGee and Delilah and she had been interested in the man they chose for her, but during the date, she overheard someone that sounded a lot like a man called "Masahun". Masahun was a terrorist that tortured Sloane and she had been the only one that walked away whole out of her squad. And while its been several years, Sloane never forgot the voice.

Sloane tried to heal from the torture and the only thing that allowed her to put her ordeal behind her had been when she learned Masahun was dead. He had allegedly been killed during a drone strike several years ago and so there should be no reason why Sloane should hear his voice again. She found the man that was talked and had known instantly that he was Masahun, however, she didn't call for backup or even told her date what was happening when she suddenly went at the man she knew to be her torturer. Sloane went at him and he got away when people in the restaurant restrained her. She was later arrested and had called Vance who bailed her out when she told him what happened.

Vance had thought maybe Sloane had confused the man she attacked with Masahun and still looked into the matter because he had wanted to put her at ease. He had McGee get footage from the restaurant and also had Kasie run facial recognition. Kasie found out the man Sloane attacked had been Nigel Hakim. Hakim was staying at the Saudi Arabian embassy and no surprise he hadn't wanted to talk or come in. He merely complied because he went to NCIS with a Deputy Ambassador from the UK. Hakim was a British citizen and he won a lot of friends by raising millions of refugees, so he hadn't been that concerned when went to Vance's office. He knew he had the firepower and had claimed he didn't know why Agent Sloane had attacked him.

Sloane filled him on the why and she had asked him to say "infidels". She wanted the confirmation that he was who he said he was and he refused to say those words. He actually got up and walking away when Sloane apologized. She said she was still a little messed up and had wanted to shake his hand because it was the only way to get close to him. Sloane remembered Masahun's cologne and so she felt vindicated when he was still spraying it on. She had told Vance that was proof and there had been nothing he could do about it because Hakim left with the Deputy Ambassador. And so Sloane was venting when Gibbs saw her, he instantly saw there was something wrong and got her to confess to everything.

Gibbs then went to Vance because Vance should know that Sloane wasn't going to let the matter drop. She would get after Hakim and Vance hadn't wanted her to risk her own career by doing so. He had been part of the rescue team that got her out when her platoon was captured and there had been one other person that survived. It had been a man so messed up that never walked again or regain his full faculties. But Vance had recorded the conversation with Hakim and had played it for the injured soldier. It had been a few years for him and he too identified the voice as Masahun which had been enough for Vance. Vance contacted the British embassy to say that Hakim had been properly identified as a terrorist and they still thought he was lying.

They thought he was feeding into Sloane's paranoia and so they didn't mind sharing that Hakim had booked a private plane out of the country yet Vance asked Gibbs to get to Hakim before Sloane did. Sloane disappeared with her gun and so everyone met at the airport where they hoped they caught Hakim in time. And, unfortunately, they missed him. Hakim had booked two charter flights to throw everyone off, so he already left the country and sadly he hadn't been alone. Hakim kidnapped Director Vance once he found out it had been Vance that killed several of his "brothers" when they raided the compound.

Summary: A month after Vance's kidnapping, Gibbs is assigned as acting director while the team searches his whereabouts.

Sloane had proven to be right about Nigel Hakim. He was in the fact a well-known terrorist known as Mashaun. Hakim managed to hide his real identity so well by pretending to be a philanthropist that was only acting out of the kindness out of his heart but the truth was he was a terrorist. He never allowed anyone to see his full face when he was "interrogating" people and so Sloane was only able to recognize him because of his voice. His voice was something she could never forget and that's why she knew she couldn't be wrong when she tried to warn the world that he was Mashaun. Sloane tried to tell her government and even his. They all thought she was coming undone and no one took her seriously.

The one person that had been willing to at least look into it had been Director Vance. Vance had rescued Sloane from Mashaun's compound and he thought he had killed the terrorist however he was willing to investigate to at least know for sure and so that's why he hadn't hidden the part that he played. He let Hakim know that he had raided the building that killed some many of Hakim's family members and so Hakim decided to retaliate. He waited until he had been allowed to return to Europe and used that opportunity to escape the country with something valuable — Director Vance, himself. The man, of course, put up a fight and so Hakim decided to use Vance's daughter against him. He told the other man that he would kill Kayla and that made Vance stop fighting.

Vance let Hakim and Hakim's mother Zaiyema believe that he could be converted and all the way he planned a way of sending a message to Gibbs. Not that he needed to do much. Gibbs had realized what happened to Vance and he never stopped looking for him even as their government as well as British Government had offered their help. The Brits had felt bad about protecting Hakim because they thought he was just a philanthropist and so the Ambassador had wanted to do everything possible to help yet Sloane hadn't forgiven her and had actually been mistrustful because if the Ambassador hadn't intervened then Hakim would never have been cleared to leave the country. There's was just something about that, that stood out to Sloane.

Sloane had been upset with herself at it is because she thought she had followed Hakim when she first realized who he was and that she could have put an end to him without anyone else knowing though she really had a bit felling about that ambassador. The woman had defend Hakim too well and so Sloane watched her as the case with Director Vance unraveled. The boss hadn't been found overseas. He had been seen robbing the Great Virginia Bank with a group of men and that stunned everyone. They couldn't understand why he would do something like that until he turned out to be the face of new terrorist film. The terrorist cell later released a fil starring Vance and in it Vance said that there would be numerous attacks on the West for what they did to Afghanistan.

Then came the bombings. A few malls were bombed in the nearby region and so that raised the American terrorist level but it hadn't fazed Gibbs in the slightest. He knew there was no way Vance would be a part of that willing and so he watched the video again with Kasie. Kasie had taken over from Abby and she noticed that Vance only blinked five times during the video. He blinked on everything that spelled out his daughter's name and so Gibbs picked up on it. He raced to Kayla's school and he rescued the teenager right as an American born assassin tried to kill her. And so while Kayla was safe, the team still didn't have all the answers they needed. The dead assassin could offer them nothing and Sloane disappeared.

Sloane had gone over to the ambassador's house because she had been right about her. Ambassador Riggs had been the only one that knew that Vance had stolen gold bullions from the bank and the only way she could know that was if she had been in on it. So Sloane went to her house and done up her crazy bit. She pretended she had lost her mind and had even managed to give the Ambassador leverage because she had wanted to be taken, hostage. She knew that if she did she would be taken to wherever Vance was being kept and so Sloane played her part although not before telling Gibbs exactly what she was going do. The team had found out that Hakim wanted to hack the Pentagon and give himself a bunch of nukes. And so they were dealing with that while Sloane was slowly being moved to the offsite.

By the time they had dealt with stopping a nuclear fallout, they were able to use the tracker they planted on Sloane and rescue both her and Vance. They also got the chance to finally arrest Hakim. He thought he would be taken to an offsite where he'll be tortured and Sloane informed him differently. She said they were nothing like him and that he would get a cell, three meals a day, and that he'd be allowed to pray as well. Sloane said that was the difference between them because her side was the good guys.

It had taken Sloane years to recover the first time around but finally having closure would mean she'll be ready to put the past behind her.

Summary: When a navy lieutenant is found murdered in his hot tub, the team interviews his peculiar neighbors. In the meantime, Torres must face the consequences of a volatile night out with Palmer.

Some kids were just fooling around when they decided to tryout their neighbor's jacuzzi, but what happened they found was the body of Navy Lieutenant Davis Mooney.

Mooney was a decorated Navy official. He had only recently moved into the neighborhood after splitting up with his longtime wife and the neighborhood had had several problems. There was an attempted robbery at a neighbor's place when the homeowners had been out of town and so the neighborhood snoop had been the one to call that in, however, NCIS believed Mooney must have been confronted the robbers. There were several things missing from the house and the place had been ransacked, so the working theory was that Mooney either came home early or had woken up to find his house in such a situation. The one thing that could help them figure out what happened would be the time on the death and unfortunately, the answer to that were skewed.

Mooney had had no one checking in on him. He had been killed and stuffed inside of the jacuzzi for days before he was found yet that jacuzzi had been on a timer. It had basically acted as a slow cooker and the remains had been turned into soup. Neither Palmer nor Ducky had been able to take the Mooney out of the jacuzzi and so they had to take the whole instead. They took it back to headquarters and worked with Kasie on trying to narrow down the time of death. As the team was doing that, the others began getting calls. The calls all came from the neighbors and so it seems the neighborhood had turned on themselves. There were some that were pointing fingers at others and then there were the neighbors that were blaming the victim.

The one guy that had done so had been upset because Mooney used to take out his trash all the time and had washed his car that he said it was suspicious. That had been it for Torres. Torres had tried to find actual information and listening to a man complaining about his neighbors taking pride in their possession had been enough to get his back up. He had gotten into the man's face and had told him that maybe he should take pride in his possessions before he judged others. Torres noticed that the neighbor hadn't cut his own lawn or do anything to maintain the integrity of the neighborhood. The agent had gotten so upset that Gibbs had to step in and interfere. Gibbs felt Torres needed a moment to cool off and he asked Torres to watch over the body.

It had been a bogus assignment to get Torres away from potential witnesses and it meant Torres was there when Kasie found something. She found several flies that indicated that Mooney died recently and they found the cause of death. Mooney had been slashed with a box cutter and it matched the theory that had been going on while Torres had been sent away. The man returned to his desk to find out that Mooney had been writing a book. The book had been so important to Mooney that it caused the break in his marriage and so the team asked his ex-wife what the book was about. The book was about the serial killer known as "the Dentist". "The Dentist" had gone on to kill nine victims in the upper east side and he gained the nickname because he liked to take a tooth from each of the victims.

The serial killer was never caught and that had always stayed with Mooney because his cousin had been one of the victims, but there had been one suspect in the case and Mooney had apparently reached out to him. The suspect had said that everyone believed he killed the victims until one day Mooney had reached out and said he believed him because he found the real killer. Mooney claimed that the real killer lived nearby to him and that he was on his trail. So the team decided to look into everyone in the neighborhood only Torres wasn't allowed to help. Torres had gone out with Palmer to cool down because everyone's been noticing how short-fused he was and it turns out the two guys were later arrested for starting a brawl at a late night painting class. They had run into some jerks that had a problem with them being gay and so the guys had fought back.

The guys were thrown into jail for that and it had been Gibbs that bailed them out yet Gibbs hadn't been happy. He had wanted Torres to speak to Sloane and when he refused to do he was sent home. The team couldn't afford someone that was too much in his own head that he could cost them their case and so Torres was benched for this while the team realized they did have a suspect for the serial killer. They believed the killer was Dan Reynolds. It had been the Reynolds' place that had gotten broken into and the team believed that it had been Mooney that broke in. Mooney had a theory and it was confirmed after breaking it because he found a box full of teeth. The teeth had been enough for him to believe the serial killer was Dan Reynold and he had played it safe when he sent that box to his ex-wife for safekeeping.

The team had brought Dan in for questioning and they tried everything with Dan to get him to break. Nothing worked and Dan eventually agreed to lawyer up, so they thought they were going to be left with nothing until Kasie found something. She found a purple chip in the hot tub and it was actually nail polish. The team had been so busy believing that it was Dan Reynolds that they never suspected his wife. His wife had given up her serial killer ways when she started a family with her husband and upon realizing how much her new life was in jeopardy — she killed Mooney in the hopes of getting the teeth back and stopping the book. She found neither and it turns out that Mooney's ex-wife was going to finish his book for him. And so Nancy Reynolds still lost everything because now she'll be tried for what she did.

The team had been happy to close the case but they had felt sad about doing it without Torres. Torres would only later tell Bishop why he was so angry. He had apparently broken the glasses that Reeves had gifted him and so he was punishing himself for destroying the last thing he had of his friend.

That's all it was — he just missed his friend.

Production Code: 16004
Summary: The team investigates an explosion outside the home of a Navy petty officer and his wife, a popular reality TV star.

A couple of thieves were going around and stealing packages when they came across one package that turned out to be an explosive. The thieves had died almost instantly. Only the explosion had occurred outside of a Navy SEAL's home and so it still warranted an investigation. The first thing that was investigated was why the explosion happened and the agents found out that thieves had taken a package from the Navy personnel's home. The return address was the location of the Lincoln Memorial and so it was clear that whoever tried to kill Petty Officer Todd Nicholas had taken additional steps to be not found however the naval officer had believed he knew who tried to kill him. He told Gibbs that he thought it was his wife. His wife Sheba Nicholas was a reality star. She was on the Real Wives of War and was known by her fans of being completely devoted to her husband Todd.

McGee watches the show and he believed Sheba could never hurt Todd, but they questioned the husband and he said he wanted to divorce her. Sheba changed into a completely different person after she joined the show and Todd said that's when he wanted out. He tried to ask for a divorce and she turned him down because she thought he would come after her real money. Then Todd thought he should convince her that he's having an affair and that's when she threatened to kill him. Sheba told him that she would cut off his genitals when he was asleep and watch him bleed out. Todd said that after that he hadn't known what to do and so that's why he thought she was trying to kill him.

Sheba, on the other hand, had thought it was laughable that anyone would think she was trying to kill her husband. She said she didn't know how to build a bomb and that her husband was the one with all the training. He also knows that his wife likes to check mail and so Sheba said that he could have been trying to get rid of her. Either way, an explosive was mailed to their home and so the team looked outside the family. They investigated anyone that might have had a grudge against Todd or Sheba and they came across Leonard Finnick. Finnick was Sheba's most obsessed fan. He talked all the time about how they could be together if Todd was out of the way and so the team suspected he might have tried to kill Todd just to live out his fantasy.

The team went to Finnick's home and they found it decorated with images of Sheba. There was an even a cutout of Sheba that was laid out on the bed and so Finnick was creepy though he wasn't around when the agents came in and so they looked for him. Finnick was all over the place and while they were going down their list they found help from an unlikely source. Sheba had come with boxes of mail and gifts that Finnick had sent her. She said she didn't have much fans and that's why she cherishes each one that she does have. Like the stalker that threatens her husband! The team had later gotten a tip to act and they found Finnick with a package. The package hadn't been a bomb and so all it was just creepy. It was dreamscape of Finnick and Sheba with dolls.

There was also a doll for Todd and so Finnick was interviewed about that because his Todd doll was dead. The team had thought Finnick was so much their guy that they brought in Sloane to get an opinion on him and she had burst their bubble. She said that Finnick wasn't a real danger to anyone much less Todd and that's why Finnick lives out his dreams with his make-believe. Also, there was another bombing while Finnick had been in custody and the latest victim had nothing to do with Sheba or her reality show. The second victim was Patricia Everett and she was a divorced mother that nothing to do with the Nicholas family or the Navy. And so the team did as Gibbs suggested and looked into Todd's classmates at the Navy SEAL.

The classmates had also taken a class to build a bomb and while they were at it the team had also been instructed to look into whoever washed out because they failed their psyche exam. There had just been one person that had done both — David West. He had failed at the academy because the psychologist who was named Pat Everett had thought he was too unstable and so that's why he went after the mother. It had simply been one too many people with the same name. The team hadn't wanted to test their luck with David a third time and so they went to his home to arrest him only he started shooting at them. He was raining fire from his house out in the woods and was trying to kill everyone that stood in the way of him finishing his "work".

Except four agents were always going to get the drop on David. David was brought in and was refusing to answer questions though Director Vance decided to try his own hand at interrogating him because he read David's files. He began talking to him about what happened at the Academy and he got David to admit that both Todd and the psychologist deserved to die. He also noticed that David was checking his watch and he figured that another bomb had been mailed. So Vance leaned on David until he got David to all but admit that he wanted his new wife to pay because she left him after only four months of marriage. And so they got in touch with Gwen Easley before she decided to open her package and they got David thanks to this latest stunt.

Director Vance had felt proud for the part he played in David's arrest and he had worked up the courage to ask out the woman he met in Physical Therapy however not long after that woman said "yes" she went on to meet a shady man that has been following Vance since Vance was rescued.

Summary: Gibbs' vacation at his remote cabin is interrupted by a surprise visit from friends and a call from NCIS about a robber hiding in the woods nearby.

Filling in as acting Director had been such a stressful job that Gibbs decided he needed a break. Gibbs had wanted to unwind. He took a whole week off and went to a cabin that he knew wasn't easily reachable, but despite his best efforts, his two best friends decided to come visit at the cabin and their definition of a visit was different to Gibbs. Gibbs thought they would say and then goodbye. Instead they both wanted to stay! Tobias Fornell was having his house fixed and Phil Brooks didn't necessarily have a reason seeing as he just showed up intent on wanting to stay. Both men also thought they were Gibbs's best friend and had never heard of the other until they decided to show up at the cabin. And so together they were ruining what little vacation time Gibbs had managed to take for himself.

Meanwhile Gibbs's team were at least enjoying their vacation. They had relaxed certain codes at office with Gibbs not around to tell them turn down the music or put away their crossword puzzle. The team had been enjoying themselves so much that they weren't even disappointed when they got a case because they thought it was an easy one and that they could easily get through it. The case involved a thief. Someone robbed an armored truck in nowhere, North Carolina and had evaded local police by making into the Naval Airbase. The base were notified about the problem and they locked down everything yet before the order could get out they had accidentally allowed a plane to take off.

The plane was coming nearby and so NCIS had no problem with meeting the plane on the ground. They waited until everyone had deboarded and they asked the flight crew if they had seen anything though no one did. They all said that there was no one else onboard and the lieutenant had been offended when the team chose to later search the plane themselves. Lt. Holcombe said that the federal agents were looking for flaws when they were none and she was she became overly aggressive when she was forced to defend herself as well as her crew when the team had found something. NCIS found blood in the cargo area and it eventually led them to a severed finger. And so there had been someone else on that flight.

They had the finger tested afterwards. It belonged to Franklin Poe and his name unfortunately meant the FBI had to get involved. It seems they had put Poe in federal protection program after he agreed to testify against his former crew and so an FBI agent had to be sent. Her name was Isabel Monet and she actually knew Sloane. The two were friends with something of a wild past and it made things uncomfortable for everyone else, only Monet was helpful, she had been on the case since the beginning. Monet was able to the others a little more background and she explained how Poe's former crew were responsible for heists. They were into bigger games than the armored truck and that had been three hundred and fifty thousand.

Poe had been forced to give all of that up when he went in Witness Protection. He handed over all his properties and his funds. Poe had been broke when the feds gave a minimum paying job and so that's why everyone believes Poe came out of retirement, but luckily Kasie was able to tell what happened after Poe made it on the aircraft. He parachuted out and Kasie knew he had landed in Brossard County. The name had sounded familiar to the others and so McGee told them how Gibbs's cabin was in that same county. He thought it best to warn Gibbs in case trouble was coming his way and what he didn't know was that Gibbs had been looking to get out of the cabin. Their boss and friend had heard what was happening and he decided to go look for their thief himself.

Gibbs had wanted to go it alone and it turns out his two best friends wouldn't even give him that. They decided to come along and help. They both using their tracking skills to find out where the parachute had been spotted and they had run into a woman as they were making their way. She said she was a camper and that she had seen the parachute not far off. The guys followed her directions and they found it. They also came across the money. They believed that Poe might have lost the money as he was parachuting down and so they knew that their suspect would still be around. He couldn't leave unless he had enough money to sent himself up again. And so they tried to make it through the forest only Phil was injured.

Phil had really hurt his leg and the guys had been dragging him along when they found a second parachute. The second one had still been attached to Poe and he died in the landing however a second parachute so close to the scene showed that there was a partner and so Gibbs left with Fornell to go looking for the woman. The same woman that had been so helpful before. The guys had left Phil on a stump to sober up and they went hunting for their second suspect. It was as they were looking that they heard a gunshot. They went back to Phil and found the woman holding him hostage. She said she just wanted the money and so after a slight tussle she took off with her bag of cash.

The guys were more worst off than before when they got back to the cabin yet they had run into Bishop and Torres. NCIS didn't find out until much later in their investigation that Monet had lied to them. She hadn't been the leading investigator and so Sloane got the truth out of her. She said the initial investigator had been Anna JenLowe. She left the FBI and eventually moved in with Poe, so the FBI believed she could have helped him with the heist and that's why they didn't want tell NCIS everything. They hadn't wanted the fact a former FBI agent had assist with armed robbery to get out! But with a suddenly truthful Monet on their hands, the NCIS team had gone to check on their boss and had seen for themselves that he was alright.

Gibbs had also gotten them a lead because he put Phil's fishing game in the money bag and so not only did they later catch up to Jenlowe — they also got to arrest her before the FBI took over their case.

Summary: A 50-year-old tape recording left by a murder victim is found, and the NCIS team tries to exonerate Ray Jennings, the Marine serving a life sentence for the crime.

An unsent letter shed some light on an old case. The letter had apparently gotten trapped behind a sorting system at the post office, however, no one knew about it and it wasn't found until forty-eight years later. The post office had gotten sold and the new owners were renovating it in order to turn into a vegan restaurant. It was the new owners that found this letter and they decided to deliver it to its intended recipient. Her name was Claire Hall and the letter was actually the lost recording from her husband. He had died back during the Vietnam War and he chose to send recordings rather than letters back home. And so Claire had been happy to get this one final message from her husband until she played it and realized her husband killed himself.

First Lieutenant Daniel Hall had said he couldn't go on with the war. He was tired of having to fight and so he apologized to Claire because he didn't want her to go without answers, but all the recording did was confuse her because Claire had formerly believed that her husband was murdered. There had been an investigation at the time and NCIS had even found this alleged culprit. They arrested Daniel's friend Ray Jennings because everyone thought he turned on his Commanding Officer which hadn't been all that unusual back then. It also didn't help when Ray confessed to the crime. He pleaded guilty at his trial and so Claire had thought she had all the answers until she got the last recording.

Claire now believes that Ray was innocent and she took the recording to NCIS to clear his name. She got lucky when Gibbs had been the one to speak because he had heard her out and had asked for all the tapes. He wanted to piece together what happened to Daniel Hall and he was willing to believe that the original NCIS was flawed. And that led him to question why Ray confessed. Gibbs had gotten his team to look into the investigation and he personally went to talk to Ray. Ray it seems had made his peace in prison and he reiterated to Gibbs that he had killed Hall. He said he was guilty and that was it. Some on the team didn't think they should keep looking if Ray was still confessing to his one crime and Gibbs chose to ignore her.

Gibbs wanted Claire to have answers and so he continued to look into this old crime. He had asked his people what they found and it hadn't been much because the initial case files had been moved. It took Torres a while to find them and unfortunately there was black mold on them. The most McGee could get was the witness testimony and the fact Ray changed his story. Ray first said he threw the grenade into Hall's hutch from a distance and then later he changed it by saying he was inside the hutch when he lit the grenade before running away. The team talked to the witness and it turns out he saw Ray running away from the hutch. He didn't see Ray throw the grenade and so he's not sure who caused the explosion.

The team went back to Ray. Ray had become so institutionalized that he was comfortable being in prison and had carved out a place for himself. He's been his commissary money since his arrest to start a library at the prison and now that library full of books in pristine condition. Ray was content with his life and he didn't want to reopen the case. He was happy to ignore Gibbs as long as he wants too just because Gibbs challenged his story and so Gibbs pushed him. He played the recording with Hall's voice and in it he was laughing with Ray over something trivial. It had moved Ray so much that he finally confessed to what happened that night. He had apparently blacked out. He had down a bottle of whiskey and didn't know what happened the night Hall.

Its why he changed his story to match the witness's testimony. He had blacked out a lot back then and he was still functional because after one blackout he found out that he had killed ten Vietnamese fighters.

All Ray knew was that he had been angry with his CO before he got drunk. He didn't know what really happened. The team also wouldn't know the truth until they exhumed Hall's body. They brought him up to the lab and they couldn't find anything thing that would significantly state whether he had been killed or committed suicide. What they did find was the plating on the recorder. He had been hugging it to his body when he died and in his last recording, he said that he would be holding his wife close to his chest at the end. The team believed that was proof enough he knew he was going to die and so they still had a few questions. Bishop knew that Ray didn't have family and so she wanted to know who was putting money in his commissary.

The money had seemingly come from Thomas Fletcher. Fletcher was the witness that said he saw Ray running from the hutch and so they brought him. If he thought Ray was guilty then why has he been supporting Ray for the last forty years? The answer was because he felt guilty. He lied about seeing Ray running from the hutch. He had seen Ray passed out moments before he saw Hall and Hall had been in his hutch alone when the explosion occurred. Fletcher had just lied because he wanted Ray to get sent home. He hadn't wanted to be around a black marine and for that, he decided to blame Ray for Hall's murder. And even Ray had believed his lie.

It was too late to charge Fletcher for lying, but the team was able to get Ray out of prison and he was there when they reburied Daniel Hall.

Production Code: 16006
Summary: At a Halloween crime scene, Torres recognizes the NCIS victim as a former friend from federal law enforcement training, and Jimmy thinks his lab may be haunted!

A couple of bodies were found at a gas station bathroom. One of them victims was identified as Petty Officer Tim Buckley. His wallet and ID card had still been on his persons and so identifying him hadn't been that difficult, but the second victim's wallet hadn't been found with anywhere near the scene. They had had to run his DNA to get his name and he was identified as Anderson Kohl. Kohl had gone to the Academy the same time as Torres and so Torres explained what he was like. He was apparently an ace cadet because there was nothing he couldn't do if he put his mind to it and so him flunking out wasn't because he was a poor student. It happened because Kohl had had a problem with authority.

Torres also added that he soon lost contact with Kohl after Kohl flunked out. Therefore, he had no idea what happened to Kohl afterwards and that's where Bishop took over. She found out that Kohl didn't have a career on file nor were his taxes mentioning how he afforded his lavish lifestyle. Bishop and Torres went to Kohl's apartment and he was in a luxurious condo filled with expensive things. There was even a real dinosaur head in the condo and a bunch of expensive cars. The agents had thought some of the cars belonged to other tenants and it turns out there were all Kohl. Kohl also had a secret room in his condo and Bishop found money as well as several passports with different names though they all had Kohl's face on them.

Whatever Kohl was involved in was nefarious to say the least. Torres thought his former friend might have been involved in smuggling. It would explain the different sort of currency they found and the passports yet Gibbs told them if they didn't know then they should go out and look for evidence. The team tried to find out what Kohl was involved in and they ruled out everything. It wasn't smuggling and he hadn't been involved in with any Intelligence Agency. The team couldn't figure out what he was and so they asked Kasie to look through his things. She later believed she came across his birthday list until she realized that his list coincided with trips out on the country and that someone always died.

The birthday list was in fact a hit list, Kohl was a hitman and once they figured out his list they knew what type of people he was being paid to kill. The victims were drug dealers, cartel members, and several of them had been in the mafia. The only one that hadn't seemed like the others was Jenny Wayfair. She was the girlfriend of a pawnshop owner and it was the boyfriend that was accused of racketeering as well as money laundering. He fit the victim type and so Jenny stood out. The team wondered if someone would want revenge for her and so they spoke to the boyfriend. He recently had bypass surgery and so he could never have snuck in that bathroom via a vent much less kill two trained men in their prime. And so the boyfriend was in the clear, but the team still had other avenues to pursue.

The found out who was selling guns to Kohl. The guy was a friend of Kohl's and he knew what Kohl did although finding out that Kohl was new. He had been so freaked out by it because he wanted to know if these people had his name and, when NCIS couldn't answer him, he decided to stop talking. He didn't believe that the team could keep him safe and so he only revealed what couldn't be connected to him. He told them that Kohl died because of someone he refused to kill. The team needed help figuring who this person was because they were still in danger and so they went back to an old source. They found out there had been a witness to Jenny's death and this witness revealed that someone told her to change her story. She said she was threatened by the son of Jenny's boyfriend.

The son was the one that was laundering money. He had been hiding it from everyone when Jenny found out and so he called a number that some of his contacts had given him. The son claimed that he thought Jenny was just going to be threatened to back off, only no one wanted to hear his excuses and so they asked for the name that went with the number. He gave the property manager. The same property manager that the team had met earlier. Rachel Brentwood had been the one that let them into Kohl's condo and the whole time she was actually Kohl's handler. She forced the team to kill her when they came to arrest her and so the team still hadn't found out who was the hit that Kohl turned down.

All they had from Brentwood before she died was that Kohl refused to kill military. Luckily, she had another burner phone in her apartment and there was a new kill list on it. It had Navy Lieutenant Connor Reese's name on it and the team secured him. They also were able to arrest their hitman and so the killing for hire business was shut down with the handler out of commission, but the team didn't know why the hitmen were going after the servicemen until they learned that he was on the jury of a drug trafficking case. The case has now been upgraded to attempted murder and so no one else would be putting a hit on Reese anytime soon.

The team handed were going to get answers from hitman before they hand him over to the CIA because the CIA had an ongoing case against this mysterious syndicate however they noticed that the CIA Officer sent to work with them was more interested in the team than he was in solving a case.

Summary: After a mural by a street artist and activist is stolen, the NCIS investigation leads to a conspiracy regarding a Navy contractor and the safety of ocean mammals.

The team was called after the National Armed Forces Credit Union reported a robbery. The thieves took a chunk out of the wall at the bank. Other than that there didn't appear to be any damage to the rest of the building and nothing had been stolen. The tellers checked their numbers several times and not a cent had been stolen however the former security guard had still been around despite getting fired and he tried to claim he foiled the robbery. Zach said his presence alone must have scared of the robbers and ev-everyone took a good look at him. They all saw a skinny guy who wasn't paying attention when a piece of a wall was stolen and so no wonder he got fired from the bank.

Nevertheless, the team had been left with a mystery. They realized that if the thieves didn't go after the money then it must have been something else they were after. Like that piece of wall. It didn't make sense at first why anyone would steal a piece of the wall until they learned that someone went to great lengths to take it. There had been nothing important on it from the other side of the bank and so they investigated what could have been on the outside. The team turned to Kasie and she found evidence that there had been painting on the wall. Or as Kasie called it was "street art". She found samples of an expensive paint and that indicated the artist went to great lengths.

Kasie decided to look into any street art that was recently put for sale and she found something. She found an auction for a street art that had been taken out of a wall and it was going for at least a hundred grand. Kasie told Gibbs about where he could find the painting before it was sold and so he sent both Torres and Bishop. They pretended to be hipsters and eventually found the painting they were after. It was a picture of whales and it had been done by Ritz. Ritz was a famous artist who put the code into his painting to alert people about the dangers going on in the environment. The pictures he created of the dolphins led to a website about donating to save the mammals.

It had been cool because neither Torres nor Bishop had ever seen anything like it although that didn't stop them from taking the painting into custody. It was evidence of a crime and the crime actually extended above and beyond the stolen wall. It seems their artist had not only put the bank in jeopardy with his stunt and that he created the painting in retaliation for what the US Fish and Wild Life Services did. The federal government had given a lot of money into saving endangered animals and some of that money didn't always go where it was supposed to. It actually went to funding big game hunting and, well, Ritz put the news on blast.

Ritz created a painting on the side of the building for US Fish and Wild Life Services that told everyone about how giraffes on a federal level because of corruption. He also put in a code in the painting that detailed emails he stole from the government and so he wanted for releasing classified information. Gibbs learned all of this after the fact and so he ordered his team to lean on the art auctioneer until they got a name. It took some persuading, only they got what they wanted and learned that Ritz's real name was Jared Clark. He had an expensive loft and after the team went there to arrest him — they found him dead.

Ritz had been murdered and whoever did it had spray painted him to make him look like another piece of art. The team figured it might have been personal and what they later found corroborated their theory. They eventually learned that all the places Ritz was telling people to donate towards were fakes. There was never any charity that Ritz was helping and instead it looks like he was just as corrupt as the people he stood against. He was a fake and any one of his adoring fans could have turned on him if they learned the truth. Kasie did some digging and she found one person that had followed everything Ritz did until one day she sent a lot of hate to him via social media.

The suspect was Melanie Keller. The team went to her home and she had tried to make a run for it by driving off in her car. Only that stops being effective when a certain someone stands in the way and so the team arrested Melanie. They showed her all the messages she sent to Ritz and asked why she hated the artist. She said she didn't hate Ritz because she was Ritz. Melanie created a painting just for Gibbs and Bishop to prove she was the real artist. She said she found out Jared Clark had been pretending to be her and that she was the one that was changing her code to steal from her fans. So she sent messages to him to back off.

The team asked Melanie if she killed Jared Clark and she swore she didn't. She instead believes it was one of the companies she was fighting against. Melanie led them to a company called Trebel. Trebel claimed it was cleaning up the ocean and what it was really doing was polluting it. Melanie found evidence of this and she was going to expose them. She believed that Trebel could have gone after Jared Clark believing he was Ritz and so she thought the team should go after this company. This company seemed to be the big bad wolf and the team checked into it. They checked the sonar machine that Trebel was using and they found it was rigged.

The machine was rigged to pass the naval exam they had to go through and after that, they raised the frequency, which was what repelled and even killed whales as well as other sea life. The real Ritz had been right all along and that meant her life was in danger because someone at the company was willing to kill Ritz to keep the secret. The team decided to let Ritz go while they further investigated the company and so Gibbs went to head to head with a CEO. He wanted to know if she knew about the faulty sonar and if she or someone else involved had looked into murdering Ritz to keep the secret. And what he learned was that the company had been in talks with Jared Clark.

It seems while Clark was still pretending to be Ritz, he and Trebel talked about what was happening to the sea life and they were apparently going to reach an agreement. So Trebel didn't actually have a motive. They thought they were dealing with Ritz and everything was above board. The only one that claimed that Trebel was the problem was Melanie/Ritz. She also left the building before anyone could stop her and so the team believed they had been right the first time to suspect Melanie. She left as she did showed that she was hiding something and Bishop thought she might find out the truth.

Bishop knew Ritz liked to hide things in her paintings and so she checked the latest one — the one that she created in their building to prove that she was in fact, Ritz. So Bishop checked the painting and she found a license plate number. It belonged to Brady Spencer who was a senator that died not long after he found guilty of taking bribes and so they checked who might have his car nowadays. They found a former staff member of the late senator and it turns out he now works as a telemarketer. He took quite a fall from grace when the senator lost everything and he blamed it on Ritz who exposed them.

The team later arrested their guy, but they still wanted to know why Ritz led them on a goose chase. Ritz had bonded with Bishop and so Bishop waited for Ritz to reach out. When she did, she said that Jared Clark thought she was following him and had sent her the license plate number as proof. Only she knew that wasn't her car and so she withheld that from NCIS because she wanted them to look into Trebel. It was more important to her that they stop the sonar that was killing animals than it was for them to find Jared Clark's actual killer.

Ritz ended up apologizing except Bishop knew she wasn't truly sorry.

Production Code: 16008
Summary: McGee and Bishop travel to Afghanistan after a murder case in the states is linked to a string of soldiers killed by friendly fire overseas.

A couple of volunteers found a dead sailor floating in the waterways. The body had been too foregone to get any fingerprints. The victim had to be identified by his uniform at the time of death and the team counted themselves luckily when they traced it back to Senior Chief Richard Granger. Granger worked at the Defense Logistics Agency. He would have been reported missing if he ever so much went a day without calling in, however, there was no missing persons report next to his name and the victim they had was dead for at least a week. It didn't match up and someone called the DLA to ask about Granger and they had been surprised to learn that they were actually talking to Granger. The real Granger was just as confused as NCIS as to why someone would impersonate him and he claimed to have never seen the victim before.

The team asked him how their guy could have gotten his hands on Granger's gear and he told them that his apartment had been burglarized a few weeks back. He said that they took a few of his things and that he hadn't thought it was a big deal, but learning that someone died while wearing his uniform had made him concerned for his own life. Granger wanted to know if he was safe and the team had no reason to believe he was in danger. They think their killer must have known their victim and so they worked on identifying the body they had in custody. They ran a facial recognition on him and it revealed that the victim's real name was Wesley Moore. He was a freelance engineer and had a brief stint with the Marines before he flunked out during training.

The team investigated Moore and they learned that he used Granger's badge to access some files on the military database. They didn't want he was going to do with them though they did know he was in frequent contact with Captain Alicia Voit of the Marines and that she died around the same time she did. She had been killed overseas by enemy fire and her body was being flown back in the next couple of hours. Voit's remains would be in town for a few hours before she was moved to her final resting place and so the team knew they had to stop that transportation. It went against Gibbs's code to stand in the way of a Marine's burial and he only did it because he believed Voit's murder could be connected to Moore's.

Moore had accessed the files of several dead marines that died overseas and he had no reason to do it for himself. The team believed he did it for Voit because Voit suspected something. She asked Moore to get those files because she didn't think she could go through proper channels and so the team needed to know what she was looking for as well as why she may have been killed for it. The team took ownership over her remains when she touched down in the states and they took back to Palmer because they wanted his verification that it was an enemy fire that killed her. Voit was hiding something from the people she worked with and the team were afraid it was because she couldn't trust anyone in the Marines

The team had Palmer take a look at Voit's remains, but they weren't idle while they waited for results. They thought the best way to get answers was to send some of them to Afghanistan and so Gibbs decided to send McGee and Bishop. They needed to be on the ground as they retraced Voit's final moments and not long after landing they were given a golden opportunity. They were told the terrorist that allegedly killed Voit was about to be captured and that he would be transferred to the base. The team had a chance to question him about the events of that day and they were waiting for it when they heard back from Palmer and Ducky. The guys could perform an autopsy on Voit because her body had already been processed and so they reviewed the official record of her autopsy.

Voit had taken two gunshots to the chest when she killed four insurgents and was brought low by taking the fatal gunshot to the head. She died a hero yet her escort was getting antsy about getting her to New Jersey. He said that the team's questions had been answered already and so he didn't know why they were holding onto Voit. Only Gibbs had gotten special permission to hold onto Voit and that made the escort back down. He had been in a rush to get Voit's remains out of there and so Gibbs suspected there was a story there. Gibbs wanted to know why the colonel that was escorting Voit was taken the issue so personally and therefore he looked into it. And he found out the escort had volunteered.

The Colonel had been the one to sing up Voit. She needed something to believe and the Colonel had given her that, so that's why the Colonel was taking her death hard. He blamed himself for what happened to her and that meant he wasn't connected to what actually killed Voit. Her killer had been captured and the team had been able to speak to him. The terrorist claimed to have information. He said that he had been working with an American and that's how he knew where Voit's convo would be though he wanted a deal before he said anything else and that's something the Americans were never going to agree to. They don't make deals with terrorists and so they chose instead to threaten him.

Azar Atwa was told he would be sent to Guantanamo and that all his new friends would know that he sold them out if he didn't tell NCIS what they wanted to know. They guaranteed him protective custody and so he was going to name the American traitor, but a sniper got to him first. Atwa had been murdered on base and his killer had taken a shot at him from the mountains. There was no way to track him down and so the agents chose to look for the mole that mentioned Atwa had been taken into custody. The team in Afghanistan were looking for their spy while the team back in the states found out who attacked Moore. Moore was killed by Xavier Blackburn who had been let go from a private military contractor because of his temper issues.

It turns out Blackburn had been promised his job back if he took care of Moore and he thought Moore was the traitor.

Blackburn had been lied to by the second-in-command to the General in Afghanistan. When they arrested him, he said that he assisted the Taliban because there was no point to the war and that soon the Taliban would recapture everything the Americans fought for.

So it seems to be a waste that this was Ducky's last case. He wanted to retire and believed Palmer could fully run the department without him.

Production Code: 16009
Summary: After the lead suspect of an unsolved high-profile robbery case is released from prison, the team resumes their investigation with an undercover stakeout.

A home security system picked out a couple of thieves, who had broken into the home of Admiral Norton Padgett and stole several important documents. The documents were worth thousands, but as the security system led to the identification and later arrest of Angie Gray, she refused to say whatever happened to those documents nor she did name her accomplice. She chose to protect her partner and went to jail for three years. Angie was released after her sentence and the team thought they had finally gotten their chance to find out the name of the accomplice.

NCIS planned on following Angie until they got what they needed, however, Angie was giving them a run for their money. They followed her from the prison to a brand new apartment she rented and they noticed something that was off. They noticed that there was someone else that following Angie. It was an older guy and he was carrying a weapon. He wasn't part of Angie's known acquaintances and so they did some digging. They found the man following her was a Private Detective. He was hired to follow Angie and the team had a suspicion about who was behind it. They suspected that the Admiral had taken things into his own hands.

Admiral Padgett was a wealthy man. His wife had a trust fund and it allowed the couple to live a lavish lifestyle, so eventually, Padgett got used to doing this his way. He had tried to insert himself into the investigation three years ago when Angie was first arrested and he demanded to be included into the current one as well because he wanted to know how far the team had gotten. Every effort was being made to respect Padgett's position and so of course he was would use that against them. The team thought he was following Angie because he wanted to get answers out of her using his own methods and therefore they had been surprised when the PI acted a little off.

The PI had gone into Angie's room the same time as she died and he left moments after she did. It would have been nearly impossible for her to not see him and so the NCIS agents wanted to know what happened in that room. They had questions though they also didn't want to risk their cover. They still wanted to follow Angie to see who she met and they identified one of her friends. The friend was Lanny Peete. She had served time with Angie and the two stayed close after they had both been released. This Lanny woman was the only one that had maintained a presence in Angie's life and so they brought her in to question her.

They asked Lanny about Angie. Angie was described as a good person who's the only mistake was to fall for guys that always disappointed her. It was how Angie got into trouble. She apparently met a guy named J.T. who promised to wait for her and then ran away at the first opportunity. He was the reason Angie never said anything and so Lanny didn't care what happened to him. She shared what she knew with NCIS and, while it wasn't much, it was still something. The team went back to following Angie and they got the PI off her back. Gibbs had gone to speak with the other man to find out who hired him and the PI refused to say.

He said he wanted to maintain his client's privacy. He also wasn't going to fall for whatever trap that Gibbs tried to drop in and so Gibbs just kept him talking until Angie got away. The team needed where she would go and they didn't want the PI ruining things. They followed Angie as she met up with Lanny and the two women went on to travel to a cabin miles away from anything. The agents following them would have waited in their car without being seen, but they heard Angie's scream and so they had to go in. They wanted to check out the scene and were just as shocked as Angie when they found a body.

The body had been old. It could have been there for years without anyone knowing and so the team believed, like Angie, that the body was J.T. The body was moved to the lab yet the team thought they had a lead. They had been tracking Angie's phone calls and she called Lew Nolte. Nolte had worked for the admiral and he had been a suspect as well in the robbery. The team thought that Nolte was an "inside man" because he was the only one that would have known that both the housekeeper and the cook were off that night. They had also questioned Nolte and he had denied all of the charges. He said he had nothing to do with the robbery back then and fast-forward to the present and he was still claiming innocence.

Nolte claimed he had never met Angie and that he didn't know who J.T. was or had anything to do with the body the team found. The others had been forced to let Nolte go only that didn't stop them from trying to find proof that connected Nolte to the crime and so they figured their best bet would be to identify the body. The body was later proven to be John Storevelle. His picture was shown to Angie and she said that was her boyfriend J.T. She also said that she knew that her boyfriend would never have run away and it turns out that he did. He took the money and went to the islands. He lived it up down there and blew through the money.

JT had been broke when he came back to the states and started talking odd jobs. The team believed he could have tried looking for another place to rob when he got killed and so they asked Angie about Nolte. Only Nolte was just a name to Angie. She said she got desperate when she couldn't reach JT and that she called Nolte because she remembered hearing that he was a suspect. She thought that Nolte could lead her to JT and the truth was he might not even have anything to do with the crime. And another thing the team learned was that the PI was, in fact, working for Admiral Padgett.

It was a confirmation to the team and it got McGee thinking. He said that the whole situation felt like 'Murder on the Orient Express'. He said they had plenty of suspects and couldn't figure out who did the crime because they all had good motives. The book and eventually movie revealed that all the suspects had killed the victim together and so that led to the team forming a plan. They brought in Angie and told her what they knew, and then they asked her for help. She wasn't protecting anyone by keeping quiet anymore and so she was willing to help. Angie went to Nolte's apartment wearing a wire and she found out everything.

She threatened him and it got Nolte talking. He had been working with JT and the guys had split the money, but then Nolte had found pictures of the admiral that would have ended his lucrative marriage and so he chose to blackmail him. JT didn't see the benefit of that until he ran out of money and needed more. He came back and he demanded a cut of the blackmail money. JT thought he was owed it and so Nolte killed him in order to keep all of the money to himself.

Nolte confessed to everything over the wire and so the team was finally able to arrest him for the part he played in the robbery as well as the blackmail and JT's murder.

And Angie finally realized that she did waste three years protecting that just wasn't worth it.

Production Code: 16010
Summary: The team's holiday plans are put on hold after the murder investigation of a Navy veteran includes the discovery of a newborn baby with no identification.

A dead vet usually wasn't the team jurisdiction. It was more the Metro PD's territory however they had been swamped over the holidays and so they couldn't take on another case. They had to give it to NCIS. NCIS technically investigated matters that included the military and the victim was once in the Navy. Jerome Murray had retired some years back and he used his free time to volunteer. He was actually volunteering at a soup kitchen that served the homeless and had stopped some people who wanted to ruin the holidays for everyone. There had been this one drug dealer who was shopping his own wares at the shelter and so Murray kept throwing him out. And so that could be the reason behind someone stabbing Murray from behind.

The team went to the soup kitchen and they found out all about this drug dealer. He went by the name Vicious and so the team found him using his street name. He apparently lived by himself and so when then the team invited themselves — they weren't prepared to hear someone else in the other room. They tried asking Vicious who else was there and Vicious answered by pulling a gun. He pulled a weapon and demanded that they leave him alone but that couldn't happen and so eventually Vicious fired the gun. Things were over quickly once he did that and Vicious was killed instantly. So the team no longer had anyone standing in their way! They went to the bedroom, opened the door to see who was behind it, and they found a baby.

It was a baby boy. He looked like he was still a newborn and so everyone thought that the baby was Vicious's. Only they couldn't find any paperwork on the baby. Vicious hadn't gone to a hospital and there were no signs of a mother being around. It appeared as if the baby came out of thin air! There wasn't even anything around to indicate what's name is. The team thought that maybe if they reached out to Vicious's lawyer that maybe they could get answers and according to the lawyer there was no girlfriend and no kids in the picture. The baby came out of nowhere and so the team had a theory. They tested the baby's DNA against that of Vicious's and they found out that he wasn't the father.

The baby was most likely stolen! Bishop and Torres had heard that Children Protection Services were overrun this time of year and so they decided to watch the baby because they figured they could find the biological parents soon, but it turns out there weren't Amber Alerts matching their baby. Of the thousands of kids that had been kidnapped, none of them were newborns! The baby was never reported missing and so the team tried to figure why that was. They went back to the homeless shelter to ask around and they found out that Murray had witnessed a crime. He talked about going to the cops because he had seen something involving Vicious and so they followed that clue back to the EZ Mart in Annadale.

Murray reportedly witnessed a crime there and so they viewed hours of security footage until they found what they were looking. They found Vicious buying a baby from a crying mother. Her face and car were shown in the footage. Her name is Tanya Jacobs and she was seventeen. She didn't have any real address and had been staying at a motel when the team tracked her down. They were going to ask her about her baby and so she tried to run. She made as far as to the car when she was stopped and her drugs, as well as her needle, fell out of her handbag. Tanya denied that the drugs were hers and the team told her they believed her because they wanted to get Tanya to open up. And that was something they needed if they were going to ask her about her baby.

It took Tanya some time yet she soon got to talking. She said her parents kicked her out when she got pregnant and that the baby's father then ran off. Tanya was alone and desperate. She turned to drugs to cope and only got cleaned thanks to the adoption agency. The agency had found the perfect adopting couple who paid for rehab and doctor visits. Its what allowed Tanya to give birth to a healthy baby boy and she had been set to hand over the baby to the Shaws when she heard she could make ten grand. Vicious used to her drug dealer and he offered her ten grand for the baby. He said that he lined up a lawyer to adopt it and so Tanya told the Shaws that she had changed her mind. She claimed that she was going to keep the baby when the truth was she was going to sell it.

Then she heard about what happened to Vicious and she had been freaking out. So the team told her that her baby had been found an that he was okay. Tanya had been so happy to hear this that she actually thought it was a sign. She said that maybe she could keep her baby because she had money now and so Sloane and Gibbs talked her out of that. They told her what she needed was to get clean and be healthy. Her baby needed more than what she could provide and so Tanya ultimately decided to give him up. He was sent to the Shaws and they were so happy to finally adopted him that thought it was a miracle.

Meanwhile, the lawyer that had lied to a federal agency and tried to buy a baby was going to face some serious time.

Summary: The Secretary of Defense shuts down Gibbs' murder investigation and demands that McGee and Torres be arrested for their actions in the case.

Special Agent Torres attended a conference called "Optics in Law Enforcement". He hadn't wanted to go to this conference and had been ordered to do it by a more senior agent. McGee was the one that was supposed to go and, while he made Torres go in his place, he couldn't stop Torres from lashing or continue on with the conference with everyone believing he was McGee. So everyone at this conference thought Torres was McGee and they thought it was rude of McGee when he took phone calls in the middle of the conference.

It turns out Torres had used the phone calls to claim that he had a sick child and so he was going to party with Bishop when they both heard a scream. The scream came from some bridesmaid that was hooking up with a groomsman and those two saw something.

What they saw was a conference room full of bodies on slabs. It had looked like the worst buffet ever and neither Torres nor Bishop were amused with what they found. The agents called it the crime scene and that's what it became, but it seems they spoke too soon because the bodies were medically cadavers and so hotel manager demanded that her hotel be set to rights. She said that she had paperwork for all twenty bodies and that's when Torres and Bishop said that they counted twenty-one. There had been twenty-one bodies in the conference room and only one of them didn't have a tag or any footprint detailing where he came from. The body of the unknown man was taken to the morgue where they found out he was also lacking lungs to go with that missing name of his.

The team didn't know anything about their victim or how he died, but they knew it wasn't from natural causes and so they tested everything. They tested his blood and his cause of death revealed to be poisoned. He died from chlorine poison which had been outlawed at the Geneva Convention and was last used during nearly a hundred years ago. The team had no idea how the victim came into contact with it and so they turned to Kasie for answers. She had taken over for Abby and was proving to be really great at her job. Kasie later informed the team that chemical weapons had been stockpiled during the Cold War and that even with peace several countries still had access to it.

The United States was one of them. It was going to a long time and a lot of money to divest itself of all the illegal chemical weapons, so the US had hired companies to deal with it and the victim worked at one of them. The victim was identified, Keenan Grant. Grant had some low-level job and so the company said that he was never around chlorine weapons or any weapons for that matter. Only Grant's supervisor Dr. Patton Hartgrave was sure Grant couldn't have gotten sick from his job. He and the company's owner said that they had fazed out chlorine weapons and that there weren't any left on the premises. And they also that any other questions would need to get past the Pentagon because the company has several contracts the Department of Defense.

The team and Gibbs especially had thought that maybe the company wasn't being honest with them and so they tried to go around them. They went to the Secretary of Defense and they asked Secretary Crawford for his assistance on getting information on the company as well as the CEO thought they were turned down. The SecDef said that the team didn't have enough evidence to gain access to the files they had on the company and he demanded that they stop looking into the company altogether. The team had been ordered to stand down and they realize they couldn't do that until they found out what happened to Grant. Grant had been murdered and so the team thought the least they could do was hack the company's records.

They had gotten video of Hartgrave logging in and so they used that to hack the chemical company's servers. They got security footage of Hartgrave getting in the van with Grant and Grant driving off. So the team brought in Hartgrave even though they had been ordered to stop their investigation and so Secretary Crawford came to their office. He wanted to arrest the whole of NCIS for disobeying orders, but they talked him down using what they had learned. They learned that Hartgrave had lied to them and they brought him where he was interrogated. The man was sick from chlorine poisoning himself and he told the team that he was dying. Hartgrave claimed that he was dying for a good cause and they eventually got his motives. He admitted that he used some of the chemicals that were being stored rather than destroyed and that he handed them to Freedom Fighters.

Hartgrave said that the chemicals were on their way to Syria. He believed that his contribution would help take down Assad and so the team informed how easy it would be for some group on Isis to steal those weapons. They created a fake broadcast in which Hartgrave thought chemical weapons had been used on innocent people and that broke through his martyrdom. He gave them the information they needed to track down the weapons and so the team was able to stop a terrorist attack. They also found out that Trine Chemicals hadn't destroyed the chlorine weapons like they said they did because they considered it to be expensive and just want to save a little money.

And so the team got Secretary Crawford to back down by telling him that they knew he was an investor in Trine Chemicals and that he was a close friend to the CEO.

Crawford denied any wrongdoing and had even apologized because he said he hadn't been worried about his investment or his friend, but after he told NCIS they weren't in trouble anymore, he contacted the CIA agent that was looking into Director Vance for Intel.

Summary: An old family friend beseeches Gibbs to join him on a road trip to search for a missing military I.D. bracelet.

An old friend came to see Gibbs. Gibbs was in the middle of an investigation and didn't have time for distractions. Which was probably why he was short with Corporal John Sydney. Sydney had been a friend of Gibbs's father and he came to see Gibbs because another old friend had passed away. The deceased was Leroy Jethro Moore and Gibbs was named after him, but he didn't need Sydney to tell him the news because he had already heard it from Moore's son. Gibbs also didn't feel the need to thank Sydney for making the trip and instead he chose to shuffle the older man quickly out of the building.

Gibbs didn't really have fond memories of Sydney and so he had been happy to see the back of him. But then his case took an odd turn. Gibbs and his team were investigating notorious drug dealer Michael Deegan because Deegan had hired a hitman to kill Lt. Johnson and the hitman failed. "Peaches" missed his target and was arrested for the attempted murder. The team used that to their advantage and they helped stage the murder of Johnson in exchange for getting Peaches to wear a wire. It all supposed to be simple. Peaches were going to go to Deegan and demand the rest of the money for carrying out the job. And that's how the team was supposed to get Deegan on tape.

Deegan has never been caught with anything else and so getting his admission that he was willing to pay would have been enough to send him to prison for life. All the plan needed to be was Peaches and he agreed to play his part. He put on the wire and he went to the bar to meet with Deegan, but of course, the plan didn't go as they all hoped it would. Peaches had demanded payment and Deegan claimed to have no knowledge of what Peaches was talking about. Peaches again brought out the doctored photos of a dead Johnson to prove that he did the job he was ordered to do and Deegan denied all knowledge of this "hit".

Peaches left the bar after that and said that someone Deegan must have found out that he was wearing a wire. He claimed he hadn't tipped off Deegan and that he had no idea how the other man knew, but Deegan definitely knew. He was aware that Peaches was wearing a wire and so Peaches asked for protection. He said that Deegan would come after him if he wasn't protected and so the team didn't know what to do. They had monitored Peaches and he couldn't have gotten the word out. They also had Johnson under twenty-four surveillance and so they decided to keep the fact that Johnson was alive a secret for a little while longer.

The team had tried to backup Peaches' story. They went to Deegan as NCIS Agents and questioned Deegan whether or not he hired Peaches to kill Lt. Johnson, but Deegan denied hiring anyone and he didn't seem to be believing that Johnson was dead. It turns out Deegan knew that Johnson was still alive. Johnson hadn't left his cell phone behind like he was asked to and someone he was tracked down to his hotel where he was murdered. His food had been poisoned with a harsher byproduct of fentanyl and the substance was actually a lot more dangerous. Everyone that came in contact with the body or even the food had to take an Emergency Shower.

The team had gotten a sketch of what the false deliveryman looked like and they found him in security footage outside of the hotel, but they had to go ahead with their investigation with Gibbs. Gibbs had talked to Sydney again and Sydney said why he really came to see Gibbs. Gibbs's father, Sydney, and Moore had all served in WWII together. They were part of a larger group from their hometown that went and serves. So Sydney said that it had been twelve of them that came back and now it was just him that was still alive. Sydney said that he made a promise to his friends that the last man standing would collect all of their military ID bracelets. And Sydney needed help.

Sydney got the bracelets from some of the men and he needed the one that Gibbs wore. Gibbs hadn't been sure if he wanted to hand over the bracelet but he agreed to do it and he said that he helped get the rest of the bracelets as well. He left with Sydney and as they traveled together they got to talking. Gibbs revealed that the reason he didn't want to Sydney was that he had been upset. He had been upset that Sydney had been part of his life and then disappeared one day. Sydney hadn't wanted to go and he admitted as much. He said that he had been a heavy drinker and that Gibbs's mother kicked him because she blamed him for her husband's drinking.

Both men had been messed up by the war and so Sydney didn't want help when it was offered but was willing to go with Gibbs's mother demanded it because the woman was just trying to do what was right by her family. She got Sydney out of the picture and eventually, the family stopped talking about him. Gibbs remembered what it was like to have an uncle one day and for him to disappear into the next without any kind of explanation. But knowing that didn't go as he thought it did had helped. Gibbs came to forgive his Uncle Sydney for leaving and he helped him to track down the remaining bracelets as his team tried to close their case.

They traced the hitman back to a vending machine. It was a special vending machine that would drop candy containers filled with drugs if someone put three hundred dollars into the machine at once. By the time Gibbs returned, the team had even named the hitman. His name is Oliver Sherry and he agreed to talk for protection. He said that he killed Johnson because there had been a mistake. The machine had malfunctioned when Johnson tried to use it and instead of candy it had given him three hundred dollars. Johnson had felt so bad about it that he called the 800 number on the side of the machine to hand back the money and he had also wanted to know what happened.

Johnson was fed some story that the drug dealer knew wouldn't hold up and so that's why they decided to kill him. After Johnson died, it was Sherry's job to go clean out all of the machines and it led to him being caught. So he didn't care what happened. He said he wanted protection and it wasn't from Deegan. Deegan actually works for Peaches and that's why the sting didn't work. Peaches were the big boss and he used his cover story to escape an attempted murder charge. And he thought he got away with it but, with Sherry's testimony, they got him for his drug business as well as for the murder of Lt. Johnson.

And with Peaches and his people behind bars, Gibbs decided he should get to know his Uncle Sydney again.

Summary: After a malnourished and confused 9-year-old is found hiding in a storage unit, the team reopens an old missing persons case that Special Agent Ziva David had a personal interest in.

The episode starts with Kasie giving gifts to everyone. She doesn't bother remembering birthdays. Instead, she picks a random day of the year and gets people their birthday gifts then.

It's smart and she certainly gives good gifts, listening in to the things people say in passing. Well, that is it seems like she does until it comes to Torres, who gets an empty jar. You just know there's going to be a story there.

We don't get to find out what that story is right away, though. Gibbs has a case. A young girl has been found in a storage unit and this girl will only talk to Bishop. Lilly lives in a basement, has never been outside until now, and doesn't know what a coat is.

It doesn't take long to find out that Lilly's mom is still a prisoner in this locked basement. DNA from Lilly tells NCIS that the mom is a senior recruit, Morgan, who went missing 10 years ago. The case had been passed over to the local sheriff's office because Morgan hadn't been sworn in and her case wasn't technically NCIS jurisdiction.

The local office had found Morgan's case over a cliff with a charred body and contaminated DNA. The office decided to rule the case a suicide. It was something that ate at Gibbs and definitely something that ate at another member of the team. Yes, Ziva David was all over this.

Despite handing off the case, Ziva kept going with it. Gibbs and Palmer both knew she did. What they didn't know was that Ziva had an office she rented (a small hut at the back of someone's house) and all her journals are there. Ziva documented everything personal about a case, getting out the feelings.

From Ziva's continued search for Morgan, Bishop learns about Morgan's boyfriend. Ziva figured out that the boyfriend had never taken Morgan, so moved on with her search. However, now that the boyfriend is involved again, he gets to meet his daughter Lilly, who Lilly has viewed as Superman.

The case had been personal for Ziva, just like so many others. She needed to figure out who did it but that's what Gibbs is angry about. When Bishop brings it up, Gibbs states Rule 10: Never get personally involved on a case.

Sure, Gibbs takes cases personally but he can also step away when needed. People who get too involved end up killed, just like Ziva. Seeing that Bishop is getting involved, he sends her home. By the end, Gibbs realizes that Bishop was right and the rule is wrong.

While Bishop deals with the personal aspect of the case, McGee, Torres, and Kasie go in search of the mattress that Lilly had hidden in to get out of the house. Morgan had told her germaphobe captor, Robert, (who had killed his own brother after Lilly escaped) that the mattress was full of bedbugs and he took the mattress to the dump.

Kasie finds bird poop on the bottom of the mattress, which helps to narrow the search. That search is narrowed further when the local sheriff's office finally examines the remains from the car from 10 years ago and finds chemicals from a crematorium that Robert had worked at.

Sure enough, the team finds the basement but it's too late. Robert has taken Morgan.

Bishop is the one who finds them at Robert's uncle's house. Just as it looks like Morgan won't be saved, the team manage it and Robert is arrested. It's here that Torres realizes what his jar (which Kasie confirms he never asked for but he needs it) is for. He stores some of the lake water that Bishop and Morgan had gone into.

That's when Bishop heads out to see Robert at the hospital. She wants to read a letter to him that Morgan's mother had dictated to Ziva before her death. However, Robert has already heard it. A woman had taken the letter from Ziva's notebook and read it in the hospital.

Bishop takes a trip back to the office space Ziva had rented. Sure enough, the coat and scarf that Ziva had left hanging were now on the desk and chair. There was a note for Bishop, asking Bishop not to give away her secret to keep her family safe.

Summary: McGee reluctantly visits his former high school after the unique computer password he used as a teenager is linked to the murder of a department of defense contractor.

The team was being audited. It seems their spending was out of control and so someone was brought in to go over their books. Dick Sullivan wanted to know everything. He wanted to know when was the last time anyone cut costs around the office and he had even asked McGee about an old computer. It was the first computer that McGee ever built. He told the auditor that it was a personal computer and still, the man wanted paperwork before he let it go, but then the team got the call and so they all took the chance to get out of there. They were called to the scene of a murdered Navy contractor named Edward Kane and the victim had something in his pocket that belonged to McGee.

Kane had a notebook in his pocket. Then pages had been ripped out and so it had been blank for the most part, but there were indentations of McGee's first computer password still on it. McGee hadn't used that password since high school. He last used went his family was stationed in Hampstead and he hadn't been there that long. McGee also didn't know who Kane was before he reported to the scene. He had never met the man and they hadn't gone to school together. McGee said he remembered everyone from that time and he didn't recall Kane. He recalls when he first put the computer together because it had created a blackout, he recalled his friend who was both a girl and a friend, and he remembered the horrible high school teacher.

McGee had to run into that teacher again when he went back to high school. He and Torres learned that Kane tried contacting the place and so they were hoping to run into someone that could remember what Kane wanted to talk about, but that same horrible teacher was useless.

He was the guy that told McGee not to go into writing because he wasn't any good at it and so that had discouraged McGee right before he left. It took him years to return to writing and once he did he went on to write two bestsellers. So McGee had the last laugh. Not that meant much to the teacher who didn't remember him and claimed no one has called the school asking about a student from twenty years ago.

McGee knew that whatever was going on had something to do with his computer and so when he went home that night he decided to get running again. He worked on it and he had just turned on when he was contacted. He didn't know who else would be using such an outdated messaging system, but the person wrote to him and asked him if he was alone. He claimed he was because he wanted to see what this person had to say and so he had been lured out in the hallway where he was supposed to get a package. He went out there and found nothing. His wife, on the other hand, screamed from their apartment and so McGee came back to find someone robbing him. He killed the intruder and it turns out he killed Kane's killer.

The man McGee killed was Braxton Ballard. The guy had a long rap sheet and it had been his DNA found on Kane, but why the fascination with McGee? The team searched through Ballard's belongings and they found a drawing of McGee's computer. It seems Ballard had been hired to steal the computer and to kill Kane because Kane sniffing around. Except the team didn't know who hired Ballard and the only lead they had was a wonky computer. McGee asked Kasie to look at it and she said the computer kept trying to connect to some virus. She showed McGee an image of the virus and McGee recognized it instantly. He wrote the virus back in 1994 to attack the Department of Defense.

McGee's father the admiral had been strict on him. He thought the Navy would make McGee into a man and that McGee would put all things he loves away. Like tap dancing! McGee saved up all summer to buy tap shoes and his father burned them as some sort of lesson. It had angered a teenage McGee so much that he wrote the virus, but he had never used it and so doesn't know who would have access to it. He thought it could have been his old science teacher Mr. Lewis and it hadn't been. The man was guilty of an illegal gambling ring and that's it. It's why Lewis lied about the phone call from Kane because he didn't want anyone looking into him and so with the truth out there he decided to tell the truth.

Kane had called Mr. Lewis because he wanted to know an old IP address from the 1994 computer class. The man remembered it and he handed it over to McGee. McGee recognized it as well because it belonged to Chloe Greene, his first love. She had been there when he created the virus and she had been upset when McGee was being forced into the Naval Academy. It also explains why the code has been running since 1994 when they last saw each other. She probably ran the code in revenge and then forgot all about it but McGee was the only one that didn't think she was up to anything nefarious. The rest of the team believed that Chloe was a cyberterrorist and so they went looking for her.

Chloe hadn't been seen at her job or her apartment. She did though say a hidden message to McGee that said "SOS" and it had location marks next to it. So the team later found Chloe tied up in an RV. Chloe, as it turns out, had run the virus back in the day and she had tweaked it. She siphoned money out of the DOD and it was going to be put in a holding account. Only she didn't think it worked and so she forgot about it until one day she was kidnapped. Her kidnappers realized that the virus had been running for over twenty-five years and that it held millions. Kane found out about through it his job and told his boss. His boss then killed him in order to keep the money for himself and so the team discovered they weren't under audit after all.

Dick Sullivan just wanted the chance to steal McGee's old computer because only that exact computer could state where the money went.

And so the team got to arrest the man that's been harassing them for days.

Summary: The team investigate a fatal man overboard case at sea; Torres is assigned to mentor three high school students.

A few teenagers won the chance to mentor with the NCIS by writing powerful essays, but they didn't think that as a part of their prize they would have to spend time with Special Agent Torres. Torres didn't sign up for it and he sure as hell didn't want to do it. He had been forced into the job by Director Vance himself. The director thought Torres needed structure as well as punishment for showing up late for work and so he took him with the kids. The same kids that were supposed to mentor with the likes of McGee or Bishop and unfortunately they weren't there. The team had gotten called out to the scene on a Navy ship.

There was a tradition in the Navy in which the newbies went through a hazing. There was a bunch of them going through one on the ship when they noticed a man overboard and pulled Petty Officer Special Class Kendrick Allston out of the water. The rest of the crew had jumped in after Allston and to their dismay, there was no need to resuscitate him. Allston was dead. What was odd was the circumstances surrounding his death because it looked suspicious. Allston was a search and rescue swimmer. He's trained to jump off a ship and survive meaning he shouldn't have drowned, but the bump at the back of the head could perhaps provide an explanation.

The team investigated whether someone had attacked Allston. He was at the top of his class and was in the running of possibly becoming admiral one day. There was no reason why anyone should have a problem with him yet the team suspected that someone must have been angry enough to smash in the back of his head. They had asked Palmer to do a full autopsy and what he later found had been odd as well. Palmer found out that the cause of death was a heart attack. He said Allston experienced a heart attack at a relatively young age and so he asked Kasie to find out what could have lead to this supposed heart attack.

Kasie actually went on to find drugs in Allston's system. He took something called a trishot which was a mixture of drugs and it also didn't sound like the sailor. Allston was considered to be a straight shooter. He always did the right thing and he would never have taken drugs. His CO said it and even his sister said it. His sister said Allston wasn't universally liked because he wasn't afraid to report his fellow sailor if that other person was doing something he wasn't supposed to and the team found out that was true. They learned that Allston reported on one guy for taking drugs and that the guy was thrown out of the Navy.

The team talked to him and he claimed it hadn't been that bad. The guy smoked a joint in South America and had claimed that he could have done much worse but didn't. The former serviceman didn't see what he did as wrong and he laughed when he heard someone had probably drugged Allston. Only the team's chief suspect was on land when Allston had been murdered at sea. The team either needed to prove their guy had a friend drug Allston or look for another suspect and so they considered other suspects. Bishop had stayed on the ship with the CO and she was asking him more questions about Allston when they heard the sirens.

Another man had gone overboard and it turns out he suffered from an overdose of trishot as well. The odds of two men od'ing in the exact same way and on the same day was just too high to consider it coincidental. The second man had had his room tossed and the drugs he had in his system was found in his energy drinks. It was the same drinks that everyone else on the ship took to stay awake and alert. It could have been added to Allston's drinks and that's how it got into his system, but the team remembered that Allston and the latest victim shared a room. And every drink in the joint room that the men shared had been affected.

The roommate was woken up and interrogated about the drinks, but he said that they were originally Allston's. Allston received them in a care package from his sister and hadn't liked the taste. He thought it was disgusting and had handed them over to his roommate who had enjoyed them. Then when he almost died, he figured out what happened to Allston and informed NCIS. NCIS later found out that Allston's sister worked with a manufacturer of the energy drinks and that she used her job as a cover for drug dealing. She hadn't meant to send her brother drinks that would kill him. It had been an accident and once she sent the wrong package it had been too late to tell her brother why he couldn't drink those specific ones.

And so Allston's sister killed him accidentally. She didn't mean it and now she'll face life in prison, but once her case was concluded, Torres took the time to really show around the teenagers and introduce them to life as an NCIS Agent.

One of the kids was the son of the late Agent Gerard and he and Torres actually bonded in the short time they knew each other.

Summary: Jimmy is torn between family and work after his father-in-law asks him to tamper with evidence from the team's current murder investigation.

A couple hiking came across a mauled body. The body was that of Petty Officer Third Class Logan Braddish and it appeared that he had been attacked by an animal, but the only thing big enough to fit the description would be a black bear and they usually don't attack humans. In fact, most animals tend to shy away from human activity unless provoked and so the team tried to piece together if maybe the petty officer disturbed a bear with its cubs. Such a situation would mean the bear felt her cubs were under threat and would try to protect the only way they understand — which was to attack. It would at least explain the vicious way the petty officer died. He had claw marks all over his face as well as body and there was a claw found in one of his wounds. And so that could have easily broken off during a bear attack.

Palmer had wanted to be sure and so he brought the body back to his lab. He took a few samples that he wanted Kasie to run and he was going over the body again when he received a surprise visit. His father-in-law Ed said he was in the neighborhood and thought he should stop by. It was unusual for him to stop by that and so Palmer tried to ignore it at first. He was still going over the body when he noticed one of the claw marks looked like a knife wound, but that's when Ed spoke up. Ed begged Palmer to claim the knife wound was a bear attack and so Palmer covered for him. He told Gibbs that it still looked like a bear attack and he pretended that it was until he got the chance to talk to Ed alone.

Ed owed him an explanation and Palmer wasn't going to let it go until he knew why he was covering up a murder. So he waited and finally, Ed began to be honest with him. It turns out that Ed has a gambling fetish. He liked to bet big money and he recently lost fifty thousand at an illegal gambling game. Ed said he tried to work out a payment plan and that the guy he owes didn't want money. He instead wanted Ed as an undertaker to cover up a murder. It was up to Ed to fake a bear attack on the body of the young man and the cleaner didn't want this body to be traced back to him. It was a massive coverup and Ed had done a reasonable job, but he overlooked certain mistakes that Palmer picked up on and unfortunately Palmer had already alerted others about the discrepancies.

Palmer's samples to Kasie came back clean of bear saliva. She knew that no bear could attack someone so cleanly and so she turned to a returning Ducky for help. Ducky came back from his tour early and he wanted to be useful. He tried to assist with the autopsy and after being turned down by Palmer he figured he could work with Kasie. The two of them were bound to figure out what was going on and so Palmer started to panic. He went to Ed about what they could do and they thought they had a plan because Ed knew old man DiNozzo. DiNozzo was known to Palmer and he asked his friend's father for help. DiNozzo said that he could come through for the guys, but Ed hadn't been entirely truthful with either of them.

Ed forgot to mention that the cleaner has his son Stevie. Stevie was being hostage somewhere and Ed wasn't going to get his son back until the matter was solved with the dead navy officer. To make things worse, it had been Ed's idea to make the death look like a bear attack. His actual orders had been to cremate the body and so Ed was the one that had this outlandish idea to fear a rare occurrence with a bear. It was also revealed that Ed was horrible at poker. He had so many tells that it had been easy to defeat him and that's why no one understood why eh kept raising the bet when all knew he had a defeating hand. Ed has been nothing but a big pain in the neck since he came to see Palmer and so Palmer finally had enough.

Palmer stopped Gibbs from informing Braddish's family that he died from a bear attack. He didn't want the family to believe in the lie and so he came out with the truth. Palmer told Gibbs everything and all that Gibbs asked for was honesty going forward. It was going to be some time before Gibbs could trust Palmer without question, but they both had to make things right for the victim and so NCIS went to go arrest this dry cleaner. They went to his place of business and found the cleaner dead. He had been murdered and there was no sign of Stevie. Stevie even seemed like a good suspect and so Gibbs interrogated Ed with Palmer's help. The two of them got Ed to admit that he had lied again.

It had been Stevie with the gambling problem. He had lost over two hundred grand and Ed thought he could cover the debt by betting big at a different game, but Ed was a horrible player and so he did was make their debt worse. Neither he nor his son knew what to do until they were approached by someone that claimed they would rid them of debt in exchange for a favor. This guy who identified himself as Kenny was really Keung Deng. He was from a wealthy family back in Singapore and he liked to party hard. He got kicked out of school when he was arrested several times for disorderly conduct and since then he's disappeared off the map. The last time he showed up he had a dead petty officer in the boot of his car that he wanted Ed to get rid of.

Ed was supposed to cremate the body and he didn't because he thought a young man like that must have family that deserved to know he died. But Ed was still in trouble for what he did and that says nothing of Stevie. Stevie was still missing and the team believed Deng had him. They tried to find Deng and were told he skipped town because he owed everyone money. Deng it seems had been financially cut off and that sounded like his father was aware of how much trouble he was in. It was the same father that willing to sneak Deng out of the country and so the team had Ed speak to the man's father. As one father to another, Ed was able to make Mr. Deng see that shielding their adult children means they'll never grow up or face the consequences of their actions.

The location of Deng was handed over to NCIS and they were able to rescue Stevie, but the two fathers involved in the matter both realized that now was the time for their children to finally grow up.

And tonight Ducky told Gibbs that it was time for Palmer to become the Chief Medical Examiner because Palmer deserved it and Ducky felt it was time to retire.

Summary: Vance is notified by the Pentagon that the nuclear submarine Gibbs and Bishop are aboard to conduct a murder investigation has gone radio silent.

A sailor died in the North Atlantic Sea. US Navy SEAL Petty Officer Robert White was participating in a routine dive when the men and his women on his team noticed that he wasn't moving. They dragged White's body back onto the submarine and tried to revive him, but it was already too late. White pronounced dead and his death warranted an investigation. NCIS was asked to work this case at the last minute and it cut into their time with Ducky. Ducky was retiring. Everyone had wanted to be there for the doctor's last day and they hated how a case came in the way of that. Palmer needed to remove the body from the ship and carry it back to the lab. And both Gibbs and Bishop had to stay behind to carry out interviews.

There was a slight drawback to Bishop to staying on the ship. She has this fear about drowning and so she had tried to get the interviews over with as fast as possible. Only the ship began submerging while they were still onboard. Both Bishop and Gibbs knew that the ship wasn't allowed to do that as they were investigating a murder and that made them question the decision of the USS Memphis's captain. The COO was risking their lives and they demanded an explanation. They asked the captain what was happening, and he said something vague about receiving direct orders. The submarine had an order that demanded they dive and that meant they weren't going up to the surface anytime soon.

The captain thought that would be that with the agents and it wasn't. They still had people to interview and they demanded that they continue to do their jobs, but the captain said that his people shouldn't be kept from their jobs. He said as long as they didn't get in anyone's way that they could do as they wanted and if they interfered then he threatened to shoot them out of a cannon. The captain was solely focused on his orders and there was no reasoning with him. The NICS agents did their best to stay out of his way and they went ahead with interviewing everyone that went on that dive. They spoke to two divers and both said that they didn't see or hear anything suspicious. They also thought White's death was accidental until Gibbs received a message from Kasie.

Kasie managed to send the message before the dive and so that's how they agents learned that White was murdered. Someone tampered with his overpressure valve on his oxygen tank. It couldn't have been accidental either because wire deliberately cut and so both Gibbs and Bishop were trapped on a sub with a murderer. They asked one of the divers about that because they had a file detailing how White and he had bad blood, but it was anything serious. The two men fought about who was the best Spiderman and they were both wrongs because the best Spiderman is clearly Tom Holland. At least according to Bishop and so she was willing to stop looking at White's fellow diver as a suspect.

Gibbs tried informing the captain about their recent findings, but he had been quick to dismiss what he said because he claimed he had to focus on their orders and so that's when NCIS had enough. They asked the second-in-charge what these orders were and they were told that the submarine was asked to prepare itself for war. Neither Gibbs nor Bishop knew who they were at war with and they were concerned. They thought it was a little too convenient how the sub was preparing for war right after White's murder and so they questioned if the two events were connected. They received a tip about there being something that White had wanted to show his peers and so they searched White's room until they found it.

They found a book on the ship's electrical engineering. There wasn't a reason for someone like White to have this book and so they traced it back to the kitchen staff. They talked to the cook who said he received orders from the COB Shaw. The COB then claimed that she asked White to get the book because she couldn't be seen having it. She had some questions because she saw the man that handles the weapons behind an electrical panel one day and wanted to know what he was doing, but she didn't want to make the connection between that event and White's murder. She said she didn't say anything because she knew her crew and the man they were questioning had been her friend for fifteen years.

Weapons Officer Justin Hardy was important to the COB Shaw and so she had two federal agents locked up, but then they got out of their prison and made their ways to the bridge. They believe that Hardy was involved in something nefarious and that he had to kill White to cover what he was really doing. The only thing that could make sense to the two seasoned agents was what if the war hadn't been declared. Orders like that would take some time to pass to the submarine and so it was odd that everything was happening so quickly. The agents accused Hardy of faking the orders and declared that he murdered White. They didn't have any evidence to corroborate their take on the situation and so they got pretty lucky with their team up on the surface.

The team was warned that a nuclear submarine had disappeared off the map and that they weren't taking orders, but they were able to trace this mystery back to Walter Miller. Miller was an engineer that became a hermit seemingly overnight and it happened once he started going on and on about the war should be taken to Russia. This guy was sending false messages to the submarine and stalling the real ones from ever reaching the ship. So it was a good thing when Torres and McGee found him. They were able to send in real orders and got the submarine to stand down. They even threw in the part how they weren't really at war so that told the captain that the agents had a point. He couldn't trust his Weapons Officer.

The captain also asked that the agents kindly escort Hardy off the ship and as he was being carted away the man began sprouting about how there was a war coming one day whether anyone was willing to admit. It seems he went into a depression when he lost his whole family in a car accident and being in a vulnerable position made him susceptible to a man like Miller.

Summary: After Torres wakes up on a dilapidated fishing boat covered in blood, the team helps him piece together the last 12 hours.

Torres wasn't at work. Everyone assumed he was running late until they shared stories and realized that something was off. It wasn't unusual for Torres to forget something, but to forget he was meeting McGee for breakfast and Bishop to go over paperwork didn't sound like him. He even missed a call from Gibbs and never tried calling his boss back. It had worried the team enough that they pinged Torres's phone and it revealed his location in Virginia Beach. Torres was later found on a boat with no memory of how he got there. He had a headache and was found half-dressed. He was asked if he had gone out partying or had a few drinks and Torres said "no".

Torres gave up drinking a while ago. He could see that he was developing a problem with drowning his problems in a bottle and so he was taking a break. The most he does nowadays was hit the gym and that was the last he remembered. He had gone to his regular gym for his usual routine with his trainer and that was it. Torres couldn't recall anything else and his team was desperate for answers because blood had been found on his shirt. It wasn't his and he got a loan from McGee, but all the unanswered questions were starting to get to Torres. He wanted to know what happened to him. He let Palmer take his blood and then against doctor's orders he decided to help with the investigation.

Torres went to his old gym where he ran into Gibbs and Bishop. They had talked to his trainer who said he was running late that day and that he called Torres to tell him to get started without him, but the man said that Torres had seemed like self and that's why he had been surprised to find out that Torres hadn't waited for him. He got to the gym and Torres was gone. He also didn't answer any of the man's phone calls and so the team knew that something must have happened after the call, but they didn't know what it was until they asked Torres if he still had keys to his motorcycle and he tried beeping his "Betty".

His motorcycle was making an odd noise and the reason it was doing that was that it was thrown into the dumpster. It was smashed up and found near the body of a dead woman. The woman was identified as Jessica Ho. She was known to drug user and she wasn't even a member at the gym. She had gotten a day pass which she used on the night Torres disappeared. Torres had never met Jessica before and so he didn't know why she was killed or why she had been found with his motorcycle. He was beginning to get desperate about finding out what happened to him when Kasie finally had answers.

Kasie told Torres that he had been roofied. Someone drugged him and that's why he couldn't remember anything but why him? Torres wasn't an easy target and so why go after someone like him? Also, things grew odder with the case because the ship that Torres was found on was a ghost ship. It was considered to be lost at sea. His owners that it sunk and then the owners disappeared. They could be traced back to a shell company that was created for the purpose this one fishing boat and so they asked someone in the know like Commander Sam Hendrix about this boat. He said that no descript fishing boats were used for smuggling because the people behind it realized that the faster and flashier boats drew unwanted attention.

Kasie was also asked to go over this boat once they realized it was most likely a smuggler ship. She was going to run a chemical analysis to see what was being smuggled and as she was doing this the rest of the team were asking Torres some uncomfortable questions. It seems there was a surveillance camera of him leaving with Jessica. She was smiling and flirting with him, but despite that Torres knew he would never kill a woman. He had his team keep looking and they eventually found out that he hadn't gone off willing with Jessica. Jessica was the one that drugged him. She also bribed his trainer to show up late for his session with Torres and so that's when she was able to corner Torres alone.

Jessica drugged Torres and lured him to the garage where she probably handed him over to her conspirators, but then she was killed once she became a liability and no one knows what happened to Torres next. He turned to Kasie for answers and she revealed that what she found on the boat concluded that it was being used to smuggle diamonds. The company that had owned it had triggered a memory for Torres and he realized he knew Brueger Marine Lines. He had worked a joint task force mission with the Coast Guard to take down smugglers and he had thought the case was over. And it wasn't because five years later it was just now coming to court.

The Coast Guard still had the diamonds they collected when they shut down Brueger, but when NCIS went to go check on the contraband they found it gone. It had been checked out by Torres and so the team finally figured out why he was needed. He was needed because his eyes were the only ones that could have opened the vault and so Torres thought he had personally gone to the building. He hadn't. He was instead drugged with something to make his eyes huge and then someone took a picture of it to open the vault. The team searched for their culprit and they found her. She was the secretary to Commander Hendrix and she was trying to keep her hands clean until she could sell the diamonds back to Brueger.

Nena Easterling had hidden the diamonds in Hendrix's shark tank and she was arrested the second the diamonds were recovered.

She tried to make her excuses but what she did to Torres wasn't going to win her any friends.

Torres had been happy to have his name clear and so he was just sad it came at the cost of his relationship with Bishop because neither was going to forget her mistrust so soon.

Director Vance also caught his "girlfriend" meeting with the CIA and so he demanded answers from Officer Wesley Clark. Clark admitted to spying on Vance but he said that he did it because he had to be sure of the director. He wanted to know if Vance could be trusted with information about a secret account and the reason why he had to test Vance was that this secret account that held millions belonged to Vance's boss — the Secretary of Defense.

Summary: The team searches for an active shooter following a lockdown at a naval hospital.

There was an active shooter at the hospital. This means that under normal circumstances it would have been up to local police and later maybe even the FBI to deal with, but this case came to NCIS because it was a naval hospital and needed to be handled in house. The team was in charge of apprehending the shooter. He was identified as being Caucasian and wearing all black. The rest of the descriptions tended to vary according to the many witnesses and so the team focused on what they could. They checked the grounds to see in which direction the shooter fled and they thought that Sloane could help them create a profile. They reached out to her and asked her to help and she turned them down. She said she had to recuse herself from the case and didn't go much into detail over why.

The team tried to understand, but Gibbs had someone look into everyone that was at the hospital and one name came across that Gibbs instantly knew was connected to Sloane. It was the name, Faith Tolliver. She was Sloane's biological daughter and she was put up for adoption. She has never met Sloane and Sloane was hoping not to run into her. She just came by the hospital to check if her daughter was the only casualty and she wasn't. It was actually another woman by the name of Diana Sanchez that died and so Gibbs wasn't going to intervene or force Sloane to see her daughter if she didn't have to accept the case soon took a turn. They checked security cameras and the only person that got a good look at the shooter's face was Faith. Faith saw him right before she went into surgery with a patient and she stayed in the OR until the surgery was over with.

In other words, she was locked away when the shooter went on his rampage and he had no chance of getting to her. So Faith needed to be brought in. It came as a shock to Sloane and she still wanted to distance herself. She told Gibbs that she didn't want to be in the room when he was questioning Faith but she had so many things she wanted him to remember when he interviews someone that recently went through trauma and so she eventually had to be in the room. Sloane saw Faith and got to shake her hand. She also went easy on her. Perhaps too easy because she was focused more on making Faith comfortable than she was on catching the shooter and so Gibbs found himself playing bad cop to Sloane's good cop. Sloane told Faith that she didn't remember when it wasn't her fault and Gibbs told her to at least try to create a sketch of the shooter because she might remember more over time.

It seems that extra push yielded a good enough sketch that the team had a suspect. They were told the sketched looked like eighteen-year-old Evan Sykes. Sykes lived with his dad and luckily the older man was found alive, but Sykes wasn't at the house and to make things worse he also restocked his gun before he left. The team found the empty ammunition box and therefore they knew he wasn't done yet. He was going to shoot up another place and so they checked his laptop. There was just one problem. The laptop has a virus on it and that makes everything he looked or wrote seem like gibberish. Kasie had to attack the virus and see what it's one it before the team could act. And so it took a while before Kasie uncyphered it to reveal that Sykes had been looking at an elementary school near the hospital.

The team put extra around the school and they brought in Sykes's father to get a grasp on his mindset. They wanted to know why Sykes was doing all of this, but his father couldn't help them. He said that he doesn't know his son anymore and that things changed between them when they lost Christopher. Christopher was the older brother and he had been a marine. He has also had a problem with drinking and driving because he killed a whole family while intoxicated. Christopher was sentenced to years in prison and this had been hard on Sykes. Sykes blames the Marines because he thought that they should have advocated for a lighter sentence in Christopher's case and so that's why he was last seen wearing his brother's uniform. He wanted to blame the world for what happened with Christopher because he refused to admit it was his brother's own fault.

Christopher ruined his own life and now Sykes has gone and done the same thing, but their father knew nothing and he wasn't much help. The last part truly frustrated Torres because Torres couldn't believe the gall of this family. They kept thinking about what happened to Christopher and they didn't spare a thought to what happened to his victims. Torres lashed out before he knew it and he warned by Gibbs that he needed to calm down. The team had to look on their own for why Sykes was targeting these places and they couldn't figure it on their own. They tried everything and nothing clicked until they talked to Officer Moseby. Moseby was an off-duty cop when he went to have pancakes with his wife who works at the hospital. The two of them were just enjoying their breakfast when the shooting happened and unfortunately, Mosbey was injured but he was able to return fire.

Moseby shot Sykes in the arm and its what forced the teenager to flee the scene, but the teen didn't go to the elementary school and so the team figured he was too badly injured when Mosbey came out of surgery and gave evidence. He had never heard of the name Sykes except there was a connection. Sykes had gone to that hospital intending to kill Mosbey. It hadn't been some random shooting and it was actually a coordinated hit. Mosbey had been the first responder on the scene when Christopher killed that family and because they were all dead it had been left to Mosbey to make an impact statement at Christopher's trial. Christopher was coming up for probation and Sykes didn't want Moseby to ruin it for his brother. He followed Mosbey and saw that his best shot at him was either when he was with his kids or his wife and he chose the latter.

Mosbey also didn't make the connection because Christopher has a different last name. The team was advised by Sloane that if they took what they found to Sykes's father that the man would give up his son and she had been right. This was truly a family matter and the team had to get them to turn on each other for their own good. The man told them which motel his son was staying in and they found Sykes there, but there was also a moment in which Torres wanted Sykes to grab for his gun because he wanted to kill him and he eventually let it go because he knew to live would be so much worse for him. Sykes hadn't cared about anyone else besides his brother and he was willing to kill a bunch of random and innocent people if it got him what he wanted. And now both he and his brother will never know freedom again.

Summary: The team investigates the murder of a Marine Major believed to have been killed in the 9/11 attack on the Pentagon after human remains are discovered at a construction site.

A construction crew found human remains at their work site. The site was being turned into luxury condos and it had been a vacant lot for years beforehand, but the crew knew they needed to call it in and they made sure to contact the right people when they noticed the uniform the victim had been wearing. It had been a Marine's uniform. The uniform and the dentals that were taken at the scene proved that the body was that of Marine Major Ellen Wallace. Wallace reportedly killed on 9/11 during the attack on the Pentagon. She worked in the building and disappeared that very same day. No one thought anything of it because there were plenty of bodies that haven't been found yet and so no one questioned Wallace's disappearance.

Wallace even received extra attention from the media because she was the daughter of retired Marine General James Wallace. Wallace was a big name back then and he still was. He was a guest lecturer at the Military College and he was known to Gibbs. Gibbs was engaged to Wallace and he held great respect for her father. It's why he wanted to break the news himself. Gibbs went to the college and he spoke to General Wallace about what they learned. The man's daughter was found miles away from where she was allegedly killed in a terrorist attack and unfortunately only one of the things had been untrue. Wallace had been murdered. She fought her attacker and had been killed when she suffered from blunt force trauma.

Someone also took lengths to cover up her death and so Gibbs couldn't tell the general much. The man had wanted a name because before he couldn't just blame one person before and now he could. He wanted to know who killed his daughter and he said that this person has been getting away with their crime for eighteen years, but Gibbs said that they were going to them and that's all he was willing to say about an ongoing investigation. Gibbs didn't return to his team and tell him about his personal connection to the victim so the team had to piece that together themselves. They found photos of Gibbs with Wallace and they were going to ignore it at first until they found evidence they couldn't ignore.

There was blood on Wallace's clothes and that blood belonged to Gibbs. Gibbs needed to be questioned about his involvement with the victim and so his own team threw him in an interrogation room. Sloane volunteered to talk to Gibbs and she got answers from him. He was asked about the blood and he explained he had injured his finger while he was building his boat. It hadn't been much to him and Wallace had stepped in to clean it with her uniform. Gibbs was also asked about his relationship with Wallace and he said that she was an ex. They were together and then Gibbs broke it off. He didn't think he was admitting anything and so that's when Sloane said this relationship didn't follow the standard.

Gibbs never ended things. He would wait until his significant other had enough of him and she would be the one to walk away, so Gibbs saying he called it quits wasn't the usual. It must have meant that Wallace had been different. She was someone that got close to him and with her, it was him that ran away scared. Gibbs was asked about her and he chose to walk out rather than answer. McGee tried to stop him and when he couldn't he told the other man that he was off the case. McGee didn't want to do it and he only did so because it was a procedure. He and the team needed to clear Gibbs's name before he could be allowed back onto the case and to do that they asked someone to get the files on the Pentagon.

They wanted to know when Wallace went in and when she came back out. They had to bribe their resident expert with tickets to Comic-Con and only then she says that Wallace never left the building. She went to work on the tenth and that was the last time anyone saw her alive. No one saw her on the morning of the eleventh and the team believed that she did, in fact, die there, but then someone moved her body and they wanted to know who. They were allowed to bring Gibbs back in because he didn't have Pentagon clearance to get into the building and this meant he was no longer a suspect. He was still asked about the last time Wallace called him and he said that he didn't answer the phone because he thought she was going to talk about getting back together.

Gibbs has been feeling guilty about ignoring that phone call for almost twenty years and that's why he didn't want to discuss it with the team. It wasn't because he was hiding anything and so there was no need for Gibbs to sit out the rest of the investigation. He just wasn't sure he wanted to come back. He was still going through some things and so the team followed the other leads they had. They found out that Wallace had a secret email and that she used to it set up rendezvous with one person. This person, Mr. Morrison, was a journalist. He was asked about Wallace and he admitted that they had been working together. Morrison said that they had been working to see if American soldiers were responsible for a raid that killed several civilians in Kosovo.

The soldier that was in charge of the Americans at that time was General Wallace and so Gibbs went back to him to ask about it, but it turns out the general knew what his daughter was doing because he asked her to do it. The general would never have ordered a raid and he had been hearing rumors. He wanted to know if someone did kill a bunch and if so who was it. The team investigated the whole thing and unfortunately, they found out it had been Daniel Kent. Kent served the general in Kosovo and became a close friend. He and his fellow Marines got drunk and they cause multiple casualties. Kent then tried to hide it from the general and so when the news came out some other way — Kent tried to kill the story altogether by killed Wallace

Wallace was buried in the empty lot not far from his old apartment and the team already had evidence on the Kosovo matter. So they were able to arrest Kent and they finally got justice for Wallace. She was later buried and the general had an easier time of saying goodbye hat Gibbs did.

Gibbs said nothing good ever came from him loving someone and this has only reaffirmed that for him.

Summary: Kasie solves a 30-year-old murder case, but a loophole in the legal system may set the suspect free; McGee visits an elite technology company that is offering him a highly paid position.

McGee was headhunted by Silicone Valley. He wasn't sure if he wanted to take the job and so he decided to go out there on a visit, but everyone at the office thought he was spending time with his family. Its why they didn't question his sudden day off. They figured he needed as much time with his family as possible and so no one pushed him to help out with trial. The team was asked to give testimony because the federal initiative that Kasie spearheaded had led to an arrest. She wanted all DNA even if it was from cold cases to be tested through modern systems and a hair follicle found in the 1989 Ice Cream Murder case revealed their culprit was Stuart Crum. Crum poisoned and sold a bunch of ice cream bars. And it caused several children to be sick as well as killed, one child.

Tommy Larson was a teenager. He was at the cross between wanting to be an adult and still very much a child. Tommy also borrowed money from his father to buy an ice cream bar, but his father found him later on struggling to breathe and was unable to save his son. His father was in court now and he wanted justice for Tommy. The team wanted justice for each child that was hurt and they have plenty of evidence. The hair follicle was in a great condition when it was found and it connected to Crum because he was once a suspect in an armed robbery two years ago. Crum was then brought in and interrogated. He admitted that his wife left him for a naval sailor and that he wanted someone to blame. Its why he used his job as a driver of an ice cream truck to hurt others.

Crum didn't know a child would die. He confessed to just wanting to make a bunch of them be sick and from time of his confession to now he still didn't show any remorse. It was believed he was a sociopath who didn't need to kill more than one kid because one was enough for him. Crum's profile said that he has a god complex and poisoning children had satisfied this need, but Crum now wants to walk away from his guilty plea and he has his lawyer on the attack. Attorney Madson tried to come after Bishop's testimony and he only changed his mind about going after Kasie because he found something else to toss the case. There was, unfortunately, a clerical error when Crum's DNA was left in the system. He gave a sample for the robbery and charges it should have been destroyed when he was cleared of all charges.

It was the law in Maryland. Crum's DNA shouldn't have been included in the system and if it hadn't been then there was no way that NCIS would have found him. With this information in his back-pocket, Madson declared that NCIS has nothing and that a mistrial should be declared. The judge was forced to go agree with him even if he didn't like it and so Crum was allowed to go. He was a free man and that angered Tommy's father. Former Navy Petty Officer First Class Kyle Larson told Gibbs that if NCIS wouldn't get justice for his son that he'd do it himself and Gibbs tried to warn him off from doing anything stupid but later that night Crum was killed. He was strangled before he could put up a fight and everyone at NCIS suspected Larson.

NCIS wasn't upset when they found Crum's body. They actually joked that now they've got their DNA because they didn't know how they were going to make their case against Crum the second time, but they still had to investigate the case and therefore they had to suspect Larson. Larson had been drinking and a pill bottle was found at his home. It was unfortunate because Crum was strangled and then pills were shoved down his throat as a means of making it look like a suicide. Larson was asked about his own addiction issues and he claimed that he had turned over a new leaf. He said that he hadn't killed Crum and that he had proof. He was talking to his daughter when Crum was murdered.

The team questioned Jennifer Larson or Jen as she likes to be called. She said that she called her father that night after ten years of not speaking. Jen had always thought her father had let everything go when Tommy died and she didn't realize just how angry he was until she felt anger herself when Crum was released because of a mistrial. It had been an injustice to be her brother and she now sympathizes with her dad. Larson told her that if she kept calling that he would give up drinking and so she didn't think her father went from that phone call to killing someone. It didn't seem plausible. The team thought so as well and they went digging through Crum's life to see if they could find other suspects.

Kasie later found that Crum has a Splendifida account. She needed to ask the company to let her see what was in Crum's Cloud, but the company wasn't going to accept any request at the moment. Splendifida was the company that McGee claimed he was viewing and in fact, he was spying on them. The company was tied to the money that the SecDEF had in a secret account. McGee broke in and found out that the money had been moved and that three million was recently withdrawn. He didn't know why that was and he got caught looking. He was in trouble when his team came to his defense and got a judge to sign off on a warrant that they claimed included McGee's search. McGee was freed and Kasie got access to Crum's cloud.

She didn't find anything worth hiding, but she did use Crum's other Splendifida tech to find a video of someone checking out his house and it turns out to be the bailiff in his mistrial. The man said that he believed in justice and that may be, but he didn't kill Crum because it was the right thing to do. He did it because he was paid by the secret account that again led back to the United States Secretary of Defense.

Gibbs and the Director when to go see CIA Officer Clark about what they learned, but they walked into his home to find him dead and a fellow CIA officer standing over his body.

Summary: After the team finds a secret government bank account that's funding a nationwide network of vigilante justice, they must determine who is acting as judge and jury.

We saw the judge and the jury last week. Now it's time to find out who ordered the execution of the ice cream killer. Turns out, it's none other than Judge Deakin, who oversaw the case that freed the man on a technicality.

Deakin oversees a cabal of five judges who vote to dispense justice when the legal system fails to punish the guilty. And the person they unanimously vote to target this time? None other than Leroy Jethro Gibbs, for the murder of Pedro Juan Hernandez.

Yep, Gibbs's past is about to catch up with him, and so is Vance's, but much more recent.

Mallory actually did kill Clark, but she claims self-defense. After he kicked her off the Vance case, he downgraded her security clearance, costing her her job. So she started following him to ask to be let back in. At Gibbs's, he pulled his gun on her, and they exchanged fire.

Also, she says she's in love with Vance, but it's clear that they could only have a happy ending in another life. In this life, the spy who loved Vance is about to get interrogated by the CIA. Gotta say, I wish we'd seen a bit more of their relationship so we'd be extra-invested in their residual feelings, but we still get the gist.

Although we know what's up with the shadowy cabal of judges, NCIS is still in the dark. And that's where the secretary of defense comes in, and listen, I'm just going to call him Skinner, okay? As Sloane says later in this episode, the heart wants what the heart wants, and my heart wants the man who protected Mulder and Scully all those years to actually be a good guy.

So SecDef Skinner shows up with all the records from the secret offshore account, which he claims someone's been accessing under his name. He says the account came to be post-9/11 when the country was eager to fight terrorism overseas but didn't care so much about paperwork. Like Clark before him, SecDef Skinner looked into Vance and Gibbs and discovered they're both exemplary men, hence the request for help.

Then their parallel investigations start to merge. Bishop and Torres interview Deakin at the incredibly cool vintage bowling alley he restored himself, asking if he knows who might've hired his bailiff to murder the ice cream killer. Deakin's interested that they don't think that the bailiff was working alone. And while he's not condoning law-breaking, after 40 years on the bench, he hates not seeing justice done.

Then Kasie and McGee find evidence in the bank records that show six other withdrawals from the mystery account, all around the time that high-profile murderers who were freed on a technicality ended up dead across the country. It's like Dexter digitized his act and took it nationwide.

At this point, Deakin's Dexter network swings into action, and someone takes shots at Gibbs as he carries four take-out coffees from the diner to his truck. His only warning is a photo of Hernandez left on his dashboard.

He survives, of course, and we next see him carefully digging the bullets out of his door and screening Bishop's calls. The Young Turks are worried that he never turned up, so Bishop heads to the diner. A waitress tells her about the shooting and says Gibbs drove off rather than wait for the police, so she didn't mention his involvement.

So why is Gibbs keeping secrets? McGee, Bishop, and Torres gather in the morgue to discuss it, and Palmer tells them, "Anytime you need a safe, secluded space for gossip, autopsy's all yours. It's... really lonely down here." Then Gibbs enters, and Palmer immediately disavows all knowledge of their meeting.

Gibbs has a graze on his cheek that he chalks up to car trouble, and then Ducky arrives to tell them that all the Dexter network judges clerked for Deakin.

So wait. All the vigilante justice judges are directly connected to Deakin, and they all approved assassinations in their own jurisdictions? That's some "Hey, copper, stop me before I kill again" obvious dot-connecting there. Deakin's Digital Dexters need to cover their tracks a little better.

Gibbs pays a solo visit to Deakin's bowling alley, tossing the Hernandez photo down and telling him to man up and do his own dirty work. Deakin suggests that they both put their thumbs on the scale for justice, but Gibbs rejects that comparison. Still, the judge points out that Gibbs is there alone, no doubt too ashamed to tell his team the truth.

Outside, Torres watches from his parked car as Gibbs leaves the bowling alley. The next day, he fills McGee and Bishop in, and they practically do rock, paper, scissors to decide who has to confront Gibbs about his secret-keeping.

McGee fired him once so he doesn't feel like pressing his luck, so all three approach Gibbs with serious faces as Bishop nervously taps a pencil against her hand. Gibbs studies them, says, "NOPE," and heads for the Elevator of Schemes and Secrets.

They follow him on, and McGee throws down a power move by hitting the stop button, asking if Gibbs really thinks that anything he could say would surprise them after what they've been through.

"I killed the man who killed my family," Gibbs says. "And Deakin knows." Then he steps off the elevator, leaving them speechless. I am so glad he told them! Stronger together, right? But he does turn back to growl, "Don't ever follow me again."

Kasie then breaks the news that phone records show SecDef Skinner has been in regular contact with Mallory. When asked, Skinner says he gave her the bank account records and tasked her with finding what Clark was up to, but he didn't ask her to kill him.

Yet Mallory's been up to something; Kasie finds her fingerprint on the Hernandez photo, put there before the ink was dry. (This is thanks to her fancy enhancement program. "It could find the flaw in Beyoncé," she says—if there were any flaws to find, of course.) So why'd the director's ex-girlfriend try to kill him?

Vance points out that if Mallory actually wanted Gibbs dead, he would be; her shots don't usually miss.

Although she's been off the grid, Mallory's phone and GPS suddenly appear at Gibbs's diner, so the team heads out to arrest her. Vance takes the lead on her interrogation, which seems unwise. She says she only started working for Deakin after Vance made it clear that they had no future. She figured she'd do one job and earn the money she needed to leave the country and start a new life. But when she saw the target was Gibbs, she couldn't go through with it. Instead, she made it look believable and bought them both some time. Now she wants to help.

Gibbs returns to the bowling alley, offers his gun to Deakin, and tells him to do the job himself. Deakin refuses, and Gibbs warns, "You may regret that." Because this time he brought his team along, and they have a recording from Mallory's bugged necklace of him ordering the hit. For some reason, Deakin forgot that Virginia's a one-party consent state. See? He's a bad judge!

A grateful SecDef Skinner hands Vance a challenge coin, saying NCIS saved him again. Here's hoping Vance calls in that favor soon so we can see Mitch Pileggi again. Then Sloane arrives to let us know that Vance neither endorsed nor blocked Mallory's plea deal. Um, those two are going to be secretly married by the finale, right?

In the end, Deakin flipped on the four other judges, and the Young Turks, waiting on the packed courthouse steps, agree that if he'd had anything concrete on Gibbs, he'd have used the actual justice system. Hence, they agree to forget they ever heard the name Pedro Hernandez.

And we close with a rare instance of NCIS playing a piece of music over the closing shots of the episode as Gibbs escorts an orange jumpsuit-clad Deakin to appear in court, now a defendant facing a new judge on the bench he used to occupy.

Summary: The team investigates the murder of a Marine Sergeant who was hailed as a war hero for his efforts overseas; Gibbs turns to Dr. Confalone for advice after uncharacteristically abandoning the team at a crime scene.

The body of Marine Gunnery Sergeant Richard Wilson was tossed off a bridge. He landed on a pike as he came down and that's what alerted the local homeless couple that lived off the bridge, but the couple knew what to do. They called '911' and the police were actually the ones that identified the body because Wilson didn't have a wallet or an ID on him. It was only after he was identified as a serviceman that NCIS were called and they had enough problems on their hands. They were still talking about the secret Gibbs had let them in on and both Bishop and McGee were especially troubled by what they heard. They believed in Gibbs and had thought he was a man of principles. To find out that he executed the man responsible for the death of his family wasn't something that they could put in the back of their minds.

The only one that seemed fine was Torres. Torres said he would have done the same thing in Gibbs's position and so he didn't understand why Bishop and McGee were turning it into a thing. They wanted to talk to Gibbs about it and Torres told them that was a bad idea. He said that Gibbs didn't tell them this secret so that they did something about it and he begged them to forget Gibbs had ever mentioned it at all. It didn't mean that any of them forget it, but they thought that a new case would occupy Gibbs and it instead made him worse. Gibbs had a problem with hearing about Wilson. Wilson was three months shy of retirement and he was married with no kids. His wife Lori had been out of town and she had just gotten back. She came home to find her house in disarray and couldn't understand why anyone would break in.

According to Lori, her husband was complicated. He was the strong silent type and he never talked about work because he had seen some things overseas. Wilson didn't even like to mention the raid five years ago. His squad had taken down a terrorist known as Zakir and he lost his friends on this mission. It was something about hearing Lori's recollection of events that got to Gibbs and he ran out of her interview. It stunned Torres and also Lori wondered if it was something she said. She also wasn't the only asking things. The more Gibbs heard about Wilson and his complicated life the more he lost his patience with his coworkers. He bit off Kasie's head when she was trying to give him an update and said that Wilson was in contact with two others in the lead up to his death. And Gibbs hated to hear heroes being killed at home.

Wilson went on countless missions and he was killed right when he was leaving the Marines. It didn't seem fair to Gibbs and he truly lost it when he heard that Wilson had been talking to the two other survivors from the Zakir raid, but that one of them was now missing as well. Marine Staff Sergeant Jordon McCarthy has disappeared and no one believed he was alive. There had been blood found at his disheveled apartment and so it looked the survivors were being targeted. The team knew they had to reach out to Marine Staff Sergeant John Calfa as he was the sole survivor left and they thought Gibbs would have approved of this plan before he decided to surprise them all. Gibbs ran from the scene and he didn't come back to the office. He didn't even make an appearance when they brought Calfa in for questioning.

Gibbs ended up go to a bar where he called his therapist. Dr. Grace Confalone knew that there was a problem the moment she was called out to a bar and there she found a struggling Gibbs. Gibbs said that he trained his team to take responsibility and so what must they think of him now? He knew that he shouldn't have said anything because he created a rule just for that purpose and now there was no way to take any of it back. Gibbs admitted he was thinking about confessing. He said that he ran from the past long enough and that maybe he should own up to what he did. He killed a man in cold blood. There was justification for this and anyone with his talents would perhaps have done the same but Gibbs knew to kill the man was wrong and he thought he was ready to unburden himself.

His doctor thought differently. Grace was trying to talk him out of it because of it's not like it will be easy for him and he was an NCIS agent, but while she was dealing with Gibbs's midlife crisis, the rest of the team was trying to solve this case. They found out the blood at McCarthy's place belonged to Wilson and so at first they thought one killed the other. It wasn't until they found McCarthy's body and saw for themselves that he was an expert that they questioned events. They asked Calfa if there was any reason why his friends would kill each other and he claimed to have no clue. He also went on to say that they weren't really friends and he again quickly changed his tune when they asked him about his whereabouts. Calfa was hiding something and the team figured out what it was with Ducky's help.

Ducky checked the archives and he said that there was a discrepancy in the file. Zakir had been taken in alive and he informed the authorities that he had had thirty-three million dollars in Taliban money, but Wilson's team claimed that they claimed thirty million. There were three million dollars missing and Calfa refused to say where it was. The team asked Lori Wilson before she left if she knew about it and she said she never heard of a rainy day fund. Then again she wasn't really Lori Wilson. The real woman showed up and she wanted to know what happened to her house because after she saw it in a mess she knew she had been robbed. Lori, the real Lori, checked on the Victorian brooch that she and her husband were hiding and it was done. The brooch was a gift from the king of Spain to Queen Victoria and it was worth two-point-eight million dollars.

The brooch was how the soldiers on the Zakir Raid were able to smuggle out the missing three million. Calfa later confessed to what happened and he said only three soldiers, as well as Lori, knew the truth. He admitted that McCarthy was dating someone recently and that he might also have told her, but he wasn't sure and so the team looked into it. They had gotten a fingerprint from the fake Lori and that with phone records showed that former FSB spy Inga Petrov had been the one to steal the brooch. She's taken to carrying out con jobs since her spy career ended and she tried getting the brooch by pretending to be the happy girlfriend for McCarthy. Then he broke with her and so she decided to kill everyone standing in her way. And she was heading to Costa Rica when the team arrested her.

Inga didn't even try to hide what she did. She confessed to the murders and the theft, but it was until they had finished wrapping up this case that the rest of the team finally saw Gibbs.

Gibbs came back with his old haircut and a nonchalant attitude. He was feeling better than ever since his conversation with Grace and she convinced him to carry on as usual. He wasn't going to confess and he wasn't going to retire either. Gibbs had thought about it and he loves the job.

Gibbs came back and no one on his team confronted him over what happened, but he did find out that there was an issue with Fornell and he rushed to his friend's side.

The only one that seemed fine was Torres. Torres said he would have done the same thing in Gibbs's position and so he didn't understand why Bishop and McGee were turning it into a thing. Summary: Fornell pleads with Gibbs to do whatever is necessary to take down drug dealers in the area after his daughter is hospitalized from a drug overdose; Gibbs is haunted by aspects of the case.

Emily Fornell collapsed at a party. Her friends didn't know what was wrong with her and so they rushed her to Mercy Point Hospital where they called her dad. Former FBI Agent Tobias Fornell and his daughter Emily have a complicated relationship. They used to be really close until Emily's mother and then the relationship just sort of collapsed from there. Only Fornell still rushed to the hospital when he found out that his daughter wasn't well. She came in blue and no knew what was going at first. Then the doctors ran some tests and they found opioids in Emily's sister. She had taken drugs and was experiencing an overdose. When the doctors realized what was going on, they informed Fornell and also warned him that there might be some complications.

They needed to give Emily a medication to help get the drugs out of her system and they couldn't rush the processor it might do more harm than good. The doctor was being very reasonable as he went over this with Fornell. It was Fornell that had a hard time comprehending what was happening. He initially refused to believe his daughter was taking drugs and, even in the face of inevitable proof, he still didn't want to take the time to understand the actual process. Fornell demanded that the doctor save his daughter's life and he pulled a gun on the man. Gibbs had to step in before Fornell committed to a mistake he couldn't take back and luckily the doctor didn't want to press charges.

The doctor told Gibbs that Fornell could be allowed back into the room if he left his gun behind and Gibbs promised that there wouldn't be another incident. He took Fornell's gun and handed it over to Torres when the rest of the team stopped by to give Gibbs an update. They had checked into Emily's overdose and all of her friends say she doesn't do drugs. They also believed that she might have been drugged at the party. There were several incidents on campus and so the team handed over what they knew to campus police, but neither Fornell nor his dead ex-wife felt comfortable about that. They wanted Gibbs to handle the case and the late Diane Sterling even came back from the dead to pressure Gibbs into taking the case.

Both of her parents wanted whoever drugged Emily to go to jail. They knew that if NCIS took over the investigation and ignored Gibbs's rule about personal involvement that what they want could actually happen. Gibbs knew it as well and so he took over the case. Jurisdiction is damned. The team took on the case and they found several victims that were drugged at parties. The situation with Emily only spiraled like it did because she had a bad reaction. Otherwise, this predator on campus would have just carried on and in fact he probably still up to his tricks because there was another incident. Some guy almost overdosed and so the team went to go check on him. They wanted to know where he got the drugs and he said that he bought them off of Professor Ralph.

Professor Ralph was not a real professor. He sued to be a pharmaceutical rep and was fired for skimming. Ralph then became a drug dealer and he sells to everyone on campus. Gibbs and Bishop went to his apartment and they had to break down the man's door when he refused to comply. The two of them found Ralph who clearly overdosed and surprises kept coming because they found a drugged up Emily in the bathroom of the late Professor's apartment. Emily was brought around when they informed her that Ralph was dead and that's when the truth came out. No one drugged Emily's drink. She's been doing drugs and no one in her life knew. She even kept it from her friends and she wanted to keep it from her father as well.

Emily said she came over and that Ralph invited her to party, but she added that Ralph didn't do drugs. He said he never uses and so it was odd that he overdosed. The team checked the scene and it was a little too perfect. Almost like it had been staged. The team dug deeper and they found out that Ralph had been killed. Someone made it look like he overdosed and killed him while Emily was too out of it to care. Emily had no clue what happened to Ralph and she was going to keep the whole thing secret from her dad when her dad walked in on her interrogation. He found out that his little girl has a drug problem and he wanted to know how it all began. He couldn't go after the dealer and so he wanted the supplier.

Only Emily wouldn't say anything. She ran off and told her dad to stay out of her life. Her friends, on the other hand, were a little cooperative. They claimed that someone drugged Emily because they didn't want anyone to know about her problem and one friend, in particular, lived with Ralph. He may have been the one to introduce Emily to Ralph though he said it was Emily that connected Ralph to the supplier. The only thing he knew about the supplier was that he was some podiatrist in Littleton. The team checked Ralph's financials to see if they came across a doctor and Fornell had come back because he said he wanted to help. And that had been a lie because Fornell just wanted information.

Fornell wanted the information for himself and not because he wanted to share it with the team. He had seen Ralph's credit card statement and he recognized Emily's old doctor for bone spurs. Dr. Berman was a podiatrist and he has an office in Littleton. The details all added up and so Fornell went to go confront this guy on his own. He blamed the doctor for getting his daughter hooked on drugs and frankly the doctor didn't know what he was talking about. Dr. Berman was Emily's doctor and then she told Ralph who made an appointment with Berman just to steal his prescription pad. Ralph has been prescribing himself the drugs he needed and he knew an unscrupulous pharmacist that knew how to look the other way.

The team brought in the pharmacist next. They grilled him over the drug side business and confronted about where he was getting the drugs from. It sure wasn't formed US-based company and this meant he was getting it over the border. The pharmacist hadn't wanted to talk, but with the right incentive, they got him to talk and close down this drug business that was operating in their backyard.

Gibbs also got rid of Diane's ghost and while he told Fornell she had simply been a hallucination — Fornell talked to his daughter about getting help and she said she heard the same thing from her mother who she say after her overdose.

And so Diane really did come back, but Gibbs didn't know that when he saw Ziva and at first he thought she was a hallucination as well.

Summary: Ziva surprises Gibbs with a cryptic warning, prompting him to question why she remained underground for years while being presumed dead, and what led to her return.

Ziva came out of hiding. She felt compelled to when she heard that Gibbs was in danger, so now she's out among the living again and this time she's working with Gibbs towards a common goal. They're both trying to keep him alive. They had to fight off the men that attacked the house and then they were gone before the local police came. The police, however, did call McGee. He responded to the call because he recognized it was Gibbs's home and he brought the rest of the team with him. They were out for drinks together when that call came in.

Though once they heard it was Gibbs, they went together to his boss's home and they found it wrecked. They saw signs of a killing team. They even found the dead body of one of the men and so they just wanted some reassurance their boss was still alive. He wasn't found at the house. There was evidence someone used an old shoot to escape and there was also a piece of fabric wedged in there. It wasn't something their boss would wear. McGee said it might have belonged to the killing team and Bishop was the one with the different theory.

Bishop wondered aloud if Gibbs could have had an ally for the gunfight. She downplayed her theory when pushed, but it changes the fact she said it nor did it stop the guys from being suspicious. They were even more so when they realized that Bishop never went back to the office. She claimed she was bringing the fabric to be tested and instead she went to Ziva's safe house. Bishop had been so sure that Gibbs had an ally because she saw that fabric. She saw a coat made of the stuff at Ziva's place and she saw that coat when she went back over there.

Bishop hadn't only known half the story. She thought Ziva barely survived that house explosion and that wasn't the truth. Ziva had hidden her survival because someone was after her father's files. She went into hiding and gave up her own child because someone was trying to kill her. Ziva was explaining the story across town to Gibbs. She said a woman named Sahar wanted her dead and that she didn't know why. She's never met Sahar. She just knows that Sahar was leading a team to hunt her down and that now they turned to the one person that Ziva was closest to — Gibbs.

Ziva explained how she didn't really have anyone else. Her daughter was still a baby and DiNozzo could only talk about lost love. All Ziva truly had was Gibbs. The men sent to his house were going to use him as leverage against her and Ziva went there first to stop it. Only her intentions didn't seem to have helped them out so much. Ziva was now on the run with Gibbs and he was refusing to go to the safehouse. He wanted to help. Gibbs went with Ziva when she picked up an SD card from a bus and they were waiting for the perfect opportunity while things were happening back at the office.

Bishop was forced to tell McGee what was happening. He knew she was keeping something back so he pushed until she cracked and then it just became weird when they kept Torres out of the loop. Torres could see they were withholding something from him. He even caught out Bishop in a lie to the Director and that's when he demanded to be let into the loop. He eventually found out that Ziva was alive. His mind was so blown from that, that he kept repeating it in what he thought was an empty morgue so that's how Palmer found out.

With those in the loop widening by the second, those that were in know decided to close ranks and they kept the truth from Kasie. They didn't do too good of a job because Kasie could sense something was off. She just didn't pry Torres did and kept on with the job. She told everything they needed to know about the John Doe in the morgue. She also left the second she was done because she didn't want to get wrapped in whatever they were doing and that's why she's the smart one. Kasie wanted nothing to do with the situation.

Funnily enough, Gibbs wasn't thinking about that when he came up with the idea to contact either Kasie or McGee about the SD card. He wanted someone that could decrypt it. He thought about Kasie first and then decided to go with McGee because he knew McGee could keep a secret. He then called McGee to ask him this favor though he didn't know that McGee was now in the know or that McGee found some information for him. McGee and Bishop found out about this Sahar. They believe the woman's full name is Mira Sahar Azam.

Sahar was a POW in Syria. She got out just a week before Ziva's farmhouse blew and that's a good enough reason to believe she was the Sahar that Ziva was looking for. There was just the question of why left. Why did Sahar was Ziva dead? Ziva got help on that encryption from McGee and was back on the road before long. Ziva wanted to check who this Sahar was for herself. She came close to get the information when Sahar's men found them. Ziva and Gibbs were forced back on the run and this time they passed by McGee while they were doing it.

McGee didn't let this go like he was told. Gibbs told him to stay out of it and McGee ignored that order because he cares about both Gibbs and Ziva. Ziva had been like a sister to him. There was nothing he wouldn't do for her and so he followed her when he saw her get in a car with Gibbs. McGee even took Torres and Bishop along for the ride. They didn't know it at the time, only they went to an old burned down diner that Kasie told Gibbs about. It seems she found evidence that the men out to get him were staying and breathing in infested air from this diner.

So, Gibbs and Ziva showed up at this diner. McGee and the others couldn't follow them that far because the Director found out about everything and demanded they come in. He wanted a full briefing. It was only after he got it that he ordered them to return to the diner, but McGee said Ziva would have a plan and could handle the rest on her own. His belief in Ziva was so strong that he managed to convince the director that she wouldn't do something that would put either her or Gibbs at risk.

McGee was talking about the old Ziva. The new Ziva was coming down from pills she took to stay awake and she truly believed that she needed to kill Sarah. Which is why after she killed Sahar's men, she leveled a gun at the woman and Gibbs was forced to stand in her way.

Ziva now has to decide which was more important to her. Revenge or her friendship with Gibbs?

Summary: With their lives in danger, Gibbs and Ziva's rogue investigation takes an unexpected turn when a possible terrorist plot is revealed.

Ziva came close to crossing a line. She was prepared to kill Sahar if it meant eliminating a threat and she would have gone through with it if it hadn't been for Gibbs. Gibbs managed to reign her in. He convinced her that it was better to turn Sahar into the authorities and they later commandeered a sheriff's office because they wanted to question her officially. The sheriff was okay with it, Gibbs was okay with it, and Ziva was eventually brought on board. Ziva was willing to let Sahar live if it meant she could reunite with her family.

Ziva wanted her daughter back more than anything. They've been separated for the last couple of years now and Ziva wasn't even sure if her daughter would remember her. Talia was practically a baby when they split up. Since then, Talia became a toddler and may or may not be in preschool for all Ziva knew. Ziva needed to be over in order to get her daughter back. She just didn't have the time to play Sahar's games and that's all Sahar seemed ready to do. Sahar saved her own life by saying if she dies that a senator will die next.

Sahar refused to which senator was the target. Both Ziva and Gibbs tried their own unique form of questioning and nothing got through to the prisoner. Sahar didn't want to reveal a single thing. She wanted to make the teamwork for it and they tried. They tried to figure out Sahar. They learned that she was close to taking over at Hamas and that alone was something special. Women didn't really rise to power in the Middle East. It must have taken Sahar everything to make it that far and she could be resentful on why she lost it all.

There was American involvement. They knocked her off her throne and she soon ended up as a POW in Syria. It was where she was tortured and nearly killed, so it would be understandable if she wanted revenge? The team just couldn't figure out why she was targeting the people she did. They caught on that Sahar wanted to hurt Ziva because of something Ziva's brother Ari did and they have no idea what happened. They also couldn't figure out which senator she was targeting. The closest bit of information they got was when they learned there was an attempted assassination.

Some suicide bombers attempted to sneak into an event for senators. There were probably thirty senators in all and so there was no way to narrow it down. The team ended up putting everyone in protective custody while they worked things out. They went back to Sahar and again she refused to be broken. In fact, she appeared to enjoy the chaos she caused. The whole city was lockdown because her and suicide bombers started coming from everywhere. There was a second bomber that was killed right before he detonated.

Palmer was lucky enough to perform the autopsy. He later told Gibbs that the identifying marks on the body (such as the tattoos) showed that the bomber was a white supremacist and that just didn't make sense. What would a white power guy want with a middle eastern woman? Sahar was clearly running the show here and it simply didn't make sense why she would work with those guys or how they would even have to come to have met her? It was all a little too confusing and Ziva was smack dab in the middle of it.

Only Ziva wasn't like how everyone remembered her. She's been on the run so long that she saw everything and everyone as a threat. She nearly took off McGee when he tried to hug her. Ziva was constantly on edge. She was also used to working alone and that's why she seemed standoffish with her old friends. McGee couldn't reach her and neither could Ducky. She still holds a special place in her heart for them however she's jaded now because of what happened to Gibbs. Gibbs was left several clues that she was alive. And never once came after her.

Ziva thought he would avenge her or at least look for her remains. Gibbs surprised her when he let her go and so she lost faith in him. Ziva didn't trust Gibbs now. She bugged their offices because she wanted information first and she didn't want to go through the team to get it. Ziva offended everyone when they found that bug. It made what they found to take a backseat and instead they focused on whether or not if they could trust Ziva. She was too used to her own company now. Her mistrust and her antics were alienating her.

Ziva was off doing her one-woman-routine as the team was getting information on Sahar. Sahar used backchannels to fund militia groups and the plan worked because none of them knew of her involvement. Sahar even funded fake suicide bombers. The bombs were real. It was the bombers that didn't know what they were doing and were therefore pawns. It seems their jobs were to act as distractions. It was up to them to keep Metro police distracted and the real show was supposed to happen under everyone's noses.

If that wasn't enough, Kasie also found that Ducky's phone was used to contact Sahar's people. It initially seemed like Ducky and Sahar were in cahoots and so right away Kasie knew there was something wrong. She suspected someone used Ducky's phone. She even asked him about it and he told her that Ziva had borrowed his phone. He had just seen her after so long that he was willing to give her anything she asked of him. This included his phone and he thought she needed it because she wanted to make a call that couldn't be traced back to her.

Now, things look differently. The team knew Ziva bugged them and now they were learning she was reaching out to Sahar's people. There could be a logical explanation and then there was what Kasie was thinking. Kasie thought Ziva was working with Sahar. This wasn't helped by the fact Sahar later escaped police custody and was currently on the loose. Taken altogether it looked like treasonous collusion and so the team questioned their last link to Sahar. They questioned her inside man, and he ended up telling them her the whole story.

It turns out Ziva was working with Sahar. Sahar agreed to give Ziva's life back in exchange for helping her and Ziva agreed to do it. Ziva mostly agreed to get Sahar's money back for her. Remember, Ziva tried to take Sahar down when she realized Sahar put a contract out on her life and so she practically depleted all of Sahar's funds. Ziva nearly destroyed Sahar's organization altogether. She was a few steps away from it all when she came to his agreement with Sahar and she said she would return all of the money she slowly stole from them. And that's when the team walked in.

They saw Ziva fulfilling her part.

Ziva did get Sahar's money back, but she also alerted Interpol and was finally toppling Sahar's empire. Sahar didn't realize what was happening until it was too late. She then chose to commit suicide rather than go back to jail and so that's what most of her men did. They chose to die before being imprisoned again.

And because Ziva helped take them down, she was free and clear and that meant she can go home to her family.

And it also showed that a little bit of the old Ziva was still there.

Summary: After the body of a Marine Lieutenant is found hidden under an 18-wheeler, the team tracks the vehicle's previous locations to pinpoint the crime scene and suspect; Sloane encourages the team to talk about Ziva's recent reappearance.

Sloane was given her orders. She was told by the Director that he wanted her to analyze the situation with the team and see if they were off since Ziva's reappearance. Ziva coming back the way she did had brought a lot of things up. The team hasn't been the same and Sloane noticed that morale was down. She wanted to talk to the agents all the individually to help, but they used their latest case to make their escape and none of them were in any rush to come back. Not once they learned they were investigating a 'gnome murder'.

The victim had been killed by a garden gnome. The gnome's bloodied and pointy hat was found with the body. The body, however, was found under an eighteen-wheeler. The driver didn't know it was there and it wasn't until he was going through a routine check with the naval yard that the body was found. It was apparently there for a good three to two days based off of decomp. The driver should have smelled it and him not doing so was quite astonishing. Then again, he says he hasn't gone back there in a while.

Based on how shabby the truck was looking, it was clear he hadn't cleaned it as well. The team soon moved on from the driver and they focused on the garden gnome. The garden gnome must belong to a garden, right? The team needed to go look for one and first they identify the body. The victim's name was Elijah Buck. He co-owns a trailer park with his brother Peter and they recently made enemies when they hiked up the rent. It was like the citizens there turned into an angry mob overnight.

They hated the brothers. They hated Eli more because they knew he was responsible for raising their rent and so the brothers didn't stay at the trailer park. They didn't want to be around people that hated them. Peter just didn't know how much they hated them until his brother died. Eli had been killed on one of their lots and thankfully it wasn't by the guy that owns the gnome. The team knew this because the guy literally reported the missing gnome to them. Which he wouldn't have done if he killed Eli.

The team would end up questioning everyone at the park. None of them seemed to have hated Eli enough to kill him and so that made the team look at Peter. Peter hated owning the trailer park. He only got into it because his brother promised him it would be quick cash and it wasn't. The team questioned Peter because they wanted to know if he could sell the property now that his brother is dead. Only Peter brought in a note left on his windshield that said: "You're Next". Peter believes someone was threatening him and he wanted to know what NCIS was going to do about it.

The only thing they could do about it was questioned who suspected. Peter told them that the tenants all had a meeting with Esther Daniel's. She was a little old lady and she was painting a bunch of pictures in the hope of raising money. Esther and the other tenants wanted to buy back the park. They were hoping to make a feasible offer and it helped that their only roadblock was now dead. Gibbs had had a chat with Esther about Eli. She admitted it that was slightly coldblooded, but she used to like retirement and now she was just holding onto the fact she might leave a little something for the grandkids.

Gibbs had tested Esther's drawing pencil. It wasn't a match for the note left for Peter and later that night someone had thrown a Molotov cocktail under Peter's car. He was very lucky it wasn't something wore. He survived the smoke bomb just fine and the team kept looking for whoever attacked the brothers. They thought they found their perp when they realized one of the tenants was a former criminal. Vince was in the witness protection program and he was doing fine at the trailer park until the brothers came and messed everything up.

The team even brought Vince for questioning. He said that he left that life behind and that he didn't want to draw attention to himself because his former allies might find him. Vince also had a bad asthma attack in custody. He said that his asthma has been bad for a while now and that it started getting worse when his tomato crop began dying. What he said had given the team an idea. They tested the soil where the crop was found and they found it contaminated. The soil was so toxic that it could potentially kill everyone at the park.

So, the team did some digging. They traced the contamination back to a nearby chemical company called Zullow and people from Zullow were willing to talk as long as it got them off the hook for murder. The company said that they financed the brothers. They did so because it was the brothers' job to push those people off the contaminated land before anyone else found out. And it wasn't the brothers doing this together, it actually was just Peter. Peter wanted the get a quick rich scheme and him accidentally his brother when Eli developed a conscience.

Peter later confessed to the whole thing. He was going to be put away for his brother's death and the company was forced to settle with the tenants. Meaning good people like Vince and Esther were going to be taken of.

And at the end of all of this, Sloane tried to talk to the agents and they instead flipped around because they wanted to know about this "thing" she has with Gibbs.

Production Code: 17004
Summary: The team links a bizarre crime scene at Arlington National Cemetery to a string of attacks on homeless veterans; Vance orders McGee, Bishop and Torres to complete hours of evidence garage cleanup duty for withholding information.

NCIS was called about a horse. A horse was set loose at the Arlington National Cemetery and it turns out this animal carrying a foot. The foot was unfortunately human. There was also a second foot that was later found and so this was starting to look like a crime. It was clear that the feet had been severed, but the trauma was fairly recent and the feet themselves were the least of the team's concerns. Their main problem was the cemetery. The cemetery was sort of its own little place so no one whose jurisdiction this crime fell under.

They only decided on NCIS because the team had brought Palmer with them. He was the first Medical Examiner at the scene and the cemetery was eager to hear from someone with authority on the matter. Palmer first noticed the feet held sores. As if someone had been living rough. Palmer suspected that the victim could have been homeless, and he was right. The feet belonged to Marine Sergeant David Holtzman. Holtzman was living on the street and his feet were getting better because he was seeing several doctors at the VA hospital.

The main doctor didn't remember Holtzman. She said that she had to see so many patients a day that it was hard to keep track of them and sadly she wasn't alone in being overworked.

Veteran Affairs didn't really take responsibility for what happened to the veterans. They force them to jump through several hoops and then offer them the barest form of help. Its why so many of them were being driven out onto the streets. They were dealing with untreated PTSD as well as debt for having to pay medical bills out of pocket.

Only the doctor at least realized the system was broken. She said no one wanted to help these veterans and she may have been wrong. It was clear that when the systems fail them, they could only depend on each other and that ended up with this case. Gibbs and McGee went to the shacks where most of the veterans stayed. They went looking for someone who knew Holtzman and they found a friend. The guy hadn't seen Holtzman. He was also beginning to worry and so he came with them as they began searching for the camp.

The team was hoping to find some signs of blood, but what they found was much worse. They found several bodies nearby and all were murdered vets. It seems that their killer was targeting a group he felt was vulnerable. The vets there were all suffering in their own way and the same went for Holtzman's friend. Marine Lance Corporal Bernard Williams didn't even want to admit his status as a vet because he felt too ashamed of his current position. It was suggested that he talk to Sloane and he clammed up once he realized she was a shrink.

Williams said he didn't want to talk about himself when someone was targeting his friends. Holtzman and a woman by the name of Norma Jean were both dead. Her records should have been at the VA hospital and yet the hospital was giving Kasie the runaround. Both Torres and McGee decided to just go down there to get the files, but they found out the doctor they had spoken with earlier had received threats and that she also found two severed hands pointing at ashes in the cupboard.

It seems this killer had wanted to send a message. They sent the foot with a horse because horses were a military symbol honoring the dead for funerals and then they started to literally point the blame with severed hands. This killer was trying to highlight the unfair treatment of the veterans. This plan was also working because that's what's on the news nowadays and all anyone can talk about is what's happening with the veterans. Sloane had considered this message as she began suspecting Williams of being their culprit.

Sloane didn't want to suspect him because she personally liked him. Yet, it didn't change the fact that he knew the camp, the victims, and that he was trained to get around security protocols at a hospital. Williams was a viable suspect and so Gibbs went to go talk to him. He tried finding Williams on his own and he instead came across an aid worker that said Williams had been attacked. He was hit from behind. He never saw his attacker and his attacker had stolen his very personal journal.

Williams wrote everything down in that journal. He detailed how he took time off to spend with his sick mother and that her medical bills ended up bankrupting him. Williams's journal was his way for him to let go of all of his pain, but then someone took it. He thinks his attacker took it to get information on the case and so Gibbs kept watch to see if the attacker would come back. He actually ran across a podcaster and he had to put her in her place before she moved on. And so Gibbs thought nothing would come out of the watch.

Then Bishop texted him. Bishop found out that a private company was making a profit out of the homeless sector and that he were to make more if a new bill went through. One that would increase for veterans thereby increasing the profit this company could make on the back of veterans. The company was called Mercy Point Mobile Care and Kyle Freeman not only worked for the company, but his family owns it as well.

Freeman was actually still at the homeless camp when Gibbs and his fellow veterans took him down.

They got their payback for their fallen friends and they also highlighted their own stories for social media.

Now, the whole world will know what was happening to veterans when they were coming back home and this time Williams wasn't afraid to tell his own story.

Production Code: 17005
Summary: The team investigates a Marine Corporal after evidence suggests she murdered her neighbor while being treated for insomnia by a hypnotherapist.

NCIS was used to the odd ones. It's what they've come to expect by now. They've each had long careers in this field and they believed they've seen it all. They even believed they recognized the situation with Marine Corporal Laney Alimonte. The soldier had called them when she found a gun in her fridge and she claims not to know how it got there. The team suspected she might have been on drugs and that it could explain why she was both moody and forgetful yet there was also blood found on the gun.

The blood didn't belong to Laney. Laney didn't have any visible wounds on her and she also claimed not to have left her house in a while. According to her, she found the gun the first thing that morning and so she hadn't gotten the gun from anywhere. Laney says it wasn't hers. The team ran a search on the gun and it was a registered weapon. It belonged to someone named Joe Cortez. Cortez lived a few miles from Laney and so the team went there to ask the guy about his gun. And instead, they found his body.

Cortez had been dead for hours. He was killed sometime during the night and the evidence at the scene didn't make sense. All the evidence pointed to Laney. She didn't have an alibi for the window of opportunity and her fingerprints were found on the gun. It also didn't help that she has such a checkered past. She was on the brink of being thrown out of the Marines for psychological problems. She took meds to deal with her issues and there was so much of it in her cabinet that she never would have been able to wake up the next morning. And yet she didn't take her meds.

Why didn't she take her usual doses? Laney said she was seeing a new doctor and that this hypnotherapist had given her one on one session that very night over a video call. Laney said the doctor hypnotizes her into falling asleep. She then fell into such a deep sleep that she went without her meds and woke up the next morning happier than she ever felt. If something happened while she was asleep, she said that it must be the doctor's fault. The same doctor she believed hypnotize her into murdering someone.

Laney was willing to admit she may have killed someone when she saw the evidence. She also said she couldn't have killed someone of her own free will because she wasn't that type of person and so she blamed her doctor. She said her doctor hypnotized her into murder. It sounded crazy, but the team did investigate it and they investigated Dr. Pershing as well. The doctor has a long career as a hypnotherapist. He helps people through hypnosis and his clients seem to like him. And Laney liked him until she started to second-guess their sessions.

Laney claims not have known Joe Cortez. She doesn't know how to get to his place or how she got his gun or why she killed him with his own weapon if she was just going to take it with her. Laney didn't know the answer to anything. She thought the agents would have better luck with Pershing and they did. The doctor had told them that he couldn't hypnotize anyone into committing a crime. They later found out that he had been accused once before hypnotizing his roommate into stealing beer from a convenience store.

The team soon brought him to question him about that incident. They wanted to know why he didn't mention it from before and he said that other incidents didn't matter because it wasn't his real. He did use to practice hypnotizing his college roommate. It was also done with the other man's permission and Pershing his roommate had only hypnosis because he tried to push the blame onto someone else. Pershing couldn't have hypnotized anyone into a crime. Not then and not now. He claimed he was innocent and that was step up from Laney.

Laney truly believed she had killed Cortez. She didn't suspect anything different because the agents said all the evidence pointed to her and they left out the part about this being their initial conclusion. The team had been so desperate to prove Laney was innocent that they double-checked their evidence and saw that it was flawed. Laney's prints on the gun were skewed. As if someone had merely staged the fingerprints by putting the gun in her passed out hand and there was more. There were peanuts.

The crime scene was littered with peanuts. Cortez had them all over his apartment and that alone showed Laney never stepped foot in there because she was deathly allergic to peanuts. Someone had clearly framed Laney for Cortez's murder. She didn't know anyone with a motive and so this time the agents paid attention to Cortez's life. They found out that he did have an enemy. He was seeing a married woman and this woman was concerned about her husband finding out about them. She said her husband would kill Cortez if he had found out about the two of them.

Her husband was is Roger Pozniak. He has an appointment with Pershing right after Laney and so he heard all about her problems through the thin walls. He then used that to frame for the murder of his wife's lover. But Pozniak has OCD. He couldn't take the mess and so the team threatens him with one if he didn't write down how he did it.

Pozniak eventually confessed to everything and this freed Laney.

She was also wasn't going to be fired anymore because the military was reconsidering how it handled those dealing with mental illness.

Production Code: 17006
Summary: When a Petty Officer's son is found murdered at his welcome home from prison party, evidence suggests that Kasie's lifelong best friend, Dante Brown, is the suspect.

It was another unusual one for the team. They were called in to investigate when a servicewoman's relative was murdered at his own welcome home party. The victim's name was Kendall Quichera. He went by the name Trey. Trey was given twenty-five to life for his part in an armed robbery and surprisingly he was released early. Trey ended up serving only seven years. He told his family that he became a new man in prison and that his whole world view had changed. Only Trey was suddenly flushed with cash. His old criminal buddies didn't know how he got his hands on the money and so they suspected that he might still have had a finger in criminal activity.

The team carried out their investigation either way. They learned that Trey had been murdered by someone wielding a shiv and that he wasn't the model citizen his family thought he was. He had started fights in prison. He was even thrown into the hole for bad behavior. Trey was as far from the model citizen as humanly possible and so his early didn't make sense. The team was still trying to figure out why Trey was released when Kasie came back with her findings. She said the hair found on the victim belonged to a dog. And as luck would have it there was a dog walker that Trey had had a beef with.

Dante Brown and Trey were in prison at the same time. It was even rumored that Trey had stabbed Dante with a shiv and so it would be understandable if Dante wanted revenge. He was a dog walker so he had dog hair all over him at all times. He also would have found if not created his own shiv to return the favor to Trey. The team knew they needed to talk to him and they went to his house hoping to get answers, but they didn't think they would run into Kasie. Kasie carefully negotiated Dante's surrender and so the team had questions. They later demanded answers from Kasie and so she revealed that Dante was an old friend.

Kasie swore Dante was innocent. Then she heard that Dante met Trey at a bar several times and that he was one of the last few people to see Trey alive. Kasie had still wanted to believe Dante despite what she heard. She didn't feel comfortable about testing his hair because she said they didn't have a sample to test it against and so Gibbs pushed her to test it anyway. He believed they had a credible suspect in Dante. They also had Dante on a parole violation for meeting with Trey and so they already knew that Dante was guilty of something. They just didn't have proof he was guilty of Trey's murder.

It all goes back to the fight in prison. They asked Dante about it and he claims he didn't happen. He said he wasn't stabbed by Trey in prison. He said the police report got it wrong and that he and Trey weren't enemies. Trey had reached out to him after prison because Trey had wanted someone who knew what it was like. Someone who experienced prison. Trey was feeling lost when he got out and that's why he turned to Dante. Dante was a great guy. Everyone who knew him said so and his track record was only long because of parole violations. He was caught with fireworks which got him two years. He did a wheelie on a bike and got six months.

Dante's original charge was crap as well. He defended a kid that being beaten up by a gang and the police arrested him because they automatically assumed he was a thug. The witnesses were too scared of the gang to testify in Dante's favor and so that's how he got six years for being helpful. The boy he had saved had also been Kasie's baby brother. Its why she was so close to Dante now. She blames herself for Dante going to prison the first time around and she felt guilty about the trumped-up parole violations that saw him keep going back there. Kasie was so much in her feelings that she missed some warning signs.

Kasie watched Dante's interview. She automatically believed every word he said and she told the team that they could trust his word as well. The team, however, knew the real world didn't work that way. They couldn't just trust someone to be truthful. They had to investigate and so they went back to Dante's place so that they could test his dog. They wanted to run the dog's hair against the sample from the victim. Kasie went with Bishop to do the test and while she was at Dante's she spotted a shiv under the dog's bed. She didn't tell anyone else about it at first because she wanted to be the one to test it. And unfortunately, the test proved the shiv was the murder weapon.

Kasie came forward with what she found. She soon asked Gibbs for the chance to say goodbye and that's not what she really went in there to say. Kasie had asked Dante about his enemies. She believes someone with a grudge against him had set him up for murder and so she had him write down everyone with a grudge. Kasie also had Gibbs backing her because Gibbs was willing to take a chance on her. Gibbs wanted to believe Kasie wasn't wrong and so he had his team keep investigating the matter. They searched the security feed at the prison and they soon found evidence of Trey being the one to stab Dante with a shiv.

Dante had lied to them earlier. He said the fight never happened and it did. He had a motive, means, and even the murder weapon. The team told Kasie everything they found because they wanted her to open her eyes. They thought she was backing a losing horse. Kasie wanted to see the good in Dante because once upon a time he had been a good kid except he wasn't a kid anymore. He was a grown man who has been in and out of jail for most of his adult life. Dante chose to lie of his own accord. He didn't have to lie about something that so easily could be proven and so he did it because he thought he could hide his past.

Kasie later went to see Dante in prison. She confronted him with the evidence and demanded to know why he had lied to her. His supposed enemies each had alibis. He had hidden his motives and yet Dante was still claiming his innocence. Only Kasie couldn't easily believe like before. He had lied to her and that was the first time he ever did that. Kasie knows now that she couldn't trust Dante to be truthful. She was just about done with him when she finally received good news. Dante's dog hair didn't match up with what they found and so that had been a silver lining. There was also the prison phone calls.

Gibbs had had Bishop listen in on the phone calls at the prison. He wanted to be thorough with this case because of Kasie and so he had Bishop going through every phone call from the prison. It was dud in the beginning. Then Bishop heard that Trey was a smuggler with someone at the prison and so that reaffirmed Kasie's faith in Dante. She tested all the dogs at the prison and she found out one of them matched what was found on the killer. Kasie also found a link to a guard. The guard had been using Trey to smuggle in drugs and he killed Trey when Trey stopped being useful. And so Kasie had been right all along.

Dante was innocent. With Kasie and the team backing him, they were able to get Dante released and they charged the guard with murder. The guard was now going to join the same people he used to patrol. Dante meanwhile was ready to put the whole mess behind him. He had a job interview at the kennel that he almost missed and so it's a good thing Kasie had rearranged it for him.

And while no one had been looking, it turns out Torres has been secretly dating someone for the last couple of weeks.

Production Code: 17007
Summary: While investigating a Marine's murder, the NCIS team uncovers a network of live-streaming hidden spy cameras in the rooms of a Virginia motel.

A family visited a farm for a nice day trip. The children had complained about it because they would have preferred Disney World and so their mother basically forced them to go look at the pigs. She wanted them to see nature in action. She didn't think they would see the pigs eating a person or come away from the encounter perfectly traumatized. They ran to their mother and she called the authorities. Later on, the authorities called NCIS because the victim had a Marine tattoo and no other identifiable trait.

The pigs went to town on the victim. He didn't have a face or hands and so the tattoo was really all they were working with. It was until the team entered the pen that they received further information. Like how the victim didn't die there. He was moved postmortem and so someone was trying to use the pigs to dispose of the body. It was pretty ingenious of them. The pigs would have left behind only hair and teeth once they were done and so this victim could easily have disappeared if it hadn't been for that family.

The team also found a motel key. They traced it back to the right motel and they checked out the victim's room. They thought they would find something that would give them a name, but instead, they found something more sinister. They found someone had messed with the entrance to air vac and so Gibbs followed it. He followed it until he was in the vents and saw that someone had set up cameras. The cameras were situated in such a way that it was clear they were filming other guests at the hotel.

There were cameras above every room. It was like the entire motel had been turned into a voyeur's dream and so what they had on their hands was a sophisticated pervert. It wasn't the owner of the hotel because he says he just bought the place less than a year ago. He bought it from an old guy who retired to tropical weather and that didn't sound like a guy who knew his high-tech stuff. The current owner did have some priors with positions. It just wasn't anything recent and so that brought the team back to the victim who was thankfully identified through DNA.

The victim's name was Master Gunnery Sergeant Aaron Shaw. He was married with two kids and he seemed like an upstanding guy on paper. There was nothing in his background that showed he could have been a pervert, but the evidence did point to him. There were traces of fiberglass found in his lungs. It was the same kind of fiberglass used in the insulation at the motel and he could have only have breathed them in if he was up there in the vents. Then there was the whole secrecy deal. Shaw checked into a dirty motel when he didn't live that far away and he hadn't been having problems with his wife.

His wife didn't even know he was that close to home. She thought he was doing something for work and technically she wasn't wrong. The team believed Shaw created work for himself. They thought he's been watching people at the motel because he's been collecting blackmail material on them and so that explained the payment from a congressman. The team thought it was blackmail money. Its why they knew they needed to speak to US Congressman for Virginia Eric Riley. They wanted to find out what Shaw was blackmailing him over and in actuality, they learned that Shaw wasn't the blackmailer.

Riley hired Shaw to find the real blackmailer. He said he stayed at the motel when he met a woman and they hooked up. He and the woman parted ways amicably, but then some began blackmailing him. Riley said he couldn't go to the cops because he was in the middle of a campaign. He, therefore, turned to Shaw because he knew if Shaw could find Bin Laden then a mere blackmailer would be easy for him. Which is what happened. Shaw found the blackmailer and he was killed for getting too close.

So, the team carried out their investigation into this blackmailer. They looked into everyone who accesses and the one name that stood out was Daniel Mulgrew. He was the installation guy. He also has a long record and he recently applied for a passport. The team suspected he could be their guy. They even went to his home in the middle of the night in order to catch him and they caught him alright. Just not before someone else got to him first. The team ended up finding Mulgrew dead. Mulgrew was killed in front of the screens he had set up and it was odd.

The team was sure they unplugged the cameras at the hotel. The fact there were still cameras set up meant Mulgrew must have planted those cameras long ago and he was reviewing all of the footage when he got the chance. This also meant the killer targeted Mulgrew while he was still working. The team later hacked Mulgrew's accounts to see what he was up to and they learned that Mulgrew wasn't even the real blackmailer. He was merely the blackmailer's IT guy. Mulgrew sent several emails trying to back out and the blackmailer refused to release him.

The team then used those emails to find the blackmailer. It turns out it was Mulgrew's former boss at the NSA. He used to work at the NSA and he was later fired from it for spying on his coworkers. His boss at the time should have informed the authorities. Only he didn't. Patrick Norian chose to use the information he had on Mulgrew to blackmail Mulgrew into doing his bidding. This normally would have made Norian the prime suspect in two murders except Norian was out of town for both of them.

Norian couldn't have killed either Shaw or Mulgrew. It had to be someone else and so the team went back to Shaw. They knew he reached out to people for help with his case. All they had to do was go back to it and that's how they found his friend. Shaw turned to a friend to identify the woman that slept with the congressman. His friend has access to facial recognition and he later told Shaw that the woman in the video was Marinka Bazarov. She was a Russian Spy. She was also still sleeping with the congressman and he must have been trading intel with her.

Shaw must have found out. He probably tried to turn the congressman in and that's when he was killed. He died because the friend that asked him to investigate a blackmailer had turned out to be a traitor to the United States. So, that's when the congressman turned against him. He and his lover were responsible for Shaw and Mulgrew and so the team arrested the congressman in front of all of his supporters.

Gibbs later ducked out early to mentor a young kid in his neighborhood and while he was doing that Bishop and Torres were starting to flirt with each other.

Production Code: 17008
Summary: The NCIS team investigates the murder of a musician in the Navy's most elite band, which performs at diplomatic events around the world.

It was believed Navy Musician First Class John Warren committed suicide. He was on a bus with the rest of the Naval Choir when he began acting out of character. He was missing the beats in the song they were playing and he was unsteady on his feet. Some of his friends even noticed what was happening. They tried to ask John if he was okay and the next thing they knew he jumped out of the vehicle as it was still moving. John, therefore, committed suicide. There was no way he didn't know that crashing out of a car on the highway wasn't going to end badly and so that begged the question of why he did this.

John did have a history of mental illness. He told his superiors all about it and so they knew about his depression. They were, in fact, blaming themselves now for what happened. They thought they should have checked in with John to see if he was okay and so the team were going to investigate what triggered this latest episode, but it was revealed at the last minute that they didn't have to. John's death looked like suicide and it actuality it was murder. He was drugged with a fast-acting toxin. It explains why he was acting so oddly in the moments before.

There was also one other explanation for it. Palmer concluded that John's antidepressants had reacted to the poison and so that gave John some clue that something was wrong. He probably felt so out of sorts. He died so horribly and it doesn't seem like he was the target after all. John was poisoned by the reed in his clarinet. He had broken his and had borrowed one of his bandmates. She hadn't even known about it. She didn't know that her clarinet reed was the murder weapon until NCIS was knocking on her door and they were asking her about enemies.

Navy Musician Hannah McClain was in charge of the band's touring schedule. She changed most of their bookings to Europe and a lot of people didn't like it, but John did. He had never been to Europe and now he never will. Hannah was blaming herself for that when the team asked who else could have a grudge. Hannah thought about it and she mentioned there was a guy they call the "Nugget Creeper". He was called that because he wears a baseball cap with a logo for Ned's Nuggets and the creeper part came in because he was a stalker.

The guy followed their schedule religiously. He was always there when they landed and Hannah was nice to him at first because she initially thought he was just a superfan. It wasn't until he followed them to every venue that she realized he was a stalker. Hannah stopped speaking to him and she does her best to ignore him when he calls out her name. Hannah had given the team a facial sketch and they used that to find their perp. Only the team was operating without Gibbs. He said he has an issue with a friend and so he gave McGee the lead on this case. And it was a little hard to investigate the creeper when they were worried about what Gibbs has gotten himself into.

Gibbs left everything behind. He didn't take his money, his badge, or even his cell phone and so the team just know something is going down. They were doing their best to stay out of it because Gibbs would call them if they need them. So, the team was focusing on the case. They talked to the stalker and he had an alibi for the short window in which the reed was poisoned. He did, however, say that he had to protect Hannah and so the team asked him from what. What was threatening her? The stalker said that there was a secret killer band society within the band and that this society was in charge of several members disappearing.

The team had wanted to call this guy crazy. Then they followed up on what he told them and they learned there was a trail of bodies. The last three recruits for the band have all disappeared. No one has heard from them since they either quit the band or they went MIA and so the stalker believed Hannah was next. She was still a relatively new recruit. She was also invited to a secret meeting by her conductor and so the team had her sit it out while they went. They went to this meeting where they didn't find a cult.

They found a private memorial service for John because the band wanted to pay their respects their way. It also turns out there was never a society and there was a reason behind the three disappearances. One died naturally, one was deported, and another was caring for his sick parent. The team wasted a day on a conspiracy theory and it was for nothing. Nothing the stalker said had panned out. The team thankfully still had Kasie and she gave them the lead. She found out the band's equipment weighs more heavily than it should. She believed the equipment manager was a smuggler and Torres later found the evidence to back it up.

The manager was smuggling contraband through South America. He wanted Hannah dead because she would have taken the band to a Europe for a year and he would have lost millions of dollars. The team ended up arresting the manager and they even had time to attend the official memorial tribute to John.

By then, Gibbs had returned from his secret mission and he was there to talk Sloane through her own problems involving her biological daughter.

Production Code: 17009
Summary: The team investigates a petty officer's murder that was live-streamed on a popular gaming app. Also, Gibbs is asked to look after his 11-year-old neighbor, Phineas, when his mom must leave on a last-minute trip.

A murder was accidentally live-streamed! The victim was later identified as Petty Officer First Class Ian Rojas and he was killed while he was recording himself playing a videogame. The game was some shoot-up nonsense. It had no bearing on the case and it was only related because of the manner of his death and because it was used to identify the victim. At first, no one knew who he was. He went by the username "NAVYgamer-z" when he's online and that was enough for the local police to pass this one off on NCIS.

Therefore, the team merely suspected he was Navy when they were given this case. It was after they ran facial recognition that they realized his name was Rojas. Rojas was on leave and he seems to have been enjoying himself when he died. He makes a living out of playing videogames. He earns more doing that than he does as a Naval Hull Technician. He also spent so much time online when he's home and that he didn't really have a life. He had the NAVY and he had his online persona. Rojas did a great job separating the two of them.

There truly was no reason why someone from his gaming life would want to hurt him. Yet that's what it was beginning to look like as the team processed the evidence. The killer had unplugged everything after Rojas was murdered. The Livestream went down and the computer was wiped of any information. Rojas's body was also moved to the bathroom where it was staged. His killer had put a bear mask over his face and covered him in glitter. Rojas was made to appear as if he had come out of the "Killing with Kindness 3" game.

The game was all bears turning on each other. It was supposed to be about alliances and what have you and the game was a big deal. It has plenty of fans and even Rojas loved to play.

He would usually play with one user known as Florida C.O.W. The two of them appeared to be friends. They were always playing together and they talked on the night Rojas was murdered. In real life, his friend was a retired Naval Officer who needed something to do. He met Rojas on a naval site and Rojas convinced him to take a chance on video games.

The guy was lonely because he lost his wife. Which meant video games gave him an outlet and he had Rojas to thank for that. The two became friends and so the team didn't suspect Florida of hurting Rojas. They had to look for someone else. They considered who might have had a grudge and they came across Dirtybird. He was a gamer earning more than Rojas and then Rojas reported for harassing women online. Dirtybird lost his sponsorship. He was now short of almost a hundred grand and so he could have blamed Rojas for it.

Only the team had no idea how to contact Dirtybird. He covered up his real life and the team had no way of identifying him. The only way they could reach him was by posing as another gamer. This was typically where McGee came in and surprisingly McGee couldn't do it. He didn't have a high enough score to be considered a serious gamer. The team was going to have to find someone else and so that's when Gibbs said he has a guy. His "guy" was nine-years-old Phineas. His mom was out of town and Gibbs was watching him for her.

Gibbs technically promised he would cut down on Phineas's screen time. So, he quickly broke that promise and so he had a few moments to do whatever he wanted. He got Phineas to lure in Dirtybird. Then McGee traced the signal and they found Dirtybird. He was brought in for questioning, but he, unfortunately, has an alibi. The misogynistic troll was coaching his daughter's basketball team at the time of Rojas's murder and therefore he was innocent. He wasn't their killer. The team was suddenly left without suspects and to make things worse Gibbs got in trouble with Phineas's mother.

Phineas's mom Sarah had quickly ended their boys' trip once she realized Gibbs hadn't followed a single rule of hers. He endangered her child even if said child thought it was fun and couldn't wait to do it again. Phineas had loved hanging out at NCIS. He considered Gibbs a friend and so it was going to hurt both of them now that they can't see each other anymore. Sarah had put her foot down. She didn't want Phineas with Gibbs if she couldn't trust the man and so their fishing expedition into Dirtybird had hurt Gibbs more than helped.

With the team back at square one, they looked into who else could have wanted Rojas dead. Rojas spent his last death on earth playing video games and talking to his friend Florida. Florida had even told him that the retirement home had glitchy WiFi. It turns out Rojas had wanted to help his friend with that. He looked into the home's computer system and that's how he found out someone was stealing information from the elderly. Someone was robbing them all blind and Rojas was onto him. And so before Rojas could report the guy to the cops, he was killed.

The killer was an old dude by the name of Elmer. Elmer pretended to have memory issues and really he was using that to hide his criminal behavior. He was stealing from his neighbors because he no longer had the money to stay at the fancy retirement village. And so the team arrested Elmer and they later found the murder weapon hidden in his garage.

Elmer was going away and luckily Sarah came around. She realized Gibbs was good for Phineas and that's why she was going to allow them to be friends again. It seems they both needed friendship.

Production Code: 17010
Summary: Gibbs and the team help Ziva with the "one thing" she said she'd take care of before returning to her family.

Ziva said there was one last thing before she can return to her family. She also told Gibbs that she has to do it alone and that's why he couldn't help her. Then she seems to have caved. Ziva supposedly had her friend Odette reach out to Bishop and Bishop wasn't told much. She was just told that Ziva needed her to do something. This something was to meet with a man named Mir. Bishop was to give him a hundred thousand dollars in exchange for a flash drive and the flash drive should have been dropped off with Odette.

Only Bishop didn't hand over the flash drive when the moment came. She first wanted answers because she was getting pretty sick and tired of being brought in without any answers to what was actually happening. Bishop first wanted to know what the flash drive held. She tried to get the truth from Odette and when that hadn't worked she then turned to her own team. Bishop later called everyone in to tell them what happened. She handed over the flash drive to McGee and McGee opened it for them.

There were a bunch of photos found on the flash drive. There was one photo of someone holding Ziva's friend Adam Eshel hostage and the team believes that's the photo Ziva was after, but before they could investigate further, Gibbs came in with Ziva. Ziva, as it turns out, hadn't known that Bishop was involved. Her friend Odette did that without her knowing so and the whole thing left Ziva upset. She truly hadn't wanted to involve anyone from the team. She wanted to look for Adam herself and thankfully Gibbs pushed through her stubbornness because he needed to know what was going.

Ziva was forced to explain everything. She said that Adam has been helping her. She said Adam infiltrated Sahar's group in order to get close to them and that he tipped off Ziva once he found out the group was going after Gibbs. Unfortunately, that tip also outed him as a spy. He was then taken a hostage and Ziva wanted to rescue him. She quickly realized she wasn't up to the job by herself and so she did as Odette suggested. She relied on NCIS. The old team still cared enough for her to do her favor and so they didn't have a problem with tracking down the men from the photo.

It had been easy for them to find Adam. Adam was later found badly beaten but he would have been okay if they got him treatment in time. Ziva and Gibbs had tried moving him only first Adam had something to say. Adam said Sahar was still alive. The woman that they had killed had been decoy. The real Sahar was still out there and it seems Ziva did know her. Ziva just didn't know from where. She was looking for a reason on why this person wanted to destroy her life and Adam was just about telling her what it is when an explosion happened.

Ziva and Gibbs fell down an old shoot. They had inadvertently left Adam alone when he needed them and sadly it had taken them a while to get back to him. By time they did, it had been too late. Adam died from his injuries. There was nothing they could do to bring him back and so they focused on he gave them. He told them the real Sahar was still out there. She also appears to still have her henchmen and therefore Sahar was going to keep coming for Ziva if Ziva didn't stop her. Ziva was angry and so was Gibbs.

They thought this was all over. They now know that Sahar had used one of her underlings as a decoy and that the woman is shrouded in mystery. No one knows what she looks like. They don't know her motivations or how many people she still has at her back. Sahar was perhaps more dangerous than ever. The team tried getting answers and the only way they could do that was by using their dead henchman. The guy had a UV Stamp from the VIP room that Bishop frequented to get the flash drive.

This means Victor Mir knew more than he said. Bishop went back to the club with a better outfit and she got him to distance himself from his security team. When he was alone, the team moved in. They beat up Mir until he gave them answers and that's when he revealed that Sahar goes by the name Sarah. She was pretending to be a waitress with a kid. Her son name was Phineas and they were Gibbs's new neighbors. It seems Adam was telling Gibbs not Ziva that he knew her. Gibbs was close to Sarah and her son and he even consider them friends.

Then again it did explain why Sarah let her son hang out with a man whose house blew up. Parents would usually have been a little more cautious and so Gibbs wasn't as surprised as he thought he would be. He quickly went over to their house, but Sarah wasn't there. She's been leaving Phineas home alone while she "works" and she made the kid promise not to say anything because she told him it would look bad. Phineas was the only innocent in all of this. He didn't know why his mom was in trouble or why Gibbs was looking for her and so he made Gibbs promise that his mom would be okay.

Gibbs tried to get to Sarah first. Only Ziva beat him to it because she found out where Sarah was going to be from Mir and she was so set on wanting to kill her that she didn't tell anyone else what she was going to do. But the later between Ziva and Sarah hadn't gone Ziva's way. Sarah almost killed her and the only reason she didn't was because Gibbs showed up. Gibbs killed Sarah and he ended this. It seems had Sarah had done all of this because she was with Ziva's brother Ari and she wanted to avenge his death, but her plan failed. Sarah was dead and her son was now in Gibbs's care.

Gibbs was holding off on breaking the news to Phineas but eventually he'll tell the kid that his mom passed away.

Summary: Gibbs must face the consequences of helping Ziva with "the one thing" she said she'd take care of before returning to her family.

Phineas was the most important thing. Phineas was left orphaned by Gibbs and Ziva's actions. His mother had technically been a bad guy, but with her death and his father gone, it was just Phineas that was left. He was alone in the world. There must have been a part of him that blamed Gibbs for it because he chose to later run away. He left behind a card that said "don't look for me" and he left. Gibbs didn't know about it until Sloane came over to check on Phineas. She wanted to see if she could help the little boy through his grief and she and Gibbs ended up finding Phineas's bed empty.

Both agents searched the room. They then found the note and went into panic mode. They called the local police and they called in everyone on the team. They wanted all hands on deck to look for Phineas. They figured he couldn't have gotten far if he was on foot and that had been their first mistake. They thought he was on foot when he wasn't. Phineas woke up a friend of his and bought the friend's bike. He had told Hurley that his mom was dead and that he needed to leave. He didn't tell his friend anything else.

Gibbs thanked Hurley when they finally got around to asking him about Phineas. He also became irrational as the day went on. Gibbs blames himself for Phineas running away because he was the one that left the kid motherless and so if anything happened to Phineas it was going to be Gibbs blaming himself for it. He needed to find this kid. He was desperate and the only one that seems to understand how bad it is was Torres. Torres was willing to do anything to find Phineas. He joined Gibbs in nearly torturing a guy for information and even then they didn't find out much.

The team believes Phineas might have gone looking for his father. He has never met the man because he was raised by his aunt and uncle for a while and then his mom had collected him, but when Gibbs told Phineas that his mom was dead, the first thing he asked was if his father had done it. Which was a weird question for a boy to ask? Gibbs did try to get some answers from Phineas and Phineas quickly clammed up. He didn't want to talk so Gibbs left the room. That was the last time they spoke and so Gibbs had questions about this father.

He had his team dig into it. They had found Sahar's prison records that stated she gave birth in prison and that the little boy was given to a family in Aleppo. There was nothing about a father in the records. He wasn't listed on the birth certificate and he never tried to claim the child. Only the team tracked Phineas's movements. He sold the bike for cash and he bought a bus ticket to Philadelphia. He got off on one of the stops and then he got into a vehicle with an unidentified man that witnesses thought were Phineas's father.

The team didn't know who this man was. Ziva didn't even know. Ziva came back to help with the search and she was just as worried as everyone else. They weren't sure if this mystery man was the father or if he was a predator and so the team tried to give Gibbs some good news. They said that Sahar was wearing a tracker necklace. The necklace was one half of a heart and the other could have been given to Phineas. It could even explain how this mystery man had found him. The team, therefore, couldn't give up hope. They had a lead and they had Kasie. Kasie found footage of the mystery man from the bus stop.

It turns out it was the Victor. The guy they had tortured earlier and who swore he didn't know anything about Phineas. He of course lied. The truth is he probably knows the kid best and that's only because he used to suck up to Sahar all the time. He would buy her gifts as well as get something for Phineas. Phineas must have met him several times and that's why he was willing to leave with him, but Victor wasn't the sort to do a favor for nothing and so the team tried to figure out his angle. Why did he take Phineas?

It could have to do with Phineas's uncle. Phineas's father was a guard at the prison and Sahar slept with Ahmet with favors until she got pregnant. She thought Ahmet would be more inclined to her seeing as she was having his baby and instead he ended their relationship. Both romantically and the business one. Ahmet basically forced Sahar to give up her baby and she got revenge when she was released. She later hunted down Ahmet and stabbed him several times. She killed him so brutally that his gangster brother had put a price on her head.

This same brother also had an additional fee put out for whoever would return his nephew to him. The brother's name is Hassan Sayegh and he was dangerous. No one wanted to cross him. Victor probably wanted the payday and he tried taking Phineas out of the country, but Phineas was smart. He followed Rule #9. He always carries a knife and he accused the man pretending to be his father of planting it on him. And so Victor was arrested, while Phineas was detained until NCIS came and he was reunited with Gibbs.

Phineas was sorry for running away. He was just so scared of being given away that he didn't want that to happen again and so the team found his aunt and uncle for. They were the family that took him in from the orphanage. They also still missed him and wanted him back. So Phineas got to go home again and this time it's a stable environment.

He also wasn't the only one going home. Ziva finally got to tell the team her goodbyes and afterward she finally went home to DiNozzo and their daughter Tali.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates an F-18 crash and subsequent disappearance of the pilot; McGee reluctantly discusses a very personal decision with his teammates.

McGee is getting a vasectomy. He and Delilah decided they were done with having children and after having a scare last month they both realized that it was going to be up to him to fix things. Hence the vasectomy. McGee was going to have the procedure done and Torres felt bad about it. They were discussing when the call came in. Gibbs and Bishop were called out to a Navy vessel because one of their pilots went missing and its possible she committed suicide. The pilot was Naval Lieutenant Rebecca Weeks.

Weeks was on a routine mission when she pulled away from the others. She then refused to answer all calls sent her way and both rescue and assistance teams were too far away to get to her. The next thing everyone knew Weeks was calling in to say she was sorry before she started her descent over the water. She didn't eject or anything and so everyone believed she killed herself. Her XO tried to claim that maybe she began losing oxygen and wasn't herself, but that doesn't explain her apology. She was clear-headed when she said she was sorry.

Gibbs and Bishop went out to the ship. They were going to check Weeks' bunk to check for a suicide note and they ended up coming across a body. The body was that of Petty Officer First Class Fisher Patrick. He seemingly died of an overdose. He overdosed and yet he didn't have a prescription for it while Weeks did. Weeks had an accident a month ago in which she was prescribed oxycodone. She still had some leftover pills in her bunk. There was also of her crushing some of those pills up and so the team suspected she might have drugged Patrick as a means of killing him.

Patrick and Weeks dated for a while. Then he dumped her because he said she was too old for him and so Weeks told her bunkmate that she was going to get him back for it. Her exact words were that she was going to make him pay. Weeks could have killed her ex-boyfriend and then killed herself in a murder/suicide. But later the team began suspecting she wasn't dead. She turned off the transmitter that would have been on her ejection seat and so odds are she did eject in time to avoid the crash.

The ejection seat also came with a water raft for one. She used that to row her way to the mainland and the team soon found evidence of just this. They also ran into someone who saw her alive and well. Weeks bought a couple of things from the store and she went on to steal a motorcycle. The team knew she was trapped on an island and so they didn't think she'd been able to escape, but then they learned that her godfather lived on the island. Retired Naval Commander Jack Briggs had lived nearby.

The team went to his house. They questioned him about Weeks and he told them she was long gone, but they found the motorcycle she ditched. She couldn't possibly make it far without the motorcycle. The team thought she was still at the house and they were in the middle of searching it when they heard the airplane. Weeks borrowed her godfather's airplane and she fled. The team traced her plane. They found it abandoned thirty miles away and they had no idea why she did that. She could have gone anywhere with that plan. Why stay in the United States?

Another weird thing is that Weeks later called Gibbs. She called to tell him that she hadn't killed her ex-boyfriend and not that surprisingly no one believed her. They were too intent on finding her. She landed the plane and then she stole a car from a junkyard. She also raided another car for parts. The last part didn't make sense because she was on the run and so why would take time away from that to steal parts. The team did some research on the car and they found out it belonged to Navy Commander Marshall May.

May was her Commanding Officer. He was deployed when his wife Jill used the car and got into a fatal car accident. Jill hadn't tried to use the brakes before she died, but for some reason, Jill started looking into this car accident for herself and it seems like she believed someone might have hacked the car. Jill also went back to the ship. She snuck aboard using someone's else ID and then she took May, a prisoner. She was later found with her gun on the Commander and she said she needed May's password to prove he killed his wife.

The team finally arrested Weeks, but she made them investigate May as well and they found evidence that he did hack his wife. He murdered his wife because they were having marital problems. His wife had even told Weeks days before that if she ever died that it would have been May that caused it. Weeks had been a family friend and at first, she hadn't wanted to believe that May killed his wife. She then told her boyfriend what she thought and he said he was going to tell NCIS.

Then Patrick died. It was made to look like Weeks did it and so Weeks believed it was May, but Weeks said Patrick was her boyfriend, not her ex-boyfriend. The team first heard that from Weeks's bunkmate. The same bunkmate that had been having an affair with May and who used his computer to murder his wife. So the team later arrested the real murderer and they cleared both May and Weeks's name.

But when the time came for McGee to go to his appointment, he was a little to freak to do it and so he talked it over with Gibbs.

And Gibbs to go through with it even if he then said "hell, no" when asked if he was a member of the "cut club".

Summary: After a body is found at an unmanned aerial vehicle testing site, the NCIS team must determine if the death was murder or an accident. Also, Palmer carefully interviews medical examiner assistant candidates.

Palmer is looking for a new medical assistant. He's been putting it off since Ducky's retirement and the extra workload was beginning to get to him. Palmer was doing the work of two men. He was barely getting any sleep and it was slowing him down in the field. Everyone had noticed that he was off his game as they worked their latest case. They were investigating the murder of Retired Gunnery Sergeant Daniel Backer and the man had been blown up. There were pieces of him all over the place. It made it harder for someone like Palmer to perform an autopsy on so many pieces and yet he tried to keep up with the rest of the team.

Palmer determined that Backer was dead before he blew up. He said the blood flow had seemingly stopped before the explosion and that was his proof that Backer had been dead for several hours. Even if the explosion did make everything harder. Palmer barely had all the pieces and the team was trying to figure out what happened. Backer was a drone testing field. He would have known better than to be in that area and so his body must have been moved to that location postmortem. There was also the woman manning the drone.

The woman was later identified as Marine Staff Sergeant Diana Murphy. Murphy ignored a direct order to not fire her drone and she did it anyway. She blew up Backer and as it turns out Backer was her ex-boyfriend. The team would have liked to have questioned Murphy, but she left the base and no one knows where she went. The MPs later found her at Backer's place. She went there for some reason and so that made the team believe even more that she was guilty. They thought she returned to the scene of the crime to revel in the murder.

They later brought Murphy in for questioning. They asked her several times about her relationship with Backer and she said she loved him. She said she would never think about hurting him. She went back to his place because he was the only one that she could trust and she said she hadn't known what to do after supposedly killing someone. Only Murphy didn't have an answer for why she failed to follow a command from her CO. She was panicking and so Gibbs tested her. He tested her with the Marine chant. And Murphy failed to hear him.

Murphy is deaf. She's been losing her hearing to the point where she can't hear her CO give her orders and she's been hiding it by reading people's lips. She's gotten very adept at that. She was following the investigation by reading lips. She was also hiding something and is refusing to say what happened though the team thinks they found out her secret. They learned that Murphy went with her boyfriend Backer as he was showing off a new long-range missile that uses sound rather than bullets and that she didn't have on her earmuffs when it tested it out for her.

It was this new weapon that caused Murphy to lose her hearing. At first, her ears were just ringing. She even thought she would get her hearing back and so Backer had helped her to cover it up. They were doing fine until she lost all of her hearing. She still wanted to cover it up and Backer told her that she had to inform her CO. They both knew what would happen once she did. She would lose her job and it would have been his fault. The team believed that was a good enough motive to kill Backer.

There was just one problem with that theory. She had an airtight alibi. Murphy was at work and she was seen work long after the window of opportunity had passed. She couldn't have killed Backer, but she was still hiding something. Each time they pushed her on it, she would give them something else and this last time she told them about Backer's stepbrother. It seems Backer and stepbrother have been fighting over the family home. The stepbrother, Ronald Kepczak, had had permission to be on the property in the beginning and that all changed after he put in a sound-proof studio.

Ron was a musician. He had needed someplace to practice and so he resented Backer for taking the studio from him. He just didn't hate him enough to kill him. Ron has an alibi for the night in question and so the team decided to check out the house for themselves. They wanted to see why Backer needed a sound-proof room and it turns out Backer was holding the sonic weapons there. The new ones that took his girlfriend's hearing. There was no reason why Backer had them in his possession and the only reason anyone could think of was that Backer was intending to sell this weapon to an arms dealer.

The team followed Backer's last movements and they learned more about him. They learned he forged his girlfriend's signature to get his hands on those weapons. He had even gotten into a fight with Murphy about those weapons and he told her he couldn't explain why he needed those weapons because it might put her at risk. That's what she was hiding. Murphy was hiding the fact her boyfriend was into something nefarious and she said she didn't tell anyone because she didn't want them to think of Backer that way.

Murphy still believes Backer was honorable. It didn't matter that he forged her signature or that he was having secret meetings. She said he must have had his reasons. The team, however, was skeptical. They investigated the people Backer was in contact with and they found out that Backer had stolen the weapons to prove a theory. He wanted to prove how harmful they were. He apparently had written several reports in the past about how faulty the weapons are and each of them had been buried.

They were buried by the private contractor in charge of those weapons. Mr. Geary buried the reports because he was trying to sell his share into the company, but he has an alibi and so the team asked who he was selling his shares to. Geary was selling his shares to George Ingram. Ingram was Murphy's CO when she blew up her boyfriend and he usually didn't handle field testing. He did it that day because he reassigned himself and so the team went looking for him. And they found him knocked unconscious at Murphy's place.

Ingram tried to attack Murphy, but she fought him off and it's a shame that she lost her job because she really is a great Marine.

And Gibbs must have been thinking the same because he found a job for her as a civilian liaison with a new military contractor.

Summary: After Torres and Bishop are victims of a hit-and-run, Torres fights for his life in the ICU.

Bishop and Torres were out on their morning run when a car came out of nowhere. Torres saw it coming and he had enough of his wits to push Bishop out of the way, but he was hit by the car. He was hit and worse he hit his head. It was the head injury that was serious. Torres had minor cuts everywhere else and so it was the head injury for his unconsciousness. He wasn't waking up. He was even flatlining at one point and so the doctors did everything they could for him while they waited for the neurosurgeon.

The neurosurgeon was the best in the country. She was being flown in to especially handle the situation with Torres and so the team could wait for her or they could make themselves useful. They eventually chose a useful road. Bishop was an eyewitness and she could describe the car as well as give a partial plate. She could have been more helpful if she left the hospital, but she wasn't ready to leave the hospital just yet and so McGee and Gibbs handled the case. They got other eyewitnesses and they used their statements to form an opinion.

The team found out this sports car was a menace. He's been a menace for the past week and so he's a new arrival. Combined that with the partial plate also gave Kasie a name. The name is Xavier Zolotov. He was a spoiled trust fund baby and he gets away with everything. He's been in trouble before, but it never sticks and so Bishop tried to get him for this. She left the hospital in order to arrest and question Xavier. She barely leaned on him when he later confessed to everything. He admitted to being the driver and then he asked when he was going to be released because he said he had a flight to catch.

Bishop and McGee had thought he was delusional. They got his confession and they thought that's all they needed to send him to jail, but again, Xavier was able to walk away from the damage he caused. He pulled some strings and he was released from NCIS custody. It turns out Xavier has friends in high places within the Russian government. He got his friends to lean on the US government and they in turned leaned on Director Vance. Vance was told to drop it and he was asked to retire when he didn't.

But Vance still wasn't giving up. Vance has important friends too and he asked Gibbs to buy him time. Gibbs tried to do just that. He went back to Xavier's place and he arrested the man's wife Layla Zolotov. He technically had on animal cruelty because she has a pet baby tiger. They also said she was a flight risk and so that meant she wouldn't get bail. The team thought this would be enough to derail Xavier's plans, but it wasn't. He didn't care that his wife was under arrest. He was willing to abandon her and still catch his flight. And so Bishop snapped.

Bishop told McGee that she was going to kill Xavier. She meant what she said and the look in her eye scared McGee. He wasn't going to let his friend commit an assassination. She'd get caught for one and he might go to jail as well. So, McGee tried to stop Bishop. He told her not to do anything stupid and she promised she would calm down. She said she'd go back to the office to work on the case. Bishop swore she'd go to the office and yet she never went there and McGee found out about it the next morning.

McGee even spoke to Sloane because he was that worried about Bishop. He told the psychologist that Bishop was coming off at the rails and so Sloane later talked to Gibbs. She asked Gibbs to bench Bishop. She thought that's what was best for the agent and Gibbs shot it down. Gibbs wasn't going to bench anyone. Not even if he believed Bishop was dangerous. He thought he could talk to Bishop and stop her from anything stupid, but he wasn't in the best place to judge anyone else and so Bishop ended up ignoring everything he said.

The team was also stuck with the whole stopping Xavier from leaving the country. They turned to Sloane for help and she said the best way to get to him was to get to his side-chick. He was down a wife already, he couldn't afford to lose his girlfriend as well. The team went looking for the girlfriend and they later identified her as Colleen Kennedy. They then went to her apartment where they found a dead Xavier. His girlfriend wasn't there though and so that led to a few questions. Like, who killed Xavier?

The team's best bet, if they didn't want to believe it was Bishop, meant they had to believe it was Colleen. Colleen at first glance didn't seem like the type to kill someone, but they looked into her background. She was another trust fund kid. She and her sister inherited a boatload of money from their parents and then the sister died of a suspected heroin overdose. The sister was in the navy and they had questions. They sent in an undercover NCIS agent who happened to be Torres. He "dated" Colleen and he collected evidence on her.

The evidence at the time hadn't been enough to arrest Colleen for the murder of her sister, but new evidence has since been found and a new case was being put together. This case was going to rely on Torres's testimony and so that's when he had his "accident". Colleen arranged for her boyfriend to get rid of Torres for her. She then took care of the boyfriend and she also tried sneaking into the hospital to make sure Torres dies. Only the team found her first and so they arrested her for the attempted murder on Torres.

They couldn't get her for the murder of Xavier because there was no evidence proving she did it. She also denied killing her boyfriend and so there was a chance she didn't kill him. But then who did?

Summary: The lead suspect in an NCIS murder investigation is a woman Gibbs' friend, Phillip Brooks (Don Lake), met on a dating site. Also, Sloane has a secret admirer on Valentine's Day.

Torres was back at work. He was going stir-crazy being at home and so he came back to work early. He couldn't have come at a better time. The team had a new case. They were called to the scene of an apparent homicide that happened on a popular hunting trail and their victim was identified as Navy Captain Alan Wales. Wales was found dead and in his underwear. His clothes were found nearby behind a log along with some identification. Wales was also shot to death. He was shot by an arrow straight into the heart and then left to rot for weeks.

Wales has been dead for approximately six weeks before he was found. Prior to that, he was on the dating app known as Fleet Date and it was used by navy personnel. The team looked into his usage of this app. They figured his date might have been the last person to see him alive and so they found her. Her name is Stacy Gordon. She's since moved on from Wales and she was dating Gibbs's friend Phil. Phil and Stacy have been together for four weeks. She was dating Wales before and the relationship ended because she thought he ghosted her.

Stacy also wasn't that disappointed by Wales's death. He was a player and she believed he was seeing other people behind her back. Stacy had an alibi as well. She was out of town for work and there were plenty of witnesses to back that up. Stacy wasn't their culprit. They were looking for someone who wanted to humiliate Wales. They stripped him down so that he could be found naked and they shot him in the heart because they thought that was the only way to break it. And so Sloane said they were looking for someone who felt humiliated themselves.

Someone like one of the women Wales could have been juggling. The team were looking into it when they were notified about the similarities of their case to another case. This second victim was Chief Petty Officer Craig Olson and he was murdered by being shot in the heart by an arrow.

He was also on the dating app Fleet Date. He had been seeing several women and one of them turned out to be Stacy. Stacy was the only connection between Olson and Wales. She was either killing these men herself or someone close to her was doing it.

The team decided to investigate the first theory. They found out that Stacy had a few days off while she was working in Atlanta and so they suspected she used that time to drive back to town to kill Wales. She also did not have an alibi for Olson. The team suspected she killed both men and so they brought her in for questioning. Stacy came of her own accord. She didn't bring a lawyer and she answered all of the questions. Stacy held nothing back. She told them that she was watching movies in her hotel room when Wales died and she also added that she had no reason to kill the men.

She didn't care about them. They were just dating and Stacy claimed it was all a coincidence. She even repeated herself when Gibbs brought up her late husband. Stacy used to be married to Mark Tucker and his death had been accident. He supposedly died after a fall. He was drinking and he lost his balance. The local police had written it off as an accident. They also refused to hear a bad word about Stacy because she grew up in the area and the local sheriff had taught her how to shoot with a bow and arrow.

The team had looked photos of her late husband's accident. They could tell from the pictures that the story about it being an accident didn't match up with the wounds and so the team believed Stacy killed her husband as well. They wanted to test her hair against the hair they had found on the arrow point. Only Stacy wasn't going to give them a sample of her hair. They had to use Phil and so Phil tried to grab a piece of his girlfriend's hair. And unfortunately she caught him stealing the hair from her brush.

Stacy broke up with Phil. She also gave him a sample of her hair as a parting gift and so the test still had it tested. It came back as a negative. Stacy wasn't their killer and they ruined her relationship with Phil. Phil fell into a depression after the breakup. He began singing breakup songs and drinking milk. He was so depressed that he said he wanted to be like Gibbs and Gibbs told him he deserved better. Gibbs later returned to work. He and the team found another link between the men.

They found out both men were taking meth. They were buying it from a nutritionist who ran a supplemental pill company and neither of them men knew that the pills they were buying had meth in them. They just thought that they were buying virility pills. The nutritionist withheld several facts from them, but he wasn't their killer. He was seriously injured months ago and his shoulder was never right again. He didn't have it in him to use a bow and arrow. Gibbs was just wondering where to go next when he got a call from Phil.

Phil called because he went by Stacy's place. He said someone had broken in and he also believed they were still in the house. No sooner did he say that the phone call was cut off. The team raced to Stacy's home and they didn't find her or Phil. They did however run into the sheriff from Stacy's hometown. It turns out the sheriff is a friend. She covered up the husband's murder because he was abusive and Stacy was only fighting back. Stacy's husband's family was also quite vindictive and that's why they covered up what happened.

The sheriff mentioned how the family still blamed Stacy anyways. She also said that the only person that didn't blame Stacy was her husband's cousin, Tom Logan. Logan was sweet on Stacy and he recently moved into the area. The team went looking for him and they were told he didn't show up to work. Logan was the one behind everything. He kidnapped Stacy and Phil because he thought killing Phil would mean he and Stacy get to be together. And so Stacy burst his bubble.

She told him she never loved him. Logan was going to kill both her and Phil when the team found them and Gibbs killed Logan.

Phil also managed to get Stacy to take him back and so it was a happy valentine's day for everyone.

And that includes Torres who took some time away to rest up.

Summary: While investigating the suicide of a retired Navy officer who left a rare, valuable — and possibly stolen — coin to the National Museum of the Navy, the team imagines themselves in his life story in order to piece together how the coin ended up in his possession.

Retired Navy Master Chief Arturo Amador was found dead at his home. He killed himself. He went to great lengths to make sure everything was perfect and he was even wearing a suit when he was found. Amador didn't explain why he killed himself, though. It could have been the loneliness because he was listening to an old romance song when he died and he made sure his last moments were staring a picture of an old girlfriend. Amador also could have killed himself because of a coin. He had given a rare dollar coin that was worth seven figures to a friend and this friend confirmed how rare it was. She was going over to ask Amador about it when she learned he was dead.

This friend worked at the Navy Museum. Amador worked there as well. He had retired from the Navy and he took up a position as a volunteer at the museum. He, therefore, knew his coin was worth something. He was surrounded by rare artifacts all day and he should have been able to recognize what he had. Maybe that's why he gave it to his friend. The team investigated Amador's death and it was ruled a suicide. There was also something else that Palmer found. Palmer found out Amador was dying from a tumor. He would have lost most of his faculties by the end. And so that could explain why he decided to kill himself.

What the team couldn't figure out was where the coin came into play. The team investigated Amador's life and they identified the girl in the picture. Her name was Annie. She and Amador fell in love at first sight and they wanted to get married only her father refused to give his blessing. Annie's father thought she deserved better than a poor sailor. He came between Annie and Amador and Amador seems to have lashed out against him because of it. Amador's and Annie's letters mentioned a coin. A coin that her father owned and that Amador managed to get a hold of. The team was wondering how he got the coin when someone stepped forward with a claim.

Spencer Downing came forward with the claim that the coin belonged to his family. He said Amador stole it from them fifty years ago. Spencer was the brother to Annie and he told them what happened in March of 1972. Amador came over. He tried to get their father's blessing and not long after he was refused — the coin went missing. Spencer said his father always suspected Amador. The family thought he was a gold digger and they had been happy when his relationship with Annie went nowhere. Annie also died a few months later. She reportedly had thyroid disease and she passed away within weeks of the coin going missing.

Only Spencer didn't know the full story. His sister continued to see Amador long after their father rejected him and Amador had even given her a ring. There were receipts to back it up. Amador still proposed to Annie and she said yes. Her father threw her ring in the fire when he saw it. He thought that could stop them and it didn't. Annie and Amador still saw each other. Not that it was perfect. They were seen arguing and the police were called. The police didn't Amador. They gave him a warning and it was written that he had a coin in his pocket. The team believed that Annie must have found out about the coin and that's why she argued with her fiancé.

Another thing the team found is that Annie's death wasn't from thyroid disease. Palmer looked at her symptoms when she died and she was clearly poisoned. Which makes her death a murder. The best suspect for her murder was her fiancé and thankfully he had an alibi. He was overseas in Vietnam when she died. Her killer must have been someone close to home and so the team investigated it. They later reopened Annie's coffin. They found evidence of her being poisoned and they also found her wearing her engagement ring. The same ring her father destroyed by throwing into a fire.

The team needed to get a better picture of her relationship with Amador so they read the couple's love letters. The couple constantly wrote to each other and they used Annie's Aunt Bertha as an intermediary. Bertha was the only one in Annie's family that approved of the relationship. She was all set for them getting engaged and she later returned Amador's letters after Annie died. But who killed Annie? She was consistently poisoned for weeks. It couldn't have been her boyfriend and so it had to be a family member. The team looked at her brother. Her brother was passed over in the family company and not long after that happened his sister began getting sick.

The team first considered her father because he never approved of Amador, but her father had a change of heart after she got sick and he gave her, her ring back. He had it reset so that she could wear it at the hospital. She must have still been in love with Amador if she wanted to wear and so that ruled him as well. Her killer had to be her brother. They even figured out how he did. They found out that Annie had been given poisonous stamps. She was slowly poisoned each time she wrote to Amador and so the team proved it by tricking the brother into giving up his DNA. And they also heard from Aunt Bertha.

Aunt Bertha is still alive and well. She was the one that explained the coin. She said Annie stole it and that Annie was going to use that to fund a new life for them. She later told Amador what she did and he told her that he was being shipped out. The couple argued about it. Annie didn't want him risking his life and so that's the fight the police interrupted. It had nothing to do with the coin. Annie still held onto the coin and so Aunt Bertha ended up giving it to Amador after Annie's funeral. She wanted him to remember Annie and Amador held onto the coin for sentimental value.

He only gave up on the coin because he knew it could fund a wing at the Navy Museum. Plus, he was already dying and so he didn't need a coin to remember Annie when he was going to be seeing her soon anyway.

And so the coin got to stay with the Navy Museum.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates the death of a Navy officer murdered the same way as his parents a decade ago. They stumble across a storage container filled with dollhouses that display recreations of murder scenes. Also, the team agrees to clean out their living spaces, but some have a harder time saying goodbye to their possessions than others.

A teenager ran someone over. She was arguing with her friend about something on his cell phone and neither of them saw anyone or were even sure what they hit. They merely felt the bump in the road. They were at least responsible for it and they later got out of the car to check on what they hit. They thought it would be Bambi and instead it was Petty Officer Third Class Noah O'Donnell. He had been dead long before the car road over him. A later examination proved he had been shot twice in the chest and once in the head. He had been executed. The team brought in to investigate the why and they started out by checking up on their victim.

O'Donnell was an Intelligence Expert with Quantico. He also taught self-defense during his off-hours at the community center. He seemed like a good guy and the only family he had left was his sister Claire. His sister's cell phone last pinged mere moments before O'Donnell's murder. There hasn't been anything since then and so the sister was considered missing. The team wanted to find her. They also wanted to solve another mystery that occurred. There was a detective poking around and he told O'Donnell to keep the man's murder a secret. The detective that did this was John Fischer. He also worked a murder investigation involving O'Donnell's parents.

His parents were murdered years ago. They were murdered by a homeless man who was mentally ill and the crime itself had rocked their small community. The detective didn't want the circus to happen again just because there was a third murder within the same family. Fischer had wanted to bury what happened and so the team wrought him off. They thought he was being too cautious. It wasn't until they looked into the parents' murder that they could find a connection. The parents were killed at their house and both O'Donnell and wandered the streets afterward. They were found in the same location where O'Donnell's body was later found.

The team had gone looking for Claire. They figured she knew what happened that night better than anyone else and unfortunately they couldn't find her. Claire was an odd one. She would haunt her parents' old home and the team went there. They found the house condemned. It had been bought and sold several times with no one choosing to stay. It also didn't help that Claire kept visiting the house. She would haunt the place and sometimes she used it as a studio. She created dollhouses there. The dollhouses she created were pretty unusual. They depicted gruesome murders and so the team turned to Sloane for help.

The team assumed Claire was unwell. The truth is she was using these scenes to help her understand murder. There was a genuine study behind this and Claire was using it because she wanted to understand her own parents' murder. Her parents were killed in the same way as her brother O'Donnell. It could have been a copycat or the real killer could have killed again. The team wasn't sure of which and they needed to speak to Claire. She was either their suspect or a possible target. Her disappearance wasn't looking good for her and everyone in her former town had assumed she was their killer.

They were staking out her old house. They knew she always returned to the crime scene and so they went there because they thought Claire would show up at her old home. Except they were wrong. Claire has a new place to haunt and so the team went to where her brother's body was found. They found Claire stalking the place as usual. She was trying to talk to her brother and the team had no idea if she was expecting a response or not. They were still trying to talk to Claire. They told her that they wanted to help and they got her to come in. They later asked her if she killed her brother.

Claire said "yes". She said she couldn't stop thinking about their parents' murder and she thought if she created a "nutshell" about it that she would find peace. She even enlisted her brother's help. She thinks her brother found something and that's what got him killed. She also blames herself for what happened. She thought if she had just let it go that her brother would still be alive and so the team looked into it. They found out that O'Donnell was investigating his parents' murder. He must have found something because he was later killed over it and so the team was retracing his steps. They wanted to find what he found.

The homeless that were suspected of murdering the parents had died. He died in federal custody and so no one wanted to pay for his body to be exhumed for DNA. It was never proven this homeless man murdered the parents. The detective working the case was never able to close it and yet the team knew the killer was still out there. Claire had an alibi for her brother's murder. She was spotted miles away and so that didn't explain why the tweezers that were used on her brother's dead body was found in her studio. It looked like someone was trying to frame Claire for her brother's murder.

Claire was also at risk. Her whole family was murdered and she could just as easily be next. The team moved to protect her. They also tried to get her to come out of her shell. Claire was a very quiet person. She didn't really come alive until she was talking about her dollhouses and so Gibbs and Sloane used them to connect to Claire. They solved the murders that the doll represented. They also found out her brother had created one of them. O'Donnell recreated a supposed electrical fire that was an actual murder. He must have figured that out and so the team came to suspect he was murdered because of it.

The team suddenly found themselves investigating a scene created out of dolls. The victim in this scene was Louise Fitzgerald. She was a former neighbor of the brother and sister. She used to cook meals for them after their parents died. She had been a very good friend and she had supposedly died in the electrical fire. Even the fire investigator thought it was an accident. No one other than O'Donnell took a closer look at her case and so the team did. They found out she had been robbed before killed. She was attending self-defense at the community center and it had been O'Donnell as well co-teacher.

He was stealing from her. He was heavily in debt and he killed her to hide what he did. O'Donnell must have found about it. He confronted his friend and his friend killed him. He then made it look like O'Donnell was killed by the same person who murdered his parents. The friend was trying to frame Claire for it and so the team arrested their guy before he could hurt her any further.

Claire was finally given closure and she agreed to meet with the detective who had never given up on her parents' case.

The team also donated a bunch of their old stuff to VA and everyone was surprised when Bishop gave away things she genuinely.

It didn't seem like her and so they were concerned.

Summary: The team searches for answers when the body of a well-regarded Navy technician in the Reserves is found floating in a lake where a popular community event is being held. Also, Sloane is caught off-guard when her daughter, Faith, makes an unexpected request.

The 8th Annual Duck Dunk became a crime scene. A couple of kids who were trying to cheat at the event had released the duck far from the crowd and that's how they found the dead body. The body belonged to Petty Officer First Class Jeremy Whistler. He was strangled and then tossed into the river. It was a good thing he had his military ID still on him. The team used that to identify him and they searched his remains for what else he may have had with him. They found a cell phone. Whistler was called several times by his wife. She was asking him where he was and she seemed worried. There was also a call from an unknown number. This person left a message in which they threatened to murder the Whistler the next time he saw them and so that was their first lead.

They could tell from the call that voicemail belonged to a woman. They knew she must have been angry about something and yet the team couldn't figure out what. Their victim was a saint. He volunteered everywhere and he had a life full of friends. Whistler never did anything controversial or bad. His wife couldn't even think of anyone who would be angry with and so the team went digging. They later connected the voicemail with Beverly Berkshire. She attended class with Whistler at Aspire Technical College and they were lab partners. They were working out just fine when Beverly found out someone used their computer to hack into the school's student financial data.

Beverly knew it was Whistler. She told the team that everyone believed he was a saint and the whole time he was the devil. Whistler was the hacker known as TerrorCastor. He would target the elderly and defraud them. He was high up on the FBI Cybercrimes Most Wanted. He was a really bad guy and Beverly knew his secret. She just couldn't do anything about it. She had priors for fraud and so she knew no one would believe her about Mr. Perfect. Beverly told the team everything. They went digging and they found out she was right. Whistler was dirty. The man had even been stabbed recently.

Palmer found evidence of it. He later told the team and so they used that information to confront Whistler's widow. She once claimed that her husband was a good man. They now have evidence to show differently and so they confronted her with it. They asked her what her husband was really doing. She told them some sob story about their daughter was born with a condition and that they are nearly bankrupt to get treatment for her. She even tried to claim her husband hated what he had to do. She said that's why he was going to school and so the team told her what they found. Whistler went to that school to find a new victim. He didn't care about getting an education and he wasn't some Robin Hood.

Whistler hurt a lot of people. The team wanted to know who did he drive to stab him and so the wife told them that had been Whistler's best friend. His name was Tye Tanner. He and Whistler used to run wild as kids. They each had long juvie records and they must have had a falling out later on. McGee and Torres went to pick him. They had had to chase him and so they really wanted Sloane's thoughts on him when they brought him, but she was preoccupied. Sloane's biological daughter has come back into her life. Her daughter Faith was getting married and going through fertility treatments. She also wanted to know who her father was.

Sloane had no idea how to tell Faith she was raped. She had gotten drunk at a party and she asked a friend to take her home. He used that. He got her alone and he raped her. Sloane found out she was pregnant six weeks later and she joined the army after the adoption. The rest was history. Sloane had never wanted Faith to learn the truth. She had put her up for adoption to protect her and so she at first didn't want to tell Faith the truth. She had wanted to hide it as she did back then. She had even talked about it with Gibbs and Gibbs like a really great friend had offered to find the guy for her. He asked for a name. She told him "no" and she said that's why she never wanted to tell him. She never wanted to be thought of as a victim who needed saving.

Sloane has been living with this for thirty years. She wanted to put it behind her and so she made Gibbs promise to forget it. Gibbs ended up going back to his case. He and McGee questioned Tanner. They found out Tanner and Whistler had been selling internet security (once they finished infecting said computers). The guys had moved the money they made to an offshore account and one day all the money was gone. Tanner blamed Whistler. He pulled a knife and he stabbed his best friend. The two naturally had a falling out and they never talked again. The team had no idea why Whistler turned on his best friend.

They thought maybe they could ask around at the school. There was just one little problem with that. The school had been completely abandoned and no one knows what happened to Aspire Technical College. The website was gone. The vending machines were gone and no one was answering the phone. It turns out Aspire Technical College was a pop-up scam school. The scammers started a school in which they helped people fill out loan papers and then once they got the money they would shut up shop. They would even move on to start a new school somewhere else. The person behind the school had been caught out. They tried to con a con-man and Whistler realized what they were doing.

Whistler had gone legit. He stole money from his best friend to pay back all the people he coned and he wanted to start over at the school. But when he found out what they were doing, he blackmailed them to keep the school open because he still wanted to start over. The people behind scam then posed as students to find out who was blackmailing them and then they killed Whistler. The team found evidence and they got their bad guys.

Sloane meanwhile talked to her daughter and her daughter had figured out the truth. She was a doctor and she recognized the look on Sloane's face. She knew she was the product of rape. She also realized that her mother gave her up so that she could have a better life and in an odd way the truth brought them closer together.

Summary: Three gun thugs fleeing a failed robbery enter the diner where Palmer and Kasie are eating. A hostage situation ensues.

There was a body found at the Navy Recruiting Office. It was technically dropped off at one of their dumpsters and because of its proximity to the actual building, it became a case for NCIS. NCIS took the case from MPD. They walked in on a scene where the body had already been moved and they had no other evidence. The team had to go hunt down the body. They thankfully received some help from MPD to identify their victim. Their victim's name is Daniel Spagnolo. He was a petty crook and the team didn't know what he was up to. They were doing their best to find out. Palmer in the meantime had some time to kill so he grabbed breakfast. He even ran into Kasie while he was there.

They got to talking. Palmer and Kasie had breakfast together. They were having their breakfast when a bully started barking out the server and both Palmer and Kasie spoke up. They detested bullies. They didn't believe the server deserved that time of treatment and so they got the bullies to back off. Or at least that's what they thought happened. They were talking about the bullies with one of the servers and she mentioned how they came in every day being rude. The bullies mostly paid attention to the store across the street. Kasie saw them go into that store and it wasn't long before all the patrons at the diner began hearing gunshots.

It turns out the bullies were thieves. They robbed the jewelry store across the street and they came across some armed guards. One of the thieves was even injured. They couldn't get to their car fast enough and so they ran back into the diner to take cover. The thieves were there as the team tried calling Palmer. Palmer was needed to do an autopsy because the body was finally delivered and everyone was wondering where Palmer was. He was unfortunately caught up in a hostage situation. He and Kasie were at the mercy of the thieves. They along with the rest of the diners and staff were in incredibly danger.

Their situation was so bad that it aired on the news. That's how the team found out about their friends and so they quickly went down there. Gibbs even called the diner. He called and he asked for Palmer. They put Palmer on the phone. Palmer managed to tell them that it was three guys and one of them was injured before the phone was taken from his hands and so that told Gibbs all he needed to know. The team was working with the hostage negotiators to get their friends out of there. Their friends, however, were doing their best to survive. Kasie was asked to help the injured guy and so she bandaged his wound.

Kasie also asked the thieves if they could release the pregnant woman. The pregnant woman assured her she wasn't due for several more weeks and so she promised Kasie that she was fine. She didn't seem anxious to leave which sounded odd. The pregnant woman should be the first to want to leave and her not going seemed suspicious. Kasie didn't really think about that because she was focused on everything else. There had been a hero who tried to take the gun from one of the thieves. He got shot and so did one of the thieves. Kasie and Palmer were both forced to help out the thief because a gun was pointed at them.

The thieves were Lenny, Bobby, and Max. Max was the one in charge. He had apparently killed their fourth earlier that morning and he said he did it because the man had been too mouthy. As it happens the hostage situation was connected to the murder the team was investigating. The team had been working on their end and so they found out their victim was supposed to be in on the heist. His friends killed him first. They then tried to carry out the heist without him and they failed. They failed because they were one person short. They didn't account for that and so that's how everything got screwy.

The thieves had their diamonds, but no way of getting alive. Bobby even died from his wounds. Max and the others had hidden the diamonds in condoms and swallowed them. He, therefore, needed Palmer to cut Bobby up. He didn't want to lose out on the diamonds that Bobby had swallowed and so Palmer went digging. Palmer didn't know what he was looking for at first. It was Kasie that filled him because she had been there when Max talked to Gibbs and so she told him about their commitment to the diamonds. It also helped them to figure out a plan. They pretended the condom had ruptured inside of Bobby.

They said whoever swallowed the diamonds could be bleeding internally. They freaked out Lenny who turned himself in and they created a diversion with Max that allowed Gibbs to sneak upon him. Palmer and Kasie did great work. They took down two harden criminals with the power of suggestion and some eye-drops in their ice tea.

Palmer and Kasie were heroes.

And they even saved the pregnant woman.

Summary: While investigating an off-base burglary at an Admiral's residence, NCIS becomes involved in a case of an older man that claims to be a Pearl Harbor survivor. He wishes to have his remains buried on the USS Arizona.

A returning serviceman came home to find his house broken into. Admiral Michael Caplinger came home after months at sea and he found his home tossed, his wife missing, and blood on the floor. The belief is that the blood belongs to Caplinger's wife Gloria. Gloria wasn't at the house and she wasn't answering her cell phone. Caplinger thought his wife might have been taken. He called NCIS and they searched the home. They later found something missing. They found out that Caplinger's daughter's Purple Heart was stolen from a glass display and that whoever broke in had cut themselves on the glass. And so that at least explained the blood.

The missing wife was cleared up as well. Gloria had stayed with a friend and her cell phone had been off. She called her husband back the moment she turned her phone again. Gloria was okay and so the team wasn't dealing with a missing person or someone in danger. They were dealing with mere theft. The Purple Heart was stolen and the thief had even left behind a message. They asked to meet him later at a motel. The team went there. They ran into a man who identified himself as Joseph Smith and he was ninety-five years old. The old man wasn't a threat to anyone. He also wasn't denying stealing the Purple Heart.

Smith said he stole it. He hidden it somewhere and he wasn't going to return it until he got what he wanted. Smith wanted his ashes to be interred on the USS Arizona. He wrote to Admiral Caplinger to explain to him how he had served on the ship under his brother's name because he technically took young to join the Navy on his own and that he had been there during the Pearl Harbor Attack. Smith said he swerved during WWII. He now just wants to make sure that his service was acknowledged and Caplinger had turned him down. Caplinger couldn't approve of Smith's request because it was nearly impossible to prove.

Caplinger had turned Smith down. Smith later got revenge by breaking into the man's house and stealing a Purple Heart. He didn't know the Purple Heart belonged to Caplinger's late daughter. She died to receive that award. Her grandfather had been so proud of him that he engraved the Purple Heart with a special message and he died two months later. The Purple Heart was very important to the Caplinger family. They wanted it back and Smith was only going to give it back when NCIS proved he served on the USS Arizona. Smith told the team his story. He said he took his brother Henry's name and so the team just had to prove it.

They searched the records. They found a picture which could be Smith or it could be his brother. There was no way of proving who it was because Henry Smith didn't "like" photos and so the team had a hard time giving Smith what he wanted. They checked his scars. His scars were old and they do seem to be caused by a terrible fire. This wasn't enough to prove he was there. Several servicemen were thrown from the blast into the ocean and so the burns alone weren't enough. Smith needed to give them details. He needed to talk to them and the team had a hard time getting him there.

Smith thought they could prove he was on the ship with DNA. He didn't want to tell them about the worst day in his life and so Gibbs used an old trick he had with his dad. He brought Smith a project. He gave Smith a busted projector and he had him fix it. Smith. He also spotted some of the scenes were showing the destruction of the USS Arizona and so that shut him right up. Smith said he wasn't going to talk about that day. He refused to talk about that day and the team was getting nowhere with finding the Purple Heart on their own. They found out Smith had taken a cab to the Admiral's home. They tried to speak to the cab driver and he took off before they could chase him.

The cab driver was their best lead. Without him, the team had nothing and Caplinger didn't want to play the old man's games. He wanted that Purple Heart back. He wanted to press charges if he couldn't get it back and so Vance was willing to charge Smith. Smith was guilty of the crime. He was also a known con artist. His history showed that he had been in and out of trouble most of his adult life. He could have lied about being about the USS Arizona as well. Sloane said it could be stolen valor and that Smith wanted the recognition that his brother received. And so Gibbs went back to Smith intent on proving her wrong.

Smith reminded Gibbs of his dad. He didn't want to believe Smith was lying and so he pushed Smith into talking about that day. It was the only way to clear all of this up. He pushed and he pushed until Smith was finally talking. Smith talked about the worst day of the life. He talked about his pain and how he wanted to be laid to rest with the only family he has ever known. Smith convinced Gibbs. Gibbs then gave him his signature promising to inter Smith's ashes with his brothers. Gibbs didn't really have the authority to do so and yet it got Smith to open up. Smith revealed where he hid the Purple Heart.

He said he hid in the air vent at the motel. Gibbs and Smith went there together and the Purple Heart wasn't there. Smith had been so confused. He had a heart attack and that's when the truth came out. Smith was dying. He was dying and he had dementia. He couldn't really remember everything. He just knew he hid the Purple Heart in a vent and so the team searched the vents at the Caplinger home. That's where they later found the Purple Heart. They would have liked to have told Smith they found it only he died. He passed away in his sleep. After he died, his body was autopsied and they found shrapnel embedded into his arm. And this proved that he served on the USS Arizona.

Joseph Smith's ashes were interred with the ship he served on. The team was able to carry through his final wishes and Gibbs personally saw to it himself.

Summary: Gibbs and Farnell attempt to track down the leader of a drug ring who supplied drugs to Fornell's daughter; the team deals with the case of a missing cadaver from the NCIS autopsy room.

Navy Musician First Class John Warren was murdered. His murder was made to look like a suicide and it wasn't. He was poisoned. Therefore, the first person to claim it was suicide or that Warren was troubled would be their chief suspect. Gibbs and his teams have worked similar cases in the past and that meant Gibbs didn't have to worry about his team. He could leave them to do the investigation while he worked his side case with Fornell. Fornell's daughter overdosed in 2019. She almost died because she was given counterfeit opioids from Canada and so her father and her honorary uncle wanted to shut down this opioid ring.

They pretended like they were doing it for a noble cause. The truth is they were doing this because they wanted revenge for what almost happened to Emily and so that's why the two men aren't going to finish this until they've caught everyone. They first hunted down the supplier. They wanted to know who sold Emily the drugs and they found him. Fornell found him right as Warren showed up murdered. Gibbs had to decide if he should work the murder like he always has or go get revenge and he chose revenge. He assigned McGee as lead on Warren's murder. He then made his excuses at the office and he quickly joined Fornell.

By this point in time, Emily had recovered. She joined a drug treatment program and she was on her way to be a typical young woman. Emily was finally healing after everything. She lost her mom to an assassin and she almost lost her dad as well due to his grief over her mother. Fornell hadn't been there for Emily when she needed him the most. Emily had to take care of herself. She had to step up in all sorts of ways after her mom died. She had to be the adult and she turned to drugs to help handle the pressure of being the adult. Emily had to figure that out on her own. She has since confronted the real reasons why she turned to drugs. She's acknowledged them and she's ready to move on. And so it was just Fornell and Gibbs that wanted revenge.

Emily didn't want revenge. She wasn't spying on the people who sold her the drugs or demanding to know where the drugs came from. She knows the part she played. She's now ready to move on and it's Fornell and Gibbs that are stuck in the past. The two men followed Emily's supplier to a pill mill. They monitored him and they saw that he had his own entrance into the pill mill. The pill mill was a doctor's office where everyone knew they could get cheap drugs and get them fast. Fornell wanted to go in. Gibbs didn't like it and he only reluctantly agreed. He stayed on the phone with Fornell as Fornell went in. And he overheard the moment Fornell pushed his luck.

Fornell ran into a young woman in the pill mill. She was around the same age as Emily and so Fornell began asking her questions. He wanted to know how old she was. Why she was there? He even offered to speak to her parents for her. Fornell got so involved in this stranger's life that security was willing to throw him out because they could tell he wasn't there for the drugs and so Gibbs went in after him. Gibbs claimed Fornell was his uncle who wasn't all there. Fornell tried to fight him because he didn't want to leave the girl behind and that forced Gibbs to drag Fornell out of the building.

Gibbs later told Fornell that he had to be heartless to do this job. They were either going to stop this drug ring or they were going to let emotion ruin it before they could stop anyone. Gibbs got through to Fornell. Fornell promised to keep watch over the guy they knew was directly involved. He told Gibbs that he call him if anything changes. He also promised not to make a move until Gibbs was there and so Gibbs went back to the office. He was just going to check-in. Only it turns out there's been an incident. Palmer lost a body. He went to go check up on the body and he didn't find it in one of his freezers.

Palmer was later telling Gibbs all about when the second incident occurred. Someone blew up Palmer's car. Palmer was close enough to the blast to get knocked out and thankfully he was going to be okay. It was an IED attached to his car. It was supposed to go off when Palmer opened the door and it was only by chance that his car alarm set it off before then. It was a bit of a coincidence that someone stole a body right as they tried to kill the Medical Examiner and so NCIS believed the cases are connected. The body that went missing belonged to Marine Corporal Richard Darby. Darby put in for retirement not that long ago and he was going to claim disability.

It was apparently an open secret that Darby was suffering from PTSD. His unit was ambushed overseas and he hasn't been the same since. He was becoming increasingly withdrawn. He was staying home more and then he was murdered. He was shot in his chest. His case had been assigned to NCIS Special Agent Veronica Tyler. She was still working on it when the body disappeared and someone tried to kill Palmer. Gibbs was forced to step in after Palmer was almost killed. He assigned protection to Tyler in case she was the next person on the kill list and he thought it was odd when he later heard that Tyler sent her protection away.

Gibbs also couldn't get in touch with her. He and his team tracked Tyler back to her mother's place and they overheard telling her mother that she needs to do this herself. Gibbs then asked her what she was talking about? He wanted to know why she handle it herself and what it was? Tyler cracked under pressure. She showed that she had Darby's body and she admitted that she stole it because a masked man broke into her apartment and he kidnapped her daughter. Tyler had never seen the man's face. He wore the mask the whole time and he wanted the investigation into Darby's death to be halted.

He even threatened to kill her child if she didn't get the body back. Tyler tried to tell him that it was too late because Palmer had already performed the autopsy and that's when the man said that he would handle the Medical Examiner. She had no idea what he meant until she heard what happened to Palmer. Also, if he was willing to kill Palmer to keep his secret safe, Tyler knew the odds for her getting her daughter back were quite low. Tyler didn't want to risk her child. She wanted to find the man who kidnapped her daughter and Gibbs promised to help. Gibbs and his whole team were going to help.

Gibbs called Fornell the second he had a moment alone. He told Fornell how he couldn't help carry out surveillance because something came up at work and Fornell again promised he wouldn't make a move against the drug dealers without Gibbs. Gibbs wasn't sure he believed him. He started telling Fornell what would happen if Fornell made a move without him, but he was overheard. Sloane overheard him. She like the others had wondered why Gibbs had left a case earlier and so she knew it had something to do with Fornell. Sloane promised she wouldn't say anything. She knows that if Gibbs is working a side case that he has to follow it through and so she let him be.

Gibbs returned to the Tyler kidnapping. He and the others pretended to cut off Darby's hand and they were going to leave in a place to be picked up and that would be proof that Tyler did what she was asked. The whole team waited for the hand to be picked up. They watched a homeless man go for it and he proved to be involved in the kidnapping because he told Tyler, when she tried to stop him, that her daughter was safe for now. That was when the team realized they had him. They made a move and unfortunately, this fake homeless man made a run for it. He tried to run. He got involved in an accident and he died before they could get him medical attention.

The fake homeless man turned out to be Karl Chunk. He was one of Darby's neighbors and Tyler had asked him a few questions about Darby when she was investigating the marine's death. Knowing that fact, the team went to Karl's home and they found a secret compartment. They found Jasmine Tyler hidden in this compartment. She hadn't been hurt and she was quickly reunited with her mother. It seems that Karl Chunk had found out that Darby emptied his bank accounts. Darby had over a hundred thousand and he put it in a safe that could only be opened with his handprint.

Karl didn't know that last part when he killed Darby, but that's why he wanted the man's hand and he was willing to do so much to get it.

Gibbs spent a lot of time on this case and so it's been a while since he heard from Fornell. He later called Fornell. He asked him what's been happening and Fornell told him that there's been a turn in the case. The man he was watching was now dead. Fornell found him and called the cops. He also went through the dead man's pockets. He was collecting evidence and he didn't tell Gibbs about it. He just told Gibbs that he was going to need a few weeks to himself to follow some leads. And so Gibbs had no idea what's been going on.

Summary: Flashbacks reveal the murder case that first introduced young Gibbs to NCIS and his introduction to young, new-to-America Ducky.

It's the twentieth anniversary of the day McGee decided to become an NCIS Agent. McGee was excited to celebrate this moment in time and he invited the team out for drinks. He even invited Gibbs. He knew Gibbs didn't like going out or having fun and he still invited Gibbs because he thought Gibbs would want to be there for his anniversary. However, Gibbs turned him down. Gibbs told him that he was done with celebrating anniversaries and McGee didn't know what he was talking about. What other anniversaries has Gibbs been celebrating? McGee didn't know about any other anniversary and he was only forced to drop the subject now because the team caught a case.

The team was called to the scene of a suspicious death. The victim carried identification that claimed he was NCIS Special Agent Ronald Calloway and that didn't make sense because there is no Agent Calloway in the whole of NCIS. The team checked. There was no such agent and they couldn't run their dead man's fingerprints because those were burned off. The murder victim was John Doe. He was that until Kasie got a hit on a DNA match. She learned their John Doe was in fact Maurice Zucado of the infamous Zucado family. The family was a group of petty crooks and Gibbs had a run-in with one years ago.

Gibbs was actually kidnapped once by a Rinaldi Zucado who went by the name Ringo. Ringo put a gun in Gibbs's face years ago and he forced Gibbs into the trunk of his car. Gibbs had been on his way to meeting his girlfriend Shannon. He was in a public place and he didn't want to risk anyone else so he quietly went with Ringo. Only he never did find out why Ringo kidnapped him. Ringo was involved in a car accident that finished him off after he suffered multiple stab wounds and so he died before he could use and/or kill Gibbs. Gibbs was found in the man's trunk. He was freed and the NCIS Agents at the time had never figured out why Ringo kidnapped this Marine Sergeant.

Now, years later, Gibbs is investigating the death of another Zucado. He doesn't think it could be a coincidence and so he talked to the one person he knew from that time. He talked to Ducky. Ducky had just joined NCIS when Gibbs's case came around. The two men quickly became friends and so Gibbs only told Ducky what he was really thinking. He didn't talk to his team. Gibbs later got an update from his team in which they told him that their Zucado has been in and out of prison. He was ne'er-do-well. The team still didn't know why a man like that would be poking around an NCIS building because that's where the man died and so Gibbs told them that the Johnny Zucado would know.

John Zucado was in charge of the crew back in the day. Gibbs met him because he was hanging with Ducky one day and Johnny's people had kidnapped them off the street. He and Ducky were then taken back to Johnny's lair. They were beaten and interrogated. Johnny wanted to know what Ringo told the NCIS Agents. Ringo it seems had stolen something from his cousin and Johnny wanted it back. He didn't want the NCIS Agent to find it before he did. Johnny interrogated both Gibbs and Ducky until Ducky told him that they had found Ringo dead. He never got a chance to tell NCIS anything.

Johnny was relieved to hear that. He also thought he didn't need Ducky and Gibbs anymore and so he had been planning on killing them, but Gibbs stopped him. Gibbs told Johnny that if either he or Ducky disappeared that it would raise red flags. NCIS would search for them and there would never leave the Zucado organization alone. Gibbs was able to convince Johnny to let them go with just a warning. They were told they couldn't tell anyone about their run-in with Johnny and they never did. Not until now. Ducky told Kasie and Kasie someone else and soon the rumor mill was turning what happened into a Greek tragedy.

Even Vance heard about it. Vance and Sloane both made themselves available for when Gibbs brought in Johnny Zucado and so they both saw Johnny walk. Johnny had been facing charges that he managed to make disappear by killing a witness. So, he was free and clear and he had no reason to be a part of what his cousin had been up to. His cousin Maurice was trying to hack into the Carolina NCIS computer system when he died and the team originally thought he was doing so because he was trying to get rid of the evidence against Johnny. Except Johnny wouldn't have gone to the trouble of killing a witness if he could simply destroy the evidence on the computer system.

Johnny claimed not to be involved in what Maurice was doing. He might be right about that and everyone could see it. Everyone besides Gibbs. Gibbs still wanted to take down Johnny. He has never forgotten the not-so-gentle interrogation he suffered or that Ducky suffered. He only let it go back then because he and Ducky realized there was a mole at NCIS at the time. Ducky had solved that case as well. He figured out the construction worker that was updating the building had the same rare genetic marker that Ringo did and so he helped root out the mole. He also told Gibbs back then that he should let it go and get back together with his girlfriend Shannon.

Gibbs went on to marry Shannon. They had a daughter named Kelly and they were happy for a time. Gibbs, unfortunately, lost both his wife and his daughter years ago. His wedding anniversary to Shannon was recent. It was the anniversary that he had been talking about with McGee and McGee found out which anniversary Gibbs meant. He felt more than ever he should take Gibbs out for a drink. He and the team were trying to find a way to do that when this case came back at them. They finally learned why Maurice was in the building. He was there because his cousin Emilio had stashed a keycard there all those years ago.

It was Emilio that Ducky figured out was the mole. Ducky alerted the proper authorities and Emilio had needed to go on the run. He chose to stash the keycard in the building. He ran off to Mexico and he's been there all these years when his cousin Johnny finally found him. Johnny wanted the keycard. It was his before Ringo stole it. He wants it back because it could incriminate him and that's why he sent his cousin Maurice to the building. Maurice went in with Emilio's directions. He got turned around and he suffered an asthma attack. He later died from that asthma attack because he was too stupid to walk with a pump else he is discovered.

And so NCIS found this keycard and they were finally able to take down Johnny Zucado.

Summary: The discovery of two dead bodies leads the team into the world of modern day treasure hunting as Gibbs and Fornell get deeper into their search for the drug kingpin.

Former FBI Special Agent Tobias Fornell is still investigating the drug ring responsible for his daughter's overdose. The man is obsessed with finding someone to blame and he found someone. Tobias found the man pushing counterfeit opioids. He followed him to a pill mill and Tobias had even been there when this man died. He died from an overdose. There was nothing Tobias could do to save his life. Not that it stopped him from trying. He called 911 and he looked through the man's pockets while he was there and so he wasn't going to let a little thing like death stop him from working the case. He found out this drug pusher was working for minimum wage at a fast-food restaurant and that just didn't make sense.

This man was making thousands as a drug dealer. He didn't even need a day job much less a job that was heavy in manual labor and light in payment. Its highly suspicious that a man like that would work for minimum wage. Tobias wanted to find out what was going on and so he got a job at this fast-food place. Tobias believe the joint was operating as a front. He just didn't know what it was front for and so he got a job there. He was out on his break when he finally caught up with Gibbs. Gibbs was helping Tobias in finding out who was behind this counterfeit drug ring and he was suspicious of what Tobias might do by himself. Hence he was working the case with Tobias. He was mostly doing it to keep his friend out trouble and he wasn't being successful.

Tobias almost blew the whole investigation back at the pill mill. The pill mill is where anyone could walk in claiming to suffer from some minor ailment and receive their heart's content of prescription drugs. Tobias spotted a young girl at the pill mill. She reminded him of his daughter and so he tried to convince her to call her parents. He freaked out the girl. He also was almost caught by the people running the pill mill. It was Gibbs who saved their cover and Gibbs was questioning the fast food gig as well. He didn't see why Tobias had to get a job there. They could just sit on the place and take account of any suspicious movements. Only Tobias had to do things his way. He was going to stay at his new crap job and Gibbs was happier to return to his job as an NCIS Agent.

The team had a new case. They were called in after Chief Petty Officer Diego Barnes was found bleeding out on his fire escape and this case turned out to be special. Barnes was supposedly killed after solving the DeMint treasure map. His computer showed that he was obsessed with the legend of the DeMint treasure and that he was writing to someone about possibly solving it. It would be huge if he did. There were a lot of people out there who tried to solve the DeMint treasure map. The map leads to two million in gold and there would be plenty who would kill for it. Someone killed Barnes after he went bragging. He might have known his killer and so the team looked into the DeMint treasure.

The DeMint treasure is real. Angus DeMint was a successful businessman who decided to live off the grid and so he decided something fun with his life savings. He turned two million into gold. He then buried it somewhere. He left clues on how to find it in a book he wrote and now hundreds if not thousands have gone looking for it. It was the DeMint treasure. Angus DeMint was the only one who knows where the treasure and he wasn't telling. NCIS tried to get answers. They went to his cabin in the woods and they told him that a man had been murdered for the treasure, but he didn't care. He said he created the treasure hunt because he wanted to convince more people to go out into nature and the truth is probably closer to what his daughter Margot believes. She believes her father has a God complex.

Margot owns the house in the woods. She was also the one that bought all of her father's groceries and she would even take them to him. Her father hasn't been living with nature. He lives on his computer. He's obsessed with following a message board that talks about his treasure hunt and so he likes all the chaos he brought with that stupid book. He pay attention to anything else. Not even his own daughter. Margot is the one keeping his alive and she thought it was childish that he didn't help NCIS. She understood that someone had died because of what her father did. She therefore went to the team's office and she gave them a list of people her father speaks with on the message board.

What she did was perfectly legal because again she owns the house. Margot's list proved to be helpful because the team found a group that Barnes was working with and Barnes told his group that he had found the cipher to solving the clues that Angus left in his book. There was just one problem with this cipher. He didn't share it with his friends. He told them that he was holding onto it to make sure that it was the correct one and that led to someone tension in the group. It was a three person group. There was Barnes and the other two were dating. They even alibied each other. They claimed they were at home in bed the night Barnes was killed and two suspects couldn't be each other's alibis.

There was also another problem with Angus. Angus disappeared. He staged his cabin to look like a break-in and he apparently went after the killer. It didn't make sense to the team but it did to Sloane. Sloane read Angus's book. It was basically a love letter to his late wife Lillian. Lillian loved treasure hunts and they used to do small ones with their daughter. Angus wished to continue to this legacy, her legacy by creating a real life treasure hunt. It was the last gift to his wife and he didn't want anyone desecrating it. Angus buried the treasure. He then wrote the book and it describes how happy he was when he met Lillian. There were some old family photos in there as well. Margot had been brought down to help them with their investigation and she realized that her mother's favorite spot where she went hiking every year was where the treasure was hidden.

Margot gave this clue to Gibbs. Gibbs gave the photo to Kasie and Bishop and they cheated to find the treasure. They hacked the location of Angus's burner cell. They then used it to find the place where he often visited over the years and they found the location. They also found Angus. He was trying to find the killer and it led him to the member of Barnes's group. Only it turns out the two suspects didn't have an alibi. They lied about it to protect themselves and so they got in trouble and so did Angus. Angus was brought in for obstruction. He called Margot because he needed a lawyer and unfortunately he got someone else. His daughter had been taken hostage by a third party. This guy was a gym receptionist.

He worked at the gym that Barnes used with his friends. Barnes and his friends would talk about the treasure hunt and so this guy decided to cut through some steps. He tried to get the location from Barnes. That didn't work and so he kidnapped Margot. Again, this didn't work. The team found out about it and they led their kidnapper to a trap. They were later able to free Margot. They also reunited her with her father who realized that Margot is the greatest legacy Lillian ever left him. the two plan on working on their relationship.

And the DeMint treasure was solved by the team.

Gibbs later went to go check on Tobias and unfortunately Tobias is missing.

Production Code: 18004
Summary: McGee and his wife Delilah's Bahamian vacation turns into a high-stakes mission when a case NCIS is tracking of a dead escape room manager has ties to the island. Also, Gibbs fears the worst when his search for Fornell leads to blood.

The Game Master of an escape room was murdered. The Game Master was the person in charge of the escape room experience. He would give out clues as well as free anyone who wanted to quit the game early and so his death was a problem because a group of adults were playing in one of the escape rooms when they heard the gunshots. The gunshots sounded real to them.

They realized instantly that something happened and so they tried talking to the Game Master through the security camera, but he was dead and the group got scared. They couldn't solve all the clues while they were scared. They also couldn't call for help because her phones had been taken and so they waited until the maid came. She found the body. She also freed the group.

The maid called 911. The police arrived and they did a preliminary search on the victim in which they found out he was a Navy reservist. The Game Master was identified as Chief Petty Officer Norman Mason. Mason had a bunch of stuff in his office and it appeared as if he was looking to making his own escape. He owned and operated the Mystery Madhouse and yet he had travel plans because he had a go bag.

He also had several important documents in his office that shouldn't have been in his possession. These documents were once deemed classified and so it's a mystery how Mason came to own them. The team investigated that plus Mason's death. They believed someone may have found out about his cache and killed him to stop him from using those documents.

This meant the team were looking for their killer and any potential buyers for documents. They checked Mason's phone records. He was in constant contact with someone in the Bahamas and as luck would have it the team had someone already down there. McGee was in the Bahamas. He was there on vacation with his wife Delilah and this was the first time they had gotten away as just the two of them. They left the kids stateside.

Their vacation was supposed to be about them and relaxing, but the team called and McGee couldn't refuse them. He talked to his wife and she agreed he could run down the lead. He went to the payphone that Mason used to call and he waited for someone to show up.

A woman eventually did. She was a blonde and she looked harmless. She looked like she was vacation down there. McGee didn't think she would be a problem so he approached her as a federal agent and she beat him up before escaping. She left McGee on the floor in the sand. His wife had been there and she checked up on him. Only he was going to be fine. It was more his pride that was bruised than anything else and so he was able to call it in.

He informed Gibbs what happened. Gibbs told him to track down that beach bum and McGee agreed to do it. He later tried to put his wife on a plane heading back home except she refused to go. She wanted to help him with the case because working together meant they still get to spend time together and so McGee agreed to it.

McGee couldn't have stopped Delilah if he tried. The two agreed to work together and they found a way to track down their suspect. She was on a rented moped. They went to the rental agency and McGee was recognized as an author. The woman who ran the shop was a big fan of his. She thought she was helping him research his next book and so she gave them the woman's name and address.

The woman who attacked McGee was Sienna Michaels. McGee and his wife went to her house and they talked to her neighbors. They were told that Sienna is a British expat and that she was a nice person. The two let themselves into Sienna's house and they ran into her as well as her gun. Sienna demanded to know why she was being followed. She threatened to kill McGee and his wife and so he told her how he was investigating the murder of Norman Mason.

Which came as a surprise for Sienna's guest. Sienna was living with a man named Malcolm Lucas and he worked with Mason back in the states, but everyone thought Lucas was dead and so him showing up alive was downright shocking. Up to that point, the team began thinking that someone was picking off Mason's team and that they even killed his boss. Malcom allegedly drowned while on vacation. His death was deemed suspicious because he was on the swim team in college and was therefore a great swimmer. It didn't make sense that he would drown and a second member of his team would later be shot. And so finding Lucas alive and well was what helped the team finally put their case together.

It turns out Lucas had developed a weapon. A drone that thinks for itself. He created a lethal autonomous weapon called DeepRaven and that's what Mason's documents detailed. Mason had been working with Lucas to develop this weapon. They thought it would be used in mapping the ocean's floor and once they realized that their boss planned on using it for something else — they staged Lucas's death and Mason kept an eye on the project to make sure no one was coming close to finishing what they started.

Mason even called Lucas's girlfriend everyday to tell her it was all clear. The two thought they got away with what they did and all the while someone found out. Someone learned that they were sitting on a weapon that could be sold and so he tried to kill anyone who stood in his or her way.

The team thought it was men's boss. They brought him in for questioning and he revealed he found out someone had been selling DeepRaven on the dark web. He wanted in on the sale so he didn't say anything about it before, but he doesn't have the weapon and he didn't kill Mason.

Whoever killed Mason had given him a rash because they were wearing suntan lotion hat was specially created down in the Bahamas and so either the killer came up from the Bahamas or was currently down there in the Bahamas. The team tried calling McGee and they couldn't reach him because the island was facing tropical weather. And so Gibbs reached out to his old Marine buddy down there and luckily his friend Clarence saved the day.

Lucas's girlfriend Sienna was their killer. She flew to DC on the day Mason died to kill him and she even murdered the third member of their team. Sienna did all of this because she wanted to sell DeepRaven to the highest bidder. Sienna wasn't as noble as Lucas was and she shot him in the leg when he tried to stop her. She would have killed McGee and Delilah too, but that's when Clarence showed and he took down Sienna. Sienna was arrested.

She was facing deportation because she wanted to live in the UK for bank fraud and Sienna wasn't even her real name. Either way, she was going away for life and McGee decided to take a few more days off to finally go off-grid with his wife Delilah.

Summary: Gibbs and Fornell's crusade to find the head of the drug ring responsible for Fornell's daughter Emily's overdose comes to a climax. Also, Gibbs and Vance finally let the team in on a case that has dangerous implications.

Later, Gibbs received a call from Vance. Vance wanted to check up on Gibbs. He wasn't asking about the past case because he didn't care about the case and it had nothing to do with him. Vance called about Fornell. He's been secretly helping Gibbs and Fornell investigate the drug ring that was responsible for Emily's overdose and neither of the men had heard back from Fornell. Fornell disappeared.

He didn't show up at his daughter's graduation from rehab and Gibbs came across blood in his investigation that he believed was Fornell's. Gibbs thinks something happened to him. He informed Vance because he needed help and now Vance wanted to make their little investigation public.

No sooner did Vance tell Gibbs this, that Gibbs found out Fornell is alive. Fornell was cozying up to the drug dealers to get information on their boss and so he had to stay away from everyone. He couldn't call his daughter. He couldn't risk them knowing he had a daughter and he couldn't warn Gibbs either. The two met up as Gibbs continued his investigation. He ran into Fornell at a private airport and Fornell shot at him up to make it appear that he was still working with the drug dealers. Fornell was the one who set up cameras for the place. So, he told Gibbs that they could talk, they just also had to shoot at each other. They shot at each other as Fornell explained everything that's happened.

Fornell found out the boss's name. It was a man named Merriweather and he was the one who called all the shots in their counterfeit opioid ring. He was also elusive. Fornell was told that Merriweather run things and that Merriweather tapped all their phones, but he's never met the man and three months of investigation hasn't yielded anything else that was important. He just knew the name Merriweather. He passed this on to Gibbs and Gibbs told Vance.

Vance was sick of all the espionage. He told Gibbs that he was going to hand this case over to the DEA and so Gibbs had three days to solve this or he'll lose his chance forever. He knew he couldn't do it on his own and so he finally brought his team in on the investigation. And thankfully McGee was back from vacation by then.

Gibbs had his team look into Petty Officer Rico. Rico was fingered as a part-time drug dealer and so the team went looking for him. Only they couldn't find him. They did find his friend, though. His friend told him that Rico was out on assignment and not an official one. Rico had been given an assignment from Merriweather. Merriweather asked Rico to sell his pills and he cut the price. The pills used to be twenty dollars a pop. Now they were just five and so that didn't make sense.

Why would a drug kingpin practically give his drugs away. It wasn't until Rico was found in the morgue that they realized what was going on. Rico died from a poisoning. He was poisoned by the new pills he had been asked to sell and a bunch of pills that Fornell had given Gibbs had showed that they were poisoned as well.

Merriweather changed his formula for the opioids. He was now actively trying to kill people with drugs and it just didn't make sense. There was no reason why a drug dealer will kill his own customers. Not unless he was killing them for someone else and that someone else might be Russia in this case.

The drugs that were being sold were mostly being sold to members of the American military. Merriweather specifically enlisted members of the military to do his bidding and sell to their fellow servicemen and women. He was now trying to kill those same people with his drugs. Merriweather has several identities. One of them is Russian and he is known to frequently fly back to Russia whenever he can.

The team believed that Merriweather went from drug dealer to terrorist. They also believe he was using Beltway Burgers as his distribution center and that the people who work there were also in on it. The team even identified one of them. His name is Vladimir Ivinov and the team thought they could sit on him to see where he goes, but unfortunately something went wrong with the plan. Torres showed up pretending to work with the HOA. He pretended to be an exterminator and all the while Bishop was overseeing things from the van out on the street. The two did their parts perfectly well. They at first convinced Ivinov of the part they played and then he got a text. The text told him he was being watched. Ivinov automatically knew it was Torres and he tried to kill him.

It Fornell that stopped Ivinov. He killed Ivinov and they went back to the van where they found it empty. Bishop was gone. She was taken by Merriweather's people and Fornell's cover was blown. He couldn't go back to Merriweather after killing his guy. Luckily, Merriweather didn't know Ivinov was dead when he later called Fornell and tried to make deal with him. He thought he was talking to Fornell because he called Fornell's number but it turned out to be Gibbs.

Gibbs pretended to be Fornell on the phone call. He also pretended that Ivinov was still alive and so he agreed with Merriweather to do an exchange. Ivinov for Bishop. Bishop was being tortured while she was in custody and so the team wanted to rescue her more than anything.

They agreed to do the deal because they thought they could get Bishop back. Only they underestimated Merriweather. Merriweather wanted to kill Fornell. He wanted to kill Fornell for betraying him and so McGee showing up at the meeting wasn't something Merriweather planned for. Merriweather had laid a trap. He laid it for Fornell and it was supposed to be him going up to the plane and then the plane exploding. But in this case, it was McGee. McGee went up to the plane and he was stopped from getting too close by Gibbs. Their comms were down and so Gibbs shot McGee twice to stop him from going to the plane. And he therefore didn't get swept up in the blast when the plane exploded.

Sadly, the team thought the same couldn't be said for Bishop. The team believe she was on the plane when it exploded and that she most likely died along with everyone else onboard but at the last minute she showed up. She was fine. She had escaped the plane by being her bada self . She had a few bruises from being tortured and other than that she was okay. It was Torres that was really upset. He went with Gibbs and Fornell as they tracked down Merriweather at his daughter's 21st birthday celebration. It turns out Merriweather's real name is Alexi Myshkin and he went from drug dealer to terrorist because he was being paid a lot more money than he would have made from his drug business.

Alexi also used his daughter to wire this new terrorist money. The team checked her bank accounts and they got all the evidence they needed to put both father and daughter away for a long time. And in the end, Fornell was finally able to reunite with his own daughter and he got the chip she received for being clean for six months.

As for McGee, the bullet that went into his leg had hit an artery and so he was in bad shape at the hospital.

Summary: Following a tip about smuggled weapons, Bishop and Torres engage in a shootout in a former sheriff's residence that's now a historical site, only to find themselves locked in abandoned jail cells there.

McGee is still recovering. He was shot a while back because Gibbs had been trying to stop him from going to a plane that had a bomb on it and so McGee still needed time to heal. He was out of the office. His paperwork and the other things he generally does was left to Bishop and Torres. The two agents were on the road heading to a crime scene when they got lost on the way.

They had needed directions and they thought a nearby home would be the best place to get answers. They went to the house. They knocked and pressed the doorbell. They weren't getting anyone, so they let themselves in. They called out to see if anyone was inside and they got a reaction. They found suddenly themselves being shot at by whoever was in the house.

Bishop and Torres returned fire. They tried to fight their way out of this and they failed. They were captured. Both agents were imprisoned at the house and the house was an old sheriff's office. It had its own jail cells. Bishop and Torres spent time in those cells. They were never able to call for help or even alert their boss that something was happening.

The first sign of there being something wrong for Gibbs had been when he went to gather his team, but no one responded. He didn't have Bishop, Torres, or McGee. He just had the preliminaries on the case. The team was investigating the brothers, Craig and Jesse Duncan. The Duncan brother created cocktails bricks that were more dangerous than C4 and one of those bricks were used in the bomb Merryweather set up.

Gibbs got the gist of the case from Vance. He was told about the brothers and how they became of interest to the NCIS. What he didn't know is that the brothers had taken two of his agents hostage. Bishop and Torres later realized that the Duncan brothers were responsible for their capture when they found their explosives in one of the cells and that was also the moment they realized that they weren't just abandoned.

The brother had to come back. They had to come back for the explosives and that mean could either good or bad things for the agents. They could be killed or their captors could come back to give them water and/or food. The last one was pretty unlikely just based on the brothers' reputation and so both Bishop and Torres thought the brothers were going to kill them when they come back.

The two also got to talking. Bishop challenged Torres on his new hover-like behavior with her and he told her that he was just trying to help. Torres was coming from a good place. He stopped drinking her coffee because he thought it would be too hot and burn her tongue. He also demanded that he be the one to drive. He didn't want her to tax herself.

He didn't even want her to stress about the directions and he tried to find his own way to their location. Torres has been doing everything he can to help. Only it was too much. Bishop told him that she didn't need his help because she could help herself and she hadn't wanted to tell him who she was talking to on the phone because she hadn't wanted to say it was Sloane.

Bishop made an appointment to see Sloane. She needed to talk to someone about being abducted and almost dying. Bishop understands that Torres is worried about her, but she was going to need to back up some and the only help she wanted from him was ideas on how to escape. Bishop and Torres were trapped in the old sheriff's cells. They were there while Gibbs was back at the office and eventually, Gibbs realized something was wrong. He got a call about Bishop and Torres's car. The car had been abandoned on the road and right away Gibbs knew something happened. He demanded the car be turned over to NCIS. He had it tested and there was no blood inside the car. The car was clean.

This alone told Gibbs hadn't been killed or transported. He then asked Kasie for her help and she told him when Bishop and Torres's cell phones were before they lost reception. Gibbs needed additional help with this case. He was down all of his agents and so it was a great time for McGee to come back. McGee heard what happened with Bishop and Torres. He wanted to help and he was willing to cut his recovery time at home.

This made things awkward for Gibbs. Gibbs felt guilty for shooting McGee and so he didn't really want McGee around. He just wanted to focus on the case. He chose to turn to other people to help him do that and Kasie later tracked down a tipster for him. Bishop and Torres were following up on the tipster's lead when they disappeared.

Gibbs went to the tipster's location, but the tipster claimed to have nothing to do with the Duncan brothers and that was a lie. Gibbs saw a photo of the tipster with Jesse Duncan. The tipster tried fleeing by climbing out of a window and so Gibbs brought him back to an interrogation room.

Michael Hodge said he did call in the tip. He wanted to shut down the Duncan brothers' operation because he feels he's gotten in over his head and he wanted to do it anonymously because he didn't want to risk the brothers finding out about the part he played. Michael told Gibbs everything. He even mentioned where he sent Bishop and Torres. Gibbs got the location of his friends and he went running to them.

They meanwhile needed all the help they could get. Bishop opened the gates of her cell and she triggered a pressure plate. She had to stand on it for hours until the brothers returned. The brothers didn't want to lose their haul and they also didn't want to risk the agents getting away. They instead had freed Torres from his cell because they wanted him to bring up their cocktails bricks.

He did just that and Jesse Duncan ran off once he was done. The Duncan kid had made it back to his car when Gibbs appeared. Gibbs arrested Duncan and he called the bomb squad for Bishop. Gibbs saved the day, but he was only able to do so because McGee got on the phone with him and he helped with navigation. And so McGee saved the day as well.

McGee and Gibbs later talked about what happened and McGee told Gibbs he didn't blame him for shooting because now he'll just have to live harder. Which is something Torres told him.

There was also a moment between Bishop and Torres during their captivity and that might turn into something else fairly soon.

Summary: NCIS investigates the murder of a Navy officer who was killed while driving home a recently released inmate. Also, Gibbs helps Palmer deal with personal trauma.

Palmer isn't himself. He's a single parent now. He's working to close as well as being there for his child and it was proving to be too much for him. He had needed help. He invited his mom to move in. She helps out with free childcare and she also does some cooking so that Palmer doesn't have to worry about it. This should have freed up Palmer.

However, he was still troubled and he occasionally had some pain in his left arm. Palmer didn't want to talk about it with his friends at work and so he was taking phone calls at the crime scene. Palmer barely paid attention to the body this time. The body was that of Petty Officer Second Class David Avila and he was found dead in his car with the passenger door open.

It was clear he had a guest. Kasie ran fingerprints from the crime scene and she was able to determine that the passenger was Luis Carter. Carter was recently released after serving twenty-one years for theft. It had been his third strike and so he went away for a long time just because he couldn't do without some socks. That's all he stole. He stole socks and it was enough to put away for most of his life.

Carter is out now. He was released and Avila was his ride. Avila volunteered to do this. He would pick up former prisoners and take them to their halfway houses or whatever location they were heading to. He even had a book that he called his reentry book. It was detailed list of where he could take this ex-cons and oddly the book was missing from the crime scene.

Carter took it. He wasn't injured in the shootout that killed Avila because his blood wasn't found at the crime scene and so either he was really lucky or he had to help set Avila up. Carter also took the reentry book. He would only have done so if he needed a place to go and so the team worked through Avila's contacts.

They eventually found Carter hiding out at one of the locations. Carter told them that he wasn't going back to prison and he tried to brandish a weapon. Only Torres and Bishop had guns. Guns will always defeat a mere piece of metal and so they forced Carter to drop his weapon. They then brought him to the station for questioning where he was asked about Avila. He asked if he set Avila up and Carter swears he didn't.

Carter called Avila his "saint". Avila was the only person who ever showed up for him and he was beating himself up because he thinks Avila was killed by accident. Carter explained to Gibbs that the motorcycle that pulled up next to them had shouted "Lincoln Street Saints, Princessa".

Carter used to run with a gang called Lincoln Street Saints and he thinks they were there to kill him because they believe that he rolled on someone to get an early release. He even thought being called a princess was a final insult to him because there must have been a KOS. KOS stands for Kill On Sight. Carter told Gibbs that this gang was going to keep coming until he was dead and so Gibbs signed off on protection for Carter.

Carter went to go stay with Torres. Torres was just saying how glad he is that he doesn't have kids because he thinks taking care of one person is enough and so now he has protection duty. Carter was going to be staying with him at his one bedroom apartment. Torres also had to explain several of the high-functioning fixtures to Carter whose been away since the end of last century.

The two of them were having fun with playing around with Alexa when the team called and Torres was informed that Carter lied about something. He lied about his lawyer. He said he was calling his lawyer everyday for the past year. They spoke to the law firm and no one there was representing Carter. And so why was he calling?

Torres tried to ask Carter about it. Carter refused to say and so Torres lost his temper. He threatened to bring Carter to the Lincoln Street Saints. He drove by the LSS territory and he forced Carter to explain himself. He either was straight with Torres or his protection detail is over. Carter was feeling the pressure and so he admitted that he was calling the law firm because his daughter works the night shift there.

His daughter just had a baby of her own. Carter didn't want to bring his mess around her and that's why he didn't want them dragging his daughter into the situation. Other than that, he's been truthful. The team verified that his daughter does work at the law firm and that she didn't know about the current trouble with the gang.

The team wanted to find out more information. They spoke to someone they knew that was inside the gang and they asked them about Carter. She told Carter wouldn't interest anyone. He was an old man and the gang had moved on. The gang was currently dealing in the ghost gun.

The ghost gun is a gun that's shipped in parts to the buyer and that the buyer has to assemble on their own. It's why Kasie couldn't match a gun used on Avila to anything in the database. Kasie also explained that these ghost guns could be built anywhere on a small work table. They weren't even that hard to assemble and so the gang needed to be stopped before they could bring more ghost guns into the country. And Palmer also found out.

Palmer found out that Avila used to have tattoos. He had a Lincoln Street Saints tattoo as in he used to belong to their gang and he left when he decided to join the navy. So, the gang was never after Carter. They were always after Avila and the informant said the gang didn't care about former members.

They only cared about taking out the competition. Avila could still be in business dealing with ghost guns and his volunteer work brought him into close contact with people just out of prison. Only that wasn't the case either. Avila's last words to Carter was to go to the barbershop and that's what Carter did until he was found. The weapon he had picked up was for a gun barrel. He told Torres about it and they went back to the barbershop.

They arrested a man named Marcus who was running an illegal gun shop. Avila had found out about it through his volunteer work and Marcus told him to keep quiet or else. Or else is what happened. Marcus was the motorcyclist and he shouted the gang name at the car because he wanted them to think the gang was involved, but if anything, the gang was the only people that weren't connected to this case.

Later, Gibbs spoke to Palmer. Palmer lost his wife and being a new widow was just too much for him. Gibbs was perhaps the only person in the whole building who understood what Palmer was going through because of his own experience although he at least got to have a funeral for his wife and daughter. Palmer couldn't have a funeral for his wife because of the pandemic. He was so distraught about that, Gibbs later called everyone in and they had an impromptu funeral for Breena. And Palmer finally got to read out loud the letter he wrote to her.

And afterwards Torres gave Carter a ride to his daughter's place.

Summary: When Sloane's name is discovered in Afghanistan at the site of an abandoned bus with a dead driver, Gibbs accompanies her on a trip to find a group of girls who were kidnapped from the bus. Also, McGee, Bishop and Torres track down a hacker who emailed compromising information to the Taliban.

Sloane was feeling unsettled. She thought she should leave her job. She talked to Gibbs earlier about the possibility of leaving NCIS and he had thought it was crazy. He thought she should stay. Sloane was good at her job and she was making a difference.

Also, she would be bored on the beach. She mentioned moving to Costa Rica and she said she wanted to try something new but she went back to her old self the second and forgot all about her plans when she found out about her good friend Darya. Darya had been a captive with Sloane. She was the one the terrorists used to bring Sloane food and water. Darya also treated Sloane after she had been tortured. Sloane owes Darya everything for keeping her alive and so she felt compelled to help once she learned that Darya had been kidnapped.

Darya hadn't left Afghanistan when Sloane did. She chose to stay behind after they had been rescued because she wanted to continue the fight and help in any way she could. Darya eventually became a chaperone to a group of girls. The girls were taking secret routes to school every day and so Darya was there to both act as the appropriate adult as well as to protect the girls if something ever happened.

The country was still dealing with the Taliban. The Taliban doesn't like the idea of girls going to school and they do everything to stop them. This is why the routes to school are secret. The Taliban shouldn't have known where the bus was going to be that day and yet somehow they found out and they waylaid the bus. They killed the driver. They kidnapped the girls and they kidnapped Darya as well.

Darya left behind a message before she was taken. Darya wrote on a window "Sloane, NCIS". She wanted to get the word out to her old friend that she had been taken and Sloane did get the message. Sloane also told everyone that she was flying to Afghanistan to go rescue her friend. She was going to take this trip on her own time if possible because she was so set and so Gibbs chose to go with her.

They left Sloane's fish with Torres. They mentioned to him that they were going to be out of town and the team only learned the full story from Director Vance. Vance thought it was a security breach that the Taliban learned of the school route. He directed the team to investigate from their end and they found something or more specifically someone. They found a connection who was sending messages to the Taliban from the United States.

Torres and Bishop later broke down the man's door. Only there was no need for it because their suspect was dead and so the two of them went looking around. They soon learned their dead suspect was into Green Energy. He had several posters about saving the earth and it didn't appear as if he had Taliban ties but the team did find the coordinates to where the bus was abandoned.

It turns out their Albert had been assisting the Taliban. The Taliban also took the girls for a reason because Sloane and Gibbs later learned that the terrorist group was auctioning off the girls and Darya. They even left one girl go because she has epilepsy and they didn't think they could sell her for top price. And so the team had to find these and they had to find them fast before they were sold.

Back in the US, McGee found out their dead suspect was Albatross. He used to be a chief hacktivist as in he hacked people for the greater good and unfortunately Albert dropped that after his partner went to jail for hacking. Albert was good at what he does. He started to sell his services and his firewall was just too strong for the likes of McGee. McGee tried to break through it.

He and Kasie did everything they could on their end but time was wasting and Sloane made it further in her investigation than they did back in the States. Sloane and Gibbs talked to the girl who had been released. They spoke to her and she said that Darya was the one who picked their route. Darya picked a route that wasn't in the network. It made no sense that Albert would have gotten his hands on it on his own. He had to have been given the information and the chief suspect was Darya.

Sloane hadn't wanted to believe that of her friend. She felt Darya must have had a reason for giving the driver a new route and so she was withholding judgment. She still thought Darya was innocent as they found Darya's necklace in the desert. She remembered it because Darya used to wear it when they were captives together. Sloane said that Darya left it behind for her because she wanted to be rescued and so that's when Gibbs told her what he thought. Gibbs reminded her that captives don't usually get to keep their own jewelry. He also said that it seemed like a trap. He thinks that Darya was leading them into a trap and that some of Sloane's old enemies might still want her head. It was just the two of them in the desert looking for the girls because Vance didn't get the go-ahead for troop support.

If anything, Vance learned that Washington didn't want to interfere with this case because they believe Afghanistan should deal with its own issues. Vance couldn't assist Sloane and Gibbs any further and so the most they had was their own team. McGee shut down the terrorist's bank accounts. They were trying to stop the sale and unfortunately, it just made the terrorists angry.

Darya was later thrown from a moving vehicle with a message pinned to her. The message said "Go home or there will be more blood" and it was written in English meant the message was for Sloane and Gibbs. This confirmed to Sloane that her friend had been innocent. Darya was killed when she threw at such speed and so Sloane wanted things to end there. She didn't want to keep looking for the girls because she didn't want anyone else to get hurt.

Sloane just wanted to go home. Or at least that's what she told Gibbs but he later found her loading up on weapons and he realized what her real plan was. Sloane wanted to go rushing into the scene. She wouldn't have done so if it hadn't been for Gibbs and Gibbs stopped her because he hadn't wanted her to die. He told her that she would die if she went rushing into things without thinking.

He stopped Sloane and it's a good thing too because they found out who really sold the bus route. Their friends in America helped them out. McGee learned from Albert's old partner that some man in the village offered up the bus route and this man was the only other person who Darya told. He had hated that the girls were learning English and math. He also hadn't cared that he sold them into slavery. Sloane and Gibbs beat the man up for information and he happily told them where the girls were being held.

Sloane and Gibbs were able to rescue the remaining girls. This ended up meaning more to Sloane than it did to Gibbs. Gibbs had thought of it as a one-and-done sorta job and Sloane hadn't. Sloane wanted to stay in Afghanistan. She wanted to help fill the role that Darya left behind in honor of her friend and so Sloane was still going to leave NCIS.

And this thing between her and Gibbs was never going to happen now.

Summary: NCIS dives into the competitive world of food trucks after finding a man frozen to death in the back of one.

Sloane left. She stayed in Afghanistan and so she had to write her goodbyes to the team in an email. She wrote to each member of the team. She left them each an item from her office and she left her fish to Torres. Torres has been watching over the fish since she left. He thought it was just going to be a temporary thing and, now that he's learned it's official, it's hard. He doesn't want a fish.

He doesn't want anything he has to keep alive for the rest of his life and so he didn't like his gift. Torres thought the others got a better deal. He tried to trade with them. His friends weren't willing to give up their own gifts for his and that meant he was stuck with the fish. He was now the proud owner of Carl. Carl the fish has almost died once in his care, but now he has to keep it alive and he doesn't know how he'll do it.

Thankfully, a new case took his mind off the fish. Torres and his team were later called to the scene of a suspicious death. Their victim is Naval Petty Officer Martin Delfino. He was found frozen to death in the back of a food supply truck and it looked suspicious because he had no reason to be in the truck or to die in it. Delfino hadn't worked with the company that owns the truck.

He operates a food truck with his cousin Shaun Greco and so it was odd that he would freeze to death in that truck of all places. The team asked the man who drives the truck if he recognizes their victim. He claimed he didn't know him but hearing the name of the truck did resonate with him because he delivered to Killer Korn. Delfino's food truck was called Killer Korn.

It was very popular in the area. Bishop had even heard of it and she told the others that they have the best corn on the cobb in the world. However, they went to the location of the food truck.

Bishop said the colors on the truck didn't match the ones of Killer Korn when she lasts it and so that too made this case suspicious. Bishop and Torres later found the cousin. They spoke to Greco and they informed of Delfino's death.

Another food trucker had overheard them. She came running over to offer her sympathies to Greco because she knew his cousin and she thought his death came out of the blue and so the team asked her as well as Greco if Delfino had enemies. The only enemy the two could think of was Sloppy Joe Sammy.

Sammy was another food trucker. He owns and operates the Sloppy Joe food truck and he tried to flee the scene once he saw that he was speaking to federal agents. Sammy wasn't able to make it very far because his truck made a horrible getaway vehicle. So, he answered a few questions for the team.

Sammy eventually admitted he tried to make a run for it because he received a "C" rating and he hasn't put it up or made any changes to his food truck since then. Sammy got to be quite chatty once he got going. He told the team that he had no grudge against Delfino. He doesn't like anyone and so he didn't Delfino. It wasn't anything personal. Sammy also said that Killer Korn had an intense rivalry with another food truck called Kosmic Korn.

Both food trucks make the same type of food. Their rivalry was so intense that it was all over the food blogs and the owners of each truck have taken out individual restraining orders against each other. It was such an intense rivalry that it seemed odd Greco didn't mention it. He mentioned Sammy and Sammy had merely been unpleasant. The "Korn Wars" on the other hand was the first thing everyone else thought about when asked about Delfino's enemies. The team went back to Greco. They asked him about the rivalry and he said that restraining orders forces so much distance that the rivalry is dead now. He operates on one side of town and the other guys operated on the other end.

It turns out the birth of the rivalry happened after Greco's friend stole his recipes. Greco and Pete Cannizaro both used to work at the same restaurant. The restaurant closed because of Covid-19 and so Greco poured all of his money into a food truck. He was just trying to find a way to keep working when the food truck idea came up. Greco told his friend his plans and his friend started using his recipes as well as a similar name to Greco's truck. Kosmic Korn was the truck Bishop was thinking about earlier and the designs to both tracks are similar. Cannizaro basically ripped off his friend's whole idea. Which explained animosity. They were each doing their best to sabotage until the restraining orders happened and now they have nothing to do with each other.

The team went to Kosmic Korn's truck. They spoke with the owner and unfortunately, he was too busy at the time to talk and so Bishop and Torres pretended to be food bloggers. They offered to help with his truck in order to get an inside scoop on what happens behind the scenes. Cannizaro hadn't known that they were federal agents. He allowed them entry into his food truck and they went searching for evidence. They later found evidence of blood. That was enough for them to detain Cannizaro and they questioned him about the blood. He said it was his. He said that Delfino came to him all angry and started a fight with him. Delfino hit Cannizaro. He drew blood and that seemed to snap him out of his anger.

Cannizaro claims that Delfino apologized to him. He said he was trying to break old patterns and he only came in all hot because he was trying to protect his loved ones. Delfino told Cannizaro that he was trying to make things before he shipped out. What he said got to Cannizaro and Cannizaro agreed to switch to burritos once he had run out of corn. He really did steal the recipes from Greco, but he was trying to make it right now and so he hadn't killed Delfino. Delfino was knocked out and placed in the back of that truck and it wasn't Cannizaro. The results came back that it had been his blood in the back of his truck. He had been telling the truth and so the team went back to Delfino's friends and family.

The girl who had run over when she heard Delfino died — she had dated Delfino. He apparently noticed that she was being harassed by the food supplier and so he told the guy to back off. Richard, the supplier, then claims that Delfino disappeared before they could finish their discussion. Richard had gotten a ticket on his truck and he had needed to move his truck before he got another one and by the time he came back he swears that Delfino was gone. The next time he saw him, Delfino was dead in the back of his truck. It had seemed a little too convenient for the team to believe and they decided to detain Richard in spite of his story. They were talking about what to do next when Gibbs got a call from Fornell.

Fornell had told him earlier that he planned on moving to Costa Rica. He was at retirement age and he had wanted to move on with his life. Only the call hadn't been about his trip. Fornell called saying that there was something wrong with Emily and so Gibbs fled the scene of a potential arrest to go to his side. Fornell had been at a hospital. His daughter Emily who is an addict had relapsed and he hadn't known who else to call. His wife is dead. He doesn't really have any friends besides Gibbs and so he called Gibbs. Gibbs hadn't known how to help. All he could do was just sit with Fornell in the waiting room.

Meanwhile, the case with Delfino was solved. He apparently had lost his temper again. He had gotten into an argument with the guy who wrote parking tickets and it turns out the guy snapped. He shoved Delfino into a truck. It knocked him out and so the guy moved his body. He killed Delfino because he was tired of being hated every day. And so that was that.

And unfortunately, Emily Fornell later died from a drug overdose.

Summary: NCIS uncovers a secret dog fighting ring, which leads to an unexpected move by one of the team members.

There was an incident with a convoy. A group of military personnel was transporting weapons to a second location when they got into a fender bender and they only had an accident because of a stray dog. The dog had run out into the street right in front of the vehicle. The driver of one of the vans was forced to pull the vehicle to a sharp stop and it was so abrupt that one of the weapons came loose in the back. The Navy missile fell out of the vehicle.

It was damaged and it was considered armed. The convoy ended up having to call it in. NCIS was called because of the Navy missile and Gibbs spoke to the driver. He asked him what happened to the dog. Gibbs hasn't been himself since his goddaughter died and he almost lost his temper when the driver appeared to dismiss the dog entirely.

The driver hadn't cared about the dog. He said that with everything that's happened he should have just run over the dog and so Gibbs took him to task. Gibbs cared about the animal. He and his team went looking for it and they eventually found him wounded in the woods. The dog wasn't wounded by the car.

The vet later told the team that the dog had been shot and this wasn't the first dog she's seen with a bullet wound. Two other dogs have come into her practice. The vet said they had all been abused and they were all shot. The dog Gibbs found was the only one that was still alive. It seems Gibbs's new friend was a part of an illegal dogfighting ring and so Gibbs personally investigated it.

He went out alone. He traced where the dog was coming from and it led back to a woman.

This woman owns five dogs. She said it's cheaper than having a man and she also said that her neighbor tends to cross over onto her property. The neighbor, Luke, also has dogs. He was apparently a fisherman and so Gibbs checked out the pond he's been fishing in. He looked into the pond. He found a cage from a kennel and inside the cage had been a dead dog. It had appeared that Luke drowned his dog.

This enraged Gibbs. He went up to Luke's RV and he started punching him. Gibbs didn't try to arrest him or identify himself. He went straight to punching him and his team had to pull him off. Torres, McGee, and Bishop had wanted to check up on Gibbs because they knew he was being overly attached to this dog case.

Gibbs usually puts some distance between himself and what he's investigating. Only this time it seems like he couldn't distance himself. He took all of his anger about what happened to the dogs and what happened to Emily Fornell out on Luke. His team being there was the only reason Gibbs hadn't killed Luke Stanna.

Gibbs even got in trouble for what he did because Luke pressed charges and so Gibbs was later arrested for aggravated assault. Gibbs was taken away by investigators. He told his team before he left that they should tell the truth and that meant he didn't want them lying for him. He crossed a line. He knows he crossed a line and he doesn't want the team to sink themselves because of him. He just wants them to do their job.

The team cares for Gibbs. They continued the investigation he started and they found evidence of dogfighting. It turns out Luke was a gambling addict. He's missed several meetings because he wanted to put money on the ponies and he went from ponies to dogs. He even had the steroids he used on the dogs still in his trailer. Plus, there was eight grand hidden under his mattress.

The team later questioned Luke and he claimed the steroids were his. He said he was looking to get back into shape. He also said he won that eight grand in a card game and so he wasn't admitting to anything he didn't have to. The team knew he was guilty but proving it was going to be hard and it didn't help that the team had to take time away from the investigation to answer questions.

They were all questioned about Gibbs's behavior. They were asked if they saw Gibbs attack Luke and they all responded with a story about how Luke was trying to flee when he tripped and fell. Bishop, McGee, and Torres were all risking their careers because they wanted to protect Gibbs. They were protected in spite of what he asked of them. He told them to tell the truth and instead, they told lies. It wasn't even a believable lie.

There was no way Luke could have tripped and fallen on his face several times. It was implausible. The team was lying and everyone knew it. Vance had watched the team be questioned. He saw when they all lied for Gibbs and he later reported it to Gibbs. He also hired Gibbs a lawyer. Gibbs hadn't liked the news or having a lawyer.

Gibbs also didn't get a say in either. His lawyer was there to represent him and it was too late for the team to take back the lie. The team chose to focus on clearing Gibbs's name. They wanted to prove that Luke was murdering dogs once he was done using them for fights and so they went looking for evidence. They tried to connect the steroids to the dogs. The dogs were tested and none of them had steroids in their system.

There were no new leads. Luke's neighbor doesn't even want to testify against him because she was afraid of what he might. She was a little old lady that lived alone on a large plot of land with dogs and so she didn't want to take the risk. And without her, the team had nothing and so they tried arresting Luke for possession of steroids and the IG stopped them.

The Inspector-General called what NCIS was doing to Luke a "witch hunt". They couldn't find any evidence against him and they were now trying to harass him any way they could. This wasn't legal. Luke already had a lawsuit prepared for what happened to him and so stunts like trying to arrest him for the littlest of things were just going to further irritate him. The team couldn't touch Luke. He was now off-limits and they also had other problems to deal with.

McGee had been wearing a body camera the day he pulled Gibbs off of Luke. The video from it could prove that Gibbs assaulted Luke and that the team covered for him. They lied to a federal agent for him. They were all guilty of a federal crime and so the three of them considered going one step further.

Both Bishop and Torres thought they should erase the footage from the body cam. They tried to talk McGee into doing so and he was firm in telling them no. He took the footage to Vance.

They both watched it together and McGee noticed something he didn't spot before. He noticed that Luke already had blood on him before he was attacked.

The team ran a DNA test on the blood and it came back to be their dog. The dog was now named Lucy. The team could finally connect Luke to dog abuse and so they went to go arrest him. Luke hadn't been at his house. He went on the run and so they found him by using the GPS in his personal poodle's collar. Luke was later arrested. They also found his other dogs and rescued them.

The IG adopted two of the dogs. He also didn't press charges against either Gibbs or his team. So, the whole team should have been off the hook but they weren't. Vance still punished. He suspended him. He got back his badge and gun and the only bright spot in this whole thing is that now Gibbs is the owner of Lucy.

Summary: Vance assigns McGee, Torres and Bishop to COVID compliance duty at a foreign affairs summit, where they discover a link to another NCIS team's murder case.

There were bound to be repercussions for the team. They had lied after all to a federal agent to cover up something Gibbs did, and so Vance couldn't allow them to get away with it. He suspended Gibbs. He now has to punish the rest of them. Vance assigned the team to COVID compliance duty at a foreign affairs summit and those things were the worst. They came with so many pitfalls.

The team couldn't risk causing an international incident and they also couldn't even attend any of the cool events. The team knew instantly that they were being punished when they were given this assignment. They got COVID compliance while others got to attend the new Secretary of Defense and go to his dinner for the Yemeni Foreign Affairs Minister. And so not only were they being punished but now everyone at NCIS knows they're being punished.

Gibbs's team was once known as the dream team. They all the great mysteries and the biggest budget. However, they were passed over in a recent case that came up because Vance wanted them to be compliance officers. They were therefore getting their punishment and no one told Gibbs. They didn't want to worry the boss. They just carried on with the job all the while Gibbs was fending off reporters.

It turns out that reporters had gotten a whiff of a scandal at NCIS and they want the full story now. They've been asking Gibbs for a comment. One woman also cornered Gibbs at the diner and he thankfully saw her coming because he had seen her picture in the paper. Gibbs didn't want to talk to reporters. He also didn't want to make a fuss about his suspension.

Gibbs just wants to take his punishment on the chin. He knows that he'll go back to work and so he's willing to wait for his suspension out. His team on the other hand weren't as optimistic about their own punishment. They all hated setting up the COVID body temp readers. No one respected them and it was eating at them that they weren't working the case that came in. It was a murder investigation.

Marine Lance Corporal Jesse Flint was killed and his body was literally dumped in a dumpster. Flint was days away from being dishonorably discharged. He was also awaiting charges for domestic abuse against his girlfriend and so he wasn't a good guy. It was clear why someone murdered him. Another team had been assigned his case and unfortunately one of the other guys was Sawyer.

Sawyer was the world's most annoying man. The team all hated him because he had a chip on his shoulder about them getting all the great cases and so Sawyer was getting his revenge now. He boasted about how it was his team that was investigating Flint's murder. He even went as far as to say he was now the A team and Gibbs's crew were the losers.

Which they resented. Bishop, Torres, and McGee couldn't help getting information on the case because they all wanted to know what it involved and Torres had seen the body. Torres spotted a paint mark on the body. He didn't know what it was from and neither did Palmer. And so it wasn't until Torres had seen a similar paint mark on McGee that he realized Flint had been on the SECDEF's property.

The team spoke about this within hearing distance of Sawyer who told them there was a reasonable explanation for it. Sawyer said that the victim worked as a part-time handyman and that he worked all over town. He then added that he and his partner have got a great suspect. Flint's ex-girlfriend skipped town around the murder and she was being tracked as they spoke. Sawyer told the team that he got this. He also said that they should be focusing on their punishment because it wouldn't look good for them if he went to Vance and complained about them. Only this didn't stop the team. They continued to work the case on the side and so they later confirmed that Flint had been working at the new Secretary of Defense's property.

SECDEF's aide Miles Thatcher was the one to confirm it for them. He said that the house was going through extensive remodel ever since a new administration took over and that Flint was one of many that were hired. The team next checked Flint's items. They found a hypodermic needle in his possessions and it couldn't be explained. Flint wasn't a paint wizard. He didn't mix his own paints and he had written down a paint name that couldn't be found in any brand of paint. Bishop figured out that it wasn't painted. It was a location and she later visited it with her team. The three of them found a workstation and it was clear by what they saw that Flint had been casing the joint at SECDEF's and not working as a handyman.

Flint had a stockpile of weapons. He also rigged his hideout to blow and so the bomb squad was called. Vance was also called while they were at it. Vance received a report from the team and they told him that Flint was a hitman. He was hired to target the new Secretary of Defense dead. He had been paid by someone and they weren't sure if the hit was called off once the hitman died. The team told Vance that they'll continue investigating, but he told them not to do it. He reminded them that they once again stepped out of bounds of what they've been assigned. He wanted them to hand over everything to Sawyer and his partner Tyler and the team were to take orders from their fellow NCIS Agents.

Sawyer was deeply upset when he later found out what Gibbs's team did. He too reminded them that not everything is about them and that there were other NCIS Agents working in the building. Each and every time Gibbs's team messed up, they all had to deal with the repercussions. He was sick of having to clean up after them and he told them as much. Sawyer and Tyler gave the team their new assignments. They were to do the grunt work.

Sawyer and Tyler meanwhile continued to investigate and so did the team. They again ignored protocol. The team learned that the musician hired for the party at SECDEF's property had a record he was trying to hide. They went to his home and they ran into Sawyer and Tyler.

The two other agents had also realized Kendle Radcliffe was suspicious. They went to his house and they found him dead in his bathroom. He had apparently killed himself with the same gun he used on Flint. Sawyer and Tyler both thought this meant their case was closed.

The evidence all matched that threat was removed and so SECDEF went ahead with his party. Torres, Bishop, and McGee all had a gut feeling that the case wasn't closed and so they visited Kasie.

They asked her if she found anything they could use. She told them the needle they found had traces of liquid potassium in it. It wasn't dangerous on its own only it was dangerous to the SECDEF because he has a chronic kidney condition.

And so the team rushed to the party and they stopped the secretary from drinking his champagne. They later showed him how it could have killed him and they knew who did it, but the team left it to Sawyer and Tyler to break the news. They were given all the credit and they were the ones who did the debriefing with Vance. It turns out someone attached to the Yemeni Foreign Minister had tried to kill SECDEF to stop the alliance from going through.

And just as the team thought they finished everything, they learned that Gibbs spoke to the journalist and he told his whole story. Even the part that could cost him his job.

Production Code: 18012
Summary: Evidence from the stabbing of a Marine Sergeant leads Torres to meet his father, Miguel, who left when he was a child.

Years ago, back in Panama, Torres woke up in the middle of a night because of noise. It had been his father and his father was leaving. He was leaving for good. His father hadn't wanted a young Torres to know he was leaving. Maybe he didn't want to deal with tears or maybe he didn't want Torres to alert his mother.

It didn't really matter in the end. Miguel convinced his son that he was just going out for a few minutes and that he would be back in time for when his son got up for the day and Torres naturally believed him. He was a child. He would've believed everything his loving father told him. But unfortunately, that was the last time Torres saw his father Miguel. Miguel cleared out the money they were hiding in the house and he left. And so Torres's last memory of his father was being lied to.

Years past. Torres grew up and he came to live in the United States. He became a citizen. He even became a federal agent as an NCIS Special Agent and he and his team were called out to the murder scene of Marine Staff Sergeant Richard Larson. Larson was found stabbed to death in a property for sale. The sale was being handled by the realtor and she has never met the victim. She came in one day to check the house before an open house where she found dead in the bathroom.

The realtor, therefore, didn't give him a key and yet Larson was found with one. The agents found a key near his remains. They also found DNA on him and it came back as a familial match to Torres. Torres asked Kaisey if she was sure. She told him she was and she added how the familial match belonged to a male relative.

Kaisey couldn't add anything else because the DNA was too corrupted. Torres knew that it couldn't be his sister or his niece because again the DNA was male and so it had to be one of his cousins. Torres had heard his father had died years ago. He immediately dismissed him when Kaisey asked about him and so he sent out feelers to see where his cousins were. He and Jimmy were checking with his extended family when the rest of the team came back with updates.

Larson had gotten a key to the house because he worked as a move to the decorator who staged the home. Another thing the team learned was that the same vehicle was driving around the neighborhood more than once during the time of the murder and so they tracked that vehicle down. And they went to where it was last seen.

Only Torres hadn't counted on running to supposedly dead father. His father recognized him instantly and that was a surprise for someone who hasn't seen him since he was five. Torres also really thought his father was dead. He had been shaken to see the opposite was true and it didn't help that Miguel tried to resist arrest when McGee was about to detain him. Miguel was their chief suspect in Larson's murder.

He acted suspiciously with McGee and so they had to arrest him. They brought him to the station. They questioned him about Larson and he denied knowing him. He even had an excuse for why his DNA was at the scene. Miguel said he visited the open house. He claims he was looking to buy a home to be closer to his family in the area and that was funny because Torres had thought he was dead for years.

Miguel explained away the DNA by claiming he used the bathroom while he was visiting the house. He also said he fought back because the first thing he saw was someone coming towards him with a gun and so, in spite of his flawed story, the team actually didn't have any evidence to hold onto him. They still did so because technically they could for twenty-four hours. They just looked for evidence in the meantime and the first thing they did was check Miguel's hotel room.

They found a fake room he was using as well as the real one. Torres had found the real one because Miguel had booked it in Torres's mother's maiden name and so they found Miguel's guns. They found the photos of another Marine by the name of Thomas Baird and they wondered what was going on. Torres hadn't wanted to wait for answers.

He went into the interrogation room. He confronted his father. It turned into a nasty argument and McGee had to pull Torres off of Miguel. It turns out NCIS has been ordered to stand down. They have to release Miguel because he was working with Pamela Walsh from the CIA and so Director Vance has even gotten involved in the case.

Miguel as it happens was a CIA freelance operative. He works in Southern America for them and he has for years. He's been making a lot of money while Torres's family was starving until the church stepped in to help. Torres is now bitter to learn his father could have helped and he never did. He's also upset he couldn't arrest his father. Miguel was technically one of the good guys and what he's involved in is bigger than the fight between him and Torres.

Miguel was looking for Baird because Baird was a traitor. He himself was a CIA Officer and he was supposed to be helping them take down a known terrorist named Yusef Qassem when someone tipped off Qassem. He was able to hide detection. He also went into hiding and Baird did the same. Baird was receiving money as well as supplies from his friend in the Marines, Larson. Up until Baird killed Larson, Baird is in DC cleaning up loose ends and Miguel followed him up here.

Miguel is CIA or CIA adjacent. Neither he nor his bosses can investigate Baird on domestic soil and so Vance said his team was going to take point. He told Walsh it was either them or the FBI and she chose NCIS. Vance also had a word with Torres. He said that as a father he could never understand what Miguel did but this case has to take precedence and Vance couldn't afford to lose another good agent.

Torres agreed to put his disagreements with his father to the side. He continued working on the case and that meant working with Miguel. Miguel later got him alone. He explained how he had been forced to leave his father because the dictator of their country has found out Miguel was working against him. Miguel said he spent a few years working with other organizations to change the world and that's how he was contacted by the CIA.

But Miguel said once he started making money, he started donating to the church in their hometown with the wish that the money gets passed to his family and so he had been taking care of them. The dictator was eventually overruled. Torres asked Miguel why he didn't return then and he said that he gained too many enemies thanks to his work with the CIA.

Miguel still kept tabs on his family. He visited them without them knowing and that's how he recognized Torres as an adult. Miguel explained everything yet it wasn't enough for Torres. He was still hurt the father he loved and trusted lied to him. He agreed to work with his dad on this case. He just wasn't sure about afterward.

The team later found out Baird took a bank manager hostage and they tracked him back to a cabin in the woods. Miguel and Torres were the ones who found Baird. They had him cornered and he told them he wasn't the bad guy. He said he had been blamed for the failed op when it wasn't true. He took the bank manager because the real traitor had made away with the money that was supposed to take down Qassem and only the bank manager can prove who really tipped off the terrorist.

It was Pamela Walsh. Her name was on the bank records for the stolen money and unfortunately, Miguel told his boss about them finding Baird. She followed them to the cabin. She attempted to kill everyone inside. Torres and Miguel snuck out Baird. They couldn't do the same with the bank manager because he was killed instantly and so the two men came up with a plan.

They surprised the hitmen after them. They each took down a man and that only left Walsh. Walsh wanted to kill everyone to cover up what she did, but Miguel saw a knife lying on the ground and he told his son in Spanish to use it while he created a diversion. The diversion was getting himself shot. It gave Torres the opportunity to throw the knife and kill Walsh. And Miguel was just fine. He was wearing a bulletproof vest.

Later, the team learned that Walsh had hired Miguel without telling her bosses. She also hired two Russian assets to kill him and Baird and so Miguel saved the day. He was such a hero that Torres later offered his father an olive branch. He agreed to introduce his father to his granddaughter if he would like it and Torres even said he would pick him up from the hotel. Miguel agreed to this plan, but he bailed before Torres could get to the hotel and so Torres broke the bad news to his family and he went to go have dinner with Gibbs. If nothing else, Gibbs can be counted on.

Summary: The team investigates a biker killed in a hit and run as Gibbs prepares to testify against a financial advisor who stole millions from his Navy clients.

Someone ran over a biker. This biker was out on his morning routine with his friend and unfortunately, his friend was waylaid when his chain came undone. Therefore, it seems the killer used this opportunity to kill the biker once he was alone. The biker was identified as Petty Officer Second Class Michael Benson and his death was naturally NCIS's jurisdiction. They were called in to investigate.

They saw the body and they also found the bike that belonged to Benson's friend. It did have a broken chain. The friend wasn't lying about that however there was footage of the accident and it was clear the friend witnessed the hit and run and that he fled the scene after checking to see if the coast was clear. This "friend" didn't even check on Benson. He didn't call for help or check for a pulse. He just left him in the middle of the street to die.

The footage of the friend running away was given to the team. Kasie checked it and she couldn't get the license plate or a clearer look at the friend. All she could identify from the video was that the car that hit Benson was a black sedan. It didn't give the rest of the team much and everyone was stuck on the friend.

They questioned if he could have been involved in the setup. They looked through Benson's contacts in efforts of finding this friend and in the meantime Palmer carried out his examination. Benson died from the hit and run. He suffered internal bleeding and his death was quick. His death might also have been an accident. The victim was wearing the same outfit with the same bike and riding the same route like his friend Bernard Wilson.

Wilson hadn't been the one to die. Only he did suspect he might have been the intended target and that's why he ran. Wilson was the star witness in the Parker James trial. He was James's accountant and he was a firsthand witness to the biggest Ponzi scheme in Naval history. Wilson was due to testify the same day as the accident.

The team called Gibbs knowing that he would be on the trial and they asked him about Wilson. Wilson didn't show up at court. The prosecution had to ask for more time so that could find their witness and it was later revealed that the reason Wilson didn't show up is that he's dead. He was shot in his garage. The killer must have realized his or her mistake in killing Wilson's friend and they finished the job.

NCIS found Wilson. He had clearly been shot in the head by whoever James hired and so now it was up to them to prove it. They had to prove Parker James was behind the death of two men. The team was the one to make the original case against James and Gibbs was supposed to testify in the trial, but the prosecutor removed him from her witness list because of Gibbs's recent history. Gibbs was suspended after assaulting a suspect in one of his other cases.

His credibility isn't strong right now and the prosecutor thought she had Wilson to make her case. Now, she's down her star witness. He had been murdered and her next best shot at conviction is Gibbs. Gibbs had overheard James's confession. He could testify to that and everyone is hoping that Gibbs will be able to keep his cool on the stand.

Gibbs's recent behavior is the reason why everyone's doubting him now. He normally would have been a great witness and nowadays not even Vance wanted to take a chance on him. Vance and the prosecutor spoke. They both agreed Gibbs was the next best option. Vance followed up this conversation by visiting Gibbs and he warned Gibbs about the repercussions of his testimony. Gibbs was going to be asked about the assault. His testimony will then become public record and it could potentially cost him his job at NCIS. Not that Gibbs cared. Gibbs wanted to take down James more than anything and so he was willing to risk his career. Nothing was going to stop him from testifying.

The team meanwhile was looking for evidence. They needed to know to find out how James arranged a murder for hire and their usual suspects like his lawyer were out. McGee knew the lawyer really well. He was smarmy but he wouldn't arrange a murder for his client and so that left everyone else who visited James in prison. The team spoke to James's ex-wife. She said she only visited because she and James were going through a divorce and she needed him to sign paperwork.

She also said that James was with someone new. She ran into her in the waiting room and the young woman had practically threatened her to stay away from James. The young woman was identified as Hanna Devereaux. She saw footage of James's arrest and she became obsessed with him. Hanna started writing him letters.

James replied by asking her to visit him. Her obsession was so concerning that her father became worried when she didn't return home one night and he told Bishop that Hanna left behind her cell phone as well. This coupled with the fact that the team found the car and were able to determine whoever was driving was really short — made Hanna the best suspect in their murder-for-hire. Except she wasn't hired. She must have done it for "love".

The team eventually found Hanna when she visited James at the prison and they questioned her. They asked her if she was willing to kill the man she loves. Hanna said that wasn't her. She claims she was in a congressman's office trying to drum up support for James and that she thought it would help if she wrote a letter to the congressman. She wrote him twenty-three pages.

Most of it was bad rhyming. Hanna claims she has a gift for letters because James told her he fell in love with her after one paragraph and so now she lives to write letters. She even saves the ones he sends her. Bishop took a copy of one and she couldn't find any evidence of wrongdoing. Like sure it was weird but it was legal. The team couldn't find any concrete evidence indicating Hanna was involved and that meant they had to keep looking.

They were still looking when Gibbs took the stand. Gibbs was asked about the assault and he was asked if he regretted it. He said he doesn't. His credibility was so shot that the jury found James not guilty. James claims he invested the money he took from clients and that he lost it on the market and the truth is he exchanged thirty million dollars for casino chips.

Casino chips never expire. They were easier to hide and so James still had a nest egg. He also still has a wife. His wife paired her cell phone with the car used to kill Benson and the team had enough evidence on her to arrest her for murder. They then told Charlotte that if she didn't talk, she would be taking the fall alone and so she turned on her husband. They were both arrested for Benson and Wilson's murder. And the team closed their case.

They tried to call Gibbs to tell him about it but he was ignoring their calls.

Summary: NCIS tracks a stolen laptop to the uncle of a young boy, Phineas, Gibbs' former neighbor.

A delivery driver was working late at night. He was in fact making a delivery when the person who ordered decided to cancel the order and so he was heading towards his car when he found a dead sailor by it. The dead man was later identified as Navy Captain Strauss Tubman.

It was believed he was coming home when he was attacked by a thief and shot point-blank in the chest. The thief made off with the laptop case he was carrying as well as possibly his car. Tubman then crawled to a nearby vehicle where he died and was later found. But there was a problem with the victim. The victim worked at the NMCC otherwise known as the National Military Command Center and those were the people in charge of nuclear codes on submarines.

Tubman's laptop was therefore very valuable. Tubman was given to NCIS to investigate and they made it their mission to find the victim's laptop. Tubman didn't just work at the NMCC. He worked with encryption researchers by helping encrypt the Navy's nuclear code and so his laptop held his research. It's also odd how the victim was found. He didn't crawl towards the building or towards help. He went to a parked car.

The team joked about him possibly wanting something to eat and that's why he went to a delivery driver's vehicle but, jokes aside, the team didn't really know why Tubman crawled in that direction. They later believed they found the shooter when they got a match for the DNA under Tubman's fingernails.

The DNA was a match for Edgar Proust. He was dumb as rocks and he tried to deny being the shooter. Never mind the DNA or how the team found the murder weapon in Proust's gym bag. Proust eventually confessed he did kill Tuban and that it had been an accident. They fought over the gun when it went off.

Proust had been paid to steal the laptop and he said whoever paid him was from the Middle East. He also added how they accessed some files that had the NCIS logo on them. Kasie traced the hack and she determined whoever hacked them had accessed files on Phineas. Phineas was the kid that Gibbs became close to. He also helped him to relocate after his mother was taken down for being a known criminal and one of the reasons he's in hiding now is because of his uncle.

His Libyan uncle had tried to kidnap him. Hassan Sayeh put a million-dollar bounty on his nephew and now he's managed to find him by getting to Tubman's laptop. The team had to notify Gibbs because of his connection to Phineas. The two were close and Gibbs was genuinely upset when he heard about the threat to the young boy's life.

He called Phineas's cell phone. He got a state trooper. The state trooper was responding to the scene of an "accident" and he said only adults were found at the scene. Both were rushed to the hospital while there was no sign of Phineas. Phineas had been kidnapped and Gibbs was prepared to come off of suspension to find him. Gibbs went to the hospital where Phineas's adoptive parents were.

Gibbs tried to speak with them. They were unfortunately in a bad way and both had been rushed into surgery. Gibbs couldn't speak to them, but when he returned home, he found Phineas hiding in his house. The young boy had escaped his kidnapers. He then went to the only place he knew was safe and that was Gibbs's. Gibbs treated Phineas's wounds. The young boy had a cut over his eye and he told Gibbs what happened as he was being treated.

Phineas and his parents had come back from the mall when they saw two people running out of their house. They took off in the car and that's when they were run off the road. Phineas's mother told him to run after they crashed. He did and he didn't look back to see if anyone was chasing him.

Phineas went to Gibbs because he didn't think his evil uncle knew about Gibbs. Which thankfully he doesn't. Phineas was safe and Gibbs later informed the team that was the case. Gibbs and Phineas were catching up while the team was looking into his uncle Hassan. There had been chatter coming out of Libya and they tracked Hassan back to town. He was working with four others to get his hands on his nephew.

The team was tracking him down but often their personal issues kept coming up and everyone was talking about Bishop and Torres. The two were flirty with each other. Everyone saw it and they questioned when the two of them will finally have the "talk". They talk of where they seeing their relationship in the future.

They were coworkers. They were also friends and so Bishop didn't want to risk it by dating Torres. Torres was also resistant to change. Neither of them wanted to jeopardize what they have by seeking something more and so they've decided to just be friends. The two of them tracked Hassan back to a motel room. They went to this room with McGee and they found a young boy in a hospital plus his doctor. The doctor had been kidnapped from Libya to treat Hassan's son Ahmed. Ahmed was suffering from a rare form of leukemia. He needed bone marrow to survive and that's why Hassan wanted his nephew. He needed Phineas to save his son's life. He could have asked Phineas or Phineas's adoptive parents and instead, he reacted with brute strength because that's who he is.

Hassan will always choose violence. He even kidnapped a doctor to treat his son and fitted with him an ankle monitor so that he couldn't leave the motel room. Hassan's men had found out about Gibbs. It's why they weren't at the motel when NCIS arrived and so the team informed Gibbs. He laid a trap for Hassan's men. He captured them and with Phineas's help, he also captured Hassan. Hassan told Phineas about his son Ahmed before he was taken away. Phineas had been so moved that he later chose to donate his bone marrow to help his cousin and so truly all Hassan needed to do was ask.

Phineas's adoptive parents are going to be okay and his mom told him he could get the dog he always wanted. And so Gibbs gave Phineas Lucy.

The dog Lucy had taken a liking to Phineas and it made sense for Gibbs because he likes his solitude.

Summary: When members of an NCIS Regional Enforcement Action Capabilities Training Team (REACT) are killed during an explosion, NCIS Special Agent Jessica Knight, the lone surviving member, helps crack the case using high tech body armor.

A hostage situation got out of hand. Special Agent Jessica Knight of the NCIS acted as the hostage negotiator and she managed to convince the husband to release his wife. However, not long after the hostage was released, the building blew. The negotiator and her team had been inside the building when it blew up. Several members were killed including the husband they were talking down and two bodies were missing.

Knight and Special Madden's bodies weren't found with the rest. McGee and his team were brought in to investigate what happened and they went inside the building hoping to find the remains of two of their associates when they ended up finding Knight alive. She had been buried in the rubble. She was injured and otherwise, she'll make it.

Knight surviving as she did was deemed a miracle. She was rushed to the hospital and she was still receiving treatment as the team began investigating what went wrong. NCIS originally went to the house to serve a warrant. Petty Officer Second Class Toby Withers was accused of stealing weapons and he was considered high-risk because of his ties to a white supremacist group. He did after all take his wife Tina hostage when he saw NCIS at his door.

Withers only released her after he found out she was pregnant and that he was going to become a dad. He seemed happy about the baby. He let go of his wife and everyone thought he was turning himself over but then the bombing happened. No one knew where the explosive came from. Knight was the only one with intel and the team couldn't speak to her.

The hospital wasn't allowing visitors. The team had to get evidence elsewhere and they did by using the bodies. It was clear Withers was near to the bomb when he died. Parts of the bomb melded into his skin when it exploded. Kasie ran an analysis on the bomb and she determined it was remotely detonated by an app on a cell phone. Everyone assumed it was Withers. It wasn't until they finally got to talk to Knight that they realized he didn't set off the bomb.

They visited her at the hospital. She told them everything she remembered. She said Withers detested cell phones because he thought that's how the government was controlling people and he also didn't have the opportunity to set off the bomb. He was being handcuffed by three agents when it happened.

Withers wasn't the bomber. The bomber was still out there and no one was more dedicated to finding this bomber than Knight. She even tried to escape the hospital against the doctor's recommendation. She was stopped by a nurse who apparently stopped her more than once and so she didn't get to leave until she was properly released. Then she was told to take some days off. Knight ignored this recommendation and she returned to NCIS.

She later managed to get the team to agree to let her work the case for 48 hours. If she didn't get results in 48 hours, she would have to go home and take the necessary days off. Knight was a known face in the building. She and Kasie were friends. She also did her best in proving her team was murdered by one of Withers's militia friends.

Knight and her team had been wearing new technical gear. The gear determined where the signal was coming from and it even traced the cell phone used to detonate the device. Knight and Torres went to the location of the cell phone but the cell phone user was found dead. He was murdered. The bomber was identified as Richie Soren and it seems his real target was Knight's team. It wasn't even about Withers.

Soren called NCIS on Withers knowing that Knight's team would respond and so the bomb was planted at Withers's home as means of setting him up. Which didn't work because Withers was Withers. He hates cell phones and he wouldn't have used one to kill. He was in fact stealing weapons from the military to give to his "militia" friends which is a code word for white supremacists. And yet he wasn't the bomber.

Soren was the bomber. His RV had bomb-making materials still inside of it and he was paid thousands of dollars before he set off the bomb. Then he was killed. Whoever hired Soren probably wanted to clean up any loose ends and he or she murdered Soren to keep him quiet. There's no trace of this boss. The money Soren had on him couldn't be traced and to make things worse suspicion was falling on of Knight's team members.

Her friend Special Agent Eddie Madden was flagged. He was known for checking out millions of dollars of technical gear and it appears he was hoarding it as his house a possible means of selling it later. Eddie also had an advanced lung disease that he told no one about. And he made sure to cover up his theft by hacking the computer system to show he was somewhere else in the building when he wasn't.

Madden's body was found in the house. He died like everyone else and so he might have set up his team knowing that he was going to die anyway. Knight hadn't wanted to believe that of him. She told McGee he was wrong when he first raised suspicions and it took her having to see him steal their gear on security footage to make her realize her friend might have been dirty. The team acted like Madden was dirty.

They were investigating where he visited and they found out he was seeing law offices as well as chemical laboratories. Those people didn't seem like types who would buy stolen gear. The team investigated it and it was Palmer who found out the truth. The high-tech gear was what gave Madden lung disease. He had a preexisting condition of asthma and so that's why he got sick while his team members were still healthy.

Madden found out their gear was toxic. He tried to build a case against the man who built and it was his boss who turned on him. The guy who sent Madden and Knight and all the others to the building. Madden went to his boss to report the issue and rather than tell their superiors what was going on — he went to the man who built the thing and he turned on his team for money.

McGee and Torres later arrested Kessler who built the gear while Knight arrested her boss. She got justice for her team. She also realized that she did need to take time off to deal. Knight didn't have a family. She was an orphan and so her team had been her family. And she was going to need time to let them go.

And while the team was working on this case, Gibbs managed to find him in the middle of a new investigation. He and his journalist were investigating her friend's death when they found out they were looking for a serial killer.

Summary: While pursuing a dangerous arms dealer, the team is shocked when Bishop is implicated in an old NSA leak. Also, Gibbs and Marcie realize that the killer they've been tracking may be onto them.

Bishop isn't acting like herself. She was taking bigger risks out in the field and she recently met up with Gibbs to ask him if what he did was worth the fallout. He told her it was, but she wasn't upset by that answer. She instead seemed to agree with him. Bishop started to take risks after that conversation and she later killed two men in the field after the team had been authorized by the Director to carry out an undercover gun buy.

The gun buy was sorta ruined once the three guys selling guns identified McGee and Torres as law enforcement. The bad guys began shooting first and Bishop responded. She killed two and one got away. The one that got away was also the one running things. He was known as Mr. Flori. It was hard to identify him as well as his friends because they weren't in the system and so McGee later hacked the dead men's phones.

McGee found out the men were contacting a landline in the leadup to the shooting. The landline was connected to an address and the team followed up by going there. They found a deserted house. It was cleared of what seemed to be a weapons hideout and so the house was the stash house. The house also revealed that the bad guys were doing more than merely selling guns. They were also selling secrets.

The team found a classified NSA file at the house and the file was about the Americans using Syrian refugees to lure out an Al-Qaeda leader. It was legal. It also unethical and yet somehow the gun runners found out about it and we're selling the information on it. Bishop used to work at the NSA. The team was expecting her to use her connections there to get answers.

Only Bishop hasn't been working there in over ten years. She says her contacts there were all out of date and so that's where Knight stepped in. Knight was bored. Her former team had all been killed off and she needed something to do. The team also needed someone with NSA contacts. They asked Knight to reach out to her friends and, while that was happening, the team continued their investigation.

They were still wondering how the bad guys got a hold of an NSA file when Director Vance came in. Vance had heard back from the NSA and the NSA believes that the person who passed on this file was Bishop herself. Bishop denied it of course. She said she never leaked information or risked her freedom to leak information and so the Director and Bishop spoke with Deputy Director Ellis of the NSA.

Ellis claims the data was breached ten years ago. Back when Bishop worked with the NSA and before the gun runners had entered the picture. This is why Ellis believes Bishop is guilty. She doesn't think Bishop has been set up and everyone else does. They knew Bishop. Bishop was going to be suspended while an investigation is carried out and so she couldn't work on her own case but this whole thing put the situation with Gibbs into perspective.

Bishop visited him after she too was suspended. She asked him if he was coming back and he pretended like he didn't know what she was talking about. Bishop was asking Gibbs if he was going to cut ties and run. She explained it to him and he just kept saying that it was in Vance's hands. Vance decides when Gibbs comes back.

Gibbs meanwhile was looking into a serial killer. He was approached by the journalist who wrote his story with the dog-killer and Marcie told him that she believes the person who killed her friend was still out there. Gibbs agreed to look at the case. He ran into similarities with another case and both he and Marcie soon learned that they were looking for a serial killer. This serial killer has killed four people already.

He or she targets people, ties them up, and then beats them to death with a hammer. Gibbs also noticed that he's being followed lately. He ran a test on his home and he found a bug that was planted in his basement. Gibbs warned Marcie about it. He even gave her the device to check her home and her office.

Gibbs wasn't thinking about NCIS. He wasn't even willing to show remorse to his team for his actions and what it cost them and so Bishop went directly from her chat with Gibbs to Vance's office. She confessed to him that she leaked the file. She leaked it because the NSA was using innocent refugees in order to get one bad guy and she found it to be wrong.

Bishop also didn't regret it. She quit her job at NCIS. She refuses to take that back and there was nothing anyone on the team could say to her that would make her change her mind. Bishop doesn't regret what she did. She won't even show remorse towards McGee and he thought he knew her. McGee wondered what else she was hiding. He was so lost after his conversation with Bishop that he sought out Gibbs.

Gibbs hadn't seen Bishop since she came clean about what she did. He was in fact told by Vance what happened and he hasn't reached out to anyone and he's still investigating his serial killer. Gibbs was busy. He and Marcie found out their serial killer has an itch for killing journalists and so they were tracking down their serial killer while the team was busting their case. They found their third gunrunner.

It was Mr. Murati. He confessed to selling guns and even storing them in one place. Only he had no idea where the file had come from. He had never seen it in his life and so Torres put together what really happened. Torres realized Bishop threw her career in the toilet because she was going under deep cover and it was possible for the CIA.

It's why Bishop has been taking extra training lately. Why she didn't want to go there with Torres and why she torched her career before she left. Bishop needed to be a disgraced federal agent for where she's going. And so Torres confronted her, but it was too late for them. She kissed him and she said goodbye as she began her new life.

As for Gibbs, he was out in his new boat when it exploded and there's no telling if he's alive or dead.

Summary: As the NCIS team searches for Gibbs after wreckage from his boat is discovered, they find out he was tracking a serial killer with journalist Marcie Warren, who wrote an exposé on him.

Gibbs was put on suspension. He was suspended after he attacked a suspect unprovoked and so Gibbs could have distanced himself from the world or get caught up in the boat he was making. He instead used his free time to help track down a serial killer. Gibbs had been helping Marcie Warren. She was the journalist that wrote a very honest expose on him and so she knew he was skilled.

She knew he catches killers for a living. She then turned to him for help because a friend of hers had been murdered and she had wanted to solve the crime, but as it happens, her friend's death had been one of many. The killer proved to be a serial killer. He or she was following the investigation into them and that's why he or she tried to kill Gibbs.

Gibbs had taken his new boat out on the lake. It blew up and he managed to survive. Gibbs suffered a wound to the stomach. He swam out of the lake and he went to the ground. He was in hiding. While he was hiding, he managed to cover his tracks. No one knew he survived the boat bomb and so authorities were looking for a body. The deputies called in NCIS to inform them about the bomb.

McGee and Torres went straight to the scene. They wanted to be there to identify the body if a body was ever found and something strange happened. They found a body. It just wasn't Gibbs. It was the body of a young woman and she looks like she had been in the water for months. Everyone thought the body of this woman was in contact with Gibbs.

The deputy at the scene even asked the team what their boss had been up to? They hadn't been able to answer the question because Gibbs pushed them away during his suspension and so NCIS took over. They claimed jurisdiction because Gibbs was one of their own.

They also claimed the new body because McGee suspected that couldn't be a coincidence she was found where someone tried to kill Gibbs and to make matters worse they were down two agents. They had been making do without Gibbs with McGee stepping up in the leadership department. At the time, it had been him and Torres and Bishop. Bishop was unfortunately no longer with them because she decided to join the CIA.

Bishop also torched her career at NCIS before she left. Which means there was no way of her coming back for the investigation. Not that she knew about it because she left town before the news was revealed and she left Jimmy in charge of selling her house. Both Torres and McGee were lost without her. They were also upset about in their own different ways and so they were at each other's throats while trying to find Gibbs.

It was great that Kasie came in when she did or else the guys would have still been yelling at each other. Kasie had given Gibbs a bug finder to help him track down his serial killer and that was technically the property of NCIS. Kasie made sure to put a tracker in the bug-finder.

It was currently turned off. They couldn't find where Gibbs is but they could locate where he was by checking the GPS about it and that gave them a place to start. The two agents also had a new member of their team to work with. They were now working with Special Agent Knight. She came off to leave to help them investigate the case and she was glad to be back to knocking down doors.

She had been on leave because she herself had been involved in an explosion that killed her whole team. Knight was an experienced agent. McGee asked for her personally and she was a good fit for the team. She knew what she was doing. With her joining them, the guys were able to find Marcie's office.

They went there. They found it ransacked and no trace of Marcie. It turns out Marcie was at NCIS Headquarters. She found them to ask about Gibbs. She had heard about the boat bomb and she wanted to know if he was okay. They hadn't been able to give her an answer. Only Gibbs later called them. Gibbs told them to give Marcie round-the-clock protection and he refuses to say where he was or what condition.

Gibbs's wounds had gotten treated by an elderly couple who found him not long after the explosion. The couple had mistrusted him at first because he told them "no cops" and it wasn't until a fake deputy came around asking if they saw anything that they realized Gibbs was telling them the truth. Someone was out to kill him. And that person is still looking for him.

Gibbs plans on finding that person first. The elderly couple told him about the trouble going on in the North Shore part of the lake and how their delivery woman disappeared after her boyfriend became involved in the North Shore. Gibbs had been heading up there anyways to look for Camila Silas. She disappeared. She also fit the serial killer's MO for their victims. She was last seen in the North Shore area of the lake and that's where Gibbs was going when his boat blew up. Gibbs headed out to that area to pick up where he left off. He ended up running into his team and Knight. They spoke with Marcie and she told them about Camila.

Gibbs and his team were in the area when the fake deputy showed up with his men. NCIS was able to surround them and arrest them. The fake deputy was a drug dealer. He stole the uniform from his brother who was an actual deputy and he went looking around for anyone who might have spilled information on his "business". He just didn't kill anyone. The serial killer was still out there and Gibbs wanted to go after him. He wanted to do it alone and McGee wouldn't hear it. He was going to help Gibbs whether he liked it or not. He said as much to Gibbs and Gibbs in his own way had accepted the offer.

Summary: While trying to find the serial killer Gibbs was after, the NCIS team discovers another person has been tracking the case as well.

The episode begins with the team hunting their serial killer. Gibbs and the journalist Marcie Warren were the first to realize there was a serial killer out there however they soon roped in Gibb's team at NCIS. NCIS Special Agents were trained investigators. They along with Palmer working on the case is great. It means they're one step closer to finding the serial killer and even Director Vance is working with them. He knows about the team working with Gibbs. He didn't mind it and he was ready to return Gibbs's gun and badge the second Gibbs is done playing dead. Gibbs was pretending to be dead. The serial killer realized that Gibbs and Marcie were investigating him and so he bugged their offices. He also tried to kill Gibbs by blowing up his boat.

Gibbs was lucky to survive. He only managed to do so because a veterinarian had been in the area and he had been able to patch up his wounds. But Gibbs wasn't ready to return to the land of the living. He wanted the serial killer to feel like he or she won. Gibbs thought the serial killer would get sloppy believing he's now safe from Gibbs and in a sense he had been right. The serial killer broke his pattern. He usually kills every hundred days and instead he killed sooner. He murdered Jennifer Hanover. She was covered in red tape and bludgeoned to death with a hammer. Just like the other victims. Hanover was married and so the team questioned her husband. They asked him when was the last time he saw his wife.

The husband told them that he last saw his wife when she went on her run. She has a smartwatch and she tended to thank him for it whenever she returned from her run. This time she didn't come back. The husband didn't get his thanks and so he filed a missing person report. He's been up ever since waiting to hear the news. Mr. Hanover's tip about the smartwatch proved helpful. Kasie was able to track the victim's movements thanks to the smartwatch and it showed where she was the last time the watch was active. Kasie sent the location to McGee. McGee traveled with both Torres and Knight and they called Gibbs on the way. The three agents broke into the building where the victim was last shown and they saw her killer escaping out the back.

Knight and Torres went after him. They managed to lose him and so their killer was turning out to be a ghost. He even used a fake ID to rent the apartment. The killer used a real picture of himself in that fake ID and that meant they could use the photo to search for him in the database. Only his face wasn't hitting any markers that Kasie could trace. She was also dealing with Fornell. Fornell came back to make sure that Gibbs was faking his death and so Kasie broke the good news. Fornell and Gibbs were great friends. Fornell later tracked down Gibbs and the two men got to talking. Gibbs discussed his investigation. He also informed his team that there was a second man in all the security photos of their killer.

The second man wore the same thing each time. He also wore a K-95 mask and so they didn't know what he looked like. They only knew where he was going to be. They tracked him down to an apartment building and then waited for him. They were soon able to arrest him once he came out. Once they had him under arrest, they tried to find out who he was. They ran facial recognition and checked his fingerprints. Nothing showed up in their system. He was a ghost or so he wanted people to believe. The man they arrested was FBI Special Agent Alden Parker. Parker was investigating the serial killer as well and he didn't want NCIS blowing his cover. He also didn't want to be working with Gibbs.

Gibbs was a suspended agent. He also had something of notoriety and not in a good way. He did punch an unarmed man unprovoked after all. Technically, the guy was a suspect. He also murdered dogs that weren't good enough for dog fights and so Gibbs beat him up. It got him suspended. He was also pretending to be dead and so Parker didn't want to work with him but Vance forced him to keep Gibbs in the loop. Gibbs was on the phone with Kasie when she found their suspect. The suspect was seen buying flowers near a cemetery and Gibbs went to the cemetery before Kasie could warn the others. The team found Gibbs with his gun on the suspect. They told him to stand and eventually did. Even if he really didn't want to.

Gibbs came close to shooting the guy. He only stopped because Parker was there to remind him not to cross that line and thankfully he didn't. The team was able to arrest their killer. They identified him as Paul LeMere. He had his real passport on him and he had over three hundred thousand dollars. He had it hidden in his mother's grave. The team brought LaMere back to headquarters and they tried to interrogate him only he refused to answer questions without his lawyer. LaMere gave them the lawyer's phone number. The NCIS legal team called the number and it was disconnected. LaMere was simply buying time. He told NCIS that they didn't have any evidence against him and he had been wrong.

They found his thumb drive. LaMere was being paid fifty grand after every murder and so he wasn't a serial killer killing for thrills. He was actually a contract killer. He was a former Navy. He got kicked out for bad behavior and so Knight mentioned his offshore accounts to him while she was questioning him. But he reacted badly. He threw into the glass and used the momentum to break out. Torres was following him and he almost had when LaMere found Kasie and took her hostage. He was threatening to kill her when Gibbs and all people took him down. He didn't kill him. He just wounded him. Gibbs got his revenge.

He also seems to care about Marcie as more than friends because he had gotten jealous when she said she was going away with a friend named Mitch. Only Mitch was short for Michelle.

Summary: Gibbs and Parker go on a road trip to find one of the serial killer's victims. Also, Agent Knight goes undercover at a large manufacturing company with ties to the murders.

The episode begins with the team caught the serial killer. However, he wasn't really a serial killer. He was a hitman and that meant each and every one of his victims was murdered because someone hired him to do it. The team has the hitman. They now just needed to find out who hired him. They couldn't find a link between the victims. The only thing they had was Paul LaMere. LaMere didn't want to go to prison without a fight and so he tried to escape. He took Kasie prisoner. He was then shot by Gibbs. Gibbs is an expert shooter. He managed to shoot LaMere at the exact spot to take him down and not kill him. LaMere is expected to make a full recovery. He therefore could be questioned by whoever hired him because what Kasie found just wasn't making sense. She found that the money that was being paid to LaMere after every hit was coming from the Pentagon and again that doesn't make sense.

There is no way the government would hire LaMere to kill a bunch of civilians. Torres and Knight traced the money back to the DOD and their financial department. The same department handles all the money coming from the military as well as military contractors. It wasn't the DOD that authorized payment to LaMere. It was one of their contractors. The specific contractor was Sonova Industries. Sonova Industries were doing their best to hide the payment to LaMere and so it couldn't be traced any further. The only and last option the team had for answers was LaMere himself. He woke up at the hospital. He was told he was facing execution if he didn't cooperate and so he started talking. He said there was the eighth victim. And this victim would explain who hired him.

The eighth victim was in fact the first victim. LaMere murdered this person first and it was once his boss saw him in action that he hired him to murder the other seven. LaMere was willing to take the authorities to the first victim, but he had a request. He requested that he be handed over to Gibbs. He wanted to take Gibbs personally to the body and it was his only demand. The team agreed to it. Gibbs was fine doing it. Parker, unfortunately, tagged along believing his expertise was needed and he drove both LaMere and Gibbs up the wall with his questions. Parker thought he could get to LaMere. Like maybe there was a person behind the killer mask. Parker did his best to question LaMere and eventually, LaMere found him a story. Gibbs's story.

LaMere told Gibbs story to Parker. He tried to claim it as his own and Gibbs called him out on it. There was this strange dynamic between Gibbs and LaMere. Parker picked him on it after he realized LaMere had been lying to him and so he told Gibbs. He said that maybe shouldn't be alone at any point in time and Gibbs responded by leaving Parker at a lunch stop. Gibbs drove off with LaMere. He wanted the killer to show him the victim and he didn't want Parker getting in the way. Gibbs as still angry about his boat blowing up. It wasn't even the attempt on his life that phased him. It was the fact that this man blew up his boat and so the two of them being alone together wasn't the best idea Gibbs ever had. Gibbs was technically still suspended. He couldn't afford to violate someone else's rights right now and still, he drove off with LaMere.

The rest of the team meanwhile tried to solve the case without LaMere's input. They tried to trace the money again and they went as far as to put malware onto Sonova Industries' computers. They were hoping to find an answer using the malware when they came across Jenn Hanover's widow. The widow wanted to know why the man who killed his wife wasn't behind bars. He had a source who told him that LaMere had been seen walking around and so McGee had to reassure the widow that LaMere was still in custody. He also said that his best man was on it. McGee and the team later learned that Gibbs ran off with LaMere and ditched Parker. Parker had no idea where they were going and neither did the team. And that was an issue because the team later found LaMere's first victim and Gibbs and LaMere were nowhere near it.

The team learned from their malware that Sonova Industries has been spying on people. They were using a program called Skylark to spy on seemingly everyday citizens and three of the victims were on that list. The team went looking for the fourth person thinking she might still be alive and instead they found her dead at her home. It turns out she had put her accounts on automatic payments. It's why her bills have been paid and why no one thought she was dead. Libby Alonak was a travel writer. She worked freelance and was often gone months without anyone noticing. She also lived alone. She didn't have a family. She was the perfect victim in a sense because LaMere killed her two years ago and literally no one noticed. It was also odd that she would be under surveillance or that someone would kill her.

The team needed to get to the bottom of why the company was spying on people. They tried to question the CEO of Sonova Industries and Sonia Eberhart was denying any involvement. She said she has over sixty thousand employees. Any one of them could be behind the surveillance and so Eberhart played it cool. She then let her lawyer-speak for her. He said that she had business out of town and that was the end of the interview. It took Gibbs calling them to give them the last clue to make them put everything together. Gibbs called because LaMere killed himself. LaMere made Gibbs drive to his dead wife's house and there he said goodbye to her grave and stepped on a landmine. LaMere is dead. Gibbs survived. Gibbs passes on LaMere's last words. He said "Naktok Bay".

It's an area in Alaska. It's where Sonova Industries plans on building a copper mine. They killed the four people under surveillance because these same people would have warned the world about the disastrous effects on the environment if a copper mine opened up and so they were killed along with several others to make it look like a random serial killer. Eberhart left their headquarters to fly to Alaska and so she's probably going to try and do damage control. And it was up to Gibbs to stop her.

Gibbs told McGee to pack up. They were heading to Alaska.

Summary: The path leads to Alaska, where Gibbs and McGee go on a very long road trip. It's still all about getting information on the serial killer, Paul Lemere.

FBI Special Agent Aidan Parker wanted to be the man to take down Gibbs. He got a warrant for his arrest because a suspect died in Gibb's custody and Parker wanted to blame him for it. However, Gibbs wasn't home when Parker used that warrant. Gibbs and McGee flew to Naktok Bay in Alaska. It was there that the copper mine was being open.

The same mine that the CEO of Sonova Industries was so obsessed with that she paid a hitman to eliminate anyone who might argue against said mine.

The copper mine was worth potentially billions and so that explains the obsession just not the lengths in which Sonja Eberhart was willing to go. She truly did hire a hitman to kill people. She stalked and spied on people who "might" have reacted negatively to the mine and that was a big might.

These people didn't do anything to her. They didn't have any concrete proof that they would argue against the mine and so Eberhart only knew about them through the illegal spying. She used her app to spy on everyday Americans. She then collected a list of people who might say something and she killed them before they could. But, and it's a big but, the team didn't have evidence to prove this.

They couldn't tie Eberhart to any of the payments to the hitman and she denied all knowledge of it. She's claiming that a rogue agent at her company must have hired Paul LaMere. She also said she would look into it and everyone knew that was a lie. She quickly flew off to Alaska right after meeting with NCIS.

Eberhart wanted to be there to break ground on the new copper mine. She didn't even wait a day or at least pretend to investigate who in her company was willing to kill to open that mine and so that confirmed to the team at least that she was involved. They just needed to prove it. Which is why Gibbs and McGee flew to Alaska. They wanted to speak with the first victim's family.

Libby Alonak was a native to the area and she was a journalist. An environmentalist journalist. She wrote a report that said Eberhart's initial environmental impact said the whole area would be devastated by the mine and she had an inside source. The team was now looking for that source. They wanted to prove Eberhart knew her mine was going to be destructive and she killed the person who figured it out.

It took Kasie less than a day to find out who the source was. It was a Marine Biologist and one of the victims. It seems him and her were the only ones killed with a clear motive of greed. Everyone else was either simply to kill any future adversary or to act as window dressing for a serial killer.

But there was never any serial killer. Just a hitman and the person who hired him. The team planned on getting the person who hired LaMere. They believe it was Eberhart. They later got their hands on the biologist's computer and they found out he wrote the original environmental report. They also learned that Eberhart signed off on it. This means she knew the true environmental impact and that she was motivated in eliminating the biologist.

Eberhart couldn't be the only one in the know. There had to be more people out there and the team went looking for them. They were sidetracked for a bit what with Parker showing up in Alaska. Gibbs called him because Gibbs remains a man of honor and he didn't want to be on the run. Only they convinced Parker to delay his arrest of Gibbs until they could take down Eberhart. They told Eberhart that they have their sights on her and they lured her into a trap to make her call her partner.

She called Phil Hanover. His wife's death had looked like just someone being killed to play up the serial killer angle and instead it was so much more. Hanover had property in Alaska. He sold it to Eberhart for millions and the deal would have gone bust if the real environmental impact had gotten out. And so she told him to get someone to fix it.

Hanover hired LaMere. LaMere killed those people and Hanover had his wife thrown in after she found out what he was doing. Hanover was the last link. He was arrested. Eberhart was arrested. Then Gibbs was arrested. Gibbs had been willing to turn himself in because he hadn't wanted McGee to be charged with aiding and abetting and so he told McGee to arrest him. McGee did his job. He arrested the fugitive.

McGee handed Gibbs over to Parker and Parker almost went through with the arrest in spite of his own protests to the matter. It seems Gibbs was only going to be arrested because he was known outlaw. The FBI has been waiting for Gibbs to mess up to arrest him. They hated that Gibbs sometimes colored outside of the lines and so they ordered Parker to arrest him.

But Parker later chose not to. Parker refuses to arrest Gibbs because he was going to deny Gibbs stole his car to drive off with the suspect and so that cost him job but he spoke with Fornell and he's willing to believe his old co-worker that Gibbs is one of the good guys. And so he let Gibbs go.

The FBI doesn't have an obstruction case without Parker's complaint and so Gibbs went fishing to celebrate.

McGee later flew back but he did it alone because Gibbs chose to stay in Alaska for a while. He said he felt peace there. A peace he hasn't felt since his family died.

Summary: The NCIS team investigates the death of a Navy commander whose body suddenly explodes before Jimmy can examine it.

Three juvenile delinquents were given a choice. Either they go to adult prison or they live outside for a week with a hard lesson in tough love. The three kids chose the great outdoors. However, their first night was interrupted when they ran into a man dying out in the woods. Petty Officer First Class James Bolton was dying of exhaustion and dehydration. He was still alive when the teens found him only he died before they could get help.

The body had shown evidence of trauma and the identification of the victim as being Navy personnel meant that NCIS was called in to investigate. The team went out to see the scene and they were joined by former FBI Special Agent Parker. Parker had been offered a job at NCIS. He turned it down because he said he wanted to take some time off and so he was just hanging around when Palmer came in with news about a "zombie".

Parker had never seen one of those before. He joined the team as they went to look at the body and it turns out the victim was called a zombie because that's what everyone thought he was when they first stumbled across him. Only he wasn't a member of the undead. He just didn't have enough energy to form the words "help" and so Parker had been disappointed but he was shaking it off when the case became interesting again.

The body exploded when he helped loaded it into the back of Palmer's car. The Medical Examiner's van was totaled. Nothing and no one else was hurt. Palmer called in Ducky for his assistance and Ducky helped him put together Bolton's body. Together they realized that the tragedy could have been much worse.

The explosion hadn't come from outside. It came from inside of Bolton's body. Bolton swallowed a bomb and the only reason he would have done that if it was he trying to smuggle a bomb pass detection. Bolton had been a suicide bomber. He had been killed before he could detonate that bomb but it doesn't change the fact that he had been dangerous and that people he was working with can also be dangerous.

Bolton was military intelligence. He worked at SATCOM. It's the satellite networks that the military uses and the military as well as their weapons program would be lost without SATCOM. Parker was familiar with the network. He was also asked by a General to lead the joint task force run out of NCIS into any remaining suicide bombers.

Kasie also found out that Bolton was selling his services online as a hacker when he got a partner a couple months back. It was after he had had taken a partner that Bolton started to become political and so finding his partner was imperative. The team looked into anyone else that might have been in on the plot and connected to Bolton. They found out he visited a federal stenographer before he death. They spoke to the man and he had been gob smacked.

He had no knowledge of Bolton. Bolton pretended to be his cable guy to get into his house and the two talked over lemonade. The man claims not have revealed any important information. He was one of the few men and women who were allowed into high security federal buildings to take notes and the job is serious to him.

He couldn't even reveal to NCIS where he was going to be working soon. He told them that they needed a subpoena before he could release any information and so the team worked on one. In the meantime, Kasie made another breakthrough. She found out that Bolton was paying for his bomb making materials by rigging the lottery and that he's won the lottery four times. The latest time was an hour after his death.

A woman went in with the winning ticket. Her name is Lillian Beck and Kasie suspect she could be Bolton's mysterious partner because she was the one collecting the money. Kasie passed on the tip to Parker. She also told him that she was willing to work with him as long as he remembers that in the future she was going to need someone who shoots first and asks questions later when her life is on the line.

Kasie had heard about what Parker said earlier. Parker had been talking about when LaMere took her hostage and was almost killed by Gibbs. Parker thought they should have risked the hitman. Kasie therefore was telling Parker that her life was always going to be more important than any hitman. Parker understood Kasie's request. He agreed to prioritize her and they moved. Parker arrested Beck. He brought her in for questioning. She revealed she works for a lottery company that handles thirteen states' lotteries but that she couldn't keep winning herself. She and Bolton were convincing people to claim the lottery winnings for him. The stenographer had also lied to the team. He did know Bolton and he paid Bolton twenty grand to hire a girl he met at a bus stop. Her name is Helen.

Helen gave the guy her phone number. The guy lost the number and so he paid Bolton to find her. He only met Bolton because Bolton really did pretend to be the cable guy. Bolton's explosives turned out to be hidden inside of him during surgery. The people who hired him to contact Roy had used Bolton to trial run a bomb but he died before the bomb could go off and so they fixed the kinks and called in the stenographer.

They tricked Roy into thinking he needed to update his pacemaker. They then put the bomb inside of him and he was supposed to go after he taken notes for a star witness in a mob boss's case. The mob boss had already gotten rid of four other witnesses and the star witness was the last on the list.

Palmer and Ducky got the bomb out of the stenographer. The case against the mob boss went ahead and attempted murder was now added to the charges. And to top it all off, Roy ran into Helen at NCIS. She was in the military and she had been waiting for Roy to call and so it's a good thing they met.

Parker in the meantime considered the job offer to replace Gibbs and he's seriously considering it.

Summary: NCIS investigates the death of a beloved Navy commander who trained some of the top athletes in the country.

The body of Navy Admiral Henry Davis was found early morning. He was beloved admiral. He was also known for training some of the top athletes in the country and so his death had been shocking. Davis trained Navy athletes who compete in both military and world events. These athletes were double threats because they also had to maintain active duty while performing in events.

Davis was training one young man, but the kid barely out of high school had overslept and he thought his coach was going to reprimand him for it only to find his coach dead. Davis was killed in his office. NCIS was called in to investigate and they searched the crime scene. They found out that Davis had a hidden compartment in his desk. The hidden compartment held a bag and inside there was a bag full of steroids.

The steroids were the performance enhancement kind. Davis was no longer an athlete himself and he only trains one person at a time. The team came to suspect he was acquiring drugs for Petty Officer Felix Cross. They asked Cross to come in and they also demanded that he pee in a cup.

The team also spoke with the parents of Davis's last athlete he worked and they had to do so because the last athlete died. He was in a car accident. The other guy was drinking and driving. Jamie died about a year ago and Davis was still in contact with the family. Davis even called them two days before he died. He was checking with them like he normally does and Jamie's father said he sounded distracted.

This aligns with what Cross told them. Cross said he saw Davis getting into a fight with another Petty Officer by the name of Kyle Seward and that he had never seen his coach lose his temper before then. The team looked into Seward. They found out that he was a wrestler who put on a lot of muscle in a year. The team suspected he was either using steroids or selling it and so they had a sting.

Torres pretended to be a buyer. He got Seward to open up to him and it turns out Seward wasn't selling drugs. He was selling military athlete's old clothes. He apparently makes a lot of money from selling used items that belong to celebrities. Davis found out about it and he forced him to take down his seller's page or else he would be reported to his CO.

Seward did what Davis wanted. He also dealt with some nasty backlash from his customers. There was one particular person known as NavyFan92 who was really nasty and wanting the old business back up and running. But the team tracked her down. They found her at her secret lab. Her name is Dr. Astrid Fellows and she almost blew them all up because she thought McGee and new team lead Parker were secretly Chinese spies.

Fellows was arrested. She was brought in and she revealed that she was buying up athlete clothing because she wanted to get their DNA. Fellows wanted to create a test to determine gene manipulation and her idea could potentially mean millions. Its why she got upset when getting their DNA was now so much harder thanks to Davis. And luckily for her, she had an alibi for Davis's murder.

Fellows has footage of herself working in her lab at the time of death. She wasn't the killer and that put their case back at dead end. Which didn't help Cross. Cross confronted Seward because he suspected that he killed coach and was wrong and walking on edge. Torres tried to help but Cross didn't want to accept help just yet and so he and the others focused on the case. They were trying to figure out where to go from here when Kasie came in.

Kasie said that Fellows's research held the truth about who was doping and the truth the only person who was doping was the late Petty Officer Jamie Anderson. Anderson was dead. Only he still has two parents who would do anything to preserve his memory.

Anderson's father had been the one doping him. His son was a great athlete who held world records and his things were recently found by the maintenance crew. Davis collected the items. He found the steroids and he informed Anderson's father that he would have to come forward with what he found.

This would mean that Anderson would lose the two records in his name. His father couldn't let that happen and so he begged Davis not to come forward and he ultimately Davis when he refused. Anderson's father said his son's memory is the only thing he has left. He didn't want to lose it.

The father was arrested and the team adjusted to Parker being their new boss. Parker even came up with an idea to help Cross. They had Cross race against Torres and Torres was going to help him train from now on.

Summary: NCIS investigates the death of a man on a cruise ship whose body is discovered in the ship's sauna by none other than McGee's mother-in-law, Judy.

A body was found on a cruise ship. The victim was Navy Commander Roger Burrows and his death was suspicious. He was found dead wearing a tux in the sauna. NCIS were called in to investigate when the ship docked in their backyard and the team were quick to notice signs of a fight. Burrows was also stabbed twice in the neck. There were signs of blood on the wall and it was clear someone tried to wipe it up.

Burrows was therefore killed. Someone incapacitated him and then threw him in the sauna. But that's not why this case interested McGee. This case interested him because the body was found by his mother-in-law and he hadn't known she was taking a cruise. She hid this from her daughter. McGee's wife. She later said that Delilah would have worried about her if she mentioned the cruise and that's why she was trying to hide it until this happened.

McGee spoke with his mother-in-law. Judy said she found the victim by coincidence and at first he believed her. He had no reason not to. McGee called his wife to mention her mother was involved with one of his cases and she asked him to keep an eye on her. He of course agreed. But Judy was lying to him. She claimed she didn't know the victim and she did. Burrows had stood out on the ship.

He was asking questions about security and he got people to talk to him by telling them he did security for the Navy. He failed to mention he was an active Commander or that he had just gotten off a ship. The team thought it was odd that a man who spent months on a ship would then take a cruise in his downtime, but it was clear from the onset that Burrows was up to something.

Burrows for one had surveillance in his room. He was recording something and Torres thought it was the other guests. He suspected that Burrows a Peeping Tom. They couldn't prove it one way or another because someone took out the SD card and so they had no idea what Burrows was recording. The only person who could possibly tell them was the person's whose fingerprints were found all over his room.

It turns out the fingerprints belonged to Judy. She lied about not knowing Burrows and was secretly sleeping with him. They met on the cruise. They hit it off right away and so she spent time in his room. Judy claims not to know anything else. She also didn't know who was trying to kill her and unfortunately that part was in fact true.

Someone bombed Judy's condo. Judy wasn't hurt or anything and she wasn't even mad about the condo. She said she needed a reason to redecorate. Judy had to be taken into protective custody. They had her stay at McGee's condo and he sent his twins to go stay with his sister. But Judy and Delilah's constant bickering had him going insane. Judy wasn't taking her situation seriously. She wanted to invite people over for book club and she ordered takeout. McGee was just feeling grateful for Parker showing up when there was an incident with the delivery guy. The delivery guy was in fact Judy's former fiancé and he borrowed the delivery's jacket and hat because he wanted to get close to Judy.

Harold was his name. Harold wanted Judy back and if he couldn't get her back then he wanted the bag back. The bag was a gift he bought for Judy. It was quite expensive and he wanted to sell it on eBay. Judy gave back the bag. She emptied it and found a letter for NCIS. It was written in Burrows's handwriting with words NCIS on it and inside of it there was a Joker's card. The team didn't know what it meant but they knew what it was connected to. Burrows had went on the ship because not that long ago his niece died under suspicious circumstances on the same cruise line and he was investigating it. His niece was Allison Howell. Howell worked on the ship and supposedly went overboard a month ago. And there wasn't an investigation.

There is never really an investigation when people or go overboard or simply go missing. There's about twenty people that disappear off of cruise ships every year and there's no investigation. But Howell's family wanted justice. They were suing and Burrows wanted to give them answers. He went on the cruise to just see if their security was lax. What he found instead was evidence of something worse. The Joker card had everyone suspecting the magician, but he was just selling drugs with Howell and he didn't kill her or Burrows. He has five hundred witnesses proving he didn't kill Burrows. The Joker card was clue. It was what was on the card that was clue. There was toxic waste found on the card and no one had any idea what it was doing on the cruise ship for seniors.

The toxic waste couldn't generally be found on a ship. Its more what companies would generate and couldn't dump and so someone was using the cruise ship to illegally dump toxic waste into the ocean. Only there was an issue. The CEO of the cruise line had pressured the Coast Guard into releasing the ship and so the team had three hours to solve the case but luckily they had Judy. Judy saw them watching security footage of cargo being loaded and she said that one of the barrels of ginger ale never made it on the ship. It was her favorite brand. She asked the ship if they sold it and they didn't because they said they didn't sell brand on the ship and so Judy's clue broke the case. The illegal toxic waste was being transported in fake ginger ale tanks.

They traced it back to a toxic waste company who spilled on the security officer of the ship. The security officer then turned on the captain and it was Captain Finch who killed both Howell as well as Burrows. The team were able to close their case. They also stopped the dumping of toxic waste.

Judy later got back together with her ex and they were going to Africa for a safari.

Summary: NCIS investigates the case of a Navy reservist whose body is found in a beat-up car at the end of a gun range. Also, Kasie weighs the pros and cons of buying a gun.

A body was found at a shooting range. The victim was Navy Reservist Lt. Victor Bateson. Bateson's remains were found in one of the junk cars at the end of the range and he was shot multiple times. The team came to suspect that Bateson got drunk before wandering around. His remains smelled of liquor and it was theorized that he went into the backseat of the old beat up car to rest. He probably didn't wake in time to hear the gunshots and that's what killed him. Bateson was shot. But he wasn't killed at range.

Palmer looked at the body and he determined that Bateson was killed elsewhere. His body had just been dumped at the shooting range. The killer most likely dropped him off there so that hide the real bullet amongst the many and it was working. The only one to find the killing shot was by connecting each bullet to the guns on the range. And the one that's missing will be the murder weapon.

The team also looked into Bateson. He wasn't a regular at the range nor did he sign in that day or the night before and so the team didn't know why he went to the range. They just know he did. He went there and he died. The question now is why? Bateson didn't have much by the way of family but there was an ex-wife and nine times out of ten its usually the ex. The team went to the ex-wife's home. They ended up running into Kasie there. Kasie was a part of a group of women looking to buy a gun and she later admitted to Knight that she hasn't been the same since the assassin held her hostage. Kasie has been trying to get better. She was taking martial arts classes and now she was thinking of buying a gun.

The ex-wife hasn't been in much contact with Bateson before his death. She did know that he was working at an Expo Center and that he thought it was safer than his normal shifts at the bar. At the Expo Center, Bateson has to deal with gun shows and pageants. It was better than dealing with out of control drunks that takes a swing at you and he got to help out friends. Bateson helped a young woman get a prime spot to sell her guns. She was great in that spot and unfortunately others were complaining about it. The expo was holding a gun show. Everyone had guns and so everyone had to be questioned. The team move through the group by first starting with the guy complaining. They then moved onto people who had to be escorted out of the venue.

The team tracked down the guy. They spoke to him and he said it was Bateson who got rough with him as he was being escorted out. He also revealed he saw Bateson making out with his girlfriend. It turns out the girlfriend works for Bateson's ex-wife. The team had even spoken to her earlier and she hadn't mentioned the relationship. Doris said she withheld the information because she hadn't wanted her boss to find out. If her boss learned Doris was sleeping with the woman's ex-husband, she might find herself out of a job. It would also ruin the friendship. Bateson, his ex-wife, and Doris were all friends. They all got along. Not even the ex having to pay Bateson alimony got in the way because Bateson was a good guy and he was working two jobs just to get off the alimony.

And him being in a relationship with Doris would mean he has another reason to end alimony. He might have been looking to marry again and so his ex-wife doesn't have a motive to kill him. She instead would have been thrilled to find out he was moving on. Neither the ex-wife nor the current girlfriend killed Bateson. The gun that killed him belonged to a classic weapon from the early 1900s. There was a guy selling weapons like that at the expo and so the team later asked him where he was the night Bateson was killed. He said he was selling his guns. He also said that it wasn't his guy that killed Bateson because the last gun he had liked that had been sold days before the murder. But the team couldn't just take this guy at his word.

They tracked down the man he sold the gun to. It was actually Bateson's other boss at the bar and unfortunately the bar owner was the killer. He noticed a missing three hundred dollars. He confronted Bateson and Bateson got mad. He got out of control. His boss was worried and so he pulls out his gun and accidentally fires. And funnily enough, the guy found the three hundred dollars a couple of days after the murder.

He had misplaced it and accused and then killed an innocent man.

Later, Kasie went to the shooting range with a friend and she was starting to enjoy herself.

Summary: When a hotshot financial advisor is found shot at a naval station, NCIS investigates the case by interviewing the victim's three-dimensional hologram of herself, which she created before her death.

The body of Sandra Holdren was found at the Naval Station in Norfolk. Holdren was a civilian. She was dead for an apparent gun wound to the head and so it was definitely murder. She was killed on Naval property. Thereby making her death a case for NCIS. But what they couldn't figure out was why she was there? Holdren is a hotshot financial advisor. She doesn't have a loved one in the Navy and that same station recently spotted someone spying on a children's soccer game nearby. They just didn't know why Hol-dren was involved with that if it was her. They also didn't know who would want her dead enough to use a silencer on her and the silencer was indicating some premeditation in the murder. And so the team visited her home to talk with the people who supposedly knew her best.

They spoke with her butler. But the man she loved as family said they could speak to Holdren directly. Holdren had created an interactive hologram of herself with her memories and her personality. If they wanted to know who killed her, they had to ask her hologram. The hologram looks just like her. It moves like her too. It was a bit trippy. Holdren created because she wanted to leave something behind for her daughter and grandson if anything ever happened to her. The autopsy revealed she was dying. She therefore created the hologram knowing it would be needed. She just didn't know how soon. The team questioned the hologram. They got her to reveal she was sent a threatening letter and she refused to say what the letter was about.

The letter also didn't reveal what it was about. Someone simply wrote "you'll pay for what you did". The team asked her co-workers and got nowhere. They then turned to Holdren's daughter Ruby. Ruby hasn't spoken to her mother in years. She hated her mom. She wasn't even sad about her death and so she happily told them what her mother did. Her mother was the female Bernie Madoff. She stole millions from her clients. She was tried and her amazing lawyer got her off without any jail time and that left behind a lot of angry people. Knight and Torres went back to the hologram. They asked Holdren about the embezzlement. She admitted that she was so sorry about what she did and that it was the biggest regret of her life because it cost her Ben.

Holdren said she blames herself for Ben killing himself. Ben was her late son who drove off a bridge in a car accident that only involved him and he left behind a son. A son that was given to his sister. Ruby raises her nephew as if he was her own child and the hologram was so proud of her for doing so. Holdren also swore she turned around her life. The team spoke with her lawyer and she made restitution. She paid back everyone she ever stole from. Holdren truly did regret what she did. She changed around her life and she wanted her family back. The lawyer said that her victims had no reason to be angry with her and that the only person he was concerned about was her butler. Geoffrey had gotten angry after he found out he was being left out of the will.

Summary: NCIS is called in when Navy Chief Warrant Officer Rafi Nazar is suspected of trying to sell stolen classified Navy software used to pilot combat drones.

The military police went looking for Navy Chief Warrant Officer Rafi Nazar. He was wanted for espionage and it seems he did a runner. He didn't tell anyone where he went. Not even his poor fiancé. Kay had no idea that her fiancé had stolen the master key to all American Naval drones and once told she refused to believe it. Kay said that Nazar is a good man. He would never betray his country. He also didn't act suspiciously before his disappearance. He went for a drive the night before and he was there that morning to make Kay breakfast. The team was brought in on this manhunt. They used their resources to track down Nazar's last known movements and they went to the location to see if Nazar returned.

The team didn't find him. But they did find a body. The victim appeared to be shot by a 9mm and Nazar does have a weapon like that in his possession. He was a known gun user. They searched the home he shares with Kay and they found the weapon missing. The team therefore came to the conclusion that Nazar killed the victim. They just didn't know the victim's name or his connection to Nazar. It also didn't help Nazar's defense that he was missing. Innocent people don't run or hide. Nazar was originally Serbian. His family was known to be a part of the Serbian conflict that killed many and so he could be a plant.

Nazar could have come to the country with the sole intention of infiltrating the military. Or at least that was the team's working theory as they continued to look into him. Nazar met his fiancé nine months ago and so she hasn't even known him for long. She said they got engaged so quickly because when you know you know. Only that rush into things could explain why Kay never suspected anything was wrong and so the team asked people who should know Nazar better than anyone. They asked the men and women that he worked with.

None suspected that Nazar would turn traitor. There was this one guy who suspected Nazar wasn't what he seemed but it was clear that guy was just a racist and he doesn't trust anyone with the ability to speak "foreign". His words. The military police also ran a forensic analysis and they determined that the hack to get the master key had come from Nazar's computer. Nazar later contacted his fiancé. He told her that he was innocent and he asked to meet up. The team was wire-tapping her phone. They heard the conversation and confronted her.

They told her that Nazar couldn't be trusted. They also mentioned that packing their passports wasn't going to help either of them get out of the country and so Kay listened. She agreed to help them. She went to the designated spot to meet Nazar and, before he could get close, she yelled at him to run because it was a trap. Nazar then ran off. The team chased him and lost somewhere down an alley. They went looking for him. They couldn't find him. They later learned that he sought asylum at the Afghanistan embassy and that chatter on the dark web says the master key was just sold for free.

Everyone assumed that Nazar sold the master key for a cause. Not for the money. They couldn't touch him at the embassy and so they threatened him instead. They told him that either he gives himself up or his fiancé was going to be charged as an accessory to his crimes. Nazar apparently really does love Kay. He gave himself up and he was saying goodbye to her when he was shot. Someone shot him from a car before driving away. Nazar was being rushed to the hospital when the EMT confirmed that he'll make it and so Parker asked that they be taken to NCIS instead.

Parker claimed that they have a doctor on staff. He failed to mention the doctor was in fact a coroner and so Nazar was taken to NCIS headquarters. He was interrogated. He was questioned for everything and that's when it came out. Nazar wasn't a traitor. Kay was. She used his face and access card to get the information for the master key. She wasn't innocent. She'd been playing Nazar the whole time and she had almost killed him too. The Navy was able to deactivate the master key and so now it was of no use. She and the domestic terrorists couldn't plant a jihad on American soil.

She and her coconspirators were all going down. Not that it will help Nazar much. He still gets looks in spite of his name being cleared and the nightmare will never truly be over for him.

Later, McGee and Palmer were informed that the money in their accounts came from Gibbs. He donated to their kids' college funds. It was a college fund that he first began for his daughter Kelly and he kept adding money to it even after she died. And so since then, Gibbs has been helping agents with their own kids' college funds.

Production Code: 19011
Summary: After a civilian research vessel in the North Atlantic picks up a small boat of wounded Navy officers, NCIS arrives on the ship and is forced to hide after discovering terrorists on board.

Director Vance received a rare call from his bosses. It was about a distress call received from a civilian vessel and that was carrying environmental research scientists. The vessel was boarded by a black ops team that asked them to contact the Navy. The Navy needed to be contacted because a member of this team was killed and the death needed to be investigated. However, NCIS wasn't told what the operation entailed. They didn't even know why the black ops team was in that area and Vance suspected that his immediate boss wasn't even in the loop. He would have liked more information but he was willing to work with what he got and he still gave it to Parker's team to investigate.

Parker does amazing work with his team. He wasn't quite ready to call them his team because he still thought of them as Gibbs's team and so he was working on that while he works on this case. McGee stayed back to discuss the case with their tech department. The techies were called Tech Trolls by everyone. They were brilliant. They just also happened to be very smug and dismissive and no one really likes them. No one other than McGee. McGee used to get along great with these guys and so he was surprised when they treated him like crap when he went go talk to him. He didn't know what he did wrong.

McGee was still figuring this out as the rest of his team went to the ship. They went to the ship looking to investigate the dead body and instead they walked into an ambush. The black ops team had taken everyone onboard hostage. They also wanted to do the same to NCIS as well and the team didn't know why. None of them knew why. They didn't have grievances with the men shooting at them and their means of an escape went up in smoke when their helicopter pilots were shot. One pilot survived. The other did not. They also ran out of bullets pretty quickly. The agents ran off with their injured pilot and they tried to formulate a plan.

Back at headquarters, McGee was with Vance when they again got a call from the bosses. The woman in charge said that there wasn't a secret mission in the area and that the person who called it in didn't exist. It was a false flag operation. There were people pretending to be Navy. McGee and Vance's concern was naturally for the team and Palmer. They wanted them rescued. The team meanwhile was doing the best they could and they came across members of the crew. Some of the crew that survived the taking of the ship had called them terrorists. They overheard them saying how they wanted a high value target on the ship.

It also became clear after the terrorist managed to grab Torres and Knight that they wanted off the ship. They got whatever they came for and they needed the keys to the helicopter to get off the ship. Torres and Knight were tortured. They couldn't get any other information and so Parker saw them like that. He was using the air vents to get around. He was able to talk to his agents. He found out what the terrorists wanted and put a plan in action. He let them find the keys to the helicopter. He then waited until they while they gathered people and he hid in the helicopter. When that helicopter took off with the terrorists, Parker had been with them.

The terrorists took the cell phone jammer with them. The rest of the team was able to call for help and they freed the remaining members of the ship's crew. Once the two sides were talking to each other with both headquarters and the ship now free to discuss the terrorists — they were able to identify the three terrorists that tried to kill everyone. They were former members of a private military contractor. They were fired after being caught stealing. They now steal for profit and it seems they were always after the helicopter. Not anything onboard. The military grade helicopter was expensive. And anyone could be in the market for it.

Parker helped them find the terrorists by playing the theme song to the original Star Trek on the International distress line. His team eventually figured out it was him because they knew he was a huge fan of the original series and they tracked where the signal was coming from to arrest all of the terrorists. But Vance told Parker he shouldn't be taking such risks and Parker's response was that he would have done anything to get his team off that ship. And while it may have taken a while, Parker was finally thinking of them as his team.

Summary: When the body of a Navy lieutenant is discovered missing an eye, the NCIS investigation leads to the world of cage fighting.

Lt Junior Grade Kane Lantz was found at a waste management site. Some sanitation workers were dropping off their load when a body turned out to be hidden in there and it shocked the hell out of them. But Lantz's body was at least. Not many garbage dumped bodies usually are and Parker and his team were alerted to the case. They went there to investigate. Torres took longer than everyone else to travel to the site because he had a late night and he needed a coffee break. The others were commentating on it when some DIA Special Agents arrived. They took over the case and NCIS found themselves forced off the case.

Or that's what happened at first. DIA wanted the whole case because Lantz works in Naval Intelligence by locating problems in their security and correcting it. But Lantz tripped up by bringing a classified laptop home with him. The laptop is currently missing. DIA believed it could have been taken by someone using his eye to unlock the laptop and so Parker managed to get them the murderer. He and his team wouldn't investigate where the laptop went. They would just look for the murderer and if they happen to find the laptop then they can take the win. And so they got the team got to keep their case.

It wasn't long before they found something fishy in Lantz's bank statements. Lantz was taking out more money than he was putting it and it was all because of Alex Russo. Russo was Lantz's foster brother when they were kids. Lantz's parents died when he was seven. He was bounced around several foster homes before aging out and by then he was going to college on a ROTC scholarship. Lantz had a rough as a kid. Its why he stayed close to his brother and its why he constantly tried to bail him out of trouble. He kept giving him money. He never said no. Russo began feeling guilty and he got a loan for someone else.

Russo naturally defaulted on the loan because he was a trouble with a capital "t". Some guys with an Eastern European accent then demanded that he get his brother's laptop or they were going to kill him. Russo agreed to it. He got them the laptop. His brother found out about it and, rather than report Russo, he tried to fix it. He tried to get the laptop back. Lantz appeared to be tortured. His eyeball was still missing and that could be because his laptop needed his eye to unlock and so the team went looking for their killer. Kasie was able to trace some untreated feathers found on the victim to a warehouse.

The warehouse was checked out. It was out of the way. It also had a cage inside that looks like it was being used for an underground fight club and so Lantz might not have been tortured. He could have just been hurt by taking part in one of the fights. But the DNA found all over the victim came back didn't have a match with anyone in the system. Kasie had to use the touch DNA to create what the suspect possibly looked like and they had Russo confirmed it with the man that threatened him for the laptop. Knight was later able to use the photo of what he could look like to find a man in his car and he was identified as Maxim Dhoval.

The name was fake. Only the team was still able to trace him. They arrested him at his work and he told them to make it look good because he couldn't afford for it to get out that he willing talking to cops. After his arrest, Maxim confessed that he and his wife heard about a great opportunity to come to America without going through the whole process. They took the offer. They made it to the United States and then they were forcibly separated. Maxim was made to fight in the ring. He was also told if he refuses that they would kill his wife. This illegal fight club was in fact a front for human trafficking.

Maxim said that Lantz was told that he could get back his laptop if he fought for it. Maxim was told to kill him in the ring and that's what happened. The bad guys never planned on letting Lantz go. They needed his eye to access his laptop. So, they planned on killing him the whole time. Maxim didn't care about what happened to him. He just wants them to find and rescue his wife. Maxim gave them information on the fight club. The team then used that to arrange for Torres and Special Agent Sawyer to fight. They wanted them to fight each other. They instead got Torres paired up with some rando. And the rando was a beast in the ring.

He almost killed Torres. Torres has been off this whole time. Its like he checked out and everybody has noticed it. Torres even said to McGee that it doesn't matter if he dies in the ring. There was no one left to care. McGee said he cares and later Torres was able to defeat his opponent. After he did so, they were able to bring down the big boss of the human trafficking and they reunited Maxim with his wife. He doesn't have to worry about any jail sentence. He was clearly coerced and the team was able to prove it.

They recovered the laptop. It wasn't used to get to spy on Americans and later Palmer talked to Torres. He got to heart of why Torres has been acting out. Torres was feeling abandoned. His love interest left. His father left. He felt like he had no one and Palmer was there to remind him that he still has the team.

Summary: Investigating the death of an intruder at Quantico, Jimmy and Kasie are exposed to a deadly bio-toxin. The NCIS team calls on Doctor Carol Wilson for help as they race to find the antidote. Torres tries to distract Jimmy's daughter, who came to spend the day with her dad.

The episode begins with a dead soldier involved in a car accident. Former Army Phillip Hanch was wearing his gear and he was in fact near the Quantico compound when he came out of nowhere and got hit by a car. Everything else got smooshed as well. Hanch's cell phone was crushed. The only thing that survived the car accident was his flask and everyone prayed that he had one last sip before being flattened. But it is curious why he was at the compound. Hanch is no longer serving since he was honorably discharged back in 2014 and he hasn't held down a real job since. He's been investing in cryptocurrency. It's been going so bad that he was over fifty thousand dollars in credit card debt and he was living in reduced means.

Hanch's only family was his ex-wife. She left after she lost him to conspiracy theories and that's why he got kicked out of the army. There was therefore no reason why he should have been wearing the gear much less be near Quantico. Palmer's autopsy was also short because it was clear the cause of death was the military truck that ran him over, but Palmer still wanted to test the flask to see what was Hanch carrying and so he brought it to Kasie. They were testing it when the call came in to not open the flask. It was a little too late because they had already done so. They also became trapped when the building went into protective mode.

The liquid in the flask wasn't alcohol. It was a biotoxin. Once the system detected it was in the building it locked down everything and it became a problem for everyone. Palmer's daughter had come to work with him. She was suspended from school for fighting and so she was hanging around at the office when Kasie's lab sealed itself off. Victoria who is not so little anymore had asked if everything was okay. They told her it was. They said that her father was in lockdown, but that she could still see him and she could. She had to see him through a glass door, but it worked and the preteen was calmed down.

It also helped that she got to talk to the doctor they brought in for his occasion. Dr. Carol Wilson was legendary in biotoxins and she told Victoria that there was nothing to worry about, but she was lying and she later told the rest of the team as much. She told them that time was critical. She tried to get into contact with an expert at the CDC and she couldn't reach him and so they video-called the CDC. They spoke with a guy there who was more worried about protecting his paycheck than reporting the fact that their researcher in bioweapons has gone missing. It turns out the toxins that were used were created in Russia. And their doctor had created a cure for it because it was feared it would be in a domestic terrorist attack.

But no one knew about Hanch. Hanch joined a collective online that was being run by a guy who called himself the Raven and he concocted a plan to cause a "revolution". There was no telling if he was American or not yet this man convinced Americans to turn on their own country and so this Raven was dangerous. The team went looking for him. They couldn't find Dr. Pastov because they suspected he had been kidnapped. The only way to find the cure was to find the Raven and so they looked. They investigated his online profile. His movements. They found people that were dumb enough to listen to the guy and it turns out no one knew it was a terrorist attack. They all thought they were dumping laxatives into government personnel's water supply.

Or at least that's what one guy thought. Its why he helped. That and the fact that he was getting paid in cryptocurrency to help the Raven. The dummy even left plans to what he thought was a prank to be found and so that's how the team learned that the Raven was planning a series of attacks. They split up. They all went to separate locations with the military adding as back up and they were later able to free Pastov. Pastov was asked for the antidote to the bioweapon. He created one. It got brought to Palmer and Kasie and the two were saved from dying. But it had been a close call for them.

Both Palmer and Kasie almost died. Kasie was considering a change of job earlier and so Palmer thought she would be leaving after this however she decided to stay on. She signed her new contract for the next five years. And so the only thing that took away from the occasion was the sad truth that she didn't capture the Raven.

They caught everyone but the Raven and so he's free to do this again.

Summary: As NCIS investigates the cause of death of a reservist Navy Seal surgeon, they're forced to bring Vance's daughter, Kayla, who recently trained with NCIS, to help with a highly dangerous mission.

The episode begins with NCIS Director Vance, who has a daughter. Her name is Kayla. She just finished training and she was joining NCIS as a Special Agent. But the first year on the job is boring. The new probies tend to get assigned cases and that especially went for Kayla with her father in charge. He wanted her to be safe. He didn't want her to handle the big cases and so Vance nominated Torres to be her handler. He basically wanted Torres to babysit his daughter. It was up to Torres to make sure Kayla didn't get hurt.

It was also her job to ensure that she learns on the job. And so that's why their first case was a simple case of a heart attack.

The team was assigned to Dr. Tom Masuda's death. He was a military doctor who seemingly suffered from a heart attack during surgery and he had been the surgeon. The patient he was working on had thankfully survived. But Masuda did not. The other doctors and nurses had tried to revive him to no avail. He died. His death was handed over to NCIS and Vance personally assigned the case to Parker's team because he thought it was clean cut. It wasn't. The heart attack might have been a murder and so Kayla's first case wasn't boring. It was a murder investigation. The team learned that Masuda seemed to have been poisoned.

Masuda's body was taken for autopsy. While the team waited for the results of that, they continued working on the case and recreated Masuda's final hours. It turns out Masuda was a popular guy. he got along with everyone and they all seemed to like him. But someone did leave a threatening message on his cell phone. The message was linked back to Smitty Hastings. He was a loan shark and he later revealed that he loaned Masuda money because Masuda was obsessed with betting. As in he had a serious problem. Hastings who also went by the nickname of barracuda hadn't killed Masuda.

Hastings wanted his money back. He wouldn't have killed Masuda as long as he thought there was hope. He also had an alibi. He was British and he had just flown in from England because he had to leave the country for a funeral. Hastings, therefore, wasn't their killer, but he did reveal that Masuda was dating someone and that she became a stalker more or less after Masuda tried to end things with her. Right after Hastings gave them this tip, Kayla tried to tell him to be on guard. It was silly and she was a newbie who wasn't used to working with underworld types. Her father later chastised her for it as well as punished her for leaving the car after she was told not to. He told her she put her team at risk.

Vance also took her away from active duty. He assigned her to the lab to work with Kasie. As she was there, Kayla found what killed Masuda. Masuda was killed by a patch that injected poison into his skin and it had to have happened at least two hours before he was killed. This meant it happened during surgery. The team checked everyone who was in that OR and they identified Masuda's ex-girlfriend. She's Resident Sierra Krueger. She talked to the team about her and Masuda. She hadn't wanted the breakup. She thought she could convince him to come around and that never happened. She instead hid the fact they were dating because she didn't want her coworkers to know she slept with her boss.

It was the only reason she withheld it from NCIS when they first questioned her. Krueger also said that she didn't kill Masuda and that if anyone should be a suspect it should be the patient. The patient was acting shifty. He demanded that the surgery happens on a Monday. Krueger tried to get a psych eval and Masuda overruled her. The resident also mentioned that the doctor speaks privately with the patient right before surgery. Meaning that the patient could have planted the poison on the doctor right before surgery. The team went to the hospital to speak with this patient and they were too late to speak with the patient because he had been killed.

The team spotted the man leaving his room. They chased after him and unfortunately the bad guy grabbed Kayla. He took her hostage. He got away with her and the Director wasn't happy. He wanted his daughter back safely. He wanted her captor identified at least. The team checked the ID that Kayla grabbed and toss before she was kidnapped. Their facial recognition identified the man that took Kayla to be Pedro Rodriguez. He was a member of a Colombian cartel. The leader of this cartel was in an American prison and his crew was trying to break him out. It's why they signed him up for a fake surgery. They blackmailed the guy in charge at the hospital with threats of telling the world about his cocaine addiction.

Only Masuda wasn't going to sign off on the bogus surgery. He was getting in the way and that's why he was killed. But now that they knew the truth, the team canceled the surgery. Rodriguez found out about the cancellation. He also figured out who Kayla was because he found her ID badge and put two and two together and so he called Vance. He threatened to kill Kayla if Vance didn't agree to a prisoner swap. Vance knew the American government would never agree to that. He instead went through the motions of pretending he was going to agree to the swap but really he was tracking Rodriguez.

The team later found Kayla. They were able to kill Rodriguez and arrest most of his men. Kayla showed tremendous courage under pressure. She was also able to talk down a guy using just her voice and so Knight said that she should consider hostage negotiation in the future.

And Vance was going to be glad to get his daughter back that he stopped caring how dangerous her job is.

Detective Dubrow), Tony Becker (Policeman), Braxton Hale (Colin), Jeff Pride (Car Owner), Val Garrahan (Navy Petty Officer 2nd Class Danna Calley)

Production Code: 19015
Summary: Parker's delinquent past resurfaces when NCIS is called to Philadelphia to investigate the death of a Navy petty officer.

Parker has a past. He was in juvie as a kid. He got into a lot of trouble with his best friend and their favorite thing to do was to steal car parts from an auto repair shop. They stole from that guy three times in one month. Its how they got caught. Its how they got sent to juvie.

But Parker changed his ways after he got sent there. He went on a different path to his friend and that should have ended the friendship, but it didn't. Parker stayed friends with Billy all these years. He was now an NCIS Agent. He leads his own investigative team and he's since moved away from the old neighborhood. Parker was doing everything right when he offered to help out the short-staffed Philadelphia department. And it led back to his old friend Billy Doyle.

There was a murder in Philly. Petty Officer Third Class Danna Cally had been killed after tussling with someone and an icebox was found nearby with animal organs found inside. The icebox was weird. It was one of two things that stood out at the crime scene. The other one was the fact they found a broken watch and it couldn't have been Cally because she was found stealing wearing hers. The team came to believe the broken watch belonged to the murder. They all thought that Cally was in the park that late at night buying drugs and so they questioned her former boss. It turns out Cally wasn't into drugs.

She was into possums. She had a real love of them and she would go watch them in their natural habitat. Like at that specific park. Possums were meat eaters. Hence the icebox. Possums were also nocturnal and so Cally was in the park at night filming them when she was killed. Her camera was missing from the crime scene, but the team checked and all footage was automatically backed up to the cloud. There was footage of Cally accidentally filming someone beat up Sean Doyle, Billy's nephew. She tried to intervene. She got killed for it. Her footage on the other hand had at least told them that Sean was also a victim. And not a perpetrator.

When they got DNA from that watch, they all thought that Sean was the killer. Parker even went to his old friend Billy who had turned his life around after a few bad ones and Billy said he hadn't seen his nephew in a week. Not since he found Sean going through his cash box. He had blown up at the kid and Sean went sulking off to somewhere else. But the video of Cally's death had showed Sean was in trouble. Parker told his friend and so Billy came to the crime scene when he heard that a young man's body had been found. Billy wanted to know if it was his nephew. Parker confirmed that it was. And that's when he heard it.

Parker heard Billy said that he was going to deal with the person that killed his nephew. The agent knew what his old friend meant and he tried to warn him off this path. He said no good will come from revenge. He also said this was his job. It was Parker's job to find both Cally and Sean's murderer. He didn't need Billy poking his nose into a federal case. Billy ignored him. He later tried to bribe Palmer for any details he had on the murder and Palmer called Parker. Parker has always dreaded this day. A day that might force him to arrest his oldest friend. Billy didn't go straight after juvie. He got into serious trouble. He went to serious jail.

Back then, the two men had enacted a "Don't Ask, Don't Tell" policy. Its why Parker has never arrested him before and so Parker gave him one last warning before he had to arrest him again. Parker returned to the case. He found out that Sean was communicating with someone over his pager and that it was all in code. The person on the other end hadn't known Sean was dead because they sent him a message. It was to meet. Parker and McGee showed up and they ended up hitting a fleeing man with a car just so they could stop him long enough to question him. It turns out the guy was a DEA Agent. His name is Mark Sisqó.

The DEA guy said that Sean was his informant. They flipped him six months ago. He was since bringing them information on a dangerous woman by the name of Kat Hanna. She was believed to have been behind a recent bank heist and so everyone wanted to arrest her. Sean was helping them with that when he was killed. The team didn't know where Hanna was. Parker went to Billy and he asked him for his help. He got Billy to give him Hanna's location. They later arrested her for murder. They even searched her home and they found the murder weapon along with key evidence from the bank heist.

Which would have been great if Hanna hadn't said she was being framed. Hanna had an alibi for the murders. She was committing another heist and she could prove it. Someone was trying to frame her for the murders. Kasie thought she figured out who it was. She later told Parker that the murder weapon was used in another crime eighteen years ago and Hanna would have been too young back then. The police at the time also had a suspect for that crime. It was Billy. The team came to believe that Billy had killed his own nephew and that he tried to frame for someone else for it. And so they went looking for him.

They couldn't find him. Parker realized where Billy went. He went to the same church they used to go and hide in when they were younger. Parker went in thinking he was going to arrest Billy, but he ended up finding Billy about to kill the real killer. The killer was Colin. A young man who worked for Billy and who knew where Billy kept his guns. The guy borrowed one after he realized Sean stole from him. Sean found the baseball card that was from the bank heist. He realized that Colin was behind it and he tried to blackmail his way into the crew and he got shot for it. In present time, Billy wanted to kill Colin.

But Parker stopped him. Parker pretended like he would have gone along with it and Billy said he couldn't do that to him and so he handed over Colin without a fuss. And Parker didn't arrest his friend.

Knight had needed to go to a wedding and her date pulled out at the last minute, but she ended up going with Palmer and they had fun.

Production Code: 19016
Summary: A gruesome mishap at a Navy petty officer's gender-reveal party leads NCIS to the case of a missing teacher that was popularized on a true crime podcast.

It rained a body in Norfolk county. There was a couple having a gender reveal party and they were all outside because they hired a skywriter to reveal their baby sex. But the pilot's air pump wasn't working. They didn't find out what they were having after spending all that money. They also had pieces of a dead body fall on them while outside.

The pieces weren't enough to perform an autopsy only it was enough to get a DNA match. It was a match for Emma Radner. Radner disappeared five months ago and her husband is suspected to be involved. Radner was known for getting into fights with her husband. He liked a photo of an ex-girlfriend on Facebook and it set off a fight. Radner's husband went to Florida for the weekend.

The husband never called or texted his wife while he was away. By the time he came back, he noticed his wife wasn't home and he reported her missing. The cops looked. They couldn't track her cell phone. She didn't touch her credit cards or her car keys.

The police suspected the husband Paul. They carried out an investigation and they could never prove anything because they couldn't find the body. No body, no case. Not that it stopped a popular podcast from being made and in the podcast the guilty party as Sam. And so once the team was able to determine that the body pieces they found were Emma — they went looking for the husband.

Sam was a popular insurance salesman before this. He was even on tv. He was fired after the podcast came out. The team went to his home and they knocked, but no one answered and so then they went across the street. Radner's sister lived across the street.

The sister was out of town on vacation when Radner went missing. She still had a key to the house and so she gave it to Knight. Knight and Kasie had listened to the podcast. They had been sure that Sam was the killer. The body pieces only seemed to confirm it. Knight went to Sam's home and she found him with a gun. He was going to kill himself when Knight talked him out of it.

Knight was peacefully trying to talk him into coming in as the rest of the team continued the investigation. Kasie was able to determine that what fell out of the sky was vulture's secretions. Vultures empty their stomachs when they're scared. They did so because of the skywriter.

Vultures are also usually tagged and so the team was able to trace the creatures back to the body because Vultures also hunt close to home. They probably just started feeding on Radner thanks to the warm weather. She went missing in winter. The winter cold would have frozen the body and made it inedible.

But the team were able to get to the body. It was mostly intact. They brought it to Palmer to get an autopsy and they also looked at the scene where she was dumped. It was off an ATV trail. The same trail that Sam was known to prefer. The team suspected Sam killed his wife.

The evidence was pointing towards him doing. His wife was killed by a fall and where she was found wasn't where she was killed. She was most likely killed at home. Meanwhile back with Knight, Knight got to hear all the good things about the marriage. Like Radner making breakfast in bed for her husband in spite of the fact she hated to cook.

Sam did things for her as well. He did ballroom dancing to make her happy. He got her flowers all the time. Peonies! Those were her favorites and Radner would always take one to put it behind her ear. She loved wearing fresh peonies.

The last time that Sam gave her flowers was when he had them ordered while he was in Florida on that weekend she went missing. Sam soon ran out of things to mention about his wife. He moved to shoot himself and Knight was forced to knock the gun out of his hand. It was amazing that he survived with just a scratch on the head. Sam was taken to headquarters afterwards for an interrogation but he was later released when they determined he was innocent.

Sam didn't kill his wife. The podcasts were wrong. Sam's wife was still alive while he was in Florida and evidence on her body proves it. But what no one saw coming was that Radner had an overly friendly relationship with family friend Walt Freeman. Freeman's wife Nance didn't like that and so she confronted Radner. She demanded that the relationship even though there was none. And Nance later claimed she killed her accidentally.

The part that wasn't accidental was when she hid the body on Sam's favorite trail. Or when she participated in the podcast to blame Sam for his wife's murder. Nance and her lawyer were going to have a hard time walking all those things back.

Lt. Commander Thomas Miller), Taylor Bracken (PO3 Sally Jordan)
Production Code: 19017
Summary: NCIS investigates the apparent suicide of a retired Navy officer who was in Palmer and Knight's grief group. Torres gets a call from Tennant to come to Hawaii when she gets a lead on a witness from a case they worked on together.

An electrician was making a commercial when a body dropped behind him. The body was identified as Retired Navy Commander Thomas Miller and it was believed at first that he killed himself by jumping off the top of his building. Miller was known to be depressed. He was actually in Palmer and Knight's grief counseling group. They recognized him when they got called to the scene.

They told the others that Miller has been struggling with losing a friend's death. The friend had died in combat overseas. Miller never got over of it and the group sessions were his last chance at getting better. But Miller's had some contusions on his face that didn't seem to come from the fall. Palmer thought it could be something more and so the team investigated Miller's death.

They looked into Miller. Miller's retired after his last flying mission that ended in his friend's death and he seemed to have turned a corner in his grief counseling sessions. He was even talking to a grief sponsor. Which was someone to hold his hand as well as hold him accountable.

His grief sponsor was Former FBI Special Agent Fornell. Fornell actually called Miller on the day of his death. He called him about five times and so he was asked to come in. Fornell said that Miller had turned a corner in his sessions. He seemed to come to terms with the young Petty Officer that died under his command.

Petty Officer Sally Jordan was the youngest member of his team. She was also a friend. Her death had pushed him to retire and it unraveled her father Richard Jordan. Jordan never forgave Miller for his daughter's death. He kept hounding him. Miller eventually had to take out a restraining order against him.

The order expired last week. Since then, Jordan has been reaching out. The team went to Jordan's home and they questioned him. It turns out that Jordan wanted Miller's help. Jordan had been contacted by his daughter's old phone. It was a message claiming that they had her, they wanted fifty grand to release her and so Jordan thought right away it was a scam.

Jordan kept being harassed by these scammers. He contacted Miller to tell him about it and Miller might have done something to correct the program. This coupled with the missing person's report seemed suspicious. There was a missing person's report for a Thomas P. Miller.

Their victim was a Thomas A. Miller. Parker thought it was like a Terminator situation. Someone is killing Miller in the hopes of getting the right Miller and so they went to this other's Miller's home to talk to his wife. They saw from the family photos that weren't two Millers. It was the same Miller. Miller was a bigamist with a second family. He even has a kid with the other wife.

This would certainly explain why Miller was keeping secrets from his known widow. He told Wife #1 that he was in counseling sessions with Dr. Grace when Grace said he wasn't and that he must have been elsewhere. It turns out he was with Wife #2. Miller never discussed his military life with Wife #2. His time with her was an escape from his normal time. The second wife was so in the dark that she freaked out when they told her that her husband was a bigamist. She threw a picture frame at Palmer's head. He got a nasty gash from it. Palmer had to sew it up and Palmer refused to press charges against Wife #2.

The second wife had no idea that her husband was cheating on her or that he had another wife. Technically, a legal wife because the second marriage didn't count. Miller cheated on his first wife and he and Wife #2 got pregnant really fast. Miller proposed when he found out about the pregnancy. He was technically with the second woman for about a year. No more than that. Miller led a double life and he kept a second cell phone to keep track of everything. They found the second cell phone hidden in his car. They also learned that there was an incident on his last day with Wife #2.

Miller freaked out when he was helping his wife into the car. He saw something that freaked him out and he just left her there. No kiss goodbye. He also ignored her many calls. The team looked into what happened. They found out that Jordan was following Miller. They brought in Jordan to question him and he said Miller never saw him. It was someone else who spooked Miller. Some guy driving a silver car. Like his brother-in-law. Miller was seen with his second family by his brother-in-law from his first marriage. The team checked the DNA on the murder weapon. The weapon used to bludgeoned Miller to death and it was connected to the brother-in-law.

Only it wasn't him. It was Wife #1. After the brother-in-law spotted Miller, he called his sister to tell her to talk to her husband. Olive Miller then contacted her husband. Miller came clean with her about his second family and he said he wanted to be with the new wife because he felt she set him free. He also mentioned they had a kid. Which set off Olive because she's been waiting years to have a family. Years for her husband to be whole again and he was throwing her over for a new woman.

The team arrested their kill and they took down the scammers while they were at it. Torres tracked down an old witness that went missing and, while he was in Hawaii, he reconnected with Tennant. They were old friends. They were transporting the witness together when they were targeted by some mysterious shooter who made them flip their car.

The episode concludes in the NCIS: Hawai'i episode S01E18 titled "T'N'T".

Production Code: 19018
Summary: When an infamous arms dealer, Reymundo Diaz, is released from prison and bodies start piling up, Torres is forced to face the repercussions of his actions during an undercover operation he worked on years ago.

An infamous arms dealer was released back out on the streets. Something that didn't make sense. Reymundo Diaz was a dangerous man. He killed plenty of people during his first chance on the outside and granting him a second one seemed a mistake. In fact, it wasn't long after he was released that Diaz became the suspect in numerous homicides.

Those cases got assigned to NCIS because of the arms dealing that was involved when several men were killed and that's how Special Agent Torres learned of Diaz. He hadn't known before that Diaz was back out on the street. He was unfortunately going about his day like any other and he had even attended the professional assessment he was ordered to do. And so therapy wasn't fun.

But then people started to die. There was a witness to the event and he came forward to identify Diaz as the killer. He said that Diaz killed his friends because he was looking for someone. Someone by the name of Carlos Salazar. Parker was trying to figure out who that was when Torres came forward and he admitted he was "Carlos".

Carlos was the persona he took while he was investigating Diaz in a joint military task force. He got into Diaz's inner circle by dating Diaz's cousin Maria and by convincing Maria to flip on Diaz. He was able to do that because he lied to Maria. He told her that he would join her in Witness Protection.

Maria never knew she was being played until she went into protective detail with no sign of the man she left everything for. Maria was never told that Torres was a federal agent. Neither she nor her family ever knew Carlos's real identity. But then somehow Diaz got released.

He apparently used most of his savings to buy his way out of a Mexican jail cell. He then gathered his men. They helped him sneak into Texas. He started looking for Carlos the moment he walked on American soil and he was killing everyone that got in the way or who wasn't needed. Eventually, he killed enough men to figure out that his old friend Carlos was a federal agent.

Diaz wanted Torres dead. He wanted everyone he considered a "rat" to be dead. Torres became concerned for Maria and so his team reached out to the US Marshalls. They helped Torres get to her apartment. Only she wasn't there. There was evidence of a struggle and blood found at the scene. Torres flipped out when he thought Maria had been taken or killed. He attacked the US Marshall escorting him because he thought the man had failed Maria, but Parker stepped in. He got Torres to calm down and Torres went back to his hotel room in the area. He was there when guess who comes knocking at his door?

Maria! She was covered in blood and was otherwise fine. Maria claims that she was at her apartment when one of Diaz's men attacked her and she was able to fight him off. She said the blood belonged to the man who tried to kill her. She also said she wasn't going back into WitSec. Maria had hated her time there and she didn't want to deal with the US Marshalls. She instead wanted to take her chances on the outside. She didn't want to hide anymore. Maria had been a successful artist before she went into protection and she had to give that all up. She had to change her name, move from everything and everyone she knew, and become a telemarketer.

Maria hated her new life. She didn't want to go back to it. She also blamed Torres for it. Torres was the one who lied to her and convinced her to turn on the cousin she had once been so close to. Maria didn't find out until she was put in WitSec what Carlos's real name was. She and Torres were still talking about that betrayal when Torres got a call from his team. They tracked down the man that attacked Maria. They went after him. They didn't find him and instead they found a dead US Marshall who appeared to be tortured before he was killed. Unfortunately for everyone, this was the same Marshall that knew where Maria and Torres were.

Torres got the warning for his team that Diaz knew his location. He got out his gun. He even gave Maria a gun and together they were able to take down Diaz and his backup. Diaz was now dead. The threat to their lives was over and so Maria couldn't wait to leave WitSec. She hated her persona. She was an artist. She wanted to back to making art and she wanted to see her mom. She hadn't seen her mother in six years. She dearly misses her.

And before Maria left town, Torres and her talked. He told her that if she ever needed anything that she could reach out to him and that he would be there for her. And surprisingly she believed him.

Torres had to go back to sessions with Dr. Grace and this time he was more cooperative. He admitted that he wanted to be sober. And how that's been a problem for him lately.

Production Code: 19019
Summary: NCIS investigates a ring of clever teenage partygoers when a string of break-ins takes place at Marine Base Quantico. While working the case, Special Agent McGee forms a bond with one of the teens, Teagan Fields.

Someone broke into a serviceman's house. He and his wife were supposed to be out of town on vacation however a tropical storm put a stop to that and so they returned home unexpectedly early. They also noticed right away that a vase had been broken. They thought it was the neighbor's cat. They played with their inside surveillance cameras to see if it was the cat and that's when they realized that someone broke into their home. They also realized he was still there. They said that part out loud for the guy to hear them and that's when he came running out of the closet. He fought with the naval man before he made his escape out the front door.

The couple called it in. This happened on the base. It was apparently a part of the long line of robberies and so Parker and his team caught this one. Everyone was heading out for the night when this came across their desks. They had to put a stop to their original plans just to work the case. They interviewed the serviceman and his wife. They heard about the string of robberies. They also used outside cameras to detect that whoever broke in had gone to an underage party in someone's basement. The perp's name is Noah. Noah was even still wearing the same clothes he committed the crime in.

Noah was the person breaking into servicemen's homes while they were away. He was doing so because he and his friends were scouting available homes for their parties. It's apparently hard for kids on base. Noah hadn't wanted to reveal who was hacking the military base to get access to the homes, but his mother ratted him out and she admitted that Noah has a big crush on Teagan. Teagan was in their custody after the party and so they talked to her. Teagan has a mother serving overseas. She's bounced around from military base to military base. She was pretty jaded. She hated moving and she accused her mother of not loving her.

Teagan hadn't wanted to talk to NCIS. McGee had to get through to her using his experience as a military kid himself and so that's when Teagan admitted she was the one who hacked the military base. She found out who was going to be taking leave. She also used her hack to help her friends like Noah to unlock smart security systems at servicemen and women's homes. Teagan said she was the only one with the algorithm. She hadn't shared it with anyone else and that left questions because someone hacked the military base again while Teagan was in custody. After a hack, there was an explosion at the Naval Lieutenant's house.

Lt. Tang was killed instantly once he accidentally triggered the bombing someone left on his tv. Someone used Teagan's hack to break into his home as well and so the break-in had to be tied in with his death. The team looked into Tang. He was working on a digital butler who could read people in an instance and offer them services based on their biometric profiles. It was also something that could be used as a weapon. The team looked for it in Tang's house and they didn't find it. They had to go searching for it in the outside world. They found a teenager who turned out to be Noah's brother that tried selling it.

The kid was just as dumb as Noah. He also had no part in the explosion. He said he chose to hack that house because Teagan had already put out news that the house was available for a party and he thought that if he robbed the place no one would be able to tell who was behind it. But there was a problem with the kid's story. Teagan was asked if she knew Tang and she said she never heard of him. The team went back to talk to her only she disappeared. They had no clue where she was. They also learned that Teagan started to hack the military base around the same time she met her online boyfriend.

The online boyfriend was catfishing her. The team found messages between Teagan and this supposed boyfriend. They know he sent her a fake photo of himself. They knew he pushed Teagan into the hacking. He told her that she could make friends that way. He made her do the hack to help get on the base. He even killed Tang to make Teagan look guilty of murder. Tang was Teagan's mom's boss. He was the one that would have stationed her mom at a different overseas base. He was murdered because it made Teagan look guilty. And the team would have liked to talk to Teagan about it only she ran off because her supposed boyfriend told her to run.

He did everything possible to make her look guilty. The team later caught up to Teagan. They told her that her boyfriend was fake and they convinced her to help them. They tried hacking the catfish's phone. They were unable to. But Teagan installed a backdoor on everyone she gave access to her hack. She was able to turn on the catfish's phone and sent messages to him — that's how the team ended up catching Jason Samuels. He was in his forties. He went to prison because Tang testified against him and that's why he killed Tang and tried to frame Teagan.

Teagan was later reunited with her mom who returned from deployment after she heard her daughter was missing.

Production Code: 19020
Summary: NCIS investigates the unexpected death of a Navy reservist who was an investigative journalist. Also, Knight and Jimmy's budding romance is put on hold when a vital organ transfer goes fatally wrong.

Someone was killed while going through a car wash. The victim's name was Navy Reservist John Murphy. Murphy had been in uniform and driving around a van filled with slot machines. NCIS was called in to investigate. The first thing they learned about the case was that Murphy was neither shot nor stabbed. He was covered in blood because he vomited blood. He had been poisoned. The team looked into Murphy and they found out that he was heavily in debt. His wife died. He was a widow. He also got fired from his stateside job as a journalist. His job as a reservist was the only thing on record bringing in cash and so the team thought Murphy could have been killed for something to do with the slot machines.

It was weird that Murphy had a bunch of them in the back of his van. He didn't work for a casino. He didn't know anyone who worked for a casino and so the team looked into the slot machines. Those machines were reported as being stolen. It turns out Murphy stole the machines from the Navy. The Navy allows casinos on their base as a part of recreation for the soldiers. The team was trying to figure out why Murphy would steal the machines when Kasie came up with the answer. Kasie looked into the machines that were in Murphy's possession and it seems he altered them. Murphy altered them so that a portion of the money put into them would get siphoned.

Murphy wanted a small part of the money to go into a secret bank account that was offshore. He was only asking for a penny out of each dollar put in the machine. But people put millions into those machines every day. Murphy would have become rich if he had been able to put the machines back as he planned and so his death wasn't a factor in the greater plan. A plan that must involve one other person. Murphy wasn't smart enough to hack the slot machines by himself. He had to have had a partner. Someone who could hack the machines. And so the team was looking into it while also being short-staffed.

Knight volunteered to go with Palmer. Palmer volunteered to drive new organs from one hospital to another. This was a two-person job and so Knight volunteered. She owed it to him after she misconstrued him asking out for coffee as being a group thing. When it wasn't, Palmer asked her out for coffee as just the two of them. He later said he just wanted time to catch up only who knows if he was telling the truth. Then this thing with the transplanted organ came up. Knight agreed to do it because she thought they could talk in the car and unfortunately for the both of them they never got a chance to talk one on one.

First, they had a very annoying third person. Someone from the hospital had to go with them and unfortunately it was a very loud and very annoying person who just wouldn't stop talking. This guy would have talked the whole way to the transplant recipient if they hadn't been driven off the road. Someone put spikes in the road. It forced the car off into a crash. They barely had enough time to check on each other after the crash when someone started shooting at them and so Dr. Scott was killed when he tried to leave the car. Knight and Palmer on the other hand were smarter about their movements.

They shot back at the shooter. Which gave them coverage to get inside a tunnel. It was from the safe place that they noticed armed men coming to check out the car. Knight and Palmer didn't know who was after them. They just knew staying in one place wasn't safe. So, they went into the forest. They started walking. They stopped for a lunch break when one of the men after them found their tracks and so Knight knocked the guy. She stole his gun as well and sadly it happened after Palmer was shot in his leg. Knight had to practically carry Jimmy to a nearby cabin. Once they made it, Knight had to go digging through his leg to get out the bullet.

Palmer used that time to talk. He was asking what happened and that she was avoiding him. The two of them were good friends. They might have even become something more after she took him to a cousin's wedding and they ended up having a great time. Then it all stopped. Knight started to avoid him after the wedding. She tried to turn a one-on-one coffee date into a group thing and so Palmer had to ask what happened. He cares for her. Possibly more than a friend. He admitted as much in the cabin and Knight's only answer was that he was a great friend. She didn't want to lose that by pursuing anything else.

Knight had stolen one of the bad guy's walkie-talkies. She overheard them when they said there was a cabin in the nearby region and so Knight left Palmer at the cabin while she drew out the people with a gun. This was happening as the rest of the team started looking for them. It turns out the team's suspect was Ana Brooks. They figured out she tampered with the slot machines, but it wasn't because of Murphy. Murphy was in fact just reporting the story. probably in the hopes of getting hired as a journalist again. Murphy was reporting the story because Brooks was a whistleblower. She was turning state's evidence against a company called Vega Gaming.

Only Brooks was sick. She needed a liver transplant. The man she was testifying against her had tried to stop her from getting a new liver and he couldn't kill Brooks directly because she was in protective custody. The only thing they could do was go after the liver itself. Destroy it and it kills Brooks. And so the team went looking for Knight and Palmer after they failed to show up at the hospital.

They found them after the two saved themselves. Palmer refused to let Knight die to save himself. He went back for her. He helped save her. They killed off the bad guys. They also saved the liver and so the liver was sent to Brooks. And she'll live long enough to make it to trial.

But after everything, Knight went out on that coffee date with Palmer.

Summary: When Agent Parker is framed for murder, the team puts their jobs and lives on the line to buy time and uncover the truth.

It's that time of year. Not New Year's or Christmas Day! No, it's the time of year that NCIS was asked to fill out disclosure reports detailing their own private financial lives and Parker even asked for additional documents because six pages weren't enough for him. The team had been curious when they found out he needed extra documents. They wanted to snoop through his forms when they got an emergency alert from Kasie. She said someone sent them anonymous photos of a kidnapping. The person that was abducted just happened to be Parker's ex-wife. She was on a morning hike when someone came up behind her and injected her with a needle. And afterward, her kidnaper threw her into the trunk of a car before making their escape.

Someone with a camera witnessed it all. This person seems to have known something was going to happen, but it didn't make sense that it was sent to an NCIS tip line. Not unless someone was trying to get under Parker's skin. Parker does work for NCIS and his ex-wife was taken after he included her in his financial papers. There was a chance she could have been taken as a means of getting back at Parker. Parker considered this when he realized what happened to his ex-wife. He contacted everyone who knew her to see if they heard from her and it turns out Vivian was last in contact with Parker's dad.

Vivian and Roman Parker remained on friendly terms even after the divorce. Roman was living in a retirement home because most of his children were spread out across the globe and so it was just Parker who got to see him on a weekly basis. They usually met up to play "Risk". Only Roman doesn't necessarily care for his son. He blames Parker for the divorce. He also holds the fact that Parker went to juvie as a kid over Parker's head. He even managed to find a way to blame Parker for Vivian's kidnapping. But that was proving to be true. Roman said that Vivian stopped by to give him some baked goods she made that morning and that she told him she was going on her usual run.

The run was by a specific lake. The team went there and they found a towel as a broken water bottle. They also found the spot where the photographer took photos of the kidnapping. They found sunflower seeds at the scene. Parker realized who that reminded him of. He reached out to his old partner at the FBI and he hadn't told his team about it. Not telling them proved to be a mistake. The team found out that Former FBI Special Agent Frank Ressler was involved in Vivian's kidnapping. They went to the man's house and they found him dead in his garage. They also found evidence that Parker had visited the late Ressler rather recently.

Parker did own up to that after they found Ressler's body. He said he came to suspect Ressler's involvement in Vivian's kidnapping and that all he did was knock on the door. According to Parker, no one answered. He then went away. Parker didn't know at what time he visited the house and so that looked suspicious. The team was able to figure out that Ressler was murdered ten that night. Parker also didn't come to the team when he began suspecting Ressler's involvement and that meant Parker couldn't be part of their team. Not while he was a suspect in a murder case. Parker was asked to go on leave while the team continued their investigation.

But soon they were knocking at Parker's door wanting to know why his DNA was found on Ressler's corpse. Ressler had fought his attacker and right now that DNA was saying the attacker was Parker. The team went to Parker's home. They were going to ask him some questions when Vivian showed up. Vivian was no longer kidnapped. She managed to escape her captors and she got word to Parker. Parker brought her back to his apartment. So, she was there too when Parker was asking questions. Vivian had to answer questions about what she remembered from her own kidnapper. What she told them helped lead them to a pet store and the words "Nevermore" was written on the walls.

That word basically told them that Raven is back. The Raven could even be why Parker's DNA was found on a murdered body and why his ex-wife had been kidnapped. The Raven was dangerous. He or she likes to prolong suffering as long as they could. Parker was being accused of murder and fraud because somehow the FBI claims they have documents proving Parker committed fraud. And so there was only one he could do. Parker and Vivian left town to investigate the true source behind all of these supposed crimes.

Summary: Parker is still on the run with his ex-wife Vivian, so the team investigates who might have a vendetta against him in hopes of clearing Parker's name. Enlisting the help of Tennant and Computer Specialist Ernie Malik, who are in town meeting with Director Vance in preparation for a global military exercise, the team tracks their prime suspect, The Raven.

NCIS Special Agent Alden Parker went on the run. He had been framed for a crime he didn't commit. He thought a terrorist was after him and his ex-wife. He went on the run, but he brought Vivian with him because he thought he was keeping her safe when the reality is she was working with someone. Vivian was in touch with a mystery person. It could be the Raven. It could be someone else. She was using a secret cell phone to contact him or her. She was also hiding this from Parker. Vivian was pretending to help Parker track down the accounting firm that set up a bogus offshore bank account in his name and she was also texting someone about where to bring Parker.

Parker eventually caught her on that secret phone. He didn't confront her or anything. He instead let her believe she was safe and the whole time he was spying on her as she spied on him. He even got the number from the burner phone. Parker hadn't wanted to tell the team that he suspected his ex-wife. He chose to call Kasie and ask Kasie to trace the number without telling the team. Kasie had been with Jimmy. Jimmy was the only person who knew Parker had reached out. They tracked down the number. They realized Vivian bought the burner in question. They also realized she was contacting the FBI.

Kasie sent that information to Parker. He was so glad she wasn't working with the Raven that he was willing to forgive the fact she was betraying him to the FBI. Or that's what they all thought.

It turns out Vivian was stringing along the FBI. She was also in contact with a former FBI agent. She was reached out to Fornell. Fornell came to help. He found out about what happened to Parker and he wanted to help his old friend. Did he think Parker would attack him by accident? No! But Parker did and he had to apologize when he realized that Vivian hadn't turned him into the authorities. And he had to apologize to Vivian as well.

Vivian told him that the FBI or better yet Special Agent Sweeney was really out to get him. Sweeney wanted Vivian to betray Parker and she would never do that and so she's been helping Parker evade capture by giving Sweeney false information. She explained it all to Parker once he apologized. He had to apologize for suspecting she was working with the Raven. He also had to remind her that he wasn't the same reactionary dumb guy she married years ago. Sure, he hit Fornell. It was reflex. Parker is much better now. He's zen even. He tried to say as much to Vivian. She didn't want to believe him.

As all of this was going down, the rest of the team was getting information on the Raven. They were trying to figure out why the Raven had made it so personal with Parker. It dawned on them that it could be connected to all the appeals. Once word goes out that Parker was a wanted man, every person he put behind bars filed for an appeal. Including Herman Maxwell. Maxwell is a hacker. Parker put him away for life. Maxwell was filing an appeal or at least that was his plan right up until he talked to NCIS. Knight and McGee went to visit Maxwell in prison. They asked him about who he was working for.

Maxwell admitted he hacked several bio labs for a Russian oligarch nicknamed "Voron". Voron was apparently the Russian word for Raven. It seems the guy was wealthy enough to afford Maxwell's services while also being delusional enough to become obsessed with bio labs and creating mass panic just for the sake of it. This guy was dangerous. When Maxwell heard that his old friend was the one framing Parker, he refused to help NCIS. He even canceled his appeal. He wanted to stay in prison. He felt safer in prison. He thought that Voron wanted him out because he wanted to take him out and so he didn't want to leave prison for anything.

But the team needed answers. If the Raven wants to kill Maxwell at any cost, it means Maxwell knows more than he's letting on and that he could be a great asset. They just had to get him talking. He shut down once he realized it was connected to Voron. The team found Parker and gave some made-up therapist background and they got him into the prison to see Maxwell. Maxwell wouldn't talk to NCIS but he would Parker. Parker was someone Maxwell respected. He didn't even mind that Parker was the one who arrested him. He still respected the guy and he told Parker as much as he could.

The team also went digging on the dark web. They put the name "Voron" along with biochemicals and they got a hit. They found someone from a crazy Russian gangster family. There to help was Ernie Malik. Ernie was visiting Virginia with his boss Special Agent Tennant. They were in town to meet with Director Vance only they had some time before their flight. They were willing to help with the case. Ernie remembered Maxwell from his days in the NSA. He was part of the team that gathered information on Maxwell for the FBI and so he had no problem with jumping in to help find the Raven.

Tennant agreed to do it because Torres asked her to. Torres and Tennant have this crazy filtration thing going. They were fine with being friends. It just didn't stop them from flirting or helping each other out on covert missions.

As for Parker, he grabbed a crew to go to a location where Maxwell said they should go but it was a trap. Maxwell led them into a trap. It turns out Herman Maxwell was the Raven all along. And he ambushed the team.

Vivian was in the hospital with a gunshot wound and the FBI suspended the investigation into Parker, but Maxwell got away and the team was pursuing him.

The episode will conclude in NCIS: Hawaii episode S02E01 titled Prisoner's Dilemma.

Summary: McGee's personal life and professional life intersect when a dad from his children's school is linked to a break-in at a government storage bunker.

A congressional oversight committee went to go investigate a naval storage facility. They sent a representative. The representative had a naval escort. But whatever was stored there was so top secret that the naval escort wasn't told what was inside. She opened up the building in a part of getting her own curiosity sated when both she and the representative came across a body. There was also a guy in a mask who attacked both parties before fleeing. The petty officer called NCIS. The team came along with Jimmy. Jimmy checked on the body. The rest went inside the vault to see what was being stored. And you wouldn't believe it.

It wasn't gold. It wasn't oil. It wasn't even worth protecting. The naval storage unit was being used to store barrels of cheese. The team opened up the barrels and they found cheese inside. They reported it to Director Vance. He figured out why the cheese was being stored. It turns out the government was buying a surplus of cheese as a way of subsidizing the dairy community. They wanted to keep that hidden because there was a lot of lobbying and millions involved. The government didn't want it to get out that there were kickbacks involving cheese. And so the team was fine with keeping things discreet.

But there was the issue of the body. Jimmy was able to get a fingerprint from the body and the dead person turned out to be Tyson Perkins. Perkins was a career thief. He's worked with all the greats. There was no telling who his accomplice was and Jimmy proved he wasn't murdered. The guy died from a severe lactone intolerant allergy. He and his partner broke into the storage facility. Probably in the hope of securing something profitable and they ended up trapped inside. They were lucky that someone on the congressional committee came around looking. Or else the partner would have died in the vault.

The team went looking for a partner. They figured the best way to find him was to find out how the thieves got into the vault to begin with. They checked the security. It was basically unhackable. They checked the security firm and the only way that anyone could hack that was if they got the code from the creator himself. The creator was someone known to McGee. It was Carter Landergraff. Carter was a dad at the same school that McGee sends his kids. As it happens, Carter has been asking him about his job lately. He wanted all details about being a federal agent and so McGee thought Carter was trying to spy on him.

There was just one problem with that theory, though. Carter was harmless. He was a big goof. He said that his money went missing from a cryptocurrency account and that he asked his friend to help him track down the money. The friend needed his laptop. Carter thought the rest of his information was safe because he put up some kind of interior wall. Only his friend wasn't as harmless as he thought. His friend was Kingston Reinhardt. He was a big-time gangster. He offered to help Carter find the missing cryptocurrency and he also used the information on Carter's computer to help his nephew break into the vault.

The nephew found cheese. He got help in escaping and someone in the meantime killed Kingston. They found a mark on Kingston that proved Kingston's heart attack was staged. He was really murdered and so whoever stole the money had also killed Kingston to cover it up. They also tried to kill Carter. Carter's car was blown up after he accidentally activated a car bomb. Carter's family was taken to a safe house and Carter was asked several questions about who would want him dead. It turns out the cryptocurrency wasn't his own money. It was actually money from the school fundraiser. He was supposed to raise a half of million and he got half of that.

Carter thought putting the money in cryptocurrency would help him raise the rest. But then someone stole it and he asked his friend to track down that person and then his friend was killed. Whoever stole the money had been someone involved with that school. Carter was safe. McGee not so much. McGee finally attended one of those dad seminars and it had been a bust. The others were very judgy of him. It made McGee feel bad. He even felt sympathy towards Carter. Carter was the only other dad that was ostracized. He was a little chatty with the other dads. And the other dads found McGee too quiet.

McGee finally started talking to Carter and together they figured out their killer/thief. It was the guy working at the juice bar. Carter had used the juice bar as his office and so the barista was spying on him on the public Wi-Fi. The guy got arrested. Carter got back the money plus interest and they finally met their school goat. And Carter got a friend.

McGee decided to befriend Carter and the two grabbed drinks together once the case was over.

Summary: When a dead body is found at an ancient burial site that is thought to be cursed, the team tries to determine the motive and the symbolism behind the crime. As Torres continues therapy with Dr. Grace, he discovers that their lives are in danger.

There was an incident eighteen months ago. Some American soldiers had heard about a treasure being buried in Afghanistan and they pursued it. They eventually found the treasure. They also found out why no one else has ever pursued it. It turns out the treasure was buried on an ancient burial site. The whole area was considered haunted and the locals never dug up the treasure because there reportedly was a curse on it. According to the rumor, the people who dug up the treasure would all die horrible deaths. The American soldiers chose to ignore the story. They dug up the treasure anyways. And they took it back with them to the United States and that was that.

Fast-forward a few months. The NCIS caught a case. They were investigating the death of a naval contractor. Special Agent Parker and his team had to wade through the press at the Quantico National Cemetery in order to get to the body of Erik Nilsson and what they found there had been unusual. Nilsson's internal organs had all been turned to stone. It was a first for Jimmy and the first for the others as well. No one knew how someone's organs turn to stone. Not until Jimmy opened up the body and found that it hadn't turned to stone at all. Someone had simply removed all of the victim's organs before replacing them with actual stones. There was even something on the stones themselves.

It looked like tribal symbols. Ducky was brought in to help with this case. He reached out to his friends who were experts in that field and he showed them pictures of the stones. They said it was connected to the Bactrian Kingdom. There was reportedly a treasure connected to that kingdom that was hidden in modern-day Afghanistan. It has a curse on it and the curse says that it would turn everyone's inside into stone if the treasure was ever stolen. Which it was. Nilsson was a part of that group that stole the treasure. The treasure that rightfully belongs to Afghanistan and the press knows about it.

Someone notified the press from the very beginning. It was possible that the killer could have done so and so that posed the question of why? Why would the killer risk everything to tell the press? The press being involved also made things more complicated. Parker was told he had to brief them each time something new came up and he quickly found a way out of that. He began mocking the victim to the PR team. They soon began feeling he wasn't right for the job of being in charge of the press and so they removed him from that position. But the team had some pressing concerns when one of their own went missing.

Torres went missing. At first, they thought he had just been held up. Torres is very personable. He has lots of charm. He hasn't really dated anyone since Bishop left and so his not reporting to work was unusual. Torres went to go check a lead with Dr. Grace. Grace was a therapist. She was actually treating Torres for months now. He thought they had a great relationship and he volunteered to go talk to her once they realized that Nilsson contacted Grace on the day he died. Only Torres ran into a masked man at Grace's office. He fought the guy. He was winning when the guy's partner threatened to shoot Grace if he didn't stop fighting.

Torres was taken, hostage. Grace was taken, hostage. Grace has no idea why. She doesn't know Nilsson. She's never met him and so it's a good thing the team was investigating Torres's disappearance when they found out that those men also took Grace. Here's what happened. The group of soldiers stole a treasure from Afghanistan and two of the men snuck it into the United States. They were supposed to have told their buddies once they arrived only something happened. One of the guys took off with the gold and he went crazy. He began getting confused. He couldn't remember what day it was and he became a patient of Grace's.

Grace treated Danny Vega. She put him in a psych ward. Which was a problem because his friends Moretti and Holt wanted the gold and no one could find him. They tried asking the other guy who traveled with Vega. They asked Nilsson. He didn't know where Vega was. He did however lead them to Grace who was Vega's therapist and so the bad guys killed Nilsson and went after Grace to get to Vega. She eventually admitted that Vega has been put on a psych hold after they shot Torres to prove they were serious. Once she told him where Vega was, they demanded that Grace help get to Vega or else they were going to kill Torres.

Moretti went with Grace to the hospital. They met with Vega. Vega wasn't making sense. He was deeply traumatized by the war and he thought he lost his mind because of the curse. Grace gave him something to knock him out. She then tried to negotiate with Moretti. She tried to get him to release Torres, but she didn't need to bother. The team found Torres. They rescued him from killing Holt. They then sent him to the hospital for his wound while they pursued Grace. Once she saw help had arrived, Grace gave them an opening and they were able to kill Moretti.

As for the treasure, Grace eventually talked Vega into giving up its location. The treasure is being handed over to a nonprofit where it will hopefully do some good in Afghanistan.

Production Code: 20004
Summary: Agent Knight's past resurfaces when her ex-boyfriend, a National Parks Service agent, teams up with NCIS to investigate a campsite murder.

A camping trip ended abruptly once one of the campers found a body. The body was that of Navy Petty Officer Third Class Aaron Thomas. When his body was found, everyone assumed it was a bear attack. There had been sightings of erratic bears in the area. But it wasn't a bear that killed Aaron. Aaron was killed by a person. Someone opened the door to the bathroom and stabbed him. His murder sparked an NCIS investigation led by Parker's team. They were the ones searching for evidence. They were combing the woods. Knight seemed to be in her element because she could climb trees and follow a trail better than anyone else.

She followed the trail right back to an old friend of hers. He was actually an ex-boyfriend. Special Agent Gage Winchester was a member of the National Park Service and he was hot. He was a gorgeous man with a six-pack. He looked nothing like Knight's current boyfriend, Jimmy. Something that literally everyone noticed. Even the director noticed. They all compared Jimmy and that gorgeous man and found Jimmy lacking. The only one who wasn't taking it badly was Jimmy himself. Jimmy was planning on a getaway with him and Knight. They were going to a spa. And they were going to get attuned to nature.

Or that was a plan before Jimmy met Gage. Gage was also working on the case. He's been following up on a killer that uses several National Parks to kill people and dump their bodies. Only Gage hasn't found any evidence in the two other murders. He was hoping this third one would finally be the clincher in finding the killer. Jimmy had looked at the other two autopsies. He confirmed it was all the same killer. Meaning they were in fact looking for a serial killer. The killer had already killed at least three people by that point and they didn't want him to hurt anyone else. Gage hadn't been the original agent in the National Parks that got assigned to this case, but he pulled rank to make sure he got it.

Which was suspicious. It was especially suspicious once Gage and Knight later found evidence of someone burning Gage's file. His file is in the National Parks. It's weird that anyone would have access to that file much less burn one. The team thought it was weird as well. They asked Gage about anyone that might have stood out and he didn't have names. He had no clue who would be involved in the murders. But the team still got ahead without his input. They found a suspect. They confirmed that one person was in the area around the woods during the time of the murder and that person had a record.

The suspect was identified as Greg Patrick Walsh. He was once a doctor. He lost his license and got sent to prison after he operated on someone under the influence of narcotics. His patient had died. Greg spent five years in prison. He was out now and some thought he got a thirst for killing. What they couldn't find was a connection to Gage. Something they tabled while they track down Walsh. They found out Walsh had used his credit card to book a hotel near the airport and they went there expecting him. Only he wasn't there. Walsh actually approached Jimmy at the diner. Jimmy had been having lunch with Ducky.

Jimmy had actually been affected by Gage being around Knight so much. He noticed Gage's attractiveness and he felt worried. Ducky put him at ease. He told him that he wasn't in any competition. Knight's relationship with Gage ended for a reason. She's now with Jimmy. They haven't named their relationship as a relationship, but it's there and so Jimmy was just beginning to feel better about everything when Walsh approached him. Walsh wanted to turn himself in. He apparently had a lot to say. He was already talking about how the murders were a part of something much larger when a drive-by shooter took him out.

Walsh was killed in NCIS's custody. Gage noticed something on his hands. It was a flower that only grew in certain parts of the parks and so Gage went there without telling anyone. He ran into an erratic bear. The bear almost killed him. A park ranger had to use three tranquilizers to take it down when normally they just need one. So, that's when Parker figured everything out. Parker realized the bear was acting so erratic because it was high. They tested the bear's saliva and found the bear was high on cocaine. Here's what happened: Walsh agreed to work with drug dealers. They would drop a shipment over the park. And it was Walsh's job to collect it.

Walsh killed any witnesses to him finding the drugs. But the bears had gotten to the drugs. Walsh realized he lost the product and that he would ultimately have to pay a price for losing it and so that's when he decided to turn himself in. He did research on Gage because he thought of turning himself into Gage. But Walsh was killed within moments of trying to do so. And they found his killers by tracking down the shipment of drugs.

Gage technically helped cracked the case, but Knight was reminded of why they were no longer together and Gage was also asked to leave the city. Which he happily did. Gage was gone. Everyone felt better for Jimmy and Jimmy still wanted to define the relationship with Knight. And so they needed to have that conversation.

Production Code: 20005
Summary: Agent Parker steps up to protect Director Vance after a terrifying home invasion. The team detects advancements in Jessica and Jimmy's blossoming romance.

An armed group of men broke into Director Vance's house. He was able to fight them off. He also literally dodged a bullet and broke the neck of the man who fired the gun. It was three guys in all. Vance killed one. The other two managed to escape. But an attack on Vance was personal to NCIS. Special Agent Parker and his team caught this case. They investigated it. They all wanted to catch the guys who broke in because Vance was a friend and so it was just Vance who didn't take what happen personally. He was still planning on going on a work trip. He was supposed to fly to Berlin. And Parker didn't think that was a good idea.

Parker tried to talk Vance out of the work trip. Parker understood that there were risks with two men out there with a grudge against Vance and so it was just Vance who refused to believe he was in danger. He was that set on going to Berlin. He wouldn't even listen to the evidence. The armed men managed to get pass his high-tech security alarm without it going off. That means they knew what they were doing when they targeted Vance. These men also surveilled Vance's home beforehand. The neighbors had footage of the same car driving by at least four times past his house. Parker's team got the license plate of the car and it led back to a rental that was purchased with a fake ID.

These men did everything possible to get to Vance. Without getting caught no less. Parker didn't think that was going to end just because of a work trip. Parker was so worried that he basically invited himself along on the trip. Both he and Vance flew to Berlin. They left behind McGee to act as temporary NCIS Director. Not that McGee let that go to his head. He actually hated politics. He much prefers being a field agent and so he was counting the days till Vance returned. He was also still working Vance's case. He and the others found out that the car was rented with both a fake id as well as a fake credit card. The car was also used in another purchase. It was used to buy two tickets to Berlin.

Whatever these men were after, they weren't going to stop. Not even the death of a friend phased them. They were set on getting to Vance and Parker did everything to keep his friend safe. He even followed Vance to Vance's date. Vance was secretly hooking up with Deputy Director Lena Paulsen. They used these work trips to meet up and sleep together. Its why Vance was so set on making the trip. These trips don't come around often. There aren't many times that Vance can run into Lena and so he was all set for their date in Berlin when Parker tagged along. Parker got the call about the men buying a ticket to Berlin right around the time both he and Vance noticed that Lena's door was broken in.

They went into her hotel room only to find Lena shot on the floor. She was shot three times. She was barely alive by time they found her and had her rush to the hospital. The local German police asked the two men if they saw anything. But they hadn't. The detective also mentioned that Lena kept saying "Festung" to the EMTs. Vance pretended not to know what that was. It was Parker who saw through him. Parker told him the only way they can help Lena is by being honest with each other and so he got Vance to admit what festung was. It was a secret ops mission with Berlin forces. Both Vance and Lena helped take down a Chechen terrorist by the name of Goran Umarov.

Umarov was killed during the mission. The case was closed and everyone thought that was it. Only the team found something. They found out that Lena stole from Umarov. She was put in charge of logging in evidence. She chose to instead falsified information to steal millions in diamonds. She covered it up and not even Vance knew what she did yet this happened six years ago. Why now? Umarov's brother had recently broken out of prison. Sergei was just as ruthless and he probably wants revenge for his brother. He went after Vance. He also went after Lena. And so the team checked in with other people attached to the mission.

Everyone else was fine. It was just Vance and Lena who were targeted. The team couldn't figure out why until they found Lena's clue. Lena left behind quotes in a bible. Kasie realized those numbers were a bank account and routing numbers. She traced the account back to Elizabeth Wenders. She was in fact Lena's sister. She said the bank account was for Lena's daughter. Lena didn't just steal diamonds from Umarov. She also took his daughter. She found the baby girl after Umarov was dead. The baby was neglected and malnourished. Lena took pity on her. She chose to raise Heidi as her daughter. She hid Heidi with her sister and she cashed out the diamonds to put it in a trust fund for Heidi.

Sergei didn't want the money. He wanted the girl. Vance and Parker agreed to honor Lena's wishes by keeping Heidi safe. They tried taking her to a safehouse when they were betrayed by a Berlin detective. Sergei's people showed up at the safe house. They shot out the car. Forcing Vance and Parker to stand and fight. Vance and Parker were able to fight off Sergei as well as his men. They arrested everyone they could and killed the ones they couldn't. And they also reunited Heidi with her mother.

Lena woke up at the hospital. She hadn't told Vance any of what happened, but he chose to forgive her the many lies and he covered up the fact that Heidi was Umarov's daughter. And so no one was going to take the little girl away from Lena's family.

Summary: When an NCIS agent turns up dead and Kasie goes unaccounted for, the team must work quickly to find the killer.

Kasie's at her martial arts class, where her instructor points out that she's still struggling to listen to her gut.

As she walks out that night, she's too wrapped up in watching the video of her sparring session to see a mysterious van waiting to snatch her from the dark parking lot. Not to victim-blame, but ma'am, you work at NCIS. You've seen all kinds of dangerous things. Keep your head on a swivel!

In the big orange room, McGee complains about the sluggishness of his devices, and hilariously, his laptop keeps grinding to a halt with a sound like malfunctioning robot gears, which isn't really a thing that computers do.

The slow network doesn't keep the team from getting called to its latest murder, where the team is shocked to find fellow NCIS agent Otis Khatri dead in the house of Lt. Mary Laredo, who's deployed at the moment.

Otis was the person who oversaw NCIS' humanitarian response after wars and natural disasters, and he'd volunteered to watch Laredo's beloved cat, Prince Charming, while she's gone. When the team interviews Otis' sister, she recognizes Tim as "McGeek" and says Otis hadn't wanted to talk about work for the past week or so.

They find evidence of blood at the scene that had been cleaned up after Prince Charming walked through it, which means the missing cat may have bloody DNA on his paws.

So Knight searches for Prince Charming by checking local vets to see if his microchip has been scanned, but is she searching the neighborhood? Posting fliers? Setting tuna out at Laredo's house to lure him out of hiding? It's like she's never searched for a lost pet before.

Oh, and Kasie's also missing, which has Palmer worried. But Parker assures him that she requested a personal day off, and sir, you work at NCIS. You've seen all kinds of dangerous things. If your colleague says it's weird that Kasie's missing work without arranging for anyone to cover for her, listen to him!

Anyway, Palmer discovered sky-high levels of sesame oil in Otis' blood, and since he was horribly allergic and vigilant about checking ingredients before eating anything, Palmer assumes Otis must've trusted the person who gave him the dosed food.

Palmer does his best to process the evidence in Kasie's absence, even busting out the hand-written Abby's Lab for Dummies manual in a sequence accompanied by the techno/punk soundtrack that used to play over Abby's scenes, which is just delightful.

Alas, Abby's manual isn't user-friendly enough, and Palmer executes a command that makes all the computers freak out. Good thing Kasie's in the building to set things right and reveal that the prints on Otis' laptop belong to... Kasie.

She insists on being interrogated in the normal room, but twist, she sits down in the interrogator's seat, asking McGee to account for the multiple shipments of electronic equipment he recently received from China. McGeek says they were parts to fix up an old Barry Smiles robot, aka the most expressive talking bear of the '80s.

This satisfies Kasie, who tells the interrogation room camera that her investigation into the mole at NCIS is officially over. Then she explains to her flabbergasted colleagues that she was recruited by Defense Criminal Investigation Services a few months ago to look for the mole among her colleagues. Even Vance didn't know.

DCIS Agent Eden Grayson explains that they cleared Kasie first, then put her to work. Vance is incredulous that they didn't even give Kasie a support team, especially since she's not an actual agent. She tells Palmer keeping secrets was lonely, and she even used PTO to wrap up her work clearing the team.

Kasie discovers that Otis was using the NCIS system to steal proprietary info from massive oil and tech companies and ransoming it back to them, which is what was slowing down the network.

The team finds one of the company owners who refused to pay the ransom and connect with the guy on a yacht in Ibiza. He says he got a new ransom demand that morning and paid it, but he refuses to say where he sent the money.

To find out who Otis was working with, NCIS needs access to that company's server room, so they send Kasie in through the air vent with the whole team supporting her this time. When Kasie tries to apologize to Knight for the surveillance, Jess shuts her down quick, saying Kasie was just doing her job. Knight is correct, and good for her for making sure Kasie knows it.

As Kasie crawls through the vent, she tells the team over coms that she's proud of the job she did and actually feels closer to them all now. When she drops into the server room, Torres calls her Rambo, but she's clearly channeling Ethan Hunt.

Complications arrive when a young company employee enters the server room, and Kasie's unable to come up with a good cover story for what she's doing there, flailing so hard that the woman asks, "Are you... good?" which is the perfect Gen Z response.

Despite the team assuring Kasie that they have her back, not one of them helps her come up with a good cover story, but she pulls it together on her own and yells at the woman to get out of the server room with her spillable beverage.

Thanks to her quick thinking, the team learns that a Caymans Island account auto-donates the millions in ransomware to charities. In fact, every blackmailed company had defaulted on a public pledge to donate to various charities, which makes Otis a Robin Hood hacker.

And now we know who his killer is thanks to Knight singing Laredo's silly cat song to lure Prince Charming back home. She and Palmer ham-handedly deal with the freaked-out cat. But his paws yield the killers' DNA, which turns out to be...

At Kasie's debrief in the mysterious DCIS van, Grayson jokes that you can't really ask a charity to give the donation back, but Kasie never told Grayson that detail of the case.

By the time the team gets there, a full-on struggle's taking place in the van, and the door flies open to reveal that Kasie managed to subdue the gun-carrying Grayson. Look at our favorite lab tech finally listening to her gut!

Otis noticed the blackmail scheme and brought it to Grayson, who murdered him, then tried to frame him for the Robin Hood scheme.

The episode closes with Vance telling Otis' sister about what a stellar agent and human he was and a more confident Kasie back on the sparring mat.

Summary: NCIS must investigate the Secretary of the Navy when her husband claims she tried to murder him.

Someone walked into the NCIS headquarters to report a crime. He wanted to report three crimes actually. Felix Lassiter went to NCIS because he wanted to report his wife for attempting to murder him and it falls under NCIS's jurisdiction because his wife was their boss. She was the Secretary of the Navy. Her name is Tara Flynn. Their marriage was an opposites attract sort of thing. It also didn't work out because they were in the middle of a divorce and he has been dragging his feet on signing the papers. He thought he could win her back after she kicked him out. He was trying to get her back when he had three almost fatal "accidents" within a week.

Felix believes his wife was the one trying to kill him. There was no one else who wanted him dead. He was a toy model engineer. He considers himself an entrepreneur and he has at least three patents that were pending. But that wasn't why his marriage broke up. It broke up because Felix was a noted conspiracy nut. He always thought everyone was out to get him. His wife Tara finally had enough of him after he accused her of having an affair with the Sultan of Brunei. Tara was also out of the country and so she couldn't be personally behind these "accidents". And everyone had pretty much dismissed Felix when he suffered a cardiac event.

Felix almost died at their headquarters. It was the fourth nearly fatal accident he's gone through and he would have died if they hadn't administered first aid right then and there. Felix was sent to the hospital. The hospital didn't find anything in his blood. Which wasn't the same for Kasie. Kasie tested the blood with other tests and she determined that Felix had been poisoned by a nerve agent. It was one that only a handful of people has access to in the Navy. Felix's wife was one of those people. Tara quickly became a suspect in the multiple attempted murders on Felix's life. He almost got run down by a strange car, something punctured a whole that allowed carbon monoxide into his apartment, and someone broke into his apartment only to destroy his model train.

After they found out he was poisoned by a nerve gas, they had Tara return to the United States. She had been away on a work trip to Amsterdam and she was initially thrown when she was questioned by her own people. They told her that her husband has been poisoned. They asked her about Felix's enemies and she admitted that Felix hadn't told them everything. Felix has a gambling addiction. He gambled his daughter's college fund as well as their life savings. Tara said that Felix owes a lot of money to his bookie. His bookie was Olev Koslov. Tara suspected that Olev was connected to the Russian mob. And so the team looked into it.

They found Olev. He told them that Felix doesn't owe him any money. Felix quit gambling. He's in Gambling Anonymous now. It also turns out that Olev's car was used to almost run down Felix. Only Olev wasn't driving. It was his associate Zero who did the driving. Zero showed McGee the texts he received from Felix to kill him. The texts claimed Felix wanted to end his life but was too scared to do it himself and so the team came to believe Felix tried to kill himself in order to frame Tara. They went to go ask Felix. He was missing from his hospital room. Felix snuck out of the hospital, and he went to somewhere off the grid.

The team spoke to Felix's daughter, Arlene. She said her father hasn't gambled in a while. She herself was married to a gambler and her husband helped her dad get into GA. She also saw the supposed text messages to the hitman. She said her father never wrote like that. She saw them messages from her dad and it shows that Felix still writes everything down. He even ends his sentences in periods. The message to the hitman wasn't like that. It showed emojis and short sentences. Someone used their access to Felix's phone to set up a murder for hire. There was someone that was trying to kill Felix.

The team went looking for him. They found out he checked himself into a motel off of the side of a train track and so they went there only to find a bloody room. The team believed that whoever that trying to kill Felix had found him before they could. They tested the blood in the motel room and it wasn't Felix's. It actually belonged to his son-in-law. Victor has been gambling. He owed Olev fifty grand. He was hoping to kill Felix because Arlene was the sole benefactor to Felix's life insurance. And he tried to kill Felix again at the motel because Felix texted Victor where he was staying to reassure Arlene he was safe.

Victor was arrested for attempted murder. He was going to get divorced. But Felix was found safe and alive only he and Tara weren't getting back together. They had another fight and they both realize they're better off alone.

Production Code: 20008
Summary: After an unknown shooter causes chaos at an annual Thanksgiving 5K, time is of the essence for the NCIS team to find the culprit. Also, Kasie joins Knight for Thanksgiving lunch at Knight's sister's house.

A navy admiral has a stalker. It was Admiral Stock. She has this crazed stalker following her around everywhere. This man even followed her to a marathon for charity that was run by the Navy. The guy showed up wearing an NCIS hat and he falsely identified himself as a federal agent to try and get close to Admiral Stock, but the real NCIS agents stopped him before he could approach her. They asked the guy where he was going. He was searched for weapons. They didn't find any on him and they made sure to identify themselves as the real NCIS agents. They were there for the run to provide additional backup. And they were all in plain clothes because they wanted to blend in with the crowd.

It was just this guy who was wearing NCIS merch. That's what alerted the real agents and two of them were still talking to the guy when an explosion went off by the podium. There was just one person injured in the explosion. The victim was Lieutenant Sarah Giles. She was an aide to the Admiral. She survived the explosion. She first had to have surgery and it was a miracle that no one else was hurt. Everyone initially thought the explosion was a bomb. They asked the stalker about it. Poor Bob had no clue what they were talking about. He was incredibly obsessed with Admiral Stock. He denied ever wanting to hurt her. And he was telling the truth when he said he wasn't involved in the explosion.

The explosion hadn't been a bomb. It was a shooting. Someone was shooting at the people near the stage and it accidentally hit a propane tank and it caused an explosion. Bob couldn't have done that. He was with the NCIS agents when the shooter hit the tank. He was also trying to take photos of the admiral at the time. One of his photos actually captured the shooter. NCIS had an actual photo of the shooter. They were using facial recognition to identify him. Except they didn't need it. The shooter was never after the Admiral. He was always after Special Agent

Knight. Knight was near the stage when the explosion happened. And Knight went on to have dinner with her sister when she was introduced to the shooter.

Not that she knew he was the shooter at the time.

His name is Charlie. He was Knight's sister's boyfriend. Knight and her sister Robin don't get along. They tend to ignore each other only Robin called out of the blue saying she had a surprise. She rented a place near Knight. She wanted her sister to come over for Thanksgiving and see the surprise. Which turned out to be a two-for-one. Robin was now an energy healer. She was also now dating Charlie. It's serious. So serious that Robin wanted to introduce him to his family. Robin hasn't met Charlie's family yet. She first wanted to introduce him to her sister. And even as they were worrying signs that they didn't know each other too well, Robin still announced their engagement.

Robin barely knows the guy. She didn't know he grew up in New York. She didn't know that his brother was in the military and that he was dead because he died during a hostage negotiation run by Knight. Neither Robin nor Knight knew he was dangerous until he kept asking Knight about her job. Knight had brought along Kasie to defuse the tension between her and her sister. Kasie kept trying to bring the conversation around to a safe subject. Only Charlie never took the hints. He kept asking Knight has she ever lost someone on the job. She didn't want to talk about it and that's when he pulled his gun.

Charlie took all three women hostage. They couldn't even call for help on their phones. Charlie had collected the phones earlier in the day and he put them in water. They had no way of calling for help and so they decided to give Charlie what he wanted — a platform. Charlie got to talk about getting justice. He wanted to kill Knight because she failed to talk his brother down a bridge. His brother killed himself. He was dealing with depression and he wanted a way out. Knight tried to talk him down. She tried to get him off the bridge. Nothing worked. Charlie's brother Joe was in too much pain.

Knight remembered Joe. She even has his initials engraved on her watch. She has the initials of everyone she failed to save engraved on that watch and she showed it to Charlie. Charlie could have desisted at that point, but he was still too angry. He still wanted someone to blame for his only surviving family member leaving him. He began shooting at Robin as a way of hurting Knight when the rest of NCIS showed up. McGee, Parker, and Torres had continued their investigation into the shooter. They identified him as Charles Saunders. They found out he never served. They found out his brother killed himself. And that Knight was the lead on the case.

They then tried to get in touch with Knight, failed, and then set about tracking her down. They showed up right around the time that Charlie was pointing a gun at his own head and Knight wrestled it away from him. Everyone was safe. Charlie was going to prison. But Knight and her sister bonded throughout their experience. And they went on to have Thanksgiving dinner together.

Summary: NCIS investigates the death of a college student who was killed while running across the street and had connections to McGee's wife, Delilah.

McGee has written a novel under the pen name Thom E. Gemcity with the lead character named Agent Tibbs. The team gets called to investigate the man hit by the vehicle, Midshipman William Watson. William should have been at NROTC, but was suffering from heat stroke in the middle of winter. McGee has a fanboy moment when he spots William's Louis Vuitton Trainers in his favorite color.

While watching a surveillance video of an alleyway where William was spotted earlier in the day, McGee watches his wife, Delilah, have a clandestine meeting with William. McGee is shocked and concerned and begins calling Delilah, who doesn't answer. Delilah is busy teaching a class at the same school that William went to.

Parker and McGee head to the university to ask Delilah some questions about William. When McGee tells Delilah that William passed away after being poisoned with MDMA, Delilah is determined to help answer any questions involving William's death.

Torres and Knight head to the fraternity that Will was pledging into. Torres searches Will's room and finds a hidden laptop inside his mattress. Hines investigates the contents of Will's laptop and finds that he developed a powerful Cipher. Will has developed a digital skeleton key that can bypass any government-encrypted security program.

Everyone around the office is very nervous that Delilah was involved. Delilah and McGee start bickering because of all the tension and suspicion. Hines explains that William made a copy of the key and downloaded it on a flash drive. Will's keys that have the flash drive on them were wiped down clean with bleach and the copy is missing.

Knight and Torres question one of the frat brothers whose shirt is covered in bleach. He claims to be innocent and tells them that they need to look at Jared. The team stakes out the frat house looking for Jared. When Jared spots the NCIS Agents, he takes off running down the street. A van marked Molly's Mobile Grooming pulls up next to Jared and lets him in before they escape down the street. Parker recognizes the van and knows it is used for FBI undercover operations. Jared is an undercover FBI Agent!

The FBI tells Director Vance that Will was recruited by Belarus and is part of a spy ring. The team figures out that Delilah's TA, Evelyn, was William's handler but didn't kill him. Evelyn has an airtight alibi because she was in the library at the time when William was poisoned. Delilah remembers that Logan, one of Will's frat brothers, took her class but dropped right out. Logan admits he stole the flash drive to change his grades.

Summary: NCIS agents from Washington, D.C., Los Angeles, and Hawai'i are all in D.C. to attend the retirement party of a beloved Federal Law Enforcement Training Center (FLETC) professor, finding themselves jointly investigating his shocking suicide.

Professor Dale Harding has trained several NCIS Special Agents in his long career at FLET-C. He was known as tough but fair and most of his students walked away with a lot of respect for him. All except for Torres that is. Torres didn't really care for the guy.

He still got things for Harding retirement party. Only he complained about it the whole way. He was still complaining when the news came in. Professor Harding died of an apparent suicide. Director Vance didn't want to believe it of the man because he had a great deal of respect for Harding and so he assigned NCIS to investigate Harding's death.

Special Agent in Charge in Tenant was visiting from Hawaii with one of her agents when she appointed herself to the case. Which was a problem because Parker and his team were also working the case although Parker was willing to work with Tennant and Boone. He recognized the chain of command.

Tennant was his superior and so he agreed to work with her. He felt much differently about Special Agents Callen and Hana. Those two also came for the professor's retirement party. They heard about his suicide and raced to the scene where they were the first to arrive and they appointed themselves in charge.

They even cleared the scene before Parker could arrive. Jimmy was wheeling out the body when everyone else finally arrived on the scene and so Parker agreed to work with Callen and Hana as a means of moving the ball in the investigation. Only Callen and Hana ruled it a suicide. Everyone later agreed that Harding killed himself.

They got the autopsy. The autopsy prove the theory. He really did kill himself. They just didn't know why he killed himself. He was retiring from FLET-C. He was cheerful and happy mere moments before he killed himself and he had a ticket to Mexico. It simply didn't make sense why a man with everything to live for will kill himself now.

Harding was with his neighbor a couple of minutes before he did it. She said he was in a good mood. She also said that he got a call on his cell phone and that was odd because none of the NCIS teams could find Harding's cell phone. It vanished after he killed himself. Harding also did his best to delete files from his computer before he died. These deletes files were in fact classified files that were stolen off a Pentagon server.

The Pentagon didn't even know they were missing until Kasie began asking about them once she saw them deleted from Harding's computer. The Pentagon was now in overdrive to deny NCIS the access they need to read those files, but those files could very well help with the case.

Harding did a lot of suspicious things before he died. He changed his tickets from Mexico to Hawaii. He didn't go into work on his last day. He even was going to skip his own retirement party without telling a soul where he was. There were some burn marks and gunshot wounds on his body that also didn't make sense. He was never injured when he was a Marine. It was not in his official file. He must have gotten those wounds doing something off the books. This coupled with those stolen files made everyone question if they really knew him. Was he a good guy? The sever theft was traced back to McGee's credentials and so Callen and Hana interrogated him.

It was them or let DOD interrogate him. Director Vance chose to keep this in house. Callen and Hana interrogated McGee and they learned that he left his phone unlocked when he had lunch with Harding a week ago. Harding was looking at photos of his kids. McGee excused himself to use the bathroom. He was gone only a couple of minutes and in that time his professor stole his login information. Neither McGee nor the rest of them knew why Harding wanted access to those files. He just did. He took them. And with the Pentagon being a problem, the team had to find a way around them in order to read those files.

One of the things they did was visit Harding's office at FLET-C. They found out that Harding usually used floppy disks for work and so hacking the Pentagon seemed a little bit beyond his reach. Harding hid a picture of Gibbs's cabin inside one of those floppy disks. There was also a message on there that send "read the files". It was Hana that was the first to wondered if Harding had hidden a set of those files at the cabin. NCIS Agents went to the cabin. They spotted a man escaping the cabin on a motorcycle and they shot at him and they hit his cell phone which fell out of his pocket. But it wasn't his cell phone. It was Harding's cell phone.

Harding put an app on his phone to record every conversation. So, it caught the last conversation he had before he died. Harding was contacted by a known terrorist by the name of Simon Williams and Williams said Harding's plan to hide the files from him weren't going to work. He was going to come and take them personally. And so Harding killed himself to keep these classified files out of the hands of a terrorist.

And when the agents finally caught the man on the motorcycle, he claimed he was Simon Williams when he wasn't. He was too young to be him. He also said "We're all Simon Williams". It turns out Simon Williams really wanted those files and he sent someone after them. The guy later died, but it turns out Harding had history with the real Simon Williams. Williams was a trainee at FLET-C when Harding cut him from the program because he said he had lone wolf tendencies. Kind of like what he told Torres a week before he was supposed to graduate. And that's why Torres didn't like Harding.

And everyone was supposed to have grabbed dinner after a short break, but Jimmy and Tenant were abducted before that could happen.

The second part of the episode will be aired as NCIS: Hawai'i episode S02E10 titled Deep Fake.

Production Code: 20011
Summary: Parker discovers he's a victim of identity theft while investigating the unusual murder of a Navy ensign. Also, Knight and Jimmy face hurdles in their relationship as their connection heightens.

Navy Ensign Ashley Watts was found dead in a motel room. She lived not that far from the motel. McGee wondered why she wouldn't go to such a place when she lives nearby and Parker told him that there was only one reason why a motel would be needed.

The victim was meeting up with a lover. Someone she couldn't bring home. Someone she probably couldn't be seen with. Parker assumed this person might be married and that his wife found out about Ashley. It could explain why she was murdered in a motel room.

Only McGee looked into who booked the room. The name that popped up was Parker's. It was Parker's name and his credit card that was used to book the room and no one knew why. Parker had never met Ashley before. Luckily, Parker has an alibi on the night of the murder.

He also realized, thanks to this, that someone stole his identity. He had to contact his accountant. He had to freeze all of his accounts. He also had to give Kasie permission to go digging through his digital life and find out who was committing identity theft.

Ashley might even have known about this identity theft. She was an accountant herself for the Navy. She was universally liked and respected at the job. Ashley was a foster kid for a while until she got adopted as a teenager. She was her parents' whole world.

She was their only child and they were so proud of her. When the parents were asked about Ashley's private life, they told NCIS that she was seeing someone. His name was Travis Jacobs. He lived in Virginia. Ashley had roommates. They could have been meeting up at the motel trying to get some measure of privacy.

Except Travis didn't come forward after Ashley died. The team also looked into him and there was no Travis Jacobs. They were able to get a picture of him and with the help of facial rec, they identified him as Ryan Aaronson. He was the son of Joy Aaronson who was also known as Joy Sullivan.

She was Parker's, first love. They were briefly together when they were kids and Parker hasn't seen her in years. She might have told her son about him because someone must have known him well enough to get around his security questions on all of his accounts.

His identity was just stolen. Someone used his information to log into the Department of Defense's mainframe. They accessed information on several Navy servicemen and women. Ashley's information was one of them. NCIS assumed that Ashley was Ryan's mark. He was trying to steal her identity. So, they went looking for Ryan. They checked his mom's place. Joy punched Parker the second she saw him and that's when the truth came out. Joy's parents made the whole family move out of Philly because they wanted to get Joy away from the young Parker.

He was a troublemaker back in the day. Joy was so angry with him that she refused to write back to him or to return any of the letters he sent until he eventually gave up on writing her. But she kept the letters. She put them in a box and once she learned her son was in trouble — she went looking for that box. It later proved to be empty. Her son had stolen the letters to get information on Parker and to steal Parker's identity. Joy said that her ex-husband's crime partner might be involved as well. Joy's ex-husband was in prison for pulling off several petty cons. And Ryan was following in his footsteps.

Ryan started to work with a man named Todd. They targeted the Navy. They pretended to be CIA recruiters to get Ashley to add their account to the official system and they get a check from the Navy. According to Todd, something went wrong. Ashley was keeping secrets. Ryan also made the mistake of falling in love with her. Ryan wanted to back out of the con the moment he fell for Ashley. He came clean to her. She forgave him. They were even trying to undo the system hack. They wanted to start over together.

Once Ryan was later found hiding at his mother's place, Parker was able to arrest him and bring him in for questioning. Ryan came clean by trying to con Ashley. He also said he fell in love with her and that she was more important than the con. He told them about trying to undo what they did. He even mentioned that Ashley started to hide things from him. Which he didn't understand until he found her dead in the motel room. Ryan thought he would get blamed for her death and so he ran. Only Todd was telling the truth. Ashley was keeping secrets.

They tracked Ashley in her final hours back to a storage unit. There was a hidden compartment inside where Ashley was hiding guns, money, and several passports under different names. Ashley wasn't some poor foster kid that landed a good home. She was a foreign spy. Someone was sent to infiltrate the Navy and she must have thought she got lucky when Ryan pretended to be the CIA. But then she fell in love with him. Like actually fell in love. He fell in love with her too. They were both willing to turn their backs on everything else to be together and Ashley was killed because of that.

Parker negotiated a deal with Ryan in which they used Ryan to lure out Ashley's killer. He gets to escape the prison that way and so he agreed to deal and he helped NCIS figure out that Ashley's adoptive parents were actually her Russian handlers. And so those two got arrested for murder as well as espionage.

And the whole thing finally gave Parker the chance to make his move on Joy. She was the one that got away and he still carries a torch for her.

Production Code: 20012
Summary: When an old pal of Torres' comes to him — disheveled and bloodied — for guidance amid a undercover FBI operation and then disappears, NCIS helps track him down. McGee prepares to be a contestant on a popular game show.

An old frenemy of Torres's approached one night outside of the diner. It was NCIS Special Agent Dale Sawyer. He and Torres used to always butt heads a lot. They looked for opportunities to fight with each and so it was surprising that Sawyer would reach out to him of all people.

Sawyer was pretty messed up that night. He was on edge. He was worried about his cover. He was doing an undercover op with the FBI. He was supposed to live as two different people and it was getting to him. He was cracking under the pressure when he approached Torres. Torres said that maybe he should be pulled from the assignment. And Sawyer said he's done and seen too much to let the case collapse without him.

Sawyer told Torres to forget it. He left him outside of the diner and the whole thing didn't sit right with Torres. Torres later tried to contact the FBI about it. They said only Sawyer's handler knew where he was. Torres couldn't get the handler's information, but he took what he learned from that one conversation to investigate where Sawyer might be.

Sawyer mentioned the trains were keeping him up at night. Torres started investigating apartments near the train stations the next morning. He was looking into where Sawyer might be when they got a call about a body.

A body was found in the trunk of a burnt out car. It was near the train station. It was too burned up to be identifiable at first glance. Sawyer did look antsy when Torres last saw him and so Torres was worried it was Sawyer that was in the trunk. Only Jimmy performed an autopsy on the body. It wasn't Sawyer. It was an FBI Agent. FBI Special Agent Greg Parlamis was undercover with Sawyer. They were posing as truckers. They went dark three weeks ago and their handler hasn't heard anything from them. And then this happens.

The FBI were getting worried about them. They were figuring out what to do when Parlamis's body showed up and they naturally threw dirt on Sawyer. To them, the NCIS Agent had to be the reason why the op went bad. The FBI said Sawyer was either dead or he was hiding.

They especially started to point the blame when they heard that Sawyer reached out to Torres and might have blown his cover. Torres actually grew upset with the FBI were disregarding Sawyer's safety. He told them it was their responsibility to keep those men safe and that they failed the job.

The FBI then reminded Torres that they didn't want Sawyer originally. They first approached Torres. But Torres was early in his sobriety. He wanted to take time to focus on himself and so he passed. The FBI next offered for Sawyer. Only Sawyer accepted. Sawyer has a reputation for being smug and arrogant. Everyone assumed he took the offer because he wanted to prove how great it was at it and unfortunately it looks like something went wrong. The gun that was used on Parlamis was actually Sawyer's service weapon.

The FBI believed Sawyer killed his partner because he gotten in over his head. NCIS thought differently. They looked into the case. Some truckers were believed to be involved in heists. There was one obvious suspect named Wade Cutler. Cutler called in sick every day of the heists. He likes to hang out at a known trucker bar called "Triple Deuce". The bar was known for being loud and for having a mechanical bull that makes animal noises. The last time that Sawyer called his mom — she said she heard shouting and what sounded like a barn.

Torres went to the bar. He pretended to be a trucker. He butt heads with another trucker and got into a fight. Only Sawyer broke it up by pulling a gun on Torres. Torres was able to talk his way out of trouble. He even got to meet Cutler. He charmed him. He ended up successfully infiltrating Cutler's crew, but it also gave him a chance to talk one on one to Sawyer. Sawyer did kill Parlamis. Parlamis was stealing money from Cutler. Sawyer found out about it and confronted him. And Parlamis went for his gun first.

Sawyer said he had to kill him. It was self-defense. He killed him and he told Cutler he killed him because Parlamis was actually a cop and a rat and so it was Cutler's idea to burn the body like he did. Cutler wanted to send a message though the message ended up saying that Sawyer was in over his head. Sawyer went to go see Torres on the night he killed Parlamis. His head was all turned around. He just needed to talk to someone and that someone was Torres. Torres tried to pull Sawyer out of the op. It was Sawyer that refused.

Sawyer said it was personal. He found out Cutler's crew was dealing in the same drugs that killed his sister and that's why he wants to see the case through to finishing them, but someone recognized Torres as a cop. They then pointed a finger at Sawyer for vouching for Torres. And so the both of them were about to get killed when the rest of NCIS showed up and helped them arrest the whole crew.

Sawyer got to see through his case and it ultimately brought him closer to Torres.

And McGee was supposed to take part in a game show, but it got cancelled at the last minute while they open an investigation into another contestant on an impossible winning streak.

Production Code: 20013
Summary: In preparation for a role, a world-renowned actress shadows the NCIS team as they investigate a decapitation case.

The team was brought in after someone sent a severed head to a Navy Lieutenant. They even brought along their ride to the scene. Special Agent Knight was ordered by Director Vance himself to let a famous actress watch her in action and so Chloe Marlene went with them to the scene.

Chloe wanted to get insight into an NCIS REACT Agent's mindset because she was going to play one in a film. The Navy also was hoping that the film becomes a great recruitment video for them and yet allowing Chloe to see everything was probably a mistake. She almost got blown up on Day 1. And that's in addition to her seeing that severed head.

The delivery was actually made by a robot delivery service. The robot followed Lieutenant Renee Harlan around until she agreed to accept the delivery and that's when she saw the head. But the killer using a robot delivery service was great in terms of the case.

Those items were usually recorded before they were put in the box so the company could access the video only the killer thought of that. He planted a bomb in the device that was pressure sensitive. The bomb went off moments after the head was removed. And it was Knight that saw the timer go off.

She was forced to push the robot into the water to minimize damage. Oddly Chloe was very calm about being almost blown up. She said that her acting coach had taught her to disassociate. She made herself believe that this was all a movie and that the bomb and head had been props.

It helped her get through the case. Or it did until the sun went down. It's hard to be confident in the dead of night when no one else was around. Chloe did her best to push through it and unfortunately not long after she did this came got more complicated.

Kasie was able to identify the victim. His name was Roscoe Sanchez. He thankfully had a pacemaker and nowadays those things were equipped with a GPS tracker. Kasie used that to get a location on the rest of Sanchez's remains. The NCIS Agents went to that location expecting to find their killer.

They ended up finding a guillotine as well as the severed heads of two other victims. Their killer was a serial killer. The only thing all the victims had in common was that they had two different colored eyes. They had heterochromia.

Remember that lieutenant that got sent the bomb? Renee was married to a man with heterochromia. It seems that people with the condition were usually killed in the medieval days for possibly being possessed and the wives were also killed if they were pregnant because the condition is hereditary. That's what the killer was trying to do by sending that bomb to Renee. She was pregnant. The killer couldn't decapitate a baby in the womb and so he was trying to kill the mother to stop the child from being born. And once the team realized this, they tried to warn Renee and her husband.

Though they were sadly too late in doing so. They arrived at Renee's home to find out someone had already broken in and had abducted the couple. The couple had tried to put up a fight. It just hadn't been enough. They were gone and the team was looking for them by trying to find their killer. The last part wasn't hard because Sam Novak wanted to be found. Novak was proud to have killed off a bunch of people with the same condition. He thought he was saving the world by removing evil. He didn't care about their lives or that they were good people. Or even that they were harmless to him.

He considered a similar chance of different color eyes as being a stand-in for the evil eye. Novak was quickly found thanks to his craziness and he quickly confessed to being the killer. The only thing he didn't want to do was to tell them where Renee and her husband were. He also alluded to them running out of time and that indicated he planted another bomb. NCIS tried to get him to tell them where they were, but he refused. He said he'd only tell Chloe. He saw her on the video delivery service. He knew she was connected to the case and he wanted to meet a celebrity. And so NCIS asked Chloe to do them this huge favor.

They asked her to talk to Novak. Only Chloe had been nervous about it. She was an actress. She could screw up at her job and do another take and she couldn't do that here. Not in this situation. She still agreed to go through with it because she thought she was making a difference, but Novak was a sociopath that enjoyed toying with her. He bragged about knowing where her mother was. He frightened her by saying NCIS didn't have a single piece of evidence on him and that he could get out of there whenever he wanted. And so she left the room in tears because she was that scared of him.

Chloe later convinced him to return to the room. NCIS came up with a game plan. They figured out how to manipulate Novak and he revealed to him why he was killing those people. He has heterochromia. He knew himself as evil and he thought everyone else with the condition must be the same. But he revealed where he thought the bodies of his victims were because they convinced him that time ran out. And that's how the team was able to save the Harlans before the bomb went off.

The Harlans were safe.

Novak will never see the light of day again.

Chloe also knew now how to play her character and Torres got to play a dead body in the film.

Summary: Parker grapples with his emotions when a con man from his past turns up as a murder suspect.

Jimmy went into tonight's episode wanting an assistant. He himself was Ducky's assistant for years back when Ducky was the Medical Examiner. Now that he wants one for himself to help with the workload, he kept getting denied.

Jimmy was such a nice guy that he didn't ask why he was getting denied. He was just going to let it go and it had actually been Parker who pushed him to confront the director about this. They went to the boss. They asked him for an assistant for Jimmy and that's when they got told the whole story. Kasie had a recent trial run with two potential assistants and neither worked out.

Those people only worked for her for a day. They still somehow got severance packages because of a glitch in the system and so that's why there wasn't a budget for an assistant for Jimmy right now. Director Vance said it wouldn't be a permanent thing.

They just needed time to fix the glitch and Jimmy will get an assistant at a later date. Which Parker thought was unfair. If a call hadn't come in about a new case, Parker would still be in the director's office trying to bribe him with pastries. And so Parker went into this new case being his usual self.

Very zen. Very calm.

Then there was a shift. Parker and the others were called to a scene of a robbery/homicide. The victim was Naval Ensign Clyde Sims. He was transporting drugs that were taken during a raid and someone killed him in order to get their hands on his supply. Some of the drugs fell out. The team took a look at them and they had no clue what that "W" stood for. Not until Parker took a look at them himself. Parker saw that and he stormed off. He went dark on his team. He returned to work the next morning with an attitude.

Parker snapped at everybody. Director Vance had to call him off Kasie because Kasie wasn't moving fast enough for him and that's when he told everyone what that "W" stood for. It stood for Wills. Clayton Wills to be specific. He was a big-time drug lord that crippled Parker's partner back when he was working in the FBI. Parker has an obsession with finally taking down Wills and he wasn't going to let anything get in the way of that. He even showed up to work without pastries. He wanted Wills and he basically ordered his team around like they were dogs to get the man.

Production Code: 20015
Summary: Parker's dad, who is temporarily living with him, assists the team in their investigation. NCIS investigates the death of a ride-share driver who was found after a car accident.

The episode begins with Petty Officer First Class Sam Vega who was found dead from an apparent car accident. There were no signs that he tried to slow down or that he was wearing a seatbelt. NCIS caught this case and they initially thought Sam might have tried to kill himself. Only Jimmy proved that wasn't the case when he found a puncture wound in Sam's neck. Sam had been dosed before his "accident". There were later evidence indicating that someone used a brick to way down the pedal and so this accident was in fact murder. Sam had been murdered. And that seemed hard to believe at first because Sam didn't have any clear enemies.

Sam seems to have lived under the radar. He didn't make enemies at work. He also had a side job as a ride share driver and so odds are he met with someone dangerous after picking them up, but NCIS did check his home. They found it vandalized. Someone had written in blood the word "liar" on Sam's wall. They also broke literally everything possible in that one apartment. NCIS tested the blood. It wasn't Sam's. It might have been Lisa's. Lisa was Sam's ex-girlfriend. They recently broke up because of something Sam allegedly did. And Lisa started sending him threatening texts right after this breakup.

NCIS brought Lisa in for questioning. She revealed it was her blood that she wrote the word "liar" in. She said she did that after she went to Sam's apartment and she found herself alone with his laptop. Lisa naturally went snooping through his emails until she found several of them addressed to Marilyn. Sam wrote about missing Marilyn. He said he couldn't wait to see her. Which set off Lisa because she hadn't seen Sam all that much since he came back from deployment and so she assumed he was cheating on her.

Lisa however claims not to have killed Sam. She hadn't known he was dead when she first began talking to NCIS. They had to break the news to her. But Lisa was quick to point blame. She started talking about how much Sam loved her. She even claimed that Marilyn must have known that Sam would never leave her and that's why this Marilyn killed him. NCIS had to consider that angle in spite of how farfetched it might sound. They looked into Marilyn and they found out she wasn't having an affair with Sam.

Marilyn was an elderly woman in her eighties. She hired Sam to help out around her rooms at the retirement home. They met on an app called Grand Bubby. Sam hadn't told his girlfriend he was picking up odds jobs because then he would have to explain his online gambling. Sam was a gambling addict. He was losing a lot of money very fast. He started doing the odd jobs to help pay them off only that hadn't been enough for him. Sam started doing Grand Bubby because the app was helping young people fleece the elderly.

The app connects young people with the elderly. Sam has gotten matched up at least four times before Marilyn and his former clients have all left for him money in their wills. He also always seemed to pick the ones that just got diagnosed with a terminal illness. Its likes he knew which ones to rob. This was on top of being paid twenty dollars an hour to spend time with these people. He was fleecing them and there was a chance that Sam was killed because he screwed over one of his victim's families.

NCIS were suspicious of the Grand Bubby app. The Grand Bubby app was set up at one specific retirement home and so Parker sent in a spy. Parker sent in his dad, Roman. Roman had gotten kicked out of his retirement home for flirting too much. He was driving all the women at his former community wild and they kicked him out to save the peace. Only Roman still held onto the charm. He went in wearing a wire and a comms piece. He quickly found women to flirt with and he was propositioned on day one by two different women.

It was all too much for Parker. He had Knight listen in on his dad while he followed the lead. He found out that Sam was in communication with the director of Sunshine Pines. He thought that must mean that the director was helping him and that wasn't the case at all. Sam may have been taking money from the elderly, but he was using that same money to reinvest with the community. He paid for upgrades. He paid for special classes for them. Sam also used his gambling problem to make a lot of money on the side and so he wasn't fleecing anyone. He was a genuinely a nice guy.

It was Marilyn who wasn't what she seemed. Marilyn's late husband was an art thief. She would befriend sailors on Grand Bubby and ask them to pick up packages for her knowing that Customs wouldn't check sailors. But Sam realized something was off. He knew the frame of a painting was a lot older than the painting it showed. He brought that up with Marilyn and Marilyn had her lover murder him. And this was all revealed after Torres decided to visit Marilyn because he thought the old lady might feel lonely without Sam and ended up catching her trying to sell the painting.

After Marilyn and her lover were arrested, Parker's dad chose to move fulltime into that retirement home. He liked the people there. Sam's renovations made it a great place to live and so Roman found a place for himself. It got him out of Parker's hair. And it made him appreciate Parker for taking him in like he did because not everyone's kids were that nice.

Summary: The NCIS team jumps into motion to investigate who is responsible for a potential bio terror attack at a strip mall parking garage. Also, Knight's father deals with a health scare while in Japan.

There was a possible bio terror attack at a Navy Recruitment Center. NCIS were called in to investigate. Parker and his team were told that whoever tried to enter the center or the connecting parking garage had lost consciousness.

There were two cops that went in there when they hadn't known about the danger and neither of them walked out on their own accord. The cops hadn't wanted to send any more of their people inside. It was up to NCIS to enter the area. They wore body suits and they helped as many people get to a gurney as possible. And they also found out what had caused everyone to pass out.

Someone had left behind an abandoned cannister. The cannister must have held something truly serious because whatever was inside was enough to knock out everyone in a large parking garage and that was with ventilation. But ultimately everyone seemed on the road to recovery. They later came to at the hospital. There was nothing serious about their condition. The most they suffered from was a knock on the head when they passed out. It was the weirdest terrorist attack the team had ever seen.

Except they later learned this wasn't about terrorism. It was about good old fashion greed. The cannister was used to knock out everyone in the building. The people who set it off had wanted access codes as well as banking information of some people in the area. Most of these places belonged to the DC power players.

The ones who literally control policy. There was a lot of money at play with these people and that's why they were targeted. It wasn't about the Navy at all. And so NCIS became concerned for people that might have been exposed in the theft.

They began calling around to everyone whose information was exposed. McGee got a lot of people blaming him personally for what happened and there were quite a few of "I want to talk to your manager".

The rich and the famous have gotten used to controlling things. They demanded that NCIS capture these thieves and they hated going through the motions of changing their passwords. They probably used the same password for everything. McGee and others got DNA from that cannister. They knew they were looking for Phillip Legrand.

Legrand was wanted by the FBI. He was an expert thief and the knockout gas he used hadn't even belonged to him. He stole that too. NCIS began looking for Legrand. They also hadn't heard back from US Senator Constance Miller's people because she was flying back to the United States. But no one was answering at her house either. Miller has a live in housekeeper. NCIS went to her house and they found the housekeeper passed out on the floor from another cannister. And they came across Dorothy in a bodysuit.

Dorothy was one of the people they rescued from the parking garage. It turns out Dorothy was in fact Legrand's daughter and she was doing everything possible to steal from the senator because she was trying to rescue her father. Dorothy and her father steal from people. They make sure to take from the rich. They never hurt anyone. They also didn't do jobs for other people. They have a code. Only someone contacted Dorothy a couple of weeks back. They were trying to hire her and she turned down the job because of the code.

Then she returned to her camper to find the place ransacked and her father missing. She gets another mysterious text telling her to rob the senator's safe. They wanted a hard drive that was in there. Which didn't make sense to the senator because the only thing she has on that hard drive were a bunch of pictures. She has to travel a lot because of her job and she likes taking photos with people, but her passion was taking photos of baked goods. She loved eating baked goods around the world. And so the hard drive seemed harmless.

But someone wanted it enough to abduct Legrand. Dorothy was just trying to save her dad. Her story especially touched Special Agent Knight because Knight's father wasn't feeling well and somehow he ended up on a ventilator. He even needed surgery. Knight was going to fly to Japan to be with her dad when she saw how much pain Dorothy was in and she decided to stay on to help recover Dorothy's dad. There wasn't anything she could do to save her own father only she thought she could save Legrand.

They were going to give the kidnapper what he wanted. They were going to give him a copy of the hard drive to get Legrand back and they even pretended that Dorothy double crossed them because they suspected that she was being watched. Dorothy did everything she was supposed to. She went to the meeting place. She saw her dad beaten up. She handed over the hard drive and NCIS moved in to arrest the man behind it all. Another person that they rescued from the garage. He claimed his name was Nate Billings. Only that wasn't his name.

He was actually a Russian spy. He wanted the hard drive because the senator has a photo with herself and three other sleeper Russian spies that helped with her campaign. It all seemed very suspicious, but they couldn't ask Nate because State Department took him and they were working with Russia to send him back to his homeland. And so NCIS had to let it go.

And Jimmy surprisingly came through for his girlfriend. He talked to her dad's doctors. He was able to theorize what led to the initial infection and so he saved her dad's life. Something Knight was never going to forget.

Summary: NCIS works to solve the murder of a Marine private who appears to have been killed for helping an Afghan refugee. Also, Jimmy navigates the pressure of parenting his teenage daughter, who is eager to go out on an unchaperoned group date.

Jimmy's daughter was growing up. Victoria was even going on her first group date. Or she was until Jimmy decided to throw a tantrum about it. He heard that his daughter was doing on a group date with her crush and he decided to cancel the whole event because he hadn't trusted the boys in the group. He especially didn't trust Austin. Austin was the boy that Vic couldn't stop talking about. She was only excited about the group date because she was hoping it would lead to an actual date with Austin.

Vic was so excited about that possibility that she accidentally spoke too loudly. Jimmy overheard her. He started to freak out that Vic was already using the word "date". He wanted to put a stop to it and so Special Agent Knight had to tell him that Vic was bound to date eventually. Just let her have this.

It wasn't a one on one date. It was a group date. It was the safest of all dates. Vic deserved the chance to grow up at her own pace. Not on Jimmy's. Jimmy probably would have said more if a new case hadn't come in.

Marine Private William Huxley had been murdered in his garage. He was stabbed in the neck with what appeared to be a kitchen knife and he slowly bled out.

Now, Bill didn't have family. He was never married and he didn't have kids. He used all of his spare time to either bake or cook. He would use his amazing baking skills to raise money for an Afghan refugee center. Bill did as much as he could to help out his former allies. It turns out Bill was leading an elite Marine force when he decided to go AWOL because he went back to Afghanistan.

Bill was trying to get as many allies out of Afghanistan as he could. He just couldn't save everyone. He eventually got demoted to line cook after he returned stateside because of the whole AWOL thing.

Only Bill still wanted to help as many people as he could. He started baking. He would take on baking jobs to raise money and he would funnel it right back into the Afghani center. Bill was practically a saint. It's a shame not everyone saw that. Bill got into quite a few fights before he died. He was fighting with Karen Graham.

The literal Karen was upset with him because she ran her own baking company. She was doing fine until Bill set himself up as a competitor. She accused Bill of taking all of her clients. She even yelled at him through his Ring doorbell except she wasn't the killer. She has an alibi for the murder.

She was with her boy toy at the time. Also, Bill got into a fight with Mateen Jamaah a few hours before he died. Mateen was an Afghani refugee. Bill had gotten him out of Afghanistan. He simply failed to rescue Mateen's parents in time before they were killed by the Taliban. And so that's what Mateen was holding against him.

Mateen couldn't stand Bill. He stayed away from him as much as possible until one day they were seen having a heated discussion. Bill was asked about it. He told the pastor that ran the center that it had been nothing. Then Mateen didn't show up at night to help them make gift packages for new refugees. NCIS went to his work where they ran into other refugees only Mateen took off when he saw them. The agents tried to chase after him and Torres took a hit to the head. He had a concussion afterwards.

It was so bad that a refugee who used to be a surgeon had to treat him at the supermarket. Torres was down for a couple of minutes, but he was soon back on his foot. His people in the meantime had found Mateen. Mateen had been building a bomb. They saw some men take it with them. They later learned why Mateen was involved. He wasn't a terrorist. He was a scared fiancé. His fiancé Asal was stuck in a Turkey refugee camp. The real terrorists were threatening to kill her if Mateen didn't make a bomb for them. And so that's what he did.

He gave the bomb. Only the bomb was a dud. Mateen didn't want to hurt anyone. He just wanted to save his fiancé. Mateen then reached out to Bill for help. Bill owes him after failing to save his parents. Bill said that he could save Asal and they'd be good. Then Bill dies and the terrorists moved up the timeline for when the bomb was to be dropped off. It's why NCIS failed to stop the hand off of the bomb. And so they looked into who was extorting Mateen to get a bomb, they found out that Asal had been approved for permanent residency in the States.

It was actually the refugee center that was holding up her papers. NCIS went to go question the pastor and he had been killed. They got a print from a bullet casing. It lead to a white nationalist. Someone who wants to kill every minority and those that aren't Christians. But the bomb blew up after they made it to the White Nationalist camp. It killed off most of the white nationalists. It turns out someone had fixed the bomb. They got it to work again and they sent it off to hide their part in the crime. And that someone was the woman who ran the refugee center.

She was White Nationalist and she wanted to blame a crime on a refugee to hide her own fingerprints. She was arrested and a refugee took over the running of the center. Mateen meanwhile got probation. And his fiancé was put on the next flight to the states.

Summary:	The NCIS team digs deep to investigate a Navy lieutenant who's accused of trying to murder her husband but has no memory of the attack. Also, Kasie navigates a potential medical scare.

NCIS were called in to investigate an attempted murder. The victim was Logan Donahue. He was stabbed in the stomach with some kitchen scissors and so suspicion naturally fell on the wife. Lieutenant Rachel Donahue was seen leaving the house in a hurry.

Plus, everyone figured it was the wife because that's usually the case in such disputes. Parker was about to issue a BOLO for the wife when she surprised them all. She came home. She had no clue why NCIS was there or why there was blood in her kitchen. She demanded answers on why they were at her house and Parker was bold enough to say it was because she stabbed her husband.

Not that Rachel remembers doing so. She claims that the last thing she remembers was getting home the night before. Rachel was in the military and she often has to travel a lot for work.

She barely gets to see her husband because she's so busy. It also didn't help that Logan has a demanding job as well. They were operating on barely seeing each other and yet Rachel claims they were rock solid. Rachel said she loves her husband. He loves her. She hasn't been herself in a while because she has been feeling off lately and so she had a workup done with the doctor.

Rachel signed a HIPAA waiver so that NCIS could see her file. She was perfectly healthy. She did ask her doctor for a psychological evaluation only she was all over the place. There was no firm diagnosis. NCIS had a theory she was faking being crazy to get out of murder.

They thought she was working on her defense months in advance and they even got her doctor to agree that she might have been faking her symptoms. It would explain why it was all over the place. They all thought she was faking insanity in order to get out of a murder charge. And Rachel herself was helping in that regard.

Rachel began researching if she was insane or not about six weeks ago. She asked the doctor to run psychological tests on her around the same time. She didn't have a history of mental illness and so everyone figured she was faking until they saw her psychosis for themselves.

They saw Rachel freak out before passing out. Rachel was later treated and it was revealed that she has been overdosing on a thyroid medication. This medication causes memory lapses. It also caused violent outbursts and so Rachel had been telling the truth that something was wrong with her.

Only she didn't do it to herself. Rachel never willing took the medication. She has a device that was implanted in her arm about six weeks ago and that's when she began experiencing all of her symptoms. Rachel wasn't a killer after all. She was actually another victim. They looked into who would implant the device in Rachel and it turns out that she was put under recently for a root canal. Her dentist has a history of being in money trouble. He magically erased his debt about six weeks ago when the implant was put in Rachel's arm.

NCIS tracked down Dr. Kimball. He admitted he has a gambling problem and he said he was paid to put the implant in Rachel's arm. He didn't know who paid him. It was all done online. He was just the middleman and so NCIS still arrested him, but they also went looking for who would want to harm Rachel. They tracked down the manufacturer of that device that was delivering the medication. It was revealed that the one they took out of Rachel's arm was a prototype. One that a very small group had access to until Rachel's husband shut down the program.

Logan got a bunch of people fired from the program. He works with the FDA. He shut down a program he felt was too risky and that program then went to fire about forty people from the implantation program. The people he fired have been sending threatening messages to him. They've even threatened to ruin his life. NCIS looked into it and they found out that someone was waiting outside the couple's house one night and they believed that man was there to readminister the medication through implant.

NCIS did track down the man that sent the threatening email. It turns out he wasn't the one that drugged Rachel. He was just a blackmailer. He saw Logan swipe one of the implants when he came around to shut down the place and he thought he could blackmail his way into getting a piece of the cut. It was Logan who took the implant. It was Logan whose been drugging his wife. He even had the audacity to play the victim when she came around to apologize to him for stabbing him. And right after that, he checked himself out of the hospital without telling a soul.

Logan went on the run. He didn't tell his wife he was leaving and so NCIS began looking for him. They found out that Logan has opened several credit cards in Rachel's name. He wanted rack up some debt in her name to prove she's financially unstable. It turns out he's been setting himself up to get financial control over and he started about four months ago. Long before she became "sick". Logan had been hiding the fact that Rachel's cousin left her a trust fund worth a lot of money and he wanted that money.

There was just one problem with gaining all those funds. Logan didn't want to remain married to Rachel and he couldn't divorce her because of the way the trust fund was established. So, he was drugging her into insanity in order to get a conservatorship over her. He then went on the run when his plan turned against him and he almost died. That's what happens when you make her wife go crazy. But Rachel hunted him down. She got his confession out of him on why he did it and she made sure to capture it on tape. NCIS had followed her. They arrested Logan and now he faces jail time. Aint that funny!

Kasie also heard she has a mass and so she dug out her New Year goals because she wanted to complete them all, but the Director talked her into living for the day.

Summary: Agent Knight goes viral for saving a mother and child from a potentially fatal car accident.

NCIS Special Agent Knight was driving into the Navy Yard when she witnessed an accident. This woman was driving crazily. She almost crashed into Knight's car. She did crash her car into a bush. It caught fire. Knight became concerned for the people still inside. She got mother and child out of the car.

She went back to rescue a man in there, but a huge explosion knocked her off her feet. It also killed the man that was inside. Knight didn't know what happened. How it all went wrong? Knight had to get treated for a burn wound on her arm and so she took the time to ask the people she saved about what happened.

The mother was really cagey. She didn't want to go into detail much less give her name. She also tried to leave with her son when she noticed that cops were on the scene and so Knight came to suspect that something was going on. She stopped the woman from leaving. She talked her into going to the hospital with her son.

Knight reminded them that they were in an accident. They needed to get checked out. Knight also dealt with the cops. She went to Parker with her suspicions. She told him that she thought there was more to this car accident. And Parker agreed to let her stay on with this case.

The case would normally have gone to MPD, but Parker pulled rank. The accident did happen on Navy Yard property. It was technically their jurisdiction. Parker just had to run with it. He later made sure that it was Knight that questioning the surviving duo. Knight found out the mother's name is Reyna.

Her son's name is Adam. Reyna claimed she was driving her brother Daniel to the hospital when they got into a car accident. She also said she didn't want to talk to police because she wasn't an American citizen.

Reyna was an illegal immigrant. Her son was an American. She was afraid she might get deported and her son put in foster care. She didn't want to leave him alone for a minute for fear they would be separated, but she needed to get an MRI at the hospital. Adam wasn't allowed to come with her.

Reyna got taken by a nurse and that was the last they saw of her because she disappeared right after that. The nurse claims that Reyna attacked her before fleeing. There was no sign of Reyna. They didn't know where she could have gone. They just knew she left her son behind.

Adam was so angry at being left behind that he lashed out at Knight. He blamed her for what was happening. He said if she hadn't told his mom to go to the hospital that none of this would happen and so Adam was being really mean to Knight. He wanted someone to blame for his mom leaving him. Knight became the safest target. Nevermind that Reyna lied about a few things. Daniel wasn't her brother. He was her handler. Daniel Tanner was a DEA Agent. He had Reyna spying on the Serrano cartel.

Something must have gone wrong because Daniel was shot before the car accident. Reyna was taking him to the hospital when they got into accident and he died in the car fire. NCIS continued to dig into Reyna. They found out that she didn't leave her son behind. Her nurse had arranged for her to be kidnapped at gunpoint. The nurse was apparently working with the Serranos. She later claimed they threatened her into doing it. She gave them descriptions just not any names. And they took it from there.

DEA Agent Raymond Frank was assisting NCIS with the case. He's the one that told them about Daniel. He even mentioned that Daniel recruited Reyna because he thought she was tough to handle the life of being an informant. Daniel had liked Reyna. He told his bosses that she has in her to go the long haul as long as she was guaranteed a visa at the end of it. Only something was holding up the visa. Reyna was getting antsy. Reyna's son said she got a call about a friend being in trouble and then she left before coming back with Daniel in the passenger seat.

She grabbed her son. She tried to drive too fast to the hospital when she got into the car accident. The Serranos found her at the hospital because of the video. Some skateboarder had recorded Knight rescuing Reyna and Adam. He posted it online. The media started calling Knight "Wonder Woman". It began trending. It's why no doubted people when they started asking what happened to everyone that Knight saved and the media said they were taken to a hospital. It was the video that risked Reyna's safety.

Reyna was grabbed by the Serranos. They knew she was being taken to the boss, Matteo Serrano. They went looking for her by tracking down Matteo and they eventually found her. They found Reyna safe and alive. They also were forced to kill Matteo, but certain things weren't making sense. Why did they let Reyna live? Reyna admitted that she gave a recording of Matteo Serrano to Daniel. She suspected that it got destroyed in the car fire and so her son surprised her. Adam was a DJ. He likes making remixes.

He saw the recording in the backseat and he thought it was for him. He then used it in a song. The recording was piece back together. It led back to Agent Frank. Frank was Serrano payroll. He's the one that killed Daniel. He's the one that was holding up Reyna's visa. And he's the one that killed Matteo to try and cover up what he did.

Adam saved the day, his mother was getting her visa, and Frank was making a deal to save his own skin.

Adam eventually made a remix for Knight in thanks for her help in protecting his mom.

Summary: NCIS works to solve the murder of a senator's daughter who has a rebellious reputation and large online following: Jimmy gets competitive with an old college rival.

The body of a Jane Doe was found at a park. She had a Navy tattoo. It made the local cops believe that she could be Navy or perhaps former Navy and so they passed his case to NCIS. NCIS needed help with identifying the victim. She didn't have ID.

There was also nothing in her car to give them an idea who she was however there were signs that she traveled to a senator's home. She visited the home of Senator Greyson not long before she died and it wasn't some seedy affair. The senator was her mother. The victim's name was Amanda Grayson. She was known as a problematic child.

Amanda could be upbeat one moment or belligerent in the next. She has a drinking problem. She also had an attitude problem. She had gotten expelled from several schools.

She got in trouble with the law and her mom worked out a deal for her to join the Navy. Everyone had hoped the military would give her some much needed discipline. Amanda chose to instead go her own path. She got written up several times for infractions. The Navy was going to discharge her. And she was on CurioCam.

CurioCam was one of those sites that allows their clients to post anything to their subscribers. Only Amanda wasn't doing porn or even stripping. She was making MSR videos. She had videos of her making soothing noises and that got her thousands of subscribers. There was one guy in particular who gave off the creep vibe. He watched every video Amanda ever posted. He left comments under all of them saying he loved her. He couldn't wait to be with her. He also mentioned a few threats a couple of times because he didn't like that she was ignoring him.

The creepy guy's name is Arthur Vernon. He was married once before. His wife left him because he was psychotic and abusive. She even took out a restraining order against him.

He was the obsessive type. He had a shrine in his apartment building dedicated to Amanda. He was obsessed with her and everyone suspected he was their killer. They brought him for questioning. They asked him about Amanda. They tried to shake him and he was calm. Too calm. He said he was at work at an army supply store.

He said his boss saw him there. They later checked out his alibi. His boss saw him for thirty minutes in a two hour window. He has no idea what Arthur did before or after. They also found out a WWII gas mask had been used on Amanda for several hours. This same mask was on display at Arthur's job. Arthur was reported to have a fascination with it. The temporary forensic pathologist had sworn that Arthur was their man. Amanda's mother the senator didn't entirely trust NCIS. She wanted to take matters into her own hands and she had outside people brought into this investigation.

Miles Bauer was known for working high-profile murders. He was famous. He was considered an expert in his field and yet he was no match for Jimmy. Jimmy found out that Amanda was taking a medication that would mean she ran hot while she was alive. The additional heat also meant their time of death was off. Amanda died hours earlier than their initial findings. Which meant Arthur couldn't have killed Amanda. He had a stronger alibi earlier that day and there were plenty of witnesses throughout the whole murder window who would claim Arthur was at a doctor's appointment.

Miles didn't like being shown up by someone he considers his inferior. Nevermind that back at med school it was Jimmy that was the rising star. It was Jimmy who was sought out by the Mayo Clinic until Miles somehow misplaced the message telling Jimmy his appointment had been moved. Jimmy lost out at the job. Miles went on to become a star and still NCIS followed Jimmy's lead on the case. They changed the murder window until another woman's body showed up. This new victim was also on CurioCam. Her name was Lori Nelson.

Lori was killed just like Amanda. Arthur was also missing. The senator assumed that Arthur killed both women and that Jimmy had been wrong about the murder window. The senator was demanding he be fired. Jimmy was benched, but the case wasn't sitting right with the team. They thought it looked too much like Arthur Vernon. As if someone was setting him up. They kept digging and they found a video that Amanda had saved to her cloud. The video detailed she was sexually abused at her private school for troubled kids.

She was abused by a donor to the school. His name is Raylan Marsh. Marsh was also bankrolling her mother's fundraising and so it was the senator's chief of staff that killed Amanda. He didn't want the Marsh secret coming out or ruining his career with the senator. He confessed to everything. There was also evidence to back it up. He didn't wear gloves with the second victim and his prescription ointment had gotten on Lori's remains.

And so Jimmy was telling the truth, but it was Miles who got all the credit in the press.

Summary:	When a suspicious murder occurs in the classified section of the National Archive, NCIS must investigate a string of Russian spy encounters that may be linked to the crime.

Human blood was found on the floor of the classified section of the National Archives. The janitors were the ones to find it and they followed the blood until they found the body of Navy Reservist Louis Dacey. He was a security guard at the museum. He was stabbed to death.

Jimmy was able to place his time of death on the night before. NCIS looked into anyone who visited that wing around that same time. They found out that there was only one person who was there. Her name is Senator Constance Miller. She's the one that those Russian spies were all interested in. And she was also the woman that Parker was dating.

Parker had left his team to do the paperwork so that he could finally enjoy some personal time. He ended up making a date with Constance. She came over to his place. They had a great night and then the next thing Parker is hearing was that his own team wanted to interrogate his girlfriend.

They called him to tell him that they were going over to the senator's home to question her, but he told them that they wouldn't find Constance at home. She was still at his place. She's been coming to his place for several nights and one of them was when the murder took place.

Constance didn't go into the National Archives. She has access to the classified section because of her duties serving on several committees. She also had visited the place once before. She just didn't go on the night in question. She was with Parker all night. NCIS then pulled up the cameras and they saw that it was a man wearing contact lenses that entered the building.

The contact lenses were the perfect image of Constance's eyes. It's how he got pass the biometrics on the door. The fact that he wasn't a woman probably clued in the security guard who was killed for whatever that man was looking for.

Constance has no idea how he got a perfect likeness of her eyes. She wanted the mystery man caught. Parker promised they would get him and then he ran into some issues.

He and his team wanted to talk to the Russian spies that worked Constance's campaign only those same Russians were being exchanged in a prisoner swap with Russia. The chief council for the State Department didn't care that the Russians were planning something on domestic soil. He wanted to make the swap at all costs because it would make him look good in the press.

It was just NCIS who didn't want to let this drop. They looked into what happened at that museum. They determined that one file was stolen. The file was on a Russian defector named Ilya Sokolov. He was once a professional chess player with an extremely high IQ. They called up Ducky. Ducky remembers the guy. He said that Ilya worked several jobs within the Russian government until the Berlin Wall came down. Ilya chose to defect and he was given a new identity. He even became a professor.

By time NCIS were able to track him down, he was already dead. His killer was even using his shower to wash off all the blood. The killer was identified as Yuri Valkov. He was the son of a Russian oligarch. He was also the Russian spies' handler. Or he was until they were captured by NCIS. Yuri became frustrated and he decided to deal with the problem himself. The agents asked Nate Billings about Yuri. And Nate was so frightened by Yuri that he later killed himself before he could be handed back to Russia.

Nate knew that the Russians would kill him. The Russians were killing all the spies connected to Constance's campaign. One of the spies disappeared into Europe while the other two were killed. Councilor Greco didn't care about the deaths. He said what Russia does with the spies was none of their business. He was more upset that he couldn't trade Nate than he was about the death of the others. Councilor Greco was pushing through with the prisoner exchange even after they found Evelyn.

NCIS got to Evelyn. They told her she has prisoner rights. They got her to refuse the trade and she stayed behind to answer questions. She told them all about Yuri. She wasn't scared of him. And while she was answering questions, Greco was arrested because he was trading prisoners for an American that died of natural causes three weeks ago. He knew he was setting them up to die but didn't care because the Russians were paying him and now he was a traitor to his own country.

The reason Yuri hunted down Sokolov was because Sokolov was working on a weapon of mass destruction before he defected. And the Russians still wanted their weapon.

But Constance broke up with Parker because she said he's still in love with his ex.

Summary: Torres finds himself in prison as the team tries to stop an impending terror attack on U.S. soil.

Yuri Valkov was happy to go to prison. He knew his family's money and connections would protect him there and he wasn't wrong. Prison was later a breeze for him. He hired goons. He even bought himself a guard or two. Yuri was living an easy life behind bars. He had the guards make sure that he didn't have any roommates nor did he have any immediate neighbors. Until that is when Torres ruined the status quo. Torres went undercover at the prison. He was assigned to the cell right across from Yuri. Yuri didn't like that and he tried to establish dominance with Torres. Torres was pretending to be Manuel Delgado. He went by Manny.

Manny's backstory was that he was caught in an armed robbery. He was sentenced ten years behind bars. He has no hope for an appeal and this wasn't the first time he got in trouble with the law. Torres played a great Manny. He showed that prison didn't bother him. He also told Yuri that he couldn't intimidate him. Yuri had approached him as a means of threatening him to be a good neighbor, but Torres played it cool. He showed he wasn't going to fold so easily. He took a stand against Yuri and that proved to be a mistake because Yuri knew there was an undercover agent there.

Yuri's father was Kostya Valokv. He was a big time spy with KGB back during the Cold War. He's since became a Russian mob boss and he maintains his strong ties to the Kremlin. He now wants to commit a terrorist attack against the United States. He had his son Yuri helping him. Yuri admitted to Evelyn Shaw that something big was coming. That his dad had planned an attack. She didn't know the details and so NCIS couldn't give her witness protection only she knew that they had an agent on the inside at Yuri's prison.

One of the guards at Evelyn's prison was also on Kostya's payroll. He was the one that allowed Evelyn's cellmate to try and kill her. The bunkmate failed but the guard said that she was safe for now because they didn't know if NCIS had put someone at her prison too. Evelyn told Knight what the guard said. They realized that Torres was compromised. They tried to pull him. He refused to break cover. He said he was getting great information. He learned that Yuri was in contact with his dad from behind bars.

One of the guards had given Yuri a cell phone. Torres saw Yuri with the cell phone. He told his team about it and they hacked the phone. They found out that Yuri's father was planning on attacking the US's power grid. The DOD has done research on what would occur if that were to ever happen. It was called "Black Sky". It was said that all forms of government would fall without the lights on. It was very reminiscent of a certain show that used to be on NBC. Everything would break down and the country would return to a lawlessness it hasn't seen in over a century.

This attack was everyone's worst fear. They wanted to get as much information from Yuri as possible. They faked a high school for Torres. They had everything in his undercover persona check out. Yuri was just about to trust him and then Yuri's own people kill him. Yuri had revealed something right before his death. He revealed he has a sister. A sister that hated him. She treated him horribly and their father never stopped her because she was daddy's little princess. And so when people heard "Anastasia", they thought that was the name of the attack.

Torres never connected it to a person. They were still operating under the false name of an attack when they spoke with one of Yuri's killers. Lev said that he was loyal to Kostya. Everyone assumed it must have been Kostya who gave the order to kill his son. They thought Kostya was cleaning up house to make sure that no one knew about his plan. They had Parker pretend to be Lev's lawyer. Lev gave him flight information. The information showed that someone was heading to the US on a private plane.

Then the city went dark. The lights went down. They had to operate by radio. They found out that the plane that Kostya was on was landing in the same town where they placed Evelyn in witness protection. They then made the connection between Anastasia and Yuri's sister. Anastasia was a nickname. It was the name of a real life Russian princess and it was a nickname for Viktoria Valkov. Also known as Evelyn. Evelyn played them all for months. She was the mastermind behind this attack and she was using a computer to hack the power grid.

They found her at the house. She had killed her guards. They in turn killed her father. They then arrested Viktoria. She will have to face a long time in an American prison and this time her daddy wasn't there to protect her. But Torres found out someone from his past was still around and was still dangerous. Torres went to this man's house. He broke in. Tonight's episode ended with him telling this mysterious man that he wants to watch him die. Who is this man? Why does Torres hate him? Will Torres commit murder? There's just no telling what might happen!

Summary: The NCIS team must help Torres when he puts his future at stake by confronting the man who tormented his family when he was a child.

NCIS Special Agent Torres recently spent some time undercover. It was nothing new for him. He's been undercover in one form or another for years. His mission in prison worked out in his favor. He was able to leave, but something stayed with him. He saw someone from his past while he was there.

Just seeing this person unraveled all the hard work he did on himself. He broke sobriety. He also broke the law. He did that when he broke into a man's home and pulled a gun on him. Something happened. It was unclear what did happen. Torres walked away with a few bruises as well as a hangover after that night.

His boss noticed both the next morning. He would have mentioned some thing only he had bigger issues to contend with. Parker accidentally talked the head of NCIS Cyber Division into quitting. The guy left his job to join the private sector and that was all because of his conversation with Parker. Parker was then put in charge of the Cyber Division while they looked for someone permanent.

He didn't know a thing about his computers. He quickly handed over the job to McGee without once trying to do it himself. McGee will be filling in until they got a new department head. It was therefore McGee who got the notice first that the FBI were coming to the Navy Yard.

The FBI eventually arrested Torres for murder. McGee thought he didn't do it. Parker didn't even want to believe Torres could kill someone for personal reasons. They tried to get to Torres before the feds and Torres wouldn't talk. He refused to say anything. He didn't bother claiming his innocence.

He let the FBI arrest him for murder. Torres wasn't going to fight a thing and so his team did the fighting for him. NCIS were warned several times to let the FBI handle Torres's case, but they ignored that because they wanted to prove Torres innocent.

They figured they knew Torres too well for him to surprise them by being a murderer. His sister reaffirmed that belief. Lucia has left JAG and gone into private practice.

She was her brother's lawyer. She knew who he supposedly killed. She knew the evidence against him. She was refusing to believe her brother killed Maurice Riva. Riva was a con artist. He met their family when they were in South America. He helped them get to the United States. Torres's mother fell in love with the guy and the guy eventually stole her identity to commit fraud.

Their mother didn't report it because Riva was also abusive. He would abuse every member of that family for years and it stopped when he decided to move on.

He was just gone one day. There was no letter or phone call. He simply left. Torres and his sister as well have been looking for Riva for years.

They never found him on their own. Not until Torres went undercover at a prison. He saw that Riva was still preying on the vulnerable and undocumented. His most recent girlfriend was Marta De Leon. She was another immigrant. She too had a son. Her son was in prison for fraud and he's claiming he's innocent. And that he had been framed.

Torres instantly believed the kid. Especially after he saw that Riva visited Reymundo in prison. Torres called his sister and he told her that night that he found the man that abused them.

She tried calling him back. He wouldn't answer her calls. He didn't even call Lucia to work as his attorney after he got arrested. He refused his right to attorney. He also pled guilty.

His one term for doing so was that he wanted to be sent to the same person where he was an undercover cop. Everyone knew that would be an instant death sentence if he goes back and he did so anyways.

NCIS thought he did so because of Reymundo. Riva probably committed the fraud that Reymundo De Leon was in prison for. They reached out to the mother, Marta. Marta didn't want to believe that Riva was a bad man.

She didn't come to a realization until after she talked to Torres's sister Lucia. Lucia showed her some old photos of Riva's ring damaging her mother's face. She spoke in Spanish to Marta. She acted as a translator between Marta and Parker. And Parker didn't suspect something was up for a while.

Parker truly thought that Lucia was only there to protect her brother. They couldn't understand why Torres pled guilty. Much less why he wanted to die in prison. It didn't make sense.

Then they got some help from FBI Special Agent Rose. She infiltrated their office to leave the FBI's case files for them. The one piece of evidence they had against Torres was that his fingerprint was found on Riva's ring. They had nothing else. They didn't even have the murder weapon. They stopped looking once Torres confessed to murder.

Then they listened to Torres's voicemail. They heard Lucia leave a message saying "Justice" in Spanish for her brother. It was a message they would tell themselves after Riva would beat them.

Torres must have heard that message and thought his sister killed Riva. Only she didn't do it either. NCIS saw that Torres confessed under the assumption his sister did it.

They visited him in prison. They had to see him in the medical bay because Torres had gotten stabbed by the Russians and so Lucia finally talking to Torres helped clear up all the confusion. Neither of them were the killers.

The killer was actually Marta De Leon. She knew the truth about Riva. She also knew that Riva was going to go back on the run now that her son was in prison and so she killed him.

She claimed in a letter that he had assaulted her. Which in turn made her grab for the gun in self-defense. Marta confessed in the letter and she left behind the murder weapon. Other than that she was gone. She went on the run.

FBI Special Agent Rose used her helping skills to get the new job as head of the Cyber Division.

Torres got to leave prison, but he was worried he was about to get fired and so Parker reassured him that he was still a member of their team. And that's when they got the sad news about Ducky.

Production Code: 21002
Summary: As NCIS mourns the loss of Ducky, the agents find comfort in working on one of his unfinished cases involving a woman whose father was dishonorably discharged from the Marines.

Jimmy visited Ducky's home like he did every morning. He thought Ducky had slept in. It wasn't until he went to wake him that he realized that Ducky had passed in his sleep. It was therefore Jimmy that broke the news to the world. He informed NCIS that Ducky had passed. Ducky had still been NCIS's Historian on record and many sent their donations to NCIS because they knew that was Ducky's real home.

Every NCIS Office around the world sent flowers. This included their new office in Sydney. There were also magnolias from the New Orleans Office along with a beautiful wreath from the Hawaii Office.

Ducky was well-loved. Their office was so flooded with flowers that they've sent up a page where people could donate to Ducky's charities. It was either that or deal with a bunch of thistles from Scotland. All of NCIS was in mourning. Jimmy went to Ducky's office to see his treasures when he was confronted by an angry young woman.

This woman thought he was Ducky. She confronted him because she's been calling Ducky's number for days and she thought he had ghosted her. Her name is Serena Zawadski.

She wouldn't give Jimmy time to breathe much less explain before she went tearing into him for ignoring her. Ducky had promised her that he could help clear her family's name. It was the last case he'd been reviewing. He died within hours after agreeing to help her. Jimmy did eventually get around to explaining that he wasn't Ducky and that Ducky had passed.

It was the worst bit of news for Serena. She thought she'd never be able to clear her father's name. Only Jimmy agreed to look at Ducky's files to help her.

Serena's dad died overseas during deployment. She thought he died an honorable soldier until Councilman Berger namechecked her father during one of his rallies for his upcoming senate run. Councilman Berger called her father a traitor. He was trying to distance himself from Zawadski publicly because Zawadski acted as his bodyguard while his company was rebuilding infrastructure over in Afghanistan.

Serena didn't know how her father really died until she talked to her mother. Her mother had told her story that he died a hero because the real story was bad.

Her father apparently was found shot to death in an Afghani brothel. He also had heroin in his system. Serena didn't know any of that when she began writing her college entrance essays. The colleges now thought she was a liar and she thought her heroic dad was actually an evil man. Or she did until she reached out to Ducky. Ducky performed the autopsy on her father.

Ducky claimed that there wasn't heroin in her father's system. He would have pulled up the file only he passed that night. Jimmy then tried pulling up the file and he found most of it redacted. It was above his clearance. It was above Parker's clearance. It was even above Director Vance's clearance.

None of them could access that file. The most they could do was contact Councilman Berger and tell him to lay off slagging Zawadski. The councilman hadn't known that the soldier had a daughter. And Parker noticed that the councilman seemed spooked when they said the autopsy didn't show heroin.

Parker wanted to follow up on the latter. Once he got the councilman to agree to stop namechecking the dead soldier, he began to investigate what really happened overseas.

Serena also got a call. She got a call from someone claiming that her father died a hero and then they said "Semper Fi". It was a known saying amongst Marines.

It also reminded Serena of all the Christmas cards she's gotten over the years that said the same thing. They came with money and they were never signed. NCIS tracked down the person who made that call.

His name was Jonesy. He was former Marines. He served with her dad and he said that his friend would never betray the Marines. He refused to believe the official story.

He unfortunately suffered from paranoia and had tried to run when the NCIS Agent came calling because he thought the councilman sent them. Jonesy was living on the street. He just had a cot in a tent. He hasn't been the same since he left the Marines and everyone figured he was struggling with PTSD. It wasn't until they fed him as well as just plain talking to him that he opened up.

Jonesy signed Zawadski out that night. His friend did not leave base illegally. He went to go investigate Berger because Berger was helping the heroin dealers in Afghanistan smuggling things back to the United States.

He was doing it by using his family's company as cover. Berger was quite powerful and he went back to the American base to tore out the page that showed Zawadski signed out with every intention of coming back. The next thing Jonesy knows was that his friend's body was found in a brothel.

It was all a set up so that no one would ask why Zawadski left that night.

Only Jonesy's word wasn't going to be enough. They needed more evidence. They eventually found Ducky's autopsy report and it showed that the chemical for heroin was found on him. Not in him.

This along with a freshly cleaned up Jonesy was enough to scare Berger into dropping out of the senate race. He won't mention Serena's father ever again. Serena's father also received an honorable discharge from the Marines thanks to Vance pushing for one. And Serena will be receiving tuition assistance from the Marines fund for their fallen's children.

Serena will get to start college like everyone else. Ducky lived up to his word. Then it came time for his funeral and everyone showed. This included Tony who helped Jimmy with his tie.

Production Code: 21003
Summary: The NCIS team experiences fresh views during Walk-a-Mile day, then Kasie receives an urgent mystery message.

Each team member of NCIS was split up to work different jobs. This included Kasie. They usually investigate crimes involving servicemen or women and tonight they were doing the other jobs that for the most part goes unrecognized. McGee was in the garage with the mechanics servicing all NCIS vehicles. Torres was with the accounting team helping to itemize who ordered what office supplies. Knight was with maintenance. She was the only one that was learning so much and she now knows a lot of tricks to keep old buildings running. She was also free to text Kasie all the new gossip she learned thanks to the new job.

Kasie was with dispatch office. She was taking calls. Most of it was telling people to call the police. Kasie was doing fine with that and so her supervisor left her alone to grab a coffee. In those few minutes she was alone, someone called in saying they believe they were being followed. They also went quiet and Kasie heard gunshots before the call went dead. Kasie had no idea what to do. She also couldn't figure out why he kept saying a code. She had to ask her supervisor about that code because she had never heard it before.

Only her supervisor didn't know what it meant either. Kasie brought what she heard to McGee. He knew that the numbers that her potential victim was spouting off was in fact an old way that NCIS Agents used to identify themselves. They changed that system about ten years ago. Whoever called in hadn't known that. This meant they were former NCIS Agents. McGee ran the code. It came back as belonging to Eric Webb. He was former NCIS like they suspected. He did a lot of undercover work and that's why the rest of his file was listed as confidential.

They needed Director Vance to grant them access to the file. Once they were in, they learned that Eric left NCIS years ago and joined a small insurance company. The insurance company only exists on paper. Its mailing address was also a PO Box. It was clear that it was front for something else. NCIS couldn't trace the call. They were able to trace Eric's car that he had been using. They followed it to a CIA safehouse and it was full of dead bodies. One of the bodies had a wallet identifying them as Eric Webb.

Which apparently was a misdirection. Eric planted his wallet on one of the gunmen he killed because someone sold him out and he thought that person must be the CIA. He was in a CIA safehouse when it got hit. No one else should know about that house. Eric called back dispatch to talk to Kasie. He trusts Kasie. She was the only one he was willing to talk to. He contacted NCIS because he was worried about a leak in the CIA. He was former NCIS. He still trusts NCIS. It also was true that the CIA couldn't investigate on the domestic front. They operate overseas.

CIA showed up at the safehouse. They ran everyone's fingerprints. They knew Eric wasn't dead. They asked NCIS if he contacted them again and Parker lied to their faces. He pretended like Eric never made contact again after the first time. CIA allowed NCIS to take lead on the case. They told them that they deal with their internal matters themselves and Parker didn't necessarily trust that. He thought the leak came from within their department. He didn't think it came from their French allies. And so he questioned them about what was going on that safehouse before the blood bath.

The CIA had collected a black hat hacker by the name of Alexander Renard. They arrested him in France where he was living and he claimed something when he got arrested. He claimed that he knew of an imminent terrorist attack on the United States. He said he learned about it on the dark web. He was only agreeing to tell the Americans about it if his charges disappeared. He was now dead along with several CIA Officers. Eric was the only one that survived. Eric later called Kasie again and he told her that Renard said something to him before he was killed.

It was directions to a locker at a DC train station. Eric checked the locker. He found an old time radio and it played just one song. He had no idea what it meant. He played it for Kasie when he called. She worked out what it meant. She knew that there was an old time radio store in DC. The radio was the message. NCIS Agents went to the radio store. They found the owner dead. He had been shot. They also found the components of a bomb and not the bomb itself. The radio shop owner was a bomb builder. And that bomb was now in the Washington DC area.

NCIS were doing their best to track it down. When Kasie next talked to Eric, she asked him why he hasn't come in. They know there's a bomb at play. They know that the bomb maker was killed. They even knew there was a leak within the CIA. Eric could come in and be safe at NCIS. So, why didn't he? Eric told Kasie that he wouldn't rest until the bomb was off the street. Kasie believed him because they had developed a bond. The same bond was tested when McGee found something. He found out that the offshore account that paid for the bomb belonged to Eric.

NCIS became afraid that Eric wasn't trying to stop the bomb. He was the one that was going to set it off. It would explain why he wouldn't come in. It also explained who leaked the CIA safehouse. NCIS looked further into Eric. They learned that he never left NCIS voluntarily. He was pushed out. He got upset after a bomb went off in Spain and he became hostile to everyone he worked with. He especially was angry with his own agency. He was pushed out after becoming aggressive. He next joined the CIA. He had access to their files. He knew when they had grabbed Renard.

Eric could have easily have staged the ambush himself. He knew Renard knew too much. The only thing that couldn't be explained was his attachment to Kasie and then Kasie went missing. Eric grabbed her. They were able to track down the pair. There they learned that Eric was being framed. He was being framed by someone named Harlan. Harlan lost a loved one in the Spanish bombing. He was recently diagnosed with stage four lung cancer. He was dying and he wanted to take the CIA down with him.

He blamed everything on Eric because Eric was an easy target. He was single. He had no kids. He was known for his temper after the bomb in Spain and he could be blamed for everything. Eric was telling Kasie the truth the whole time. He grabbed her because he needed a scientist's help proving that Harlan was responsible for everything. And they did that together.

NCIS arrested Harlan. The bomb was found before it went off. Eric's name was cleared and he was free to ask out Kasie for lunch. It turns out their bond was real.

Summary: The NCIS team races against time to find a missing Petty Officer who disappears during his marriage proposal.

Naval Petty Officer Derek Bailey went hiking with his girlfriend. He took her to the same spot as their first date. He had music. He had white tulips that she loves. He had blindfolded her for the final surprise, but someone got to him before he could propose. Derek had been abducted. His girlfriend didn't see it because of the blindfold. She didn't hear because of the music. She just thought he left. She thought he got cold feet and left her alone in the National Park. Tanya is a smart woman. She realized that Derek was working to proposing to her. He's done it before. And she figured he left because he's technically done that once before too.

Derek ghosted her once. He disappeared on her. Tanya was so worried that she tried to file a police report. She couldn't because he had to be missing for over seventy-two hours and in that time Derek came back. He was all apologetic. He told Tanya that would never happen again. She took him back and she was regretting that after his second disappearance. She didn't even bother looking for him in the park. She simply went home and planned on never taking him back again. Only this last disappearance was different.

The same for the marriage proposal. He tried to propose twice before in a spur of the moment thing. This third time he had a banner, sprinkled roses, a picnic as well as an actual ring. Tanya didn't bother looking for it. No one else had found it since they've been gone. Tanya also never reported him missing. His work reported missing when he didn't call or show up. NCIS were sent out to find him. They brought Tanya back to the park and she showed them where they had their first date. And they found romantic get up that was all set up for her.

The ring was even still there. Tanya said he must have finally been serious about proposing this time. NCIS joked about Derek getting cold feet amongst each other. Parker didn't include himself in that because he suspected something else happened at that park. He had the team look into it. They eventually found a video of Derek's abduction. His kidnappers recorded the video and posted it on the online. This was a problem because Derek worked in a special program at the Navy Yard. He could potentially hand over a very dangerous weapon to their enemies.

Derek was working on a device that would make their navy undetectable underwater. They wouldn't be seen on radar by other navies or enemy combatants. If the tech behind the device gets stolen, then other navies will use it to hide their ships long enough to move into American waters. This could be a nightmare for their intelligence department. NCIS started looking for Derek. They later found who had taken him. Derek was taken by the Bold Ventures business. It's a business that firmly believed in radical therapy.

They allow people to pay them to confront their worst fears. Derek paid for someone to kidnap him. He didn't know when he was going to get kidnap. He also had to fill out a questionnaire before he was taken on as a client by Bold Ventures. NCIS went down to their offices. They went to the room where Derek was supposed to be held, but they found a dead employee inside his cell. Derek wasn't where he was supposed to be. He was gone. There was a literal dead body and so NCIS feared that Derek had killed someone to escape his worst fear.

They were thankfully wrong about that assumption. Tanya has no idea why Derek would want to get kidnap. She thought maybe she didn't know him as well as she thought. She just didn't think he killed someone. She wouldn't be having a baby with a killer. She told NCIS that Derek didn't kill anyone. They found a syringe in that room and they tested it. It had Derek's DNA on it. Derek had been abducted from his fake abduction. He was drugged to get him out of that room. Whoever did it must have been interrupted by the employee and killed him to get away with Derek.

What they couldn't figure out was why Derek was actually abducted. They looked into his life. They found him accepting money from a billionaire and they thought he was selling Navy tech to the guy. He wasn't. The billionaire proved to be Derek's biological father. Derek's parents had a brief fling for a few weeks. His mother went on to marry someone else a few months later. She and her husband died. Bailey found his mother's diary in her things where she confessed everything and he went looking for his real father. He met him. They had a DNA test. And now they were bonding.

His dad even gave him the money for his engagement ring to Tanya. Davenport had no idea she was pregnant. He was excited about finally having a family and he admitted that he had been called after his son was abducted. The kidnapper wanted money. They wanted three million in an offshore bank account. Davenport was set to pay it when NCIS stopped him. They said there was no guarantee that he would get his son back if he paid. They wanted to look for the kidnapper. They were able to figure out who kidnapped Derek.

It was Mickey Steele. He works for Bold Ventures. He must have been a part of the team that followed Derek a week before he was taken and so he saw Derek meet up with his father. Mickey also must have realized that really kidnapping Derek was a huge payday. Something he would never see in real life. He took Derek. It took Davenport too long to come up with the money and so Steele got to Tanya. He figured Davenport would finally pay if his grandchild was threatened. And Davenport did.

He paid. He didn't get back his son or Tanya. NCIS went looking for Steele now that he knew who he was. They found him because he turned his phone on. They were able to get to him and they saved both Tanya and Derek. Tanya also admitted that she used to date Steele. She said he was really angry after they broke up. She thought that Steele was doing all of this out of revenge. Steele was killed by NCIS. And Tanya played the victim, but they didn't believe her story and they got Derek to get her to confess.

Tanya was never pregnant. She knew Derek would inherit billions as the only child of a billionaire. She arranged his kidnapping and she helped fake her own. NCIS later arrested her. And Derek felt so bad about the three million she stole from his dad that he thought his dad would be upset with him. Only he wasn't. Davenport was just glad to have his only child back alive. Both men were also relieved that Tanya wasn't pregnant because now they can move on with their lives.

And Torres admitted he has cheat days when he stayed with Parker and Parker got a little too crazy with a health kick.

Summary: NCIS Special Agent in Charge Feng Zhao, Knight's father helps the team unravel the mystery of a recently used service weapon belonging to a missing agent. McGee is in a tailspin when DNA results reveal a close relative he was unaware of.

McGee's family started an online genealogy. It was his wife's idea. They thought they could discover their heritage together and Delilah wasn't wrong in convincing McGee into doing it as well. He found out he has some Danish ancestry. He also learned he has a secret half-sister.

Her name is Lauren Redding. DNA doesn't lie. She's his sister and McGee didn't know about her until he read about their family connection. He naturally assumed his father must have cheated, but there were bigger things to worry about. NCIS was alerted that one of their own could be involved in a murder stateside.

The agent involved was NCIS Special Agent Chen. He works out of the Far East Office. He disappeared during the middle of an investigation and then his service weapon was used to murder someone. This someone being in Virginia. NCIS came to believe that Chen was still alive. They wanted to talk to him and it was proving hard to find him.

They then tried contacting his boss in the Far East Office only to learn he too was missing in action. NCIS Special Agent in Charge Feng Zhao was off the grid and there's no telling if he was involved in whatever Chen was doing.

Only Zhao's disappearance was a personal matter for NCIS Special Agent Jessica Knight. Zhao was her father. She thought he was safe at a desk and so hearing he disappeared sent her into a panic.

She kept calling him. She left him messages. She was hoping he would reach out to her if no one else. She wasn't hearing back from him and the investigation into Chen was moving ahead.

Chen disappeared off of a ship. He was undercover with a drugs operation when he went missing. He was assumed dead until the body showed up stateside.

The victim was a pilot operating out of the far east. NCIS was theorizing that Chen got this pilot to give him a ride stateside where he tried to cover his tracks.

They figured he must have killed the pilot to try and hide that he was back in the country as well as who else was on the flight. The team tracked Chen down to a cabin. They actually found his body inside. They spotted someone running from the scene and they followed this person until they were able to corner him. And that's when he revealed he was Knight's father.

Zhao didn't kill Chen. He said Chen was still on that vessel when he reported he had to help a woman. He said she was in danger and he couldn't leave her behind. The call got dropped after that. Chen used an explosive to blow a hole through the ship. He escaped on a lifeboat with the woman.

They got on a plane back stateside and he called Zhao to meet him at the cabin. By time Zhao showed up, Chen was dead. The mystery woman was gone. He had no idea what happened and so he ran when he heard people coming up the drive. He thought it could be the killers.

Zhao was detained. He was questioned by Director Vance. He thankfully had nothing to hide because he told Vance everything. Zhao was then put in charge of cleaning up his mess. It was his job to keep Chen in line and Chen went off the rails on his watch. Zhao has to clean it up or he risks finding himself out of a job.

He has to find Chen's killer. The Virginia office was going to assist him with apprehending the killer. Knight meanwhile went from being concerned about her father to being angry at him for not returning her calls.

She was sitting on a soap box until Jimmy showed up. Jimmy introduced himself to Zhao and the man didn't recognize him or his name. Knight seems to have kept her boyfriend a secret. It was one thing to not mention Jimmy at the start of their relationship, but things were getting serious. She should have told her father by now.

Jimmy thought she told her father when he noticed that Zhao doesn't recognize him in the slightest. He was very hurt by that. Zhao also figured out who Jimmy was by him being so nice to him.

Zhao even looked into him when they started following Chen's last movements. He found out Jimmy was a single father. He tried to remind his daughter about the "plan" and she told him to focus on the case. They found out Chen had lunch with the mystery woman. There was security footage of the two together. They got a photo of the woman.

Kasie also used facial recognition to identify her. While she was waiting for results, she was able to give McGee some good news. His father didn't cheat on his mother. His father was a sperm donor for a lesbian couple in Denmark.

Admiral McGee helped a couple start a family. He was a good guy. He did a good thing. McGee also has to tell his full-sister about their half-sister and things were going to go easier now that they know she wasn't an affair child. Anyways, the case took a turn when Knight and her father noticed they were being followed.

They tried to capture this man when he consumed a suicide pill designed as a jacket button. He killed himself. The team figured out he was tracking them because he too wanted to find the missing woman involved with Chen.

They had to get to the woman first. They later tracked her down to a motel. They brought her in and she would only talk to Zhao. The woman was Dr. Mei Li. She was a food scientist in China.

She found out that the Chinese were making a virus to be far deadlier than covid. She stole the virus and she tried to get stateside where she could help the Americans create a cure. She was paying to be smuggled on the drug vessel when she came across Chen. Chen agreed to help her. He got her back stateside and then he gets killed.

Mei goes on the run. She thought she had the virus in a secure lockbox in her backpack, but NCIS searched her when they found her and her backpack didn't have the lockbox or the virus. It turns out that the Chinese outsourced to a fast food manager to steal the virus from Mei. NCIS caught up to him first. They switched out the virus with chicken soup. They watched him as he went to his deal with the Chinese. And then everyone got arrested.

Knight's father was thinking about retirement. He nominated Knight to fill his spot because their "plan" was for her to work her way up to Director of NCIS. Zhao didn't believe Jimmy fit the plan. Its why Knight was keeping Jimmy a secret in the first place.

She was happy with her life. She no longer cares about the plan. She explained to Jimmy about it and he stopped being upset. And later she officially introduced him to her father as her boyfriend.

And even McGee met with his half-sister.

Summary: After discovering a navy pilot's body riddled with unusual wounds, NCIS' investigation draws the team into the rabbit hole of UFO conspiracy theories.

Dr. Grace recommended that Special Agent Torres do something fun. Something that will spark joy. He thought he should throw an 80s theme party.

He was talking about it with Knight when they got called to the scene of a homicide. Naval Lt Elliot Greene had been murdered at his home.

He was shot several times. The killer might have used a helicopter or some flying object because he shot the victim through the high window.

There were no trees that go up that high in the nearby area. McGee checked. The only possible means of shooting from such a height in that neighborhood seemed to be flying plane or unidentified aircraft. Jimmy suggested an air balloon.

Jimmy also recognized the victim. The victim was recently testifying before congress. Greene went before congress to discuss his contact with an unidentified aerial phenomenon.

Otherwise known as aliens. Greene was a credible guy or at least he was before he went on record about aliens. He was a fighter pilot. He said he came across a flying plane that didn't look like a plane. It also seemed to anticipate his every move. He genuinely believed he came across aliens and aliens would explain his murder.

There were no bullets found in Greene. He was shot over ten times. There were no bullets found at the scene nor in the victim. There were only six exit wounds, but where did the bullets go?

It also had to be a modified gun because the holes in Greene didn't match anything they had on record. Jimmy took a sample from inside the wounds to send to Kasie. Kasie ran tests on it and it showed that it was element 116. Something that doesn't exist on the earth. It also destroyed the system while it was being tested.

Naturally, everyone came to believe aliens killed Greene. It was either that or Russians somehow synthesized a material found in space to turn it into a weapon. Parker was hoping it was the Russians. Torres was hoping it was aliens. He mentioned that "Cocoon" was his favorite movie.

They looked into Greene and someone called him several times on the night he died. The call lasted less than two seconds every time. It was Daniel Silcott calling him. They were both a part of the UAP watch group. Daniel was calling him because he figured someone had to tell him there's been a sighting in his neighborhood.

Daniel never reached him because he kept getting static each time he called. It was like someone was blocking Greene's phone. Greene also couldn't expect calls from anyone else in the group because the others all hated him. They were pulling in good money to help them search for aliens.

That all dried up after Greene testified before congress. There were some that didn't want to be connected to a laughing stock such as Greene. And that's why the group came to blame Greene for their misfortunes.

They needed eyes on the group. McGee and Knight were chosen to go in undercover. Torres was supposed to keep watch from a parked car only he lost consciousness and woke up two miles away. He doesn't know how he got there. He was woken up by his friends after they searched for him for six hours.

Torres had no idea where he went. The car's GPS didn't track his movements nor did his cell phone. Torres was searched back at headquarters. They found a sedative in his blood. He also thought he smelled his grandmother's feet.

Her feet smelled awful like whiteout. Kasie was able to piece together that Torres was drugged and taken to a closed down whiteout factory nearby to where he disappeared.

There they found a private investigator. Only he wasn't a good guy. He intentionally joined the UAP group because it was his job to discredit Greene. He was hired to make him look crazy. He's the one that had Greene believing in aliens. The guy doesn't know who hired him. He was contacted via text. He just followed orders to get paid. He was paid to discredit Greene.

NCIS learned that Greene's friend Daniel had looked into the private investigator. He hacked the man's phone. He just didn't send the text messages. Daniel said that Greene saw an unmanned drone. This drone could think for itself and it can kill for itself. Daniel would know because he created it.

Daniel created artificial intelligence that would grow on its own. He needed money and it was for his dissertation. He was hired by a group out of Sri Lanka. They proved to be a gray market weapons developer and they took his AI off to sell it to the highest bidder.

Daniel has a backdoor into the system. He checked it after he heard Greene's congressional hearing. Daniel modeled the AI after his late son, Kaiden. Kaiden died in a car accident at seven years old. Daniel was able to connect to him and he learned who was trying to discredit Greene.

It was Congresswoman Shirley Ives. Ives wanted to buy the tech for America. She asked for a demonstration. The demonstration involved an unwitting Greene. Greene started talking about it to everyone and there was a UN sanction against such a weapon much less buying one. And so she tried to discredit him.

The weapons developer planned on making thousands of AI drones. They could be a killing force. There was only one way to stop it now that they no longer believe they can sell it to the United States.

Daniel had to use his kill code. He built into the system. He didn't want to use it because he had already buried his son once and he couldn't kill what remained of him, but he was able to say goodbye to him and he used the kill code. It stopped the AI. It also made sure that no weapon could be used with it.

There was just one thing that stood out. It was Element 116. There was no factory that could work with it and the weapons developers didn't have that tech when they were arrested. And so where did it come from?

And will McGee have to shave his goatee now that no one voted for him to keep it?

Production Code:	21007
Summary:	NCIS comes under attack by a mysterious enemy from the past. Vance tries to mend fences with his estranged son by explaining why, despite the ongoing dangers of his job, he still chooses to stay at NCIS.

Director Vance was the father of two children. His daughter followed in his footsteps. Kayla joined NCIS. His son was a different story. He and Jared don't speak. Vance has to learn about his son through his daughter. He hasn't seen his son in months until they ran into each other at his late wife's grave.

Vance was telling his late wife everything that's changed when Jared interrupted him. Jared came to see his mom as well. He brought along flowers. He didn't want to get into it with his dad, but he did anyways because he felt his dad has given too much to NCIS. And he was worried about what else it would take from them.

Jared's concerns were valid. Especially after tonight. His father was shot at his mother's grave. Jared didn't hear a gun nor did he realize his father was shot at first. It took the Director collapsing for Jared to see that he was bleeding from his back. He had been shot from a sniper rifle. Its why Jared didn't hear anything.

Jared also mapped out where he and his father was standing for NCIS. He wanted to be helpful. He remembered everything when most people would have forgotten in the heat of the moment. Jared came in handy when Parker and his team took over the case.

Parker went to the hospital with McGee. He sent Knight and Torres to the crime scene. Kasie and Palmer also stopped by the hospital to get an update on the Director's condition. While they were there, Kasie got the bullet. She was going to head back to her office to run tests and that's when it happened.

There was a terrorist attack in Washington DC. Knight and Torres saw the whole thing. They managed to track down the roof where the sniper set up his weapon. They were up there looking for evidence when they saw fires sprouting up all around the city.

There were three explosions that went off. One was at the Morrow family crypt at the same cemetery that the Director's late wife was buried. The second explosion was at a medical complex right outside of Dr. Rachel Cranston's office. The third explosion was at Fornell's garage. Someone was targeting NCIS and they went after their history.

Morrow was the Director of NCIS before Vance. Rachel was McGee's former partner's sister. She also helped with several cases. As for Fornell, he's been saving NCIS for almost twenty years.

The explosions didn't happen until Torres and Knight were on that roof. Their sniper wanted them to get the best view of the attacks. They also weren't done. The Director made it out of his surgery. He appointed McGee as Acting Director while he recovers. No sooner did that happen that Jared apologized to McGee for his dad. He said that other people shouldn't put their families at risk like his dad did. It was an odd way to view their careers and he said it right before McGee got an alert about an attack at his apartment.

There were several other alerts right after that. Parker's apartment was targeted. Along with everyone else at NCIS. The alerts were all faked. They thought their system must have been hacked. They use an app called Bandium to stay on guard. The app was created by Fletcher Voss. McGee asked the man himself to come in once he made sure his family got to his in-laws just fine. Voss was considered a visionary. Only he was also just plain weird. He's been forced out of every company he's ever started. He was funding a private trip to the moon. Bandium was his last chance.

Voss wanted to sell Bandium to NCIS. He was hoping to have it used in every office. Which could be a problem now that they know it can be hacked. They asked to look at his servers. He tried to stall them because he said that their servers hold proprietary information. They basically told them they either see it or it never gets used again in another governmental agency. Voss was working on getting them servers when they realize how whoever was doing this knew where Vance would be.

The person doing this was a woman named Lindsey Wexler. She started an online profile on a dating site and she got close to Jared. The same Jared that was angry at his dad. He needed to vent to someone.

He figured why not with the woman that seemed perfect. He was used. He was so angry after his girlfriend was arrested. He thought the agents were suspecting the wrong person until he learned a little bit more about Lindsey. Lindsey has been spouting anti-NCIS messages for years. She met someone on a forum a couple of months ago named "GravitasMons".

This person fed her faked documents that accuse NCIS of numerous monstrosities. This included mass murder. Kasie saw the files and she proved they were all fake. Anyone could have proved they were fake with a computer. Lindsey didn't even bother to research most of these crimes. She just went along because she already had an agenda. The team tracked down the person she was speaking with and they identified him as Voss. They thought Voss was the mastermind only they were wrong.

Voss didn't play Lindsey. She played him. She knew she was being used. She planted a virus on his cell phone so that she could hack NCIS. She led everything back to him because she figured he would be a great fall guy. The only thing she didn't see coming was Fornell. Fornell recognized a quote she used.

He said he heard it once before. He heard it from a case over twenty years ago. It was the case involving the terrorist named Leonard Rish. Rish was a sleeper agent that tried to kill people on Air Force One.

Lindsey was once Lindsey Rish. Her mom changed their names after her father was killed by Gibbs. Lindsey must have found his manifesto and read them.

She came to hate NCIS for stopping her father. So, when Voss entered the picture, she hacked him knowing he was about to go on Air Force One. Her plan was take down the plane with the president on board. NCIS called the Secret Service. They told them not to take off and they were going to ignore it because they didn't understand the significant hack.

NCIS had to literally stand in front of the plane to stop it taking off. They checked the plane. It had been hacked. They saved the president's life and now they can rack up the charges for Lindsey.

Voss also wasn't getting off either. He tried to get Lindsey to kill Vance because Vance was stopping NCIS from using Badium in all of their offices. Badium was his last company. He didn't want to lose it or go bankrupt. He was now facing charges. And the whole thing just made Jared realize he needs to talk to his dad.

Jared stopped by the hospital while the rest of the team was congratulating Curtis. Curtis was one of the basement trolls. He wanted to become an active agent and so he shadowed them on this case hoping to get a recommendation to become a probie. And he got that after tracing the hack.

Summary: NCIS team looks for a motive behind the kidnapping and death of a famous heart surgeon.

NCIS Special Agent Aldean Parker was injured. He plays basketball with Torres at the gym. They were in the lead for the upcoming championship and suddenly he came to work with a sniff neck. He could barely move. He couldn't bend down. It made things hard for him when he attended the next case.

They were brought in when the body of Navy Commander Erik Harper was found. He was a world renown heart surgeon. He belonged to the Navy Medical Core. He was working at a hospital when he got grabbed during a food run. He was taken and he was forced to do surgery on someone. This someone being an unknown. And afterwards Erik was killed.

NCIS didn't know about the surgery at first. They simply thought it odd that his kidnappers would kill him after transporting him over two hundred miles. Jimmy also noticed the blood on Erik didn't belong to him. Erik was shot in the head.

There was no exit wound and so the blood on his scrubs must have belonged to someone else, but Kasie was the one that found an anesthetic commonly used in surgery in the blood found on Erik. She confirmed that Erik performed surgery on someone. The blood wasn't a match for anyone in the database and so the criminal was off the grid.

Erik specialized in removing tumors around the heart. He was known for never losing a patient. NCIS spoke to his partner and fellow servicemen.

Dr. Claire Logan was used to working by Erik's side. She said he was one of the most gifted surgeons she ever met. Erik once successfully performed surgery in a tent. Anything after that was considered an upgrade. Erik also helped in his own murder investigation. He walked around with a mini recorder. It was the only thing of value found in the getaway van used to transport him.

The van was a burnt out husk. The kidnapers had even plenty several items to lead investigators down the wrong road. The one thing they didn't count on was the mini recorder or that Erik recorded them. He got some of their conversation. It was South American Spanish. Torres translated it.

He and Parker also heard "El Viento". The nickname was a known alias for Carlos Savina. He was the head of the Cali Cartel. Many agencies have tried to get him. He's always disappeared. Its why he was known as "the wind".

If Savina was in town, he has to give himself at least three days to recover. He ruthlessly killed the man that saved his life and he couldn't afford to take any more risks. Or he might undo Erik's hard work. The team went digging through Erik's life to see if he was followed. Knight learned that Eric had stopped performing surgeries. He was teaching residents. He just wasn't doing surgery and its odd he would step away when he's famous for saving lives. It was because he developed a tremor in his hands.

Erik was seeking treatment for it. He wouldn't have risked a patient and so there's a chance that he stopped surgery in the middle. Heart surgery was a delicate thing.

Erik could have left Savina open on the table if his tremors got out of hand. It would explain why he had been murdered and dumped like that. It would also mean that Savina still needs a surgeon.

Parker was talking to Logan again when Savina's men broke into her office. They kidnapped Logan. Parker pretended to be a doctor because he was outgunned. He let the bad guys think he was the only one that could help Logan perform surgery.

Savina's men kidnapped both. They took both Logan and Parker. Parker was counting on his team finding them before he actually had to help perform surgery and so Logan played the pessimist to his blind faith. She reminded Parker that she's never performed a surgery so tough without Erik. She saw Savina's scans.

They showed her how large the tumor was. It's the largest she's ever seen. She didn't think she could handle it on her own much less at gunpoint. She was going to give Parker some advice only the bad guys opened the doors before she could finish the sentence.

Parker just knew he had to act like a surgeon. He couldn't exactly learn heart surgery on the fly. He had to be arrogant and condescending. Like the surgeons on his favorite show, Grey's Anatomy.

Savina's people brought them to a warehouse. There was a state of the art operating room created in that warehouse. Savina was already on the table when they arrived. He basically questioned Parker because Parker claimed to be Dr. Trowbridge. He's never of that man. It was actually a name he got from a spy movie and Logan was the only one to realize it.

Logan recognized many of his backstory being from movies. They were sharing a moment about it when his team finally showed up. NCIS took out of most of the bad guys.

Parker took out the last gunman. Savina was transferred to a nearby hospital. They saved his life and he was now under arrest. Director Vance was happy with the news. Savina killed a couple of NCIS Agents in one of the many raids he faced and Vance was happy to give the families' closure.

And Torres solved Parker's neck problem by giving him a hug so tight it straightened the spine.

Summary: After discovering the remains of a Marine captain, the NCIS team travels to Texas to interrogate the suspected killer.

McGee was talking about remodeling the kitchen with his wife. Delilah hates their current kitchen. Nothing works. It was all falling apart. She was fine with the kitchen before they had the twins and the twins dirtied it up. They also broke a few things. Now she was ready for a remodel.

They couldn't really afford that at the moment because the twins were coming close to summer camp season. Those weren't cheap. They also needed to afford a family vacation this year.

McGee didn't want to push those back because of a kitchen remodel even if they do need one. He tried talking to his friends about it at work and Parker warned him against a remodel. He said his own marriage didn't last because of one.

The team was called in when the dismembered body of Marine Captain Tom Riley was found. It was found behind a dumpster. It was clearly murder.

The victim was killed within the last two days. It just didn't make sense because Tom was allegedly dead for over two years. He supposedly died in an accident in San Diego. He was one of four marines coming back from a training session when their helicopter flew into some bad weather. It crashed over the water. Everyone on that helicopter was assumed dead.

Tom was the pilot of the helicopter. It was believed he might have been drunk during the accident. Tom had serious issues. He had more disciplinary actions than his Commanding Officer would like to admit.

They had no idea what to do with him when the accident happened and he probably realized he could start over. Which he did. Tom assumed a fake identity. He became known as Tom Wade. He moved to Texas. His apartment in a small town down there had been broken into. The sheriff called Tom about it and she never heard back.

For some reason, Tom traveled to the DC area recently. There was no explanation. He doesn't have family there. They couldn't find a hotel reservation. He came and was killed.

The question was why. The person that killed Tom was experienced. The body was cut up by a professional. There was also blood on the knife wounds that didn't belong to Tom. It could either be the killer's blood or belong to another victim. Knight and Torres were sent to Texas to find out about Tom's life down there. They easily found the sheriff who also ran the local hotel.

The sheriff had no inkling that Tom was living under a fake identity. She didn't know him well. They said a few hellos and that was it. She did know that Tom was working for the Bannons.

The Bannons were the biggest cattle ranchers in the state of Texas. They were a big deal in town. They carry a lot of weight. The cattle ranch was known as "Fire Creek". It was run by Carl Bannon. Carl claims not to know Tom personally. He hires over seventy employees to work the ranch. He also allowed NCIS to talk to everyone.

Carl's son didn't like that. His son lied about knowing Tom well. He also tried to get the NCIS's questions cleared beforehand with the lawyers. His father said he had nothing to hide and he gave the feds full permission to speak to everyone. Torres found out from one of the ranchers that Tom had something to hide.

Tom came to the farm one night. He loaded a bunch of boxes. He later lied about that when the woman that saw him asked him about it. He denied being on the ranch that night.

Torres and Knight followed up on the boxes he took. It was apparently clothes and toys. Tom donated the boxes to the local church. The church was flooded. They were operating out of a little room in town. They needed all the help they could find. Tom was helping them. He found God. He was in recovery from booze.

He lied about being on the ranch that night because he was with someone that night. He was with Carl's son. Yeah, the son was gay. He didn't think his father would understand and so he and Tom kept their relationship secret.

The son wasn't ready to betray the father. Only he did mention that his father's acquisition of Bluebonnet Ranch wasn't above board. He was the family's lawyer and his father didn't want his involvement in that deal. This was important because NCIS believe Carl killed Tom. Not personally.

They think Carl ordered it. NCIS learned from Tom's pastor that he found evidence against the Bannons. He went to DC to report it because the Bannons have all the local officials in Texas in their back pocket. This was connected to the Bluebonnet Ranch acquisition.

The Bluebonnet Ranch was once owned by a family. Carl wanted their ranch. He intentionally set fire to it and he forced the owners to sell the ranch to him for basic pennies.

There were witnesses that saw members of Carl's ranch near Bluebonnet Ranch on the day of the fire. The witnesses were paid off. The investigation into the arson went nowhere when the investigator was paid off. It was all connected back to Carl. They were tracking down the wire transfers. They were looking into the witnesses.

They tried talking to Carl again. It went nowhere because he quickly lawyered up. He has an army of lawyers and he was going to stonewall them for as long as possible.

It turns out he wasn't the one calling the shots though. One of his ranchers had been smuggling drugs through the meat carcasses they sent to the meat plant in DC. Tom found the drugs one night while he was looking for donations for the church. He goes to DC to report it at meat plant and those involved had him killed. Carl didn't know anything about the drug smuggling.

Except his ranch wasn't going to survive it. He barely did because his rancher shot him before trying to make an escape. NCIS found too much evidence against Carl. He'll be facing charges. Torres caught up to the shooter and arrested her as well. And Carl's son was ready to let the ranch go, he wanted to start over somewhere new where he could be free.

Delilah meanwhile changed her mind about remodeling. She signed them up for a reality show that would have paid for it and they were unfortunately too tame for reality tv.

The producers wanted drama. The McGees couldn't provide it. The reality dropped them and they were going to do the remodel themselves when Delilah changed her mind. The kitchen was full of memories. She didn't want to let that go or lose her kids' height chart on the wall.

Summary: Parker and Knight discover three bodies on an old Navy ship that's about to be sunk and turned into an artificial reef, when they're suddenly locked inside by a mysterious figure. Vance offers Knight a unique opportunity.

An old Navy ship was getting recycled. They were going to turn it into an artificial reef. It was going to become a part of the sea and become a habitat for wildlife. It was going to be a great thing. Only the company behind it ran into some issues.

They were giving a tour of the old navy ship when they came across a body. Than another body. Than a third body. Three people were killed and dumped on the ship. The ship was no longer operated by navy personnel. It was sold to the company called Aquabitat. The company had the ship at a local dockyard. It was guarded by one man.

It turns out the guy went on a bathroom break. During his break, someone boarded the ship with three bodies and dumped them there. The guy from Aquabitat thought it was a mob dumping ground. He blamed the whole thing on the dock owner. He also was very upset about the tv interview.

They found the bodies during a tv interview. He was giving tour to the host. The tv show became all about the bodies and not about the artificial reef. The tv show host even had to apologize to the audience because he cursed live on air.

No one knew those bodies were there until they found them together. NCIS was called in because now people were connecting a navy ship to the mob. They came.

They started investigating. They identified one of the victims as Thomas Mackin. He was reported missing by his wife. She called when he never made it home after his business trip. She said her husband has a gambling problem. He tried to hide it from her and she found out about it. And she didn't like it. She said his bookie was Sammy. Sammy ran a food truck called Sloppy Joe's Sammy.

Torres and McGee looked into Sammy. Knight and Parker went back to the ship. They were looking for evidence when they got attacked and locked inside of the ship.

It came after Knight had a horrible argument with Jimmy. Jimmy didn't take it well when he heard she was offered a job promotion. The promotion was on the other side of the country. Knight applied for the position once she lost her REACT team. It was just coming through now after a few years. Knight didn't accept it right away because she wanted to discuss it with Jimmy first.

But Jimmy got upset when he heard about it. He said already lost Breena. He lost Gibbs. He lost Ducky. His teenage daughter was pulling away from him and so of course Knight was going to leave him too. He mentioned he wanted to be in control the next time a relationship ended.

He did his best to push Knight away. She didn't know what to do. Should she take the job? She turned down the last job opportunity to stay with Jimmy. Jimmy couldn't keep expecting her to do that and that's why he's pushing her away.

Knight was discussing it with Parker when they got attacked. They were locked inside of the ship. They might be stuck there when the ship explodes and to make matters worst Parker's leg had gotten trapped. Knight took forever freeing him. She managed to do it by getting angry at Jimmy.

It brought out her She-Hulk skills. She moved the beam that was on Parker's leg only that's when his leg started bleeding. He had been punctured somewhere on his leg. They had to stop the bleed or he could die before help arrived.

Luckily, their team did wonder where they were. Torres and McGee were able to rule out the bookie. Thomas had cleaned out the bookie during playoffs and so Sammy owed him money.

Money he no longer has to pay now that Thomas was dead. Which was a motive. It just didn't lead anywhere. Sammy had nothing against the other two victims. The other two were a homeless man and a teacher. They have nothing in common. Sammy didn't even know the others. He also had an alibi. He wasn't their killer.

McGee and Torres later found evidence that the female teacher knew Tommy. They have photos together. The photos were ripped up and so their relationship ended on a sour note.

The agents stopped looking into the victims when they heard that two of their own were missing. They started looking for them. Their car was parked right in front of Sammy's house. Someone was truly trying to frame him for the murders. The only person who kept pointing them in his direction was Thomas's wife. The now widow. The same one that reported him missing.

The wife must have found out about his affair with the teacher. She killed them both. She might have just killed homeless guy who was an accidental witness.

The agents went to talk to her. Jimmy went with them. He was concerned about Knight. He didn't want his last words to her being a breakup. He was really sorry about what he said. He didn't realize until afterwards that he made her promotion all about him. He didn't even congratulate her or anything and so he wanted the chance to make it right with her.

The agents found the wife. Molly was trying to leave town. She was with her uncle, the dock owner. It was his idea to stash the bodies on the ship. His niece killed her husband's lover.

He then killed her husband. They were driving to the dockyard when they hit the homeless man. They ditch all the bodies on the ship. He only realized later on that he left his watch on the ship. He went back for it and that's when he ran into the agents. The uncle locked them in the engine room. Both niece and uncle were arrested. The agents went back to the ship and they rescued everyone.

Parker lost a lot of blood. He was taken to a hospital where he woke up. He was going to be fine. Knight tried to ask him who was Lily? Parker called out for Lily when he almost died. He saw her. He remembered her. He pretended like he didn't know what Knight was talking about and so he gets to keep his secrets for now.

And Knight took the job promotion.

Show Stars: Sean Murray (NCIS Senior Special Agent Timothy McGee), Wilmer Valderrama (NCIS Special Agent Nick Torres), Katrina Law (NCIS Special Agent Jessica Knight), Brian Dietzen (Chief Medical Examiner Jimmy Palmer), Diona Reasonover (Forensic Scientist Kasie Hines), Rocky Carroll (NCIS Director Leon Vance), Gary Cole (FBI Special Agent Alden Park)
Guest Stars: Seamus Dever (Inspector General Gabriel LaRoche), Gabriel Burchafato (Reverend Edward Pike), Elizabeth Frances (Special Agent Jodie Moreno), Sam Duffy (Elmo Miller), Gilbert Chayrez-Chavarria (Male REACT Agent), Jackie Tohn (Counselor Celia Ross)
Production Code: 22001
Summary: NCIS searches for a missing undercover agent in the midst of an active hostage situation.

The episode opens with a startling scenario: Jessica Knight holding a priest hostage, an unexpected turn for a character known for defusing such situations. This sets the tone for a season that promises to explore the complexities of the characters' personal and professional lives. Knight's actions are driven by her conviction that the priest is actually El Padre, the head of the Nexus cartel, a theory that will become a central plot point.

Meanwhile, Alden Parker finds himself in an empty bullpen, a stark reminder of the team's fragmented state. Kasie Hines and Jimmy Palmer are left to navigate the challenges of the NCIS headquarters without the usual support of their teammates. Palmer, in particular, is dealing with the emotional fallout of his breakup with Knight, a subplot that adds a layer of personal drama to the season's opener.

The absence of Nick Torres, who has been undercover with a local fentanyl dealer, and Tim McGee, busy with his quest for the NCIS deputy director position, adds to the tension. McGee's storyline introduces a new antagonist, DOJ Inspector General Gabriel LaRoche, whose aggressive unhelpfulness and condescension towards NCIS foreshadow a challenging relationship ahead.

The episode's action intensifies as Parker and Knight work together to locate Torres, who has been made and is in danger of being forced to prove his loyalty to the cartel through a hit. Their rescue attempt is a masterclass in teamwork and quick thinking, with Knight sacrificing her car to create a diversion and Parker using the opportunity to free Torres. However, Torres insists on staying undercover to prevent the hit and capture El Padre, a decision that speaks to his dedication and the moral complexities of his role.

The episode also explores the possibility of a mole within NCIS, as LaRoche confirms that the agency has been under investigation due to suspicious financial activities. This revelation adds a layer of intrigue and suspicion that will undoubtedly be a significant part of the season's overarching storyline.

In a dramatic twist, Knight is offered a promotion to the Office of Strategic Support, a position she has always wanted. However, she ultimately decides to return to her team in D.C., a choice that speaks to her loyalty and the importance of the team dynamic in NCIS. This decision is met with mixed reactions, particularly from Palmer, who is seen dusting off Knight's desk in anticipation of her return.

The premiere ends on a cliffhanger, with LaRoche being appointed as the new deputy director, a development that is sure to have significant implications for the team. His presence introduces a new dynamic to the NCIS leadership, and his initial interactions with McGee suggest a potentially contentious relationship.

Summary: As Vance prepares to host diplomatic talks with Venezuela, the team is called in to investigate the dead body of one of his inside men.

NCIS was in charge of security at a high-profile event. Some delegates from the Venezuelan Navy were visiting DC.

They were hoping to come to an agreement with the American Navy that would allow both nations to learn from each other and trade intel as well weapons. Director Vance was going to be a prominent figure at the negotiations. NCIS was supposed to protect him however they were too late to protect one of their own.

Diego Barreto was US Navy. He was also undercover with the Venezuelan government. He managed to climb up through their ranks. He traveled to the states with them. He was meeting with Vance before the official negotiations when he died.

Diego died horribly. He bled everywhere. Vance tried to save him and couldn't. It left the Director with an unfortunate situation. Vance couldn't call 911.

He couldn't let the Venezuelans know that he was speaking with one of their own off the books. It would lead to them wondering why Barreto? Why did he have to secretly talk to Barreto?

Barreto's cover was technically still safe as long as everyone doesn't dig too deep into his fake background and so Vance reached out to Parker. It was Parker that came up with an idea to get them out of this situation.

Parker called his team. He also called Jimmy. They were going to sneak Barreto out of the building in a body bag, It was going well until Vance's secretary felt bad for the camera crews.

There were several news stations that was covering the visit from the Venezuelans. They were supposed to be outside for a press conference, but Vance's secretary didn't want to leave them out in the rain. She invited them indoors. She didn't know about the dead guy in Vance's office. She allowed the news station to film and take photos of everything.

It was a miracle they managed to sneak out a body under those conditions. Much less clean up the blood in Vance's office. The team really did come together for this one.

They were left waiting to hear back when Barreto's body was officially found because they wanted this case. The team was investigating what little information Barreto gave before he died. Barreto told Vance that a prominent member of the Venezuelan team was trying to sabotage the talks with the American government.

The undercover agent never had the chance to name this saboteur because that's when the poison kicked in.

Barreto was poisoned in the United States. The team gave some of his blood samples to Kasie. She quickly realized that this murder took place in Vance's office and she promised to keep quiet.

She also confirmed that poison was fast-acting. It meant he couldn't have been poisoned before his trip. He had to have been injected while he was stateside. Then the call came in. NCIS was informed about Barreto's death. He was found by a maid and so what stumped the team was the fact that there was a second body in the hotel room.

McGee said the second body wasn't there when they dropped off Barreto. There was no identification on the body. No one knew who the other guy was. Jimmy was even saying this was bad because there's no way they could cover up the murder of two men. There was also a journalist snooping around.

Her name was Robyn Kael. She somehow found out about Barreto's death before the Venezuelan government did. She also demanded to know what Director Vance was hiding. Parker had her escorted from the building, but it was getting harder to cover up this crime.

Both bodies were taken back to NCIS. Jimmy did the autopsy on both. He had a Venezuelan guard watch his every move. The Venezuelan government wanted oversight with this investigation.

The Americans were playing along until Jimmy identified the second victim. The second victim was Dimitry Yorgi. He was an Eastern European hitman. He was known for using poisons. He was killed hours after Barreto. Which indicated that Yorgi killed Barreto. Yorgi was then killed to cover up the part he played in Barreto's death.

Or so they thought.

The team looked into Barreto's last movements. They saw he was in frequent contact with Fernando Vega. Vega's brother was killed by an American ops team. He has ample reason to not want this alliance with Americans to go through. Vega's fingerprints were also found on Yorgi's neck. NCIS located Vega.

He was meeting with someone. Both were ultimately arrested. Vega was meeting with Lena Paulson. Vance's Lena Paulson. They were friends with benefits. She was in town because she was acting as an UN representative. And she lied to Vance when she said she left Germany's spy ring.

Lena was still representing BND. She was called back in because Vega was her asset. Vega and Barreto had adjoining rooms. When Vega overheard someone moving around Barreto's room, he checked and he found Yorgi take photos of the body. Vega interrupted him. They got into a fight that ended with Vega killing Yorgi.

He then called his handler to report what happened. Vance was mad at Lena for keeping secrets. She was mad at him for keeping secrets. The relationship might not recover after this.

Vance was wondering about his future when the team realized who was the mastermind. The mastermind was the journalist. Kael was no longer working for the paper.

She was also the source that Knight gave the tidbit to. NCIS fed the journalist information about ramping up security for the negotiations as means of flushing out the mastermind, but all they did was put Kael on guard. She abducted Lena. She was threatening to kill Lena if Vance didn't call off negotiations with the Venezuelans.

Kael even sent a proof of life video. Kael was radicalized by Hezbollah and so she didn't want the American government to spread its reach in the world. Only NCIS soon found Kael. She was dumb enough not to remove Lena's smartwatch. The one that can be tracked. Kael was taken down and the team learned she wasn't their killer.

She didn't kill Barreto or order it. Venezuelan Admiral Carlos Mendoza killed Barreto. He was in charge of negotiating with Director Vance. He risked that to kill Barreto. Mendoza killed him because Barreto was sleeping with his wife. He wanted revenge and did it in a different country so that his own people wouldn't figure it out.

He didn't count on NCIS. They found evidence of Mendoza's involvement and he was quietly going to quit. And return to his native country to face charges.

As for Vance, he realized that he wants something more with Lena. They agreed to finally give the relationship a chance and it helps that she really was going to walk away from the BND this time.

Production Code: 22003
Summary: NCIS is called in to investigate when a lieutenant returns home on Halloween Eve to find a surprise party being thrown for someone else at his home.

It's Halloween! NCIS were hoping to head home early when they got a call about a brawl. The brawl involved Navy SEAL Lieutenant Bryce Prescott. He came home one day to find a bunch of strangers there and they claimed they were throwing a surprise party for Hal. Hal being the real owner.

Only Hal doesn't live there. He was a squatter. He moved himself in once Bryce was deployed. NCIS suspected he was hiding now that the real homeowner returned and they were wrong about that.

Hal didn't get a chance to move out. He was murdered in the house. The house he didn't own and one his friends felt belonged to him. And not to the lieutenant.

Bryce proved he was the homeowner. He also had to prove that he just came back stateside. He doesn't know Hal was or what he was doing in his house. He just wanted to go to sleep.

Yet, the murder investigation put a stop to all plans of relaxation. Hal was found murdered in the basement. He was bludgeoned to death. He was doing secret construction at Bryce's house and that wasn't the worst of it. Hal was not his real name. His real name was Felix Pitts. He has a record. He was going by an assumed name and was squatting in a house he didn't own.

No one knows what he was up to. The people at the surprise party were all Mary's friends. She was Hal's girlfriend. She hadn't been dating the victim for long. They were still in the honeymoon phase. The only troubling sign was when "Hal" ran into an old friend. The friend went by the nickname "Big Bark".

Hal owned the guy money. The two were apparently cellmates. Big Bark loaned Hal a lot of money. Hal kept saying he'd pay him back only Big Bark found out he was renting that house. He figured if he had enough money to do that then he could also pay off his debt.

NCIS didn't know Hal was renting. Bryce didn't put it up for rent. He inherited the house from his grandmother and he hasn't changed anything since he moved in. Bryce just left out one little detail.

He didn't mention his grandmother is Wanda Prescott. She was the wife of billionaire, Gavin Prescott. Gavin was worth two billion at his death. He was considered a bit eccentric. He donated lots of money. He died a few years ago and his wife inherited the old house. His wife Wanda was an antiques dealer. She left the house for her grandson.

Wanda had no clue that someone put the house for rent under her name. The person that did that was her money manager. Leonard felt he was underpaid. He was trying to make some extra cash by putting the house for sale while its new owner was deployed. As for Bryce, he was a good guy. He wanted to make it in the world on his own.

The only thing he was willing to accept from grandma was the house he was raised in. He was the best of the grandchildren. The other grandchildren don't bother to call or visit. And that's why Leonard didn't place their houses for rent.

Leonard got the whole idea when a squatter moved into the family's cabin. They got the person out. Someone not being Leonard put the house for rent as a spooky cabin and Hal was connected to that house as well. Hal was a firm believer in get rich quick schemes. He's been breaking into the Prescott's homes looking for treasure.

Its why he started construction at Bryce's home. He was trying to rob the place of all valuables. It was just his luck that none of that was found in Bryce's home because he didn't care about the money.

Hal got the idea from a magazine article. It was an interview with Gavin and Wanda. Gavin accidentally said he had hidden treasures all throughout the house. He meant mementos. Things that reminded him of his children, but he was eccentric and people started to believe they could get rich by robbing the house.

There were so many break-ins that Gavin spent a fortune to pull the article. The magazine issue was supposed to have disappeared for good and so Wanda was curious how Hal found it.

They found that article along with other evidence in Hal's storage locker. He really thought he could get rich by robbing the homes. He was killed before he realized how dumb he was and no one knew who put the cabin for rent.

The cabin wasn't haunted or anything. There was a fire in the 80s. Its since been rebuilt. It was only known for being haunted because Gavin was messing around one day. He claimed it was haunted. People began to believe it was haunted. It kept most people away and so its odd that it would be put up for rent. Or that NCIS found Mary robbing the place.

Mary was Hal's girlfriend, remember. She claimed she didn't know anything about his secret life. She was arrested for the robbery and she revealed all. She loaned Hal nine hundred dollars to rent the house.

Hal didn't find the treasure he was looking for. She thought she could cheer him up by throwing him the party. She really didn't know he was already dead when she invited her friends to the party. She robbed the cabin because she was trying to get back some of the money she loaned Hal.

Hal's real killer was the courier deliveryman. Phil noticed that Hal was buying treasure seeking tools. He demanded a cut for his silence and, when Hal never found the treasure, Phil came to believe that Hal was deliberating hiding it from him.

They got into a fight. Phil killed Hal. Plus, the treasure that Mary found was just a box full of mementos. Its' what Gavin meant by using the word "treasure". The box was returned to Wanda and she cried when she saw it.

And the team later repurposed Ducky's old office. They turned it into a multipurpose hang-out room. The whole team was celebrating while McGee was continuing to carry out a secret investigation into the new Deputy Director.

Summary: After receiving intelligence on deadly threats to multiple locations that could lead to a catastrophic war, NCIS is called in to try to neutralize the danger.

All of NCIS was woken up at three in the morning about a full-scale war. It was believed that Russia or at least Russia's proxies were about to attack Western Europe.

They were willing to go against NATO. United States was in an alliance with several European powers that made up NATO. If one was attacked, the other powers will rise up to defend them. It therefore didn't make sense why Russia was willing to break this uneasy peace.

They kept their fight in Eastern Europe where they were fighting through proxies and they were still losing. They would be starting World War III if they moved farther west. And still the United States believe they were about to because they got intel from the NCIS office in Naples.

One of their allies was telling them that Russia was preparing for an assault via Belarus. The United States had to take the threat seriously and so everyone was called in.

The federal agents were put on high alert in case any nuclear weapons had been transported out of Russia. Parker called in his team. He couldn't get in contact with Knight because she took the weekend off. She was off camping. Parker had to send Jimmy to go and bring her in. Knight didn't arrive back in time as everyone was discussing a preventive attack.

The President wasn't making decisions on this one. He was on board his plane. AirForce One was suffering technical glitches and the president couldn't be radio'd in. The Speaker of the House was also on the plane. Which should have left things in the Vice President's hands only they were having a secret colonoscopy.

This meant that Senator Judd Larmont was running things while everyone else couldn't be contacted. The senator was dumb. He was quick to anger. He thought that NCIS Naples was in Florida instead of Italy. He also wanted to bomb Belarus first to show the world how tough the United States were.

The man was willing to kick off WWII to prove a point. He didn't care about the fallout. Or the many that would die if they went ahead with his plan. The generals were against it. NCIS was against it. The generals were willing to ignore common sense just so they wouldn't break command. NCIS was different.

Parker was refusing to go along with the senator's plans. The senator wanted NCIS to give them the location of Belarus's vulnerable points. Parker didn't want to sign off on that and so he refused direct orders from the senator as well as the general in charge.

FBI quickly moved in to arrest everyone that refused command. Parker and McGee were arrested. The FBI tried to arrest Torres as well and he escaped. Kasie meanwhile connected Jimmy's phone to the security cameras at NCIS. She wanted him to see it wasn't safe to come back.

It turns out Naples sent out a second message to their American friends. It was encrypted. It would take Kasie and McGee a while to decrypt it, but the senator didn't want to wait the few hours they needed to verify that Belarus was on the attack. He was that set on attacking first. It didn't seem to matter if Belarus was willing to stand down.

Parker and McGee managed to get away from the FBI. They made it to Kasie's lab. Kasie called Jimmy. He and Knight conferenced with the others. They came up with a plan to decrypt the message.

They just had to avoid the federal agents intent on arresting them. It was kinda quick how fast the FBI arrested or tried to arrest everybody. It was almost as if everyone knew in advance that NCIS would be a problem. The senator also had suspicious knowledge that the nukes in Florida would come in handy long before they got the original message from Italy.

Parker, McGee went to the basement. They ran into Torres. They all destroyed the comms room together. The FBI were locked out of system. They couldn't get the locations in Belarus.

They also knew that NCIS was still in the building. The guys knocked out all power. This also meant Kasie couldn't decipher the second message. The upside was that the FBI's cell jammer was offline. The team was getting phone calls from Director Vance. Vance wasn't brought in earlier on. As far as he knows, his team went rogue against a direct order.

The FBI quickly found the men. They arrested them again. They got the power back on. They were going to take the NCIS Agents to prison when Kasie said that she got back into her system and she could decipher the message from Naples. She just asked for a few more minutes. The FBI gave her that.

Kasie soon got the message that said Ukraine took out the Belarus launchers. Belarus was no longer a threat. They couldn't attack the rest of Europe. The United States didn't have to start a war and so the world was saved from an incompetent senator.

Director Vance was still upset with the team. They caused physical damage if nothing else. The electricity was still going in and out. Parker offered to pay for it, but he would go broke if he tried. Vance also clarified things. He said Ukraine took out the launchers before Naples got the first message.

This meant that Belarus was never a danger to NATO. The United States was willing to thank NCIS and FBI for their quick actions in preventing a war. It had to be secret of course. No one wanted the public to find out how close they came to destroying the world.

And Knight turned a page with Jimmy. They still love each other. They just weren't going to be what the other needs and so they agreed to stay friends.

Guest Stars: John Getz (Captain Thomas Butler), Tom Schanley (CIA Officer Conrad), Matthew Lawrence (Danny Butler), Victoria Kelleher (NCIS Accountant Barbara)
Production Code: 22005
Summary: NCIS works with the CIA to discover what secrets are being kept by Captain Butler, an aging former spy.

NCIS Special Agent Torres was trying on-line dating. He joined MateQuest initially as a favor. Jimmy asked him to do it because he wanted a wingman and Torres helped him feel brave. Only now Torres wants to take it seriously.

He wanted try dating again. He took time off during his brief flirtation with Bishop. He devoted himself to work when that blew up and things were different now. He was going to therapy.

He was finally dealing with his issues. He was in a good place to meet someone and unfortunately the dating game has changed significantly since he last tried it. He couldn't just post a bunch of pictures anymore. He'd get a mistaken for a bot.

Torres now has to sell himself. He has to write about his life. His interests. What he was looking for in a partner. Torres didn't really know an answer to any of those things and so he asked McGee for help. They were talking about it when they got a call about a hostage situation.

There was a former Navy captain that took a doctor hostage. Captain Thomas Butler was losing his memory. He did a cognitive test and it triggered some buried memories to the point he was speaking Finnish. He was also coming up with these numbers.

When the doctor tried to ascertain what those numbers could mean, Butler took her hostage. There were some nurses nearby and they talked him down only his son was confused about what happened.

NCIS felt the same. They checked Butler's file. He was never stationed in Finland or at least not officially. They also searched the numbers he gave and the search alone took out the electricity of an entire block.

The military hospital had to get someone in to fix it. The team figured it was best to go back to their office to look into Butler.

They found out Butler worked out of the Pentagon. Which could be a problem. Butler now has dementia. He could accidentally reveal state secrets and the numbers he gave could mean something. Kasie looked into those numbers. It was a spy code.

Kasie's digging triggered a CIA investigation. The CIA sent Officer Conrad to answer questions from Director Vance. He revealed that Butler did have high clearance until he retired and Conrad didn't think he was a problem because he's been under surveillance.

Butler was a Soviet spy. He was recruited from Finland. He joined the Navy. The CIA were alerted to him back in the 70s and they let the Soviet Union believe that they had a considerable good mole. Then the Soviet Union collapsed. Butler was a man without a country.

He retired from the Navy. He's been living as a civilian until he developed dementia. He was now dangerous. He killed an orderly that was watching him at the hospital. He took off. He could be anywhere and he doesn't remember any key events.

It turns out Conrad lied about Butler being under surveillance. Yes, they knew the Russians had a spy. They just didn't know who he was and that's why he was able to retire like nothing happened. It wasn't until Kasie cracked the code Butler gave them that the CIA identified Butler as the mole.

They now were trying to cover their behinds. They needed NCIS and NCIS needed to limit the damage. Butler managed to get a hold of a sensitive file called "Project Laurel" from the Navy archives. It was now a matter of national security.

Butler was still acting like a spy. He managed to evade cameras. They found him using one of six payphones that are still operational. Butler had called his home line because he promised to make it up to his son with ice cream. Danny Butler said his dad was often away at work.

He missed a lot of baseball games. His dad always offered to make it up to him with ice cream and NCIS later found Butler at the ice cream shop. Butler was arrested. He was questioned. He claimed that people were out to get him and the only person he was willing to talk to was Sparrow.

Sparrow was the code name of a dirty CIA Officer. He died in the 1970s. Poor Butler thought it was still 1979. It's why he left the message for his son. He thought Danny was still a little kid. He doesn't remember growing old or Danny moving back in to take care of him for the past ten years.

Butler didn't remember any of that. Parker tried to tell him that times have changed. The Soviet Union was gone. He showed Butler his cell phone. Butler thought it was all a trick and so Parker showed him photos of Danny growing up. And it was enough.

Butler realized time has passed. He also told NCIS that he hadn't killed the orderly. It was someone else. It was probably a Russian and so NCIS used Butler. They pretend to go along with his delusion when really it was a trap for Conrad. Conrad was a Russian spy.

He joined the investigation to take out Butler. Butler never committed treason. It was a lie that Conrad came up with. Butler acted as a double agent to feed the Russians bad intel. He was a patriot the whole time. And he helped them arrest Conrad.

Butler was reunited with his son. They went out for ice cream while Torres deleted his dating profile. He hated that he felt like he was undercover with the things he said about himself and so he's going back to traditional dating.

Summary: Things become tense when Knight is assigned to protect his wife after the home of a high-level defense contractor is attacked.

NCIS Special Agent Jessica Knight was a good sister. Her sister Robin celebrated graduating an online course. Her specialty was all over the place. Everyone knew the new degree meant nothing. It just didn't matter to either Robin or Knight. The sisters threw a party and it turned into a rager. Knight was drinking toe to toe with Robin.

Torres thought she'd call out sick and she came to work the next day like nothing happened. Knight was just fine. It was Torres that was downing electrolytes. He was going to make a joke out of it when he heard they caught a new case. A new secret case involving Freddy Martin.

Martin was a defense contractor. Someone broke into his home. The invader was killed and now the Secretary of Defense wants NCIS to personally investigate the matter. It wasn't Freddy that killed the mystery man. It was his girlfriend, Sheila. Which his wife Melinda was ticked off about.

She showed up at the scene a few minutes after NCIS and she wanted a private conversation with her husband. She wanted to ream him out behind closed doors, but the apartment was a crime scene. They couldn't leave her alone in a crime scene. It went against all of their rules.

Also, Melinda was a suspect. The man that broke into the apartment had known about the panic room. He might have gone there intending to kill Martin. The only person that had a clear motive on wanting Martin dead was his wife. Melinda didn't seem surprised when she showed up at the scene.

She asked Sheila to give her the robe back and then she used the rest of her time to demanding that the whole situation stays under wraps. It was already rumored that her husband constantly cheated on her. She didn't want anyone to tank their brand by attaching a murder to their name.

Melinda put her husband on a flight to Geneva Convention. He was attending a diplomatic conference. She stayed behind to take note of everything that was destroyed by NCIS. They ruined the rug.

They messed up the chandeliers. She wanted a full account of everything. The one thing that didn't shock her was the dead body. The mystery person broke into the apartment. He could've wanted to kill her husband and was instead killed by his mistress. It was Sheila that shot the intruder. And that didn't faze Melinda at all.

The one thing that did stump her was the revelation she was the target all along. NCIS tried to identify their failed kidnapper. It was taking time to get a name.

Only they did gain access to his burner phone. The guy was taking photos of Melinda. The man was following Melinda. He wanted to abduct Melinda. Melinda said she never met the man. She had no idea who he was or why he wanted to hurt her. She was a philanthropist. She was well-known socialite on the DC circuit. She was in charge of a discretionary fund attached to her charity.

Melinda wasn't upset that someone wanted to abduct her. She went ahead with her day like nothing happened. It wasn't until NCIS identified the gunman as Edward Silvino from Missouri that Melinda finally showed some emotion.

Melinda was not that woman's real name. She stole the identity of the real Melinda Willis that died twenty years ago. She went on to meet Martin. They got married. He became a billionaire. She became his philanthropist wife. None suspected that Melinda was lying about her identity.

Melinda also locked Knight in the panic room while she escaped. She was on the run from whatever or whoever was in Kansas City. It took Knight two hours to get out of that room and by then the rest of the team was looking for Melinda. Her real name is April. She grew up in a trailer park. She started dating a guy named Jason Marino.

Then he died. She went on the run and no one knows why. Marino was the son of Carla Marino. She was a mob boss in Kansas City. Her son Jason wasn't involved in the lifestyle. He died in a car accident.

Carla has been looking for April/Melinda ever since. NCIS initially thought Carla might have helped Melinda meet Martin in order to skim money from the Secretary of Defense, but that wasn't it.

Carla caught up to Melinda. She took her prisoner. She also took Knight prisoner. Knight witnessed Carla's men take a DNA sample from Melinda. She thought was odd so she got the full story from Melinda. Melinda and Jason had run away from Missouri. They wanted to start over somewhere fresh. Then Jason died. He got hit by a car while trying to get them something to eat.

Melinda was three months pregnant at the time. She wasn't ready to be a single mom. She also knew that Carla would keep looking for them and so she got in touch with a priest.

He helped put her baby up for adoption. She started over as Melinda. She has no clue where her daughter ended up. She didn't want to know because she didn't want to reveal anything if Carla ever found her. Carla took Melinda's DNA to find her granddaughter. She put on those ancestry websites. She found out that her granddaughter was a florist.

Her name is Lauren. NCIS arrested Carla when she went to Lauren's business, but she's going to get off. They couldn't even connect her to the priest's death. Her men claimed it was all them when they abducted Melinda.

She wasn't harmed and neither was Knight. Carla was never seen by anyone giving them orders. The only upside was that Parker forced her to go back to Missouri. And she'll be arrested if she ever contacts Melinda or Lauren again.

Carla went back home. Melinda in the meantime met her daughter. Lauren was a good kid and she's lived a great life thanks to the sacrifice Melinda made for her. Melinda also wasn't so bad. She and Knight developed a friendship.

Summary: Torres receives intel from a confidential informant regarding top secret naval information that's at risk of being sold.

McGee was regretting his recent choices. He volunteered to referee his children's local soccer league. He thought it would be fun and he had no clue that he would be dealing with angry parents all day. He was still arguing on the phone with one parent when they caught a case.

NCIS were brought in to investigate the death of Naval Dr. Roger Carnahan. The victim appeared to have killed himself. He took off his wedding ring right before he shot himself. The team were questioning why he would do that much less in a public park when Knight came across the answer. Knight used his face to open his phone and that's when she saw the photos of Roger's wife in a motel with Torres.

Torres had called in sick that day. He wasn't with them when they found Roger. He was still at the motel with the victim's wife and so the team set out to surprise him. They went to the motel.

They found Torres. He asked them what brings him there. They said they were wondering about the same thing with him. Torres was found with Amber Carnahan. They weren't having an affair after all. She was his criminal informant. She met Torres at a party that SECNAV threw a month ago. And she turned to him because she suspected her husband was about to commit a crime.

Amber's husband had interrupted them when she tried to tell Torres everything. Torres then snuck his card to Amber and he told her that she could contact him at any time. She did just that on the day her husband died.

There was evidence he killed himself. There were also people swearing he would never kill himself. Amber on the other hand seemed relieved. Her husband was a piece of work. He got her away from her job. He limited her friends. She doesn't have family. He made sure he was her whole world.

Only Amber knew he couldn't be trusted. She contacted Torres because she found out that her husband was selling top secret information. NCIS checked. Roger did access the ONR system and he stole information on the "Mad Falon".

It was the first hypersonic nuclear weapon in the American military. It would change warfare forever. Roger was probably worried about getting caught and that's why he hired a private investigator to follow around his wife. The team never got a chance to question Amber about it because someone abducted her from the diner.

Amber was missing. She was grabbed by someone in a white van. There was another white van at the motel and it turns out there were two white vans out there. The first one at the motel was in fact the private investigator. The one that Roger hired to track his wife. The PI's name is Harrold Lamb. He works with an assistant named Daniel Simmons. They have an alibi for when Amber was grabbed. They also had an alibi for Roger's murder. And it was murder because Jimmy determined that Roger hadn't killed himself.

NCIS got into touch with Lamb. Lamb used to be former Navy. He was also the one that ran the background check on Roger and so he knew Roger before he was hired to follow Amber, but Torres kept butting heads with Lamb. It got especially bad once they determined that Amber played Torres. Amber got access to the SECNAV guest list before the party. She also got access to Torres's private NCIS file. She found out about the abuse his mother suffered from her boyfriend and so she played into Torres's protective behavior to get close to him.

The one thing he couldn't figure out was why. Amber could have stolen the information about the missile and sell it without ever contacting Torres. For some reason, she set her sights on him. Torres was so angry about being played that he took out on Lamb. Lamb argued back. Knight had to break up the argument. She calmed everyone down and Lamb eventually admitted that he planted a tracker on Amber. NCIS went to a warehouse where they found Amber tied up in the back of a white van. They also found the body of Dr. Wendy Lythcott.

Lythcott was Roger's coworker. She seemed worried about Amber when she heard she was abducted. The team couldn't understand why she was at the scene or why she had been killed while Amber was unharmed. The team also found a 3D printer in the warehouse. It was printing the Mad Falcon. Except their version was a vacuum. Amber was taken back to the office and they interrogated her. Amber said Lythcott was her one friend. The Navy did work on a missile program. It didn't work. It was a dud and so Roger had it shelved.

Lythcott spent years on the program. She was talking to Amber about it when Amber realized they could turn into a vacuum. Amber used to sell things on the shopping network. She has contacts in sales. She could help Lythcott launch the newest vacuum. They stole it from Roger. Roger was never supposed to find out and that meant they didn't have a reason to kill him. The real killer proved to be Danny. Lamb's assistant. He was following Amber around and he heard her talking about a secret program. He wanted to steal it for himself only he didn't count on it being a vacuum.

Danny thought he was stealing a missile. He also tried to kill Lamb and NCIS put him down before he could hurt anyone else. It turns out Torres was right about Amber. She wouldn't hurt anyone. She just wanted out of her marriage. Even if it meant her husband got in trouble for losing the Mad Falcon.

And Jimmy later retired from being a referee because the stress was getting to him, but now McGee was on his own against so many parents. Angry angry parents.

Production Code: 22009
Summary: NCIS has to find out the truth behind a tell all book that threatens a decorated Marine's life before it is published.

It's been three days. There was still no heat at the NCIS building. The agents were keeping themselves warm by staying by the printer and taking photos of their hands. Parker kept saying that maintenance will fix the heat, but Director Vance had bigger things to worry about.

He asked both Parker as well as Deputy Director LaRoche to report to his office. He told them that someone was writing a tell all book that basically blamed a marine of gross negligence. The incident happened fourteen years ago.

This same negligence allegedly caused the deaths of three marines. And the man that was being accused was a decorated veteran who became something of an advocate for veterans.

Merritt Hastings was injured in fighting back against the Taliban in the early days of the war. He threw one of their grenades back at them. It exploded in mid-air and messed up his arm.

He could have disappeared after that. He instead used his notoriety to appeal for better conditions for veterans. He even has a bill currently being discussed in Congress that could provide veterans better funding once they leave the military. Hastings seemed like a good guy and Parker thought whoever was writing this book was the Grinch.

Who else would go after an injured veteran right before Christmas? It was definitely Grinch-like behavior. There was a media blackout while the allegations were investigated and the Director put LaRoche in charge.

He normally would have given it directly to NCIS only he wanted to follow the rule book on this one. LaRoche was put in charge. NCIS were told to assist him with the investigation. They did their best to pretend like he wasn't there and he just kept popping up. Jimmy was even brusque with him when he stopped LaRoche from snacking in his lab.

Though to be fair to him, he didn't take the team's attitude to heart. He and Parker later spoke to Hastings. He said everything that needed to be said was in his action report. He didn't think there was anything else to add.

He now was a motorcycle mechanic. He only hires veterans. He makes sure to take of his own and so it was shocking that someone would write a book against him. NCIS tried to figure out the motive. They thought it was a political shakedown. Someone on the hill wanted something and was willing to smear a veteran to get it.

Only they were wrong about that one. The person who wrote the book was Samuel Cross. He was a marine. He was also the brother of Evan Cross. Evan was one of the marines that died during the battle with the Taliban fourteen years ago. His brother believes Evan died because of Hastings. NCIS visited him at his home. They found his place decorated with post-its. Sam was saying Hastings caused the death of those men. He didn't go to NCIS about it because there was a coverup and he claimed he was finally going to unmask Hastings as his brother's killer.

The man was coming from a place of hurt. It's been more than a decade and he still needed someone to blame. He claimed he was getting justice for his brother when really it was his own guilt driving him to write that book. The brothers were serving under the same unit. Sam had been injured a few days before his brother was killed. He was benched and he wasn't there to save his brother from the attack. He was feeling guilty. Torres recognized it right away. He thought maybe they should Sam some therapy.

LaRoche was more concerned about optics. It doesn't look good that Sam was throwing around the words "cover up". He had NCIS look into the past investigation. They found no wrongdoing on Hastings part and so McGee got an early copy of Sam's book. He used his pen name to pull some strings. They got the book and it turns out Sam did find out something. There was a radio communication to Hastings that told him to pull out. Hastings didn't get that message. Evan got the message. He was put in charge of the radio. And he missed several warnings.

NCIS went back to Hastings with proof of a radio communication. He tried to take the blame. His people, the ones that survived the assault, all came forward to say that he wasn't guilty.

Hastings ran a tight ship. They thought he was protecting someone. They just didn't know why. Evan was new at the radio, but that doesn't mean he messed up. Evan was a newlywed when he died. His wife has done a lot of work with veterans to help herself heal and now her former brother-in-law was dragging it all back up.

The poor woman was tired of being harassed by the media. She also warned NCIS that Sam was burying his pain anyway he could. He didn't need justification. Some veterans later visited Sam's home.

They tried to threaten him. NCIS was called in. The media was also tipped off and now there was a front page photo of McGee getting hit in the face by a veteran marine. LaRoche thought the case was over after that. He was fine with accepting Hastings's guilt. He didn't care if the man was lying or not. He just wanted the SECNAV to look good.

It was NCIS that kept digging. Kasie later found evidence that the radio was messed up. It wasn't Evan's fault or Hastings's fault. They never got the warning. The radio was at fault. Sam was the radio operator until he got injured and his brother was promoted to his place when he got benched. What Sam never told anyone was that his knee was injured before his deployment. He tried to push through the pain. He ignored it because that's what he thought a marine should do and now he's always going to blame himself for his brother getting killed.

Torres reached out to Sam. He also contacted several other marines. They all came together to help Sam to finally process his grief and Sam wasn't going ahead with the book. Hastings was willing to take the fall so that the blame wouldn't land on Evan. And Sam could respect that.

The heating was eventually fixed at headquarters and Torres spent the holiday with a mystery girlfriend.

Baker's Man

Season 22

Episode Number: 477

Season Episode: 10

Originally aired: Monday January 27, 2025

Show Stars: Sean Murray (NCIS Senior Special Agent Timothy McGee), Wilmer Valderrama (NCIS Special Agent Nick Torres), Katrina Law (NCIS Special Agent Jessica Knight), Brian Dietzen (Chief Medical Examiner Jimmy Palmer), Diona Reasonover (Forensic Scientist Kasie Hines), Rocky Carroll (NCIS Director Leon Vance), Gary Cole (FBI Special Agent Alden Park)
Guest Stars: Ken Garito (Leslie Walker), Joel Steingold (Officer Frank Mandel), Melina Kanakaredes (Eleni Kostakis), Carlos Javier Rivera (Arturo Jimenez), Jordyn Owens (Virgil Wilson)
Production Code: 22010
Summary: After NCIS learns that the owner of Parker's favorite bakery is being blackmailed, they hatch a plan to save her.

When Parker swings by Kostakis Bakery to pick up some pastries for the office, he finds the shop manned only by new employee Virgil, who's flustered and speeds through their transaction. And the instant Parker's out the door, a gloved hand holding a gun appears from the kitchen.

Although Parker thought the encounter was a little strange, he doesn't realize the gravity of the situation until the team descends on the pastry box like locust and removes enough goodies to see the message Virgil wrote on the bottom:

"Help! Call 911."

This sends Parker and company scrambling back to the bakery, where they find Virgil's body facedown in a vat of batter. There are signs of an attempt to open the safe, which would make it the fourth attempted robbery in this area of late.

But what puzzles the team is that the cash register was cleaned out, but Virgil's wallet's still in his pocket. And although there's a bullet embedded in the wall, he wasn't killed by a gunshot. Parker's furious that he missed what was happening under his nose.

Enter Eleni, the baker so talented that Parker brought her great buns (his words!) into the office six days in a row. She fights her way through the police standing outside the bakery and is horrified at what she discovers inside.

She's also shocked to learn that Alden (her words!) is a federal agent. He says he didn't tell her because he didn't want to scare her off, prompting her to ask, "Scare me off from what?" Yeah, Alden. Scare her off from what?

Okay, back to the dead man. Virgil had a felony conviction, but Eleni wanted to give him a fresh start. She tearfully describes his novice baking efforts and says he probably tried to fight off the robbers because money's been tight at the bakery.

Although the local PD should have jurisdiction over the crime, Parker wants to handle it himself, so he and Knight pay a visit to Virgil's parole officer. He says Virgil was on the right path after serving two years for grand theft auto, and he and Parker then bond over Eleni's amazing baked goods.

Meanwhile, the smell of those baked goods draws Vance to Kasie's lab, where the contents of Eleni's kitchen have been sent for analysis.

He gives Parker permission to keep working the case, but when their eyes fall to the goodies on the table, Kasie sharply warns them away. Those meringues they were salivating over? They're made of a mix of 33 percent sugar and 67 percent cocaine. In fact, she found $100,00 worth of the drug mixed into the bakery's sugar supply.

This means Parker has to pull his crush in for questioning, especially when they learn that she'd recently received an unexplained $25,000 deposit from an offshore shell account.

Eleni's starting to realize the gravity of her situation when her sleazy lawyer Leslie Walker arrives to bluster about jurisdiction and procedural missteps.

As he tries to hustle Eleni out the door, Parker quietly asks if that's what she wants. Her answer is clear: "I want to not be in the same room with you." Understandable, but ouch!

Time to look into Eleni's background. McGee reports that she's a second-generation Greek immigrant and, on paper, doesn't exactly look like Walter White. When Parker adds that she's the only one of her five siblings who didn't move to Greece when one of their sisters got sick, everyone silently absorbs the level of personal information their boss knows about their suspect.

Awkward, then, that it was Eleni's lawyer who got a man named Charles Barbieri off on drug charges and that it was Eleni who delivered a shipment of cocaine meringues to Barbieri worth the exact amount of that mystery deposit at the exact time that Virgil was being murdered.

This sends Kasie to her lab's equivalent of an Easy-Bake Oven as she tries to master the art of cocaine meringues in an attempt to prove that a newbie baker like Virgil could've made them. (Cocaine melts at 208 degrees, but meringues bake above 200 degrees. It's tricky!)

When Torres picks up her blow torch, she yells at him to be careful around the powdered sugar because it's highly combustible. Then she brings up this week's huge personal reveal: Torres' secret girlfriend is Robin Knight, Jess' sister.

Earlier in the episode, Knight loudly lamented her sister's mysterious new boyfriend and complained about being the one who'd have to clean up the inevitable mess.

Torres then confided to Palmer that he's the person Robin's seeing, and Palmer promptly sold him out to Kasie for the low, low price of 11 peanut M&Ms. Although Torres insists that the relationship's not serious, Kasie insists that he come clean with Jess or she'll do it for him.

Speaking of messy personal connections, Parker turns up at Kostakis Bakery to ask about Barbieri. Eleni snips, "He's just a customer, Alden. Same as you." Double ouch!

Despite her anger, he calmly starts helping clean up the messy aftermath of Virgil's murder, but when he picks up a child's drawing with the name "Manny" written on it, Eleni snatches it out of his hand and tells him to drop it before someone else dies.

But Eleni's warning was too late, and Virgil's parole officer calls Parker to an alley near the bakery, where police have found the bodies of Barbieri and a rival gang member, along with a blood-spattered Kostakis Bakery box.

When Eleni disappears and the team learns that her attorney had helped move money for both sides of this gang war, they bring him in for questioning. Batter call Saul, amirite? Walker suggests that Eleni needed to find a new place to cook — er, bake — since her kitchen's now a crime scene.

We then get a marvelous exchange between Palmer and Torres about Jimmy's inability to keep a secret. "I think Kasie's been conditioning me," Palmer admits. "She's been giving me M&Ms every day at 11:30 a.m. I'm like Pavlov's dog!"

Knight walks in on this not-at-all suspicious conversation with the news that Barbieri's body contained traces of a discontinued food production substance that can be traced to a now-abandoned factory.

When Knight and Torres arrive at the building, he starts to come clean about the "work conflict" he has with his new sort-of girlfriend, and Jess' face is a mask of dawning horror as she starts to put it all together. But her flurry of aggravated slaps to his torso is interrupted when they realize they're not alone in the building.

Nope, Eleni's there, having been Jesse Pinkman'd into baking her cocaine meringues for the terrifying Arturo Jimenez, who's got millions of dollars of product to move. As Walker explains at NCIS HQ, Eleni asked him for a loan, and he hooked her up with Arturo, who didn't take it kindly when she told him she had no interest in being his drug chef.

The dominos start falling fast. Kasie discovers that Eleni didn't need the money for her bakery, but to pay a protection bribe on behalf of a prison inmate named Manuel Lopez. Walker was Manny's lawyer, which is why Eleni went to him for help.

Some help. Arturo's got her literally chained to her mixer, complete with a Walt-and-Jesse-style respirator. But she bravely barter for Knight and Torres' lives, telling Arturo that she'll bake the product faster if she can use them as her assistants.

He agrees, and as they crack eggs, the two agents quietly plot their escape and argue about Robin. Torres then spots a big bowl of powdered sugar, and an idea forms.

When Knight's phone rings with a check-in from Parker, Arturo threatens them all with his big gun. Jess calls Parker "boss" and she reports that they found nothing of interest at the old factory. This sets off Parker's alarm bells since she's never called him that before.

He and McGee arrive at the factory just as Torres puts his plan into motion by tossing the powdered sugar into an open flame, causing the explosion Kasie warned him about. Yeah, Mr. Torres! Yeah, science!

The good guys are rescued, and Eleni tells Parker that Manny's her sister's nephew and the reason she stayed in the U.S. It's also the reason she hired Virgil, Manny's friend from lockup who had no idea about the cocaine.

This fact raises one final question for Parker: why would Arturo kill Virgil but leave $100,000 of cocaine in a kitchen destined to become a crime scene?

Answer: Virgil's real killer had no idea about the drug operation.

But there's still some business left. First, Torres tries to talk to Knight, assuring her that he didn't tell her about Robin because there's nothing serious to report yet. Jess warns him that Robin's probably already planning their wedding, and although she insists that she's happy as long as Robin's happy, she turns down his offer to grab dinner.

Parker's also in a strange place with Eleni when he arrives at her bakery, having baked baklava for her. But the tension between them has melted away like cocaine in a 309-degree oven. Alden's baklava turns out to be delicious, if a little thin, and he opens up to her a bit about his mother and her sweet tooth. Eleni takes his hand and thanks him for saving her, then offers to help him with his baklava technique.

Summary:	NCIS stages a fake wedding in an attempt to take down the mob.

In the big orange room, Torres is falling asleep on his feet, which Knight attributes to his romantic activities with her sister — which she's totes kewl with, to be clear. (Narrator: she is not totes kewl.)

Sleepiness turns out to be the least of Torres' problems when the team's called to a crime scene and Palmer rolls over the victim of the week to reveal his face. Before you can say "terribly unsubtle," Torres starts coughing and claims he's too sick to keep working the crime scene.

To basically no one's surprise after that unconvincing display, Torres' fingerprints turn up on a flask in the pocket of the dead guy, who was carrying a fake military ID but is actually career criminal Vincent Kelso.

Parker is irritated to learn that Vance has Torres on a need-to-know undercover op to bust a gang out of Baltimore that's using bogus credentials to steal equipment from Navy bases to sell on the black market.

Nick's infiltrated the gang posing as low-level bruiser Donny Rico, but the guy calling the shots, Roman, is only the middleman. The real goal is to take down the ringleader, Wilk. That means "wolf," if you're not up on your Polish.

In his Rico persona, Torres strolls into the bar where the gang runs their business and starts talking tough about stepping into Kelso's place. This impresses Roman, but Roman's son would clearly prefer that Rico had been the one found shot dead that morning.

Okay, remember the vibe in Abby's lab back in the day, with the pounding-bass techno punk? Whatever that was, its direct opposite is happening in Palmer's morgue, where Jimmy's practicing shaking his groove thang to peppy pop for Victoria's upcoming daddy/daughter dance. (He's taking lessons and is the youngest participant by a few decades, from the sound of it.)

Knight, who's already been politely bounced by Kasie for complaining about Robin and Nick, interrupts the solo rehearsal for a case update, which itself is interrupted by multiple calls from Robin, who's worried that Torres is MIA.

Well-meaning Palmer lets it slip that Robin's had a drawer at Torres' place for two weeks now, which undercuts Nick's insistence that their relationship isn't serious. Knight scoffs that she didn't get a drawer at Palmer's place for six whole months, which leads to his realization that he never actually got a drawer at hers.

The drawer is top of mind when Knight meets Torres near Roman's bar for an update on the case, and she warns him that when it comes to her sister, it starts with a cubic foot of space and ends with an engagement ring.

This brewing argument is cut short when a few of the gang members roll up and demand to know who Torres is talking to. Knight blurts out that she's his fiancée, which delights the rest of the team when they hear the story after the fact.

Also delighted? Robin, who heads to the Navy Yard to see why Jess isn't returning her calls. She finds the news of Torres' undercover work, and I'm quoting here, "soooo hottttt." When Jess tries to yet again nip this romance in the bud, Robin correctly says that Jess needs to stop parenting her so she can make her own choices. But she incorrectly says that it's none of Jess' business because hello, that's her sister's BFF co-worker, which does make it a little bit Jess' business.

At the bar, a young tough named Lenny asks "Rico" for advice on picking up women, including a bar patron named Lana. But Lana clearly prefers Torres, who suggests Lenny would have more luck if he opened his mouth less. A bold deviation from the usual "just be yourself" advice.

Roman's son, who's still got beef with Rico, sends him to detail Kelso's car so it's clean as a whistle to be dumped. Torres grumbles but does it, and he tips off the team about the location. Good thing, too, because they find ghost guns Torres didn't know about hidden in the wheel well.

This discovery ropes in Baltimore detective Martin Alonzo, who helps himself to the NCIS breakroom coffee as he shares that Kelso was working undercover for him. He susses out that they've got a man inside and warns them not to let Nick go down like Kelso did. Y'all, I'm not sure I trust this grizzled detective man.

Unaware that Kelso was an undercover brother, Torres is at the bar trying to talk Lenny into getting him in touch with Wilk. Lenny, who really just wants more dating advice, says not even Roman meets Wilk face-to-face. It's all done remotely.

Then Roman summons Torres to his office to grill him about the secret he's been keeping. Nick gropes around for a weapon and settles on a handy liquor bottle, but Roman's actually over the moon about Rico's engagement and wants to know when the wedding's happening so he can stop by with a beautiful wedding gift.

Roman then gets pinged on his ancient Palm Pilot, which, like the ghost guns, is too low-tech to be traced.

This sparks a plan, which comes together at Parker's plant daddy paradise of a house, where the plant daddy himself suggests that a wedding would be a great venue to clone Roman's Palm Pilot. Torres and Knight reluctantly agree to serve as the decoy couple.

All that's left is to get Vance on board, and like any father of the bride, Leon starts to negotiate over what he'll pay for. In the end, they settle on an open bar, a buffet, and DJ — but absolutely no to a live band.

With one week to plan a convincing wedding, Knight calls in her five-times-engaged sister, and Robin takes over like a champ, organizing every detail from flowers to cakes to place settings in the big orange room. She even tries to get Jess to go wedding dress shopping with her, but big sis blows her off.

This prompts Palmer to get a little stern, asking Knight if she's seen how happy Nick and Robin are together. "Who are you trying to protect here?" he gently asks.

Jess is ruminating on all of that as she and Nick stand at the altar to perform the world's most awkward kiss when the aforementioned gun-toting priest hits that point of the ceremony. (Don't worry; he's an NCIS agent who studied theology in college.)

Robin's on the scene playing the wedding planner, and nobody seems concerned that she's rubbing elbows with Roman's entire gang. This includes Lenny, who kept his mouth shut long enough to convince the lovely Lana to come along as his date.

Roman shows up too, and his beautiful wedding gift turns out to be a fat envelope of cash. Okay, don't get me wrong. It's a thoughtful gift. I was just hoping for a fancy blender or a really expensive Le Creuset or something like that.

But hey, the man clearly loves love and clinks his champagne glass until the happy couple performs another painful-looking kiss. McGee, playing the event photographer, insists on snapping some shots of the trio with a camera that's rigged to connect to Roman's Palm Pilot Bluetooth.

Robin watches closely as Torres and Knight stiffly sway through their first dance. Kasie and Palmer have much better flow dancing in the kitchen where the team's set up a surveillance hub. But they get back down to business when McGee's cloning program reveals that Roman's Palm Pilot had been wiped clean 10 minutes earlier. Then the man himself is found dead on the bathroom floor after complaining about an upset stomach.

Knight and Torres are still dancing to the world's longest version of "At Last" when the song comes to an end and Robin cuts in (as all good wedding planners do, obviously). McGee makes the rounds with his camera to quietly tell Knight that she needs to stall, so she grabs the microphone to give a toast to her new husband, who has to mouth his undercover name to her.

Her impromptu speech is purportedly about her father at first being opposed to the two of them dating because he was afraid of losing the two people he loves most in this world, and it ends with her looking directly at Nick and Robin as she gives her indirect blessing.

Hilariously, Wilk is brought down by Vance's cost-cutting measures. The NCIS director would only spring for beer and wine at the reception, so the team's suspicious when they see Lana giving the bartender a bottle of whiskey that was served to Roman just before he died.

All hell breaks loose when Lana, aka Wilk, realizes it's a set up and the whole gang scrambles. We love a girl boss! Knight tosses the wedding cake into her path — all four tiers, which is at least two more than Vance authorized —and draws her gun. Yet more proof that women! need! pockets!

Once the baddies are taken into custody, Knight asks Torres if he wants to grab a drink since their wedding night's still young. He declines, citing plans with Robin, and for the first time, Jess actually sounds okay with it.

She's so okay, in fact, that when Torres invites her along, she agrees.

Summary: NCIS investigates the fatal poisoning of one of Kasie's forensic scientists. McGee is questioned by the Pentagon regarding the contents of his book.

NCIS Special Agent McGee was about to publish a new book. People have been waiting for years for a new book. They were all so excited that they've already started bothering McGee for updates. They were also trying to become his new publisher and new publicist. McGee had to unplug his phone at one point.

He got tired of letting everyone down. He does have a new book, but he felt it needed several rewrites. He was nowhere ready to publish right now. He still wanted to work on it and naturally his friends were no help.

They were mocking him when the new case came in. NCIS was brought in to investigate the murder of Victor Chan. He was a Marine Core Reservist. He was also a forensic scientist.

He worked for the FBI. Chan went to a live action role-playing game at Kasie's apartment earlier that night. He left with the group. He was last seen going to his car and something happened there. He was poisoned. Someone then drove him in his car to a ravine where they forced the car into a ditch. It was supposed to look like Chan died in a car accident.

NCIS later poked holes in that theory. They believed that Chan was killed first. Then the "accident" happened. They also knew that if that were the case then something must have happened at Kasie's apartment. NCIS crawled all over that place. They found a container with hemlock in it.

They spoke with Kasie's other guests. They all denied playing a part in Chan's death. They all work with law enforcement. They were forensic scientists. There was Max with the temper. Carol with the facts. And Ilene with the profiler tricks.

They were all friends. Yet, someone wanted them dead. They wanted to kill them all. Not just Chan. Chan was a notable double dipper. He did that with the fondue and no one else ate from it.

The poison was in the fondue. The same fondue that was gifted to them by another friend. The other friend was Craig. He messaged them that he couldn't make it that night and he had fondue delivered only it turns out Craig was dead. He was found murdered on the same day as Chan. He never sent that message or the fondue that night.

The killer just didn't know about the double dipping. He or she planned on killing everyone at that party. Craig was first. The others were supposed to be next.

The group loves playing games together. They also talked about cases on game night. Craig did bring up some weird questions lately. He wouldn't tell the others what case it was about or who was involved. The others had thought that was weird. They dismissed it because they couldn't find any connection between the topics he mentioned and so Kasie thought she should contact Professor Davis.

Davis was the one that taught them everything about forensic science. The group met in her class. They still turn to her if they have questions and she made a connection that Kasie couldn't find. Kasie asked her about some of the things that Craig mentioned. She learned that Craig wasn't talking about solving a case.

He was talking about an off the books crime. NCIS went on to find Craig's storage locker and he was making counterfeit cards. Craig like his friends was interested in a collectible card game. Somehow Craig ended up with the most valuable cards.

The card itself was worth ten grand each. Craig had over a hundred grand in cards in that storage locker. He was creating them himself and some feared he made a lot of money out of it.

Kasie didn't like that at all. She thought Craig was a good guy. She didn't want to believe he could be guilty. She especially didn't like it that Craig's boss was talking smack about him. Captain Fletcher claimed that Craig was being investigated. He thought Craig could be involved in a crime and, so when NCIS found the cards, they thought the criminal was Craig.

They were wrong. Craig wasn't under investigation. He was the one investigating Fletcher. It was Fletcher that counterfeited the cards. Craig recreated what he did in a bid to gain evidence.

He was building a case against Fletcher and Fletcher knew about it. Fletcher has a gaming problem. He lost a lot of money that way. He turned to counterfeiting cards as a means of getting out of a hole. Then Craig finds out about it. The two of them played against each other and Craig spotted the fake right away.

Fletcher had plenty of motive to kill Craig, but he didn't do it. He has a solid alibi. The killer wasn't involved with the gaming world at all and so Kasie remembered what they all had in common.

They all took Professor Davis's Intro Forensics class. They were all great friends with each other. Before Davis became a teacher, she worked for the Maryland State Police Department. Kasie went looking through her old files and someone that Davis put away has just gotten released. His name was Jesse Winston. He was last seen taking Davis's class.

NCIS rushed to the college. They rescued Davis from Winston. Winston admitted before he was killed that Davis sent him to prison for something he didn't do. She was the chief witness against him. Her "evidence" sent him away. His brother and nephew died while he was inside. He did everything he did in a bid to hurt Davis.

He only went after her and her friends. He didn't target the prosecutor or the cops. Kasie later looked into that. She found that her mentor had fabricated evidence against Winston. He really was innocent.

Davis targeted him because of his long rap sheet. She figured he had to be guilty of something. Kasie loved Davis like a mother and she couldn't walk away from this or bury evidence. She reported Davis.

Her mentor was going to get arrested and odds are her old case files will get reopened. Kasie was super depressed when she went home that night. Luckily, her NCIS family showed up at her door with food. They helped Kasie through her depression. Torres also agreed to read McGee's manuscript.

McGee was contacted by someone from DOD. They wanted to make sure that he didn't use real case files in his book and so he asked Torres to give it a quick run through. Only Torres shared it with everyone. They all thought it was pretty steamy. They also said that the book was in the clear. There were no state secrets revealed.

Guest Stars: Eliza Blair (Life Sequence Rep. Holly), Tori Danner (Blood Donation Nurse), John Ahle Kellar (William / Fred Sammona), Nick George (Dr. James Donovan), T.J. Thyne (Fletcher Voss)
Production Code: 22013
Summary: NCIS probes a Navy lieutenant's death at a blood bank while McGee seeks team support for his twins' school fundraiser.

Someone robbed a blood bank. He was armed. He was dangerous. He just didn't want money. He robbed the blood bank of blood.

The robbery surprisingly wasn't caught on at first. The guy opened all the other blood bags. He poured out on the floor and he killed a serving Naval Lieutenant who tried to stop him.

His victim was identified Lieutenant Barbra Jellison. She was just in the wrong place at the wrong time. It was her death that sparked a NCIS investigation.

The agents spoke with the nurse that ran the drive. She described their killer. She also said he went by the name "William".

The guy probably wasn't using his real name when he destroyed a blood bank. Then again not a lot about this case makes sense. There was a nationwide blood shortage.

The NCIS Agents thought the killer wouldn't have left such a mess behind if he was set on selling blood. He would have grabbed the blood and gotten out of there. He could have sold the blood bags on the red market. It was a bit like the black market except the red market was for blood and body parts. It was pretty lucrative. Jimmy even knew about it.

Jimmy's autopsy also revealed a few things. It revealed their killer was high on this new drug. It calls "trank". It was cut with fentanyl. Their killer was hopped up on the stuff. It could explain the sheer rage he exhibited.

Kasie then did her thing. She found out that the killer deliberately poured over forty bags of blood and that he had in fact stolen one bag of blood. Just the one. It was a donation from Lauren Hawthorne. She was a software engineer. She wasn't married. She didn't have kids. She lived alone and seemed pretty boring.

NCIS tried to contact her. She wasn't answering and so they went to her house. They ended up smelling something foul coming from Lauren's garage and they found what little was left of her. Lauren was slowly being dissolved in a bucket of acid. They called in jimmy. He had to take Lauren out with a strainer.

While he was doing that, the team was trying to figure out why anyone wanted this woman to disappear. It was one thing to turn her into soup. They also stole her donated blood because they wanted no DNA left of hers to survive. It was odd.

Lauren had just started a new job. Sure, she was seen arguing with someone on the day she died only that wasn't reason enough to erase her. NCIS decided to check out her job. She was working for a company called "Life Sequence". It was a company to help people survive longer. It was started by someone the NCIS knew a little too well. Fletcher Voss. He was the billionaire that almost got their director murdered. He spent a few weeks behind bars and he was out now. He said he wanted to help people. And that's why he's back now with a new company.

No one could legally explain Life Sequence. They were holding onto proprietary information. Voss also said that Lauren hadn't been working there long enough to have access to anything. What Voss failed to mention was that Lauren was pregnant. She was pregnant by him and they found evidence of it. Her blood was tested when she first donated it. It was still in the system because of that. Kasie easily found it. She was also curious how Voss found out about the pregnancy. Lauren said she wasn't pregnant when she donated her blood.

Every woman is asked that question when they donate. Lauren would only have gone through with it if she hadn't known she was pregnant and so how did Voss know. He couldn't have known unless Lauren was wearing a "sequencer". It was high level smart watch. It tracks its wearer health.

Voss claimed earlier that Lauren never got a sequencer. He said she wasn't there long enough for it, but Voss has twenty million dollars worth to lie about that. He was going through a nasty divorce. His wife could have gotten twenty million dollars from him if it came out that he fathered a child with someone else.

Voss became NCIS's chief suspect. The man that killed the lieutenant was a hired thug. His name was Fred Sammons. He died of an overdose. His cell phone showed that he was hired to steal the blood. He was a low level crook. He has a record for light scams. He wasn't really a killer.

Neither was Voss as it turns out. Voss was brought in for questioning. They got warrant for his sequencer. They also told Voss that Lauren was pregnant and that wasn't something he knew. He literally cried when he found out that his girlfriend and his baby had both been killed.

Voss then passed out in the interrogation room. He had a stroke. He had been sipping his smoothie. The smoothie had been drugged and so someone tried to kill him.

Voss was currently on a liquid only diet. He must have been drugged over several days to cause the stroke. NCIS thought maybe it was the real person that invented Life Sequence. Only she admitted that the company was a sham. They didn't have any new technology. Voss was pushing ahead because he was reckless. He thought they'd eventually find something if he pressures them enough and not everyone agreed with that.

The doctor at the company didn't want to go ahead with the release. His name was all over it. He knew he'd lose credibility if Voss went ahead with the launch and so he tried to kill him.

He also killed Lauren to stop Voss from getting a backup supply of blood. Voss has a rare blood type. He would have died without blood if McGee hadn't stepped up. McGee was a universal blood donor. He saved Voss's life. It was the right thing to do. Voss also bought some of McGee's coffee that he used to raise money for his kids' fundraiser at school. And so McGee owed him.

McGee also has until next year to take the cool dad at school down.

Summary: Jimmy's daughter finds a bag of money and turns it to Torres. They learn it came from a bank robbed 15 years ago.

Why was Jimmy's daughter assisting NCIS? Her father was their medical examiner. The agents were her honorary aunts and uncle, but Victoria wasn't the type to call her uncles when she's in trouble. She would normally call her dad. Jimmy was a great dad. He was loving. He doesn't judge.

Victoria could have turned to him when she found thirty-five thousand dollars behind the library. There were other kids that would have pocketed that money. Or used it for social media clout.

Victoria displayed great maturity when she called Special Agent Torres about the money and handed it over to him.

Victoria also told him that she was going to tell her father about what happened. Only she never did. Victoria had several chances to come clean with her dad. She ignored all of them. Torres didn't realize it until Knight noticed that Jimmy wasn't pestering them for updates or if his daughter was safe.

Jimmy was again a very involved father. The whole team knew he'd panic when he heard what his daughter found. She found a lot of money and there were bound to be people looking for it.

Torres brought the money to Kasie so that she could do her magic. She later learned the money was from a bank robbery at the Saratoga Springs Bank.

The robbery was fifteen years ago. They never caught the man that did it. It led to the press calling him the Saratoga Specter. Like a ghost because he disappeared so easily. The specter didn't even do other jobs. He robbed the one bank and he retired off the millions.

Kasie actually found a print on the money that Victoria found. It belonged to Carson Marcone. He was originally from Saratoga. She assumed he was the specter. NCIS went to Carson's home. They found him murdered in his crappy apartment. He wasn't living the high life. He also wasn't the specter.

From what they could tell, Carson stumbled across the real specter. He got killed for it. The only question that NCIS had was why did he dump the money behind a library of all places?

It turns out Victoria had lied about where she found the money. They checked the library's surveillance cameras.

Victoria was never at the library. She was hanging out with her friends in the woods while lying to her dad about being at the library. Victoria committed a federal crime. She was sneaking off. She also wasn't doing the science fair this year. Victoria was being a teenager. She was acting out.

Jimmy took it so hard because he didn't know what to do with her. His wife died. He wasn't dating anyone and, while he thought he could be everything his daughter needed, he wasn't prepared to handle a teenage girl.

Jimmy later asked Victoria why she called Torres before she called him. Victoria's reply to that was kinda brutal. She said Torres was a federal agent. Her father on the other hand was just a medical examiner. Victoria doesn't see that he solves cases too. Her comment really hurt Jimmy. It's also why he involved himself in this case.

Victoria found that money in the woods behind their gated community. The community was called Briarwood. The specter was apparently one of Jimmy's neighbors. Carson was the maintenance man.

There's no telling if he found the money or the specter first. Either way, he still tried to come away with some cash of his own. He got the money and NCIS assumed the specter killed him.

The specter doesn't know that the feds have over thirty grand of his money. The thief was going to keep looking and Jimmy didn't want his daughter falling victim to him.

NCIS came up with a plan to finding the specter. They knew he was a neighbor. The only thing they had to do was send Jimmy in undercover as himself. Jimmy threw a huge party for all the neighbors. He was so worried about collecting DNA evidence that he didn't realize one woman was flirting with him.

He collected the cups of all the men from the neighborhood. None of them were a match for the hair they found in the bank vault in Saratoga. Kasie did get a partial map from the bag of unmarked cups. It showed that the specter was at that party. And the team believed that maybe the specter wasn't a man.

There was that woman that flirted with Jimmy. She claimed she moved in two weeks ago. The truth was that she bought that house fifteen years ago in all cash and she made sure to stay behind with Jimmy after the party was over.

She probably heard that Jimmy worked for NCIS. There was no telling if she was going to hurt him and so NCIS rushed to his place to save him. They were a little overzealous because Wendy Hill wasn't a danger to Jimmy. She also wasn't the specter. She was the specter's daughter.

Her father came clean to her on his deathbed. Wendy thought he was just the illness talking, but her father did buy the house in her name so that she'd have a nice nest egg. Wendy also mentioned that Carson has been by her house several times over the past two weeks.

The security guard tried to erase that in the log book and Kasie found it again. The security guard was the one working with Carson. He hid the money. They were supposed to split later and that plan changed when Rhonda got greedy.

Rhonda the security guard was spying on the residents using the community app. She was looking for the money. She killed Carson because she didn't want to share and she used the app because wanted to know if anyone came across the money. Well, NCIS created a trap for her using that app.

They lured her right in. She went looking for the money. Rhonda walked right into an arrest. She was arrested for murder and, on the downside, Wendy didn't seem as keen on Jimmy as she did before. Only he did get some quality time with his daughter.

Summary: After a Navy Lieutenant's death reveals ties to Special Agent Sawyer, Torres and Knight uncover a murder linked to a wealthy family. Meanwhile, Parker discovers a shocking connection between his mother's death and Lily.

Jimmy was a renaissance man. He was a great doctor as well as an artist. He sketched someone he never met for Parker. He thought it was a part of NCIS's case, but in truth it was of a little girl that Special Agent Alden Parker kept seeing everywhere. He first saw her when he almost died.

He now sees her all the time and he's not even sure if she was real or not. He doesn't remember meeting her. It confused him why his mind would always go to her if she wasn't important enough to remember. He asked Jimmy to sketch her just so that he could look for her. He needed to know if he was going crazy.

Parker didn't tell the rest of his team about the little girl. He instead joked with them about Sawyer. Remember NCIS Agent Sawyer. He was a horrible guy and Torres's chief frenemy. The two were still butting heads. Sawyer likes winding Torres up and the others enjoyed laughing about it.

It only stopped being a laughing matter when a new body dropped. The victim was Lieutenant Robert Mosley. He was found in an alley. He was killed elsewhere and dumped there. His killer probably wanted it to look like a mugging gone wrong.

Some of the team even started to think that when Jimmy found evidence proving differently. Jimmy found bite marks from an alligator on the victim.

Those creatures aren't usually found in the Metro area. NCIS also checked the nearby zoos. There was no case of missing alligators and so someone was probably housing them as a pet. The pet had a little nibble on Robert after he was murdered. The alligator wasn't the cause of death. Robert died from a blunt force wound at the back of his head.

Robert worked in Naval Intelligence. He was great at the job at first. He became a flake only recently and cocaine was found in his system. He also had a QR code on his wrist. The wrist mark was a pass for an underground party. NCIS figured that's where Robert got the drugs. What they didn't spot was that Robert wasn't alone at the party.

He was there with Special Agent Sawyer. NCIS found videos and photos from the party. They found a photo of Sawyer with Robert. The photo plus the fact that Sawyer came into some family money had Torres worried that Sawyer turned into a drug dealer on their watch.

Sawyer was called in. He was interrogated. He wasn't a drug dealer. Although he did lie about an inheritance. He got a side job working as security. He and Robert were assigned to babysit Shayna Reynolds. She was a rich kid with a penchant for trouble. It was up to Sawyer and Robert to keep her out of trouble that night.

They didn't even report her when she set loose the alligator. She claimed she was an animal rights activist. She saw the alligator bite Robert and wasn't the least sorry. Robert texted Sawyer that he was going to the hospital now that he dropped off Shayna at her home.

NCIS checked. Robert never went to the hospital. Nor was Shayna at home. Sawyer was forced to assist with the case because he technically wasn't allowed a side job and so he went with the agents when they spoke with Shayna's family. They haven't heard from her. They were also worried.

They thought they hired the best for her and all they had to show for it was two men moonlighting as a side job. Shayna's mother was particularly the angriest. She refused to help NCIS and they found Shayna without her.

There were signs on Robert that indicated he was in a swampy area. Well, Shayna's family owns a lot of wetlands nearby. They also have a cabin there and that's where they found Shayna. Shayna wasn't on the run. She also wasn't their killer. She genuinely cared about Robert and he was supposed to help her with something.

Shayna wanted to stop her family from selling the wetlands to a developer. The developer would build condos. It would also destroy the area. Shayna recorded footage of an endangered species using the nearby pond. And the developer would have ruined that if the plans went through.

Shayna told Robert about it. He offered to report it at work. He told Shayna to stay there and that was the last she saw him. Shayna explained everything to NCIS. She also told them that she suspected her family killed Robert.

NCIS took that suspicion seriously. They later questioned Shayna's mother. She showed them a map of the development. The endangered frogs were going to be alright because the family wasn't selling the whole area. They were selling merely a portion that didn't include the pond.

Shayna didn't know that. She recorded the frogs at the pond. She gave the video to Robert. Robert saw something she didn't. NCIS checked the pond. They found a woman's body in there.

She was the wife of the Reynold's head of security. He dumped her there and he thought it was going to be fine because no one was going to develop it. But he didn't count on Shayna recording the pond. Peter Braden found out about the footage. He killed Robert. He also tried to kill Shayna and several NCIS Agents.

Surprisingly, it was Sawyer that stopped him. Peter was done. Shayna was saved. Shayna also reconnected with her mother now they know they weren't working on opposite sides.

Parker in the meantime got some news about the mystery girl. He found out that his mother died in a car accident. She had already abandoned the family by then and the little girl was in the newspaper at the scene.

The little girl was the sole survivor of the car crash.

Production Code: 22016
Summary: A girls' night out takes an unexpected turn when NCIS is called to investigate the motive of a possible arsonist. Also, Torres struggles to find work/life balance.

There was a fire. It happened at an antiques store. Petty Officer First Class Jennifer Garcia was helping out the owner by posting items online and she was still there when a fire broke out. The building wasn't up to code. The fire destroyed the storage room. It just didn't explain why Jenn didn't try to get out. Jenn was at the place with her boyfriend. He fell asleep in the office. He woke up to smoke. He couldn't see or hear anything. He ran out to go seek help. He tried to go back into the building when he didn't see Jenn.

And the firefighters stopped him.

NCIS felt for the boyfriend. The poor man was still blaming himself when it was revealed he couldn't have saved her. Jenn died before the fire. In fact, the fire was most likely set to hide the crime. She was murdered. She was strangled before she burnt up. Her time of death couldn't be ascertained because of the damage from the fire only Kasie checked the website for the store. She knew that the last post the victim made was at midnight. She also got access to Jenn's phone. Jenn and her boyfriend were arguing.

Their text messages showed that Jenn was on the brink of dumping him. He didn't mention that when he first talked to NCIS. Daniel Holloway later claimed that they made up that night. He said he went to the store that night to plead his case and that Jenn ultimately forgave him. He also said he gifted her a necklace. There were just one issue with that story. Daniel's lighter was used to set the fire. He had a monogrammed lighter. He claimed he gifted it to Jenn when he gave up cigarettes for her. Only that same lighter was found in a bucket of acetone. It's what started the fire.

NCIS assumed that Daniel was lying about everything. They thought Jenn did dump him. They figured he must have killed her after getting rejected and so finding out the necklace was real was odd. Jenn was wearing the necklace that Daniel bought for her when she died. The necklace melted into her skin. Why would she wear a necklace if they broke up that night? Wouldn't she throw it away or refused to wear it if she didn't want Daniel to believe he could buy her affections? She either was wearing it because she did forgive him or he put it on her after he killed her.

It was eating Knight up for not knowing. She went out on a ladies' night with her sister and Kasie. They were at a pottery class. Robin asked them not to discuss work. Knight tried. She really did. She just couldn't turn her investigator's mind off. She kept discussing her theories with Kasie and the two finally had enough. They remotely accessed Kasie's computer on their night out. They thought the guys had already went home by then and they were wrong. McGee's family was out of town. He stayed behind at the office to play computer games on Kasie's giant tv with Torres and Director Vance.

The guys heard Kasie's computer pinged when she accessed it. They knew that the women were still investigating. They tracked them down and ran into them after they got kicked out of the pottery class. The last part happened because they had a field experiment with the class's kiln. They wanted to see how long Jenn was in the fire to melt her necklace. What they ended up doing was setting the kiln too hot. It filled the class up with smoke and the women had to pay for damages. They also got thrown out.

Robin was so upset they had to leave. She put in a lot of effort planning their night out. She wanted them to have fun because she was feeling neglected by Torres. Torres often had to cancel or leave early because of work. It left Robin feeling like she wasn't a priority. It also brought up some feelings left over from her father. He was NCIS too. Robin just wanted some normalcy back and once she saw she wasn't going to get it — she finally gave in to the madness. She pointed out something about the case.

Robin noticed in the crime scene photos that something had been moved. The rest of the office was about alignment and chakras until they get to the one piece. It had been moved. The women went to the antiques store. They ran into the guys who were also investigating. Daniel did lie that night. He wasn't there when the fire started. He was meeting up with someone whose been like a brother to him. Daniel has a record and his friend was probation. They shouldn't technically be meeting because it might send his friend back to prison.

Now that Daniel was no longer lying, they learned that he came back to see the place on fire. He also noticed that the front door was unlocked. Jenn wouldn't have left it unlocked. Her killer might have. The thing that had been moved in that office was a chest. The chest was hiding the safe in the office. This wasn't some crime of passion. It was a heist. Jenn got killed for being in the wrong place at the wrong time. Her killer made off with whatever was in the safe. The question was what could have been in that safe?

Torres and Robin checked the website for the place. Nothing too expensive. It seemed mostly junk and it doesn't explain why they would have such an expensive safe. It was the top of the line. Daniel didn't kill Jenn. The killer was in fact a firefighter. Someone that was flirting with Knight at the scene. The firefighter's hands were a match to the wounds on Jenn's throat. He got word of a safe being there. He ran into Jenn, killed her, robbed the place, and then set a fire. One he knew he'd get called to.

If he hadn't sent Knight some photos as Mr. December, they'd never have solved the case. They arrested their guy and their night out wasn't as bad as they thought it would be.

But Robin could see how the cases become all important until they're done.

Production Code: 22017
Summary: After NCIS captures the hitman known as "The Poet," the team races to uncover who ordered the assassination of a Navy chief.

NCIS arrested Paul Morton for murder tonight. They got a tip he killed of Naval Lt. Commander Ryan Willis. He was picked up with his gun on him and it was a match for the weapon used to kill the commander. He really was their killer, but it gets worse than that. He also had a book on him. It was a match for poems left on several murder victims and so Morton was revealed to be the serial killer known as "the Poet". The Director was very happy with NCIS. What they couldn't figure out was why Morton didn't leave a poem on Willis.

They were also curious about who called in the tip. They tried interrogating Morton. They were hoping he'd give them some much needed answers. He instead spouted off a poem. He even showed them his bruised arms before he passed out in the interrogation room. There was a chance he might have taken something or done something to himself when he saw the feds were about to pick him up. He wasn't just a serial killer. He was a hitman. He has evidence against a lot of people and he could have sold those people out to NCIS.

It wouldn't have gotten him a lighter sentence although it would have kept him off death row. Not that death seemed to matter to Morton. He killed himself in that stunt he pulled in the interrogation room. He dug into his own arms and activated capsules he had hidden under his skin. He was a professional to the end. He was dead and NCIS had to get their own answers. They eventually found that the Poet didn't just target Willis. He also targeted another man that was working with Willis on the Atlas.

The Department of Energy has a train carrying nuclear fuel throughout the whole country. The Navy provided security for that train. It was all hush hush. The sailors providing security had their files listed as them serving on the Atlas. Only there was no navy ship known as the Atlas. The team quickly picked up on that and they found out the truth. They found out about the train. They were worried about a breach. They were going to head there when Deputy Director LaRoche stopped them.

LaRoche said that the Department of Energy would handle that. NCIS were told to investigate the murders and nothing else. It was an order from their boss. They had to follow it even as they had doubts about why LaRoche was getting involved with this one. LaRoche wasn't all he seemed. He had secrets. McGee wanted to learn those secrets and so he was investigating LaRoche. He was doing that on the side. His wife knew about it. She also thought it was jealousy driving him and not suspicion.

Delilah met LaRoche tonight. They easily hit it off. She thought her husband was suspicious of LaRoche because LaRoche beat him when he became Deputy Director. McGee interviewed for the position. He was investigated. He had congressional hearings. Then he finds out he didn't get the job. The department wanted to go with someone from the outside and so McGee was overlooked. He had the experience with leadership. He was already working for the Navy. He thought he was a sure thing until Director Vance told him that the committee went with LaRoche.

Now McGee being suspicious of the man was considered jealousy when it really was experience. There was a situation that got bad for Torres. He was almost killed and McGee suspected LaRoche played a part in burning him. He also suspected the man was wiretapping his family's phones. LaRoche made jokes about mints that McGee loved. McGee never told him about that and neither did his wife. Yet, somehow LaRoche knew enough to make a joke. He hid a lot in his little jokes. It all came out at the dinner at LaRoche's house that Delilah dragged him into.

LaRoche's wife was a neurosurgeon. He said she could heal paraplegics until they could tap dance. McGee was a tapper and again neither he nor his wife ever mentioned so to LaRoche. McGee was experiencing the night from hell when NCIS got a lead. They found Morton's broker. The middleman between him and the clients. Her name is Gemma Wood. She was a jeweler with her own store. She's never seen Morton in person. She also didn't know he was dead and so Torres pretended to be Morton.

He went to her store with a story about someone burning him. She must have been worried because she ran. They found her dead guard and her secret second safe. Gemma later said that the client turned against her. If you fail in this type of job, the client hires a second person to go kill the first person. They needed Gemma to get to Morton. She realized that and she tried to run. Her client was Carla Morino. The mob boss from Kansas that Parker tried to take down. He tried for several years and nothing ever worked.

It was odd that Morino wanted access to the nuclear fuel. She dabbled in weapons and drugs. She's never gone full terrorist. She's also never tried to kill someone in government. The poet's next target was LaRoche. LaRoche sat on the board of directors that had control over the Atlas train. It was so top secret that he claimed he wasn't allowed to tell Director Vance about it. McGee and LaRoche had it out when LaRoche found McGee snooping through his office. LaRoche was investigating McGee.

McGee found evidence of it. LaRoche said he did that because McGee investigated him first. He knew that McGee was looking through his past and checking his security access. When McGee confronted LaRoche with his suspicions, LaRoche called him a sore loser. He said McGee was just hurt he got the job and McGee didn't. The fight was so bad between the men that LaRoche didn't want to leave with McGee when he heard about the security threat. He wanted to wait for backup. Parker told him that McGee could have already killed him if that was the case.

McGee was armed. LaRoche had a gun safe. He just couldn't remember the code to it. His wife also wasn't of any help. The hitman arrived just in time to take out the cops. LaRoche wanted to sacrifice himself to save the others. McGee talked him out of it. They came up with a plan. McGee pretended to be Morton and shot LaRoche. He kept the new hitman busy until his friends showed up. LaRoche was wearing a bulletproof vest and so he was fine. And Gemma eventually admitted that Carla Morino was not her client.

Her client was the Nexus Cartel. NCIS took them down last year. They were apparently back and they were making moves. The Atlas train has been temporarily stopped. LaRoche was saved, but McGee found out he was right to suspect LaRoche. The tip that led them to the poet came from the Department of Defense. It came from LaRoche.

How did he know a serial killer was coming after him?

Summary: When a trio of combat vets are found murdered in a D.C. motel room, NCIS tracks down a suspect who refuses to talk to anyone but Sam Hanna.

Someone was reporting a noise complaint to their hotel when he had enough. He was tired of the noise. He was tired being told the motel couldn't do anything. He started banging on the wall and threatened to call the cops. Unfortunately, what he got in return were several bullets.

Willie Loman was a travelling salesman and he didn't know that he wasn't talking to his noisy neighbors anymore. The three people from the room next door had been murdered. The killer was making his escape when he heard what poor Willie said. And shot him up through the wall from next door.

There was a suspect found nearby that was covered in blood. When apprehended, he spouted off a badge number. It was NCIS Special Agent Sam Hanna's badge number.

The guy wouldn't say anything else than that badge number. He wouldn't even give his name. He wasn't talking and so NCIS reached out to Sam. Sam was no longer an NCIS Agent anymore. He took time after his Elite team was killed. He now works as an expert for the senate defense committee. He wears suits now and tries to save the world with a laser pointer.

The job was safe. His kids were safe. He didn't have to worry about burying anyone else. The only issue was when the senators shoot down a plan that could save thousands because it doesn't look good for their upcoming elections. Sam was struggling with that part when NCIS reached out to him.

They believe that they had Mark Davis in custody for the four murders. They just didn't know who he was. Sam had to tell them. Mark was Special Forces. He did a lot of Covert Ops and so neither his name nor his photo was in their system. Sam explained that it got deliberately scrubbed as a means of protecting Mark in the field.

Sam knew Mark. Mark saved his life a few times. He knew that Mark was as solid as it comes. He wouldn't be involved in four murders stateside and the man they had in custody was not Mark.

Sam confronted the guy. He explained he was Sam Hana. Only once he knew it was safe that the other guy admitted who he was. Sam was right he wasn't Mark. He was Mark's brother, Roger. Roger and Mark haven't really spoken in years. His brother didn't come back from war in the best place. The two of them look alike. They just had two different life experiences.

The two of them weren't talking when suddenly Mark called his brother last week. He said he was in trouble. He wouldn't give Roger the details. He just said that if anything happens that Roger should ask for Sam. Sam could be trusted. He was one of the few that Mark trusted explicitly. Roger tried to get details from his brother about what was going on and the call ended. Roger then went looking for his brother. He tracked him to that motel where he found the bodies. He got blood on him when he checked to see if any of them were his brother.

They weren't. Mark wasn't killed at the motel. He put his faith in Sam. Sam didn't let him down. He proved Roger didn't kill those four men. They were killed in the early morning when Roger was on the road. Roger may be innocent, but Mark might not be. Sam found out that Mark and the three original victims were all part of some extreme training out in the woods. They were also all veterans. There had been a woman that Mark was seen arguing with. She was trying to skip town when NCIS stopped her.

She was another veteran. She said that she got recruited by Mark for a job. They worked at a company called "Iron Horizons". They were told it was a security job and then they learned that they weren't protecting the good guys. They were protecting warlords, drug kingpins, and worse. The woman told Mark she was out once she saw what the job actually did. She then heard about three guys that she knew were involved in Iron Horizons getting gunned down. She thought Mark killed them to keep them quiet and she wanted to flee town before she was next.

NCIS didn't believe the woman's story at first. They never heard of Iron Horizons. There was no digital footprint and so Sam had to tell them about it. He heard about the group from a senate briefing. He also knew that Mark wouldn't kill his fellow vet to protect people like that. Mark left behind a note at the motel. No one could understand what he wrote. It looked like gibberish before Sam remembered. He taught Mark origami. Mark wasn't any good at it. He only knew how to create the one bird and so Sam folded the note into that bird.

It was numbers. It led to an IP address where Mark has been gathering evidence against Iron Horizon. He found out they were taking advantage of desperate veterans and he was doing his best to take them down. The men at the motel weren't victims of Mark. They were sent to silence Mark. Mark's evidence also showed that Iron Horizons was a huge donor to a senator that Sam knew. Sam threatened the man with a political scandal. It was enough to get access to Iron Horizons' bank accounts. They were paying for a ship off the coast of Maryland.

NCIS went to the location. They found that the ship was being run by Russians. Yup, the Russians were involved again. They were behind Iron Horizons. They were buying themselves a senator. They had Mark and another man as hostages on that ship. NCIS tried to be stealthy only the Russians heard them. They didn't want to waste bullets and neither did NCIS. They got into a fist fight. NCIS won. They called in for backup. They rescued Mark. Mark told them that it was woman that worked for Veteran Affairs that told these men about his skillset.

The veterans didn't know what she was doing. Mark trusted her. It wasn't until Mark went to her for help in reporting Iron Horizons that he realized she worked for them. She sold him out. She told the company about him and almost got him killed. She was arrested for the part she played. Hopefully, someone better will fill her position and get these veterans actually help.

And Sam resigned from his position with the senate defense committee. He hated the paperwork and Director Vance had bigger things to worry about. He found out that McGee was investigating NCIS Deputy Director LaRoche. If McGee messes this up, they'll all go down.

Production Code: 22019
Summary: McGee's career and credibility are on the line when he investigates the deputy director for corruption. Also, Torres and Knight receive some surprising news.

The investigation into Deputy Director LaRoche started months ago. NCIS Special Agent Tim McGee has always been suspicious of LaRoche. He knew something was off about the guy from the moment they met. Yet, no one would believe him. LaRoche wasn't some politician fresh off the street.

He was a seasoned political animal. He gained the position after craftily undermining McGee and that's the other reason why McGee's loved ones were critical of his suspicions. LaRoche got the job that McGee wanted. He was now McGee's boss and McGee could never reconcile himself with that fact. He didn't think LaRoche deserved the job in the first place.

LaRoche didn't come up through NCIS or even another federal investigating body. He was brought in from the outside. He was the private sector. He got the job after he convinced the Senate committee that NCIS was too close. He planted doubts knowing they'd think what he wanted them to think.

Someone from the outside would be more objective. He wasn't wrong about them being too close. They operated less like an agency and more like a family. They were constantly breaking rules that wouldn't fly anywhere else.

McGee believed at first that LaRoche sought the job to move up the political ladder. Maybe some underhand dealings or kickbacks were involved as well. Those wouldn't have been too bad. It wasn't until McGee suspected LaRoche burned a federal agent that he opened an investigation into him.

His first look came up with nothing. His team thought he was being crazy after that. His wife thought the same. McGee ignored his doubters. He kept looking into LaRoche. He even put that aside along with his misgivings to save LaRoche's life.

McGee may not like LaRoche, but he was still a good person. He wasn't going to let someone get murdered on his watch. He saved LaRoche's life and that's when he learned that LaRoche knew about the hitman. The one that tried to kill him. LaRoche did something so horrible to someone that he knew the person would come after him.

He deliberately put both McGee as well as his wife in the crossfire. McGee thought he had him after that one and it still wasn't enough. His evidence wasn't concrete.

He also didn't secure it when he had the chance. It was probably gone now. LaRoche had the opportunity to do so the moment McGee took care of the second hitman. Still, McGee kept digging.

Director Vance found out about it. He didn't doubt McGee's instincts like everyone else. He didn't ask him to drop it either. He told him to make sure his ducks were in a row when he made a move against LaRoche. LaRoche was slippery. The director knew he wouldn't go down easy. He hadn't been wrong.

McGee kicked off tonight by staying late at work. He was staying so late that he was falling asleep at his desk. He became something of a liability. He tried to do his normal job during the day.

He stayed extra late so that he could use NCIS's resources to get information on LaRoche and so his dreams about being Gibbs. Wearing Gibb's clothes. Working on Gibb's boat. LaRoche even trying to kill him. It was all very concerning and Parker thought the same. He finally benched McGee. He told him to go home. He wanted McGee to catch up on sleep.

McGee had other plans. He saw LaRoche leaving the office. He noticed that LaRoche ditched his security detail. It was kinda big because they never did found out who wanted him dead and so him going on his own meant he didn't want to be followed.

It was funny in a way because the lack of security directly led to McGee following him. McGee was off doing that when NCIS investigated a shooting. Someone had shot up a party supply truck from Buddy Birthday's Barn. There were no victims only the weapon used to do it was found nearby. It said "property of the navy" on it.

NCIS were brought in to investigate where the missing weapon came from. They also had to find out who stole it in the first place. A weapons like that wasn't just lying around. The gun was classified military tech.

It was specifically designed to take down drones. The party supply truck also had a hidden compartment. Their shooter had stolen something from the truck and it wasn't balloons. They were figuring out the rest when McGee finally thought he had LaRoche. He witnessed LaRoche meet with someone.

The two got into an argument. LaRoche shot the other man. McGee knocked against something. It alerted LaRoche to his presence and he took off. McGee tried to pursue him. He got hit by a car.

LaRoche escaped while he was on the ground. Things got worse from there. NCIS didn't find the body. There was no blood at the scene. Or shell casings. The driver of the car also didn't see LaRoche fleeing the scene. The only one there was McGee. The same guy that got a concussion after the car hit him.

McGee's testimony was easily dismissed. His team believed him, but Director Vance told them that they couldn't keep investigating LaRoche. They had their chance at getting him and seemingly missed it. They couldn't take it any further. Or at least not officially. McGee described the man he saw to Jimmy. Jimmy sketched him.

He had no clue how it was going to help and so it's a good thing he was in the lab with Kasie. She found a suspect in their shooting/robbery of the party truck. His name is Crispin Shaker Jr. He has a lot of known associates. One of them was LaRoche's victim.

His name is Jason Meeks. Parker got a printout of his photo. He showed it to McGee who confirmed that's the man he saw LaRoche shoot. Meeks being friends with Shaker also couldn't be coincidence. The one thing connecting both the shooting that McGee witnessed to the stolen naval tech was LaRoche.

Parker was finally taking McGee seriously. He was going to interview him and someone else beat him to it. Inspector General Regina Ward brought McGee in for questioning. LaRoche filed an official complaint against him.

The complaint was for harassment. LaRoche also threw around the words "abuse of power". He knew that McGee was using NCIS resources to investigate him and so he sicked the IG's office on him.

The IG doesn't answer to Director Vance. He couldn't shut down the investigation either. He had to let it play it out. McGee made things worse for himself when he told Ward he was investigating LaRoche. He admitted to seeing LaRoche kill someone. Ward then said she was going to be ruling he needed to be suspended indefinitely for defamation.

Ward came to believe McGee was admitting to defeat because he asked for a lawyer. It was actually a ruse. Ward left the room. McGee escaped. Before he did, he wrote "Rule #45" on a piece of paper.

McGee was going after LaRoche and waiting would have done more for him. His team found Meeks's body. He really had been killed. His body was dumped in a national park. Kasie accessed his burner phone. He was arguing with LaRoche about a deal that LaRoche wanted to back out of. They were getting evidence to take LaRoche down.

McGee also forgot about the important thing regarding Gibbs's rules. They always come at a cost. Rule 45: Always Clean Up Your Own Mess. McGee escaped the building without anyone seeing him.

He stashed himself in LaRoche's van. McGee set it up to alert him whenever LaRoche scanned his ID card to gain access to something. It told him that LaRoche was down in the evidence locker. He no reason to be there. McGee tried to warn Ward and she wouldn't listen. And that's why he escaped, McGee realized before anyone else that LaRoche was stealing evidence to sell to the highest bidder.

McGee got LaRoche dead to rights. He caught him in the act of a buy. The two men pulled a gun on McGee and surprisingly LaRoche saved McGee's life. He said that he had something in his pocket that would explain everything.

NCIS was also curious about it when they showed up.

Summary: As NCIS investigates a dangerous connection between the Nexus cartel and Parker's longtime nemesis, mob boss Carla Marino, the team uncovers a high-stakes plot involving stolen nuclear material. With time running out, Parker is forced into an uneasy alliance that could determine the fate of the operation — and his own future.

Deputy Director LaRoche has been keeping a secret. McGee and later his entire department came to believe that LaRoche was a traitor. He allegedly stole from them just to sell it to others, but that wasn't what happened. LaRoche finally explained everything tonight.

This all started eight months ago. The Department of Defense reached out to LaRoche for a private meeting. They informed him about a mole in their department. The man himself was never questioned because he was killed before that could happen. His body was found in the Potomac.

The Department of Defense was investigating Nexus. It was top secret. They were looking to bring down the cartel once and for all. The Secretary of Defense personally recruited LaRoche for this mission. His job was to act as a double agent. SecDef Mathison had LaRoche placed at NCIS.

LaRoche was supposed to be everything that McGee wanted him to be. He intentionally sold out Torres as a means of building trust with the cartel. He wasn't doing this for money. It was never about money or clout. His job was so secret that only one person knew his real mission. LaRoche did everything to serve his country.

Unfortunately, NCIS didn't like being used. They had two men almost die on them because of this top secret mission. They kicked off an investigation into LaRoche.

They publicly burned him and he almost cost McGee his career as well as his life. LaRoche apologized for that at least. He said he tried to warn McGee off. He wasn't wrong because he did try. He tried telling McGee to back off. He filed a harassment claim. He did everything to keep McGee away and nothing worked because the man himself had been trained by Gibbs.

LaRoche can no longer continue the investigation himself. He had been burned. His contact into the cartel had been killed and so it was only now that SecDef was willing to use NCIS. It happened after he got into a fight with Director Vance.

The whole not informing them about placing a mole in their office was going to be an issue. It was about respect and Vance didn't feel like his position was respected. It was one thing not to inform him. It was quite another to not tell his Vance's own boss. Vance was willing to put that aside because of the threat of Nexus.

Vance was willing to put his own emotions aside. Special Agent Parker didn't feel the same. Parker was told by the SecDef that they had intel on Nexus. The cartel was seeking nuclear material and they found out thanks to their source.

Their source was Carla Marino. She was a mob boss that dominated the Midwest. Parker tried to take her down for years back when he was working at the FBI. He tried again after he joined NCIS and nothing stuck. She was his white whale. Parker hated her so much that people at the office put money on them either killing each other or sleeping together.

Parker refused to work with Carla. He said she couldn't be trusted. He refused to use her name. He stormed off. He went back to NCIS and he told everyone else that they couldn't use her name either. She was literally going by She-Who-Must-Not-Be-Named because no one wanted to offend Parker. Parker said they were investigators.

They would bring down the cartel another way. They had LaRoche's case files after all. Only they did need Carla's help. Carla wasn't wrong about Nexus wanting nuclear material.

The agents tracked down something who stole the stuff for the cartel. He was rewarded with them using the uranium to kill him. Carla had been right. She also knew something they didn't.

She knew the Butcher had the uranium. The cartel found another way to steal the stuff when the Atlas train got diverted. Carla knew all about it and she told NCIS that she thought that was a step too far. She turned against the cartel, but now the Butcher was calling her about selling the stuff to her. Carla showed genuine fear. She was so so convincing.

Carla pretended like she was worried that the Butcher was going to kill her. She said Nexus must have found out what she was doing and so Parker tried to put her at ease. He told her that she should set the meeting in Kansas City. Her home turf. She was like a god there. Parker was also willing to go with her.

He said the NCIS local office in Kansas City could provide backup and that they could arrest the Butcher this way. It was a lie from both sides. Parker did travel with Carla with two other agents not from his team and one of them was working for Carla.

Parker was then driven to a location where Jason died. Jason was Carla's only child. Carla found out that Parker was the one that told Jason she was a criminal and that Jason ran away to escape her because of it. He soon died in a motorcycle accident after running away. Carla blamed Parker for her son's death.

She had the chance to kill him and she didn't take it. She instead left him knocked out on the side of the road. Which was fine because Parker never trusted her to begin with. He cloned her phone from the start and he gave it to Kasie.

Kasie just hadn't cracked it in time to stop his abduction. Once Parker was found safe, Kasie did get information from the phone. She found out that Carla was the head of Nexus. There was no Butcher.

The entire cartel wasn't even being run by anyone Spanish. It was all white people involved. They merely bought into the stereotype to become a dominant force and were even selling weapons to the white power movement. Knowing that helped. NCIS eventually found the bomb. They disarmed it because Parker knew the code to do so. It was the numbers that spelled out "Jason".

The bombing was averted. The media credited former Deputy Director LaRoche for foiling a domestic terrorism event and, while that annoyed some, McGee was fine with him getting the credit.

He was doing the work before they got involved. The two also buried the hatchet. It helps that LaRoche was no longer his boss or lying to him anymore. They thought it was all over. Parker returned home. He knew his elderly father was in town. He returned home to his dad to find him murdered. Carla killed him. She made sure that Parker knew she had killed his father.

And Jimmy found something odd. Parker asked for his help in finding his mother's grave. Jimmy was doing so when he found the woman's death certificate. Something about it wasn't adding up and it wasn't just the fact that her body couldn't be found.
