Summary: Melissa and Josh stumble upon the strange musical town of Schmigadoon—and are shocked to learn they can't leave until they find true love.

The episode begins with two doctors called Josh and Melissa wrapped up in a whirlwind romance. What begins as a heady cocktail of lust and passion soon fizzles out as the pair find themselves stuck in a rut.

In order to try and fix their marriage, the pair embark on a couple's retreat to Sacred Heart Love Trial. Bad weather soon consumes them, with Melissa and Josh arguing about how their relationship is just "fine" and not exactly brimming with passion like tit used to. The sound of church bells soon interrupt them, as the pair are caught off-guard and follow the noise. Walking through the mist, they find themselves in a strange fantasy world called Schmigadoon.

Inevitably an opening ensemble begins as they arrive, with the townsfolk bursting into song to introduce the pair. When the singing subsides, we're introduced to the charming Mayor Menlove and the very-obviously-evil Reverend Layton and his wife. The suave Danny Bailey's there too, who's the town bad boy. He takes a fancy to Melissa but Mildred saves them from this coming to fruition.

The pair eventually make it to the inn where they're given two separate rooms for a dollar. It all seems too good to be true, especially when Melissa heads outside to the Tunnel of Love that evening. With no Josh around, Danny ends up serenading her with a love song.

In the morning things become weirder for the pair when they realize they're unable to leave town. Well, I guess it's time for another song! This time it comes from a leprechaun who informs them that they're stuck in town.

Summary: After realizing that they can't leave together, Josh and Melissa break up and start looking for romance around town.

The episode begins with Melissa and Josh realizing that they may not actually be in love. Josh is determined to figure out how to get back to their world though, even suggesting they try and romance other people to see if that does the trick. This inevitably leads to a lover's tiff between the two... which obviously sees the whole town break into song. After this ensemble, Melissa does break things off with Josh for real.

Out in the woods, weeping, Mel runs into Mr Mayor. He reassures her that love is waiting out there somewhere. Meanwhile, Josh runs into Betsy and her siblings. Betsy encourages Josh to show up at the picnic basket auction. When Melissa finds out though, she's not exactly happy. However, she does show up to drink punch and watch from afar.

Josh wins Betsy's picnic basket and bids 20 dollars to do so. While this impresses the townsfolk, Melissa is far from happy. After drinking a lot of punch, she heads to the podium and tries to bid herself off to the men in town. No one bids on Mel... until Danny Bailey shows up and offers 2 dollars.

Predictably, Danny and Melissa end up together at the Tunnel of Love. Danny encourages Melissa how to shoot, eventually leading to the pair kissing and getting involved in another song. It's a wonderful little number too, while over with Betsy and Josh things take a wild turn.

The pair head up for a picnic at Virginity Ruins. Josh starts to get cold feet though, unsure on Betsy's real age and sussing out that she must be pretty young. Just as Betsy kisses Josh, her Father shows up with a shotgun, "You best get proposing there, son!"

Summary: When their first flings end in regret, Melissa and Josh agree to a new plan-which he immediately casts aside, prompting her to make a fresh start.

The episode begins with the cracks beginning to show in Josh and Melissa's relationship. We're in the months leading up to their musical venture, as they attend Nicole and Eddie's wedding.

There, Melissa probes her partner about the idea of marriage. Josh certainly doesn't take the hint though and instead has her pick the three worst moments of the night instead.

Back in Schmigadoon, Melissa awakens to find Danny has made her food. He's also got a big announcement to make too — he's found the one, which immediately sends Melissa reeling. When Danny sings about having a baby, things take a hilariously satirical turn.

In town though, everyone is buzzing with Betsy's engagement. She even has a ring too, although Josh pulls Melissa aside and admits he only did so because someone had a shotgun to his face.

Melissa sees the funny side of things, especially when she comments how under-written females were in early musicals. Betsy however, simply fawns over her ring.

However, the pair come under fire by the Mothers against the Future. They're kicked out the inn by Mildred and left reeling over what to do next.

Well, Josh decides to take Betsy up to the bridge in order to prove true love. Predictably it doesn't work, so Josh calls off the engagement... to Betsy anyway.

Instead, Josh lines up all the other girls ready to try and cross the bridge back home. As one may have guessed by now, it doesn't work.

Josh shows up at church where he speaks to the Reverend. However, Emma stops by to drop off a picnic basket which immediately piques Josh's interest. Perhaps she's the one?

Elsewhere, Melissa stops by the doctor's, intent on taking up a nurse's position in town. When she gets there though she meets the absolute hunk, Doc Lopez. Well, things are about to get very interesting!

Summary: Melissa grapples with her conflicted feelings for Doc Lopez, rebelling against his archaic ideas, while Josh tries to court Emma the school-marm.

The episode begins with Josh and Melissa together in the past. They're laughing and at ease, telling each other they're in love. It's a really touching moment and one that paves way for time back in Schmigadoon.

Josh shows up in school looking for a place to stay — and a solid conversation starter with Emma Tate. It turns out Mildred controls the whole town but Tate is a tough cookie to crack. She gives Josh an opportunity to prove himself, encouraging him to fix up her shelves in the classroom during lessons.

As class ends, Emma tries to get to know Josh. An orchestral score picks up though, leading to Josh breaking his train of thought and telling the high heavens that he's not going through with this. Emma misinterprets of course and hurries away, as Josh is left to lament his luck.

Elsewhere, Melissa arrives to see Doc Lopez where some euphemisms are thrown out through medical terminology. However, beyond his good looks Melissa realizes that Lopez is actually pretty cold and uncaring. He turns away a pregnant girl called Nancy and doesn't even bat an eyelid.

Well, Melissa decides to head off and use her best judgment. She finds Nancy living in a run-down shack with a sailor called Freddy. She doesn't even know about the basics of childbirth either. Well, this calls for another musical number!

Back at the clinic, Josh shows up and asks Melissa for help. He needs some musical tips and all of this circles around to him singing about his feelings. Suddenly, Nancy comes bursting through the doors in labour. Well, the pair team up and help her give birth. It's obvious they're supposed to be together but oblivious Josh hurries off to grab a trumpet and win over Tate.

While he does, Melissa decides to hit out against Doc Lopez, doing her best to change things for the better. After helping out Old Doc Lopez with his sex life... we cut forward to his funeral. This happens to be a direct result of his "sexual repertoire" being stretched.

Midway through the funeral, the Mayor stands up and decides to reveal his true feelings. Time and a place man... Well, he ends up singing about being a homosexual, prompting Florence to hurry away, teary-eyed and upset.

Speaking of confessions, Doc Lopez admits to Melissa that she's changed him. While they start growing closer together, Emma has a change of heart with Josh after he helps Carson.

Through a series of interwoven musical notes, both Emma and Lopez admit they're in love with Josh and Melissa. The harmonies cross over, at the same time as the two scenes, with Melissa and Josh looking at one another with an outstretched hand. Is this really love? Well, both couples end up kissing which quashes that idea.

Tribulation

Season 1

Episode Number: 5

Season Episode: 5

Originally aired: Friday August 06, 2021
Writer: Allison Silverman
Director: Barry Sonnenfeld
Show Stars: Keegan-Michael Key (Josh Skinner), Cecily Strong (Melissa Gimble), Fred Armisen (Reverend Howard Layton), Dove Cameron (Betsy McDonough), Jaime Camil (Doc Lopez), Kristin Chenoweth (Margaret / Mildred Layton), Alan Cumming (Mayor Aloysius Menlove), Ariana DeBose (Emma Tate), Ann Harada (Florence Menlove), Jane Krakowski (Countess Gabriele Von Blerkom), Martin Short (Leprechaun), Aaron Tveit (Danny Bailey)
Guest Stars: Sarah Hayward (Helen), Amitai Marmorstein (Pete the Milkman), Liam Quiring-Nkindi (Carson), Dolores Drake (Bidly #1), Eileen Barrett (Bidly #2)
Summary: New romances hit roadblocks as Melissa meets someone unexpected and Emma reveals a secret. Mildred seizes a chance to increase her power.

The episode begins with our usual flashback to the time before our fantasy land musical shenanigans. Mel and Josh disagree over the correct phrase for "dog eat dog" world, with Mel convinced it's Doggy Dog. The cracks are there, but they're only exacerbated by what's going on right now.

In the present Mel and Jorge Lopez discuss their top three worst moments of the day. It's a weird thing to do with a new love interest, but it soon paves way for more dancing between them.

Galivanting across the different rooms, Mel and Jorge dance their way into the path of the Countess. Yes, Gabriele Von Blerkom has arrived and her purpose is obviously to stir things up and act as a spanner in the works for our pair.

Speaking of which, Mildred comes up with another plan back in the town square. Through another song, she spins a story about the two strangers corrupting their town. Well, Mildred decides that new leadership is needed to drive the pair out. And that new leader? Mildred Layton of course.

Elsewhere, Mel and Gabriele head out for their drive in this "very obviously doctored" car ride (which is supposed to be as a throwback to the old era of film to be fair) as the pair discuss Lopez.

It doesn't take long for a song to break out — and if that wasn't obvious enough, Gabriele brandishes a gun, admits to being a Nazi, and kicks Mel — quite literally — to the curb. However, by this proverbial curb happens to be Melissa's stone heart. It turns out she had it all this time.

Meanwhile, Josh and Emma head out with Carson to the woods for a picnic. She doesn't want Josh to leave but he gushes over how much he loves New York. As they talk, it turns out Carson is actually Emma's son but she's kept it a secret from him all this time.

When Carson overhears Emma's confession, he bolts out to the woods. Josh inevitably hurries off to follow but stumbles into the path of a stone heart with his name on.

How We Change

Season 1

Season Episode: 6

Originally aired: Friday August 13, 2021

Show Stars: Keegan-Michael Key (Josh Skinner), Cecily Strong (Melissa Gimble), Fred Armisen (Reverend Howard Layton), Dove Cameron (Betsy McDonough), Jaime Camil (Doc Lopez), Kristin Chenoweth (Margaret / Mildred Layton), Alan Cumming (Mayor Aloysius Menlove), Ariana DeBose (Emma Tate), Ann Harada (Florence Menlove), Jane Krakowski (Countess Gabriele Von Blerkom), Martin Short (Leprechaun), Aaron Tveit (Danny Bailey)

Summary: With the election looming, Mildred relentlessly ramps up her campaign. Josh and Melissa face their true feelings for each other.

The episode begins this finale with Josh and Mel out in the woods, building up their tent together. It's a complete bust, and in the end, they sleep out under the stars.

In the present, Josh finds Carson hanging out high up in a tree. He refuses to budge and has decided to ditch everything belonging to Emma. Josh talks him down though — and talks himself into realizing what he needs to do. He watches as Carson and Emma patch up their differences, hugging it out. However, Emma agrees to walk with Josh up and over the bridge in the morning.

Meanwhile, Lopez races up to find Mel, who ends up sleeping by the side of the road. He promises to be there for her, although Lopez's Mum has tagged along for the ride too. Mel is not sure this is the right step forward, questioning her choice of being with Lopez.

Up at the bridge, Josh too questions the exact same thing. He decides against being with Emma and races off to find Mel again.

In town, the election gets underway with the people about to vote on Mildred becoming Mayor. However, Josh and Mel jump in and end up patching up their differences in front of everyone. As predicted at the start of the season, Josh ends up singing to Mel about how he feels. The pair dance under the spotlight as everything is tinted in a shade of purple to match Mel's dress.

This confession allows the people to actually open up and decide to be more honest and free about how they really feel. There's a host of confessions (and Carson calling Mildred a bastard) as Nancy rocks up and reveals that her Mother is actually Mildred!

Well, Mayor Menlove continues on in his role while the entire town start singing to round out this season. It's all about change; and specifically changing direction in life. This song and dance leads all the way up to our path out of town.

Having rekindled the spark they once had, Josh and Mel hold hands and walk back to New York... or do they? The episode ends on a semi-cliffhanger as it's unclear whether the pair have actually made it back or not. The ambiguous ending does work rather well, leaving enough to whet the appetite and also a tantalizing glimpse of a possible second season.

So what happens if the pair are unsuccessful in making it to the other side? What happens if they're stuck in Schmigadoon? Or do you think they made it back successfully? It would appear they have but this ending does leave that prospect open to interpretation.

Summary: Even though they found love after leaving Schmigadoon, Josh and Melissa's relationship has hit another bump, so they attempt to find Schmigadoon again. They end up in another world based on musicals from the 60s through the 80s, Schmicago.

The episode starts ten seconds after the first series ended. Josh and Melissa are finally ready to return to normality, as we receive a montage of the pair getting married, spending time together... and struggling to get pregnant.

The good mood subsides and the pair believe they should be happier. Unfortunately, they're not. And as the mundanity of everyday life settles in, they continue to get bad news, which eventually leads to more rejection, all of which extrapolated by the elephant in the room — the pair are struggling to get pregnant. Instead, they decide to do something drastic. It's not adoption (as some may have expected) but instead, the pair decide to head back to Schmigadoon.

It doesn't seem to work, they wander through the woods aimlessly, but on the way back, they end up with a flat tire. However, they soon realize that there's something else going on here. They find a sign for Schmicago, uncovered after a dramatic amount of smoke clears, followed by a big ensemble number featuring a whole bunch of familiar faces from the first season. However, they're in a very different setting this time — and led by the fabulous Tituss Burgess, who's our narrator.

The stars of the show here are Josh and Melissa, whose tale is the one we're going to explore. According to the narrator, the pair cannot return to Schmigadoon so now, lost and disorientated, the pair head into Schmicago for a place to stay.

The pair discuss the quality of musicals during this era as they wander through the streets, including how the style of the era has changed to sex, violence and lust. They head to the local hotel, where they're asked whether they want a girl to join them. The slight delay from Josh is pretty hilarious, but the pair soon realize that their room is less than ideal, even without the extra distraction.

Betsy (who has a new hair colour and eccentric popularity, now known as Jenny) heads into the room and encourages them to stay and come to see her perform at the club that night. Well, the performance is certainly something, with a number poking fun at the shock of these musical numbers.

The owner of this establishment happens to be Mr Octavius Kratt, whom the pair meet that evening when he shows up at the table, ice-cold and sporting a scratchy voice. He knows the pair are new to town and after a pretty awkward chat, where Kratt tells Melissa that she has potential, he leaves to "powder his nose".

After Jenny's big performance about her different sexual partners, Josh heads off to use the toilet but unfortunately, he finds someone dead on the floor in the process. He tries to help the deceased woman but unfortunately he's spotted by another dancer, who screams and rushes off.

Josh and Melissa realize that they're now wanted for murder off the back of this, framed for this death, as the pair are forced to run. Unfortunately, there's no way out of Schmicago and Josh is arrested for Elsie Vale's murder. The officers also find a gun in their car, so Josh is taken away, leaving Melissa all alone.

Summary: As Josh makes a new friend in jail, Melissa hires a lawyer and goes undercover to clear his name.

The episode starts with Josh behind bars as our narrator begins singing about Elsie's murder and how Josh is responsible. Unfortunately, his punishment is the electric chair. Josh has a friend come visit though, a guy called Topher (who was Danny Bailey in season 1). He's all "flower power" and believing in peace and prosperity now though. Naturally, he bursts into song and makes it all about him, including how he's struggling to find his purpose.

Meanwhile, Melissa heads off to find an attorney to help Josh, and who should it be but none other than The Countess. This time though, she's playing the character of Bobby, and she's a swanky "lady lawyer". She's the most expensive lawyer in town and with a $20 bill, it's enough to get Bobby on her side... but not before she breaks into song. She recommends Melissa get a job as a dancer at the club, auditioning for the new dancer role and investigate from the inside out.

While Bobby busies herself with a different play to get Josh out, Bobby heads down to the club and auditions. She shows up late, tries (and fails) to get into the right tempo and then has to prove herself with a convincing story to show just why she wants to dance so badly. Melissa's tale sees her break into song, as she discusses how she feels worthless in her job and wants the dancing to see her stand out. Octavius Kratt all of this take place and he makes the final decision, allowing Melissa to dance.

While things go great for Melissa, Josh is greeted by Bobby, who shows up to see Josh, handing over a card and confirming that he has a press conference. With Bobby on his side, her prepared statement for him includes how Jazz is to blame for this and he's all messed up. Everyone seems to garner a good deal of sympathy for him... until Josh goes off-script, getting himself into a muddle and inevitably stuck with a one-way ticket to the electric chair.

Melissa shows up to see Josh, buzzing that she's got the job as a dancer. Josh gives off a pained smile, until he admits that he's not in a good way. Melissa promises to do everything she can, and now that she's going to be moving in with Jenny, it gets her one step closer to finding the real killer.

While Melissa sings a song in the club about "Bustin out", the Happiness Bus smashes into the prison, letting Topher out. Josh is conflicted over whether to go or not, but with the narrator there too, egging him on, not to mention everyone chanting Josh's name, he decides to leave with them.

With a standing ovation for Melissa, she's given the key to the kingdom, allowed to use Elsie's changing room from now on. Given the police haven't actually done anything with this, Melissa finds a notebook inside, presumably belonging to Elsie, and sporting a note scribbled inside: "17 Quick Street, 11am every Sunday." What could this mean?

Summary: While Josh spends time on the run with Topher and the tribe, Melissa explores Schmicago looking for clues and uncovers a family secret.

The episode starts with wanted posters going up all over town for Josh. As for Melissa, she scrambles back to see Bobbie, pointing out the notebook she's found. Bobbie shrugs it off though, revealing the poster and promising to get Josh back regardless. She does point out though that his prison break makes it more difficult to get him exonerated.

As for Melissa, she's tasked with following up on the notebook and attempting to find what's up with 17 Quick Street. When she arrives in town, she quickly discovers that this actually happens to be the Butcher Shop. She talks to the Butcher about Elsie inside, but he's distraught when he finds out she's dead.

As further plot revelations are unveiled, we learn that this man is actually Jenny's dad! He's not happy with "the rich man", whom we (and Melissa) quickly suss out is Octavius. His grievance comes from Octavius killing his wife. The man wants revenge, and Melissa believes that Octavius could also have killed Elsie too. Before leaving, Melissa suggests he reach out to Jenny but he refuses, telling her she needs to stay silent about the fact he's out of prison and back in town.

Meanwhile, Josh is having the time of his life. He's off with the hippies and Topher, and Josh even has hair now too! He's initiated into their tribe, which Topher claims doubles up as a social justice troupe, getting naked and fighting back against "the man". As Josh starts eating the drugged bread, he chills and mellows out. However, Melissa shows up and confronts him about the prison break.

Josh shrugs it off, claiming that he was peer pressured into it. Melissa convinces him to head back to town, where they arrive in court only to be mesmerized by Bobbie's big entry. She shows up in a gold and black get-up and immediately turns heads. She sings about her comprehensive knowledge of the law and how she needs to be seen as not guilty. In the end, Josh is found not guilty!

However, there's another twist in the tale to come. Octavius is not happy when he finds out and doubles down on trying to take Josh out. This time, by killing two birds with one stone — that being going after Melissa and Josh together.

Summary: After Josh and Melissa realize they need to find a happy ending for everyone, they try to make that happen-with unintended consequences.

The episode starts with Josh and Mel heading back to their car... where they find the wheels are gone and their car is a mess. On the way out of Schmicago, the narrator interjects and points out that Mel is in denial over how much fun this place actually has been for her. And naturally, they're stuck here.

The narrator laughs mockingly, telling the pair that being acquitted for murder is not enough for them to leave. They need to figure this out for themselves.

Josh believes that they need to help the other people in Schmicago get happy, and of course this happy ending will come from taking out Octavius. They haven't figured this out yet though, and instead Mel believes the key is Dooley the Butcher, whom if they sort out and make happy, will extrapolate out to everyone else, including his daughter Jenny.

Mel's attempt to broach the subject to Jenny doesn't go well, given she nonchalantly shrugs it off and claims that her father is dead. Josh decides they should try and channel in the positive vibes, and that comes from visiting Topher and his gang. The pair encourage him to concoct a story about a missing father but all the pressure and suggestions are too much and Topher quits the story. So naturally, the spotlight turns to Josh, who comes up with a song that doesn't beat around the bush — Jenny needs to talk to her father.

Instead, Jenny finds companionship in Topher, who opens up to her that night and points out he has insecurities. Specifically over how people like the idea of him rather than the real him. Jenny feels the same way about being on stage. Naturally, the pair feel like they have something real together and kiss in their tent together.

Melissa notices this occur through their silhouette and believes they should use cupid's arrow on Dooley. Specifically on him falling in love with Miss Coddwell. They think this could well be the way to get her happy. And so Josh and Mel get involved and set them up that night, with Dooley deciding to eat with his cleaver in a hilariously awkward meal.

Coddwell invites Dooley up for a nightcap, where Miss Coddwell has trained the orphans to tend the bar. Miss Coddwell suggests they come to a mutual agreement, given Dooley is struggling to get enough meat for the butchers and she's sick and tired of the orphans. So as a result, they decide to kill the kids and sell them as meat... as you do.

Melissa and Josh happen to watch from the other side of the window, unaware of exactly what they're singing, and believe they've got their happy ending. Unfortunately, we're far from that!

Summary: Convinced they're well on their way to a happy ending, Josh and Melissa both rocket to fame in Schmicago and get embroiled in a deadly plot.

The episode begins with our ever-lovable narrator singing us a recap of what's happened so far. As he "exits stage right", Josh and Melissa seem to be getting along a lot better now. Melissa shows up to the theatre, ready to be the best chorus girl possible. Octavius also decides that she's going to take over Jenny's star role too.

Melissa gives an amazing performance, singing alone on stage, much to the surprise and awe of Josh. At the end, she gets a standing ovation, with Octavius even joining in with the applauding. As for Josh, when he leaves the theatre, he finds a whole bunch of the hip-pies following his lead.

After helping one of the followers, the hippies decide they need to follow him as their new leader. The narrator is there too, egging them on, and of course he ends up doing a solo, discussing Melissa and Josh's changed fortunes and their newfound fame. Melissa is making it big at the theatre, much to the disdain of Jenny, while Josh is the new leader of the hippies, much to the annoyance of Topher.

When Josh and Melissa discuss their great work together, they find themselves knocked back down to earth quite quickly, as Jenny and Topher confront them about taking their roles in Schmicago. Kicked out of Jenny's, the pair decide to shack up at Coddwell's instead. Of course, she and Dooley are preparing to kill off all the orphans.

Unbeknownst to the orphans of course, who end up getting a gift for Coddwell with their entire life savings — a ribbon. There's a sweet moment of genuine care from Coddwell, but it washes away quickly, like waves on a rock, as she goes back to her original plan of killing the "little blighters."

Josh is worried that night and can't sleep. He's convinced they need to investigate exactly what's going on, especially after seeing all of Dooley's knives. The pair sneak into the butcher's, where they find evidence of the orphans about to be killed off. Specifically, being turned into sausages.

They're spotted by our couple though, who explain over a spot of tea that actually, orphans aren't really people so it's okay to kill them. Josh and Melissa try and talk them around, and decide that Dooley just needs to have his rage re-directed toward Octavius instead.

Melissa decides to entertain this idea, and agrees to serve up Octavius on a platter. She tries to persuade him, acting all charismatic and flirty, but unfortunately he's wise to her plan and he takes off in his car to parts unknown. He's going to have his way with her. He's not going to kill Melissa though. No, instead he decides that Melissa should be his bride... and Josh is going to meet a sticky end.

Summary: Will there be a happy ending? Josh and Melissa are presented with a life-changing choice.

The episode starts with Josh tied up, awaiting a sticky end. As for Melissa, she's dressed up in a wedding dress and preparing for the worst. She's had to sign a whole bunch of documents to divorce Josh and marry Octavius Kratt, as Bobby shamelessly shows up and serves as our antagonist's lawyer.

The wedding is in an hour's time but it seems like there's no way out for Melissa. As for Josh, he speaks to Sergeant Rivera, who has him at gunpoint. Rivera bemoans the hippies and how free they are. He's been promised a new act at the club by Kratt... something he's been promised for the last 36 years. When Kratt rings and tells Rivera he needs to kill Josh, the officer starts to doubt what he's doing.

Dooley shows up at Coddwell's orphanage with his cleaver and a lust for blood. He's desperate to kill one of the orphans but instead, Coddwell takes him into her bedroom and the pair make sweet love.

Stalling for time works as Topher arrives with all his hippies. Jenny is there too, but it's Dooley and Coddwell who show and turn the tables. Jenny hears Dooley's impassioned plea but believes that he's not really her father. Just Dooley he looks set to slit his own throat, Rivera speaks up and admits that everything is true. He's the one who helped frame Dooley and tells Jenny that yes, he is her father.

With all of this cleared up, we pass across to the wedding. Just before Octavius marries Melissa, everyone races in. Dooley throws his cleaver, which lands on Kratt's cape, but this actually works in his favour, as the chandelier falls, courtesy of Coddwell, and crushes him.

With Kratt gone, Madam Frau takes over the club and uses her position to promote exciting new talent, including Sergeant Rivera who ends up doing a drag act. As for Bobby, she splits up Kratt's monopolies, while Topher and Jenny find a new lease of life at the orphanage. As for Coddwell and Dooley, they go into business together and make an absolute killing.

So what of Josh and Melissa? Well, they're free to leave Schmicago... but will they? Well, Josh and Melissa decide that yes, they are going to go. It's going to be a big struggle but they've now learned that together they're stronger if they stay united. Melissa has realized that life is difficult but they're just looking for something real and that comes from making their own luck in life and starting every day with a "happy beginning".
