Summary: Covert CIA agent Martian is called back to London Station. An incident in Belarus puts Bosko and Henry on a collision course with Langley. Danny learns a lesson. Someone unexpectedly reappears in Martian's life.

The Cold War might seem like old news, but in the world of espionage, this covert conflict with Russia continues, and a crisis in Minsk, Belarus, is unfolding. Dealing with this potential global disaster is only one piece of the puzzle. At the same time, CIA special agent code-named Martian, has been pulled out of a long-term operation and is adjusting to life back in London.

After spending six years undercover, a no-nonsense Martian is immediately taken to a safe house upon his return to England. Martian appears unrattled but later voices frustration that he was only given 48 hours' notice to pack up his operation.

In a video debrief with handler Naomi, Martian describes breaking it off with his married lover Sami, telling Sami he was leaving Ethiopia for a teaching job in Jordan. But Martian's verbal description doesn't match the tender, sad scene we see with Sami. When Martian relocates to London, he immediately finds three separate listening devices his new apartment.

In Belarus, a drunk man gets into a car and immediately causes damage to other vehicles in his attempted escape and is arrested. When the scene cuts to the London CIA field office, we learn he is an agent by the codename Coyote.

To understand what they are up against, Head of Strategy Henry asks Frank to look up footage of Coyote's "under the influence" interrogation training to make sure the agent is equipped in this incapacitated state. Meanwhile, Coyote's handler, Owen, goes through their recorded conversations to see if anything is unusual.

Frank hides his concern, but the footage reveals Coyote was six years sober and refused to drink as the training demanded. Frank is sympathetic as he is also a recovering alcoholic. Coyote says if he is drunk, his cover is blown. None of this bodes well, considering how inebriated Coyote was in the footage. Frank lies to Henry, saying the tape of Coyote's training is corrupted.

When Station chief Bosko asks Henry for an update, Henry claims "nothing special" has happened so far with the situation in Belarus.

Martian gathers all the Paul Lewis IDs he used while on his most recent mission but removes the driving license. He asks to see his teen daughter Poppy, who can't help but make some digs about how much time her dad has been gone.

The following day, Henry catches Martian up on the political climate. Martian observes that six years ago the Russian embassy in London only had three satellite dishes; now they have 30. Henry says the Cold War is back "chilly as f." Plus, there is trouble in Belarus. Is this why Martian is back? Nope, Martian has to train a female agent who will be going deep cover in Iran.

At this office, Martian is greeted like a returning hero. Martian meets his handler, Naomi in person for the first time, but is distracted by a news report of a bombing at a university in Sudan.

Martian returns all the old IDs to be destroyed, making an excuse for the missing driver's license. Simon must deactivate the Paul Lewis email accounts, but Martian sees a message from Sami saying she still loves him.

The first training session with Danny gives Martian a chance to instill an important lesson — "Never rely on the op to make you safe; rely on yourself." Back at his apartment, Martian is under surveillance by the agency, which is standard protocol in this scenario. Still, he buys a burner phone undetected. He calls Sami and is relieved to hear she is in London.

The Coyote situation continues to spiral as there is no sign of him in custody. Owen explains to an impatient Bosko that Coyote's phone is still pinging at the police station, meaning his cover is blown or he orchestrated his own disappearance.

During this meeting, Coyote's refusal to do the under-the-influence training is revealed to Henry. If Coyote has talked, it has enormous ramifications, as roughly 60 percent of all covert ops in Russia and Ukraine might be compromised.

Langley demands an update. Bosko downplays it as a "local problem." Their boss explains the "New Domino Theory" suggests the world is three dominoes away from nuclear exchange: "Minsk is a big fing domino!" Later, when Frank packs up his office for good, he warns Henry that Martian is "dangerous."

When Henry gets home, his wife is chatting to her brother Charlie on a video call. Henry needs to ask Charlie about a mission. Charlie is in the special ops business and can't answer specifics, but he is involved with an op with a code name "Felix." Henry then tells his brother-in-law not to worry.

One concern is Martian knows how to lose his tail, but Martian didn't factor in that his car would have two tracking devices, so two agents follow him to a hotel where Martian is meeting Sami. The exes make chit-chat, and Martian claims he is writing a book. They head to a hotel room and reconnect in the bedroom.

A flashback to Martian debriefing Naomi in the first 24 hours since he met Sami reveals he didn't listen to his handler about whether or not Sami is in the game. Martian doesn't think Sami is an enemy agent, but falling for someone is not advised because "love is blind." Is Sami a historian, or is she a spy?

Summary: Dr. Blake arrives from Langley and is put to a test by Martian and Henry. A spooked source threatens to put an operation at risk. Danny's cover is put in play. Martian, overtaken by events, begins to question Sami's motives.

Dr. Blake arrives from Langley to assess Martian, while her skills are also used in the field as a different operation proves challenging.

The London CIA field office still hasn't located Coyote, a deep-cover operative who was arrested in Minsk and has vanished from custody. The concern is that Coyote's cover is blown, which puts other assets and operations at risk, particularly in Ukraine. There is a race against the clock to assess danger levels. In addition, Martian starts questioning the motives of the woman he loves.

Henry's brother-in-law Charlie is a doctor working at a makeshift hospital in Ukraine. We also know he is working undercover in a top-secret capacity — Henry doesn't know the specifics. Charlie receives a shipment of medical supplies and an update that operation Felix is "amber;" their cover is not blown at the moment — but he should be on standby.

Back in London, Martian continues to enjoy his hotel room rendezvous with Sami. Before Sami departs, she reminds Martian the last thing they said to each other was, "You and me, forever." Is Martian about to risk it all for love? The following morning, Martian gifts the two operatives tailing him with coffee and pastries — and the bugs he has already found.

At the office, Blair, Owen and Martian continue to analyze the Coyote situation, reviewing how the missing operative's sources are reacting to this fluid situation. Three sources are on standby and a fourth "sounded spooked." Martian thinks the fourth should be exfiltrated as they can use him.

An exfiltration will be worth the $100,000 price tag. The spy business is expensive, and Henry has to barter for every dollar from station chief Bosko. If Coyote is a double agent, then anyone Coyote previously recruited might be working against the US.

Henry notes he is concerned Martian has "post-mission disorder." So Dr. Blake, who is on hand to evaluate mental health across the department, meets with him. Martian shows the doctor the video of the spiraling fourth source, Alexei, asking Dr. Blake to assess Alexei's panic level.

It's determined they must do something immediately. Dr. Blake will accompany Martian to intercept Alexei. Unfortunately, Alexei is at the airport and bought a ticket to JFK. The destination makes it clear that Alexei has been working for the Americans.

Meanwhile, Danny continues to prepare for covert life, saying goodbye to friends and giving over her real passport to be shredded. A trip to Israel in 2018 needs to be wiped from any airport security footage, which the CIA is more than capable of doing.

Because Alexei jumped the gun, the handlers canceled his original plane ticket and told him to fly to Poland under the guise of visiting his sick brother. Martian and Dr. Blake meet Alexei's brother and ask him to check himself into a hospital, which will support Alexei's cover story. When Alexei arrives in Gdansk, he is taken by men against his will.

Even before Alexei's "enhanced interrogation," he is a sweating, screaming mess. If Alexei is a double, it will prove that Coyote is also. Martian and Henry respond to the live video, saying the team should "let him cook."

Dr. Blake looks sickened by the whole endeavor and confused by Martian calling it a wooden duck. "Squeeze a wooden duck; it doesn't quack," he explains. "If this guy works for the Russians, as soon as he's had enough, he'll quack," explains Martian. If he does quack (aka talk), it means "we're fed."

Martian feeds commands to the agents in the Russian container, and Alexei starts to quack, spilling details about working for the Russians and Americans. As a truck driver, this includes supplying medical items like Charlie's delivery at the start of the episode. Despite the information being little more than hearsay, JSOC (Joint Special Operations Command) wants to use this intel to get their men to safety. Charlie receives the emergency abort signal, leaving the hospital with two allies.

Russian soldiers block the way out of the town, but the three operatives shoot through the blockade. It is three versus dozens, but they are all experienced, as the two other men are Ukrainian special forces and Charlie is a Delta Force operator. Despite being outgunned, Charlie surprises the Russians, and the trio triumphs.

It's revealed that Alexei isn't in Russia but is being questioned in London; Martian puts on a ski mask and joins the interrogation, asking Alexei to identify people in his network. Martian confirms Alexei is not working against them, as the names Martian chooses are from War & Peace. They can't confirm whether Coyote is a double agent.

Naomi informs Danny her mission entails identifying nuclear engineers at the University of Tehran; Danny needs to get hired by Professor Mortazevi for a research job at the Institute of Geophysics. Naomi warns Danny about the cost of doing this work; "surviving totally alone, forever." Danny is all in and has made her first steps toward getting the research job.

Helpful analyst Simon has done a background check on Sami for Martian, and everything appears above board. Martian wants to surprise Sami at the academic conference. However, while Sami is registered, Martian learns she hasn't attended any lectures.

In what appears to be a flashforward, Martian says to an unseen person he could've gone to Henry to say, "I fed up." Instead, he listened to the small voice saying, "I can do this. I can do anything." It's concerning that Martian is in a hospital bed, revealing this error in judgment. Who is Martian admitting this to, and what is Sami hiding?

Summary: Henry questions Martian's thinking, Bosko is briefed on a top-secret operation. Poppy makes a startling discovery. Martian confronts Sami about why she's in London and finds a needle in a haystack, before a heated session with Dr. Blake.

While Martian struggles to organize a rendezvous with Sami, events unfolding in Ukraine with Henry's brother-in-law Charlie take priority in the London field office. Only a handful of top people know the details of the top secret mission that Charlie is part of, Operation Felix. But when station chief Bosko is brought into that inner circle, he stresses if Charlie is captured it will be an "immediate strategic geopolitical disaster."

Martian arranges to meet Sami at a hotel despite finding out she has been lying about attending an academic conference. Martian takes precautions to lose his tail, but Henry still tracks him down using CCTV. Martian is somewhat cold to Sami, and he tells her that his book publisher is demanding to see him downstairs (even though it's nearly midnight).

Henry confronts Martin. But lies come easily to Martian, who claims he has come to the hotel because he is sleeping with a married woman (though that part is genuine). Henry is furious Martian is still using the defunct Paul Lewis identity, as it raises a red flag about his mental state. He orders Martian not to go back up to the room.

Outside, someone is surveilling Sami, but it's unclear who this man works for.

The following morning, Henry's wife is concerned because the Zoom link she uses to talk to Charlie isn't working. Henry reassures her as best he can (without knowing the answer himself) that Charlie is okay.

Bosko tells the CIA Director it's been determined that the network of the still unaccounted-for Coyote is "sound" and that he understands that Felix is an "operation of extreme sensitivity." The director says they must recommence this conversation in "the cube."

This one-on-one room is used sparingly (WWIII or an alien invasion, joke the tech guys), emphasizing the need-to-know status of this information, which we aren't privy to.

Meanwhile, Martian greets Henry as "my stalker," Henry admits he also "fed up recently for personal reasons. I owned it and put it right." Henry is seemingly referring to asking his brother-in-law about Felix. In a conference room, Henry and Martian learn about the three men who came up against the Russian forces deep behind enemy lines. They know that if Charlie follows protocol, there will be a 48-hour comms blackout. After his briefing, Bosko updates Henry and Martian that Operation Felix is active again, and they must do "whatever it takes" to find Charlie and his team.

Charlie is already taking tactical steps, switching cars and noting the danger of drones that track by infrared. They need to find woodland rather than taking roads.

Despite knowing Bosko can't confirm either way, Henry struggles not to ask questions about Felix because of how personal it is for him. Bosko understands the conflict of "heart versus job" and "soul versus duty" that Henry currently faces.

Martian argues with his daughter Poppy at his apartment about her purposefully invading his privacy. The following morning, Bosko makes it apparent to Martian he heard this argument (or has been told by someone listening) and that his door is always open. There's clearly still concern about Martian's adjustment back to life in London.

After reviewing all of the Coyote materials, Langley has determined he's likely a double. There are three reasons why someone would flip: money, ideology and love. They have yet to determine Coyote's motives, but they are often financial.

The conversation shifts to the needle in a haystack that is locating Charlie. Luckily, they can narrow the search because they know what methods Charlie will use to evade detection. When they put this into motion, Charlie and his two colleagues are met by allies who tell them Felix is back on. Resistance men will escort the trio to a clinic where "the target is due to arrive in a week."

In his session with Dr. Blake, Martian is hostile to the whole process, and the two are immediately at odds. We learn Martin's real name is Brandon, and he doesn't see himself as shedding that identity when assuming another moniker.

After some back-and-forth, Martian reiterates the reality of this world is not like the movies ("no glamour, no money, no exploding watch"). He theorizes that you have to be insane to do this job and that Dr. Blake is not there to help him but to ensure he stays crazy enough. Martian confirms he's still "nuts enough" before leaving.

Despite Martian walking out on Sami at the hotel, she agrees to meet him again at a screening of Catch 22. They argue when he brings up the academic conference. "Playing the jealous husband; I already have one of those," she responds. Sami explained it was pointless to go to those lectures to be told by a European academic about her specialist subject; she only enrolled to get a grant. Sami also came to London to escape from a place where she was scared.

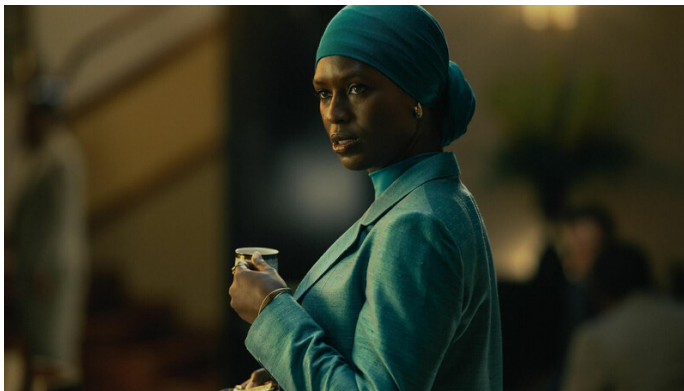

Outside, Martian confronts her about what she does all day? Wondering if she came to London because she knew he would be there. Sami rejects this, pointing out she doesn't interrogate him. The man following Sami takes a photo of them arguing on the bridge. "This isn't working," Sami tells Martian, and they go in separate directions. The man surveilling Sami approaches her and tells her to get in his car. She reluctantly agrees.

As Sami tries not to cry, we wonder whether she is worried her cover has been blown or if this interception is a message from her jealous husband. Only time will tell.

Summary: Henry and Martian waded into a diplomatic incident with the Belarusian delegation. Dropped into her mission by Naomi, Danny walks a tightrope. Poppy and Martian attempt a fresh start. Osman threatens Sami.

In present-day Martian withholds pertinent information from his superiors. However, in flashforwards, the agent is candid to an unseen woman about his actions and the participants in this topsy-turvy story, like Sami. It's clearer that Martian's face in these scenes is beaten and bruised, with medical equipment beeping in the background. We still don't know who he is talking to or how he got there, however, this episode answers questions about why Sami is in London and who has been following her — and Martian.

After successfully getting Charlie to safety, Bosko, Henry and Martian have a different diplomatic incident to handle — a meeting with Belarus officials to help locate the still-missing Coyote. Elsewhere, Danny faces a challenging first day on her new mission.

In the flashforward, Martian explains Sami's role in top-secret meetings between Sudanese and Chinese officials. A civil war has been raging in Sudan for years, with peace talks rejected until now. American intelligence is unaware of this negotiation or that China is brokering the deal.

Martian describes Sudan as a "triple play" as they have oil fields, gold mines and a home port on the Red Sea en route to the Suez Canal. The entire country is at stake, and Sami is an expert who understands the region and its history. Martian explains Sami was "fighting for the survival of her people" and "to end a bloody war."

Back in the present, the CIA preps for their meeting with the Belarusians about locating Coyote, but a congresswoman calling Belarus a "puppet state" and "lapdogs of Putin," make things awkward.

Henry and Martian agree there will be at least one KGB agent in the meeting, but they tell Bosko they only want to observe, promising not to say a word. Henry immediately breaks his promise, correcting one of the Belarusian dignitaries before Martian joins in. They identify who in the meeting is the man they need to work with, so Martian invites him to a nightclub in Soho the following night.

Later when they meet, Martian gets the ball rolling to get Coyote back using a stolen bike metaphor. Martian tells Henry that he took his number and then finds out that Henry was the one who got the congressman (who owes Langley a favor) to make the statement about Belarus to lead them down this path.

During a negotiation break, Sami receives unwanted attention from a man but handles it fine. Osman comes to help, interrupting to tell Sami that her husband is on the phone, sending a clear signal to this other guy.

Osman is a Sudanese Mukhabarat intelligence agent who runs security and is not an employee of Sami's jealous husband. "I have one role here. To guarantee the secrecy of these talks," Osman emphasized earlier. That is why he has been closely monitoring Sami and who she is meeting with.

Threads overlap the following day when Osman follows Martian and his daughter Poppy at a shopping mall. Martian and Poppy are making a fresh start at the father-daughter dynamic, and as part of the fun, Martian shows Poppy how to lose a tail (though he thinks Osman is CIA).

Naomi briefs Danny that the Institute of Geophysics is hostile ground filled with enemies and targets. As only one student is picked to go to Tehran, Danny will face stiff competition to win that spot. Danny gets an intro to Reza, who runs the exchange program.

Later, Danny is giving a lecture, which Reza comes to observe. At the end of the class, he invites Danny to a black tie event and asks her to say a few words on the technology behind "distributed acoustic sensing." But Danny knows nothing about her so-called specialist subject and panic calls Naomi. Danny thinks she can learn 25 pages before the event, but hasn't memorized it when Reza arrives.

In the car, Reza starts caressing her neck and thigh, clearly crossing a line. Danny says it isn't a good idea. Reza says she is too nervous to give the speech and asks her to get out of the car. It's good she got out of that predatory situation, but it is unclear how she will get picked to go to Tehran now.

Martian continues to keep secrets during sessions with Dr. Blake, who asks when the last time Martian had sex and with whom. Martian omits his most recent encounter, saying he can seal his emotions in a box and bury them. Dr. Blake responds that "wounds become stories" and asks about the gnarly scar on his hand, which he claims was an avocado pit accident.

A flashback reveals how Martian got the scar. When Sami was leading a protest against the military, Martian was hurt trying to find a way to get Sami to safety.

In the present, Martian arranges to see Sami at her hotel but stops dead when he sees Osman at her door. Luckily, Osman does not see Martian. Martian makes a hasty exit as he tries to untangle who Osman works for.

Sami tries to brush Osman off, but he grabs her and pushes her into the hotel room. Osman stressed that details are his business, so because Martian made Osman and gave him the slip in the shopping mall, Osman thinks the American is not just a teacher.

"His name or his life," Osman demands. Sami tearily tells Osman her secret boyfriend's name is Paul Lewis.
