Summary: Blackmailed and sidelined from investigating, Sherlock Holmes finds hope when a young woman arrives on his doorstep, potentially holding the key to solving the kidnapping of an ambassador's daughter.

The episode begins with Holmes investigating an attempted kidnapping. However, when he discovers a red thread tied around the wrist of the intended victim, he hastily leaves. A threatening note warns him to "observe the thread," accompanied by a threat to the lives of Mrs. Hudson and Watson. His maid was found murdered, and Holmes opens a wooden box with a woman's finger bearing the same red thread. A similar string is tied to the hilt of the knife used to kill Amelia's mother.

While on the sea voyage to London, Amelia befriends Clara Anderson, the daughter of the American ambassador to England. When she's kidnapped, Amelia just happens to be Holmes when the Ambassador asks for his help. Because of Clara's kindness to her, Amelia continues to investigate after Holmes flees upon finding the thread. She correctly figures out that the coachman kidnapped her. The episode ends with a great cliffhanger, showing him speaking sweetly, almost inappropriately so, to a bound and gagged Clara hidden in a coffin.
