Summary: Terrorists storm the British Embassy in Paris. Among the guests, French Defense Minister Philippe Bardin seems to be the real target of Jacob Pearce, a former legionnaire leading the attack. Vincent Taleb and Zara Taylor, two agents, try to protect the officials.

The episode starts with a mime getting ready for a party. The scene cuts to a few dignitaries and their bodyguards arriving at the British Embassy for the party.

Among them is Minister of Defence, Philippe and his bodyguard, Vincent. The mime approaches Phillippe and gives a small performance. Also at the party is Zara, who is talking to the Minister, Rowan. Rowan excuses himself to greet Phillippe and Zara heads to the ladies' room.

A waitress heads for a room and kills one of the guards standing at the elevator. Another group of men join her, taking the bags she had hidden in her trolley.

Meanwhile, the lights are dimmed in the main hall to allow for a dancing performance. The audience claps and cheers while the mime joins in. Suddenly, the mime pulls out a gun and shoots one of the dancers. Everything goes to hell as more men start shooting and Vincent hurries to escort Phillippe out of the building.

Outside, another man gains entrance into the embassy and leaves a bag with a bomb at the entrance. Back at the main hall, the shooting stops and Pearce takes over. He calls the Minister of Defence to come forward. It takes a while, but Rowan finally stands up. Pearce stares at him in his eyes and asks if he knows him. Pearce tells him that once they locate Phillippe, Minister of Defence, they will get started.

Back at the main entrance, Zara rushes to check what the hullabaloo is about and gets hit by the impact of the bomb. She regains consciousness a few minutes later and hides in the closet room. She sees the mime approaching, ready to kill another waiter hiding in the room. She leaps into action to save the waiter. She ends up killing the mime using the heel of a shoe.

Meanwhile, Vincent is doing a good job securing a way out for Philippe, but he is cornered in one of the kitchens. He manages to kill one of the men but loses Philippe.

As he continues to fight for his life, Zara arrives and helps him. Still wary, she asks him to identify himself before they join forces and make a plan. Of course, the waiter she saved is also tagging along, trying to stay alive. Outside, a group of heavily armed police officers arrive at the scene.

The men bring Philippe to Pearce in the main room. Once again, Pearce asks if they remember him. He starts stripping to show them how he was burned and tortured after being taken captive by the Taliban. He was held captive for six years and lost all of his team members. He blames Philippe and Pearce for what happened to him. When Philippe offers to pay him, Pearce kills Rowan on the spot.

Outside the hall, Zara, Vincent and the waiter stealthily approach. Vincent doesn't believe Zara is in HR, as she claims, but that is the least of his concerns. He orders the waiter to kill the lights as soon as they go in and start shooting.

Inside, Pearce prepares to shoot Philippe. He points the gun to his head and asks him to feel free to piss on himself. Just then, Vincent shoots at Pearce and the lights go off. Vincent shoots his way to Philippe and secures him. Pearce uses the chaos and the darkness to get his team and flee the scene using a secret tunnel.

The police officers rush inside upon hearing gunfire and take control of the scene. In the meantime, Vincent returns Philippe to his office. He asks for a private audience. Vincent needs to know how much of a threat Pearce is and what happened. Philippe tells him that Pearce was a captain in a foreign legion stationed in Southern Afghanistan.

He was a good soldier who saved the lives of many Afghans by driving the Taliban out. At the time, Rowan was stationed in Kabul as an MI6 operative and received intel about the location of a certain Taliban leader. Pearce and his team were directed to kill the Taliban leader. Unfortunately, they were ambushed and everyone thought he died with his team.

Then, two years ago, an American Special Forces team raided a compound near Kandahar and found Pearce. He was in a cell, chained up and burned. Philippe says that Pearce is crazy to blame him and Rowan for the ambush. As they talk, Philippe's daughter arrives. Her dad tells her that she can't stay with him since it is not safe. He plans to move her to a safe location.

Elsewhere, Zara makes her way home to her girlfriend. Of course, her girlfriend has no idea what Zara does for a living. She thinks she works in HR and was working at the party when the attack happened.

As for Vincent, he heads home but gets a call from a lady. She asks if he is okay and seems worried about him. She says she called him out of concern even though she knows she shouldn't. We later learn that the lady is the President when she gives a press statement saying France won't back down to a terrorist. Contrarily, Pearce gets treated for his flesh wound after getting shot by Vincent.

The next day, Zara reports for work at a new station under Matis. They start by identifying everyone involved in the attack. Zara gives them a small brief of what MI6 has collected so far.

Most of the men with Pearce used to work with him in the Foreign Legion, except for Freja. She is a gun for hire and will work for whoever is willing to pay the big bucks. She used to be in the Swedish special forces until she was kicked out. The team also traced the weapons used in the attack to an arms dealer, Karim Hassan.

Later, Zara reunites with Vincent, who is also part of the team. He tells her about what Philippe told him. Zara counters him and says that according to her sources, Pearce went rogue before the ambush. Rowan and Philippe intentionally handed Pearce to the Taliban over his insubordination. Later, Zara asks someone to look into Vincent's record.

Elsewhere, Philippe calls a friend, Pascal, and warns him that Pearce is coming for him soon. On the other hand, Pearce and his team kidnap Philippe's daughter, Chloe on her way to the safe house. They use her to get Philippe to kill himself.

By the time Vincent gets to Philippe, he is dead and Pearce tells him where to find Chloe. They find her safe a few hours later. The episode ends with Pearce staring out the window.

Summary: Vincent and Zara join an anti-terrorist task force set up to dismantle Pearce's group, more determined than ever to get revenge for having been betrayed in Afghanistan. They track down the trafficker of the weapons used in the embassy attack. Pearce designates his next target, Pascal Moulin, CEO of KMI Systems, a large company working in the defense sector.

The episode starts with Pearce releasing a video about what happened to him and his men. Meanwhile, the team tracks Karim Hassan down to a market in Paris. They keep their eyes on him and see him handing his backpack off to someone.

Vincent stays with Karim while Zara chases the other man. Unfortunately, she loses sight of the suspect and ends up accosting the wrong man. On the other hand, Vincent follows Karim into a public toilet. A fight ensues, and he kills Karim. There goes their lead to Pearce! Later, the two return to the office feeling dispirited. Matis is also on their back for messing up.

On the other side of town, the man who took the backpack, Matthew, gets ready to shoot someone. Pascal receives an email from Pearce containing the video of how Phillippe killed himself.

One of his staff informs him that Pearce is on the line. Pearce tells Pascal that he needs 100 million Euros for the lives of his men and the torture he endured. Pascal refuses to engage with Pearce. Pearce threatens to kill those close to him as his sniper is waiting. The staff member tells Pascal not to worry, his family is safe. Pascal makes the stupid decision to accuse Pearce of bluffing. Within seconds. Pascal's bodyguard is killed right in front of his eyes.

The police take over the case and look for the motive behind Pearce's attack on Pascal. It turns out that Pascal put pressure on Philippe to betray Pearce because his actions in Afghanistan were bad for his business there. They scan the footage near the rooftop that Matthew shot Pascal's bodyguard from and get the make and number plate of his car.

At the palace, the President and her team worry that Pearce's videos are gaining him sympathy from the public. The President says it is like they are in a PR battle with a terrorist.

At the station, the team gets a lead on Mathew's car and heads to the location. At the same time, Mathew is gearing up for another attack. He manages to get his target right as the police call the man to warn him.

Zara and Vincent arrive and start chasing after Matthew, but lose him. On the ride back to the office, Zara asks Vincent why he was discharged from the army. Vincent tells her he couldn't execute the family of a Boko Haram commander.

Zara gets a text from her girlfriend that she is wasted and Vincent drives her to the location. Zara finds her girl, Thea, high on drugs and takes her home. Vincent helps her, and they agree to keep it a secret between them. Zara says she loves Thea and doesn't want to lose her, even though their relationship might cost her the job.

Back to Pascal, he and his family remain under police protection. His son asks about Pearce but Pascal lies to him. A few minutes later, the son gets a message from his girlfriend saying they need to meet. The girl tells him that she is pregnant, and he sneaks out to meet her. The problem is, that Pearce's men are the ones texting Pascal's son. His girlfriend is currently in the boot of their car.

The next morning, Vincent gets a message from the President, asking to meet later that night. Before Vincent can respond, Matis summons them. He tells them that a few weeks after Pearce was rescued; he left the office and left for Pakistan.

While there, someone planted a bomb in his car. It seems someone tried to kill Pearce to stop him from revealing the truth about the betrayal he suffered. No one is admitting to the bombing, but Pearce's girlfriend and her two children were killed in the explosion.

After learning that his son is in the wind, Pascal calls the police and they track the boy to a park nearby. At the same time, Matthew is waiting with his gun to take the boy out. The police suddenly arrive and intervene.

A gunfight ensues and in the end, Vincent kills Matthew. After nearly losing their son, Pascal's wife insists that he pay Pearce the money and buy their freedom.

Speaking of Pearce, Freja finds a photo of his girlfriend and her kids in his belongings. He tells her about how kind Amina was to him and how he thought there could be hope for them. However, that hope with Amina in the bombing.

Back at the station, Zara questions how Pearce is funding his revenge operation. The IT team is looking into Matthew's phone and might have got a lead, but they are not sure who the man mentioned in the messages is.

Later that night, Vincent meets with the President and they try so hard to act casually. However, Vincent confesses his feelings for her and she tells him she feels the same. They end up having sex even though they know they shouldn't be together.

Following his wife's advice, Pascal pays Pearce the money, but things don't end there. Pearce and his men attack Pascal in his own house and take him captive. They drag him to a secluded area and burn him alive along with the 100 million euros he paid. Pearce leaves a message saying he can't be bought, and that he is coming for everyone involved.

Guest Stars: Nagisa Morimoto (Simone), Paul Gorostidi (Lucas), Michaël Erpelding (Cedric Duval), Nathalie Richard (Beatrice), Amal Affani (Esin), Florent Cheippe (Elias)
Summary: The taskforce's investigations reveal that Pearce allegedly mentioned the name of a certain Cédric Duval. This man is allegedly involved in the operation that killed his partner and children. Vincent gets closer to the President of the Republic while Zara must manage aspects of her private life.

The episode starts with the police making their way into a house. They don't find anyone, but there are signs of a struggle in the house.

The house belongs to Cedric Duval, and the security team finally comes clean and admits that Cedric is the one who placed the bomb in Pearce's car. The police think Pearce has already killed Duval, but they are wrong. Pearce is holding him in a remote location and torturing him for information. Unfortunately, Cedric has no information. He only knew his handler's name.

At the palace, Vincent and the President talk about the recent happenings. She is stressed about giving a press statement about Pascal's death. It seems their relationship is back on.

While the President gives a press briefing, Vincent gets a call that they found Duval's body. He finds it surprising that Pearce tortured Duval even after what he went through. The police assume that Duval talked. The security service is finally cooperating and they give up Duval's handler.

In the meantime, a lady called Beatrice receives a call from Ines warning her that the police are coming. Beatrice is Duval's handler and has been living a quiet life after her retirement. Beatrice quickly packs up and waits for Zara and Vincent outside her house.

They take her to a safe location while Pearce sends a video message to the security team, asking for their help and promising to pay 5 million euros to anyone who will give him valuable information. Freja is keeping tabs on Pearce for her employers and says she will retire after two jobs.

Back at the station, Zara and Vincent talk to Matis about Beatrice's behaviour. They believe someone warned her they were coming. Matis orders them to take Beatrice to the safe house and get her to talk. They need to protect anyone involved.

Beatrice says that Duval was in the dark and therefore told Pearce nothing. As they spend time with Beatrice, Zara finds herself relating to Beatrice. The woman made a lot of sacrifices and lost the affection of her family. Her job was her life and she dedicated her life to it. Currently, she only cares about her favourite plant.

The more Zara learns about Beatrice, the more taken she is with her. Soon, she convinces Beatrice to do one last op. She knows that Beatrice is dying to get back in the field one last time. Beatrice also has a heart issue and is in her last years. This is her only chance to do what she loves again.

Vincent is not pleased that Zara talked to Beatrice without his involvement, but it is what it is. Beatrice agrees to be used as bait to get to Pearce. She offers to give him the information and the team starts making the necessary plans.

On another front, the President attends the briefing at the station and Zara picks up the odd vibes between Vincent and the President.

Back to Beatrice, she allows the police to use the tracker in her heart pacer to track her as she meets with Pearce. Pearce sends Freja to meet with Beatrice and gives her instructions to get on a specific bus at a specific time.

The police follow Beatrice closely behind until the bus gets into a tunnel. Pearce stages an accident outside the tunnel, causing a jam. He uses this opportunity to get on the bus and talk to Beatrice. Beatrice insists on having the money sent to an account she set up for her son. She had called him earlier to say goodbye because she knew Pearce would kill her.

Once the money is transferred, Beatrice stalls for time as the police rush to get to her after spotting Pearce. Gunfight around the bus ensues. Pearce threatens to kill a passenger, forcing Beatrice to give up the valuable information.

By the time Zara and Vincent get to the bus, Pearce is on the move and Beatrice is hanging on by a thread. Zara chases after Pearce and his men while Vincent administers first aid to Beatrice. Before dying, she tells him that she told Pearce the truth. The one who ordered the hit on his life that led to the death of Amina and her two children is the President. Vincent is shocked.

Zara loses track of Pearce and feels bad for getting Beatrice killed. When she learns that the President is Pearce's next target, she assures Vincent that she will be safe. Vincent offers to communicate the threat to the President's security team. He drops Zara home and Thea ends up finding Zara's gun in her backpack. Thea is shocked as Zara can't explain the gun.

On the other hand, Vincent confronts the President, and she admits that she ordered the hit on Pearce to stop him from telling the truth. She claims she had no choice. The truth could have ruined her presidency even before it truly began. He warns her that Pearce is coming for her.

The episode ends with Pearce watching the President's speech about how Paris will remain strong and won't bow down to terrorists.

Summary:	Zara and Vincent continue their hunt and finally understand how far Jacob Pearce is willing to go to get revenge and avenge the people he loved. They try to stop Jacob from getting his hands on a deadly weapon, but Jacob always seems to be one step ahead of the task force. Vincent and Zara suspect the presence of a mole in their camp.

The episode starts with a plane landing at Orly Airport. In the meantime, one of the cleaners uses her job to get Pearce information from the air tower. She later calls him once she has completed the mission.

Meanwhile, Vincent is still struggling with the reality of what the president did. He is not sure she can trust him anymore. He leaves the palace that morning and heads to work.

They are currently still looking for Pearce's associates and have found one man who was part of the embassy attack. Vincent updates Zara on the President and says all her public engagements are cancelled, and the palace is on lockdown.

They continue to survey the suspect, Shaun, but he spots them and tries to flee. Once he is cornered, he fires at them and ends up getting killed. They find the dead body of a woman in his car and quickly identify her as Annette. She ran a skydiving company with her husband at a small airstrip.

The husband is unreachable, so they will have to track him down psychically. They also use the GPS on the car to figure out where Shaun has recently been.

In the meantime, Freja updates her boss, Richard, on Pearce's next step. Whatever they are up to will affect the market, but Freja says Pearce only cares about his revenge mission. Richard advises her to continue watching him. He orders her to handle him if he becomes a problem. Currently, Pearce, Freja and his men are on a small airstrip. They are planning to sort of hijack a plane.

On the ride to meet Annette's husband, Zara tells Vincent that she told Thea the truth and she left. She is not sure if Thea will come back to her. Zara brings up the President and Vincent admits that he has been having an on-and-off relationship with her. He admits he is struggling with what the President did. He, however, tells Zara that it is over between him and the President.

At the small airstrip, Pearce and his team hack into the air tower and force the cargo plane to land at the small airstrip where they are waiting. Unfortunately, the arrival of Zara and Vincent ruins their plan.

It takes a while for Vincent and Zara to realise something is off when they get to the airstrip. At first glance, everything looks normal until Zara notices blood on the windowpane and gets attacked by one of the men acting like one of the staff. Meanwhile, Vincent notices something weird when the co-pilot of the plane gets shot as they talk.

He and the plane's security guy rush inside the plane and the pilot tries to take off. However, Pearce threatens to kill his family, and he stops. At the same time, Zara is overpowered and brought onto the plane. The plane takes off again under Pearce's order.

During the short flight, Pearce tries to explain his revenge mission to Zara and Vincent. He feels Vincent would understand, as he is a soldier. On the other side of the plane, Freja secures the Uranium on the plane. Once they are done, they get ready to skydive and kill the captives.

Zara and Vincent fight back, but they are unable to stop Freja and Pearce from getting away. This new development causes more concern since it is clear that Pearce is creating a dirty bomb using the Uranium.

The President orders the police to find the bomb before she is forced to evacuate the city. As for Vincent and Zara, they worry that Pearce has spies among them. He seems to be one step ahead of them. Vincent comes clean about his ongoing relationship with the President. Zara asks him to end it since it is compromising him. However, when Zara gets home, she finds Thea packing and convinces her to stay.

Elsewhere, another young lady contacts Pearce through a burner phone. Pearce and Freja bring in bomb expert, Farid to make their dirty bomb. Farid and Pearce are old pals and are in this mess together.

Later that night, Vincent finds the President scared out of her mind. He promises to protect her till the end.

Guest Stars: Kriss Dosanjh (Farid), Paul Gorostidi (Lucas), Amal Affani (Esin), Mehdi Meskar (Sami), Robert Luckay (Goran)
Summary: Pearce gives Juliette a terrifying deadline, but a breakthrough helps Zara and Vincent and they must decide who they are willing to harm to capture Pearce. Pearce must also consider who he is willing to sacrifice to achieve his plan.

The episode starts with Farid making the dirty bomb. Meanwhile, Shaun's GPS gives the police a new lead. It turns out that Shaun visited a guy named Sami a lot over the past few weeks. Sami is from Afghanistan but got his French citizenship 15 years ago. Based on the evidence, it looks like Sami has ties to Pearce, but the police haven't figured it out yet.

Zara and Vincent sneak into Sami's house and bug the place. Zara is nearly caught when Sami abruptly returns, but she manages to complete the mission and escape.

Thanks to their sneaking, they discover Sami is dating the only remaining daughter of Amina. They investigate further and discover that Esin is in the country illegally. They decide to see if Esin is in contact with Pearce and if they can use her. Esin works at a local hotel and they start surveilling her. At the same time, Vincent and Zara push Matis to launch an internal investigation to find Pearce's mole in their organisation.

Back to Pearce, he tells Farid about his tear-jerking experience and what they took from him. Pearce says that he doesn't expect peace anymore. Farid tells him the bomb is almost ready. Pearce admits that he is not prepared to use the bomb, but if push comes to shove, all bets are off.

Meanwhile, while the police are surveilling Esin, they realise she is paying off the man who snuck her into the country. Zara tells Vincent that things are going well with Thea but it is still awkward. They watch Sami and Esin make dinner and Esin asks Sami if he is willing to leave Paris. Sami says he is good as long as he is with her.

Vincent wonders if Pearce had already warned Esin to leave the city because of the bomb. The next day, they stage a whole undercover operation at the hotel and act like immigration officers. Vincent interviews Esin while another officer hacks into Esin's phone and puts a tracker in her passport. They let her go once they are done and Sami takes her home.

The police find indefinite proof that Esin and Pearce are in communication after checking her phone. Later that night, Esin and Sami are confronted by the debt collector and he threatens them.

He thinks that Sami and Esin told the police about his business. Esin denies it and things get physical as Sami defends her. Vincent breaks the cover and helps Esin. She realises he is not an immigration officer. Zara heavily scolds Vincent for messing up, but he insists he can't stand by and watch them kill Esin and Sami. He calls her out on her lack of empathy and says he is a robot, addicted to her job.

That night, Farid finishes making the bomb and Esin stays up all night planning her escape. In the morning, she lies to Sami that she is going to buy breakfast and makes a run for it. The police follow her closely, but she gets a burner phone and contacts Pearce.

A few minutes later, Pearce advises her to ditch her passport. The police lose her and she makes her way to Pearce. It seems she sees him as a father figure and embraces him in a hug. With Esin dumping her passport, Vincent and Zara grow more sure that Pearce has a mole. After a long day, Vincent heads to the palace to be with the President. She is worried that Vincent has not forgiven her mistake.

Later, Pearce tells Esin she will have to leave the country. She is worried about Sami and says her mom wouldn't want the revenge. Pearce asks her to get some rest, but she calls Sami at work to say goodbye. The police track the phone and find Pearce.

However, the mole texts Pearce in advance and gives him time to get ready. When the police get there, Pearce and Freja hold them off as much as they can. The intense shoot-out goes on for a while as Pearce, Freja and Esin wait for their helicopter to arrive. Zara grabs Esin and threatens to kill her unless Pearce surrenders.

He agrees to surrender, but only if Freja and Esin get on the helicopter. Once the two women leave, Pearce peacefully surrenders and is taken into custody.

Guest Stars: Paul Gorostidi (Lucas), Clémentine Baert (Celine), Nagisa Morimoto (Simone), Omar Mebrouk (Ruben), John Hopkins (Richard)
Summary: Jacob Pearce is at last in custody, but he still has one last card to play and he unleashes the full scale of his operation to escape; Zara and Vincent try their best to maintain the upper hand.

The episode starts with Pearce being taken into custody and brought into the headquarters under tight security. He doesn't resist, but quietly goes along with everything. They bring him into an interrogation room, but he refuses to say anything. All he talks about are the torture tactics he endured from the Taliban. He finds it ironic that they are kinder to him than he expected.

At the same time, Matis informs Zara and Vincent that the IT team is looking into Pearce's phone. The information might lead them to the mole by the next morning. Vincent checks with Zara if she is still mad at him for breaking cover and saving Esin. She says she is no longer mad but questions if she was too ruthless to hold Esin at gunpoint. Vincent says the situation called for it and she did a good job.

At the prison, the mole sends Pearce a message by adding a small note in his food. Zara goes home and talks to Thea, questioning if she is a nice person. However, she can't go into the details of her work, which frustrates Thea more.

The following morning, everyone is surprised when Lucas is named the mole. They quickly arrest and interrogate him, but he denies the accusations. It turns out that Lucas has a gambling problem and the IT team finds a bank account under his name that Pearce was using to pay.

They also find a message from Lucas to Pearce. Zara and Vincent decide to monitor Lucas's phone. His ex-girlfriend Simone says she is surprised since Lucas never paid for their dinner, yet he sold out for money.

The task force continues to hold Pearce, and Freja updates Richard on their plans. She says the plan to secure Pearce is not easy, but they are working on it. Richard is worried that Pearce will talk, but Freja argues he will never. Zara tries to threaten Pearce, but he threatens her back and calls her by her name. He promises to come for her loved ones if she hurts Esin.

Matis gets a call from the Director, informing him that they are moving Pearce to Evreux Base. It is a military base and once he leaves, they will lose access to him. Vincent offers to talk to Pearce alone, hoping to manipulate the connection Pearce thinks they have.

Pearce thanks him for saving Esin from the debt collectors. The two talk about Pearce's grudge against the President. Pearce questions why Vincent is still working for the President. Vincent asks whether it would help if the President publicly admits her mistake. He promises to talk to her, but Pearce doesn't answer his question.

Zara later tells Vincent that she spoke to her contact at DGSE and Pearce is being sent to a black site in Morocco. The President authorised the move to protect herself and she will have Pearce killed there. The team intercepts a new message from Lucas's phone. Someone texted him asking if there is a plan to move Pearce.

Matis, Vincent and Zara agree to postpone moving Pearce. They send a message back, revealing the route to the other party and have an assault team shadowing the convoy. On the other hand, Freja calls Richard and informs her that they are ready and moving in position.

The plan initially goes as planned, but it turns out that Lucas is not the mole, Simone is. She takes out the decoy team and uses Pearce's men to infiltrate the headquarters. They are dressed as the Raid officers and it takes a while for Vincent to realise something is wrong. He takes out one of the fake Raid officers and calls Zara, who is with Pearce. Pearce keeps hitting his cuffs on the chair, which annoys her.

By the time Vincent calls, the men are on to Zara and they shoot Matis. Zara manages to take Pearce, but Simone intercepts her. Simone takes Pearce and gives him the Raid uniform. They use the chaos and a car bomb to distract the police and drive away.

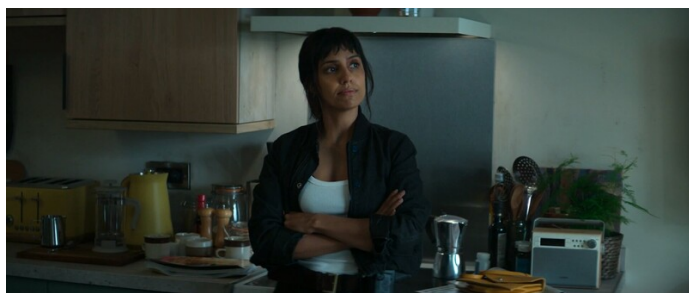

The next morning, Lucas is set free. Vincent tells Zara that Matis will make it. They start looking into Simone. Vincent heads to the palace to confront the President for trying to kill Pearce again. She refuses to apologise and claims she didn't ask for the mess; she is just doing the best she can. She asks him to wait for her, promising to talk after she returns. However, he gets a call from Pearce, asking him to deliver a message.

Elsewhere, Pearce and his men load up the bomb in a truck and park it on one of the busiest streets in Paris. Once the President returns, Vincent gives the President Pearce's message. Pearce wants the President to hand herself over in 48 hours or he detonates the bomb.

Summary: Jacob Pearce is at last in custody, but he still has one last card to play, Zara and Vincent try their best to out-manuever and maintain the upper hand. Juliette watches the situation grow more dire, forcing her to reconsider her options.

The episode starts with the clock ticking as Pearce gears up to bomb the city. He has a lookout watching the van and gets constant updates. Meanwhile, the President's security team moves her to the bunker.

At the headquarters, they discover that Simone used to date one of the men in Pearce's team. She also wanted revenge, and that is why she helped Pearce. It was never about the money. They visit Simone's sister Celine and realise she is about to skip town.

Celine tries to play coy, but they find a burner phone that Simone gave her sister. They explain the situation to Celine and beg her to help them. She finally breaks and tells them that Simone messaged her last night and warned her to leave the city.

At the bunker, the President holds a meeting with her advisors. They argue that they will need to evacuate the city soon. A dirty bomb is no joke and it will be hard to contain the impact. They all agree that the President can never hand herself over to Pearce.

She orders them to wait until 6 pm to give the evacuation order. She hopes the police would have found the bomb by then. The President later confides in her aide that her legacy is getting ruined. Her aide argues that if they can get through this, the President will be seen as a hero.

Meanwhile, use the information given by Celine to track Simone down. They raid the place but don't notice she is hiding under the bed. Later, Zara sees her and a gunfight ensues. The two women fight for a while and Simone overpowers Zara. Thankfully, Vincent saves Zara by shooting Simone in the leg and giving Zara a chance to take Simone into custody. Later, they try to convince Simone to tell them the location of the bomb. They use her conscious to break her and she gives in.

The team heads back to the headquarters and sends word to the President that they have located the bomb. The problem is they can't detonate the bomb just yet. Pearce has cameras in the van, a lookout and is watching the live feed. He will see them coming and blow up the city. The team decides to intercept the feed and put it in a loop.

They only have fifteen minutes before Pearce notices a change and realises his spotter is not answering his phone. On the other hand, Richard asks Freja to take out Pearce once the mission is done. Before heading to the bomb location, Zara calls The and warns her to leave the city.

Once the IT team intercepts the feed and Zara and Vincent kill the spotter, they try to detonate the bomb. Unfortunately, after inspecting the bomb, the bomb expert says he will need twenty minutes to disarm it.

With no option left, Zara and Vincent attempt to take the van elsewhere. Thea also calls Zara to inform her that she has left. She notices that Zara is acting weird in the way she says goodbye. She starts getting scared, but Zara hangs up after saying she loves her.

Meanwhile, Pearce notices the feed is on a loop and, when he calls his spotter, he doesn't respond. He switches the camera in the van on and sees Vincent and Zara driving it. It doesn't help that the van is stuck in traffic and they are losing precious time. Pearce calls Vincent and makes the first move to detonate the bomb.

He gives Vincent an ultimatum to bring the President to him according to the original deadline, or he detonates the bomb. Vincent agrees to the conditions to keep the citizens safe. They abandon the car and walk away.

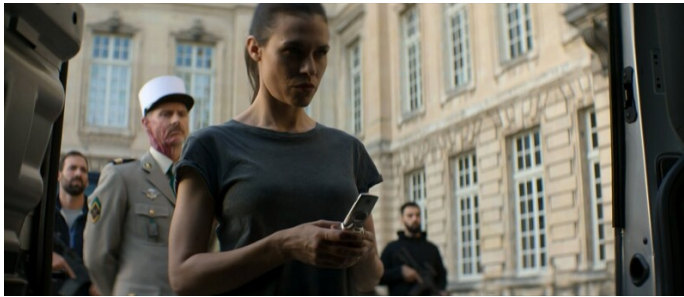

The news reaches the President, and she holds a press briefing and gives an evacuation order. Panic takes over the city and the residents hurry to leave. The only one who gains from the recent events is Richard. Thea calls Zara and begs her to leave the city and meet her. Zara promises to see her soon. In the meantime, Pearce orders Freja to kidnap Thea as an insurance policy. Pearce doesn't trust Vincent to deliver the President.

Zara talks to Vincent and suggests that he talk to the President and convince her to give herself up. She thinks they can use the President to kill Pearce since he won't expect it. Vincent is not sure the plan will work. For one, her security team will never allow it. Zara suggests they work around the President's security team. Vincent visits the President in the bunker and tells her the plan.

Summary: As Jacob's plan is about to succeed, Zara, Vincent and Juliette fear they will have to give in to his ultimatum. A race against time then begins against Pearce who hits the target. Will they succeed in saving Paris?

The episode picks up with Vincent convincing the President to escape the bunker and meet Pearce. He gives her an injection that will slow her breathing and make it look like she is having a cardiac arrest. Once she loses consciousness, he calls for help.

The security team dive into action and call for a helicopter to fly the President to the hospital. Once on the plane, Vincent attacks the security men, overpowers them and puts a gun to the pilot's head. The pilot flies Vincent and the President to a secluded area where Zara and another agent are waiting.

Once the President gains consciousness, Zara and Vincent prepare her to meet with Pearce and kill him. Vincent admits to Zara that he is unsure if he loves the President anymore, but protecting her is still his job. Although scared, the President trusts Vincent and listens as he teaches her how to get close to Pearce and takes him by surprise.

After managing to escape and stay below the radar, Vincent delivers the President to Pearce.

Pearce is prepared to die, and this is his suicide mission. He puts on his army suit and sets up a camera to record his conversation with the President. He also retrieves the van carrying the bomb and brings Thea as his insurance policy. He wants the President to publicly admit she killed three innocent people, Amina and her two kids.

Once Zara, Vincent, Leo and the President reach the agreed location. He pulls a gun on Thea, taking Zara by surprise. A gunfight ensues between Freja and Zara. To save Thea from Pearce, Zar shoots her in the arm. The commotion gives Pearce enough time to drag the President to the room he set up. The President takes him by surprise and shoots him in the abdomen as he drags her. The injury is enough to slow down Pearce, but doesn't kill him.

He threatens to blow the place up if she doesn't admit her mistake. Under duress, the President admits to killing Amina and her kids over and over again. Pearce never seems satisfied to hear her say it. Finally, Zara and Vincent breach the room and shoot Pearce. They assume they are safe since they manage to stop the bomb from detonating.

However, Pearce reaches for the gun hidden in his trousers and aims for the President. Vincent shields her with his own body before Zara responds and kills Pearce. In the meantime, Freja escapes and leaves for her next mission.

Vincent is rushed to the hospital and treated. Later, the President visits him. They agree that things between them are not working and break up amicably. Zara and Thea also break up. Thea finds it hard to understand Zara's job. She nearly died and, to make matters worse, Zara was the one who shot her. As for the President, she takes back her confession and denies ordering the hit. She blames someone else and is seen as a hero by the public.

Vincent quits his job, but Zara admits she can't quit. She loves the job, and unlike Vincent, she is not done. Meanwhile, the President's approval rate skyrockets. Esin is the only one who remembers Pearce and pays him a tribute.
